In regard to the Berlioz controversy, we have in hand an article by Mr. Tom Wotton on 'Berlioz as a melodist.' This will appear soon, and will, we hope, be followed by another on the same subject by Mr. Cecil Gray. We don't think this is too much of a good thing, because anything like a settlement of the dispute can be arrived at only as a result of argument backed up by liberal use of examples.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. on Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, of Bristol Cathedral, and Mr. William Ellis, of Newcastle Cathedral. We join in the congratulations that both will receive from their fellow Church-musicians.

We give readers a perhaps unnecessary reminder that the Worcester Festival begins on September 8, with a programme as full as usual of good things old and new. Among musical features of recent years there are few more significant and encouraging than the astonishing success of the Three Choirs Festival since its revival after the war. Prophets of woe declared that such meetings had had their day, but the courage of the executive in re-starting at Worcester in 1920 has been justified to a degree that even the most optimistic could hardly have foreseen. It is interesting to note the helpful part played by a factor that has generally been regarded as inimical to music—the motor car. A Three Choirs Festival is now attended by many who, thanks to motor transport, are able to come daily from considerable distances, and by others who can travel from remote parts, obtain quarters in the surrounding country, and motor daily to the city.

Another matter for congratulation is the fruition of the Cecil Sharp Memorial Scheme. In 1925 it was decided to build a headquarters for the English Folk-Dance Society. Again there was head-shaking, and again the optimists have scored, for on June 24 the foundation stone was laid by Miss Maud Karpeles, who was Mr. Sharp's honorary secretary for many years. Very appropriately, her associate in the ceremony was Mr. William Kimber, the Headington bricklayer and folk-dancer who taught Cecil Sharp the morris dance and coached the group of enthusiasts who founded the Society. Lady Ampthill, President of the E.F.D.S., presented to Mr. Kimber a silver and ivory trowel, in recognition of his friendship with Cecil Sharp and his services to the cause. The foundation stone bears the inscription: 'This building is erected in memory of Cecil Sharp, who restored to the English people the songs and dances of their country.'

Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, the chairman of the Memorial Fund, stated that the cost of the freehold and the site of the building—£31,500—had been raised in less than five years. We can imagine no more conclusive evidence as to the genuineness and vitality of the folk-dance revival than the speedy realisation of a project that at its inception seemed so ambitious as to be impracticable.

In this number we give the first of a series of six articles on 'Stages in the History of Opera,' by various authoritative writers. The review of the newly-discovered Violin Sonata of Bach, promised for this month, is held over till next.

Things that might have been more clearly expressed:

> 'In the contralto class all the eleven entrants appeared to sing "Trees," by Martin Shaw.'—Local report of Competition Festival.

We note the following among recent wills:

> '——, Professor of music, carrying on business as a boot and shoe dealer . . . £14,500.'

There can be no doubt as to which was the hobby and which the business.

Musical criticism is tending to leave the psychical for the physical, if we may judge from two recent concert notices in London dailies:

> 'Madame Rosetta Pampanini is a very accomplished singer, whose tone is uniformly good alike in her passionate high notes and in her deep tubercular register.'
>
> 'Mr. —— is a fine artist, who is literally pulsating with nerves.'

So are we, but less ostentatiously than Mr. ——, we hope.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music.' Vol. 1, A—H. Compiled and edited by Walter Willson Cobbett, with a Preface by W. H. Hadow.

[Oxford University Press: £5 5*s*. for the two volumes.]

Had Mr. Cobbett done no more than conceive the idea of this book, and in a general way direct its production, he would have achieved something possible to few men of his years. But he has done much more. Not only has he contributed lengthy articles; he has also added postscripts to many others—not always necessary additions, perhaps, but invariably contributing something germane and interesting from the fullness of his life-long experience; and as editor he was very far from being a mere figurehead. (Even the drudgery of writing letters to contributors was not beyond him, as this reviewer knows from personal experience.) In this connection, read this personal note. In his article on 'The Chamber Music Life' Mr. Cobbett says:

> 'There are lessons to be learned from the most modestly endowed man, and in these days, when modern hygiene has done so much to add to the normal span of human existence, one such lesson resides in the mere fact that at the age of eighty I am still continuing the regular practice of ensemble music with far more zest than in very early days. Many when they are nearing the sixties lay down the bow and take to the armchair and silk-cushion life, missing by so doing the crowning reward given to those who have worked at an art in youth—the power of enjoying its delights in later years.'

To this passage a footnote is added:

> 'Since writing the above I have been compelled in the interests of this book to lay down the bow temporarily.'

We may be sure that this abstention was not the least of the many sacrifices demanded by the book.

The list of contributors to the Cyclopedia is Grove-like in its range, with about a hundred and fifty writers and translators.

No single review can indicate the scope of such a work as this, or comment on more than a few of its articles. Here, then, are a few impressions that remain after much dipping and sampling. Outstanding among the articles are those of Prof. Tovey. Is there a finer brain than his anywhere working on behalf of music at the present time? Or one served by so distinguished a literary style? Tovey's chief articles are on Brahms, Haydn, and Chamber Music. Mr. Edwin Evans is in his element with discussions of contemporary composers, especially those of this country. His articles have a great advantage over most others in an unusually liberal supply of music-type examples. It is good to see Dvorák receiving something like the comprehensive and appreciative treatment he deserves as a chamber-music composer. This excellent article is from his compatriot, Dr. Ottokar Šourek. Vincent d'Indy's article on Beethoven is rather disappointing. He spends too much time and fuss over the 'three-periods' idea, and much of Beethoven's chamber music receives no discussion at all. Mr. Cobbett's postscript here is actually necessary, as it fills most of the gaps left by the French writer. The discussion of chamber music as a form of art is shared between Professors Dent and Tovey, the former being mainly historical, the latter æsthetic. In this article Prof. Tovey has some valuable and interesting things to say concerning the treatment of continuo. The passage is too long to quote, but it should be studied carefully by all who have to deal with figured bass accompaniment of old works. This same article, by the way, contains a remark about Franck's Quartet that will irritate rather than convince most readers. Discussing the question of style, Tovey says that the Franck Quartet 'is full of excellent organ music, and it imitates the organ very skilfully. But except for the Scherzo, which is full of anybody's brilliance, there is strangely little evidence that it is a quartet at all.' This may or may not be true; the really undeniable thing is that a show of hands as to the most beautiful and enjoyable quartet would give one of the top places to this piece of 'organ music' which is 'hardly a quartet at all.'

The editor's article on 'Humour in Chamber Music' is not quite adequate. There must surely be a good many examples of modern humorous chamber music. In fact, the medium is one that lends itself particularly to humour, even to wit. In the list of examples we miss Arthur Bliss's 'Conversations'—'The Committee' in this set of movements is one of the most genuinely humorous pieces of music in existence.

There will be a further opportunity of referring to the Cyclopedia when the second volume makes its appearance in the autumn. Meanwhile, readers will join in a general salute to Mr. Cobbett on having carried out, in a manner both sound and brilliant, an enterprise that in its special field will be as permanently valuable as 'Grove.'

'Eurydice, or the Nature of Opera.' By Dyneley Hussey.

[Kegan, Paul, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

This little book discusses very readably and sensibly a good many matters connected with the past, present, and future of opera.

Mr. Hussey begins by admitting that the case against opera is a strong one. He puts and answers several objections—the complaint of the literary man that music can add nothing to poetry; of the musician that music is dragged down by being made illustrative and formless; that opera is unsatisfactory because it is a mixture of arts which do not blend and which have to make concessions to one another. He makes out a fair case for the defence. (He need not have bothered to answer the objection that opera is artificial because in real life people don't sing their conversation; we might object to all poetic drama on a similar ground.) But a prime reason why so many musicians are impatient of opera is left undiscussed, i.e., the actual musical weakness of the greater part of the operatic repertory. A musician need not be derided as a highbrow or a purist if jealousy for his art makes him resent the lavish expenditure of money, effort, and applause on works wherein music that is merely conventional or weak is tolerated and even acclaimed because of its association with a successful drama, or owing to its performance by star singers. Literary men may (and sometimes do) object similarly on the ground of the shoddy character of libretti. There will, in fact, be a solid body of artistic folk indifferent or antagonistic to opera until the bulk of the repertory is made up of works that are first-rate on dramatic, literary, and musical grounds, instead of being weak in at least one of the three. This is no exorbitant demand, and it would have been satisfied long ago but for the fact that operatic audiences have usually been deficient in musical taste.

'Joseph Haydn: An Introduction.' By D. G. A. Fox.

[Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

The latest number of the 'Musical Pilgrim' series is one of the best. Mr. Fox opens with a chronology of Haydn's life, and a brief discussion of the influences that made him what he was. The works dealt with in detail are Symphonies 7, 9, and 11 of the 'Salomon' set, 'The Creation,'

(Continued on p. 724.)

TO ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, WANTAGE

There is a Spirit singing

UNISON SONG FOR MASSED SINGING

Words by J. H. Newman

Music by Geoffrey Shaw

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Andante ed espressivo mp
There is a mp
spi - rit sing - ing aye in air . . . Which lifts us high a - bove all
mf
mor - tal care; No mor - tal mea - sure swells the mys - tic
mf

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited

sound, . . No mor - tal min - strel breathes such tones a - round The an - gels' hymn,
mf
poco allargando
the sov - 'reign har - mon-y . . That guides the roll - ing orbs a - long the poco allargando
mf
mp a tempo sky; . . . . And hence, per - chance, the tales of saints who viewed . . . And heard an - gel - ic choirs in sol - i - tude, p
p

Tonic Sol-fa Edition in Novello's School Songs, No. 1547 (Edition B).

and four of the String Quartets. Mr. Fox's analyses are of the dissective kind, but his enthusiasm and his ability to see the spirit behind the letter save them from dryness. This 'Pilgrim,' like the recent little biography by Michel Brenet, the article on Haydn and Croatian music in Hadow's book of essays, and Tovey's article on Haydn's chamber music in Cobbett's Encyclopedia, serves to remind us that the time is over-ripe for a new, comprehensive, and critical biography of this great composer. There is a large public for Haydn now, and it shows every sign of growing rapidly. Is an adequate biography on the way?

'Sidelights on Touch.' By James Ching. [Forsyth, 5*s*.]

In his latest work dealing with pianoforte technique Mr. Ching displays to the full not merely his mastery of a most intricate subject but also that gift of clear and concise statement which was such a welcome feature of his earlier treatises—'The Rotary Road,' 'Forearm Rotation,' and 'Muscular Relaxation.' The subject is treated under the main headings: 'Tone Variation and the Laws which Govern it,' 'The Problems of Agility (the Instrumental, Physical, and Mental Aspects),' 'The Arm as a Lever,' 'The Details of Touch (the Finger, Hand, Forearm, and Whole-Arm Touches),' with Appendices on 'The Lateral Adjustments' and 'Some Illustrations of the Various Touches.' The work concludes with a hundred and one questions, the answers to which are published separately. Teachers and students should certainly get this book. It will remove some misconceptions, throw light on much that was obscure, and assist materially in the attainment of a sound technique.

G. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'The Lyre and the Lyric.' An Introduction to the study of the relations between Music and Poetry. By Anthony Velleman Ireland. Pp. 22. Pietermaritzburg: The Natal Witness, Ltd.

'Music for All.' By Cyril Winn. Pp. 80. Routledge, 6*d*.

'Samuel Langford: Musical Criticisms.' Edited by Neville Cardus. Pp. 154. Oxford University Press, 8*s*. 6*d*.

'Le Phonographe.' By A. Cœuroy and G. Clarence. Pp. 194. Paris: Editions Kra, 12 francs.

'The Second Minuet.' By Maurice Besly. Foreword by Alec Waugh; Caricatures by Nerman. Pp. 37. Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 5*s*.

'Memoirs of Lorenzo da Ponte, Mozart's Librettist.' Translated, with an Introduction and Notes by L. A. Sheppard. Pp. 388. Routledge, 15*s*.

'The Child's Own Book of the Great Composers: Beethoven, Handel, Schubert, and Bach.' By Thomas Tapper and Gertrude Azulay. Boosey, 6*d*. each.

'Natural Technics in Piano Mastery.' By Jacob Eisenberg. Pp. 246. William Reeves.

Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' had one of its very rare French performances at Bayonne on June 18, by the local St. Cecilia Choir, conducted by Mr. Arthur Lynch. The translation was by M. Paul Landormy. The second half of the programme consisted of works by Chausson, Fauré, and Lili Boulanger.

New Music

ORGAN MUSIC

A year or so ago a reader asked concerning an organ piece by Charles Macpherson on the tune 'Narenza' ('Ye servants of the Lord'), which he had heard the composer play at St. Paul's Cathedral. Inquiries showed that it was then in manuscript. Dr. Marchant has since prepared it for publication, and it has just been issued by Novello's. The form is that of a choral prelude of the Pachelbel type, developed with unusual skill, each phrase of the tune being treated in close canon on the manuals before being delivered in long notes by the pedals. It is organ music of a purity and dignity that will make players regret the rarity of its gifted composer's excursions into this field.

One of the last—if not the last—editorial tasks of the late John E. West was the preparation of a new edition of Brahms's Choral Prelude and Fugue on 'O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid.' This austerely beautiful piece has hitherto been available only in a form that was inconvenient for the player, and that moreover made the music appear dry. Mr. West has suggested a reasonable amount of dynamic variety, treating the fugue on the plan of a gradual crescendo, from mf to ff. His practical hand has been specially useful in dealing with the widespread three-part manual writing of the fugue. Without carefully-planned division between the hands this is very awkward to play. What beautiful and enterprising polyphony this is! I have found myself playing it over and over again with a crescendo of pleasure. The piece is a worthy companion to the Eleven Choral Preludes; whether it will be regarded as dry or beautiful will depend on how far a player likes a composer to mix his music with brains (Novello).

Charles Tournemire is a composer who has made a good many admirers in this country by his typically French blend of skill and effectiveness. He has recently finished a work that may truly be called monumental. I give the full title in French, as some of the terms are misleading when translated: '51 Offices de l'année liturgique inspirés du chant grégorien et librement paraphrasés.' The composer explains that the 'Offices' are grouped in three cycles: Christmas, Easter, and the season following Whitsuntide. Each of these is divided into (1) Prelude to the Introit, (2) Offertory, (3) Elevation, (4) Communion, (5) Postlude. The plainsong, which he truly says is 'an inexhaustible source of mysterious and splendid lines and a triumph of modal art,' is paraphrased very freely in being made the thematic bases:

> 'Endeavours have been made to maintain the infinite suppleness of its phrasing, its unmatched suavity, its mystical depth; similar endeavours were made towards the association of mediæval garlands with the many-sided sources of polyphony, laying aside any accents which could alter the serenity of cathedral music.'

A foreword by Joseph Bonnet says that the work is one for which organists have long been waiting:

> 'A great musician was needed for its accomplishment, a master of organ technique and composition, having the Spirit of Faith, loving the supernatural beauty of the liturgy and of the Gregorian melodies, a disciple of John Sebastian Bach and his Latin forerunners who created for Gregorian themes different forms that the great Cantor resumed in the choral preludes. This great musician had to work in Peace and Meditation as an artist must do.'

Of the fifty-one numbers four have so far appeared. As they average about two dozen pages apiece, the reader may gauge the size of 'L'Orgue Mystique' as a whole. The music is of extraordinary freedom and variety. The pieces range in length from short page-long interludes to highly-developed movements, such as the brilliant 'Paraphrase and Double Choral' (seventeen pages). The harmony is a surprisingly successful blend of the modal and the daringly chromatic. Double pedal is used freely, and there is a good deal of melodic use of pedal. A few short pieces are for manuals only. Much depends on registration, especially in the numerous instances where the upper parts of the manual are used almost exclusively. In style the music is by turn reflective and rhapsodic, but throughout one feels that the term 'mystique' is justified. The work is on the difficult side, calling for a hand of big grasp as well as nimble fingers; and on the interpretative side the player must be au fait with the two extremes of plainsong and modern dissonance. On English organs some adaptation of the registration schemes may be necessary. For obvious reasons 'L'Orgue Mystique' will appeal specially to players at Roman Catholic churches and at English churches where plainsong is in regular use. But as the composer points out, certain of the longer and more systematically developed pieces may be used at recitals and even for concert purposes. The considerable technical demands of the work are, I fear, against its wide adoption at a time when few organists can afford time for the study of new music, and when so many posts are filled by amateurs and semi-professionals who work at other avocations. I feel too that the bolder dissonances may startle rather than edify the average congregation. In this connection, however, I imagine that M. Tournemire had in view a big building—at all events so far as the more extended numbers are concerned. There must be ample space for most of this music, in order that the more brilliant pieces may not be too edgey in detail and may gain in warmth, and that the quieter ones may sound remote. A liking for music so original as this is inevitably a matter of taste, but there can be no question as to the skill, resourcefulness, and devotion with which M. Tournemire has fulfilled his formidable task. The courageous publisher of 'L'Orgue Mystique' is Heugel, Paris. Copies may be had from Novello.

Some years ago an organ piece called 'The Sea' made a marked impression on most of us who were interested in the future of English organ music. The composer was H. Arnold Smith, at that time, I believe, a student at the Royal College of Music. We have had to wait a long while for a successor to 'The Sea.' It comes in the shape of an 'Ode Héroïque' (Cramer). The piece recalls Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque,' both in its chromaticism and in the style (and some of the treatments) of its themes. But for those of us who find the chromaticism of the 'Pièce Héroïque' sufficient, that of the 'Ode Héroïque' will be more than enough. Mr. Smith can write, decidedly, and there is much that is impressive in this work, but I do not feel that it bears out the high promise of 'The Sea.' I add that it is difficult.

'Celebration, 1927,' by William Wolstenholme, was composed for the thousandth recital of his friend Roger Ascham at Port Elizabeth. Mr. Wolstenholme has recently shown a fondness for 5-4 time; here it is used without break throughout a long piece. The result strikes me as being somewhat monotonous. There is much that is characteristic of Wolstenholme in the springing chief theme, and in most of its treatment—e.g., the fughetta portion—and in the flowing middle section for diapasons; but the piece suffers as a whole from a lack of rhythmic variety. This is due not only to the persistent use of 5-4 (which inevitably falls into alternations of 3 and 2), but also to the fact that the thematic material is cast overmuch in brief sections of similar length. (The last page opens with eight of such sections.) The harmony is, as usual with Mr. Wolstenholme, a strong point. He can still keep our interest alive by charming and fresh treatment of diatonic progressions. The piece is published by Stainer & Bell, who send also a Fantasy Toccata by Leslie Woodgate. This lacks originality in its main subject, and the arpeggio treatment of the theme is uninteresting. The middle section contains some pleasant canonic writing. Also published by Stainer & Bell is a Preludio Cantico by Charles W. Pearce—a broad and festive voluntary on 'Gerontius' and 'Richmond,' two tunes generally associated with the hymn 'Praise to the Holiest.'

H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

If anybody wished to see a typical example of 'ultra modern' music he should study the Sonata for violin, pianoforte, and military drum, by N. Lopatnikoff (Edition Russe de Musique). The choice of the medium is significant, and the drum part is by no means negligible. Even in the slow movement, where one meets with a conventional phrase or two, such as:

Ex. 1.

and

Ex. 2.

the drum is not silent. In the first movement, Allegro energico and in the last, Allegro vivace, its rattle frequently blurs the harmonic scheme, reducing everything to a series of blows on the stretched skin of the ass. For one may press the bow on the strings or bang mercilessly the pianoforte without ever reaching anything like an adequate balance of sound against the drum. I rather suspect that the drum has been introduced for a different purpose. The excessive freedom of melodic design and harmonic construction had its origin in the desire to startle the listener. But a moment is bound to come when the listener ceases to be interested and refuses to be startled. A condition of disorder may evoke a desire to restore order; a condition of chaos induces a state of coma as soon as it is realised that any attempt to struggle against it is foredoomed to failure. It is just possible that Lopatnikoff has resorted to the drum purely in order to prevent us from slipping into the not unpleasant comatose state induced by tedious music. Macbeth shall sleep no more.

In spite of the parade of dissonances and of uncouth melodic intervals, the rhythmic design is conventional and even commonplace. It is curious how composers who make a boast of their self-sufficiency and independence can borrow, on occasion, current coin.

After Lopatnikoff the little whimsicalities of Erwin Schulhoff's Sonata for flute and pianoforte (Chester) seem but the airs and graces of an essentially good child. Here at any rate we find a certain tenderness and graciousness. The composer does not say anything profound, but his discourse is pleasing, and often reveals a poetic imagination. It may not be the highest, but it is music, and makes its appeal to us as music should, by the order and not by the disorder in which sounds are combined and arranged. F. B.

STRING ORCHESTRA

Vivaldi's Concerto in G minor for solo quartet and string orchestra Ripieno (with an additional pianoforte part ad lib.) is published by the Oxford University Press in an edition prepared by A. Mistowski. Expression marks abound, and the easiest and most obvious passage has been 'fingered,' even in the solo parts. Still this, if a fault, is a fault on the right side, for fingering can always be disregarded by the more expert player (no two players finger all passages alike) and by the amateur who has the advantage of expert advice. F. B.

VIOLIN MUSIC

A canon is apt to suggest a scholastic exercise more than a piece to add interest and variety to the study of the violin. But the 'Four Canons' for violin and pianoforte of C. S. Lang (Stainer & Bell) have also a musical quality, apart from their scholastic worth. They are thus eminently suited for young students (none of them rises above the third position), who can accustom eye and ear to a scholastic form and realise at the same time its theoretical laws and the practical effect. 'Four Impressions,' by Richard H. Walthew (Stainer & Bell), are tasteful little pieces, carefully edited in the violin part by Ernest Yonge. The second ('Cheerful') and the fourth ('Festive') are particularly happy examples of that ease and simplicity of expression that are so often sought and so seldom attained. F. B.

UNISON

'Six Action Songs' for boys constitute the hundredth book of Novello's 'School Songs.' There is good variety—the cries of London, the 'instrumental band,' a sea song, and other lively pieces, one or two of them suitable for quite small children, and the others for youngish-middle-agers. I wish that songs about the 'merry' life of the soldier could now be laid by. There are so many other things to sing about, and though children are ready enough 'to attack the foe,' those who lately looked into that matter in the most practical way, in France, are surely agreed that the old crude melodrama of toy soldiering might well give way, whilst kiddies are very young, to other kinds of romance; then, when they are old enough to understand how many foes worth attacking there are in the world, other than the inhabitants thereof, let their fighting energies be directed into worthy channels. It is only thoughtlessness, I am persuaded, that allows some of us still to allow them to be brought up to reckon soldiering a normal and desirable occupation. The new and clearer views of post-war days deserve our practical support, and I hopefully submit that teachers can do a great work by seeing that their charges quietly give soldiering songs a miss.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

G. H. Jones's 'The Sands of Dee' is suitable for choirs of older girls, not (on account of its subject) so well for young children. The music, for S.S., is carefully and pleasantly devised to give scope for much thought in the dynamics and colouring of the story, without demanding much in the way of key-navigation. Dr. Keighley's tasteful 'Evening Rhapsody' (Shelley's 'How beautiful this night!') is for S.M.-S.A., accompanied. The lowest note is A flat. This is music to please choirs of modest experience who wish to develop their expressive powers without having to fight with tangles of difficult notes (Banks).

Alfred Moffat has arranged an old French 'ronde de table' as a two-part song for S.M.-S. (or S.S.), under the title 'A Sunny Holiday.' This is in cheery 6-8 dance-style, without dotted quavers, and with lively short leaps in both parts. The same arranger has set out for S.S.A. Prætorius's 'O Lovely Night'—slow, cool, quiet music, in simple, rather hymn-like style (Novello).

MALE-VOICE

Dr. Whittaker, who most often figures here as an arranger, issues two of his own compositions, to words by Wilfrid Wilson Gibson—'Candle Gate' and 'The Concertina' (both T.T.B.B.). The first is marked 'maestoso (with intensity),' and has a bite in its harmony. Robust singers who like something into which they can, so to speak, get the teeth of their imagination, should enjoy this. 'The Concertina' is a rough ditty of sailordom, beginning with the onomatopœic 'twanging of a zither and the thin tinkle of a mandolin' (lower parts 'plunk, plunk, plunk'), and rising to the ferocity of despair because of the devil's tangles. The most experienced choirs will have great times with this, enjoying not only the clever suggestions of the instrument, but the mordant way in which the music seconds the poetry. (Williams).

G. H. Jones's 'Hymn to Zeus' (Robert Bridges) makes a bold—perhaps too bold—attempt to match the strength and depth of the poetry. The weakness of most of these settings is in their point-to-point nature. The sweep of the verse needs something more amply sustained and firmly impelled. This music will give T.T.B.B. choirs a feeling of tackling a fairly big thing, though it has no special difficulties. Its technical resources are somewhat slight, but it secures in places a good flush of colour in the harmony (Banks).

MIXED VOICES

Alfred M. Hale's 'Air' for double chorus (two S.A.T.B.'s) has no words, using only 'Ah' and 'La'; neither has it a single accidental, harmonizing a simple tune in blocks of mostly common chords, in a manner reminiscent of Vaughan Williams. The effect is thick and somewhat clumsy, and does not seem to be worth while (Goodwin & Tabb). W. R. A.

Teachers' Department

DOES PRACTICE MAKE PERFECT? SOME HINTS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

By Barbara Howarth

On the surface there appears no apparent reason why practice should not make perfect. And yet a common feature in the educational sphere of music is the large number of students who, notwithstanding long periods spent at their instruments, fail to make any permanent advance in musicianly progress. The explanation is not usually far to seek if looked for. With few exceptions these students fail, not because they lack talent, and not because their theoretical knowledge is deficient, but simply and entirely because they have never learned the secret of successful practice.

As such failures are due to ignorance rather than incompetence, a few suggestions and explanations regarding the nature of practice may help these students to see wherein lies their mistake; for to understand the weaknesses of one's own work is the first step towards overcoming them. In practising, three clearly defined factors must be observed if the work is to be of value: 'the use of the ear,' 'slow practice,' and 'attention to detail'—and first in order of importance comes 'the use of the ear.' To use the ear rightly is to listen rightly; and to listen rightly implies the habit of concentration, the power to discriminate, and the faculty of sound criticism—essentials which form the foundation of good work and mark the outstanding difference between the playing of the artist and the playing of the mediocre performer.

Needless to say, to use the ear rightly in order to acquire these essentials demands special training and hard, sustained effort. We must learn to distinguish between the 'wrong' and 'right' effects of a single sound, to hear accurately the notes which form a chord, to comprehend musical structure, and to recognise the inflections of tone which create the ebb and flow of sound. And we can learn by listening keenly and intelligently to our own playing.

Now commonsense tells us that if we are to accomplish this task with any degree of correctness, we must take care to allow ourselves time in which to grasp the full import of the sound—an important reservation which points to the need of the second factor in our list, 'slow practice.' If students would only realise the immense advantage the slow practice method has over the hurried, scrambled performance so dear to their hearts, there would be considerably less waste of time and fewer failures. For not only does slow practice widen the possibilities of aural development, but by replacing the incorrect muscular activity due to haste by the complete slow action which brings strength and elasticity to the muscles, it bridges the gap between stiffness and executive ease.

And now we come to the third factor, 'attention to detail.' So far we have been concerned with matters relating to the act of playing; 'attention to detail,' on the other hand, is here intended to refer to procedure in practising. It can be viewed from two distinct angles: as a necessary adjunct to right interpretation and as an auxiliary to muscular training. Musical compositions are built up of sections arranged according to certain rules in a way which enables the composer to express his ideas in sound. To find out what these ideas are necessitates analysis. Form, rhythm, melodic and harmonic construction must be examined as units forming an integral part of a whole—a process which well repays for the trouble it entails in making clear how best to represent the composer's meaning artistically.

As an aid to muscular training the use of 'attention to detail' is easily explained. It means separating technical difficulties from their context for purposes of study. The bars over which we repeatedly stumble in our pieces, the sticky passages in our technical exercises—these need singling out so that by close examination we can get at the root of the trouble and in so doing overcome the difficulty.

The art of practice, then, is not measured by time but by the aim: to hear with the eye, to see with the ear; to know what is wrong and how to make the wrong right; to get full value out of every minute; and to become not an automatic machine but a musician.

POINTS FROM LECTURES

Speaking about programme music at the Liverpool Soroptimist Club, Dr. A. W. Pollitt pointed out how, in Berlioz's and Liszt's days, people needed to have something on which they could lay hold. They couldn't reach the music, so they laid hold of the programme. The popularity of programme music testified to the appeal, not necessarily of music, but of programme. The large increase in the number of users of wireless and gramophone, Dr. Pollitt continued, was eminently satisfactory. To hear a piece of music once was, of course, better than not to hear it at all. But to hear it once was not to know it. We heard too much and did not know enough.

The later works of John Ireland were illustrated during a lecture by Mr. Hubert Foss at Trinity College of Music. He found the finest expression of Ireland's art in the setting of five poems of Thomas Hardy, in which music and words were perfectly welded together. The Sonatina, which some believed to be the most, and others the least, important work of the composer's, yet summed up all the changes that took place in his mind during the three years in which he abstained from writing.

Cerebral indigestion was considered by some members of the Liverpool branch of the British Music Society to be the effect of their programmes of contemporary music, and it was decided to discontinue the specifically contemporary evenings of music.

Plainchant was the subject of a lecture which Mr. Royle Shore gave to members of the London Society of Organists. His opinion was that with churchmen meeting so often on central occasions, the Church should organize community singing of Church music, ancient and modern, on some method. At present prople were helpless apart from hymns. In his view there was not a Cathedral Chapter in England, lesser or greater, that could even say an Office decently, much less sing one as they ought to be able to do. J. G.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. Our 'Answers to Correspondents' column closes on the 14th of the month. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

F. A. C. E.—You ask for advice concerning the formation of a male-voice choir. The number of voices should not be less than twenty (we have heard good results from fewer, but the voices were above the average); from fifty to sixty is a good maximum (but if you can get a lot more don't say 'no' to them, always provided that you don't ship mere passengers). In testing voices look out for quality rather than power, especially in the higher voices; refuse any aspirants who haven't a good ear, and insist on a fair standard of sight-reading. Questions of balance must be left until the choir has got under way; you can then see where adjustment is necessary—e.g., by transferring a second bass to the firsts; a first bass to second tenor (if he'll go there); and so on. Don't overlook the importance of a good foundation. Many male-voice choirs are top-heavy, so look out for basses who can sing a good fatly-sonorous low F, and pin them down to second bass. Write to Novello's for a selection (on approval) of easy music for a start; specify whether top line is alto or tenor (aim at getting tenors for the top, and watch their production, seeing that they don't get shouty and 'open.' Let them sing falsetto on high notes at a pinch; 'tis better than forced tone, though less good, of course, than real tenor quality).

M. D. N.—(1.) Without knowing the child it is impossible to give an opinion as to whether she is too young to begin lessons. The age would be right for some children and wrong for others. (2.) As to the scale-playing section of the Associated Board examinations: be prepared to play in time-groups, accenting in such a way that the scale ends on a main accent. The speed depends on the examiner, to some extent. For scales in staccato sixths it would be moderate. Anyway, examiners usually attach more importance to evenness, rhythm, fluency, and tone, than to pace. (3.) The melodic fragment you quote seems familiar to us, but we cannot identify it. As you heard it on a gramophone record of Galli Curci, an inquiry of the H.M.V. would no doubt bring you the information.

B. C.—We have had no experience of the teaching of sight-reading by correspondence. However good it may be, it is no substitute for your own slogging efforts. Your letter shows where your difficulty lies. You say, 'I have a good ear and can read chords easily, but runs of any description throw me out.' The remedy is to improve your technique on the scale and arpeggio side, so that passages based on them can be grasped as easily as you now grasp chords. Forgive us for saying that we are staggered to hear that you hold the L.R.A.M. (Teacher's) Diploma, and yet cannot read fluently a Lower Division piece! How did you get that diploma?

J. P. H.—Both the 'Mastersingers' and the 'Ring' are fully analysed in the 'Musical Pilgrim' series, the former by Cyril Winn, the latter by A. E. F. Dickinson (Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.* each).

B. L. J.—(1.) Any of the shorter works of Bach would do for a 'middle voluntary,' e.g., Fantasy and/or Fugue in C minor, the 'short' G minor, the 'short' C major, the Alla Breve, and many of the Chorale Preludes. (2.) Max Reger: Fifty-two Choral Preludes; Karg-Elert, Sixty-six Choral Improvisations. Of these the latter will be the better for your purpose. There is also a set of Twenty Choral Preludes and Postludes by Karg-Elert—a particularly useful and attractive set. All the above may be had from Novello's.

H. W. W.—Your question is rather vague. When you speak of 'orchestral pianoforte playing as a means of earning a living,' we presume you mean work in restaurant, cinema, and dance bands. As you have had some experience in playing in a small band, we suggest that you look out for openings of the kind you need. But we advise you to think hard before taking it up as a means of livelihood. You might do well if you combined this kind of work with some pianoforte teaching, for which you say you have aptitude.

Old English.—Thomas Ford was one of the most prominent of the Lutenist composers. The date of his birth is doubtful, but is generally reckoned to be about 1580. The first fact known about him is that he published a collection of music in 1607. This has been reprinted in the English School of Lutenist Song Writers, edited by Dr. Fellowes (Stainer & Bell). Ford died at Westminster in 1648.

A. T. C. L.—What is difficult to one player may be pretty easy to another, so we can't grade the ten Beethoven Sonatas with confidence, as we know nothing of your technical ability. Roughly, however, we should put them in this order: 3, 2, 13, 17, 22, 18, 24, 23, 26, 21. Instead of adopting your references to opus number and key, we have used the number of the Sonatas as they appear in thematic lists.

E. L.—(1.) The Schubert Pianoforte Duets about which you inquire may be had from Novello's three vols. (6*s.* each) and a supplementary vol. (4*s.*). (2.) Try 'The brass band, and how to write for it,' by Vincent (Winthrop Rogers). (3.) The Eulenberg series of miniature scores. They may be had from Novello's. Certain French publishers issue miniature scores of contemporary works in their catalogues.

Choralist.—We think your best plan would be to give English pronunciation to the Japanese words in 'A Tale of Old Japan.' The correct Japanese method would be difficult to ascertain, still more difficult for the singers to acquire, and would not help the audience. We have not heard the work performed, and so we are in the dark as to custom.

Veritas.—You ask us to 'place' the 'world-famous organist, Max Erard, and his fourteen-ton Cathedral organ.' His introduction of a diminished seventh into the penultimate chord of the 'Hallelujah' chorus 'places' him conclusively, we think. Don't take him too seriously. A man must live!

Interested.—(1.) The diploma is of little value. (2.) We believe the pamphlet 'Musical Examinations' has long been out of print. Musical News is now incorporated with The British Musician Editorial Office, Barclay Road, Warley Woods, Birmingham). (3.) Mus. D., of course.

J. L. W.—On questions on form read Pauer's 'Applied Form' (Novello).

K. J. B.—We know of no musical schools where student-teachers are admitted on a basis similar to that of pupil-teachers in day-schools.

E. M. I.—It is not (at present) our intention to include the pieces for the Final Grade in our yearly notes on the Associated Board Pianoforte syllabus.

GUIDA.—Your treatment of the close of the Rachmaninov 'Melodie' is quite right.

Mr. Andrew Cassels is good enough to write suggesting that 'C. P. E.,' who asked last month for unison anthems, might well try Vaughan Williams's 'Let us now praise famous men' (Curwen), Greene's 'O give me the comfort,' and 'Praised be the Lord' (Oxford University Press), and C. S. Lang's 'Remember, O thou man' (Novello).

A number of readers kindly send information as to 'E lami' (see inquiry from 'Lay Vicar' in July number). As Mr. Frank Styler goes very fully into the question we print his letter in our correspondence columns for the benefit of readers in general.

Will 'C. A. B.' (who inquired last month concerning clarinet solos) please send his address?

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

CHOIR-TRAINING EXAMINATION

(Diploma Exam. CHM.)

PASSED, MAY, 1929

Ball, C. J., Lancaster.

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JULY, 1929

Alden, J. H., Harrow-on-the-Hill.
Bailey, F. E., Southport.
Butcher, A. V., London (Lafontaine Prize).
Christopher, C. S., Birmingham (Turpin Prize).
Crute, F. G., London.
Duckett, E. J., Windsor.
Hooker, W. M., Sunderland.
Perrott, S., Neath.
Taylor, Miss M. F., Barrow-in-Furness
Williams, G., St. Albans.

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY, 1929

Anderson, R. B., Sunderland.
Barklie, Miss A. D., Bognor.
Barnes, H. L., Bedford.
Blacker, J., Sheffield.
Brewer, R. J., London.
Brooke, J. W. Exeter.
Campbell, A., Ryton-on-Tyne.
Choat, E. A., London.
Coleman, H. C., London.
Coxwell, J. G., Bromley, Kent.
Crompton, Miss K., Chesterfield.
Dearden, A., Halifax.
Edwards, G., London.
Evans, H. P., Llanelly.
Faddi, Miss L., South Ascot.
Field, H., Cardiff.
Gammon, Miss A., Barnstaple.
Green, R. H. C., Birmingham.
Griffiths, I., Neath.
Hartley, C., Halifax.
Heaton, F., Accrington.
Higgs, W. P., Gloucester (Lafontaine Prize).
Hughes, A., Wrexham.
Kentish, J., London (Sawyer Prize).
Kitching, A. V., London.
Knight, G. H., Cambridge.
Lane, T. W., Petersfield.
Lee, A. S., London.
Leeson, C. L., Bournemouth.
Neville, A. C., Henley-on-Thames.
Noel, W. J., London.
Palmer, H. M., Bedford.
Paterson, E. L., London.
Preston, A. F., Thornton Heath.
Rogers, P. B., Bedford.
Rowe, W. H., Reading.
Seale, Miss E. L., London.
Steinetz, C. P. J., Chichester.
Stevens, J. F., Ewell.
Terrington, R. O., Leeds.
Turner, G. A., Salop.
Watkinson, J. R., Hull.
Wellby, Miss E. M., West Byfleet.
Williams, Miss J. M., London.
Williams, L. G., Dover.
Williams, N., Fowey.
Worley, C. H., London.

ALAN W. SHINDLER, Registrar.

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

The outstanding feature of this examination was the marked improvement in the general treatment of the organ.

The examiners felt that many candidates were sufficiently musical to pass, but, owing largely to lack of control under the trying conditions of the examination room, their actual performance did not do justice to them. It may help such candidates to know that they are being listened to with the greatest sympathy, and that it is the examiners' desire to pass and not to fail them.

Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor.—Continuity of rhythm was often lacking, and excessive speed, particularly at the end of the Fugue, landed several in difficulties.

Allegretto from Elgar's Organ Sonata.—The general character of this piece was misunderstood. The weakest feature was the time variation. The changes in tempo rarely dovetailed, and often the pace was governed by the technical difficulties. The demisemiquaver passages lacked clarity, and many played C natural instead of C sharp in the bass of the last bar on p. 15.

Handel's Overture to 'Athalia.'—The strength and dignity of the music was not often realised, and the slow interlude proved a stumbling-block to those candidates whose sense of rhythm was weak.

The chief defect of the playing from vocal score was the failure to observe quickly the crossing of parts. Candidates are recommended to practise this test in two parts, especially the inner parts, before attempting to combine the four parts.

The Unfigured Bass was on the whole well done, though several ignored the time of the given theme, and over-harmonized it.

The Sight-Reading was again the weakest part of the examination, a very small percentage of candidates passing. Regular daily practice and a wider knowledge of all kinds of music is the only cure for slow perception of harmonic progressions and modulations.

The Extemporisation again showed improvement as regards the treatment of the organ. The style of the given subjects was also better observed. Candidates still need to attend to the rhythm of the given subject.

The Melody did not suffer from over-harmonization as it did at the previous examination. Simplicity should be the chief aim.

HENRY G. LEY (Chairman).
STANLEY MARCHANT.
EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW.

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

Free Counterpoint.—This was generally satisfactory. Those who failed should look up Bach's Chorale Prelude No. 48, 'O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig' (Versus 3), in which the texture is similar to that required in the question. The attempts at the alternative 16th-century counterpoint were better than usual.

Fugue.—In a large number of cases unmusical 'answers' were written, revealing a misapplication of principles, and unintelligent reading. In a three-part exposition only three entries are necessary. The texture was generally poor. It should be observed that, though a fugue subject must begin and end in either the tonic or dominant key, intermediate modulations may be employed. Hardly anyone perceived the obvious modulation to F minor in the course of the subject.

History, &c.—The answers were generally good.

Orchestration.—This was badly done. It should be pointed out that it is the usual custom to write for horns in F. Some wrote for horns in D and E flat. Some of the scoring was quite ridiculous. The trombones were asked to skip large intervals from a very short note, and to glide down in demisemiquavers in the jazz manner. The scoring showed little imagination, commonsense, and little grasp of even elementary principles.

String Quartet.—Some candidates tried to work it in F major, and naturally came to grief. The obvious use of the Neapolitan sixth in bar 7 should have proved the key to be D minor. But the last bar was the cause of much havoc. It should be remembered that the final chord of a Cadence need not always come in the first beat of the bar. And it should not require much thought to find out that the two final A's could be harmonized with two chords, dominant and tonic, in D minor.

Again, the semiquaver figure in bar 5 was an indication of an accompanying figure throughout. To use it only as given in bar 5 is just as bad as introducing a tree into a seascape!

Vocal Quartet.—The work was on the whole only moderate. Some over-reached themselves, others wrote a bad hymn-tune. The word 'interim' caused much trouble as regards accentuation. One candidate wrote 'in ter 'im.' We forget whether we accepted the invitation!

C. H. Kitson (Chairman).
G. J. Bennett.
T. Keighley.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-WORK

The examiners are glad to report a distinct improvement in the playing of the tests. In several instances, however, while two of the three tests would be done well, the third would be played quite badly. This seems to show that candidates should discriminate in apportioning the time devoted to test-practice, and concentrate more on their weak subject. With regard to the pieces, a wide divergence of opinion (and some eccentricity) was shown as to the tempo of the Bach Fugue in G minor.

Unsteadiness of time and slovenly phrasing proved the undoing of many candidates; several, too, used an extreme staccato foreign to the genius of the organ.

The registration was often at fault. In this matter examiners made all due allowance for the difficulties of an unfamiliar instrument, but many candidates chose stops which would have been crude or unsuitable on any organ (in one case the Macpherson Prelude was played on the Swell Horn). While the playing of the pieces was rarely bad, the general standard was on a rather dull and undistinguished level.

G. D. Cunningham (Chairman).
G. Thalben Ball.
E. d'Evry.

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK

There was a creditable level of attainment in most of the work. Two faults were common, and both have been commented on before: the difficulty of realising an implied modulation, unless it is indicated by an accidental, and the treatment of the unessential notes of a given melody or bass as essential notes of a chord.

Strict Counterpoint.—There was a falling off in this subject, probably because the C.F. given was in a minor key. The raised sixth and seventh of the melodic minor scale were often treated unmusically, the raised sixth especially being frequently used in an aggressive and ugly manner. Better spacing is advisable, and also rhythmic in addition to melodic smoothness.

Free Counterpoint.—Fair on the whole. Not enough use was made of the given melodic figure, and there was too much unbroken movement. Harmony was sometimes clumsy.

Pianoforte Accompaniment.—Showed commendable improvement, the pianoforte idiom being much better felt and expressed. The harmonizing was not always suitable, and did not suggest that a preliminary sketch of the chords to be used had been made beforehand.

Melody and Bass.—Both were done very fairly; on the whole the added bass was better than the added treble; in both of these implied suspensions were often misunderstood. Some candidates seemed to think that the downward compass of the 'cello extended to A!

Harmonization of Bass.—Many candidates failed to take advantage of the contrast offered by the implied modulation, and there was too much crude, ungrammatical harmony. There is still a tendency to force in pointless imitations, and these were often responsible for the harmonic faults.

Questions.—Candidates generally seemed to have expected a question on Byrd, and, having prepared for it, worked in their knowledge of him in the answer to the question on the 'Triumphs of Oriana,' the connection being that Byrd did not contribute to the collection! But, in general, the writing was less diffuse, and more to the point.

In the Essay, the examiners noticed that several candidates dealt in a very brief manner with the chapter in which the essay was set, but extended their essay in an irrelevant manner with matter taken from other chapters.

E. T. Sweeting (Chairman).
Fredk. G. Shinn.
G. Dyson.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The sixty-fifth Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 20, 1929, under the chairmanship of the President, Prof. E. C. Bairstow.

Amongst those present were the following Members of the Council: Sir Ivor Atkins, Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. E. T. Cook, Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Dr. H. E. Darke, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. H. W. Richards, Mr. Reginald Steggall, Dr. F. G. Shinn (hon. treasurer), Dr. E. T. Sweeting, Mr. Thalben Ball, and Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary).

The Minutes of the last Annual General Meeting were read and confirmed.

The Hon. Secretary read the annual report as follows:

SIXTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT

Your Council has the honour to report that the past year has maintained with unbroken success the work and prestige of the College.

In the department of finance it is a pleasure to record the steady recovery to its pre-war position; an advance so marked that your Council has felt justified in spending a considerable sum on the provision of an exterior fire-escape staircase—a safeguard which has been long felt to be desirable.

Your Council deeply regrets to have to report the death of several of its most respected members.

The late Dr. C. W. Pearce rendered ungrudging and unwearied devotion to the College for many years. He was Hon. Treasurer from 1908 to 1926, and until recently an Examiner and Member of the Council—offices which he filled with ability and distinction. His loss will be severely felt.

The services to the musical profession of the late Prof. J. C. Bridge were widely recognised and highly valued. He was a greatly esteemed vice-president of the College.

The late Dr. H. Davan-Wetton was one of our oldest Members of the Council and an Examiner on many occasions. He always strove for the best interests of this Institution, and by his cheerful personality endeared himself to all who knew him.

The late Dr. Eaglefield Hull was also an Examiner and a Member of the Council of long standing. He founded the British Music Society, and was well known as an author of many works bearing upon different branches of musical art.

The examiners appointed for 1929-30 were: Prof. E. C. Bairstow, Prof. P. C. Buck, Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Mr. E. d'Evry, Dr. G. Dyson, Dr. T. Keighley, Prof. C. H. Kitson, Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. C. Charlton Palmer, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. E. T. Sweeting, and Mr. G. Thalben Ball.

A lecture was given at the College by Sir Hamilton Harty on February 16, 1929, the subject being 'Brahms's Variations for Orchestra on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56*a*' (selected for analysis for the Fellowship Examination in July, 1929). The work was played upon two pianofortes by students of the Royal Academy of Music, by permission of Dr. John McEwen (Principal).

During the year a hundred and forty-three new members were elected, four hundred and fifty-eight candidates were examined, and ninety-six passed.

The arduous work of the hon. treasurer, Dr. F. C. Shinn, and of the hon. secretary, Dr. H. A. Harding, is always so warmly appreciated that it is needless to say more than that they have again merited your Council's gratitude by yeoman service.

The thanks of your Council are specially due to the hon. auditors, Mr. W. Glanvill Hopkins and Mr. R. H. Yarrow, and also to the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell.

Your Council wishes to acknowledge the courteous, able, and efficient assistance of the Registrar, Mr. Alan Shindler, and his devotion to the duties of his responsible position.

Finally, cordial thanks are rendered to the staff for their loyal and useful help so readily given on all occasions.

The Annual Report was adopted (proposed by Mr. Wharton Wells, seconded by Mr. H. J. Taylor).

The Annual Financial State, presented by the Hon. Treasurer, was adopted (proposed by Mr. C. Marshall, seconded by Mr. Baker).

Sir Ivor Atkins, in proposing the election of the Hon. Treasurer, said it was well known what valuable work Dr. F. G. Shinn had done for the College and how eminently equipped he was for the office. He had the greatest pleasure in proposing that Dr. Shinn be re-elected as Hon. Treasurer.

Dr. Sweeting seconded, and the resolution was carried with acclamation.

The re-election of Dr. H. A. Harding as Hon. Secretary was proposed by Dr. H. W. Richards. He referred to Dr. Harding's twenty-one years of service, during which he had shown that the R.C.O. and all its developments were his first and foremost consideration. Dr. Harding has never flinched from expressing his opinions—sometimes with emphasis!—when he thought that the best interests of the College were not receiving the thought and attention which they deserved. No difficult or awkward situation seemed to ruffle him, and he was always equal to the occasion. The R.C.O. had indeed been fortunate in having Dr. Harding to support all the necessary reforms which had taken place during his term of office. It was to be hoped that he would allow himself to be re-elected as the honoured and deeply-respected Hon. Secretary.

Dr. G. D. Cunningham seconded the proposal. He said Dr. Harding's capabilities had been impressed upon him during the past week, when, as an examiner, he had been under Dr. Harding's most careful, vigilant, and very severe criticism. He considered the present Hon. Secretary the best friend the R.C.O. has ever possessed.

The President, in putting the resolution to the meeting, said he hoped Dr. Harding would continue his valuable work. Everybody had the greatest affection for him.

Dr. Harding's election was carried with enthusiasm.

The Hon. Auditors, Messrs. Glanvill Hopkins and Mr. Yarrow, were re-elected (proposed by Dr. Shinn and seconded by Mr. H. L. Balfour), with hearty thanks for their able services.

Dr. Harding proposed the re-election of the professional Auditors. This was seconded by Mr. Wharton Wells and carried unanimously.

The President: We now proceed to the election of four Members of the Council, to fill the vacancies caused by rotation retirements. Only four nominations have been received, viz.:

London—Prof. P. C. Buck and H. W. Richards.
Country—Sir Ivor Atkins and H. F. Ellingford.

Therefore there will be no voting, and I declare the Fellows whose names I have just read to be duly elected Members of the Council.

The Annual General Meeting then terminated.

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

On Saturday, July 20, immediately after the annual general meeting, the presentation of diplomas was made by the President (Prof. E. C. Bairstow). The Concert Hall of the College was crowded to excess.

Dr. Harding (hon. secretary) announced that at the recent Fellowship Examination there were eighty-three candidates; of these ten passed. For the Associateship there were a hundred and fifty-nine candidates, and forty-seven passed. For the Choir-Training Diploma there was one candidate, and he passed.

The prizes were awarded as follows:

The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize to A. V. Butcher; the Fellowship Turpin Prize to C. S. Christopher.

The Associateship Lafontaine Prize to W. P. Higgs; the Associateship Sawyer Prize to J. Kentish.

The President then gave the following address:

MUSIC IN RELATIONSHIP TO LIFE

What I am going to talk to you about to-day is so obvious that I almost feel ashamed to make it the subject of an address. The artists amongst you may be bored by it, but I have a strong reason for reminding you of these obvious truths. It is this. Perhaps because these things are so obvious, young musicians are often left to find them out for themselves, and their work suffers accordingly. I myself as a young man was ignorant of them. It may be that mine is a slow-moving mind, but the fact remains that for many years music was to me no more than a series of sounds which in some mysterious way stimulated me more or less. Why some music moved me whilst other music left me cold I neither knew nor cared. The mystery to some extent still remains, but it is no longer quite so unfathomable, for at last I am beginning to find that what I dislike in music I also dislike outside music. It was when I came to see how closely life and art are related that music became a far more living thing to me; it helped me to a fairer criticism of music and the performance of it, and it made it easier to get to the root of the difficulties of those whom I taught. It was through rhythm that these ideas dawned on me. I began to see that love and fear stir up very different kinds of motion, the first orderly but not stiff and mechanical, the second a disorderly hash of jerky, tiring movements alternating with a complete hold-up of motion of any kind.

A man once told me of a voyage he had made from one of the Colonies during the war. Every day the passengers and crew were drilled, and each one had a station and duties allotted to him in case the ship was torpedoed. When it actually was torpedoed my friend said that the timid ones either hung on so tight to the first thing they could get hold of that they had to be wrenched free, or else they ran about like wild things and got in every one's way. A few calm souls did their duty as at rehearsal. Whether it is the timid old woman about to cross the road and first hugging the pavement and then suddenly dashing in front of a motor, or a nervous candidate at an examination who now hurries and now breaks down, or badly written music which hangs about one emotional spot too long and then, for no apparent reason, rushes into some rhythmic figure which it will forsake again in a very short time—all are the victims of fear, and only love can cast it out. Many times recently I have been told by pianists that their teachers stopped them for every mistake and that they in practice did the same, until they discovered that it had become a habit and they could scarcely play through a piece without stopping. So the teacher increased in them their natural fear of the notes, and by doing so, diminished their love of playing; for fear casts out love, just as love casts out fear. Or take another obvious relationship between rhythm in life and rhythm in music.

A well-ordered life consists of a regular, but not rigid, alternation of stress and relaxation—regular periods of sleeping and waking; regular work and regular play. Too little sleep and life becomes tiring. Irregular meals and the human mechanism gets out of order. Too much play and play ceases to be fun; too much work and work is a burden.

So exactly the same in music. There must be an orderly but not rigid alternation of stress and relaxation. If every beat has an accent the music is laboured; if no beat has an accent the music is as vague and purposeless as a life that is all play. If all the climaxes attain the same degree of excitement and succeed each other without sufficient episodical relief, the music is as hectic and wearing as a day when one is rushed off one's feet by unexpected stress of work. If the music has no climax, it is like a day spent in examining when all the candidates are dull and none are bad enough to be funny or good enough to be interesting. Brahms's master in composition, Marxsen, said that all good music is unity clothed with variety.

There are certain constructional elements to be found in every kind of music, the recurrence of rhythmic patterns, as, for instance, the division of the music into bars or the combination of sounds to form chords, and of parts to form counterpoint. The rules which govern them may be learned from a text-book, and it is the brain which helps one to understand them. Then comes the imagination and clothes these things—dull in themselves—with variety. But surely these things are plain enough in music if one has observed that though a tree has a trunk and branches which remain all the year round, its leaves, blossom, and fruit are continually changing in a beautiful and wonderful way—regular and orderly, but never rigid. The sun rises and sets every day, but York Minster never looks twice the same by reason of the varying seasons and the ever-changing clouds and visibility of the atmosphere. We all have the same bodies and minds, and yet none of us are alike. To meet another man the absolute replica of one's self would be a horrible experience. Yet to find someone who does not conform to the law of unity, who is minus some essential part or of one of the senses, is just as horrible. Not only is this principle apparent in Nature, in mankind, and in music, but in the other arts. In architecture, for instance, all buildings have constructional elements more or less in common. When the motive for building is purely material, as in a factory or a row of artisans' cottages, there is nothing to see but the dry bones. It is only when the builders have been stimulated by spiritual vision that the dull and obvious is cloaked in beauty and variety. In the Chapter House at York the carving on each stall is not only different but so different that one marvels at the fecundity of the invention of these mediæval masons.

One could go on preaching from this text ad libitum. All I can do now is to give you a few illustrations of the application of this law which have helped me. We know that personality matters more than all else in music. People whose brainy or material side is stronger than their imaginative or spiritual side usually teach in such a way as to stifle personality, individuality, and originality. The amazing thing is they fail to perceive that, having done their worst, Nature still asserts itself and personality, to a limited extent, persists in their victims. I have heard choir-boys taught on some stupid system, such as the vowel 'oo,' or the use of head-voice alone, by some man whose one idea was to unify them and make them as like as peas in a pod. Yet, when he had done his worst, each boy's voice was different. It is undoubtedly difficult to refrain from impressing too strongly one's own interpretation of music on a pupil. But experience helps us to find out whether a pupil has ideas or does things through ignorance, and whether the ideas, when they are present, conform to sound principles. There is, however, no difficulty in encouraging a pupil to use imagination and to make an attempt at expression without the teacher's help. If this is unsuccessful the teacher can suggest and stimulate without forcing the pupil to imitate blindly. With regard to the voice, few people seem to realise that beauty of tone is the result of freedom and ease, not of some system that at best can give only one monotonous colour and thus tend to destroy variety.

In quite another direction this law of unity clothed with variety is just as useful, namely, in criticising one's own and other people's compositions. A man comes to you for your advice. He has written several exercises for his degree. None has been successful. You look through them and find them comparatively free from technical errors, but without ideas and therefore without the slightest imprint of his own personality. There is not even a tiny inspiration—some small thing that you can honestly say he has thought of himself. All the constructional elements are there, the things that make for unity and order, but the blossom and the fruit are missing—there is none of that variety which is the spice of life. His emotions have never been stirred by his work. Although he has a fairly fluent technique he cannot forget it. Stanford said that all technique must be learned to be eventually forgotten. It is essential that musicians of this type should perceive the relationship between life and art. Here we have a man well equipped by hard work, and yet he can think of nothing worth putting on paper. Where is he to get the stimulus and inspiration if not from the sights and sounds and experiences of life, and if he has never perceived the relationship between these and music, how can he do so?

Let me give you an example of how the rule works in the opposite direction. We are all of us anxious to keep abreast of the times. We are not so short-sighted as to condemn modern music because it does not appeal to us at a first hearing. At the same time commonsense tells us that only a small proportion of contemporary music can survive. How are we to judge its worth? Well, of course no one's judgment is infallible, but this much we do know, that if it is to live it must not be chaotic, disorderly, and licentious. It must not turn night into day or day into night. Its periods of repose must balance with its moments of climax. Looked at in large it must have a convincing shape. Imagination, which alone can give variety, which alone can give a man vision to do something fresh, is no good without the other side, the brainy side, which will teach him to present his visions in such a form as will carry conviction.

Let us consider for a moment another case where it seems that inability to realise the relationship between art and life causes all sorts of trouble. We hear innumerable examination candidates, competitors at festivals and others, whose time and rhythm is more or less steady when they have notes to play or sing on each beat of the bar. But if a note has to be held over more than one beat, or if there happen to be rests on certain beats, they become uncertain, nearly always shortening the long notes or rests. I feel sure that the reasons why they do this are two-fold. The first and most important is that their rhythm is passive, not active. Their sense of pulse comes to them from the music as they play it or sing it, and therefore when long notes or rests occur, where the music itself gives them no pulse, their heart stops beating. They fail to see that every living or moving thing lives or moves by a beat, pulsation, or vibration—such as the hearts of men and animals, the vibrations of heat, light, electricity, and sound, and the explosions in the cylinder of the motor car. They cannot have observed that a weak, intermittent, or uncertain pulse in living things or in machines results in feeble and precarious movement, and that irregular vibrations cannot produce a musical sound. What a difference it would make if only these people could be brought to understand that active rhythm is a sense which they can voluntarily create in themselves, and that it passes from their senses into their music and animates it—the very opposite effect from that produced by passive rhythm. Yet this truth is shouting at them from every moving thing they encounter—God-made or man-made.

The second reason for their uncertainty on sounds or rests of longer duration than those in their immediate proximity is to be found in their failure to assimilate another natural law, namely, that which is heavy is slow, that which is slow is heavy; that which is light is quick, that which is quick is light. I surely need not go to any length to prove this. Jumping is slower and heavier than walking; walking is slower and heavier than running. The motor lorry and the goods train are slower and heavier than the Rolls-Royce or the express. Yet there are more musicians who have a stronger sense of pulse than there are those who really appreciate the subtleties of the agogic accent and of rubato, both of which depend very largely on this law. Sense of pulse alone can become very humdrum without a sense of the agogic accent and rubato. It might almost be said that when the latter comes out strongly in the music of any period then the art flourishes, and that when the pulse alone is evident, then music is decadent. Take our own musical history, for instance. In the Tudor period the bar, which is only a large beat, was merely a background. And if you believe, as I do, that music has never flourished in England since Tudor times as it flourishes to-day, then you can also say that never has there been such freedom in regard to the rigid bar as there is now. The same may be said with regard to the history of stained glass—a comparison that may appeal to Church organists. If you take the leading as the structural background corresponding to the bars of music, and the coloured glass as the main object of interest, as are the subtleties and varieties of rhythm, then in the best periods of stained glass, the leading was a background subservient to and helping the design. But in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, when, as it is interesting to note, music was at a low ebb in this country, the leading had no relationship with the picture, but was merely a series of squares. I often think of this when I am plodding through Boyce in A or Cooke in G, and compare them to two 18th-century windows in our South Transept. They have vitality and strength, but nothing like the spirituality and power of detaching one from earthly things as have Byrd's Masses for example, and some of our 13th-century windows.

I do not want to make you hide-bound. All things come into music at one time or another because it expresses all types of emotion. Sometimes it is necessary to make the pulse and the rigid bar over-ride everything else, as in a funeral march, for instance, which expresses in music the fact that death approaches all of us with sure and inevitable steps. But this is not the same thing as a bad pianist tramping through a Chopin Nocturne. Sometimes in moments of great intensity the pulse of the music seems to be held up for a moment, though in reality it is always moving on, even through a pause. So in life there are tense moments when one feels almost as if the heart ceased to beat, although we know that if it actually did, life would also cease. But this is not the same thing as a nervous organist pausing to draw stops, or the unrhythmic singer pausing to take breath, or the uninspired composer pausing to scratch his head and think what to do next. (I counted eleven pauses and thirteen rallentandos in a shop ballad only the other day.) It is not my object to make you stiffer and therefore more like a corpse or the dead bough of a tree, but to induce you to follow lines of thought that will give you more freedom and happiness in your art.

In my last address I really preached from a text taken from Sir Hubert Parry. I cannot do better than conclude this one by quoting him again: 'Relation is the only reality. If everything is relative, the greater the capacity of mind for realising relations, the greater its scope, the greater its chance of enjoying itself.'

The President then proceeded to present the diplomas.

After the presentation of diplomas, Mr. G. D. Cunningham played upon the organ the following pieces from the January, 1930, syllabus:

FELLOWSHIP

Introduction and Passacaglia ... ... Alan Gray
Allegro Con Grazia (5-4 time), from 'Symphony Pathétique,' No. 6 (arr. by C. Macpherson) ... ... Tchaikovsky
Choral Prelude, 'Valet will ich dir Geben' J. S. Bach

ASSOCIATESHIP

Air, No. 2 of Three Short Pieces... Samuel Wesley Choral Improvisation, 'O ewigkeit du Donnerwort,' Op. 65, No. 42 ... ... Karg-Elert

A very hearty vote of thanks was awarded to Mr. Cunningham for his splendid recital (proposed by Dr. F. G. Shinn, seconded by Dr. H. E. Darke).

The President said a few words of welcome to Dr. Albert Ham, of Toronto, who was present on the occasion. Dr. Ham replied by congratulating the College on its great and contined success.

The meeting closed with enthusiastic thanks to the President (proposed by Dr. Alan Gray, seconded by Dr. Marchant).

The conversazione which followed was attended by a large number of members and friends, and was, as usual, a great success in every way.

A BLIND ORGANIST'S CAREER

Mr. Thomas White, a clever blind musician, is to retire in September after serving for thirty-four years as organist at Chilvers Coton Parish Church, Nuneaton, Warwickshire.

Mr. White was blind when born in 1862, and in addition, he had the misfortune to be left an orphan when only a few months old. At the age of ten his love for music and his fine voice attracted the attention of the late Rev. G. R. Pennington, who, with the help of the Guardians and some friends, had him sent to the Birmingham School for the Blind. He was there from 1873 to 1880, and was successful in winning the Gardner Scholarship of £30 a year. To this his friends added another £30 and he was sent to the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Upper Norwood. Besides learning to play the pianoforte and organ he had his voice trained.

During his eight years' stay at Upper Norwood he had the honour of singing in the College Festivals before Queen Victoria and other members of the Royal Family. He often appeared on the same platform as Madame Albani, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Madame Patti, and he sang at all the principal London halls, both alone and in concerted pieces.

Mr. White was among the students selected to visit Germany. They called at Brussels, singing before the King of the Belgians, and from there went to Berlin, where they gave concerts before well-known personages.

In England, Mr. White has been engaged in concerts in London, Birmingham, and other large cities. He has also sung at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee, and Belfast. In later years his services have always been in great demand at local functions, and, despite his advancing age, his fine tenor voice has retained a great deal of its quality.

Prior to becoming organist at Coton Church—the Shepperton Church of George Eliot's novel—Mr. White was organist at St. Mary's (Abbey) Church, Nuneaton, and afterwards at Hartshill Parish Church. He always attributes a great deal of his success as a musician to the kindness of a Nuneaton lady, Miss Emily Swinnerton, who gave him financial assistance in his early days.

With the aid of a stick Mr. White still taps his way through the streets of Nuneaton unassisted.

The South-Eastern branch of the London Society of Organists visited Lewisham Congregational Church on July 6. Mr. Eric Brough gave a lecture on 'Possibilities in the Repertory of a Mixed-Voice Choir,' with illustrations, sung by the choir of the Church. Some interesting discussions also took place on various problems in Chuch choir work.

THE LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

In the course of a lecture on June 29 on plainchant as an aid to organized church community singing for clergy and people, its vocal accompaniment, and use in modern composition, Mr. Royle Shore remarked that, as plainsong was no longer regarded as a kind of toy for the ecclesiastically or mediævally minded, and modern musicians were becoming increasingly attracted by it, it was astonishing that the great schools of music should still ignore the subject. Efforts had been made from time to time to convince them of the need of seeing that their organ and composition students at least should be trained in the elements of what has become a musical science, since the researches of the Solesmes Monks and others had elevated it to its present position. At the 'Schola Cantorum,' Paris, under Vincent d'Indy, all the students go through a course of instruction in the subject, even though they are being trained to be public singers or instrumentalists. Mr. Shore said that it had been pointed out to both the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, as far back as 1915, that many of their organ students were under a disadvantage in view of the increasing number of appointments which could be held only by those who had some knowledge of plainsong. The lecturer appealed to the Society, in conjunction with the Royal College of Organists, to press this matter upon the schools of music in this country.

Examples of the vocal accompaniment of various kinds of plainchant in Latin and English, and extracts from the works of modern English composers, including Elgar, Vaughan Williams, and Bantock, were given by a body of singers under the conductorship of Miss Edna Howard, who, with Mr. Whitehead, was also responsible for the solo work. The large audience assisted in the plainchant.

COLLEGE OF ST. NICOLAS

The Archbishop of Canterbury opened and dedicated the College of St. Nicolas, Chislehurst, the headquarters of the School of English Church Music, on July 3. The choir of the College was joined by the choirs of Westminster Abbey and Rochester Cathedral, the result being some admirable unaccompanied singing. (The proceedings took place in the open air, the building being unable to accommodate the large gathering, which included many distinguished musicians and clerics from all parts of the country). Among those taking part in the ceremony were the Deans of Westminster and Windsor, the Precentor of Westminster Abbey, and Sir Hugh Allen. The music comprised psalm-chants with faux-bourdons, well-known hymns, Stanford's anthem 'Glorious and powerful God,' and Orlando Gibbons's Te Deum.

In the course of his address the Archbishop made feeling reference to Canon Harold Hall Wright, in whose memory his widow had endowed the Choir School, and the Lady Mary Trefusis, one of the founders of the College. Memorials to both were unveiled in the College Chapel. After tea, the combined choirs and some of the guests joined in a happy impromptu concert on the terrace, singing under Dr. Nicholson's direction English madrigals and part-songs. The College is now in full working order, the Hostel is completely equipped, and all that is needed to set the seal on a notable enterprise is the advent of a full quota of students. We imagine that these will soon be forthcoming, for the educational facilities are of a type that cannot be obtained elsewhere, and the College buildings and surroundings can hardly be equalled for attractiveness.

A recital given at St. Oswald's, West Hartlepool, a few weeks ago was a good example of what may be done by an organist-pianist and a couple of string players. The programme comprised solos for organ (Bach, Franck, Darke), violin (Svensden), and 'cello (Bruch), and trios for pianoforte and strings (Bach, Haydn, and Svensden). The players were Miss Winifred Pigot, Mr. A. G. Y. Brown, and Mr. R. E. Burtt.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY: FESTIVAL OF CATHEDRAL AND COLLEGIATE CHURCH CHOIRS

The Abbey was filled to the doors on July 8 when ten Cathedral choirs and twelve from Collegiate Churches sang a programme that amounted to a survey of that distinctively English form, the Anthem. Here is the list, in order of performance: 'Let all mortal flesh,' Bairstow; 'O praise the Lord, ye saints above,' Byrd; 'O clap your hands,' Weelkes; 'O Lord, look down from Heaven,' Battishill; 'Glorious and powerful God,' Stanford; and 'Lord, Thou hast been our refuge,' Vaughan Williams. The hymns were: 'All people that on earth,' to Dowland's descant setting, and the Sequence for St. Edward's Day, to a tune by Dr. Sydney Nicholson. The service ended with Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' It would be difficult to over-praise the singing. The combination of pure, blended tone, dynamic range, and easefulness was such as to make one speculate as to whether it could be equalled by any body other than one composed of picked English Cathedral singers. (There were nearly three hundred boys and men.) Most of the singing was unaccompanied, and here the finest results were obtained. The works contained many surprises, from the delightful chiming effects in the 'silver bells' passage in the Byrd to the passion in the Battishill. The inclusion of the Parry Ode was the only doubtful point. It calls for orchestral accompaniment, and the use of the organ (ably though it was handled) merely raised insoluble problems of balance and ensemble. Dr. Bullock conducted skilfully. Such a demonstration of English singing and Church music ought to be made an annual affair. On all grounds it is well worth the great pains and cost of organization.

FREE CHURCH CHOIR UNION

The thirty-sixth annual Festival, held at the Crystal Palace on July 13, under the direction of Mr. Frank Idle, again demonstrated that, in spite of the gramophone, wireless, and other counter-attractions, there is still a very large number of people devoted to choral singing. The whole programme, which comprised works by Handel, Schubert, Gounod, Thiman, Idle, &c., was given with a precision and expressiveness that bore witness to infinite pains on the part of Mr. Idle. He had his forces well under control, and the performance generally was held to be one of the best ever given by the Union. The soloist was Miss Elizabeth Mellor, and in addition to the solo in Gounod's 'Lovely appear,' she sang Costa's aria 'I will extol Thee.' In Thiman's anthem 'Let all the world,' the parts for brass instruments added greatly to the effect of the organ accompaniment, which was played by the composer. The piece was encored. New compositions, specially written for the occasion by the conductor and Mr. J. A. Meale (who presided at the organ) were greatly appreciated by the very large audience. The Choir Unions deserve high praise for carrying on such excellent work in these difficult times.

C. J. M.

GREGORIAN ASSOCIATION

The fifty-ninth Anniversary Evensong was sung at Westminster Abbey on June 20 under Capt. Francis Burgess. As the custom is at these services, the music was a judicious blending of plainsong and harmonized settings, parts of which were sung by a true and well-balanced semi-chorus.

Plainchant was used for the Psalms throughout, with the exception of the Glorias, which were sung in faux-bourdon arrangements. The Magnificat was enriched with verses by Viadana, and Palestrina's polyphony was drawn upon for alternate verses of the lovely 'Golden Sequence.' The choir had its biggest chance in the anthem, Anerio's 'Christus Factus Est,' and took it; in fact, the singing throughout was remarkable for its precision and good tone. The performance of the plainsong portions was more flexible than one would have believed possible with so large a choir.

The church was full, and Princess Beatrice was in the congregation.

P. W.

Seven hundred and fifty singers joined in the Bath and Wells Diocesan Annual Festival at Wells on June 20. (The figures are interesting as showing the problems of balance involved, especially in the male-voice choirs. There were 291 boy trebles, 24 male altos, 82 tenors, 120 basses, 127 women sopranos, and 39 contraltos.) The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to a setting composed for the Festival by Basil Harwood, with additional accompaniments for two trumpets, two trombones, and drums. The anthem was a chorus from 'Samson'—'Then round about the starry throne.' Canon Davis, the Cathedral organist, conducted, and his assistant (not named in the report) accompanied.

Nearly a thousand singers took part in the annual Diocesan Choral Festival held at Truro Cathedral on June 20. The Canticles were sung to a setting by Stanford, and the anthem was Ley's 'Eternal Ruler of the ceaseless round.' Mr. Dykes Bower, the Cathedral organist, conducted, and Mr. G. H. Knight was at the organ. An innovation was the substitution of a middle voluntary for the sermon, Mr. Dykes Bower playing Schumann's Canon in B minor and Handel's 'Athaliah' Overture. During the morning a well-attended lecture-demonstration was given by Dr. Sydney Nicholson, who dealt with the musical rendering of the Choral Eucharist.

We have received a booklet giving the programmes of a series of twelve recitals of English organ music which Mr. Ambrose Porter is giving at Lichfield Cathedral. The series began in July and ends in September. It is a continuation of a previous venture of the kind which met with encouraging success. Altogether, Mr. Porter will have played a hundred and ninety-five works, representing a hundred and two composers. Although contemporary examples are in the majority, each programme includes some works by early English organ writers. This effort is one that deserves to be widely followed.

The choirs of the Archdeaconry of Grahamstown, South Africa, combined in a Festival at Grahamstown Cathedral on May 29, singing Walford Davies's 'God be in my head,' Bach's 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' Geoffrey Shaw's 'Worship,' Varley Roberts's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C, and Sydney Nicholson's Solemn Te Deum. The singers numbered two hundred, and some of them had travelled over fifty miles to take part. Mrs. C. H. Wood accompanied, and the Cathedral organist, Mr. Stephen Chantler, conducted. The Festival was a welcome revival, the event having lapsed since 1886.

At Exeter Cathedral, on June 27, the annual Festival of the Diocesan Choral Association was held, twenty-six choirs taking part. The Canticles were sung to Arnold in A, and the anthems were Ouseley's 'How goodly are thy tents' and Goss's 'The Wilderness.' The organist was Mr. Cyril Church, and the conductor Dr. Thomas Armstrong.

The East Glendalough Choral Festival took place on June 19 in St. Saviour's Church, Arklow, about three hundred and fifty singers taking part. The music included Parry's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D and Geoffrey Shaw's 'Ten thousand times ten thousand.' Mr. E. J. Youds, organist at the church, accompanied, and the Rev. N. Roberts conducted.

The organ at Waterford Cathedral is being rebuilt at a cost of £1,100 by Messrs. Alec Chestnut, of Waterford. When complete it will be a four-manual of fifty-three drawstops.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have recently built an organ—a two-manual with thirteen stops—for the Steynsrust Dutch Reformed Church, South Africa.

RECITALS

Mr. P. P. Dickinson, Heaton Parish Church—Adagio and Fugue (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Four Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart; Cornelius March, Mendelssohn.

Mr. F. G. Shuttleworth, St. Luke's, Redcliffe Square, S.W.—Fantasia and Fugue in E minor, Silas; Benedictus, Reger; Legend, Grace; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Finale (Sonata No. 5), Rheinberger.

Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield, Paisley Abbey—Fantaisie in C, Saint-Saëns; Funeral March, Grieg; An Evening Meditation, Mansfield; Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. Ralph T. Langdon, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Passacaglia, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Quasi Marcia, Karg-Elert; Passacaglia, Muffat; Fantasia in D minor, Gibbons; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. Guy Michell, St. Matthew's, Worthing—Agitato and Cantilène, Rheinberger; Allegretto in B minor, Lemare; Toccata, Mulet.

Mr. S. W. Robinson, St. Mary's, Nottingham—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Allegretto grazioso, Frank Bridge; Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. Allan Fortune, Ingrow Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Morning—Day,' Lemare; Sonata No. 4, Rheinberger; Fantasia and Fugue, Parry.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude, Fugue, and Chaconne, Buxtehude; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn-Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Lament, Grace; 'An Easter Alleluya,' Slater.

Mr. W. A. Stevens, St. John's, Peterborough—Concerto Grosso No. 10, Corelli; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Legend, Grace; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn.

Mr. C. W. Harris Sellick, Burnley Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Choral No. 3, Franck; Prelude on 'St. Cross,' Parry; Toccata, 'Symonds Yat,' F. H. Wood.

Mr. J. D. Macrae, Gillespie U.F. Church, Dunfermline—Sonata in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme; Fuga alla Gigue, Bach; Pastorale on 'Winchester Old,' Farrar; Bridal March and Finale, Parry.

Mr. J. D. Holl, St. Michael's, Brierley Hill—Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry; Sonata No. 1, Borowski; Fugue in E flat, Bach.

Mr. F. W. Quibell-Smith, St. Michael's, Brierley Hill—Grand Chœur No. 1, Hollins; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Andante Moderato in C minor, Frank Bridge; Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant.

Miss Edna C. Howard, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Trio-Sonata in E flat, and Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, Clapham Parish Church—Prelude in C minor, Bach; Trio in B flat, Rheinberger; Quasi Scherzo, Karg-Elert; Carillon-Sortie, Mulet; Introduction and Allegro (Concerto No. 4), Dupuis.

Dr. Gordon Slater, Lincoln Cathedral—Chorale Preludes on 'The 100th Psalm-Tune,' Purcell; 'St. Columba,' Robin Milford; 'An Easter Alleluya,' Slater.

Mr. J. M. Preston, St. George's, Jesmond, Newcastle-upon-Tyne—Fantasia on 'O sons and daughters,' Alan Gray; 'Spring Morning on Lebanon,' Mackenzie; Hymn to the Stars, Karg-Elert; Marche Pontificale, Widor.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Pearce Hosken, choirmaster and organist, King's Weigh House Church, Grosvenor Square.

Mr. Philip B. Tomblings, organist and music master, Bloxham School.

Mr. Arthur E. Watts, choirmaster and organist, St. Andrew's, Stockwell.

Letters to the Editor

ORGAN PEDALLING: PAST AND PRESENT

Sir,—In the July issue of the Musical Times there are two interesting letters and an article, all bearing on the above subject.

Mr. Jevons refers to the 'modernised version of the lines laid down by Lemmens.' The lines laid down by Lemmens in the first twelve pedalling exercises of his 'School for the Pedal' leave no doubt that he viewed the pedal board as a toe instrument, so far as a student's first pedalling exercises are concerned, for these first twelve exercises are indicated to be played by toes only. In the preface to his 'Pedal School' he says:

> 'The easiest way of playing, and also the general mode, is to use the point of each foot alternately whenever the passages permit.'

In the same preface he says:

> 'A great many organists use only the "left" foot in playing the pedals. This faulty method causes the player to move the foot from one position to another, &c.'

This from Lemmens, about seventy or more years ago!

Lemmens discloses an entirely different outlook upon the pedal board when he approaches the scales, and it is in these scales that he senses the true foundation of pedalling, viz., the principle which embraces the toe-short and heel-long key method. While pedal boards have short and long keys representing the sharps, flats, and naturals, so long will the toe-short and heel-long key remain the true basis of pedalling.

His (Lemmens's) footings of the scales of A, E, E flat, particularly, are a standing testimony to the fact that without a properly controlled and free oblique-angle movement of the feet the possibilities of pedalling are hopelessly curtailed. The term 'oblique-angle movement' embraces every degree of movement of the feet, from left to right of the heel, using the toe as a lever, and from left to right of the toe, using the heel as a lever, and the reverse of both in each case, and I use this term for want of a better or clearer one.

Regarding the thirty-four ways, or even forty-four ways of playing the first two groups of the Bach D major Fugue subject, who wants to play it in so many ways, anyhow? I merely gave them to show the definite possibilities of the oblique-angle movement, and to stress the point that without such freedom of movement modern pedalling is impracticable.

Mr. Jevons queries the heel-toe inwards movement. Why place any limitations on these movements? Lemmens's scales of A, E, B, majors, and G, E, B, minors, all start off with the very movement he queries, for in each case the left heel note is followed by the next higher scale note being played by the toe of the same foot. In some of these cases it would have been just as easy to start off with the toe, instead of the heel. It may be easier to play a heel note immediately to the left or right of a toe note than the reverse, because there is more leverage and support from the toe than from the heel as a momentary fulcrum, but freedom in either way should be secured by sufficient practice.

No wonder Mr. Jevons makes such a sweeping indictment as the following:

> '. . . and in practice very awkward, ungainly, and quite impossible to tread naturally . . .'

(referring to the thirty-four ways of playing the Bach phrase), when he denounces the heel-toe inwards movement!

Mr. George Goode, in his letter in the same issue of the Musical Times, refers to a work 'On Organ Playing' by Arthur Page. I have not seen this work. My late co-author, Mr. Meers, tried to secure a copy of it, but he was not successful. There are many books that advocate a free use of the heels, but I have never seen any before my Novello Primer of 1918 that definitely advocate the principal of the free use of heels and toes in the very first stages of pedalling, nor have I seen any that endeavour to instil into the minds of organ students the importance and advantage of regarding the heel as of equal value as the toe, in the very first note-finding exercises.

Referring to the reprint of Dr. Barkworth's article 'Organ Pedal Technique' from the November, 1918, issue of the Musical Times, it contains some interesting novelties. Strangely enough, it was in July, 1918, that I wrote on the same subject in the Musical Times for that month, stressing many points which have since been embodied in other books of mine.

The idea of a revolving centre seat for the organ stool is not new, for many years ago my predecessor at St. George's Hall, the late Dr. Peace, told me that he had been asked to try one, but that he did not greatly favour the idea. On the other hand there are some who might prefer it, and there should be no difficulty in trying to discover a means of countersinking a revolving centre seat for the organ stool. I see no objection to it from the practical playing point of view, provided that a much more stable and level revolving seat is practicable than is the case with the revolving pianoforte seat, if any of these latter abominations still remain in use.

Speaking from a purely personal point of view, if no better revolving device could be produced than that of the revolving pianoforte stool, I should not hesitate to adhere to the modern adjustable non-revolving stool.

Playing in stockinged feet might appeal to some, but I am afraid that pedalling, even with feather-weight pedal resistance, would not be a very pleasant affair.

Dr. Barkworth very summarily dismisses the shoe-heel, its absence 'merely making it necessary to set the stool an inch lower—that is all'!

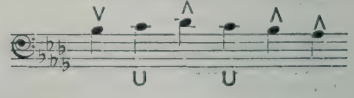
I have pedalled in stockinged feet, in slippered feet, in shallow-heeled house shoes, and in the normal walking shoe, and I feel that the latter, with a sole not too thin, is the most serviceable type for pedalling purposes. The firm leather sole gives a sufficient support for the soles of the feet, and the shoe-heels, of moderate depth, act as a useful leverage for the heels of the feet.

The short left- and right-foot half-scale formulæ which Dr. Barkworth gives find their genesis in the Lemmens scales of A, E, and E flat. The Lemmens basis for these particular scales is excellent, and the toe-short and heel-long key principle which dominates these is admirable within a circumscribed compass of the pedal board. Yet, though it is possible to use a left-hand note high up the board, or a right-heel note at the bottom of it, it is by no means always easy, and even a revolving centre seat would not help matters very much.

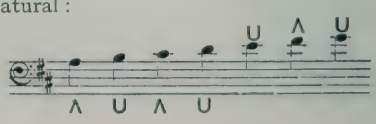
Dr. Barkworth's footing of the upper octave of the D flat scale places the last three notes, B flat, C, D flat, for the R. toe, L. heel, and R. toe, returning the same way. My criticism of this instance of high left-heel notes is that there is nothing gained by playing the top C with the L. heel, nor is any principle sacrificed if the more logical footing is adopted, viz., playing that top C with the R. heel (B flat, C, D flat, with R. toe, R. heel, R. toe). Further, if the L. heel plays the top C, its poor unfortunate toe becomes an offending member, for it has nowhere to go in the ascending phrase, and forces the right to play its toe-note in an unnatural position, an awkward state of affairs which is accentuated by the immediately following toe notes of the R. foot.

Though the following is not exactly comfortable:

Vide Dr. Barkworth's D flat scale.



this is natural:



yet the latter takes the L. heel higher than in the D flat scale. The reason is that the context of the latter enables the feet to assume a natural position, whereas the former prevents it.

I read through Dr. Barkworth's translation of Nielsen's 'Technical Studies in Pedal Playing.' It is an exceedingly well thought-out treatise (the translation was published by Schirmer in 1904), giving many diagrams of the pedal board, all illustrating the straight board.

On p. 4, right-hand column, of my 'Science of Organ Pedalling' I have mentioned rules from the Nielsen treatise which I considered opposed to the natural dictates of the pedal board. The author, Neilsen, condemns the French type of heel for pedalling, but he does not go as far as his able translator, Dr. Barkworth, and recommend stockinged feet.—Yours, &c.,

Liverpool. HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

'E LA MI'

SIR,—The term 'E la mi,' used in connection with the above service, which has puzzled 'Lay-Vicar' and yourself, is simply the old English Church-writer's way of expressing the note E according to the principles of the method of solmisation known as 'The Gamut,' a plan of the musical scale constructed from a series of seven ascending hexachords extending from bass G to E^{II}, which was in use as long as the system of hexachords was recognised. The Greek letter Γ (gamma) was used to denote the first note (Ut) of the series—hence 'Gamut.' The sounds of which these hexachords are composed are sung (according to the rules of this system) to the syllables ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, the semitones falling between mi and fa. In addition to these syllables, the notes of each octave have the alphabetical names A, B, C, D, E, F, G, used in exactly the same positions on the Staff as at the present day; consequently, as the hexachords begin on different notes and constantly overlap each other, any given note will have its own letter-name and also the names of the syllables belonging to overlapping hexachords, and is known by the combination of letter and syllabic names. The following example will illustrate this:

Thus in the 'Gamut' C is named C fa ut, D is named D sol re, E is named E là mi, and so on.

An accurate knowledge of the 'Gamut' was an essential part of the musical equipment of the choristers of the period, as is shown by the following quotation from Mr. John S. Bumpus's 'History of English Cathedral Music':

> 'In 1662 the Dean of the Chapel Royal issued an order by which it was decreed—"That if any knight or other person entituled to wear spurs, enter ye Chappell in that guise, he shall pay to ye quiristers ye accustomed fine: but if he command ye youngest quirester to repeat hys 'gamut' and he faile in ye so doing, the said Knight or other, shall not pay ye fine."'

As Mr. Bumpus justly remarks: 'These hexachords in ascending overlapped one another, and as the notes were named by combining the overlapping names, the task was a fair test of the boy's musical knowledge, and amounted to the same thing as asking a sailor to box the compass.'

Dr. Creyghton is said to be one of the first musicians to use the keys of E flat and A flat.—Yours, &c.,

York Place, FRANK S. STYLER.
Whitefield, near Manchester.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL MODEL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE

SIR,—No doubt most of the present-day supporters of the Handel Festivals are familiar with the large model of the first Festival (held in 1857) which stands in the south transept of the Crystal Palace. Probably few have troubled to examine it in detail, or to note various amusing points. It is only fair, before mentioning the latter, to give some idea of the magnitude of the work which faced the designer of the model (whose name is unfortunately omitted from the case). The following is quoted from a programme of one of the early Festivals:

> 'This important meeting which was entitled the "Great Handel Festival" was held at the Crystal Palace on the 15th, 17th, and 19th June, 1857. . . . The chorus consisted of 2,000 voices and the band of 386 instrumentalists. A large organ was erected for the occasion.'

The modeller therefore had to fashion nearly two thousand four hundred figures each no more than 2-in. high, in addition to the orchestral instruments, music stands, and the organ, so perhaps he may be forgiven any little irregularities. When one adds that in all the two thousand odd figures it is difficult to find two alike, the painstaking nature of the work is evident.

The point that strikes one at a first glance is that, of the three hundred and eighty-six instrumentalists mentioned in the programme, the only ones provided with seats in the model are the 'cellists. Presumably the remainder stood throughout the three days' Festival. One or two violinists appear to be leaning negligently against the stand behind, so one assumes that they found it a tiring job. The vocalists were more fortunate, for they at any rate could sit on the steps. Another curious point is that, although the official record mentions only three hundred and eighty-six orchestral players, there are in the model no less than ninety-five each first and second violins, sixty-seven each of violas, 'cellos, and basses, i.e., three hundred and ninety-one string players without counting the wind players. The double-basses are in two rows round the back of the orchestra and also in two small groups in the aisles between the violins and violas. Each double-bass player has his attendant satellite in the form of a 'cello player seated (apparently on a soap box) at his right-hand side. This was the practice in those days. It is to be supposed that the modeller wanted to fill up all the available space, for in addition he placed one bass and one 'cello right in front under the conductor's nose, surrounded by a few scattered fiddles. Each double-bass is at any rate fingering the same note.

Ah, but the attitudes! Every fiddler stands with his right leg slightly in advance of the left, in the best grand opera style. (The tight-fitting trousers of the period show off those legs to much more advantage than do the more ample 'bags' of the present generation.) Coats of all cuts and hues, frock-coats, cut-aways, &c., grace their well-waisted manly figures, while the coloured waistcoats would have warranted the conductor wearing sun-glasses.

Coming to the wind players, one finds quite a number of interesting things. We have already used up nearly four hundred of our three hundred and eighty-six (official) players! Nevertheless there are ten flutes and eight piccolos to begin with, so the size of the rest of the orchestra may be estimated. The Musical Times for May, 1857, gives the orchestra as follows: seventy-six firsts, seventy-four seconds, fifty each violas, 'cellos, and basses, nine flutes, nine oboes, nine clarinets, nine bassoons, twelve horns, twelve trumpets and cornets, nine trombones, three ophicleides, nine serpents and bass-horns, three drums, six side-drums (three hundred and ninety in all).

And those poor flutes! Four of them are sitting between the trumpets and clarinets, while four of the piccolos are wedged at the back between the horns and bassoons! The rest of the wood and brass are dotted here and there in patches, a fair number of them sitting entirely surrounded by string players.

There are three timpanists with seven drums between them, and one 8-ft. upright drum just below the organist's seat. The poor organist must have had a nervous breakdown afterwards. A curious feature is that standing in the gangways between the banks of vocalists and well to the back of the orchestra are six serpent players. A couple of bass horns are similarly placed, but nearer to the band. What a penetrating tone those serpents must have had! They are at least 30-ft. from the orchestra proper, and separated from one another by solid masses of vocalists.

There are three organ players (all standing) to manipulate the instrument specially constructed for the occasion. An interesting feature of the organ is that the top centre row of pipes in the ornamental front are lying in a horizontal position pointing out over the heads of the choir. The pipes are of conical section, presumably some sort of trumpet, and are apparently still in place in the present organ, though now in an upright position.

The Musical Times of July, 1857, gives the following account of the performance:

> 'Lofty enthusiasm, noble patriotism, sympathetic grief, stern resolves, feelings of adoration and reverential awe, by turn swayed the imagination as the chorus wailed forth its grief, uttered its declamation, gave forth its defiant challenge to the enemy, demanded to be led to victory . . .'

The designer of the model must have read that article, for he has succeeded in portraying all the emotions on the two thousand odd faces, albeit it seems a little peculiar to see a group of tenors registering 'sympathetic grief' adjacent to a smiling band of sopranos apparently demanding to be led to victory. Perhaps they only wanted a chance to get at the 'serpents' in their midst.

It may seem a little unkind thus to poke fun at this really splendid model, but the enumeration of these little points serves, in fact, to accentuate the patience and care taken in erecting such a model in a space no more than about 9-ft. wide by 5-ft. deep.

One shudders to think what fantastic nightmare Epstein would have constructed.—Yours, &c.,

L. Swinyard.

THE BRAILLE CENTENARY

Sir,—You have so kindly referred in your columns to the great Braille Centenary effort of the National Institute for the Blind, that I venture to hope that you will allow me to draw attention to a remarkable response made by a tiny village in Sussex. Here, so notable an instance has been given of what can be done 'where there 's a will,' that we at the National Institute venture to hope other villages and small towns throughout the country will feel encouraged to emulate the example.

On July 7 a double performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' (with the Sinfonia—three movements) took place at the Parish Church of Keymer, with orchestra, organ, and chorus—seventy performers—under the conductorship of the wife of the Rector, an able amateur musician.

As a result, a sum of over £20 was raised in response to the Braille Centenary Appeal.

May I also correct an erroneous impression which has somehow got abroad that the Braille Centenary Festival is to take the form of a big central performance in London of the 'Hymn of Praise'?

Instead of this, the Institute is relying on the individual help of its friends, each in his own locality, and I would suggest that there are few churches which could not render at least some excerpt from the Cantata, if only the duet and chorus 'I waited for the Lord,' and at the same time arrange for a contribution to be sent to the National Institute as an act of thanksgiving that the sighted and the blind have at long length the mutual advantage of the printed page, thanks to the invention of the printing press by Gutenberg in 1440 and of the embossed script by Louis Braille in 1829.

Truly, in the words of the Cantata itself, 'The Night is departing . . . Let all men praise the Lord.'—Yours, &c.,

Edward Watson

224-6-8, Gt. Portland Street, W.1. (Organizing Secretary, Braille Centenary Appeal, 1929).

A CORRECTION

Sir,—In the résumé of my lecture given before the Musical Association on April 23, which appeared in the Musical Times for July, I am reported to have said, 'To Elizabethan composers the Authorised Version of the Bible was a new thing—a wonderful and fresh source of verbal imagery and inspiration.' Dr. E. H. Ezard, of Cambridge, kindly drew my attention to the inaccuracy of this statement before I myself had seen it. Whether a lapsus linguæ on my part, or a lapsus calami on the reporter's part, is responsible, I do not know, but I hasten to ask you kindly to correct the error by the substitution of the following: 'To Elizabethan composers Coverdale's first complete English Bible (1535) and the English Prayer Book (1549), which contained the Psalter as translated in the Great Bible of 1539), were new things—wonderful and fresh sources of verbal imagery and inspiration.'—Yours, &c.,

Cyril B. Rootham.

4, Huntingdon Road, Cambridge.

MECHANISED MUSIC

Sir,—Has Mr. Rutland Boughton ever been marooned for years with never a chance of listening to good music? Of course not.

The gramophone has brought music of the best sort to many who, from force of circumstances, never get an opportunity of hearing it actually played. I venture to think that mechanised music has done a great deal to educate people who get only the chance of reading press criticisms. Mr. Brian Everest says he has turned on the Brahms Quintet in F thirty-five times. I have worn out three records of Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of Bach's Fantasia and Fugue played by the L.S.O., and as for the records of the English Singers (I have them all), I must refrain from putting them on any more until these beautiful madrigals are reproduced again—I hope by the same singers.

As an old quartet-player in the past, it has been a delight to me to hear the Flonzaley, the Léner, and other quartet-players whom I have never heard, and, I fear never shall, except through the gramophone.

The last great quartet I heard at first-hand was the Joachim Quartet, and I am under sixty years of age. The gramophone is better than nothing at all. As for the wireless, I cannot afford a set.—Yours, &c.,

Cumberland. Country Doctor.

'SOPRANOS ARE RARE'

Sir,—In his letter in your July issue, Mr. Travers Adams makes a most sweeping assertion. He says that nine out of ten of the soprano vocalists who appear in the programmes issued by the B.B.C. are not even mezzo-sopranos—they are high contraltos. Will Mr. Adams, as he undertakes to do, please supply proof of this? It is a matter of interest to many of us who hold that soprano voices are by no means so scarce as Mr. Adams thinks.—Yours, &c.,

4, Fielding Road, West Kensington Park, W.14. Wm. Bell Porter.

Sir,—As one who happens to be conversant with the difficulties which are alleged to confront the B.B.C. in the engaging of vocalists, I should like to say that in my opinion, the conclusion expressed by Mr. Travers Adams in his letter of July, though apparently courteous, in reality goes far to offend the canons of good taste. I put it to the thoughtful readers of his letter whether they consider Mr. Travers Adams to be a more competent judge of a soprano vocalist than the highly expert selectors appointed by the B.B.C.—Yours, &c.,

W.2. E. A.

SIR,—It has given me unqualified pleasure to read the letter sent in by Mr. H. Travers Adams. I am not advancing any comment as to responsibility, but I agree emphatically with all that Mr. Travers Adams has written with respect to the so-called sopranos who are engaged by the B.B.C. His experience is precisely the same as my own and of many of my friends and acquaintances who have listened with me.

Our ears have been pained by the thin, superficial, hard quality, and by the tone so painfully lacking in colour, warmth, or richness, of most of these singers. Why they are called sopranos passes my comprehension, for the compass of the ballads sung by many of them does not exceed F (fifth line), and even in this limited compass the upper notes are taken with an amount of force and effort that an ordinary real soprano would not exhibit. Surely from the thousands who are given an audition better results might be expected.—Yours, &c.,

ELEANOR MCALLISTER.

'The Gables,'
East Acton Lane, W.3.

SIR,—On several occasions I have, in the leading musical papers, expressed my inability to subscribe to what I have held to be exaggerated statements on singers and singing made by Mr. Travers Adams. I gladly admit that there has always been valuable information to be gained from the published letters, articles, and works of a teacher of his experience; but I disagree with his latest publicly-expressed opinion. He gives the impression that the lower voices in women are much more common than the higher. He is right in regard to men, but, as far as my memory serves me, during the last thirty years there have appeared in public not more than five or six real contralto singers. The great majority of singers, on the other hand, have been sopranos. Perhaps some more of your readers would care to express their opinions.—Yours, &c.,

'Dulce Domum,' PEARCE SMALL.
Tunbridge Road,
Southend-on-Sea.

SIR,—As a sincere admirer of Mr. Travers Adams, in company with many of my friends and acquaintances, I feel nevertheless bound, though with regret, to record publicly my opinion that on occasions he is swayed more by impulse than reason. His statement, 'Nine out of ten who appear on the B.B.C. programmes as sopranos are high contraltos' can be due to impulse only. It certainly is not accurate. If he desires to discover the reason for the unsatisfactory performances of the great majority of present-day professional singers of all descriptions, he will find the solution set forth in his own two latest publications, i.e., the lack of physical development. Other explanations are often purely fanciful.—Yours, &c.,

F. H. K.

'OUR BERLIOZ EXCLUSIVES'

SIR,—Although I would like to state at once that I am in hearty agreement with 'Feste' in regard to the Berlioz controversy, I cannot subscribe to his dictum that 'Berlioz's orchestration worked magic.'

Berlioz was undoubtedly an innovator and an explorer in orchestration, and as such he deserves (and receives) the admiration of musicians. But I have never been able to appreciate the claim made by his admirers that the Berlioz orchestra sounds well or effective—with exceptions, of course. He seems to be ever conceiving stunts and special effects, which, however interesting as experiments, have little musical value.

In my humble opinion, his best all-round work—musically and orchestrally—is the interesting 'Romeo and Juliet' Symphony, in which not only the three well-known orchestral movements (Fête at the Capulet Palace, 'Queen Mab' Scherzo, Love Scene), but also several of the choral movements, notably the Funeral March, achieve an orchestral and musical beauty which is generally absent from his other work. His 'Hungarian March' and 'Invitation to the Waltz' have always seemed to me ineffective, and inferior to Liszt's version of the former and Weingartner's version of the latter pieces.

I do not think that any honest musician who dislikes Berlioz can be accused of prejudice. No composer had finer ideals and ideas—on paper; his life was one continual fight for what he conceived to be the truth. His best contribution to music, to my mind, is his literary work.

I add that I am a musician and conductor who has tried, over and over again, to like Berlioz, and who has studied his scores with a view to including them in the répertoire of the various orchestras he has had to direct.—Yours, &c., 'X.'

New York City.

[The views expressed in this letter are of special interest, as the writer—who asks us to allow him the cloak of anonymity—is a conductor of international reputation.—EDITOR.]

A DIFFICULT RHYTHM

SIR,—In your 'Answers to Correspondents' you refer to the Presto of Beethoven's Quartet and the opening of the C minor Symphony as instances in which it is difficult to make the rhythm clear. Is not the opening of Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' Chorus (from the 'Mount of Olives') another case in point?

Ex. 1.  &c.

Besides the difficulty of preventing the three semiquavers from sounding like a triplet, there is the difficulty of playing (I have no copy at hand, and may have quoted incorrectly):

Ex. 2 (a).

or:

(b.)

with absolute accuracy. It is also a strain for an organist to keep this up for a whole page. I have had the opportunity in the past of consulting two first-rate players about Ex. 1. One gave the equivalent of the 'tiny stress' you speak of by playing the semiquaver E short and seeming to linger slightly upon the D. The effect was certainly clear, and the L.H. was crisply and accurately played. Later on in the movement where there are quaver triplets against one played it without any relaxation of pace, the other yielded slightly. Both agreed that it was exceptionally hard to play properly, and were not ashamed to practise it before a performance.

What you say about the 'definition' disappearing in the opening of the C minor Symphony might be illustrated by the opening of Widor's familiar Toccata in F. As the result of 'too much pace and too little thought' some organists rob it of brilliancy, and give to the semiquavers almost the effect of sustained chords. That was not the method of the two brilliant organists (both now dead) of whom I have spoken. Nothing could be more exciting, and every note told, but the pace was adapted to the building and was never unduly fast.—Yours, &c., MUS. B.

Brighton.

'THE PILGRIM OF LOVE'

SIR,—Can any of your readers throw light upon the authorship of the words of the above song? In Novello's edition, edited by W. A. Barrett, the words are ascribed to Mrs. Opie, but in other editions the author is given (where at all) as Dimond. For local reasons I should be very glad if someone could clear the matter up.—Yours, &c., RICHARD LOWNE.

Norwich.

ORGAN RECITALS AND THE PRESS

Sir,—'Cet animal est très méchant, quand on l'attaque, il se défend'—that 's me, right enough, but is that what BM/BNXK calls being 'bitter'? Out upon this mealy-mouthed 'well-bred' (!) 'gentlemanly' (!!) age that so badly needs some 18th-century directness and frankness of speech!

So far from bearing the musical world a grudge I am very grateful to it in one respect, at least, for convincing me of that which—by your leave—I already know, that is, that whatsoever I be I am not a nonentity. When I think of the slander and calumny that have been the portion of the greatest ones and then consider the very satisfying helping that has been served out to your most humble, obleeged, and (more or less) obedient servant, I am greatly lifted up in heart.—Yours, &c.,

Kaikhosru Sorabji.

Sir,—In his notice of my performance of Karg-Elert's Sixty-six Choral-Improvisations in the July issue of the Musical Times, your Scottish correspondent says that this performance was 'claimed' to be the first complete performance in Britain. It was not only 'claimed' to be the first complete performance in Britain, but was the first complete performance 'nicht nur in Britain, sondern überhaupt,' on the authority of Karg-Elert himself. I am not in the habit of claiming 'first performances' irresponsibly.

It may be of interest to your readers that I intend in the very near future to give a complete Karg-Elert Festival of organ-music (eight recitals) in various centres, and, later, pianoforte recitals of new music by Kodály, Bloch, Bartók, and Sorabji.—Yours, &c.,

27, Langlands Road, Erik Chisholm.
Newlands, Glasgow.

[Surely Mr. Chisholm is too touchy! All who write reports of musical events know from experience that the claim 'First performance' has to be accepted with caution, save when it has to do with a brand new work. Karg-Elert's Sixty-six Choral Improvisations were published twenty years ago, and every one of them must have been played many times by English organists. Would a pianist who played the whole of Beethoven's Sonatas at three recitals be able to claim that he had given the first complete performance? The Karg-Elert pieces, though published under one opus number, were no more intended to be played straight off than were the Sonatas. We do not wish to appear to under-rate Mr. Chisholm's achievement, but we think he attaches too much importance to a point that is incapable of proof, and that would not matter very much anyway.—Editor.]

Mr. Stanley Nicholas writes to say that, owing to removal, he wishes to dispose of several years' issues, in good condition, of the Musical Times. He will give them to the first applicant. His address is 20, Waunllwyd, Nantymoel, near Bridgend, South Wales.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Tenor wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice of songs, ballads, &c. Birmingham and district.—L. M. Kimberley, c/o 10, Suffolk Street, Birmingham.

Gentleman pianist wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice. S.E. London district.—B. A. B., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. Afternoon or evening.—Miss N. Robinson, 118, Adelaide Road, N.W.3.

Amateur instrumentalists required to form an orchestra to accompany choral society. Weekly rehearsals near Elephant and Castle, S.E.—Hon. Secretary, 67, New Cut, Lambeth, S.E.1.

Young gentleman pianist wishes to meet violinist or vocalist for mutual practice. Would also like to meet another pianist. Bradford, Yorks, district.—H. L., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist, 'cellist, and bass wanted for mutual weekly rehearsal.—30, Revelow Road, S.E.4.

Good instrumental players wanted to form an orchestra to assist in the production of an amateur opera at Glasgow.—R. B., c/o Musical Times.

String player wishes to meet pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice of sonatas, and as accompanist. N. London.—Bratsche, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman), excellent reader, wishes to meet string players for trio work, &c. Chelmsford district. Also plays viola.—A. G. M., c/o Musical Times.

Lady accompanist wishes to meet vocalist for mutual practice. Finchley district.—M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet violinist or another pianist for mutual practice. Would also like to join an amateur orchestra or choir. Classical music. Manchester or Burton districts.—Miss M. M. Winship, Platt Bank, Chinley, Derbyshire (viâ Stockport).

Pianist and violinist wish to meet 'cellist for mutual practice. N.W. district.—Lee, 14, Victoria Villas, Kilburn, N.W.6.

Viola player wanted for mutual practice of chamber music. Sundays, 11 a.m.—6, Newton Street, Hyde, near Manchester.

Vocalist (beginner) wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Streatham district.—H. T., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. N. London preferably.—E. Mendes, 5, Stanley Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

Young gentleman pianist wishes to meet another for mutual practice. S.E. London.—B. F., c/o Musical Times.

Competition Festival Record

THE SCHOOL FESTIVAL MOVEMENT IN SHROPSHIRE

This movement originated in 1927, when one district Festival was held under the directorship of Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, and proved so popular that in 1928 three other districts launched a Festival.

The objects of the movement are as follows: (1.) To promote a love of music in the schools; (2.) To provide intercourse between teachers of music in schools which will be helpful in the teaching of the subject; (3.) To inculcate such a love for massed singing that boys and girls will, in later life, associate themselves with the musical activities of those villages and towns in which they live; (4.) To hold annual Musical Festivals, at which schools shall sing, and at which both children and teachers may receive from the musical director in charge helpful hints and criticism.

The Festivals are non-competitive in character, and are organized by committees of teachers and others interested in music generally. Each school taking part prepares a set programme of music for a massed concert and also presents at least four songs, two of which are chosen to be sung before the director on the day of the Festival. Schools are arranged in suitable classes according to size and character, and when all the schools in a particular class have sung they receive helpful criticism from the director and a confidential report is handed to each conductor. The day concludes with a combined rehearsal and massed concert.

This year four Festivals have been held, and in order to co-ordinate the work the central committee was fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. Cyril Winn as director for the series. Marked improvement can be reported in the style of the singing, and the response shown at the four massed concerts was excellent. The benefits derived by the children who compose the audience during the auditions and the inspiration received from participation in a massed effort are of inestimable value, particularly to those schools in isolated districts. The size of the massed choirs ranged from four hundred to six hundred voices, and the programme of music consisted of national, folk, modern, and classical songs, and schools selected by the director sang individually.

The following is a summary of the work done at one Festival: Number of schools entering, 27; number of children who sang during the day, 796; massed choir, 600; number of different songs sung during the day, 115.

Sight-reading continues to make headway and forms an integral part of the Festival movement, but at present remains a voluntary effort.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMPETITIVE CHOIRS

The fourth annual summer conference of the National Association of Competitive Choirs was held on Saturday, June 15, in the Town Hall, Bolton.

Upwards of a hundred delegates attended from all parts, and were warmly welcomed by the Mayor of Bolton (Alderman F. Cheadle), who expressed the hope that the Association would long continue its good work in bringing music into the life of the people.

The chair was ably occupied by the president of the Association, Mr. John E. Turner (Halifax).

Major J. T. Bavin (Director, Education Department of the Federation of British Music Industries) gave a practical and very helpful address on choral conducting.

A paper was read by Mr. Alfred Higson on the 'Competitive Festival from the Competitor's Point of View.' This covered a wide field, ranging from the unsuitability of many Festival rooms to the vexed question of the merits, or otherwise, of performing from memory in competitions.

Mr. Higson strongly condemned the use of the marking sheet supplied by the Federation of Musical Festivals, arguing that it was a hindrance to clear thinking, especially in the case of judges with whom arithmetic was not a strong point. He contended that wiser decisions would be arrived at if adjudicators were allowed to sit back and listen to a performance without the hindrance of writing and adding up marks. He was of opinion that decisions should be based on quality, technique, and expression. Mr. Higson proceeded to criticise the attitude of some adjudicators in expecting choirs to memorise Festival music. A solo performance from memory might be a simple feat, but the task of memorising with sixty voices working together meant intensive study. He thought marks for memory might be added as an extra, but that the use of copies ought not to operate against choirs in Festivals.

Mr. Higson also criticised the principle of massed performances, stating that in spite of the opinion of the press they were not popular as the climax to a Festival. He was of opinion that the system of setting choirs to sing one set of pieces in the afternoon and another set in the evening might be amended. If all finalists could start from 'scratch' there would be a better chance of obtaining a satisfactory decision. The question of money-prizes and grants was also touched upon.

The absence of Dr. Herman Brearley deprived the Conference of hearing the views of a very able and popular adjudicator.

Votes of thanks were suitably moved and seconded by Mr. A. Knight (Wigan) and Mrs. Bourne (Barrow).

After tea a number of the delegates were taken to view the historic building of Smithill's Hall, by kind permission of Col. Ainsworth.

In our report of the Kent Festival (July Musical Times, p. 642), we stated that the entries had fallen from last year's 'best ever' of 700 odd to 570. This was a slip. This year's entries reached the excellent total of 717; moreover, the bank balance on the right side shows an increase.

BALHAM (June 18-24).—At the third Festival there were over a thousand entries, more than a half of these being for dancing—classical, operatic, national, character, demi-character, and ballroom. The last included Charlestons for competitors over sixteen, under sixteen, under thirteen, under eleven, under nine, and under eight. Of the remaining five hundred the majority were pianists or singers, the general standard of whose performances was praised by the adjudicators. Choral singing did not occupy an important place in the scheme.

BOURNEMOUTH (July 6-13).—Not the least noteworthy feature of the third annual Festival was the increased number of conquests achieved by competitors from other parts; a sign, surely, of healthy growth. The last was seen on the opening day of one of the most valuable trophies, Yeovil Town Band winning for the third successive year the Rotary Challenge Shield, and thus securing permanent possession. Sandecotes School's fine choir of girls proved similarly successful in respect of the shield presented by Mr. Hamilton Law; and the boys from Boscombe St. John's retained the cup they had held for the past two years. Bournemouth Amateur Orchestra again won the Sir Dan Godfrey Cup, despite the very capable and interesting way in which the test music—the third and fourth movements of the 'St. Paul's' Suite for strings (Holst)—was handled by the Herbert Ware Orchestra from Cardiff. Bournemouth Labour Male-Voice Choir lost both its cups; one (presented by the patron of the Festival, the Earl of Malmesbury) going to the Wessex Harmonic Choristers—a capital little choir from Weymouth, the other to the Southampton Male-Voice Choir. After winning one cup, the West Norwood Ladies' Choir heard Prof. Granville Bantock make it known to everyone concerned that they would have had another but for not using the prescribed edition of Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' Five viola players were keen enough to figure in one or other of the two grades; and string ensemble classes attracted distinctly encouraging entries. The week's big time-table got out of hand now and again; but officials as a whole worked energetically and well. The closing stages of the Festival, at the Winter Gardens, were marked by quite a refreshing demonstration of partisanship, which would have done no discredit to a football final. Immediately following the Southampton Male-Voice Choir's cup triumph (referred to above) came the conquest achieved by the Southampton Musical Society, who captured the grand choral shield. Both of these comparatively youthful combinations were conducted by Mr. Arnold Williams, and as soon as some of his stalwart singers could get at him he found himself lifted shoulder high, and 'chaired' exultantly across the hall. T. W. C.

CLEETHORPES (June 25-29).—This twenty-year-old Festival was well supported by competitors from its six-county area. Twenty of its hundred classes were for choirs, senior and junior. Hull Gleemen (Mr. A. Brown) were the leading competitors, their fine standard giving them first place in the alto lead and chief male-voice sections. Mansfield and Sutton Co-operative Choir (Mr. F. Ward) were first in the mixed-voice and Bramley (Mr. C. A. Holgate) in the female-voice section. Women's Institutes of fifty to a hundred voices put up an excellent competition; fifteen choirs sang Dyson's 'Thanksgiving' and Purcell's 'We spirits of the air,' Helperby being first and Romanby and Nawton tieing for second place a mark behind. One of the most interesting of the solo classes was that for Lieder-singing, in which both singers and accompanist came under adjudication. The winners were Miss V. M. Williams and Miss D. Middleton, of Cleethorpes. The Festival showed all-round prosperity, one of the signs being bigger and better elocution classes.

LEAMINGTON (June 19-22).—Over fifty choirs came to sing on the last day of this important meeting. A London choir—the South-West Choral Society—was the most successful, winning first place among ten female-voice choirs and seven mixed-voice choirs. The second places were won respectively by Mr. William Turner's choir from Nottingham and the Nottingham Philharmonic Society. There were twelve male-voice choirs, the best being Coventry Welsh Gleemen and the second-best Leicester City. Women's Institutes made a good class, with nine competitors; Henley-in-Arden won the prize by a mark. The Festival attracted eight hundred and sixty entries, representing over five thousand persons, and large audiences were the rule.

The London Sunday School Choirs Annual Festival was held at the Crystal Palace on June 22. In the choral competitions Hanwell Wesleyan won the Barnard Shield for junior choirs, and Willesden District Choir carried off the Founder's Shield for mixed-voice choirs. The Jubilee Shield was won by the Brownhill Road Baptists for the second year. In the afternoon about three thousand juniors gave a concert, conducted by Mr. H. W. Marchant; and in the evening the Festival Choir sang a fine programme (Haydn, Brahms, Schumann, and Elgar) under the direction of Mr. Frank Creed.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August, 1869:

After some discussion, the Government grant of £500 to the Royal Academy of Music (which had been withheld for a twelvemonth), passed the House of Commons on Thursday, the 22nd ult.

The results of the examinations in music, at the Society of Arts, which have lately been made known, show that Tonic Sol-fa pupils have repeated their successes of former years. In the examination which Mr. G. A. Macfarren conducts in Elementary Musical Composition, the paper may be worked either in ordinary or Tonic Sol-fa notation, and the examination is open on equal terms to students of every system, the Tonic Sol-faists giving the prizes and paying the expenses of the examination. Only three out of the fifty-five certificates are, however awarded to other than Tonic Sol-faists.

We have received a letter from a correspondent, who signs himself 'A poor lover of Music,' complaining that concert tickets are as a rule bought up by agents, and sold to the public at a price far beyond that advertised by the concert-giver. There is nothing new in this. Mr. Charles Dickens, during his readings in America, told his audience that he should be glad to appear some evening before a comparatively empty room, if the public by refusing to purchase tickets at an advanced rate could thus throw them upon the hands of those who lived by such a system. We should be glad if a remedy like this could be tried in London; for assuredly the evil is rapidly spreading.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The outstanding feature of the students' chamber concert on June 19 was undoubtedly the singing of Brahms's Quartet 'Zigeunerlieder' by May Turtle, Irene Morden, Olive Darley, and Valette Iacopi. All have good voices, above the usual standard of students indeed; they sang, moveover, with keen intelligence and ensemble, and may be congratulated on giving a sound performance. A string quintet—Pastorale in G minor—by F. Nellie Daniels, a student, shows signs of ability, but is immature. Still the young composer should try again. It was sympathetically played. Very well played, too, by Helen Gaskell and Margot Wright was the Suite for oboe and pianoforte in D minor by Rosalie Bridgeman, an ex-student. The work is cleverly constructed, but is too long. Muriel G. Crowther has written two little songs, 'Sleepy Head' and 'The Buckle,' which she sang herself to her own accompaniment at the pianoforte. There is a place in the musical universe for this class of composition. The music is refreshingly light, but distinguished by pretty neatness. Laurence O'Neill, who has a real bass voice, sang 'Possenti Numi, Iside,' in promising fashion.

The R.A.M. Club gave a social and musical evening on June 24, when M. Nicholas Orloff, the well-known Russian pianist, played an interesting programme to the great content of the large gathering of members and their friends. The Chopin group was especially appreciated, and Mr. Orloff gave two encores after having been recalled many times. At the conclusion of the concert he was entertained by the Principal, Mrs. McEwen, Lady Cooper (the President of the Club), and others.

The annual Operatic Week took place at the New Scala Theatre from July 8 to 13, a special account of which will be found on p. 745. F.

The following awards have been made: Alfred J. Waley Prize (violin) to Margot Macgibbon (Australia), Frederick Grinke being highly commended; Swansea Eisteddfod Prize (sopranos and mezzo-sopranos) to Gwyneth Owen (soprano) (Ferndale), Beatrice Gittins being highly commended and Marguerita Hughes commended; Albanesi Prize (pianists) to Dorothy Manley (Blackburn), Frank Britton being very highly commended and Gwenyth Misselbrooke commended; Gilbert R. Betjemann Memorial Prize (all voices) to Freda Townson (Bolton), Joan Coxon, Gwendolene Embley, and Dorothy Haigh being highly commended and Muriel Page commended; Parepa-Rosa Prize (contraltos) to Esther Hulbert (Goodmayes), Ann Hughes being highly commended and Kathleen Whittome commended; Cecil Martin Prize (elocution) to Geoffrey Davies (Liverpool), Alice Langham being highly commended and Muriel Page commended; Isabel Jay Memorial Prize (sopranos) to Freda Townson (Bolton), Jean Campbell-Kemp being very highly commended and Grace Reynolds commended; Lionel Monckton Scholarship (composition) to Muriel G. Crowther (London), Dorothy Parke being highly commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The month of July provided an exceptionally full list of fixtures, for not only were the annual examinations so extensive as to dominate the last two weeks of the term, but about a dozen concerts and a performance of current repertory by the Opera Class took place, and a new mime-ballet was produced. The last proved to be a most engaging trifle by Penelope Spencer, who superintended the production. It deals with a mother anxious to marry her daughter to an elderly wooer, but, as is only to be expected, the daughter prefers a much younger suitor, who eventually triumphs through a neat stratagem, and leaves the elderly couple to console themselves by marrying each other. Movements selected from Handel's harpsichord works provided the musical accompaniment, scored for small orchestra and conducted by Leonard Isaacs, an Associated Board Exhibitioner of the College. The Opera Class gave Leoncavallo's 'Pagliacci,' under the conductorship of Mr. H. Grunebaum, and proved that the strenuous work demanded by the recent production of the 'Magic Flute' had not led to the neglect of regular operatic training.

The orchestral concerts of the month, four in number, showed the qualities of the three orchestras to be many and varied. A concerto concert, and a more orthodox concert, by the First Orchestra under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, attracted unusually large audiences, the most formidable tasks undertaken being R. Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony and Brahms's D minor Pianoforte Concerto. The other two concerts, by the Second and Third Orchestras under Dr. Sargent and Mr. W. H. Reed respectively, gave a group of young conductors practical experience of appearing before an audience. There were also many recitals, chamber concerts, and informal concerts, which were conspicuous for first performances of works by students, and an interesting group of songs composed by the Duchess of Atholl, a former Honorary Scholar of the College.

The last Patrons' Fund Rehearsal of the term was devoted chiefly to new works by British composers, Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducting. Miss Imogen Holst's 'Persephone' proved to be a work of considerable depth and imagination, with abundant promise for the future development of the young composer's individuality. Mr. Blower's 'Wicklow Hills' offered in a small compass charming pictures of the associations conjured up by the romantic subject. The last movement of Mr. Cuthbert Osmond's Symphony in E flat, of which the first three movements had been heard at previous rehearsals, was an appropriate finale to its predecessors, artistic and well-knit, with a deft use of thematic material. The programme included also a soloist and a conductor, Miss Rene Sweetland giving an excellent performance of César Franck's Symphonic Variations under the direction of Mr. Cyril Crabtree.

An announcement that has been received with great gratification is the appointment by H.R.H. The Prince of Wales, President of the College, of Sir Ernest Palmer, whose benefactions to music are almost beyond enumeration, to be a vice-president of the College in succession to the late Earl of Rosebery.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

By the death of Sir Wilfred Collet the College has lost one of its oldest and staunchest supporters. Beginning as a student in his young days he maintained his interest by later becoming a vice-president, and was a keen and regular attendant with his clarinet at orchestral practices.

For the first time, on June 29 last, the College combined the usual Queen's Hall orchestral concert with a distribution of College diplomas and prizes. Dr. John Warriner, Chairman of the Corporation, presided, and was supported on the platform by members of the College Corporation together with Prof. S. L. Loney, Chairman of Convocation, London University, who presented the diplomas and prizes. The Principal, Mr. E. Stanley Roper, gave a most inspiring address, which had a very cordial reception. Miss Havler received enthusiastic applause for a masterly performance of the Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso.

By the performance of 'Monsieur Beaucaire' at the Scala Theatre on July 4, 5, and 6, the College Operatic Class, under the direction of Mr. F. Lloyd, assisted by Miss Maud Winter, achieved another remarkable success. When all carried out their parts so well it is invidious to single out any particular performer. At all three performances crowded houses showed great enthusiasm.

Michaelmas term begins on September 23 and will see some notable changes.

Mr. Joseph Ivimey has found it necessary to resign his appointments as conductor of the College Orchestra, and also that for the opera. Mr. Ivimey carries with him the affectionate good wishes of all. At the concluding performance of 'Monsieur Beaucaire' he was presented by the Principal with a handsome testimonial from the members of the company. Mr. Ivimey was also entertained to lunch by members of the College Board, and presented with a cheque as a tangible expression of good will.

The College is fortunate in obtaining the services of Mr. John Barbirolli, Musical Director of Covent Garden Opera and a former scholar of the College, as conductor of the orchestra. Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, conductor of the Philharmonic Choir, Oriana Choir, and Bach Cantata Club, takes charge of the College Choir.

At a recent meeting of the Board an important and far-reaching decision was made in connection with the Exhibitions granted annually by the College. These have been increased in number from thirty-one to sixty-six for Great Britain and Ireland; and from twenty-seven to fifty-two at the Overseas centres. Full particulars can be obtained from local secretaries.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

The fortieth annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music was held at the Royal College of Music, Prince Consort Road, S.W.7, on July 9. Col. Raymond W. ffennell took the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the Secretary read the report for the year. The number of candidates in Great Britain and Ireland was 7,920 in the Local Centre Examinations and 42,338 in the 'School' Examinations. The Exhibitions offered by the Board in Great Britain and Ireland during the year were gained by Dorothy K. Peacock, London (pianoforte), Edith M. Wright, Bangor (pianoforte), Violetta Yuill, Brighton (pianoforte), Margaret M. Reckless, Nottingham (violin), Rosemary Coppock, London ('cello), Megan Lloyd, Cardiff ('cello). Exhibitions were also awarded in the Dominions and Colonies as follows: In Australia, Edna Bickmore, Newcastle (violin), Miriam Hyde, Adelaide (pianoforte), Jean Pollock, Sydney (pianoforte); in New Zealand, Mary E. Martin, Greymouth (violin), Margaret G. McLeod, Havelock North (pianoforte), Thelma F. Willoughby, Wellington (pianoforte); in Canada, Fanny D. Dunsire, Nanaimo (pianoforte), Mike Kuczer, Winnipeg (violin), David Martin, Winnipeg (violin); in India, Blanche Herman, Bangalore (pianoforte); in Ceylon, Caryl E. van Langenberg, Colombo (violin); in Malta and Gibraltar, Olga Urso, Malta (pianoforte); in the British West Indies, British Guiana, and Bermuda, Dorothy B. Williams, Jamaica (pianoforte). Twenty-three Exhibitions gained in previous years have been renewed, twenty for a further period of one year and three for one term.

The Chairman, in moving that the report be adopted, referred to the much-regretted death of the Deputy-Chairman, Sir Anthony Bowlby, and to other losses sustained by the Board, and read the following letter from the Board's President, H.R.H. The Prince of Wales:

'St. James's Palace, S.W.1
'July 9, 1929.

'As President of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music I have heard with much satisfaction of the work the Board is doing, and I hope that in the coming year it may carry out its important musical activities at home and in the Dominions with increasing success.

(Signed) 'Edward P.'

This was a most encouraging message, for which the Board was deeply grateful. The Board's work continued to prosper both at home and abroad. That in the Dominions and Colonies had not shown a financial profit, but it was satisfactory to know that it was appreciated by all desiring a uniformly high standard throughout the Empire. A particular evidence of this was the great success in Australia of the Clubs of Licentiates of the Board, entry to which was much prized. At home it was the intention of the Board to make still further efforts to popularise its work of advancing musical education. An even closer contact would be established with schools and music teachers through the appointment of a special Organizer of Examinations, Mr. J. Malcolm Muir. The Board wished to encourage music in schools in every way, and would take all possible co-operative steps to this end. Already at the request of the Incorporated Society of Musicians it had issued a separate syllabus for the benefit of those hitherto using the now discontinued I.S.M. examinations, and at that of the Cambridge Syndicate had agreed to assist in holding their music examinations in India. This forward and constructive policy it would continue to adopt.

Dr. H. W. Richards, of the Royal Academy of Music, seconded the motion, and the report and balance sheet were unanimously adopted.

Sir Hugh Allen, Director of the Royal College of Music, speaking on the work of the Board, emphasised the fact that the Board was a fusion of the two Royal Schools of Music, the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, and was indissolubly connected with the distinguished musicians who were and had been members of them. Thus it brought the two schools into close relation with each other and enabled them to work together for the good of music. The great strength of the Board lay in the fact that its examiners were members of the two schools, and carried their name with them. To work for the Board was dignified and desirable, for the Board drew its authority from the schools and shared their prestige. Musical education here during the past fifty years had seen remarkable developments, and we were faced with a new set of circumstances. There was a fight. Were we to make our music or to take it? Music now was for the many. The noble task of the Board was now to see that it was properly used and dispensed.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman for presiding then terminated the proceedings.

The exhibitions offered annually by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, which entitle their holders to free tuition at the R.A.M. or the R.C.M. for two or three years, have been awarded to the following candidates: Beryl Price, London (pianoforte), Gilbert Smith, Leicester (violin), and Eileen H. McCarthy, London ('cello), at the R.A.M., and Joanna A. MacLeod, Oxford (violin), Ann S. C. Ram, Totland Bay (Isle of Wight) ('cello), and Carl O. Lewis, Bournemouth (violin), at the R.C.M.

London Concerts

SOCIETY OF WOMEN MUSICIANS

New compositions and new arrangements were performed at the meeting of the members of the Society of Women Musicians held in the rooms of the Asiatic Society on July 6. All these novelties showed a certain detachment, a desire to do things in an individual way, and to do it without setting forth on perilous adventures, which put to shame the work of some modern males. Of course, distinction is not the special attribute of either sex. None of the works performed suggested present or latent genius, although all revealed promise of better things to come. But the outstanding fact was the sanity of these women composers, who never seemed to lose sight for a moment of the chief realities of music—the reality of sincerity, the reality of clearness and logical exposition.

F. B.

AUBYN RAYMAR

Few people seem to realise that Mr. Aubyn Raymar is one of that very small number of pianists who must be called geniuses. His playing is like no one else's; when he plays he creates an entirely new thing, even of a hackneyed work like Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques,' by the subtlety and power of his phrasing and by a very individual manipulation of tone. His virtuosity is uncanny, but not showy. He has that rare intuition which not only penetrates to the heart of a composer's music but at the same time re-creates it; interpretation of this kind comes near to pure creation. His playing is rather inhuman, and lacks the warmth of a great personality; it makes one feel as though the music were standing on its own legs in a vacuum, and the stock revelation of its nature is an experience we are not used to in our intimate art. He gave a recital at Grotrian Hall on June 25, at which he played in his abrupt, dangerous, and masterly style a group of 18th-century clavecin pieces, the 'Etudes Symphoniques,' some attractive pieces of Medtner's, and a new Nocturne by Schelling, which turned out to be only Chopin brought up to date by a very modern improvement.

F. H.

TRIO RECITAL

The trio recital of Madame Mathilda Verne, and Messrs. Ferencz Hegedus and Alexandre Barjansky on June 10, failed to give the satisfaction to the audience which a previous recital in June had given. Perhaps the players were not in the right mood; or possibly the music became them not so well. But the chief cause of trouble was the open lid of the pianoforte, which let loose such a mighty wave of sound that the string players were completely swamped. Madame Verne did her utmost to control the tone. But it is a well-nigh hopeless task. The modern 'concert grand' with an open lid is as dangerous as a motor car driven by a fiend. Would it not be wise to recognise this elementary fact? Even with the lid lowered the balance of tone is always in favour of the pianoforte, unless the strings are on the high register. If this is not done the only possible alternative is to multiply the string players. A dozen fiddlers and a dozen 'cellists would be just about equal to one pianoforte with the raised lid.

F. B.

ORLOFF AND FACHIRI

One expected much from two such distinguished players as M. Orloff and Madame Fachiri, but it must be admitted that on this particular occasion neither the pianist nor the violinist came up to our expectations. The recital had an unhappy beginning. M. Orloff took the first phrases of the Franck Sonata at so slow and solemn a pace that the violinist could not possibly accept it and, at the same time, give to her melody the sweetness and fluency it requires. Madame Fachiri, in consequence, was forced to compromise; but she lost the key to the mood those first phrases establish so clearly and emphatically. But indeed throughout the recital M. Orloff showed none of the consideration for, and understanding of, the violin which is essential to a reasonable ensemble. In the Kreutzer Sonata his tone simply overwhelmed the violinist's.

F. B.

MARK RAPHAEL

Mr. Mark Raphael won our gratitude for including in his programme a set of songs by Gustav Mahler which, although at present looked upon with some suspicion, well deserve to be widely known. So far only the big symphonies of Mahler have been heard in England, and there are some who hold that these do not show the best of his work. Mr. Raphael's experiment rather encourages this view, for the songs made a deeper impression on the public than any performance of the symphonies we remember in this country. The interpretation was intelligent on the whole, but Mr. Raphael's perfervid style tended to turn the rich sentiment of the music into sentimentality.

F. B.

ARTHUR ALEXANDER

Three novelties were introduced by Mr. Arthur Alexander at his recital at Wigmore Hall. The first was a Sonata-Saga by Freda Swan, a musicianly work, well-proportioned but inclined to be over-emphatic. One could never quite get rid of the impression that the composer was protesting too much. A 'Ballad' by John Ireland was much more convincing both in matter and in method. Opinions may differ as to the final value of Ireland's work, but there can be no questioning his deftness in writing for the pianoforte nor the maturity of his style. The same aptitude for the instrument could be seen in Mr. Alexander's own transcriptions, which showed, besides, respect and understanding of the spirit of the original works from which the arrangements were made.

F. B.

The very interesting and valuable collection of nearly two thousand books, &c., on Folk-Music, and old music generally, made by the late Frank Kidson, has been purchased by the city of Glasgow, and will be housed in the Mitchell Library.

At the last van Lier concert of the season, Mr. van Lier played an unaccompanied Suite for the 'cello by Dr. Hugo Lichtentritt, the new Berlin correspondent of the Musical Times. This was in four movements, all laid out in ample proportions. The most attractive was a dance measure in triple time, wherein the crisp phrases were bound together by firm rhythms. If the composer betrayed in this work no very personal style, he is clearly a fluent craftsman. H. E. W.

'JUDITH'

It is said at Holywood that a successful film invariably makes use of these ingredients: religious uplift, snobbery, and sex appeal; and the shortest scenario which has ever been written to this formula was, 'My god,' said the Duchess, 'what legs!' Mr. Arnold Bennett has reduced the story of Judith to the same formula, with the addition of a murder to amplify it, and has handed it to Mr. Eugène Goossens to make into an opera.

The conflict between the God of Israel and His pagan enemy is the main theme; instead of the the Duchess we have the Oriental Court of Holofernes; the legs of the Russian Ballet are there, and we have the seduction of Holofernes by Judith to lend further sex interest, while his murder by the same lady gives a good strong dramatic situation. So far, admirable; for we can have a soprano heroine whose varying passions give scope for coloratura, a contralto attendant to enunciate the obvious at the right places, a love duet, a ballet, an Oriental potentate who can rant and play the he-man, and a nice, modest baritone to be his victim. The only trouble about this perfect opera book is that it needs not merely music but the right kind of music. The right kind of music will be good, honest Italian stuff à la 'Tosca.' Mr. Eugène Goossens is not Puccini, nor would he be if he could; he is not a nationalist composer at all, but one of the cosmopolitans who are at all costs dry. 'Judith,' therefore, which was produced at Covent Garden in the last week of the Italian season, was an equal struggle between lush situations and music of the modern brand of perverse Puritanism. Neither budged an inch. Mr. Goossens's nearest approach to a compromise was an occasional purple patch of orchestration, but to any hint that he should become lyrical he answered a resolute 'Never.'

Even so the elements might have coalesced into an opera if the vocal writing had the prime requisite of all opera—character. The whole point of opera as an art form is that it conveys character in music and conveys to the listener the subtle interactions of personality which the participants in a situation can themselves only guess at. Opera is not a play with music nor an excuse for singing, but a study in character. Mr. Goossens's dramatis personæ have no character whatever. Such characterisation as there is is in the orchestra, and even there its more correct name would be illustration. 'Judith' begins well with a concise, bold theme to which a voice off (actually in a loud speaker in the roof which successfully conveyed the effect of a supernatural message emanating from nowhere) prophesied the downfall of the Assyrians.

Here indeed was the characterisation lacking elsewhere, and this theme was used as the leading-motive throughout the opera, and designed to give it unity. The character of Judith offered endless scope to the composer, since she has to be at once a Joan of Arc, a siren, an assassin, and a poor, weak woman. Madame Röta Ljungberg did her best with her monotonous Sprechgesang, but found the English tongue an added difficulty. Mr. Arthur Fear undoubtedly had the voice and manner, if not quite the presence, of a tyrant. Mr. Walter Widdop sang clearly as usual, but was a ridiculous figure, more like Siegfried with a beard than a Eunuch (the secondary sexual characteristics of eunuchs are usually supposed to lack virility). Miss Gladys Palmer fluttered vaguely as Haggith, the maid-servant of Judith, and Mr. Dennis Noble filled neatly the minor rôle of Achior, who sets the whole action in motion by his counsels of prudence to the insensate Holofernes. The production was mounted with appropriate splendour, and Mr. Goossens conducted a satisfactory performance of this disappointing opera.

It is sad to have to write an obituary notice of yet another gallant attempt at creating a British opera. But facts are facts; the opera was still-born, and there is not likely to be any attempt at reviving that which never had any real operatic life in it. F. H.

ROYAL ACADEMY OPERA WEEK

The annual performances by the students of the opera class of the Royal Academy of Music at the New Scala Theatre are now a recognised function during the summer season. This year three operas were presented, each work being performed twice during the week, in some cases with a change of cast. There is no doubt that the Academy is now a most efficient nursery for opera, as both Mr. Roy Henderson and Mr. Arthur Fear, who sang at Covent Garden during the season just concluded, bear conclusive witness.

The three operas produced were 'Rigoletto,' 'La Bohème,' and 'Merrie England.' The first was the least successful. 'Rigoletto' demands a lightness and sureness of touch that perhaps is not to be looked for in students. Mr. Julius Harrison, who conducted throughout the week, and was largely responsible for the all-round success of the undertaking, made a gallant effort to enliven matters by speeding up the tempi, but the much-wanted sparkle merely became a scramble. Miss Joan Coxon has a pretty voice, small but impeccable, and sang the Gilda music with much charm, and Mr. Bernard Cannon was surprisingly good in the difficult part of the Jester.

'La Bohème' was better. Puccini perhaps suffers less from a 'rough and tumble' than Verdi, and the casting was happier. The four Bohemians were distinctly good, the ensemble and gestures being remarkably effective, and again, the Mimi of Miss Jean Campbell Kemp was first-rate. She sensed, sang, and looked the character. The orchestral playing, too, was a distinct advance on the previous night. It was a pretty thought to give 'Merrie England,' for Sir Edward German was an R.A.M. student, and he, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Sir Henry Wood were all interested spectators of the Friday night performance. On the whole it was a good performance, and yet this very English work was not as well done as the Franco-Italian 'La Bohème.' The choruses went well, and Miss Freda Townson as Jill-All-Alone redeemed the cast from mediocrity. She sings and acts well, and is worth the attention of some of our impresarios. The orchestral playing was patchy, heavy-handed instead of delicately Savoyard. But the week was full of interest to everybody having the cause of opera at heart, and its lessons will surely not have been in vain to its enthusiastic participators. F. J.

LONDON FESTIVAL OF OPERA

Mr. Robert Stuart has engaged the New Scala Theatre, Charlotte Street, for three weeks, beginning on Monday, December 30, for an opera festival. The London Festival of Opera is intended to illustrate the development of opera from the time of Monteverde to that of Weber. In the first week Monteverde's 'Orpheus' and Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' (preceded by the Locke-Gibbons Masque 'Cupid and Death') will be given on alternate evenings. In the second week the stereotyped opera of the period of Handel and Mozart will be represented by Handel's 'Julius Cæsar,' first produced in London in 1724, and 'La Finta Giardiniera,' composed by Mozart when a boy of eighteen. In the third week Gluck's 'Alcestis' will illustrate the period of transition when its great composer attempted with considerable success to escape from the conventions which made the art of opera ridiculous and undramatic, and in 'Der Freischütz' the London public will have the first opportunity for many years of witnessing Germany's first and greatest romantic opera. All these operas will be performed in English, and special translations are being made where necessary.

The Festival will be followed by a week of matinée performances of 'Hansel and Gretel,' preceded by a light operetta by Gervase Hughes entitled 'Castle Greevey,' which met with considerable success in the provinces last year, but has not yet been produced in London. The conductors will be Mr. Aylmer Buesst, Mr. Leslie Heward, Mr. Gervase Hughes, and Mr. Jack Westrup. The producers include Mr. Dennis Arundel, Mr. Procter Gregg, Mr. Norman Marshall, Mr. Nugent Monck, and Mr. Robert Stuart. Among the artists already engaged are Mesdames May Blyth, Gwyneth Edwards, Doris Lemon, Marjorie Parry, and Denne Parker, and Messrs. Norman Allin, Arthur Fear, Charles d'If, Edward Leer, and William Michael.

Mr. Stuart has decided to call his company 'The London Opera Company,' and if the New Year's Festival is well received by the London public he hopes to give opera regularly throughout the winter months in London. Among the 'novelties' which he hopes to stage in the course of the year 1930 are: Glinka's 'Russlan and Ludmilla,' Monteverde's 'L'Incoronazione di Poppæa,' Smetana's 'The Bartered Bride,' Rabaud's 'Marouf,' and Hindemith's 'Cardillac.' The last-mentioned work is considered in Germany to be the greatest of all 'modern' operas.

Music in the Provinces

Harrogate.—At the weekly symphony concerts Mr. Basil Cameron has been giving attention to new or little-known works by British composers. On June 13, Mr. Leslie Heward, besides playing the solo part in Mozart's D minor Pianoforte Concerto, conducted the first performance of his 'Nocturne' for orchestra. A week later Mr. Willoughby Walmisley played Dr. G. Coleman Young's Suite in F for pianoforte and orchestra under the composer's direction, and the programme included Mr. Herbert Bedford's tone-poem 'Hamadryad.' Edric Cundell's 'Serbia' was played on June 27.

Manchester.—An interesting end-of-season concert was given on June 20 by the Manchester Contemporary Music Centre with a programme that included an early Violin Sonata by Honegger and Reger's String Trio, Op. 141*b*.

Warwick.—Three performances of Holst's choral-ballet 'The Golden Goose' were given in the castle grounds on July 4-6 under the musical direction of Mr. P. J. Lees. Miss Grace Brittain took the part of the Princess and Mr. Gordon Smith that of Jack, the hero of Grimm's fairy-tale. Members of the Leamington Orchestral Society and the City of Birmingham Orchestra took part in the music.

A NEW OPERA

The Birmingham and Midland Institute concluded the scholastic year with two performances of opera—Dr. Lyon's 'Storm Wrack' and Mr. C. M. Edmunds's 'The Blue Harlequin.' The first has already been played by the Carl Rosa Company, and, consequently, need not be discussed here again. Mr. Edmunds's work, on the other hand, was given for the first time, and aroused a good deal of interest.

It may be remarked incidentally that, in choosing for his text a little comedy drama by Maurice Baring, Mr. Edmunds has once more shown the attraction which fantastic subjects possess for the British composer. The point is worth noting, for I believe it to be of great importance to the future of British opera, which if it is to be of lasting value must reflect the genius of the race just as German opera reflects the German and Russian opera the Russian genius. It is, of course, impossible to inquire here exactly where national characteristics assert themselves and how. But it may be said that while the dramatic literature of other countries possesses plays which in some way will stand comparison with the dramatic and the historic plays of English literature, there is nowhere else a play like 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.'

The resemblance between 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'The Blue Harlequin' is merely one of broad outline. All that can be said is that they both conform to the description of fantastic comedy. And Mr. Edmunds has treated 'The Blue Harlequin' as fantastic comedy, avoiding all temptation to revel in great climaxes and give a free rein to lyricism. His music appeals to us rather on account of the delicate and dexterous touches with which it underlines the action. It is never obvious, and it is never commonplace. It abounds in happy strokes not obtained by the use of a bold scheme of harmony in the Holstian way, nor by the lavish employment of folk-songs after the manner of Vaughan Williams. Mr. Edmunds's technique and outlook are both his very own.

When it is added that the play concerns a Policeman anxious to ascertain the colour of Harlequin's coat, a Clown and Pantaloon seeking not truth but sausages, and a Harlequin who pairs with Columbine, it will be easily seen that the success was never in doubt for a moment. Action and music proceeded harmoniously at a good pace, and when the curtain descended the spectator felt that the composer and the author won their battle—and won easily.

As regards the performance, all that need be said is that it lacked nothing needed to reveal the qualities of the opera. Undoubtedly a company of distinguished singers of experience would have driven certain points home with greater ease and effect. But the students of the Birmingham Institute did all that was necessary for complete success, and more than could be expected from young people who have not completed their studies.

F. B.

THE HALLÉ SOCIETY

The thirtieth Annual Meeting of Guarantors of the Hallé Concerts Society, Ltd., was held on June 24, when the accounts for the 1928-29 season were presented. They show that in the past season the total number of concerts and recording sessions (Columbia) were six fewer than in 1927-28, although the recording appearances rose from five to seven.

What are termed 'Country Concerts' (including nine municipal ones for which the City Council makes a grant) were eight fewer than in the 1927-28 season, and receipts from these were down £1,050. The average receipts for sixty-six appearances of the orchestra in 1927-28 were (in round figures) £260, and for sixty during 1928-29, £274, the total number falling by six but average receipts rising by £14. The total income from all sources was down £642.

Sundry receipts were shown to be £144 more than in 1927-28, but whether this includes fees in respect of broadcasting is not revealed. Against this reduced income economies in expenditure were effected of substantially £700 on band and soloists. Curiously enough, the hire of the Free Trade Hall rose by £77, possibly due to an increased number of municipal concerts. The net surplus 1927-28 was £140; for 1928-29, £146.

The Pension Concert receipts go without deductions to that Fund, and last March yielded £340.

The full prospectus for next season is not yet available, but at the annual meeting Sir Hamilton Harty indicated that the 'Pastoral' Symphony of Vaughan Williams, along with some of the later symphonic work of Mahler and Sibelius, would in all probability be given. The choral concerts will be limited to three: 'The Messiah,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and a miscellaneous one consisting of Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter,' Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' and Rachmaninov's 'The Bells.' The following instrumental soloists have been engaged: Backhaus, Cortot, Orloff, Moiseiwitsch, Schnabel, Catterall, d'Aranyi, Szigeti, Suggia, and Cassado.

C. H.

Music in Scotland

Edinburgh.—The programme of a recital given by the Elizabethan Choir, directed by Mr. Percy Snowden, included Brahms's 'Liebeslieder Waltzes' and the 1470 Ave Maria de Près, announced as 'the first performance in Great Britain of the first choral work that is no longer archaic.'——Dr. Mary Grierson (pianoforte) and Miss Ruth Waddell ('cello) joined forces in a pianoforte and 'cello recital, which they repeated a few days later at Wigmore Hall, London.——The Scottish Chamber Music Players—Dr. Mary Grierson (pianoforte), Miss Gladys Clark (violin), Miss Maud Cowan (viola), and Miss Ruth Waddell ('cello)—at the last of their three chamber concerts (which, incidentally, closed the music season at Edinburgh) played Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Quartet, Brahms's A major Pianoforte Quartet, and the Pianoforte Trio in A minor by Ravel.——As a result of a report by H.M. Inspector on visits paid by him to Secondary Schools under the Midlothian Education Authority, the Authority has decided to appoint, for the first time, two visiting music masters.

Glasgow.—For several seasons past a small symphony orchestra, organized under the ægis of the Corporation of Glasgow, and conducted first by Mr. Horace Fellowes and later by Mr. Wilfrid Senior, has given a series of about twenty performances in the Glasgow Public Parks during June. This season a military band, recruited and conducted by Mr. John A. M'Ivor, was substituted with (perhaps necessarily) less satisfactory musical results. The annual 'Parks' performance of 'The Messiah' was given in Kelvingrove Park bandstand. Mr. John A. M'Ivor conducted a choir of two hundred voices, and the orchestral accompaniments were provided by the military band referred to.——Sir Thomas Beecham recently gave an invitation luncheon at Glasgow for the purpose of stimulating local subscriptions to the Imperial League of Opera, in which Glasgow has shown so far a singularly lukewarm interest. At the luncheon a local committee was formed (a method which has been urged on the Imperial League of Opera for the past two years) and an intensive campaign set afoot. Concurrently, the Covent Garden Opera Syndicate announced an autumn season of opera at Glasgow (and at Edinburgh and Aberdeen), with a possibility of a further season in the spring. To bring Glasgow within the scope of the Imperial League's scheme another fifteen hundred subscribers are required. Apart from the futility of launching a propaganda campaign in the month of June, the double-crossing of the League's campaign by the Covent Garden Syndicate's announcement, whether accidental or intentional, cannot but be seriously detrimental to it.——On the occasion of his retirement, Mr. Hugh Hunter, who for the past twenty-five years has been a visiting music master in Glasgow day-schools and has interested himself in other directions in the musical life of the city, received a parting gift from his colleagues and friends in the Glasgow Education Authority.

Music in Wales

Cardiff.—Slow but encouraging progress has been made with the League of Opera, and a committee has been organized to canvass the neighbourhood in order to get a large representative membership.

Cardiff and South Wales Generally.—An urgent attempt is being made to complete a fund, started before the war, for the erection of a memorial to Evan James, the weaver who wrote the words of the National Anthem of Wales—'Hen Wlad fy Nhadau' ('Old Land of my Fathers')—and his musical son John James, who composed the tune, which was written one Sunday afternoon in January, 1859, and completed by both men on the same day. It is intended to put up two life-size bronze figures, symbolical of Poetry and Music, on a suitable base, with medallion portraits of the author and composer, from the designs of Sir W. Goscombe John. The site proposed is in Ynysangharad Park.——The fate of the National Orchestra of Wales is being much discussed at the present time. Suggestions have been made for following Manchester's lead by endeavouring to form an endowment fund. Meanwhile Cardiff is proposing to make a contribution towards maintenance, and other towns in South Wales are considering a similar step, for it is felt that the disbandment of the orchestra would be a very serious loss to the musical development of the whole of Wales. The British Broadcasting Corporation has been a great stand-by, and the wide range of the programmes has been a valuable educational experience. Though the orchestra has mainly served Cardiff hitherto, it is intended to be available for all parts of the Principality. It has paid visits to one or two places in the Distressed Areas in order to help in the social and educational work there, and has assisted at choral and orchestral concerts in neighbouring towns. A schoolmaster at some distance away reported not long ago that one of the ardent youngsters in his school orchestra went off to Cardiff on purpose to hear Boccherini's Minuet. Coming back, he set to work to copy it out in manuscript from a pianoforte arrangement in order to learn how to write a minuet. This is only one instance of the educational aspect of the work, and the music students at University College, Cardiff, find the N.O.W. concerts a very valuable addition to their studies.

Llanelly.—The proclamation of the Gorsedd took place at Parc Howard on July 2, when a robed procession, preceded by the town band, went to the Gorsedd Circle in the park and next year's Eisteddfod was proclaimed with the usual formalities and the singing of the Gorsedd Prayer antiphonally by a Druid and the assembled people.——In the evening the National Orchestra of Wales gave a concert of popular classical music in the Market Hall, which was crowded with an enthusiastic audience. Towards the close of Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody the people all rose to their feet and cheered wildly. The conductor said afterwards that he had never had such an experience.

Pontypridd.—On June 12, in the afternoon, Sir Walford Davies addressed a meeting of unemployed miners at the local cinema, which was used as a lecture hall. The audience consisted mostly of young men. They listened with intensity to a fairly technical lecture on the nature of music, with various illustrations on the pianoforte. They had come straight from the queue receiving unemployment relief.

The Rhondda Valley: Ton Pentre.—On the evening of June 12 Sir Walford Davies addressed a meeting of men, women, and children. Very small boys flocked round near to the lecturer with apparent eagerness. Fortunately Miss Heale had brought a violin and a 'cello, and her illustrations were followed with rapt attention. It was obvious that there was the greatest possible need for an organized ministry of the mind.

General.—On June 19 a joint meeting of representatives of local Eisteddfodau (organizers and adjudicators) and of the National Council of Music took place at Shrewsbury under the chairmanship of Mr. S. J. Evans, of Llangefin. It was decided to form a Federation of Local Eisteddfodau under the title 'Undeb Eisteddfodau Cymru,' and, on the motion of Sir Walford Davies, a small executive committee was appointed to draft the constitution of the new body. Several matters of reform were discussed, among them a regularly organized time-table, the appointment of technically competent adjudicators for instrumental competitions, and the publication of lists of suitable test-pieces. Considerable discussion took place with regard to money prizes, and, although no resolution was taken, the example of the recent Children's Eisteddfod at Corwen was quoted with much approval. It was resolved that a letter of congratulation be sent to the promoter, Mr. Ivor ab Owen Edwards.——On June 20 a meeting between representatives of the Welsh Folk-Song Society and the National Council of Music took place under the chairmanship of Dr. J. Lloyd Williams, when plans were discussed for mutual co-operation. Sir Walford Davies expressed himself as favouring the publication of a collection of Folk-Songs in their pure melodic form, for unaccompanied singing, and in simple vocal arrangements with and without accompaniment for harp (or pianoforte), and instrumental arrangements for harp solo, or strings with harp accompaniment.

The Welsh Folk-Song Society was founded at the Carnarvon Eisteddfod, some twenty-one years ago, as a result of the energetic efforts of Dr. Lloyd Williams, and began under the presidency of Sir William Preece, the famous electrician, on whose death Dr. Mary Davies succeeded to the presidency. Among the sponsors and supporters were Sir Harry Reichel, Mr. Alfred Percival Graves, and Mrs. Gwyneddon Davies, whose labours have been assisted by a small band of enthusiastic collectors.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

A NEW HINDEMITH OPERA

The festival weeks in Berlin were partly dealt with in last month's issue. The remainder demands present notice. Hindemith's new opera, 'Neues vom Tage,' splendidly produced under Klemperer's direction, is a product of modernism that could not have occurred in any country but Germany. To understand the mentality upon which so curious a work is based one must know that the young generation at present monopolising the field of action is cleverly taking advantage of a favourable situation by giving a certain artistic aspect to its primary purpose, which is popular success and good business. Powerful drama is of secondary importance in up-to-date German opera. A sensational scenic make-up is the main point. Burlesque and parody are fashionable; vulgarity is an approved objective; nonsensical action is favoured; the genre of grotesque operetta, of revue, is being transferred to the opera houses. The low taste of the greater public is being flattered by every possible means. At the same time prophets of the new faith are loudly proclaiming the artistic importance of these ways and means.

Krenek and Weill, the two favourites in the race for popular favour, find a new competitor in Hindemith. His chances, however, of beating his rivals are not very considerable, for he cannot forget his better self completely enough to write the music really asked for by his libretto. It would be hardly worth while to describe the plot in detail. It is merely a series of comic and grotesque situations. The grand climax is the discovery of the heroine in her bath by an ardent admirer. Among the scenes represented are a museum in which a statue of Venus is smashed by a jealous husband, a quarrelling couple breaking plates at breakfast, an office with typists singing in chorus, a prison cell, and a vaudeville theatre with performing acrobats. Such a scenario called for light, crisp, and cheeky music, devoid of artistic pretensions. Hindemith has written a score full of ingenious counterpoint abounding in fugues and canons, variations, elaborate choral work, and long set pieces that never come to an end when they should, so that the singers are often embarrassed by having to wait until the orchestra has finished its symphonic fantasies and variations. As a piece of musical workmanship the score is in many respects admirable, with its abounding fun and its strange and interesting sound-effects, but it has hardly any relation to the libretto. This opera, concocted by a strange couple, Marcellus Schiffer and Paul Hindemith, is certainly a curiosity.

The Diaghilev Ballet recently gave the Berlin public an ample opportunity of judging its merits. There is no doubt that these Russians are pre-eminent in the art of dancing, but however their skill and discipline may impress us, there is a feeling that they have departed from the familiar Russian tradition without securing any artistic gain. They cannot boast of solo dancers equivalent to stars like Pavlova, Karsavina, or Nijinski. Their style of dancing is in a way orchestral, being limited to an ensemble art of high perfection. This ensemble style attaches less importance to grave and expressive, emotional power than to acrobatic feats, to a form of sport, a rather mechanical virtuosity in the bodily representation of geometrical figures. In one at least of their ballets the pure art of dancing was triumphant; the famous Polovetz Dances from 'Prince Igor' were rendered with an overwhelming passionate frenzy, an electrifying vitality of rhythm and of motion. The remainder of their two programmes was based chiefly on Stravinsky's ballets. But of these it was not the early works that were chosen, with their splendid rhythms and colours, but the later problematic experiments. 'Apollo Musagetes' proved thoroughly disappointing in its affected simplicity, its barren melody, and its dryness of sound. It is an unhappy attempt at reviving the French classic ballet of Louis XIV., with Lully as model.

'The Nightingale' proved of little interest as a ballet. The omission of the singing not only makes the pantomime hard to understand but deprived the music of its essential melodic outlines, leaving a merely ornamental design that fails to interest the listener's ear after a while. In another respect 'Le Sacre du printemps' is disappointing as a dance-pantomime. Here the pure scenic action, overladen with mysterious symbolism, bears no relation to the orgiastic fury of the music, which in fact is very much more impressive when heard in the concert-hall without the tiresome mimetic accompaniment. Prokofiev's ballet, 'The Prodigal Son,' belongs to the very fashionable type of 'motoric' music, kept intentionally expressionless in imitation of the mechanical rhythm of machinery. In this inanimate genre Prokofiev, however, is a virtuoso, and the fatalistic run of his merciless rhythm, the cold splendour of his colours, are not without a certain impressiveness. Another variety of the dernier cri in music is revealed in Henri Sauguet's 'La Chatte.' Hearing the music of this quite unknown composer, one is tempted to consider him an imitator of the early Beethoven, a contemporary of Meyerbeer; one further believes that this very melodious and somewhat old-fashioned music has been newly orchestrated by some skilful musician of our age who has added a few pieces in the genre of 1928. We learn, however, that Sauguet is a living French composer, born twenty-six years ago, and that in these simple and melodious tunes we may observe the influence of Stravinsky's latest reactionary and classicistic pose. This is already being imitated by a school of young Parisian composers, and it seems destined to become the very newest kind of 'snobisme.'

Of all the new ballets produced by the Diaghilev troup Vittorio Rieti's 'Le Bal' was the most agreeable to listen to, owing to its straightforward, simple melodiousness, its youthful and unaffected manner, and its well-balanced form. Rieti has certainly no radical and revolutionary tendencies, but his sound talent ranks him high among young Italian musicians. Ernest Ansermet was in charge of all the performances.

'Titus,' written in the same period as the 'Magic Flute,' has always been one of Mozart's least-known operas. Nobody ever heard it, and people have come to look upon it as a very weak work. Under these circumstances one must give special credit to the Berlin State Opera for giving it a place in the Festival performances. But even on this occasion they did not venture to give a scenic representation, and Mozart-lovers had to be content with a concert performance, conducted by Erich Kleiber. It is true that the conventional libretto of Metastasio, written expressly for an imperial coronation and used by Mozart for the same purpose, hardly invites consideration from a dramatic point of view. Yet it would certainly be interesting to see what Mozart achieved in the genre of Italian opera seria, already obsolete at that time, and to form a judgment one would have preferred a stage performance. Compared with 'Figaro,' 'Don Giovanni,' 'The Magic Flute,' the music of 'Titus' is less abounding in melodic inspiration. Certain portions, however, like the Finale of the first Act and Vitellia's scene in the second Act are equal to the best music ever written by Mozart. Moreover, it must be remembered that even Mozart's mediocre music is always art of high perfection and always worth hearing.

FURTWÄNGLER

Wilhelm Furtwängler has acquired international celebrity as a symphonic conductor; in fact, even in Germany one seems to have forgotten that he started his career as an opera conductor some twenty years ago. Owing to Bruno Walter's sudden departure from his Berlin post, the question of Walter's successor has become urgent, and thus it happened that we twice had the rare pleasure of seeing Furtwängler at the conductor's desk in the Municipal Opera House. Both in the 'Marriage of Figaro' and in 'Tristan and Isolde' Furtwängler gave most convincing proof of his mastery also of the operatic style, and of his thorough acquaintance with theatrical problems. The 'Tristan' performance was especially memorable owing not only to Furtwängler's admirable art, but also to an ensemble of high perfection, combining singers like Frida Leider, Sigrid Onegin, Lauritz Melchoir, Friedrich Schorr, and Alexander Kipnis.

Klemperer conducted a Stravinsky programme with the personal assistance of the composer, who played his own Pianoforte Concerto in a very sober, but clean and finished manner. Stravinsky has so far reserved this Concerto for himself as a pianist, but it would be in fact rather surprising to see pianists competing for the honour of playing it, and the Master's monopoly strikes one as a wise act of precaution. The theories expounded here of the pianoforte as a percussion instrument, of unsentimental, expressionless tone, do not become much more attractive by being coupled with Bach imitation, jazz, and parodistic intentions. The rather mixed style of the problematic Concerto, however, is sweet music compared with the dryness, tediousness, and affected simplicity of the music of 'Apollon Musagetes' in a very lengthy arrangement for string orchestra. 'Les Noces,' the closing piece of the programme, must be counted as among Stravinsky's best and most striking works. The musical description of a Russian peasant wedding shows Stravinsky in his happiest mood, writing naturally out of his Russian soul, less occupied with astute and sensational whims than he has been during the last decade. 'Les Noces' made a no less powerful impression at Berlin than it did at Geneva last spring. Hugo Lichtentritt.

HOLLAND

An accident which turned out to be more serious than was originally thought upset all the plans for the first half of the season at Scheveningen, while at the same time, in the variety of conductors who have appeared, it provided us with new interests. Carl Schuricht was the immediate victim of this accident, but it was at first hoped he would be able to take up his duties as principal conductor in the second week. Meanwhile van Anrooy was engaged for the opening concert. Neumark was allotted an extra number of concerts, and Rudolf Siegel, General Music-Director at Crefeld, came for a couple of concerts. The continued illness of Schuricht caused the engagement of van Anrooy for a second concert, this time with Kreisler as soloist, and of Rhéné-Baton, a former conductor at Scheveningen, for three concerts, after which Hans Weisbach, Schnéevoigt's successor at Dusseldorf, took over the reins until the end of July. For the second half of the season the appointment of Abendroth stands.

There has not been very much of outstanding character in the six weeks which have passed since the opening. One of the most gratifying events was the perfect accompaniment by the Residentie Orchestra and Dr. van Anrooy to Kreisler's solo work in the Beethoven Concerto. The soloist himself was in his happiest mood, which is generally the case when he plays this work, but I have never under any conductor heard a more perfect accompaniment and seldom one which was the equal of this. Siegel was generally a disappointment, though personally I found his reading of the Beethoven No. 8 more than ordinarily interesting. Contrary to those of van Anrooy, his accompaniments (with Margaret Matzenauer as soloist) were casual and unsympathetic, and his performance of Schubert's 'Unfinished' was also unfinished. It was pleasing to hear Rudi Stephan's 'Music for Orchestra,' written as long ago as 1913, but the satisfaction was rather a melancholy one, for the performance suggested more what the ill-fated composer might have done had he lived than any actual great achievement.

Other individual works of exceptional interest have been performed on 'amateur' evenings. Chief of them was Richard Strauss's 'Die Tageszeiten,' of which the choral parts were sung by the 'Haghe-Sangers,' an excellent male-voice choir of about a hundred voices under Louis Boer. The military methods of the conductor—he is bandmaster of the Royal Military Band—were occasionally somewhat severe for such a work, and still more so for the Schubert and Brahms works which filled the rest of the programme. Absolute correctness and a remarkable grasp of the intricate rhythmic problems presented, however, gave a true idea of the composer's music. Curiously, the work was being performed the same evening at Rotterdam by Rotte's Mannerkoor, which was celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary, under Bernard Diamant.

The Hague Amateur Orchestra, under F. E. A. Koeberg, also at the Kurhaus, has given a particularly praiseworthy performance of J. S. Bach's Concerto in C minor for oboe, violin, and strings, with Jaap Stotyn and Willem Brederode as soloists, and also of Saint-Saëns's unsymphonic first Symphony.

An unusual and pleasing programme under Rhéné-Baton consisted of C. Ph. E. Bach's Symphony in D, Boccherini's Concerto in B flat (the first movement is much less satisfying than the others), Tchaikovsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme (the soloist in these two works being Emmanuel Feuerman), Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' Overture, and Ravel's 'La Valse.'

Utrecht has just completed its Summer Festival under Evert Cornelis, and the summer concerts of the Concertgebouw Orchestra at Amsterdam are continuing under various conductors. The programmes in both cases are largely familiar.

The production of the farce lyrique 'Protée' of Paul Claudel and Darius Milhaud by the Groningen University Students' Dramatic and Musical Societies, on the occasion of the Lustrum Feast, was an event of interest for various reasons. The poem was completed and published as 'Poème d'Eté' as long ago as 1913, at which time Milhaud sketched the music but did not complete it. In 1916 there seemed a chance that the work would be produced in a Parisian circus, and Milhaud thereupon completed the score, but the production was indefinitely postponed. Three years later the Théâtre de Vaudeville accepted it subject to alterations necessary to fit it for the stage, but before this production could take place the company went bankrupt. In 1926 Claudel tried to adapt the work to the music-hall, but without success. The combination of classical legend and satire on present-day life made it eminently suitable for the combination of learning and jollity which marks the Dutch University feasts, so that the Groningen celebration was an excellent opportunity. For this the 1919 version was chosen as the most suitable.

The students, under the stage direction of Adriaan Hooykaas and the musical direction of Kor Kuiler, entered thoroughly into its spirit, and there was some very good acting and playing. The drama is as graceful and piquant as one expects from a French author, even though, as is the case, he happens also to be Ambassador at Washington. The music is more varied in quality, and while generally it is a worthy companion of the words, in the purely instrumental numbers it is Milhaud at his most cerebral and mechanical. It was a useful and interesting experiment, and generally a successful one, but before the work is put on the professional stage (which it should be at no very distant future) it is to be hoped that M. Milhaud, who was present on this occasion, will take the score in hand and re-write the less satisfactory portions.

The Concertgebouw arrangements for the winter season are now announced, the chief of which are that Mengelberg will conduct the first concerts up to and including October 24, and will take up the reins again on March 2. Meanwhile Monteux will act as permanent conductor, Bruno Walter and Hermann Abendroth appearing as guest-conductors. At the first concert, on September 26, Cortot will be the soloist, and other soloists engaged include Rachmaninov, who will play the solo part of his second Pianoforte Concerto, Elly Ney, Mischa Elman, José Iturbi, Paul Hindemith, Walter Gieseking, Lotte Lehmann, Feuermann, and Piatigorsky. With the assistance of the Amsterdam Toonkunst Choir a concert performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson et Dalila' will be given, and for the chamber concerts the Vienna, Guarneri, and Léner Quartets have been engaged. Elisabeth Schumann will give a recital representative of German Lied, and Vera Janacopulos of that of France. Herbert Antcliffe.

ITALY

THE FUTURE OF LA SCALA

Although there could not be any doubt as to the future of La Scala, recent events indicate distinctly rosy times ahead. In the first place the finances have been looked into, and the Mayor, Marquis de Capitani, who is also President of the Ente Autonomo of the Scala and of the Lombardy Savings Banks, has arrived at a very deft scheme for guaranteeing the necessary capital to cover the losses and ensure the safe working of the organization. The proposal was submitted to the Minister for Home Affairs, who is perfecting a provision whereby the City of Milan will become provisional proprietor of the boxes through the granting of a loan of some seven and a half million lira. This sum will be used for the expropriation of the boxes and for carrying on. By this means the bank is covered and the City is the virtual owner of the theatre.

In the second place, the new Ministry has consented to the proposal of Maestro Lualdi, a musical member, for the forming of a 'Permanent Orchestra and Chorus of the City of Milan and the Scala Theatre.' This reduces enormously the costs of the theatre, and provides the masses necessary, at the same time improving very considerably their quality. For it is a patent fact that the individual members of both those organizations are at present not of the best. Exceptionally good players will not take jobs with the Scala orchestra for the simple reason that they are too badly paid. Under the new arrangement both choristers and players will be under contract for twelve months in the year.

MILAN

The programme of orchestral concerts has been continued by Giorio Polacco, Fritz Reiner, and Fritz Busch.

Polacco's was the first of these, his programme including the three pieces by Pizzetti from the Suite 'La Pisanella,' by D'Annunzio, the 'Eroïca,' and three pieces by Jaques Ibert, those entitled 'Escales,' new to Milan. They did not evoke admiration, the material used in their construction lacking both in invention and development—shortcomings that brilliance in orchestration did not compensate.

Fritz Reiner was warmly remembered by a public that recalled his brilliant work of two years ago. He gave the first performance in Milan of Respighi's 'Gli Uccelli,' a suite derived from early music of English, French, and Italian sources. It was received with much greater enthusiasm than it deserved; nor was its obviousness generally perceived. The C major Toccata arranged (or perhaps it would be more correct to say orchestrated) by Weiner, did not win absolute approbation. It cannot be admitted that, notwithstanding the good taste evident in the transcription, the original form is not preferable. The Brahms variations on a theme of Haydn's were happily treated, but not greatly appreciated.

The programme chosen by Fritz Busch was much more sober in design, and one which left him no opportunities of personal display. His work was serious and sincere, and aroused admiration. The Mozart Concerto introduced Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

Busch's interpretation of the Brahms third Symphony might have been called tame were it not so purely correct. Reger's two Musical Poems, which form the second and third of a Suite of four woven about as many pictures by Boeklin, roused genuine applause, as much for the innate fineness of their content as for the splendid reading of the conductor.

The 'St. Matthew' Passion was given by the Gemischter Chor of Zurich, under the direction of Andreae, comprising four hundred and thirty-five voices, augmented by thirty boys of the Milan Duomo and sixty others from the Schola Cantorum of Trecate. The soloists were Mihacek, Durigo, Erb, Kloos, and Löffel, and the version that of 1740. This was the second time that the Passion has been given in Italy, the first being by the same choir and the same conductor in the Milan Conservatory on April 22, 1911.

This concert virtually closed the activities of the Ente Orchestrale del Teatro alla Scala for this year, the only other concert being that of the Scala chorus, directed by Victor Veneziani.

The entry of this body into the concert field is notable, and a sure indication of greater refinement being introduced into their theatrical work. Their performance did not compare with the efforts of choirs accustomed to this class of music (a fact observed also by the Milan press), but it was felt that they should be encouraged to continue. The programme contained works by Fara, Sinigaglia, and Pratella of the late 4th and early 5th centuries, Monteverdi, and Palestrina.

Charles d'If.

A CONTEMPORARY CRITICISM OF ROSSINI

(From the 'Lady's Magazine' of April, 1818.)

An opera entitled 'The Barber of Seville;' from the pen of Signor Rosini (sic), a young living composer at Rome, has been produced here for the first time in this country. High expectations were entertained of it, especially as it had been performed with great success at various theatres in Italy; but we were among those who thought that the author's having taken up an opera to set to music, which had already been composed by so fine a master as Paesiello, was not a piece of ambition in the best taste, or a very promising symptom of excellence. We expected that we should find little genius exhibited, at least on the score of sentiment; and we conceive that we were not disappointed.

In neither of these main qualities will Signor Rosini's opera, in our opinion, bear any comparison. We should be loth to speak so decidedly after only one hearing; but what renders an opera most delighting, and makes one recut to it over and over again, and grow fonder on acquaintance, is a succession of beautiful airs; and of these the new 'Barbiere di Siviglia' appears to be destitute. We do not recollect one. The passages most resembling them struck us as being traceable to Haydn, Mozart, or to Paesiello himself; and the recitative is singularly bad and commonplace. An intelligent daily critic notices, we observe, the resemblance to Haydn of 'Zitti, zitti, piano, piano,' the most favourite passage in the opera. On the other hand, the piece is not destitute of merit, or even, considering the author's youth, of great promise, though not on the higher sides of genius. Its good qualities are a sort of sprightly vehemence, and a talent for expressing oddities of character. He excels in the more hurried parts in general—the entrance of the Count in the disguise of a singing-master, the groans of old Bartolo, and the scene where Figaro and his master have so much difficulty in getting rid of a set of fellows who have a prodigious pertinacity. We never met with a composer who gave us such an harmonious sense of discord, who set to music with such vivacity what is vulgarly called a 'row.'

The rest of the opera is of a piece with this kind of talent, not good in the graver, more sentimental, and graceful parts, but exceedingly promising in the ardent, vehement, and more obviously comic. The general effect is inconsistent. Sometimes, for instance, there is hardly any accompaniment, sometimes a numerous one; sometimes the stage is all in a bustle, and sometimes unaccountably quiet. One feature is particularly worth notice, which is that the young author, in a sort of conscious despair of a proper quantity of ideas, dashes his crotchets about, as it were, at random; and among a number of grotesque effects gives now and then a fine hit. He resembles, in the latter respect, the ancient painter who, in a fit of impatience at not being able to express foam at the mouth of a hound, dashed his sponge at the animal's jaws, and produced the very thing he despaired of.

BEETHOVEN'S BELGIAN ANCESTRY

In 1868, Chevalier Léon de Burbure, in his article on Beethoven contributed to the 'Biographie Nationale de Belgique,' upset the views of an anonymous writer of 1837, who sought to claim the great master as of Dutch origin. (En passant, I may remark that the late Cardinal Newman invariably called Beethoven 'the great Dutchman.') De Burbure based his views as to Beethoven's ancestry by reason of the fact that a certain Guillaume van Beethoven had been established at Antwerp and was the father of Henri-Adelard, master tailor, at Antwerp (1683-1745). The latter's child, Louis, born in 1712, became a singer at St. Pierre, Louvain, then drifted to Bonn, where he entered the Chapel of the Prince-Bishop and became the father of Jean van Beethoven, the father of the master whose centenary has recently been celebrated. This genealogical tree furnished by de Burbure has been followed by Grove, Thayer, Prod'homme, and others, but it has been proved to be based on a confusion of two persons of the same name. M. André Pols, of Antwerp, in a recent search discovered that Henri-Adelard van Beethoven of Antwerp had twelve children, one of whom was christened Louis, who died as a child, but the twelfth child was also christened Louie—a not uncommon occurrence. The latter child, called Louis-Joseph, born in 1712, became singer in the Collegiate Church of St. Rombaut at Malines (Mechlin), and was the grandfather of Beethoven.

The question, however, of where Louis van Beethoven was born remained to be solved. This Louis was 'the dear grandfather' whom the great master loved, although, at the death of the former, Beethoven had only entered his fourth year. Fortunately, a Belgian musicologist, M. Raymond van Aerde, a native of Malines, who is librarian and professor at Malines Conservatoire, has made the important discovery that Louis van Beethoven, born in 1712, and singer at St. Rombaut's, Malines, was the undoubted grandfather of the immortal Beethoven, and thus Malines can claim the honour of being the birthplace of Louis van Beethoven. M. van Aerde has written a work on the whole subject, meticulously documented, but his discovery is another feather in the cap of musical Malines, which can also claim to have been the ancestral home of de Rore and Philip de Monte. A résumé of his discovery is given M. Ernest Closson, of Brussels, in the Revue Pleyel (September, 1927). W. H. G. F.

The Tufnell Park Orchestral Society has vacancies for a few string, wood-wind, and brass players. Rehearsals are held on Tuesdays, at 8, in St. George's Church Rooms, Carleton Road, Tufnell Park. Hon. secretary, Miss Alice Tibbs, 76, Carleton Road, N.7.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

TERESA ARKEL, in Milan, on June 30. She was one of the greatest teachers of singing of this generation. Born in Poland a little over sixty-nine years ago, she started her musical studies with her sister, Fanny Blaumfeld, a pianist of note. At the age of eleven she was already giving her own concerts, and continued to do so until her marriage, when she was seventeen, to Dr. Sigmund Arkel. She then studied singing under Pauline Viardot Garcia in Paris, and, after singing in France, Germany, Bohemia, Russia, and her own native country, in as many languages, she went to Italy, and shortly after became known as the greatest Wagnerian soprano there. She sang at La Scala for twenty years, making occasional appearances in Spain and South America. While in the former country she was frequently received at Court, and indeed enjoyed a certain intimacy with the Queen, who, as is well known, was fond of music. Some of the best-known artists of the day have been pupils of hers, and many teachers of singing, Canadian and American, came to her regularly every summer. Her death was the result of an illness which covered a period of more than ten years, and caused her intense suffering at times. She was, however, able to teach until a few months ago. Her loss will be very keenly felt, for she was one of the gentlest and most sincerely good women it is possible to know. Many students received free training (and even food as well) from her. It is impossible to overestimate the value of lives such as hers, full of labour and achievement. She was one of the few remaining exponents of the so-called old Italian School which began its decline towards the later half of last century. C. D'IF.

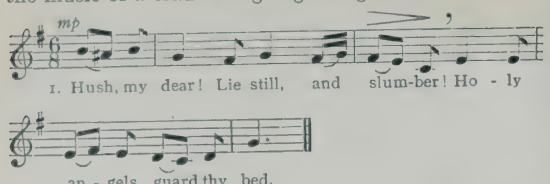
HERBERT WALTON, at Bournemouth, aged sixty. He was born at Thirsk, Yorkshire, studied the organ under Dr. Naylor, York Minster, and at eighteen won a three-years' open scholarship at the Royal College, where he worked under Parratt, Parry, and Frederic Cliffe. He became private organist to the Earl of Aberdeen, and was appointed later to St. Mark's Church, Leeds, and thereafter, thirty years ago, to Glasgow Cathedral, where his annual autumn series of organ recitals became for many years a popular feature of Glasgow musical life. A brilliant executant, he was inclined to flamboyancy in his treatment of the Church service, and was at his best as a soloist. Hence he was much in demand as a recitalist throughout Scotland, and further afield. Two years ago he made a recital tour of the United States. His services were often in request as adviser and expert in specifications of new organs and renovations.

EUSEBIUS MANDYCZEWSKI, at Vienna, aged seventy-one. One of the last survivors of the Brahms circle, he has substantial claims to enduring fame as one of the best of editors, having been responsible for excellent editions of Haydn, Brahms, and Schubert. He did valuable work also in connection with the archives of the Society of Friends of Music, collecting and collating MSS. and letters of Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, &c A pupil of Nottebohm, he composed and conducted with success.

ARTHUR G. CLAYPOLE, Mus. Doc., at Derby, on June 30, aged forty-seven. Until recently he was organist at Derby Cathedral.

The Premier Prize of the London Violoncello School has been won by Susie Thomas, of Dulwich, and the Junior Prize divided between Sarah Nelson, of Winnipeg, and William Pleeth, of London. Miss Beatrice Harrison adjudicated.

A Canadian reader wishes to discover the source of the music of a cradle-song beginning thus :



Our correspondent heard the song about seventy years ago. The words are by Dr. Watts.

It is proposed to inaugurate a Musical Competition Festival for Paddington and Bayswater for various types of vocal and instrumental ensemble. A combined concert will, it is hoped, be an important feature. The hon. organizer, Miss Millicent Russell, 36, Newton Road, W.2 (telephone, Park 1680), will be glad to hear from readers who are willing to help as competitors, guarantors, voluntary conductors, organization workers, or in any other capacity.

The third London Catholic Musical Festival was announced to take place at St. James's Church, Spanish Place, W., on July 25, under the conductorship of Mr. Robert L. Hasberry. The music to be sung by the combined choirs consisted of Palestrina's 'Papæ Marcelli' Mass, the Compline Plainchant, with polyphonic 'Te lucis' and Nunc Dimittis; Palestrina's 'O Salutaris,' Vittoria's Tantum Ergo and the Motet 'Jesu dolcis memoria,' and Allegri's Adoremus.

In connection with the Madrigal Society's Prize Competition, several readers ask whether the announcement that the MSS. sent in must not be in the composer's autograph means that the composition must be printed. Obviously the rule signifies not that the composition should be printed, but that it should be in a handwriting other than that of the competitor. This, of course, avoids the possibility of identification by means of the handwriting.

At the Tobias Matthay School the Saxton Noble Overseas Prize was competed for on July 26, the winner being Giuseppe de Lellis. Marjorie Cohen was commended. Both players are from the U.S.A. The adjudicator was Mr. Nicholas Orloff.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Dramatisation of Choral Works: A Talk with the Producer of 'Hiawatha.' By Harvey Grace	689
Rhythm in Singing, and Elsewhere (concluded). By W. S. Drew	693
Elgar's 'Falstaff' Reconsidered. By Percy A. Scholes	696
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	699
Public School Music: A Practical Visionary. By A. E. F. Dickinson	701
On the Simplicity of Singing. By William Shakespeare	704
Claudio Monteverde. By J. A. Westrup	706
The Rights of Authors and Composers: New Legislation in Russia	708
The Spirit of the Age. By Arthur T. Froggatt	708
Symphonies and the Ordinary Man. By Hervey Elwes	710
The Folk-Song Movement. By Robert H. Hull	711
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	712
New Opera at Duisburg. By Oscar Thompson	715
Occasional Notes	717
The Musicians' Bookshelf	719
New Music	724
Teachers' Department: Does Pianoforte Practice Make Perfect? Some Hints for Pianoforte Students. By Barbara Howarth; Points from Lectures; Answers to Correspondents	727, 728
Church and Organ Music	729
Royal College of Organists: Pass Lists and Annual Report	729
Letters to the Editor	736
Sixty Years Ago	742
Royal Academy of Music; Royal College of Music	742
Trinity College of Music; The Associated Board	743
London Concerts	744
'Judith': Eugène Goossens's new Opera	745
London Festival of Opera; Royal Academy Opera Week	745
Music in the Provinces	746
'The Blue Harlequin,' at Birmingham	746
The Hallé Society	746
Music in Scotland; Music in Wales	747
Musical Notes from Abroad	748
A Contemporary Criticism of Rossini	750
Beethoven's Belgian Ancestry	751
Obituary	751
MUSIC.
'There is a spirit singing.' Unison Song for Massed Singing. By Geoffrey Shaw	721

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number: 'Sun of my Soul.' Hymn-Anthem. By N. F. Byng Johnson.

During the Last Month

Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited

DAVIES, WALFORD.—A Psalm of Thanksgiving (Psalm xxi.). 2d.

MUSIC FOR CINEMA ORCHESTRAS—

COWEN, FREDERIC H.—"The Maypole Dance" (No. 1 of "A Suite of Old English Dances").
——"Peasants' Dance" (No. 2 of "A Suite of Old English Dances").
ELGAR EDWARD.—March (No. 1 of "The Wand of Youth." Music to a child's play. Second Suite).
——"The Wild Bears" (No. 6 of "The Wand of Youth," Second Suite).
Each of the above published separately. per set.
Full Orchestra (including two Piano copies) 7s. 6d.
Small Orchestra (,, ,, ,,) 5s. 0d.
Extra Orchestral Parts ... ... 6d. each.
——"The Tame Bear". (No. 5 of "The Wand of Youth," Second Suite). per set.
Full Orchestra (including two Piano copies) 5s. 0d.
Small Orchestra (,, ,, ,, ,,) 3s. 6d.
Extra Orchestral Parts ... ... 6d. each.

RAGG, K.—"In a Sunny Garden" (My Ladye Fayre). Song. 2s.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
No. 684.	"Spring-time" (Action Song). Edgar Moy	4d.	—
,, 1543.	"Baa, baa, Black Sheep" (Unison Song). Cecil Sharman ...	2d.	—
,, 1544.	"My Story" (Unison Song). Cecil Sharman	2d.	—
,, 1545.	"Doctor Foster" (Unison Song). Cecil Sharman	2d.	—
,, 1546.	"I had a little pony" (Unison Song) Cecil Sharman ...	2d.	—
,, 1547.	"There is a spirit singing" (Unison Song for massed Singing). Geoffrey Shaw.	3d.	—

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 446, contains the following music in both notations: "Dream, baby, dream" (Two-part Song). George Rathbone. 2d.

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—"There is a spirit singing" Unison Song for massed singing. (No. 1038, The Musical Times). 3d.

THALBEN-BALL, G.—"Honour a Physician." Anthem for Tenor Solo and Chorus, for Hospital Sunday and General use. 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2577. "Praise, O praise the Lord of Harvest." Anthem for Harvest. Eric H. Thiman ... ... 2d.
,, 2578. "The Frog." Arranged as a three-part song for s.s.a. Ernest Newton ... ... 3d.

ORGANIST (Lady), A.R.C.O., free to deputise, August till October. Somerset or Wilts. P. H. C., The Lodge, Hillgrove, near Wells.

LONDONDERRY "FEIS"

COMPOSERS' COMPETITION (OPEN) FOR THE BEST PIANOFORTE SOLO

PERPETUAL CHALLENGE CUP AND MINIATURE CUP

Syllabus and particulars from

MISS BRIDE O'NEILL,

"FEIS" OFFICE, LONDONDERRY, NORTHERN IRELAND

CHAMBER MUSIC

on "His Master's Voice" Records

BEETHOVEN

Quartet in B Flat, Op. 18, No. 6 on four 12" records. Virtuoso String Quartet. Price £1 6 0 No. 37

Quartet in C Major, Op. 59, No. 3 on four 12" records. Virtuoso String Quartet. Price £1 6 0 No. 36

Quartet in E Flat, Op. 127, on Five 12" records. Virtuoso String Quartet. Price £1 12 6 No. 35

Quartet in F Major, Op. 135, on Four 10" records. Flonzaley String Quartet. Price £1 4 0 No 40

Quartet in G Major, Op. 18, No. 2 on Four 10" records. Flonzaley String Quartet. Price £1 4 0 No. 39

"Kreutzer" Sonata on four 12" records. Menges and De Greef. Price £1 6 0 No. 21

Trio No. 7 in B Flat on Five 12" records. Cortot, Thibaud and Casals. Price £2 2 6 No. 78

BRAHMS

Quintet in F Minor on Five 12" records. Flonzaley String Quartet. Price £2 2 6 No. 26

DEBUSSY

Quartet in G Minor on Four 12" records. Virtuoso String Quartet. Price £1 6 0 No 19

CHAMBER Music is the ideal music for the home. Essentially an intimate form, it can only be appreciated to the full in the quietude and comfort of your home. The world's greatest chamber music combinations — the Flonzaley Quartet, the Budapest Quartet, the unique "Cortot, Thibaud and Casals Trio" — have recorded the masterpieces of Chamber Music for "His Master's Voice." Enjoy actual re-creations of perfect performances whenever you wish.

The works mentioned are available in the "His Master's Voice" Album Series.

FRANCK

Quintet in F Minor on Four 12" records. Cortot and International Quartet. Price £1 14 0 No. 63 Quartet in D Minor on Six 12" records. Virtuoso String Quartet. Price £1 19 0 No. 18

MENDELSSOHN

Trio in D Minor on Four 12" records. Cortot, Thibaud and Casals. Price £1 14 0 No. 50

SCHUBERT

Trio No. 1 in B Flat on Four 12" records. Cortot, Thibaud and Casals. Price £1 14 0 No. 20

Quartet in D Minor on Five 12" records. Budapest String Quartet. Price £1 12 6 No. 52

"Trout" Quintet on Four 12" records. Backhaus and International String Quartet. Price £1 6 0 No. 67 Quintet in E Flat Major, Op. 44 on Four 12" records. Flonzaley Quartet and Gabrilowitsch. Price £1 14 0 No. 72

SCHUMANN

"His Master's Voice"

The Gramophone Co., Ltd., London. W.1.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC

CANTATAS

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY H. KNIGHT

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY
HUGH BLAIR

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
J. F. WALLER

THE MUSIC BY
G. M. GARRETT

Price One Shilling and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or with Music to the Hymns, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
E. OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL

Price Three Shillings.
Paper boards, Four Shillings; Cloth, Six Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY JULIUS HARRISON

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS.
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence:
Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;
String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY
C. M. WEBER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN E. WEST

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
J. BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ... 1½d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each 3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ... 1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ... 3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol)
Words only, per 100 2s.
DYKES, J. B.—Holy is the seed-time ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ... 1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol) 2d.
IONS, T.—Harvest Home ... ... 3d.
KETELBEY, A. W.—God with plenty fills the hours ... ... 4d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ... 4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ... 3d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ... 1½d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS
SELECTED LIST

PRAISE, O PRAISE THE LORD OF HARVEST. By ERIC H. THIMAN.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O WORSHIP THE KING. By ERNEST BULLOCK
Price Fourpence.

EVERY GOOD GIFT. By GEORGE RATHBONE.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE
Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD
Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Threepence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US
For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

PERCY E. FLETCHER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

GEORGE RATHBONE

EVERY GOOD GIFT
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence.

F. W. WADELY

PRAISE, O PRAISE OUR GOD
Price Threepence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

The Psalms of David

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

Upon the Principles of Natural Speech Rhythm

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(Late Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral)

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(Organist of York Minster)

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(Formerly Director of Music in Harrow School)

PRICES :

Demy 8vo size	... ...	Four Shillings net
Imperial 32mo	... ...	Two Shillings net
Canticles only	... ...	Sixpence net

Gramophone Records by The London Male-Voice Octet may be obtained of Psalms 23, 95, and 145 ... (Columbia No. 9502—4s. 6d.)

Psalms 65 and 85 ... ... (Columbia No. 5428—3s. 0d.)

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

OVER EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S
Compositions in Church Music now sold.
Melodious and effective. Letters of appreciation are continually being received from all parts of the world.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER

*Ripened Grain. New ... ... 9th Edit. 4d.
Exceptionally interesting. Strong, sonorous choruses.
*Lord of the Harvest... ... ... 15th Edit. 4d.
Very effective Solos and irresistible Choruses.
*Rejoice with thanksgiving ... ... 12th Edit. 4d.
*Render thanks and praise ... ... 12th Edit. 4d.
*Rejoice in all the good things ... 15th Edit. 4d.
Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.
*Sing forth His praise ... ... 14th Edit. 4d.
*Be thankful unto Him ... ... 11th Edit. 5d.
*A Bounteous harvest ... ... 5th 1000 4d.
*Let every thing praise the Lord ... 7th Edit. 4d.
Thy bounteous gifts ... ... 11th Edit. 8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
New No. 11 Voluntary Book... ... 12th Edit. 2s.
New No. 12 Voluntary Book... ... 6th Edit. 2s.
Seventeen pieces in each on Two Staves with Pedal part indicated.
*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London:
A. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1
Chicago, U.S.A.:
Clayton F. Summy Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

These Compositions are exceptionally Melodious, Interesting, and effective. Have attained world-wide appreciation.

POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE

*Thou Crownest the Year ... ... 32nd 1000 4d.
*Sing unto God with Thanksgiving ... 37th 1000 6d.
*How great is His Goodness ... ... 27th 1000 4d.
*The Fruit of Thy Works ... ... 25th 1000 6d.
*He gives us Fruitful Seasons ... ... 12th 1000 6d.
*The Eyes of all wait upon Thee ... ... 75th 1000 4d.
Sung at a Festival of 1,500 voices at Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Fear not, O Land ... ... 11th 1000 4d.
*Sing Praises to His Name ... ... 15th 1000 4d.
O Lord, how manifold are Thy works ... 11th 1000 6d.
Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem ... ... 52nd 1000 4d.
Sung at Choral Festivals, Wem and Downpatrick Cathedral.
*All Thy works shall praise Thee ... ... 5th 1000 4d.
*The blessings of Peace ... ... 5th 1000 4d.
Favourite Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D
32nd 1000 6d.
Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.
*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London:
Novello and Company, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: The H. W. Gray Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS

		PRICE O.N.	TONIC
Thou visitest the Earth	Dr. Greene	2d.	1½d.
Earth is the Lord's, The	Jamouneau	4d.	3d.
Sing we merrily	Tozer	4d.	—
Sing Praises	Challinor	4d.	3d.

BEAL, STUTTARD & Co., Ltd.,
29, High Street, New Oxford St., London, W.C.2
Telephone: Gerrard 6417

WRITE FOR ANTHEM CATALOGUE, POST FREE

HARVEST ANTHEM

All Thy Works Praise Thee

BY T. MEE PATTISON

Tenor or Treble Solo and Two Choruses. :: :: Price 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

HARVEST CANTATAS

Any Choirmaster may have any 4 different Cantatas (O.N. or Tonic Sol-fa) on approval for 21 days.

	O.N.	T.S.
FROM PLOUGH TO SICKLE ... By F. A. Challinor, Mus. Doc.	2/-	1/-
HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE ... By W. T. Wadham	1/8	1/-
GOLDEN GRAIN ... ... By Chas. Jessop	2/-	1/-
By John S. Witty
The Bountiful Giver	2/-	1/-
Ruth	2/-	1/-
From Sowing to Reaping	2/-	1/-
Harvest Home ... ... By A. J. Jamouneau	2/-	1/-
The Two Seasons ... ... By T. Harding	2/-	1/-

JAMES BROADBENT & SON, Ltd.,

BOSTON SPA, YORKS

JUST PUBLISHED

MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS .·. (in E flat)

Composed for the Festival Service of the Bath and Wells Diocesan Choral Association in Wells Cathedral, 1929.

BY BASIL HARWOOD
(Op. 48)

PRICE SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

ANTHEM

O LORD, MY GOD

BY

CHARLES A. SALT
F.R.C.O.

PRICE TWOPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A Selected List of

Secular Cantatas, Ballads, &c. for CHORUS ONLY (S.A.T.B.)

	s.	d.
Arnott, A. D. Young Lochinvar (Sol-fa, 8*d*.)	2	6
Bantock, G. A Pageant of Human Life (Choral Suite for Mixed, Male, Female, and Children's Voices) (Unaccompanied)	2	6
Betjemann, G. R. Song of the Western Men	1	6
Blair, H. Trafalgar (Sol-fa, 1*s*.) ...	2	6
Boughton, R. The Invincible Armada	2	6
—— Midnight	3	0
—— The Skeleton in Armour... ...	3	0
Brahms, J. A Song of Destiny (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	1	6
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only)	1	6
Brewer, A H. A Song of Eden ...	1	6
—— Summer Sports	2	6
Bridge, J. F. The Inchcape Rock (Sol-fa, 8*d*.)	1	6
Cliffe, F. Ode to the North East Wind (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	3	0
Cowen, F. H. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— Ode to the Passions (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
Dunhill, T. F. Tubal Cain (Sol-fa, 8*d*.)	1	6
Elgar, E. The Black Knight (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The Banner of St. George (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
Fletcher, P. E. The Deacon's Masterpiece, or The Wonderful One-Horse Shay (Humorous) (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
Gade, N. W. Spring's Message (Sol-fa, 4*d*.)	1	0
Gardiner, H. B. News from Whydah (Sol-fa, 4*d*.)	1	0
Goetz, H. Nœnia (Sol-fa, 1*s*.) ...	1	6
Gray, Alan. The Legend of the Rock-Buoy Bell	1	6
Harriss, C. A. E. The Sands of Dee	1	6
Hattersley, F. K. How they brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix	2	6
Higgs, H. M. The Erl-King	1	6

	s.	d.
Holst, G. King Estmere	3	0
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn (Slow Movement from First Choral Symphony	1	6
—— Ode to Death	1	6
Iliffe, F. Sweet Echo	1	6
Lang, C. S. Lochinvar	2	0
McCunn, H. Lord Ullin's Daughter (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	1	6
—— The Wreck of the Hesperus (Sol-fa, 8*d*.)	1	6
Mackenzie, A. C. The Cotter's Saturday Night (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The New Covenant	2	6
North, S. In the Morning (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	1	6
Parker, H. W. The Kobolds... ...	1	6
Parry, C. H. H. Blest Pair of Sirens ("At a Solemn Music") (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	1	6
—— The Chivalry of the Sea (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	1	6
—— The Glories of our Blood and State	1	6
Rootham, C. B. For the Fallen ...	2	6
Sachs, E. King Cups	1	6
—— Water Lilies	1	6
Smith, A. Brent-. In Glorious Freedom	1	6
Smith, A. M. Ode to the North East Wind	1	6
Speer, W. H. The Jackdaw of Rheims	3	0
—— The Lay of St. Cuthbert... ...	3	0
Stanford, C. V. The Battle of the Baltic	2	6
—— East to West	2	6
—— The Revenge (Sol-fa, 1*s*.) ...	2	6
Stephen, D. The Laird o' Cockpen (Sol-fa, 8*d*.)	1	6
Stocker, S. Song of the Fates ...	1	6
Stojowski, S. Spring-Time	1	6
Sullivan, A. King Arthur (Incidental Music)	2	6
Waddington, S. P. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1*s*.)	3	0
Walker, E. A Hymn to Dionysus ...	1	6
Woodman, R. T. Falmouth	1	6

A selection of the above may be had on approval.
—— Orchestral Parts may be obtained. ——

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF

POPULAR CANTATAS

FOR FEMALE VOICES

		Tonic Sol-fa	O.N.
ABT, F.	Minster Bells (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	Springtime „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	Summer „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Fay's Frolic „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Golden City „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Silver Cloud „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Water Fairies „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Wishing Stone „ „	0/8	2/6
BARNETT, J. F.	*The Wishing Bell (S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	1/6	4/–
BEHREND, A. H.	Singers from the Sea (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„ „	Through the Year „ „	1/–	3/–
BENDALL, W.	A Legend of Bregenz (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„ „	*Song Dances. Chorus only (S.S.A.)	0/8	1/6
„ „	*The Lady of Shalott „ „	1/0	2/6
BENDL, K.	The Water Sprite's Revenge (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
BOOTH, J.	The Day of Rest „ „	1/–	2/6
BOYCE, E. M.	A Vision of the Simple (S. Solo ad lib. and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
„ „	The Sands of Corriemie „ „	0/8	2/–
COWEN, F. H.	A Daughter of the Sea (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/6	3/–
„ „	Christmas Scenes „ „	1/–	3/–
„ „	Summer on the River (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	3/–
„ „	The Rose of Life (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	3/–
„ „	Village Scenes (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
FERRARI, G.	*Impressions (L'Almanach aux Images) (French and English words (S. and M.-S. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
FOSTER, M. B.	Snow Fairies (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	*The Angels of the Bells (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„ „	*The Bonnie Fishwives „ „	1/–	2/6
„ „	The Coming of the King (Sacred) „ „	1/–	2/6
GAUL, A. R.	Around the Winter Fire (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	1/6
HAYNES, B.	A Sea Dream (S.M.-S. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus, with accompanied recitation)	0/8	2/6
	The Fairies' Isle (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
„ „	The Sea Fairies (S. Solo and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	*Song of the Norns (S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
HOFMANN, H.	The Naiads (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
KING, O.	Songs in a Vineyard (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
KINROSS, J.	The Sleeping Beauty (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
LAHEE, H.	The Gleaners' Harvest (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
LLOYD, C. H.	Songs in a Cornfield (S.M.-S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	1/0	2/6
MACFARREN, G. A.	*The Victory of Song (S.S.A. Chorus only)	—	1/6
MUNDELLA, E.	The Forest Flower (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
ROGERS, E.	Summer by the Sea (M.-S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
SELBY, B. LUARD	King René's Daughter (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
SMART, H.	John Gilpin. Unison (second part optional)	—	2/–
TAYLOR, COLIN	*The Home of Titania (S.M.-S. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
TOURS, B.	*King Neptune's Daughter (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
TOZER, F.	*Nature and Love (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/6	1/6
TSCHAIKOWSKY, P.I.	The Little Mermaid (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
VINCENT, C.	The Village Queen (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	*Old May-Day (S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
WOODS, F. C.	The Captive Soul (S.M.-S.T. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
WOOLLEY, E. M.

A selection of the above may be had on approval.

* Orchestral parts may be obtained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

SOLOS from the Church Cantatas

By JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

FIRST SET

SOPRANO

Air — Within my heart of hearts (" A Stronghold Sure ").
Air — Our Jesus hath for aye (" God goeth up ").
Air — My heart ever trusting (" God so loved the world ").
Air — O grant us, mighty Lord (" Jesus, now will we praise Thee ").
Air — Sighing, weeping (" My spirit was in heaviness ").

ALTO

Air — Thou, Whose praises never end (" Bide with us ").
Recit. — The Father hath appointed Him (" God goeth up ").
Air — My Spirit Him descries (" God goeth up ").
Air — Into Thy hands (" God's time is best ").
Air — Rejoice, ye souls, elect and holy (" O Light Everlasting ").

TENOR

Air — Lord, to us Thyself be showing (" Bide with us ").
Recit. — Why hast Thou then (" My Spirit was in heaviness ").
Air — Fast my bitter tears " " "
Air — Rejoice, O my spirit " " "
Recit. — The mighty Guardian (" Thou Guide of Israel ").
Air — His Face my Shepherd " " "
Air — And why art thou, my soul (" When will God recall ").

BASS

Recit. — He comes, the Lord of lords (" God goeth up ").
Air — 'Tis He, Who all alone (" God goeth up ").
Recit. — It is not mine (" God so loved the world ").
Air — On my behalf " " "
Recit. — Yea, this Thy Word (" Thou Guide of Israel ").
Air — Whom Jesus deigns " " "
Air — Yet silence (" When will God recall ").

SECOND SET

SOPRANO

Air — Open wide, my heart (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — Father, what I proffer (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — Come, visit, ye glowing (" How brightly shines ").
Air — I have waited for the Lord (" If thou but sufferest ").

ALTO

Air — God's ensample thus to follow (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — Jesus sleeps (" Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth ").
Recit. — Incline Thine ear (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — The Lord hath heard (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — All earthly powers from God inherit (" Praise thou the Lord ").

TENOR

Recit. — The Saviour now appeareth (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — Come, Jesu, come (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — What voice is with the tempest (" From depths of woe ").
Air — Tuneful harps and voices (" How brightly shines ").
Air — Thou art my God (" Lord, rebuke me not ").

BASS

Air — The Paschal Victim here we see (" Christ lay in death's dark prison ").
Air — Do thine alms (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — With Jesus will I go (" Wailing, crying ").
Recit. — Ah, when on that great day (" Watch ye, pray ye ").
Air — Blessed Resurrection Day " "

THIRD SET

SOPRANO

Recit. — O Lord, hear me when I call (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — How long, O Lord " " "
Air — O praise the Lord (" O Praise the Lord ").
Recit. — O Jesu, our Redeemer (" There is nought of soundness ").
Air — Hearken when with trembling accents " "
Air — Though reviling tongues assail me (" Watch ye, pray ye ").

ALTO

Air — Be welcome, thou great angel (" O teach me, Lord ").
Air — Ah, tarry yet (" Praise our God ").
Air — God is ever sun and shield (" The Lord is a sun and shield ").
Recit. — Be steadfast in affliction (" Wailing, crying ").
Air — Pain and sorrow work salvation " "

TENOR

Recit. — Lord, why so far away (" Jesus sleeps ").
Air — In billows the rivers of Belial (" Jesus sleeps ").
Recit. — O happy town, O favoured land (" Praise thou the Lord ").
Air — O blest are all that fear Him " " " "
Recit. — Reject it not (" Sages of Sheba ").
Air — Saviour, take me for Thine own (" Sages of Sheba ").
Air — Uplift your heads on high (" Watch ye, pray ye ").

BASS

Air — God, Whose power (" Let songs of rejoicing ").
Recit. — Although an host encamp (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — O Lord, Thy mercy " " "
Air — Fare ye well (" O teach me, Lord ").
Recit. — These things that Isaiah of old (" The Sages of Sheba ").
Air — Gold of Ophir is but vain " " "
Air — Ah, where shall I succour (" There is nought of soundness ").

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

— A SELECTED LIST OF —

Instruction Books & Studies

FOR USE IN VOCAL TRAINING

			Price Paper Covers	Price Paper Boards
BATES, JAMES.	...	Voice Culture for Children. Complete	5/6	6/6
„ „	...	„ „ (Part 1) Instructions ...	2/6	3/6
„ „	...	„ „ (Part 2) Exercises ...	2/6	3/6
„ „		„ „ (Part 3) Appendix, Two-part Studies, with accompaniment	1/–
BORDOGNI.	...	24 Vocal Exercises for Mezzo-Soprano. Edited by A. Randegger	2/6
CONCONE.	...	50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice	2/6
„	...	25 Lessons. Sequel to the above	2/6
„	...	15 Vocalises „ „ 25 lessons	2/6
„	...	15 Vocalises for Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano	2/6
„	...	40 Vocalises for Contralto	2/6
„	...	40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone	2/6
ELLIS, A. J.	...	Speech in Song	3/–	4/–
GARCIA, G.	...	A Guide to Solo Singing	3/–	4/–
GRACE, H.	...	A Handbook for Choralists. Containing hints on Sight-Singing and Choral Technique and Expression ...	1/6
HENSCHEL, G.	...	Progressive Studies for the Voice, with accompaniment: Part 1. (Sustained Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
		Part 2. (Florid Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
HULBERT, H. H.	...	Breathing for Voice Production	3/–	4/–
„ „		Eurhythm: Thought in Action. The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy. Cloth, 7/– ...
„ „		Pronunciation for Voice Production. (Part II. of Eurhythm)	1/6
LARKCOM, AGNES J.		The Singer's Art	1/6
MANN, R.	...	A Manual of Singing, for use of Choir Trainers and Schoolmasters	1/6
MARTIN, G. C.	...	The Art of Training Choir Boys	4/6	5/6
„ „		„ „ Exercises only, for the use of boys ...	1/6	2/6
NICHOLLS, M.	...	School Choir Training. For the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing	3/–
PALMER, E. D.	...	Exercises for the Tenor Voice, with Introductory Remarks on its Training and Development	1/6
PANSERON, A.	...	40 Melodic and Progressive Exercises for Soprano or Tenor. Edited by A. Randegger:
„ „		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-26	3/–
„ „		Part 2. „ „ 27-40	3/–
„ „		42 Melodic and Progressive Vocal Exercises for Contralto, Baritone, or Bass. Edited by A. Randegger:
„ „		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-29	3/–
„ „		Part 2. „ „ 30-42	3/–
„ „		50 Vocalises, for Two Voices. Soprano and Mezzo-Soprano or Tenor and Soprano, or Tenor and Baritone. Edited by A. Randegger:
„ „		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-30	3/–
„ „		Part 2. „ „ 31-50	3/–
RANDEGGER, A.	...	Singing	6/–	7/–
STAINER, J.	...	Choral Society Vocalisation. Instructions and Exercises in Voice Training, to be used at ordinary rehearsals Complete	3/–	4/–
		Or in four parts ... ... each	8d.
„ „		The Exercises in the above Primer, adapted and arranged for the use of Choirs and Classes of Female Voices by A. W. Marchant	2/6	3/6
STOCKENHAUSEN, J.		Method of Singing	6/–	7/–
TAYLOR, D. C.	...	Self-help for Singers. A Manual for Self-instruction in Voice-Culture, based on the old Italian method ...	2/6	3/6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF INSTRUCTION BOOKS ON THE

Teaching of Musical Instruments

			Price Paper Covers	Price Paper Boards
		Pianoforte
BERGER, F.	...	First Steps at the Pianoforte	4/–	5/–
HICKIN, W.	...	Pianoforte Accompaniment	4/–	5/–
LOWE, C. E.	...	The Art of Pianoforte Practising. With an Appendix on Legato-pedalling	2/–
PAUER, E.	...	The Art of Pianoforte Playing	3/–	4/–
PRENTICE, R.	...	Hand Gymnastics, for the Scientific Development of the Muscles in Playing the Pianoforte	2/6	3/6
RENDALL, E. D.	...	Hints on the Elementary Teaching of the Pianoforte, chiefly for Boys	2/6
TAYLOR, F.	...	Double Scales Systematically Fingered, a supplement to all Pianoforte Schools (English or Continental Fingering) ...	1/6	2/6
„ „	...	Progressive Studies. Arranged in Groups, and the Fingering Revised and Supplemented. 56 Books ... each	2/–
„ „	...	Scales and Arpeggios. With Preparatory Exercises designed to facilitate their execution	3/–	4/–
„ „	...	Technique and Expression in Pianoforte Playing. Cloth 7/6
		Organ
ALCOCK, W. G.	...	The Organ	6/–	7/–
ARCHER, F.	...	The Organ. A Theoretical and Practical Treatise (Cloth 11/6)	7/6
BEST, W. T.	...	The Art of Organ Playing (Part 1)	4/6
		„ „ „ (Part 2) Studies for the Pedal	11/6
BRIDGE, J. F.	...	Organ Accompaniment	3/–	4/–
ELLINGFORD, H. F.		Pedal Scales and Arpeggios for the Organ	2/6	3/6
„ „		The Organ. A Study of its Principles and Practice ...	2/6	3/6
HORNER, B. W.	...	Organ Pedal Technique (Part 1)	3/–	4/–
		„ „ „ (Part 2)	3/–
LAKE, G. E.	...	Daily Studies and Complete Pedal Scales	1/6
RINK, C. H.	...	Practical Organ School. Edited by W. T. Best (Complete, Cloth 16/–). In six Books ... ... each	3/6
SCHNEIDER, F.	...	Practical Organ School. With numerous Exercises for the Pedals	4/–	5/–
„ „	...	Studies for Pedal Playing; forming Chapter 3 of the complete Organ School	4/6
STAINER, J.	...	The Organ	3/–	4/–
STEGGALL, C.	...	Instruction Book for the Organ, with Progressive Exercises for the Manuals and Pedals	4/6
		Violin
GUHR, C.	...	Paganini's Art of Playing the Violin, with a treatise on Single and Double Harmonic Notes	7/6
HENLEY, W.	...	Graduated Daily Exercises for the Violin. Book 1, 1st and 3rd positions	4/–
„ „		Ditto. Book 2, 1st-5th positions	4/–
KREUZ, E.	...	First Steps for the Violin (1st position only), comprising Easy and Progressive Studies, and a collection of melodious pieces. Part 1 (Violin only)	2/6
„ „	...	Ditto. Part 2. The Pieces for Violin with Pianoforte accompaniment	4/6
LOWE, C. E.	...	Lessons in Harmonics for Violinists and other Musical Students, with Notes on Sound and Resultants, Elementary Explanations and Experiments	1/6	2/6
„ „	...	Hints to Young Violinists	1/6
TOURS, B.		The Violin	3/–	4/–
WILHELMJ, A. and BROWN, J.		Modern School for the Violin. In six books (A and B) A. Technical Practice; B. Studies	3/- to 4/6
		Orchestral Instruments
TOURS, B.	...	The Viola. Edited by Alfred Gibson	3/–	4/–
SWERT, J. De	...	The Violoncello	3/–	4/–
WHITE, A. C.	...	The Double-Bass	4/6	5/6
„ „	...	„ „ „ Appendix	4/6	5/6
BRETT, H.	...	The Cornet	3/–	4/–

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

EYE TRAINING IN MUSIC

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, No. 105)

A course to familiarise children with musical notation and to afford practice in thinking and singing the sounds which the symbols represent. (To be worked in conjunction with "Ear Training" Primer No. 101.)

STEPS I. II. and III.

FOR CHILDREN OF FROM FOUR OR FIVE TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

By MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price, 2s. 6d.

MY MUSIC BOOK

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series No. 105a)

To be read with STEP III. of "Eye Training Course."

By MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The School Music Review

No. 446 | JULY, 1929 | Price 3d.

Annual Subscription, Post Free, Four Shillings

(Published the 15th Day of the Month.)

CONTENTS.

TANNHÄUSER ... ... By G. Kirkham Jones

THE TEACHING OF MUSICAL HISTORY ... By Robert H. Hull

ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCES ... ... By E. Phillips Barker

MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE PAPERS ... ... By Alys Garnett

MUSIC

Two-Part Song:

"DREAM, BABY, DREAM" ... ... By George Rathbone

"JUST LIKE ME": Echo Song, for little children ... H. A. C.

Unison Song for Massed Singing:

"THERE IS A SPIRIT SINGING" ... ... Geoffrey Shaw

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

VOLUMES 5 TO 8 JUST PUBLISHED

The English Country Dance

Graded Series

CONTAINING THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DANCES TOGETHER WITH THE TUNES

By CECIL J. SHARP

VOLUME I.—(Elementary).

Brighton Camp	*Nancy's Fancy	*Gathering Peascods
*Galopede	*The Black Nag	*Rufty Tufty

VOLUME II.—(Elementary).

Ribbon Dance	*The Mary and Dorothy	Picking Up Sticks
Goddesses	*If All the World Were Paper	*Haste to the Wedding

VOLUME III.—(Elementary).

Bonnets so Blue	Christchurch Bells	*Sellenger's Round
The Maid Peeped Out at the Window	*Hey, Boys, Up Go We	The Merry, Merry Milkmaids

VOLUME IV.—(Elementary to Intermediate).

Sage Leaf	Childgrove	Hit and Miss
Epping Forest	*The Old Mole	Newcastle

VOLUME V.—(Intermediate).

Pop Goes the Weasel	The Triumph	Broom, the Bonny Bonny Broom
The Fine Companion	Oaken Leaves	Apley House

VOLUME VI.—(Intermediate—Advanced).

The 29th of May	Indian Queen	Maids' Morris
Scotch Cap	The Boatman	Parson's Farewell

VOLUME VII.—(Advanced).

Jack's Maggot	Lilli Burlero	Argeers
The Beggar Boy	Nonesuch	Dick's Maggot

VOLUME VIII.—(Advanced).

The Geud Man of Ballangigh	Old Noll's Jig	The Phœnix
Shepherd's Holiday	The Maid in the Moon	Mr. Beveridge's Maggot

Price THREE SHILLINGS each volume

 The Dances marked with an asterisk may be had for Brass and Military Band*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

Twelve Country Dance Tunes

ARRANGED FOR BRASS OR MILITARY BAND

By GORDON JACOB

In Three Sets: Price 4s. 6d. each. Separate Parts, 3d. each

SET 1	SET 2	SET 3
The Butterfly	Gathering Peascods	If All the World Were Paper
Galopede	Rufty Tufty	The Old Mole
Haste to the Wedding	Hey Boys	Sellenger's Round
Nancy's Fancy	The Black Nag	The Mary and Dorothy

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

Four Characteristic Waltzes

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE
2. VALSE RUSTIQUE
3. VALSE DE LA REINE
4. VALSE MAURESQUE

Composed by S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

(Op. 22)

PIANOFORTE SOLO

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2*s.* EACH.

	s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte... ... ... complete	4	6
Violin and Pianoforte... ... ... separately, each	2	0
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	9	0
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra	10	5
Ditto, for Full Orchestra	17	5
Full Score (Full Orchestra)	11	6
Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte & Strings, each Number	3	0
Separate String Parts, 8*d.* each.
Military Band Arrangement	19	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S

INCIDENTAL MUSIC to STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA NERO

1. PRELUDE:	s.	d.
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
String Parts	4	2
Wind Parts MS.

2. PROCESSIONAL MARCH:
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
String Parts	3	4

3. EASTERN DANCE:
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	1	6
String Parts	3	4
Wind Parts	8	4

4. SUITE OF FOUR PIECES (Nos. 6, 7, 8, 5):
Pianoforte Solo	6	0
String Parts	12	0
Wind Parts	34	9

5. FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("Nero"):	s.	d.
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	2	3
String Parts	4	2
Wind Parts...	14	0

6. SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("Poppæa"):
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	3	0
String Parts	3	4
Wind Parts...	13	8

7. INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus"):
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	0	8
String Parts	3	0
Wind Parts...	4	4

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Adam Carse

BARBARA ALLEN

VARIATIONS FOR STRING ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts...	6	0
Condensed Score or Piano Conductor	2	3

GAVOTTE IN G

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts...	5	4
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Arrangement for Violin and Pianoforte	2	0

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

Henry Purcell

STRING ORCHESTRA

SUITE, from the Dramatic Music. Arranged and Edited by ALBERT COATES.
1—Rondeau 2—Slow Air 3—Air 4—Minuet 5—Allegro
Score, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES, from "The Gordian Knot Untied" (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
SUITE No. 1: 1—Overture 2—Air 3—Rondeau Minuet 4—Air 5—Jig
SUITE No. 2: 1—Chaconne 2—Air 3—Minuet
Each Suite: Score 4s.; String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE MARRIED BEAU (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Hornpipe 3—Slow Air 4—Trumpet Air 5—Jig 6—Hornpipe 7—March 8—Hornpipe on a ground
Score, 6s String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE VIRTUOUS WIFE (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Slow Air 3—Hornpipe 4—Minuet (I.) 5—Minuet (II.) 6—Allegro
Score, 4s. String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

Harold Rawlinson

AUBADE

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts, including Violin Conductor	6	8
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	2	0

SERENADE

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts, including Violin Conductor	4	4
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	2	0

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

H. Walford Davies

SOLEMN MELODY

		s.	d.
Strings & Organ	Full Score ...	3	0
	Set of Parts ...	2	4
Full Orchestra	Full Score ...	4	6
	Set of Parts ...	6	8
Brass Band	Set of Parts	3	0
	Separate Parts, each (Arranged by J. Ord-Hume)	0	2
Pianoforte Solo		2	0
Violin and Pianoforte ...		2	0
Violoncello and Pianoforte		2	0
Organ Solo		2	0

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

YORK SERIES

916.	SURELY HE HATH BORNE	Smith-Palestrina	2d.
922.	BEHOLD AND SEE ...	Smith-Palestrina	2½d.
958.	THY REBUKE HATH BROKEN	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
977.	HOLY, HOLY	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
1000.	JESU, GRANT ME THIS ...	Gibbons-Bairstow	2½d.
1009.	WILL GOD IN VERY DEED?	Chas. L. Naylor	6d.

BANKS & SON, YORK

Grove's Dictionary of Music at £2 : 12 : 6 !

Editions in 4 vols. Second-hand, in excellent condition. Carriage paid in the U. K. on approval. A large proportion of the fully-detailed articles in these earlier editions are much curtailed in later editions.

Monthly Instalments: 4 at 13*s.* 9*d.*, or 8 at 7*s.* 3*d.*
Quote offer 122.

Foyle's Music Dept., Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES

Unison and Part songs. Church and Instrumental music.

FULL CATALOGUE Post Free ON APPLICATION

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS, LTD., 31 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

TO SELL, ALL OR SEPARATELY

2 Vols.	Schuman Songs, leather	2 Vols.	Franz
1 Vol.	Extra well bound	2 Vols.	Jensen
1 Vol.	Schubert, cloth	1 Vol.	Mendelssohn
1 Vol.	Rubinstein	1 Vol.	Rubinstein Duets
1 Vol.	Beethoven	1 Vol.	Mozart

All Good Condition — Medium Voice — What Offers ?

REPLY S., LAVENDER COTTAGE, LACEY GREEN, PRINCES RISBOROUGH

YOUNG SINGERS

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice-production, enunciation, and singing to boys and girls.

To be obtained from: By JAMES BATES
Messrs. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.

Price One Shilling and Twopence, post free.

No. 103.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS AND EDUCATIONAL SERIES

THE ART OF PIANOFORTE PRACTISING

WITH AN APPENDIX ON

LEGATO-PEDALLING

BY

C. EGERTON LOWE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Foreign Organ Music

Messrs. NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, have now issued a

NEW CATALOGUE OF FOREIGN ORGAN MUSIC

This Catalogue contains a selection of the best works of the most prominent foreign composers, with prices in English currency. Copies will be sent post free. Ask for Catalogue No. 1B.

METRONOMES

MAËLZEL METRONOMES—Best Foreign make.

	s.	d.
In Oak, with bell ... ... net	17	6
In Mahogany finish, with bell and nickelled fittings ... ... net	20	0
In Ebony finish, do. do. ... net	20	0
In Walnut, do. do. ... net	20	0

ORGAN DUETS (4 Hands)

	s.	d.
ANDRÉ.—24 Pieces, Op. 35. 2 Books ... each	3	0
BACH.—Fugue on 3 Themes from "The Art of Fugue"	2	0
HESSE.—Fantasia in D minor, Op. 87	2	0
HÖPNER—Prelude and Fugue, Op. 9	2	0
LACHNER.—Introduction and Fugue, Op. 62 ...	1	6
LISZT.—Fantasia and Fugue	5	6
LÖFFLER.—Fantasia, Prayer and Fugue ...	2	0
RUDNICK.—"Reformation" Fantasia on "Ein Fest' Burg"	2	6
SCHNEIDER.—Prelude and Variations, Op. 65 ...	1	6
THIELE.—Concert Piece in C minor	3	6
WOLFRUM.—Choral and Fugue, Op. 4, No. 3 ...	2	0

Miniature Scores

FOR THE

Promenade Concerts

EULENBURG, PHILHARMONIA, and various French Editions in stock

CATALOGUES OF FOREIGN EDITIONS WILL BE SENT FREE ON REQUEST.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CHAPPELL & CO.'S New Songs

For all Voices

YOUR THOUGHTS	C mi (C-E♭), D mi, F mi	Guy d'Hardelot
HOMEWARD TO YOU	A♭ (C-E♭), C	Eric Coates
LITTLE LADY OF THE MOON	E♭ (B♭-E♭), F, G	Eric Coates
LISTENIN'	F (B-D), G	Haydn Wood
I LOVE TO HEAR YOU SINGING	C (C-E), D, E♭	Haydn Wood
FOR REMEMBRANCE	E♭ (B♭-E♭), G	Margaret Woolmer

For Ladies' Voices

FAIRY LIGHTS	F (C-F), G	Hermann Lohr
FRAGILE THINGS	F (C-E), G	Montague F. Phillips
EARLY IN THE MORNING	D (C-E), F, G	Montague F. Phillips
MY LITTLE GARDEN WORLD	C (A-D), D	Molly Carew
EVERYWHERE I LOOK	E♭ (B♭-F), G	Molly Carew
HE IS TENDER WITH THE BEASTS	B♭ (C-E♭), C, D	Donald Ford
MAMMY'S LULLABY	G (D-E), B♭	Jack Thompson

For Men's Voices

DADDY MAN	F (C-D), G	Hermann Lohr
BY THE LIGHT OF THE MOON	C (A-C), D	Raymond Loughborough
ASK ME NOT AGAIN	D (B-E), F	Hubert Brown

Price, 2s. net each (by post 2*s.* 1*d.*) The compass of the first Key only is given

CHAPPELL & CO., Ltd., 50, New Bond St., London, W.1. NEW YORK and SYDNEY

"INFINITE RICHES IN A LITTLE ROOM."—Christopher Marlowe

THE CHESTERIAN
EDITED BY
G. JEAN-AUBRY.

LONDON
Printed for J. & W. Chester, Ltd., in Great Marlborough Street

THE CHESTERIAN
The Music Magazine of Progressive Tendencies

Published eight times yearly
Subscription 5/- per annum. Single numbers 9d. each. Specimen copy sent free on request

Published at 11, Great Marlborough Street,
LONDON, W.1

by

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.

London:—Printed by Novello and Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Thursday, August 1, 1929.

THE

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (FOUR LINES)

INSTITUTED 1822 INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830

Patrons:

HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

PRESIDENT:—
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL:—
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM

BEGINS MONDAY, 23RD SEPTEMBER, 1929.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

72 Scholarships and Exhibitions, by competition only. Except where the contrary is stated, both Students and non-Students are eligible.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATIONS.

During the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations. Open to Composers, Conductors, Performers, and Teachers, whether educated at the Academy or not.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' CLASSES AND OPERA CLASS.

For the Training of Conductors and Operatic Singers.

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA.

Conducted by SIR HENRY J. WOOD, D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

JUNIOR SCHOOL.

Suitable curriculum for pupils under sixteen years of age.

CONCERTS.

Members of the Public are invited to attend the Students' Practice Concerts, which take place every week during the Term. Particulars of the Public Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Concerts are advertised in the daily Press.

PROSPECTUSES,

Entry Forms, and all other information may be obtained from
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

MUSIC PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

The Royal Academy of Music and The Royal College of Music

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Official Editions of the Music for the Associated Board's Examinations for 1930, published in the following Books, will be ready for sale on August 19th. Order through your usual Music-seller.

PIANOFORTE

STUDIES AND PIECES

	NET.
PRIMARY	2/-
ELEMENTARY	2/-
LOWER	2/-
HIGHER, List A	2/-
" B	2/-
" C	2/-
INTERMEDIATE, List A	2/-
" B	2/-
" C	2/-
ADVANCED, List A	2/-
" B	2/-
" C	2/-

SCALES, &c.

PRIMARY (New Book for 1930)	9d.
ELEMENTARY	1/-
LOWER	1/-
HIGHER	1/6
INTERMEDIATE, ADVANCED, and FINAL GRADES (together)	3/-

SIGHT-READING PIECES

ELEMENTARY	1/6
LOWER	1/6
HIGHER	1/6
INTERMEDIATE	2/-
ADVANCED	2/-
FINAL	2/-
L.A.B. (Overseas)	2/-

VIOLIN

PIECES AND STUDIES

	NET.
PRIMARY	3/-
ELEMENTARY	3/-
LOWER	3/-
HIGHER	3/-
INTERMEDIATE	3/-
ADVANCED	3/-

SCALES, &c.

"SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS." Complete in one book	1/6
INTERMEDIATE	2/-
ADVANCED	2/-

PAMPHLET

Notes on Aural Tests for 1930	3d.

CLASS SINGING

PRIMARY, ELEMENTARY, LOWER and HIGHER (together).

Vocal and Breathing Exercises	2d.
Aural and Sight Tests	2d.

INTERMEDIATE and ADVANCED.

Aural and Sight Tests	2d.
Vocal Studies	6d.

THEORY PAPERS

Specimen "School" Exam. Papers (per annual set)	9d.
Specimen Local Centre Exam. Papers (per annual set)	9d.

SINGING

TECHNICAL EXERCISES AND VOCAL STUDIES

	NET.
PRIMARY	1/6
ELEMENTARY	1/6
LOWER	1/6
HIGHER	2/-
INTERMEDIATE	2/-
ADVANCED	2/-

SIXTY-TWO CLASSICAL RECITATIVES. Intermediate and Advanced Grades 4/-

J. S. BACH

48 Preludes and Fugues

PIANOFORTE

Edited, with a separate commentary to each Prelude and Fugue, by

DONALD FRANCIS TOVEY

Fingered by

HAROLD SAMUEL

Complete, in two books, paper bound ... ... each 6/-

Bound in cloth, with gilt lettering each 9/-

For particulars of the ALTERNATIVE EXAMINATIONS offered by arrangement with the Incorporated Society of Musicians, see Syllabus "B" for 1930.

OTHER NEW PUBLICATIONS

AURAL TESTS

A BOOK OF AURAL TESTS by BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ. Containing numerous examples of Aural Tests for all Divisions of the "School" Examinations and all Grades of the Local Centre Examinations. In two parts:—

Part I.—"School" Examinations ... 1/6 Part II.—Local Centre Examinations ... 1/6

AURAL TESTS for DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS (L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.A.B.)

By BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ (Issued by Authority of the Board) 1/6

VIOLIN STUDIES

ELEMENTARY STUDIES for VIOLIN. By ROWSBY WOOF 2/6

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

14 AND 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1

London: Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1
Thursday, August 1st, 1929 MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1039

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

SEPT. 1, 1929

Deferred Payments Arranged

SPENCER PIANOS

NEARLY 100,000 SOLD!

Dame Nellie Melba, Gertrude Peppercorn, Harry Isaacs, Mathilde Verne, Charlton Keith, Harold Craxton and many other famous Artistes speak enthusiastically of Spencer Pianos, the Instruments of world-wide reputation. Nearly 100,000 models of every description have already been sold, indubitable testimony to their reliability.

Illustrated Catalogue Free

MURDOCHS

The Great Piano House

461/463 OXFORD STREET LONDON, W.1

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

CECILIAN

PIANOS

65, Wigmore Street, LONDON. 12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

SHOW ROOMS:
60, WIGMORE ST., W.1.
Phone——LANGHAM 1418.

ALLISON PIANOS

FACTORIES:
KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.
Phone——NORTH 1660.

Recently supplied at the request of the leading professors, to the

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, - - TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
READING UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Etc., Etc.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

A HILL BOW

is within the reach of most players for, unlike a good instrument, it is obtainable at from 1½ to 6 guineas.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS, of 140, New Bond Street, London, W.1, Violin and Bow Makers to H.M. The King, are the makers of these Bows, which are now being used by the World's greatest players, who realise that a fine bow is as indispensable as a good instrument. - -

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1039—Vol. 71
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage

SEPTEMBER 1 1929

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

PATRON: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

(SEASON 1929-1930)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and must be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

Royal Academy of Music

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (four lines)

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM

BEGINS MONDAY, 23rd SEPTEMBER, 1929

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA

Conducted by SIR HENRY J. WOOD.

TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
CONDUCTORS' COURSE. OPERA COURSE.
ENSEMBLE CLASSES.
DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

VACATION COURSE FOR TEACHERS

PIANOFORTE, CLASS-SINGING, AURAL TRAINING, AND MUSICAL HISTORY AND APPRECIATION.

SEPTEMBER 17th to 20th, 1929, inclusive.

SCHOLARSHIPS

72 Scholarships and Exhibitions.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATIONS

Summer, Christmas, and Easter Vacations.

Prospectuses, Entry Forms, &c., on application.

A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

Guildhall School of Music

Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

PRINCIPAL - SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £12 12*s.* and £14 14*s.* Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free. Students can commence at any time.

AUTUMN TERM begins September 16.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566

THE
Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

CHRISTMAS TERM

The Christmas Term will commence on Monday, September 23rd, 1929.

Entrance Examination on or about September 18th.

A copy of the Prospectus and all particulars may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
The College possesses a fully equipped College Opera Theatre for an audience of 600.

SCHOLARSHIPS, EXHIBITIONS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES
There are Vocal and Instrumental Ensemble Classes, and Pupils sufficiently advanced in this work are given the opportunity of putting their knowledge into practice at College Concerts.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year, in December, April, and September.
Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE
Royal College of Organists

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. Examination are:

Fantasia "Valet will ich dir Geben," in B flat, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 2; Augener, p. 863; Peters, Vol. 7, No. 50.)

Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Alan Gray. (Stainer & Bell.)

Allegro con grazia (5-4 time) from Symphony No. 6, Pathétique, Tchaikovsky, arranged by Charles Macpherson. This arrangement only. Martin's arrangements, No. 56. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1930, A.R.C.O. Examination are the same as those set for July, 1929.

For the convenience of members, past examination papers have been bound in one volume: Fellowship and Associateship Organ Work, January, 1913, to July, 1927; Paper Work, July, 1924, to July, 1927. Price 4*s.*, to be obtained by members only.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the Revised TESTS set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

N.B.—The College is closed during August.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7 H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

PRESIDENT FOR 1929: G. THALBEN-BALL, F.R.C.O.
Organist, Temple Church.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, are eligible. Register of vacant appointments. All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,

DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.
Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by MR. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., MUS.DOC. LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. MUS. (ED.).

SESSION 1928-1929

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

PARADISE STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Manchester School of Music

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

PRESIDENT ... ... H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
PRINCIPAL ... ... R. J. FORBES
REGISTRAR ... ... JOHN HOLME

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SESSION 1928-1929

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 10 to December 1, December 3 to March 9, and March 11 to June 7.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

ADMINISTRATIVE COUNTY OF LONDON

Hackney Technical Institute, Dalston Lane, E.8

Principal:
PERCY R. KIRK, M.A. (Cantab.), A.M.I.C.E., A.M.I.M.E.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Head of School: Miss B. STANLEY LUCAS, A.R.A.M.

Individual and Class Lessons are held daily between the hours of 10 a.m. and 9 p.m. in Vocal and Instrumental Music, Elocution, and Harmony, at fees from £2 2s. 0d. a term for Individual Lessons, and from 15s. a session for Class Lessons.

Orchestral, Choral, Operatic, and Dramatic Classes are held weekly.

Pupils are prepared for the recognized examinations in music.

The School re-opens 23rd September, 1929.

MONTAGU H. COX,
Clerk of the London County Council.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

New Address: GROTRIAN HALL STUDIOS, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

PRESIDENT ... ... A. NETTLEFOLD
PRINCIPAL ... ... DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal Subjects. A thorough musical education if desired.

Special Voice-curing Courses for all voice defects, caused by overstrain and incorrect production.

Practice with Accompaniste can be obtained at the School at a moderate fee.

Particulars from Secretary, Miss M. HEATH. Welbeck 6846

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11

Principal: G. F. O'RIORDAN, B.Sc.(Eng.), M.I.Mech.E., M.I.A.E
Head of Music Department:
W. HERBERT HICKOX, Mus.D., F.R.C.O., F.G.S.M.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT.
UNIVERSITY COURSES for DEGREES and HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M., Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M.
Class and Private Lessons in MUSICAL APPRECIATION and AURAL TRAINING, SOLO and SIGHT SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, and DOUBLE-BASS.
ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL CLASS.
Lessons on CONCERT ORGAN (reconstructed and modernised).
Preparation for R.C.O. Examinations.
SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS (recognized by the London County Council).
Next Term begins Monday, September 23rd, 1929.
Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

Mr. WILKINSON URQUHART

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte: Performer, Teacher, and Accompaniment); A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching); F.R.C.O.; Certificate of Merit in Pianoforte, Harmony and Counterpoint, and Aural Training (Highest Award of the Royal Academy of Music); Registered Teacher; Professor of Pianoforte, Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School.

MR. URQUHART specialises in coaching for the Practical and Paper-work sections of the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas in the above-mentioned subjects. Lessons personally at his London Studio, or by correspondence.

New correspondence course now ready for the Paper on General Musicianship which must be worked in future by practically all L.R.A.M. candidates (Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, &c.).

Recent successes: L.R.A.M. (Practical), 13; (Paper-work), 22. A.R.C.M. (Practical), 8; (Paper-work), 10. Successes in L.R.A.M. accompaniment diploma: Practical 4 and Paper-work (by correspondence) 6.

July, 1929, pupil gained the Essex County Music Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal Academy of Music.

Address:

40 Cranbrook Rise (Cranbrook Park) Ilford, Essex

(Phone: VALENTINE 4065).

DO YOU WISH TO PLAY FROM MEMORY?

READ LETTERS FROM MUSICIANS.

Before using the
MACKINNON METHOD

Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., writes :
"I cannot depend on my memory, nor can I easily learn from memory when I deliberately set out to do so."
Bournemouth, 10/2/29

L.R.A.M. writes :
"It takes me weeks to memorise a piece of music, and then I have no confidence when playing to people, and I find that I stumble and play wrong notes."
Rochester, 12/10/28

A Student writes :
"If only I could memorise! I have never been able to memorise anything."
Ruislip, 30/5/29

An Amateur writes :
"I have great difficulty in memorising even hymn tunes." Scarborough, 23/3/29

After using the
MACKINNON METHOD

After :—"I am entirely satisfied with the results of your System. I am now able to play from memory with comfort."
Bournemouth, 5/6/29

After :—"I was surprised to find how easily I could memorise when following your instructions, not only pieces in the Course, but others to which I have applied the same principle." Rochester, 10/1/29

After :—"I have already memorised the two pieces for the first Lesson—for me a feat little short of the marvellous."
Ruislip, 11/6/29

After :—"The Bach Invention presented no difficulty. This is a piece that, before taking your Course, I should never have hoped to memorise. I trust that many who find difficulty in playing from memory will take your Course, for failure is impossible." Scarborough, 2/6/29

THE FEE IS £3 : 3 : 0

HESS
BAUER
CORTOT
MATTHAY
POUISHNOFF
KOUSSEVITZKY
RECOMMEND THE
MACKINNON METHOD

SUCCESS GUARANTEED

SEND TO-DAY FOR FREE BOOKLET
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To Miss Lilias Mackinnon, 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3
Without any obligation on my part please send me your free booklet on "Memory Training."

Name.....

Address.....

.....

S.I.9

THE LONDON ORATORIO AND CONCERT ASSOCIATION

FOUNDED 1912.

THE ASSOCIATION exists for the purpose of bringing Secretaries of CHORAL SOCIETIES, OPERATIC AND MUSICAL SOCIETIES, ETC., into direct communication with capable and reliable Artists, without the intervention of an Agent, and is based on the co-operation of its members. Choral Societies engaging a quartet of soloists for any work, can have the advantage of preliminary rehearsal of the principals by the musical director.

Musical Director: Mr. Hubert Bath.

For Prospectus and List of Artists, address Secretary,

26, GUILFORD STREET, RUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

The Committee will consider applications for auditions from well-trained singers, who are facile readers, and have an extensive Oratorio repertoire.

DEGREES IN MUSIC

Durham Matriculation
London Matriculation
Preparation by Correspondence

On a thoroughly individual system, ensuring to each Student the closest care and attention

The following are a few extracts from successful pupils' letters:

"The way you anticipated the form which the questions asked at the examination would take (and in some cases the actual questions themselves) is wonderful."

"This agreeable result is due to your skilled tuition, and to the skill and patience of yourself and staff I owe very much."

"I much appreciated all the papers you sent me, and all the interesting notes without which I should most probably have failed."

For Terms, Testimonials, &c., Address—

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxford & Lond.)

14, ELSHAM ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS

ALSO SHORT COURSE OF PERSONAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

ALSO SINGING LESSONS

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON. 'Phone: Croydon 2703

And WEEKES'S STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER ST., W.1

EXAMS. of The ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Students preparing for A. and F.R.C.O. Exams. should send stamped addressed envelope for particulars of:

FREE LESSON AND CRITICISM OF WORK, WITH HINTS

SEYMOUR PERROTT, F.R.C.O., Borough Organist, NEATH

Correspondence Specialist for R.C.O. Examinations

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

FOR TERMS WRITE, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS

Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

ADMINISTRATIVE COUNTY OF LONDON

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites offers for the PURCHASE and REMOVAL of a number of MILITARY BAND INSTRUMENTS, &c., comprising cymbals, bass-drums, military side-drums, timpani, triangles, castanets, glockenspiels, leather music-cases, drum-sticks, covers, baskets, stands, &c.

Offers must be on the official form, copy of which may be obtained on application to the Chief Officer of Supplies, L.C.C. Supplies Department, Room 24, The County Hall, Westminster, London, S.E.1. No offer will be received after 9 a.m., on Tuesday, 10th September, 1929. The Council does not bind itself to accept the highest or any offer.

The County Hall, Westminster Bridge, London, S.E.1.

MONTAGU H. COX, Clerk of the London County Council.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

Faculty of Music

The Prospectus, containing full information as to the Courses of Study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. Degrees, will be forwarded on application to The Registrar.

The Hargreaves Scholarship, of the value of £30 per ann. (renewable for a second year), is awarded on the results of the first Mus. B. examination.

THE SESSION COMMENCES ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3

IMPROVISATION AND KEYBOARD HARMONY

Pianoforte Technique, Memorising, Sight-reading, Aural Culture, and General Musicianship.

Tuition in London, Guildford, and Portsmouth . . . also by correspondence.

H. CRAWFORD CERTIFICATE T.M.P.S.

(Formerly Student at Tobias Matthay Piano School, London)

Terms and further particulars, booklets, &c., on application:

KINGSLEY GREEN, HASLEMERE

PAPER WORK BY MUS.B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include: 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928); 3 A.R.C.O.; 2 L.R.A.M.

2S. 6D. PER LESSON AND POSTAGE

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

The Tonic Sol-fa Association

The Monthly meetings will be resumed on Saturday, October 26th, 7 p.m., at the King's Weigh House Club, Thomas Street, London, W.1. Admission Free. Full particulars from the Secretary, Mr. T. H. Warner, L.T.S.C., 82, Ashgrove Road, Goodmayes, Essex.

SOUTHEND MUSICAL FESTIVAL

The ANNUAL COMPETITIONS will be held at Southend-on-Sea on November 7 to 26, 1929.

Gold Medal Open Classes. All other Classes now open to the whole of Essex. Syllabus on application to Secretary, 112, Westbourne Grove, Westcliff-on-Sea.

PIANO PEDALS WITH OCTAVE COUPLER

THIS WONDERFUL INVENTION SUPERSEDES ALL PIANO PEDALS, AND IS A MASTER PATENT

St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 9th April, 1921

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 gns. cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.

London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

Please mention this Paper when writing.

NORTHERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COMPLETE COURSE IN COMPOSITION.

A most notable success was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,

WILLIAM BAINES,

who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT.

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS:

Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.

SPECIALIST TEACHING IN SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION, INTERPRETATION; Diagnosis of Faults and

COMPLETE ERADICATION OF FAULTS.

Personal Tuition in

LEEDS, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, ACCOMPANIMENTS WRITTEN TO SONGS, &c.

State Exam. or Subject.

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD. LEEDS.

"Finger Magic"

HOW THE MASTER MUSICIAN IS MADE.

"I have been reading a little booklet which I have termed 'Finger Magic,' and I would very much like to place this book in the hands of every pianist, violinist, and 'cellist in the Kingdom.

"We all know that the secret of the virtuosi does not consist in the amount of time they expend in instrumental practice—one recently stated that he often does not touch the instrument for a week, and another has affirmed that musicians are positively superstitious about practice. The secret of the success of the great masters must therefore be looked for in another direction than in the capacity for hard grinding practice on orthodox lines, and I have been experimenting with a system which may well prove to be a solution, or at any rate to a large extent.

"The system to which I refer develops the hands not by practice in the ordinary sense, but by a series of exercises, based on sound psychological as well as physiological laws; the almost immediate effect of which is to increase the stretching capacity of the hand, and the descriptive booklet, issued by the Cowling Institute, contains some astonishing letters from musicians which would convince me, even if not backed up by my own experience, that the quickest and easiest way to develop the strength and flexibility of the wrist and fingers so essential to pianists, violinists, and 'cellists is to perform the operation away from the instrument, when the mind can be centred upon that object alone.

"I anticipate that within a measurable period the knowledge contained in this little booklet, and in the lessons given by the Cowling Institute, will form part of the curriculum of every teacher and be a necessary equipment of every violinist, 'cellist, and pianist."—

ERNEST JAY, F.R.C.O.

NOTE.—The booklet referred to above may be obtained free of all cost on application to Secretary, T., Cowling Institute, 71, Albion House, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1. (State if a teacher.)

Do You Know ?

Do You Know how to concentrate when you practise?
Do You Know how to improve your Sight-reading to an unlimited extent?
Do You Know when and why you should correct the phrase-marks in music?
Do You Know how to express through music your feeling and your personality?
Do You Know how to increase the stretch of your hands without straining them?
Do You Know how to gain fluent technique with mental and muscular ease?
Do You Know how, when, and when not to use the damper pedal?
Do You Know how to simplify your methods of Fingering?
Do You Know how to make Scale-Practice interesting and musical?

MUSICAL SECRETS

NINE PAPERS by LILIAS MACKINNON

As a Teacher, Miss Mackinnon is well known, not only for her originality of thought, but for her simplicity of expression. These Papers are the outcome of her personal experience as Performer and Teacher, and they contain practical suggestions of the greatest value, and ones that have never before been available to the public.

The NINE PAPERS are these:

1. The Secret of Concentration
2. The Secret of Sight-reading
3. The Secret of Phrasing
4. The Secret of Interpretation
5. The Secret of Hand-Extension
6. The Secret of Technique
7. The Secret of Pedalling
8. The Secret of Fingering
9. The Secret of Scale-Practice

Nos. 1-5 for all Instrumentalists.
6-9 for Pianists.

The price of each Paper is 2s. 6d., plus 2d. for postage (two or more post free); but the Set of NINE, if taken together, may be had at the inclusive fee of £1 : 1s.

A Teacher in Switzerland writes:
"Your Papers are admirable and your method of Sight-Reading quite excellent."

Fill in Coupon for these unique Pamphlets.
Descriptive list sent (if desired) on receipt of 1d. stamp.

COUPON
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3

Please send me Papers Nos.....

I enclose.....

Name.....

Address.....

S.T.9. ....

Blüthner Studios

23, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1

Studios supplied with new Blüthner Pianos have now been opened at the above address. A large room suitable for Lectures, &c., and several smaller rooms are available to teachers of music. For particulars, apply to :

BLÜTHNER & CO., Ltd., 17-23, Wigmore Street, London, W.1

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

Used and highly recommended by—

COVIELLO, ELLINGFORD, FRYER, LAMOND, MEALE, POUISHNOFF, REDDIE, SPENCER-DYKE, WALENN, and many other well-known Professors and Teachers.

Send for full list of testimonials and particulars post free.

"Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers. Recommended by the Editor of the Musical Times.

IMPROVED MODEL

Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

E. C. M., 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE

Issued by Authority of the Associated Board.

A Book of Aural Tests

Giving numerous examples of the tests for all Divisions of the "School" Examinations and for all Grades of the Local Centre Examinations.

By BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ

In Two Parts :

Part I. "School Examinations 1/6

Part II. Local Centre Examinations ... 1/6

Aural Tests for Diploma Examinations

L.R.A.M. (Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music).
A.R.C.M. (Associate of the Royal College of Music).
L.A.B. (Licentiate of the Associated Board).
(Overseas)

By BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ

Price 1/6

Vocal Studies for School Class Singing

By FREDERICK KEEL

From Primary to Advanced Standard ... Price 6*d.*

Copies may be obtained through any Musicseller or direct from the Publishing Manager :

MUSIC PUBLISHING DEPT., The Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M.,

14-15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1

TWO REALLY GOOD COURSES

MEMORY-PLAYING

No. 1. The Master-Method of Memory-Playing is for those who wish to play reliably from memory without constant repetition. The Method is very simple and extremely effective, and is applicable for all grades of efficiency. A Free Booklet, giving full particulars will be sent free upon request.

Please state whether you play Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ, and if a moderate or advanced player.

SIGHT-READING

No. 2. The Master-Method of Sight-Reading is for those who are quite unable to play at sight or wish to develop their ability in this direction. Courses are arranged for Piano, Violin, 'Cello, Organ, Banjo, Harp, Mandoline, Saxophone, Trumpet, Flute, Clarinet, and full particulars will be sent free upon request. Please state instrument, and whether a moderate or advanced player, and if an amateur or professional.

Courses arranged for any other instrument if desired.

REGINALD FOORT, F.R.C.O.

194, BEACON HOUSE,

HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6

RAISE YOUR STATUS

Gain the MUS.BAC.

and qualify for

1. An important Church or Cathedral Appointment
2. A Music Mastership in a PUBLIC SCHOOL
3. The Graduate Scale in a Secondary School
4. A County Teaching Connection

You can PASS MATRIC. in 6 months

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE, Cropwell Bishop, NOTTS.

Professional Notices

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO
Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869

EDWARD REACH

TENOR
GENTLEMAN OF H.M. CHAPELS ROYAL
Tel: Streatham 9287. 12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17

ANDREW REAN

TENOR
SPECIALIST IN VOICE PRODUCTION (Italian method), accepts Pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Highest Recommendations.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS
Address:
WEEKES' STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER STREET, LONDON, W.1.
Private 'Phone: CLISSOLD 2509

LANGDALE BROWN

BASS-BARITONE
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.
29, Sedgeford Road, W.12

FRANK POULTON

BASS-BARITONE. L.R.A.M. (SINGING-PERFORMER)
Available for Oratorio, Concerts, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow, Mdx. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536

VOICE TRAINING — FIELD-HYDE METHOD

Miss ELSIE DUNIAM-JONES

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., M.R.S.T.
Specialist Coach for diplomas and concert platform. Short courses or single lessons on Interpretation of English, French, and Italian Songs. Vacancy for accompanist pupil.
EDUCATIONAL LECTURE SONG-RECITALS TO SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, MUSICAL CLUBS.
Specimen Titles: Songs, their making and their hidden beauties. Shakespeare Songs—old and new settings.
From a Headmistress: "A very delightful and truly educational evening."
British Music Bulletin: "Miss Duniam-Jones sang with delightful finish and sympathy, and proved herself an entrancing lecturer."
Studio: 17, Cavendish Square, W.1.; and at Barnet, Herts.

Miss MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma)
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing; coaches for singing examinations; leads and trains choral classes and choirs; also gives lessons on the guitar. Moderate charges for all subjects.
26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627

J. M. MORRIS, Mus. Bac.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), F.T.S.C.
SPECIALISES IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
Harmony and Counterpoint. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper Work. All Tonic Sol-fa Diplomas. Vocal Physiology and the Art of Teaching Singing for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas.

Address: 93, ST. MARY STREET, CARDIFF

Miss PITT SOPER, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.
Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).
For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

ELOCUTION AND SINGING

MR. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M.
(Double Diploma Elocution and Singing), A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.
Correspondence Courses: (a) ELOCUTION (b) VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING (c) ASSOCIATED BOARD ELOCUTION EXAMS.
Studios: 5, Park Row, Nottingham; and 14, Hanover Street, W.1

Miss MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON
Lecturer and Adjudicator
Receives pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Prepares candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas as Teacher or Performer. Also gives
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS
to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address 10, Harley Street, London, W.1 'Phone: Langham 3909

EDGAR CARR, A.R.A.M.

Professor of Pianoforte Playing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Coaches for all examinations and public performances. Consultation lessons given to teachers, and unsuccessful candidates advised.
WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, W.1.

N. ANDREW

MUS.DOC., F.R.C.O., A.R.M.C.M. (DIST.)
Correspondence Lessons in Paper-work for Mus.D., Mus.B., R.C.O., R.A.M., and T.C.L. Examinations.
Pieces Annotated. Courses in Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, and Orchestration.
Terms, &c., Henrietta Street, Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancs.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON, Mus. Bac.

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION
Fees from 10/6 for 10 Lessons, according to Course.
Successes during 1929:

L.R.A.M.	6 entered, 4 passed (all at first attempt)
L.T.C.L.	3 entered, 2 passed
A.T.C.L.	2 entered, 1 passed	(first attempt)
A.R.C.O.	1 entered, 1 passed	(first attempt)

Local Exams., T.C.L. and Assoc. Bd., 7 entered, 7 passed, 3 with Hons. (all at first attempt)
ADDRESS: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY

W. R. HUNN

MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Joint Author of Form and Teaching Test-Papers)
Specialises in Coaching for Mus.Bac., R.C.O., R.C.M., and R.A.M. Exams. Latest successes: "Mus.Bac." Exercise, Dunelm., 1929.
105, REGENT ROAD, GREAT YARMOUTH

WILLIAM SANDS

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC, REDDITCH PARISH CHURCH
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST
For vacant dates, terms, &c., apply to:
99, Plymouth Road, Redditch, Worcs,
or 42, Valley Road, Shortlands, Kent.

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.
is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.
For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, Bryanston Square, W.1

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, Mus.Bac., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 14, St. Stephen's Avenue, Blackpool, N.S.

GEORGE AUSTIN, F.R.C.O., &c., Organist and Director of the Choir, The Empire Church (Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W.2). Recitalist, &c. Preparation for all Exams. Address as above.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory) at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L.Mus. T.C.L., (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for R.C.O., R.C.M., R.A.M., &c., Diplomas. Study Aids, 9*d*. Studies in Modulation, 3*s*.
Send for interesting pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY

DR. W. A. BARLOW, F.R.C.O., gives Personal or Postal tuition for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. 1,514, Ashton Old Road, Hr. Openshaw, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams., 1910-29 ... 348 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams., 1914-29 ... 104 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, MUS.BAC., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., WATERLOO BUILDINGS, PICCADILLY, MANCHESTER.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus.Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work. (38 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony and Counterpoint. (23 Successes.)
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams. as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, Kingsway Hall), 298, Balham High Road, S.W.17. Telephone: Battersea 0916.
Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.
SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.
RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 A.R.C.M., 1920	1 L.R.A.M., 1919
1 L.R.A.M., 1924	4 A.R.C.O., 1921
1 A.R.C.M., 1928	3 A.R.C.O., 1922
2 F.R.C.O., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., 1923
6 F.R.C.O., 1923	4 A.R.C.O., 1924
5 F.R.C.O., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., 1925
5 F.R.C.O., 1926	7 A.R.C.O., 1926
5 F.R.C.O., 1927	8 A.R.C.O., 1927
5 F.R.C.O., 1928	9 A.R.C.O., 1928
4 F.R.C.O.. 1929	8 A.R.C.O., 1929

During the past few years pupils of Mr. Allan Brown have gained "Lafontaine" (F.R.C.O.), "Turpin," and "Sawyer" Prizes.
"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates," to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

LILIAN COOMBES, F.R.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster, Brixton Independent Church, S.W.9). Tuition in Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint. Preparation for Exams. Large 4-manual organ. "Hughenden," Bush Hill Road, N.21. Telephone: Enfield 0760.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 1, Newington, Liverpool.

ARTHUR GREGORY, L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), educated R.A.M. Teaches Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form. Examination candidates prepared. Write, 3, Gladys Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

MR. BLADON HACKETT, Professor of Voice Culture. "Placing, Breathing, Vocal Mechanics." Huskiness and Catarrh eradicated. Dr. Davan Wetton, Mus. Doc., writes: "One of the ablest teachers in the Kingdom." 14, Hanover Street, W.1. (Purley 3460.)

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 414 Successes in Mus.D., Mus.B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., and the paper-work requirements for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas in pianoforte playing. For terms, &c., apply to 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus., Oxon., L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. Compositions revised. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.
3, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

FLORENCE HOLLOWAY, A.T.C.L., ORGANIST (recommended by Mr. Herbert Hodge), is free to deputise on Sundays or week-days. 65, Marylands Road, Maida Hill, W.9.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, 1928, Mus. Doc., 3 Final Mus. Bac. and 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent Successes: 4 Mus. Doc. and 4 Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. Over 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto: F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

THE REVISION OF MSS. IS UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in piano, singing, theory. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Road, Canonbury, N.1.

MR. E. L. M. PRITCHARD, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., A.R.C.M. (Organ Playing), gives correspondence tuition in all theoretical subjects, including Plainchant Accompaniment. Also available for Organ Recitals and Pianoforte Accompanying. Address, Tan Llann, Bath Street, Rhyl, North Wales.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2.) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3.) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. Bac. successes at Durham, Dublin, and London.
R.C.O. EXAMINER SAYS: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite ability for the examination in view.
347 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
205 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1928	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1928
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1929	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1929
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1929	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1929

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the January F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition, pupils are taught to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.
F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as the String Quartet, Part-Song, Solo, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon, when so many candidates come to grief.
Hints on how to study the score selected for the January examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.
A.R.C.O. pupils receive special help with Free Counterpoint Pianoforte Accompaniment, and Four-Part Harmony. Questions on Choir-Training, Musical History, and Musical Form are included in the lessons.
The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, MUS. DOC. OXON., F.R.C.O., "TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MISS M. PALMER, L.R.A.M. ACCOMPANIST R.A.M. or R.C.M. students, 3s. 6d. a practice. AURAL TESTS a Speciality. 37, Sherwood Park Road, Sutton, Surrey.

Complete preparation for Teachers of Singing and the Pianoforte by CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A, Performer and Teacher Pianoforte).
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on "Musical Appreciation" to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
All papers up-to-date.
Over 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone Maida Vale 1715.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., M.R.S.T. One Guinea Ten Lessons. Har., C'p't, Fugue, History, Choir-Training, General Musicianship, &c. F.R.C.O. Analysis, January, 1930, 3s. Recent successes: A. Mus. T.C.L., L.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., 1928; F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., 1927, 1928, 1929; also T.C.L. and G.S.M., Pass and Hons. Certifs. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

MATRIC., MUS. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. examinations. Individual postal preparative courses at specially moderate fees. Write for particulars, Geo. H. Skaer, B. Mus., 44a, South Street, Worthing, Sussex.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—F.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 3/6; 15 Score-reading Tests, 2/6; 24 Basses, or 24 Melodies fully Harmonised, 2/- each set; 12 Complete Test Papers, 3/6; 16 Themes for Extemporisation, fully worked out, 5/-; Brahms analysis, 3/6; F. or A. hints, 3/6. A.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 2/6; 27 Vocal Score-reading Tests, 3/6; 24 Hymn Tunes for Transposition, Books, 1, 2, 3, 2/6 each; 24 Accompaniment Tests, Books 1, 2, 5/- each. In MS. July Paper Work Successes, 8. FRCO/L, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—FINISHING LESSONS given on replica of R.C.O. organ at National Institute for the Blind, London. Apply, Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., 17, Lanercost Road, London, S.W.2. Candidates should apply early.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Assoc. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Assoc. Board; C.C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. Bac. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and Systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Major Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., 80, Warwick Gardens, London, W.14.

THE G.-V. COURSE OF ELEMENTARY COUNTERPOINT AND HARMONY. If you want a thorough grounding, try this inexpensive Course. Trial lesson free. M. T. Verschoyle, Dunkineely, Ireland.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O., Recitalist and Examination Coach. Teacher of Piano, Organ, and Harmony. Studio, 7, Durand Gardens, London, S.W.9.

CONDUCTOR available, Orchestral, Choral, Operatic. Also Conducting Classes held. Successes include L.R.A.M. (T.C.). Box No. 17, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Lady, age 25) requires post as Music-Mistress in School. London or Provinces. Five years' teaching experience. Apply, Box 45, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED TO PURCHASE, by School of Music, Teachers' connections in London or Eastern counties, as branches. Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, and Elocution. Write Principal, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ADDITIONAL SINGERS ARE REQUIRED for Highgate Presbyterian Church Choir (Soprano, Tenor, Bass). Salary according to qualifications. Must be good Soloists. Apply, stating qualifications, to W. F. Jenkins, 47, Stanhope Gardens, Highgate, N.6.

S. OLAVE'S, HART STREET, CITY OF LONDON.—Solo Boy required. Scholarship tenable at Coopers' School, Bow. Also vacancy for Tenor. £16 p.a. For full particulars, apply Mr. Frank Poulton, 33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow, Mdx.

CHOIR BOYS WANTED for Christ Church, Gore Road, South Hackney. Apply, Wednesdays and Fridays, at 7 p.m.

SOLO BOYS WANTED for Parish Church. Apply, stating stipend required, to Organist, 6, Rostrevor Road, S.W.6.

CHRIST CHURCH, LANCASTER GATE, W.2.—Alto and Tenor wanted immediately. Salary £25 each p.a. No previous applicants. There are also vacancies for a few boys with good voices, salary according to age and ability. Apply, by letter, to George Austin, F.R.C.O., at above address.

SOPRANO DESIRES APPOINTMENT.—London Church. Experienced Soloist and Choralist. Box 46, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

OPERATIC SOPRANO, having a few evenings free, is willing to accept a few engagements during the evening. Box 41, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SOPRANO SOLOIST REQUIRED as Choir Leader for Trinity Presbyterian Church, Bromley, Kent. Friday rehearsal; Sunday Services, 11 and 6.30. Salary by arrangement. Write, S. H. Collins, 9, Great Elms Road, Bromley Common.

ALTO REQUIRED IMMEDIATELY for Christ Church, Crouch End, N. £20 p.a. Please write Dr. Walker Robson, 17, Creighton Avenue, N.10.

CONTRALTO, L.R.A.M. (Performer), seeks engagements, Oratorio. Organ Recitals, Ballad Concerts, &c. Box 47, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CONTRALTO AND TENOR WANTED AT ONCE for St. John's Presbyterian Church, Scarsdale Villas, Kensington. Sundays, 11 and 6.30, and weekly rehearsal. Salary, £20 p.a. Reply, with experience, to Charles R. Willis, 9, Milman Road, N.W.6.

SOLO CONTRALTO for Central London Nonconformist Church. £30 p.a. Good Sight-reader. Friday practice, Sunday Services, 11 and 7. Four weeks' holiday. A. Paine, 4, Hilton Road, Holloway.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL

There is a vacancy for a TENOR LAY-CLERK. Stipend £150. The trial of selected voices will take place during the 3rd week of September. For further particulars, apply to the Chapter Clerk, 7, Bank Street, Lincoln.

TENOR REQUIRED for Christ Church, Marylebone, end of September. Communicant, and good Reader. £15. Write, Organist, 96, Wrentham Avenue, N.W.10.

TENOR WANTED.—£20 p.a. Good Reader. St. Paul's, Vicarage Gate, Kensington, W.8. Apply, A. W. Clarke, "Reydon," North Circular Road, Neasden, N.W.10.

TENOR REQUIRED for Putney Presbyterian Church. Friday rehearsal, Sunday Services 11 and 6.30. Four weeks' holiday. £20 p.a. Letters to Mr. N. A. Sayers, 4, Grosvenor Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

TENOR FOR PARISH CHURCH, S.W.—Good Reader, and capable of taking solos when required. Stipend, £20. Apply, C. D., 24, Callow Street, South Kensington, S.W.3.

TENOR REQUIRED. — Marylebone Presbyterian Church, 38, Upper George Street, Marble Arch, W.1. Salary, £25 p.a. Sundays, 11 and 7; Fridays, 8.30. Apply, by letter, to the Organist.

BASS-BARITONE VOCALIST, wishing to extend connection, would accept oratorio or other engagements from high-class Choral Societies, in return for expenses only. Highest references for ability and musicianship. Apply, Box 31, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS WANTED (not Baritone).—St. Margaret's, Westminster. Letters only, H. Dawson, 24, Ferry Road, S.W.13.

BASS, TENOR, and ALTO REQUIRED for St. Luke's, Finchley. Friday practice, and two Sunday Services. (£16-£20.) Applications to The Vicar, St. Luke's Vicarage, Mountfield Road, Finchley, N.3.

BASS WANTED.—Plainsong and Polyphonic Music. £25. Organist, 24, Eardley Crescent, S.W.5.

TRINITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

BANGOR, Co. DOWN

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED

QUALIFICATIONS REQUIRED: A.R.C.O. (or equivalent), and experience in Choir-Training, and discipline.

Salary for suitable man, £120 p.a.

Applications, giving full particulars, should be sent to

MR. S. D. BELL, J.P., PRINCETOWN HOUSE, PRINCETOWN ROAD, BANGOR

EXETER CATHEDRAL

There is a vacancy for an Assistant-Organist. Applicants must be young, and Communicant Members of the Church of England. For further particulars apply at once, stating age, experience, and qualifications, with copies (not originals) of recent testimonials, to The Succentor, The Close, Exeter.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED.—Remuneration £25. Write, Secretary, New Southgate Baptist Church, 43, Goldsmith Road, N.11.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, MARGATE. — Organist and Choirmaster wanted. Must be fully trained and capable. Large four-manual organ; opportunities for recitals. Splendid opening for a young F.R.C.O. Must be Evangelical Communicant. To start duties October 1, or soon after. Minimum salary, £80. Applications, by letter only, to Rev. E. A. Cook, St. James's Rectory, Dover.

HIGHGATE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.— Organist and Choirmaster wanted shortly. Usual requirements. Two or three services Sundays, weekly choir practice. Salary £50. Applications to Miss Champ, 140, Makepeace Mansions, Highgate, N.6.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for Mission Church (Anglican), Leyton. (Pipe organ, two-manual, pedal.) Adult choir. Small honorarium paid. State experience. Apply Box 50, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST CHOIRMASTER (Lady), L. R. A. M., A.R.C.O., desires appointment. Experienced, keen musician. Recitalist. Midlands. Box 42, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER required for Wesley Church, Torquay. Fine three-manual Organ. (No teaching scope.) Apply, stating experience and salary required, to The Rev. Moffatt Gautry, "Wakefield," Torquay.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED.— Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Tunbridge Wells. Applications, with testimonials and references, to the Church Secretary, 19, Beulah Road, Tunbridge Wells.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Glasgow Cathedral. Salary £200. Facilities given for Recitals. Apply Robert Halket, 15, Blythswood Square, Glasgow.

PUPIL-ASSISTANT WANTED at important Church near Clapham Common. Apply, Box 49, Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN CLASS (Saturdays, 3 p.m.)

High-Class Individual Tuition. Friendly Interest. Any Grade. Full particulars from W.B.M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.

ORGAN LESSONS AT ST. STEPHEN'S, WALBROOK, E.C.4. GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

ST. JAMES'S, MUSWELL HILL, N.—Choral and Organ Recital on Wednesday, 2nd October, at 8 p.m. Organist, Dr. S. H. Nicholson, M.A. Programme will include: "Hear My Words" (Parry), "Ave Verum" (Byrd).

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (2,014th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on September 3rd, and every Tuesday at 1 o'clock.

LADY ACCOMPANIST.—Good Sight-Reader, experienced, requires engagements. Box 43, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARGAINS. — Apollo Organ, two manuals and pedals. Also Upright Concert Grand Piano, nearly new; noted maker. Write A. B., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

EXHIBITION OF CHURCH ORGANS, Manor Hall, Manor Road, Hastings. Clergy and Organists invited. Largest stock in England of new organs ready for sale, at prices from £350 to £2,200, inc. erection (all oak cases). Address, S. F. Dalladay.

MAGNIFICENT 3-MANUAL REED ORGAN, with full range pedals. Can be blown by hand or power. For Sale. Original price £450; what offers? J. H. Greenhill, Mus.Bac., 2, Westwood Road, Southampton.

ORGAN-PEDAL ATTACHMENT for Piano. New. Complete with stool, £7. R., 165, Waterloo Road, Uxbridge.

ORGAN PEDALS for Piano.—Concave, with stool; as new. £5, or offer. 15, Deaconsfield Road, Hemel Hempsted, Herts.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.— Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS. — One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 45, Grays Inn Road, London, W.C.1.

SMALL PIPE ORGAN FOR SALE. — Now in Lilburn Tower, Northumberland. One manual, six stops, handsome oak case. Good condition. Suitable for small Church. Apply Estates Office, Cottage Road, Wooler.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.—Second-hand Piano-Pedals. Particulars to Box 48, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS (Postal).— Profitable profession or side-line. Taught quickly by Certified Tuner, M.T.A. Instructor to Ministry of Labour. G. W. Bakes, "Hartman House," 15, Jesmond Avenue, Bradford.

PEEL ORCHESTRA.—Vacancies Instrumentalists, especially 'Cellos and Wood-wind. Excellent musical library. Rehearsals Friday evenings. Inquiries invited to Hon. Sec., Mr. Geo. E. Barber, 19, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

'CELLO FOR SALE.—Suitable for lady.; nice tone; good condition; with bow and canvas case. Price £7. D. Burrington, Broadstairs.

FOR SALE.—200 Modern Text-Books and Organ Pieces at low prices (owing to death). New Grove's Dictionary (hardly used). Send stamp for list. Box 44, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice extracts from, as short four-part anthems and motets, to English words. Set as unaccompanied choral test-pieces at Musical Festivals. Specimens gratis from Dr. H. G. Smith, 31, N. C. Road, Dublin.

JUST PUBLISHED. Harvest Anthem: "Ye shall go out with Joy." By Thomas Smith. Price 3*d.* Composer of "Thou Crownest the Year," &c. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1; or post free from H. M. Smith, St. George's Terrace, Bury St. Edmunds.

COMPOSERS. — Songs, Lyrics, Piano Solos, and Suites wanted for early Publication. Send MSS. to The Carlton Publications, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

COMPOSERS' MSS. Revised and Prepared for Publication. Music Composed to Lyrics. For terms, send MSS. to The Carlton Music Agency, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

MUSIC DUPLICATING.—All kinds, any number; perfect copies. Specimens and prices on application to E. Herrick, at 37, Amherst Road, West Ealing, W.

ESSAY.—F.R.C.O., January, 1930. Important. A New Series (No. 3) of Six Model Essays on "The English Language," with "Hints" on writing the essay. Also Series Nos. 1 and 2, on same book. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* per each Series to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and other examinations. SPECIAL PAPER showing how to obtain success in these important tests. All candidates should secure this paper. Write, enclosing 4*s.* 6*d.*, to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co. Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

£250 SINGING, PIANO, and ELOCUTION Free Scholarships, Cups, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition for the trained and untrained, October 26th, November 2nd and 9th. Adjudicators: Mr. Frank Gilbert, Miss Phyllis Windsor, and Miss Florence Ager. Results at Lecture-Recital, "Expression in Singing," King George's Hall, Tuesday evening, November 19th, at 7.30. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD. 2*s.* 6*d.* post free; Abroad, 3*s.* Pre-eminent Technique. It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor." M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

No. 1.—SET TO MUSIC BY HENRY T. TILTMAN.

Price Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

10 Vols. of Theory for 6/- !

In order to reduce stock prior to reorganization and enlargement, Foyle's music Dept. offers these Bargain Parcels of Books on the Theory of Music to M. T. readers during September on approval. The Parcels will include works, second-hand, in good condition, by well-known authors, such as Stewart Macpherson, Kitson, Percy Scholes, Prout, Peterson, and Bertenshaw, also Novello's Primers. Lists cannot be supplied. Secure a parcel to-day. Quote offer 122.

FOYLES FOR MUSIC BARGAINS

Foyles Music Dept., Charing Cross Rd., London, W.C.2

THE GRAFTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

CLAPHAM CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, S.W.4

There are vacancies in the above Society for all voices

"Elijah," "King Olaf," and "St. Matthew" Passion

Write for particulars to:

WILLIAM C. ANSCOMBE (Hon. Musical Director), 56, Elms Rd., Clapham Common, S.W.4

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1929
LATEST MODELS

BABY GRAND ...	100 Gns.
UPRIGHT GRAND	60 Gns.
UPRIGHT PLAYER	100 Gns.

FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Reconditioned Pianos, Grands and Uprights, at greatly reduced prices for cash or hire purchase terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BY
Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer,
Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann
and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

PIANO REPAIRS "WIGMORE HALL FINISH"
denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.
THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost)
PERFECT SATISFACTION
WIGMORE HALL AND PIANO GALLERIES, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES

Unison and Part songs. Church and Instrumental music.

FULL CATALOGUE Post Free ON APPLICATION
H. F. W. DEANE & SONS
THE YEAR BOOK PRESS, LTD., 31 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA
THE ANCIENT MARINER
33RD 1,000
Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
BAND PARTS MAY BE HIRED
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

FOR SALE

Large three-manual Organ, now in the Assembly Rooms, Hull. Built by Forster & Andrews. Great 10 stops; Swell 9 stops and Tremulant; Choir 5 stops; Pedal 5 stops; Couplers 5; Electric Blowing; separate magazine for each section.

Apply, FORSTER & ANDREWS,
9, St. Luke Street, HULL

REEVES' LIST of New and Important Works.

How to Teach Class-Singing, and a Course of Outline Lessons which illustrate the Psychological Principles on which Successful Tuition is based. By GRANVILLE HUMPHREYS, Professor of the Art of Teaching, Voice Production, &c., at the T.S.-F.C.; late Lecturer in Class Singing at the Training School for Music Teachers. Numerous Music Illustrations. Cloth, 5*s.* 6*d.* net; paper, 3*s.* 6*d.* net. Ready.

Teachers will find this very striking book of great value. The publishers have no hesitation in strongly recommending it.

The Artistic Pianist. Natural Technics in Piano Mastery. From Student to Artist. All Vital Points Discussed and made Clear. Many Diagrams of Hand and Finger Technique, and some Music Examples. By JACOB EISENBERG. Cloth, 7*s.* 6*d.* net. Ready.

PACHMANN.—I am in accord with your principles; particularly do I believe it essential to proper pianism to remove fatigue.

Studies in the Music of the Middle Ages. Historical Facts for the Arabian Musical Influence. By Dr. HENRY G. FARMER (Author of "The Arabic Musical MSS. in the Bodleian Library," &c.). Ready November.

Music of the Most Ancient Nations. Particularly of the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Hebrews, with reference to discoveries in Western Asia and in Egypt. By CARL ENGEL. Numerous Illustrations, and Index. Re-issue with three large illustrations added of discoveries at Ur, &c. (1929). 8vo, cloth, 18*s.* net. Ready.

Technics of Organ Teaching. A Handbook which treats of Special Points in Organ Teaching Examinations, together with Test Questions. By R. A. JEVONS. Cloth, 4*s.* net; paper, 2*s.* 6*d.* net. Ready.

Questions on Mozart's Sonatas, both Educational and Suggestive. By F. HELENA MARKS. Aid and Companion to the Study of the Author's work—"The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning as Exemplified in the Piano Sonatas by Mozart." For Teachers and Students. 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

 Prospectus of the two works mentioned on application.

Art of Organ Accompaniment in the Church Services. What to Do and what to Avoid. Guide to the Organist in the effective rendering of the Music. By WALTER L. TWINNING, F.R.C.O., author of "Examination Test-Questions," &c. Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.* net; paper, 2*s.* 4*d.* net.

Summer Reverie, by W. L. TWINNING. Violin with piano, 2*s.* net; Quartet (violin, piano, 2nd violin, and 'cello), 2*s.* 6*d.* net; Parts, 2nd violin and 'cello, 1*s.* net.

The Flute, Story of. By H. M. FITZGIBBON, M.A. Second Edition, with additional matter, 1929, including new Frontispiece of Lulli and his Flautists. Cloth, 6*s.* 6*d.* net.

Indian Music and its Instruments, Story of. A Study of the Present and a Record of the Past. Together with Sir William Jones's celebrated Treatise in full. With 19 Plates, chiefly of Instruments, 7 Music Illustrations, and a Map. By ETHEL ROSENTHAL, A.R.C.M., F.R.G.S. Cloth, 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

Franz Schubert, Man and Composer. The Centenary Biography. A Vivid Story of a Charming Personality. By C. WHITAKER-WILSON. Portraits and Illustrations of Schubert and his Friends. Cloth, 10*s.* net.

Schubert—the most poetical musician that ever was.—Liszt.
Schubert—the man with the Divine Spark.—Beethoven.

Fishermen's Night Song, by Schubert (Opus 142, No. 2). Arranged as a Song by WHITAKER-WILSON. 2*s.* net.

Notes on the Interpretation of 24 Famous Piano Sonatas of Beethoven. By J. ALFRED JOHNSTONE (author of "The Art of Teaching Pianoforte Playing," "Piano Touch, Phrasing, and Interpretation," &c.) Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 6*s.* net.

Twenty-one Compositions by Three Famous 16th- and 17th-Century Masters, William Byrd, Dr. John Bull, and Orlando Gibbons, being Parthenia, or the First Musick ever printed for the Virginals. Arranged for the Piano and freed from the errors of Dr. Rimbault's edition by accurate comparison with the original text by MARGARET H. GLYN (author of "Elizabethan Virginal Music and Composers"). Boards, 12*s.* 6*d.* net; cloth, 15*s.* net.

Beethoven's Nine Symphonies fully Described and Analysed. Thematic Material and auxiliary motives: Analytical Chart of each Movement: full Technical Descriptions of Developments: Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic features: Epitomical Tables, &c. 637 Musical Examples. By EDWIN EVANS, senr. Author of "Handbook to the Vocal Works of Brahms," &c. Cloth, Vol. I. (Nos. 1 to 5), 10*s.* 6*d.* net.; Vol. II. (Nos. 6 to 9), 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

Concise Method of Instrumentation. How to Write for the Orchestra and Arrange an Orchestral Band Score. Illustrated with Musical Examples and various large folding charts, with Index. By EDWIN EVANS, senr., author of "Beethoven's Nine Symphonies Fully Described and Analysed," &c. 8vo, cloth. Vol. I. (Strings), 7*s.* 6*d.* net; Vol. II. (Wood, Brass, Drums, &c.), 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

REEVES' LIST—continued

The Temple Edition of Organ Overtures and Arrangements, with Ped. Obb. Oblong folio. 3*s.* each, net. List on application of about 60 works in this series, including works by Wagner, Tchaïkovsky, Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, Berlioz, Schubert, Gounod, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Balfe, Auber, Rossini, Weber, Wallace, Suppé, Thomas, Nicolai, Sterndale Bennett, and Flotow, chiefly arranged by EDWIN EVANS.

A few are appended:

Athalie (Mendelssohn)	L'Africaine (Meyerbeer)
Bohemian Girl (Balfe)	Masaniello (Auber)
Carnaval Romain (Berlioz)	Mignon (Thomas)
Egmont (Beethoven)	Oberon (Weber)
Faust (Wagner)	Otho (Handel)
Faust (Gounod)	1812 Overture (Tchaïkovsky)

List on application.

Modern Organ Tuning, The How and Why, Clearly Explaining the Nature of the Organ-Pipe and the System of Equal Temperament; with a Historic Record of the Evolution of the Diatonic Scale from the Greek Tetrachord. By HERMANN SMITH. Cloth, 5*s.* net.

Some Famous Symphonies, How to Understand Them. With their Story and Simple Analysis. By J. F. PORTE. Cloth, 4*s.* 6*d.* net; or in two separate parts, paper, 1*s.* 6*d.* net each.

Reeves' Dictionary of Musical Biography: Noteworthy Men and Women of the Past and the Present, about 2,500. Edited by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN and others. Cloth, 4*s.* 6d. net; paper, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

Music Story Series. Handsome volumes, crown 8vo:

ORATORIO. By A. W. PATTERSON, B.A., Mus. Doc. 5*s.* net.
NOTATION. By C. F. ABDY-WILLIAMS, M.A., Mus. Bac. 5*s.* net.
ORGAN. By C. F. ABDY-WILLIAMS, M.A., Mus. Bac. 5*s.* 6*d.* net.
VIOLIN. By PAUL STOEVING. 5*s.* 6*d.* net.
HARP. By W. H. GRATTAN-FLOOD, Mus. Doc. 5*s.* 6*d.* net.
ORGAN MUSIC. By C. F. ABDY-WILLIAMS, M.A., Mus. Bac. 5*s.* net.
ENGLISH MUSIC (1604-1904). Seventeen Lectures by leading authorities. 5*s.* 6*d.* net.
MINSTRELSY. By EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 5*s.* net.
MUSICAL FORM. By CLARENCE LUCAS. 5*s.* net.
OPERA. By E. MARKHAM LEE, M.A., Mus. Doc. 5*s.* net.
CAROL. By EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 5*s.* net.
BAGPIPE. By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD. 5*s.* 6*d.* net.
FLUTE. By H. M. FITZGIBBON. New edition, with fresh matter (1929). 6*s.* 6*d.* net.
SYMPHONY. By E. MARKHAM LEE, M.A., Mus. Doc. 5*s.* 6*d.* net

The Art of the Conductor. A Suggestive Guide both to the Theory and its Practice. With forty-one Diagrams and Examples. By HECTOR BERLIOZ. Translated by JOHN BROADHOUSE. Cloth, 3*s.* net; paper, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

Gluck and his Operas. With an Account of their Relation to Musical Art. By HECTOR BERLIOZ. Translated from the French by EDWIN EVANS, senr. Cloth, 5*s.* net.

Mozart, Weber, and Wagner, and various other Essays on Musical Subjects. By HECTOR BERLIOZ. Englished by EDWIN EVANS, senr., F.R.C.O. Cloth, 5*s.* net.

The Student's Helmholtz. Musical Acoustics, or the Phenomena of Sound as Connected with Music. By JOHN BROADHOUSE. With 100 illustrations. Fourth Edition, cloth, 8*s.* 6*d.* net; or paper, 2 vols., 3*s.* 6*d.* each net.

How to Make a Violin. Practically Treated. By JOHN BROADHOUSE. New and Revised Edition. With 47 Illustrations and Folding Plates, and many Diagrams, Figures, &c. Cloth, 5*s.* 6*d.* net; paper, 4*s.* net.

Treatise on the Structure and Preservation of the Violin and all other Bow Instruments. Together with an Account of the most Celebrated Makers and of the Genuine Characteristics of their Instruments. By J. A. OTTO, with Additions by J. BISHOP. With Diagrams and Plates. Fourth edition, further enlarged. Cloth, 4*s.* net.

Makers of Music. Biographical Sketches of the Great Composers. With Chronological Summaries of their Works and Facsimiles from Musical MSS. of Bach, Handel, Purcell, Dr. Arne, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert, Berlioz, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann, Wagner, Verdi, Gounod, Tchaïkovsky, Brahms, and Grieg, with General Chronological Table. By R. FARQUHARSON SHARP. Numerous Portraits. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Cloth, 6*s.* 6*d.* net.

About Elizabethan Virginal Music and its Composers. With Facsimiles of William Byrd, John Bull, Orlando Gibbons, and Giles Farnaby. By MARGARET H. GLYN. Cloth, 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

Primary Course in the Rudiments of Music. With Hints on Answering Questions (Written Work) for all Examinations in the Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By WILSON MANHIRE, L.R.A.M., &c. 1*s.* net.

Theory of Music for Young Musicians. With Answers given to all the Questions, and a Dictionary of necessary Musical Terms. By MARY SHARP. Limp cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; paper, 1*s.* net.

Steps in Harmony. With Copious Explanatory Examples and Graded Test Exercises. A Handbook for Students. By Dr. CHURCHILL SIBLEY. With Music Examples throughout. Boards, 3*s.* 6*d.* net; paper, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

WILLIAM REEVES
Bookseller Limited

83 Charing Cross Road
London, W.C.2

ORGANISTS and Musicians generally are respectfully reminded of the illustrated booklet which has been sent to them by the National Institute for the Blind re the

Braille Centenary

1929

They are asked if they will be good enough to re-read it, and endeavour to help the National Institute to continue its great work of providing Braille Music and Literature for those who are deprived of the blessing of Sight.

"The Night is Departing—Departing!"

New Organ Music

For CHURCH OR RECITAL USE

BY

H. B. WEATHERDON

No. 1.	Pièce Idéale	1/6
„ 2.	Meditation	1/6
„ 3.	Intercession	2/-
„ 4.	Caprice	1/6

(Difficulty—Moderate)

The above appear in the programmes of:

H. F. ELLINGFORD, R. GOSS CUSTARD, ALLAN BROWN, F. R. FRYE, AMBROSE PORTER, HERBERT HODGE, Dr. G. S. HOLMES, F. J. GOSTELOW, F. W. BELCHAMBER, LILIAN COOMBES, Etc.

"All have given me pleasure in playing."
H. F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

"I assure you they are greatly liked by the general public."
Dr. Roland Diggle, Los Angeles.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The G. & T.

Music Lending Library

12/6 PER ANNUM. ENTITLES YOU TO BORROW FOR ANY PERIOD AND AS OFTEN AS YOU WISH, THE PICK OF THE WORLD'S MUSIC.

Vocal Scores, Piano Scores, Chamber Music. Vocal, Piano, Organ and Instrumental Albums. Vocal, Piano, Organ and Instrumental Solos. Latest Dance and Musical Comedy Songs and Selections, etc., etc., etc.

Write for Prospectus to :—
(Dept. N.)

34, Percy Street, London, W.1.

The Year Book Press Series

NEW ITEMS NOW READY

NO.	TITLE	COMPOSER		PRICE
319	The Trees in England ...	Charles Wood	U.	3d.
320	To-day	E. T. Chapman	U.	3d.
321	Sleep, my Baby	Charles Wood	U.	3d.
322	The Dandelion	H. G. Ley	U.	3d.
323	Merry, merry Sparrow ...	H. M. Grieveson	2-PT.	3d.
324	A May Song	C. H. Kitson	2-PT.	4d.
325	A Cradle Song	E. T. Chapman	2-PT.	3d.
326	Old Evening Prayer ...	H. M. Grieveson	3-PT.	3d.
327	Barbara Allan	P. Tomblings	S.A.T.B.	6d.
328	Music when soft voices die	G. Leeds	„	4d.
329	A Shepherd's Roundelay	E. L. Bainton	„	4d.
330	Hence away, begone ...	Charles Wood	„	4d.
A60	Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	E. R. Daymond	S.S.A.	4d.
A61	The Way, The Truth, The Life	J. B. Johnson	U.	3d.
A62	Father All-Holy	Charles Wood	S.A.T.B.	4d.
A63	O be joyful in the Lord ...	Charles Wood	„	4d.
A64	How dazzling fair	Charles Wood	„	4d.

STANDARD PUBLICATIONS

*Kikirikee. 34 Unison Songs for children ... 3/- postage 4d.
*Kookoorookoo. 26 Unison Songs for children 2/6 postage 2d.
A Little Organ Book. 12 Voluntaries. 6/6, 10/6 postage 6d.
Free Accompaniment of Unison Hymn Singing 7/6 postage 6d.
*Two Hundred Tunes for Sight Singing ... 2/6 postage 3d.

 On approval, post free, from:*

H. F. W. DEANE AND SONS The Year Book Press, Ltd.,
31, Museum Street, LONDON, W.C.1.

WORKS BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

With Analyses from WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS

Price - Five Shillings

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says: "Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY

THIRD EDITION

Price - Five Shillings

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2*s.* Words only, 12*s.* 6*d.* per 100

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS	2	6
ANTHEM: I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	3
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ...	0	3
SIX HYMN-TUNES AND CAROLS WITH DESCANTS	1	0
THE SNOW LIES WHITE. Song	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

HARVEST CANTATAS

Any Choirmaster may have any 4 different Cantatas (O.N. or Tonic Sol-fa) on approval for 21 days.

	O.N.	T.S.
FROM PLOUGH TO SICKLE ... By F. A. CHALLINOR, Mus. Doc.	2/-	1/-
HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE ... By W. T. WADHAM	1/8	1/-
GOLDEN GRAIN ... ... By CHAS. JESSOP	2/-	1/-
By JOHN S. WITTY
THE BOUNTIFUL GIVER	2/-	1/-
RUTH	2/-	1/-
FROM SOWING TO REAPING	2/-	1/-
HARVEST HOME ... ... By A. J. JAMOUNEAU	2/-	1/-
THE TWO SEASONS ... ... By T. HARDING	2/-	1/-

JAMES BROADBENT & SON, Ltd.,

BOSTON SPA, YORKS

BEETHOVEN

AND HIS

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY

GEORGE GROVE

Price, cloth, gilt, Nine Shillings net

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

IN TONIC SOL-FA NOTATION

SOLOMON

AN ORATORIO

By G. F. HANDEL

Choruses only

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY

NÄNIE (SCHILLER)

SET TO MUSIC

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

By JOHANNES BRAHMS

ENGLISH VERSION BY LUCIA YOUNG

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Trinity College of Music

(INSTITUTED 1872)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., P.C., G.C.V.O.

Principal:
E. STANLEY ROPER, M.A., Mus.B.

Controller of Examinations:
EDWARD D'EVRY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

The FOLLOWING CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held at the COLLEGE and at certain centres in April and July last (June in Scotland).

FELLOWS (F.T.C.L.).—Hugh E. Brandon, William A. Riley.

LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus.T.C.L.).—Hugh E. Brandon, Edward Carter, Elsie L. Jupp.

LICENTIATE (L.T.C.L.)

PIANOFORTE.—Robert Ashton, Lilian D. Barber, Kathleen M. M. Barrett, Kathleen Belston, Gertrude Boffin, Lucy I. Bolland, Aloysius E. Bolton, Jenny Booth, Emily Brown, Mrs. Hilda M. Carr, Margaret T. L. Cother, Olive E. Cutler, Rosa B. Dennis, Margaret O. Diaper, Sheilagh M. Doran, Elsie Fothergill, Grace G. Fox, Marjorie Gillings, Ella Gromett, Hilda M. Hallam, Richard M. Haygarth, Eric N. Hodges, Catherine H. Hutton, Annie Jackson, Doris A. R. James, Rees H. James, Kezia S. Judge, Ivy I. M. King, Mary Laycock, John Lee, Doris Lees, Una Linden, Jeffrey B. Lovegrove, Marjorie A. Mason, Vera Mellor, Violet F. S. Montgomery, Freda M. S. Newbolt, Alfred T. F. Noyce, Annie O'Kelly, Grace Onion, Francis S. Paine, Doris Pickering, Lilian G. Pullon, Gladys Rawson, Eileen A. Read, Constance M. Reece, Esther Richardson, Winifred E. Roberts, Nellie Shackleton, Mrs. Winifred N. Smith, Lily Gertrude Sparks, James L. Walmsley, Norman Ward, Hilda G. Watts, Annie E. Webb, Edith B. White, Jessie Wike, Dorothy Wills, Marie S. Wood.

ORGAN.—Norman Andrew, Amy Jones, Leslie Mason, Winifred M. Matson, John W. Porter.

VIOLIN.—Edgar C. Glyde, Marie Ingram.

SINGING.—Florence K. French, Bluebelle McFarland, Alice L. V. Norton, Robert Parkinson, Herbert L. Phillips, Thomas A. Tunmore.

(Continued on p. 784)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC—Continued

ELOCUTION.—Henry R. Brett, Jennie Chambers, Enid M. Cooper, Sandy G. Pillay, Mary C. Smith, Ada Woodhead.

ASSOCIATE IN MUSIC (A.Mus.T.C.L.).—Gilda H. Andrews, Gladys E. Austen, Mrs. Lillian L. Barber, Arthur F. Barker, William I. Collyer, Laura E. M. Mills, Arthur F. Newcombe, William F. Sahnow, Edward F. Teather, Llewelyn V. Warne.

ASSOCIATE (A.T.C.L.)

PIANOFORTE.—Sallie Aldcroft, Margaret E. Appleby, Marjorie Atkinson, Leonard R. Bain, Irene K. Barnes, Elsie H. Batchelor, Nancy M. Birch, Edith Black, Grace Blackmore, Phyllis Boulton, Doris M. Bratt, Ruth Bunting, Arthur Bury, Mary Cansick, Marion G. Chetwode-Barton, Evelyn E. Clarke, Ernest R. Clarke, Muriel Cleaver, Dora B. Cload, Isabel McC. Clelland, Kathleen Clelland, Eleanor M. Clucas, Frances J. Collier, Alice H. Cooper, Frances L. Cowle, Rhoda Cowley, Henry W. Cull, Pauline Curtin, Gladys M. Dalton, William H. Davies, Vete M. Dyett, William A. Eastwood, Winifred Elliff, Ivy E. Eves, Irene M. Fairbrother, Freda Ferguson, Muriel F. Forshaw, John W. E. Foster, Leonard H. Frostick, Frank Gardner, Drois M. Gates, Elizabeth E. Gear, Dorothy M. Goodson, Marion Y. Gordon, Mary Grant, Dorothy B. Green, Albert Greenwood, Helen Grieve, Dorothy M. Griffiths, Ellen E. Gutteridge, Maurice Hampshire, Kathleen Hatton, Diana W. Hodge, Madeleine Howse, Owen L. Hugh, Dorothy E. Hughes, Christina G. Hunter, Rose A. Jack, Arnold Jones, Eluned Jones, Maude Jones, Flora M. Keeling, Vera M. Kenyon, Agnes M. Kerr, Miriam L. Large, Arthur F. Le May, Kathleen E. Lewis, Margaret S. H. Lloyd, Nullie Luke, Edith W. Luscombe, Eliman J. G. McConechy, Bernice E. McEvansoneya, Martha Magill, Emma Manson, Edna B. Mason, Doris E. Masters, Hilda A. Matthews, Adeline E. M. Millard, William Y. Milne, Christine E. Nancarrow, Janet M. B. Neil, Kathleen G. Newman, Alfred T. F. Noyce, Elsie Ogden, Marjorie Oke, Kathleen Parker, Edna H. Parkinson, Mildred P. C. Paul, Sister M. B. Pearce, O.P., Mollie Porter, Corina E. Reece, Ada Rendle, Agnes F. Reynolds, Edna H. Reynolds, Edith A. Richards, Marjory A. Richardson, Lorna L. Ridd, Mrs. Mildred F. Robinson, Charlotte M. Roth, Ivy L. Saunders, Eva Scott, Stanley Shaw, Daisy M. Simpson, Winifred A. Smith, Margaret M. Smyth, Thomas Stafford, Monica E. Steggles, Catherine B. Taylor, Harold Taylor, Marie Taylor, Eva Titterton, Adeline E. Thompson, Ernestine Thompson, Agnes M. Turner, Edward Turner, William S. Vann, Stella Waistall, Evelyn Warren, Raymond F. Watts, Constance Annie Webb, Louisa Whanstall, Esther Williams, George P. Williams, Gladys I. Williams, Gladys L. Wilson, Arthur Wise, Cedric Wyatt, Margaret Wylie.

ORGAN.—Bridgett E. Baker, Albert W. G. Hartland, John Hughes, William Lightheart.

VIOLIN.—Eric C. Coles, Mary Cooper, William A. Harding, Eileen Mack.

VIOLONCELLO.—Nesta H. L. Franklyn, Frank Milner.

SINGING.—Andrina Barraclough, Katie Gallacher, Catherine A. H. Harborne, Agnes Hill, Ethel M. Jones, Una Linden, John B. McAlpin.

FLUTE.—Edgar H. Hunt.

ELOCUTION.—Elsie M. Beard, Kathleen S. Buckman, Constance S. Lowry, Isabella B. Petrie, Ethel Saword, Clara A. Watts.

CERTIFICATES

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Alfred R. Pemberton, Arthur R. Wyatt.

PIANOFORTE.—Margaret E. Bacon (Hons.), Ruby E. M. Bunday (Hons.), Vera Jubb (Hons.), Gladys M. Applegate, Gwendoline M. Barker, Robert Bibby, Gwynneth A. M. H. Brooker, Marjorie E. Brown, Evelyn Bunting, Thruza J. Cardwell, Leonard Chaplin, Kathleen Coulson, Vera Dutton, Norman Irving Evans, Lilian Foot, Arthur Halbard, Frank Heeley, Gwendoline M. Hendey, Andrew Heron, William Holmes, Hilda Leather, Gwendoline M. Leary, Francis B. Lee, Sam Lindley, Dorothy Loxston, Queenie McCay, Dorothy Maeers, Doris Morgan, Patrick Naven, Stella M. Nicholson, Lilian F. Pearson, Catherine A. Pedlow, Ruby G. Pragnell, Winifred Priestley, Vera A. B. Rees, Marjorie V. Reid, Ethel M. Richards, Maye Robinson, Lizzie M. Selby, Gerard Shanahan (Hons.), Louisa E. Smith, Eleanor Stansfield, Ivy G. Stone, Dorothy L. Veitch, Margery Williams, Doris M. Wills, Annie S. Wilson.

ORGAN.—Hansel Curran, Gertrude Grigg, Hilda Matthews, Alan G. Salmon, Marion A. Weddup.

EXAMINERS.—H. L. Balfour, Mus.B., Professor Granville Bantock, M.A., Mus.D., J. E. Borland, Mus. D., W. H. Brereton, Ronald Chamberlain, M.A., Mus. B., Avalon Collard, Sir Frederic H. Cowen, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, E. Herbert Caesari, Henry Geehl, Fred J. Gostelow, Tyrone Guthrie, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., R. J. W. Hurd, LL.D., Ph.D., Thomas Keighley, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, J. Charles Long, Mus. B., William Lovelock, Mus. B., C. Egerton Lowe, James Lyon, Mus. D., C. H. Adolph Mann, A. Mistowski, Mus. D., E. J. Moeran, C. H. Moody, C.B.E., Mus. D., G. O'Connor Morris, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., Louis Pesckai, W. H. Phelps, Arthur W. Pollitt, Mus. D., E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Archy Rosenthal, Alec Rowley, Wilfrid Sanderson, Mus. B., C. Schilsky, J. Slater, Joseph Speaight, D. Vaughan Thomas, M.A., Mus. D., Mrs. Helen Trust, Ivor Warren, John Warriner, Mus. D., Alexander Watson.

Next Diploma Examinations will take place at the College and at certain approved provincial centres in January next. Last day of entry for London, December 7; for the provincial centres, December 2.

December 7. Last day of entry for the next open competition for many Scholarships in practical musical subjects, also for a number of University Degree in Music scholarships.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK
(Repeatedly featured at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society)

	PRICE
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule	3d.
Christmas Day	3d.
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
THE STAR OF THE EAST. A Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS. A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s.
ADAMS, THOMAS
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price, in one volume	9d.
separately, each	3d.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

DERING, RICHARD
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts)	4d.
GOSS, JOHN
Behold, I bring you good tidings	3d.
HANDL, JACOB
Behold, thou shalt conceive	4d.
HOPKINS, E. J.
Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	3d.
LASSO, ORLANDO DI
Let Zion resound with praise	4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts)	4d.

Specimen copies sent free.

Bosworth's Famous Manuscript Paper

Most beautiful writing surface. All rulings. Upright or oblong. SENT FREE—Specimens and Price List.

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd. 8, Heddon Street, Regent Street,
Music Publishers LONDON, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED

No. 33.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET IN G

By BEETHOVEN

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

No. 34.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET

from "Berenice"

By HANDEL

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY. Limited

The Musical Times
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR
SEPTEMBER 1, 1929
(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 848)

THE ORGANIZATION OF MUSICAL SCIENCE

BY LEONID SABANEEV

In comparison with the sociological, the natural, and the exact sciences, or even with the sciences of the other arts, musical science occupies a peculiar position. It is quite possible that its infantile state, concerning which I have written elsewhere,* is largely due to this peculiarity. Nearly everywhere it lacks special centres for its cultivation, not only as a practical discipline necessary to composers and performing musicians, but also as a science. I know that many persons, many musicians even, have no idea of the meaning of musical science, or the science of music; they imagine it to be the ordinary first or second course in harmony or counterpoint, the study of orchestration, and so forth. Therefore it may be advisable to explain beforehand exactly what is implied by the term. Due consideration will show us that it is a vast realm of knowledge which has hitherto received but little attention, and that of a very inadequate kind.

By musical science I mean a complete system of knowledge which shall deal with music from a sociological or humanitarian standpoint, and also treat it as an exact science. Of all the arts music, perhaps, lends itself best to such disciplines. The ancient sympathy between music and mathematics and the curious general connection between music as an art and certain departments of exact science were observed long ago. No other art is so closely allied to physics (acoustics) and mathematics, and individual technical disciplines of a specifically musical character disclose numerous correlations with geometry and algebra, though full use has not yet been made of them, and many are still unconjectured. The circle of the exact sciences of music comprises musical physiology and physics, the science of sound, and the special discipline of musical euphony, which so far has been very little studied from a theoretical point of view. The specifically technical disciplines of a musical type—the study of harmony and form, of the combination of melodies (counterpoint), and of instrumentation—would gain enormously by the abandonment of archaic technical methods in favour of those of modern scientific knowledge. And for all these purposes the musical tissue offers a far more grateful field than the other arts, including even architecture and painting.

But there still remains a vast realm, also insufficiently (though more completely) explored, comprising musical sociology; musical history and its individual phases; musical æsthetics of every type, from the positive to the philosophical; musical ethnography, the collection and examination of the folk-song of various races and nations—an enormous task; and the question of the essential nature of style and the study of styles. Lastly, the technical investigation of the problems of the electrification and radiofication of music, and the mechanising of musical performance, offers an immense field for scientific thought.

All this is typically scientific work—work for the skilled investigator, who must at the same time be a musician, or be interested in music as an object of study. Hitherto it has either been distributed amongst individual investigators, or certain of its component parts have been included in the curriculum of the university or the academy. Meanwhile it is extremely important that there should be a very close connection and mutual intercourse between the separate branches of scientific knowledge grouped round the musical idea and the musical phenomenon. If this intercourse became a reality, there can be no doubt that the work would proceed more energetically, its horizons would be broadened, and the exploration of this sphere would be more thoroughly developed. But at present in the majority of cultured States no such centres for the study of musical science exist.

In Germany this work, as a rule, is partly incorporated in the university curricula, special chairs being assigned to the subject, and partly in the conservatories and higher musical schools, in which it is often mixed up with instruction of a purely technical character. The German musical scholars appear to be either ordinary theorists of the usual type (theorists of counterpoint, fugue, and harmony), or musical historians; in the latter case their work generally revolves round the universities, and when the musical scholar turns out to be of the physicist or philosopher type he finally cuts himself adrift from the musical world and devotes himself to pure science.

The only exception seems to be modern Russia, where, in 1921-22, the State Institute of the Musical Sciences and the Music Section of the Academy of the Art Sciences were founded by the State for the sole and special purpose of cultivating the science of music. I may add that in the conception and organization of these undertakings I myself took a very active part, and prior to my leaving the country I was for a considerable time chairman of the Science Committee of the first and president of the second.

Russia's experiment in this direction should have an immense significance. As a matter of fact, the conditions at present prevailing there are such that even a minimum of organization is faced with obstacles of which the western world has no conception. In the extremely difficult economic period which followed the war it required very great energy and self-sacrifice on the part of the founders to establish these two institutions and set the work going. The successful accomplishment of the task must be regarded as a genuine achievement, due mainly to the disinterestedness and self-denial of the few Russian scientists who formed the scientific staff.

* The Musical Times, November, 1928.

The obstacles encountered were chiefly of an economic character. The State was favourably disposed towards scientific thought, in which it believed; but it had no money, and so was unable to obtain the scientific instruments and apparatus and the laboratory equipment without which the life of such institutions will inevitably be frozen out of them. Owing to these specific disabilities, which affected post-war enterprises of every kind in Russia, including musical undertakings, the work of the latter had perforce to be restricted to theoretical, historical, and philosophical subjects, since they required no laboratories nor costly apparatus, nor the equipment of expeditions for ethnographical research. In such circumstances the scientific life of these institutions could not be complete.

But the very idea of an 'Institute of the Musical Sciences,' as an organizing centre of musical thought, working in close touch with the scientific branches of the subject, is of serious importance. Musical scholars are of course few in number, possibly because of the difficulty of combining in one person the scientific thinker and the musician; the dearth is more directly due, however, to the non-existence of training schools for workers of this kind. Scholars are the offspring of the universities, where everything is adapted to create a scientific atmosphere and to interest the younger generation in the advance of science. On the other hand the conservatories are by their very nature not scientific institutions, but merely nurseries for the cultivation of a technical (non-scientific) knowledge of music; the students are not taught to think scientifically, but to feel artistically and to give effect to the musical art. Between the two there is an essential difference. A generation of really scientific musical workers cannot arise until a centre of musical science has been created, round which the young scientific forces can group themselves.

I think that the idea, which originated in Russia, where the economic crisis prevented it from developing, should nevertheless be realised in the centres of western Europe, because it contains the germ of something that is of genuine value. The idea of a musical and scientific institute, concentrating scientific thought of every shade, and interesting itself in the phenomenon of music, is vital and opportune—particularly in our era, when the living art of music is on the wane; when, after attaining its historical culmination and highest development it has passed through an autumnal season of brilliant and magnificent colouring, and is now entering again upon a stage of barbarism. The time has come for the summation of European musical culture, for the initiation of scientific work on that which did not permit of an objective, scientific attitude towards itself when it was very powerful and very much alive.

I picture to myself an organization approximately similar to the Russian institutions to which I have referred. First of all it must be an assemblage of representatives of the applied sciences; they are to be found in every country having a musical culture, but scattered as they are they lose their effectiveness.

The individual efforts of isolated scientists, many of whom are already working in this sphere, should be combined under the sole authority of the science institute. But this alone will not take us very far. They must be provided with laboratories, scientific apparatus, and technical resources. They must also have a platform from which to communicate the results of their researches to the world, and which at the same time would serve as an auditorium for the rising generation of scientists. Force of circumstances has converted the Russian institute into little more than an abstract idea, formally combining the scientific work of isolated individuals; and a similar fate can be avoided only by an adequate technical equipment, for which funds are of course needed. In Russia, as I have said, there is no money for this purpose, and furthermore there are no private persons who could support such an undertaking—in normal conditions a special science always exists at the expense of the Mæcenas. But in western Europe circumstances are different, and scientific thought has invariably found support and encouragement.

The institute would be founded on the following lines: On the one hand it would be an academy of science, to which could be affiliated, as it were, the scientific work of individual specialists; on the other it would inevitably be a teaching institution, a home of knowledge which it would impart to any of the outside public desirous of receiving it. It should also be an auditorium for scientific musical thought. Once again I would emphasise the necessity that audience and workers should be altogether different from those of the conservatories—they should consist of scientific workers, students, thinkers. In the conservatories, as a rule, the more deplorable the state of the theoretical subjects, the less their direct application to the purely technical musical skill of performer or composer. Counterpoint and fugue are still studied, after a fashion, by theorists and composers only, but the history of music comes off badly; and musical æsthetics, special researches in the sphere of form and theory, and musical acoustics fare even worse.

The public, the students who attend the conservatory with the idea of becoming composers and performers, are quite a different world, and have other requirements and demands. And, incidentally, another class with whom our scheme is concerned—the class of thinking musicians—is gradually increasing. As recently as the middle of last century people interested in the problems of musical acoustics, or of the scientific basis of the laws of musical euphony, were rare exceptions; now they may be reckoned in thousands. But they are scattered, and we must bring them together, train them, and provide them with a unifying centre of thought and guidance.

Thus the institute has two functions—scientific investigation, and academic teaching to impart to others the results of that investigation. Then comes specialisation, the division into the separate branches of musical science. This involves the establishment of various 'faculties,' since musical science includes many spheres of study, the most important being:

1. The history of music, with subdivisions: general history, the history of national arts, of musical theory, of musical forms and embodiment, and monographic disciplines.
2. The philosophy of music and musical æsthetics.
3. Musical ethnography, the collection, recording, and investigation of folk-music.
4. The theoretical faculty, comprising the study of harmony, form, counterpoint, &c.
5. Musical acoustics.
6. Musical physiology and psychology. The investigation of the reception of music.
7. Musical pedagogics.
8. Musical technics, its perfecting (the radiofication, electrification, and mechanisation of performance, the problem of instrumentology).

Such are the main branches of the science. I am convinced that once a suitable centre has been found, there will be no lack of persons to interest themselves in such a scheme, many of whom are already working in this field. As is usual with learned bodies, the results of the investigations would be issued in the form of communiqués, part of which would be published periodically as the 'Proceedings of the Institute.'

The sections of the institute requiring them should be provided with fully-equipped laboratories. Nowadays many branches of knowledge, including some which previously dispensed with such aids, have adopted laboratory and experimental methods. The experimental process has been applied by psychology, æsthetics (to a certain extent), and the study of musical reception; whilst special forms of laboratory work are employed in investigating the most interesting and important question of the actual structure of musical phenomena and creations. Style, form, and harmony, are studied with the aid of laboratory equipment.

But the departments of musical acoustics, physiology, and technics are the chief users of the laboratory. The work in these cases is essentially connected with strictly physical experiments, dealing as it does with the scientific study of the problems of the nature of sound and the connection of musical laws with acoustic phenomena, and the technical investigation of purely musical questions, such as those of temperament and new scales.

Are the results of such scientific work sufficiently necessary and important to justify the expense involved in its organization?

To this it may be replied that as a rule the practical results of scientific work have to wait a long time for their practical application, and the justification of the material outlay. Nevertheless, it is evident to any person of culture that the disinterested service of science is always repaid a hundredfold. Who could have imagined that a mere toy (the stroboscope) would afterwards provide the foundation for the most grandiose department of industry and art—the cinematograph? In every branch of science there are quiet, tranquil sections, academic in the fullest sense of the term, having little connection with practical human life, and they certainly exist in the sphere of musical science. Practical results of course are hardly to be expected from labours in the departments of musical philosophy or history, or even from the study of counterpoint and form. These deal with pure knowledge, pure interest in the subject. On the other hand, musical technics, the mechanisation of sound, the construction of new instruments, and so forth, have every chance of opening up vast perspectives of material value and importance. Music is already following the path of mechanisation, and it is the task of scientific thought to give it systematic help in this direction, and by the authority of musicians and scholars to save it from falling into the snare of bad taste and unbridled commercialism. In this respect it will be the duty of the institute to maintain the purity of art in the difficult conditions at present existing. Immense practical results may also be the outcome of the labours involved in establishing the teaching of music on a scientific basis; everyone is aware to what extent this department, which serves so many and such substantial interests, is often in the hands of charlatans. It is of the utmost importance that it should be placed on a scientific footing.

Science is extending and becoming specialised. There are oceanographic and petrographic institutes; there are even institutes for the investigation of individual animals (we recall Rothschild's 'flea institute'); then why should we not found a serious and greatly needed one for the study, not of fleas, but of the sublime sphere of music?

(Translated by S. W. Pring.)

A NEW VIOLIN SONATA BY BACH

It is a commonplace that one of the most astonishing of the many astonishing things about Bach is the fact that even well-informed musicians have not yet completed a survey of his output in bulk. Some specialists have at least a nodding acquaintance with all the works for their particular medium; a pianist knows the clavier works, the organist the organ works, and so on. But there are very few persons who have seen and examined all, or even most, of the works of Bach. Hence it is that many of us have a curious experience that we have with no other composer; hardly a month goes by without bringing us at least a sight of some Bach work that is literally new to us—sometimes even by name. And the experience may be renewed indefinitely, for as we know, a considerable number of manuscript works were carelessly treated and in some cases lost by Bach's sons. Probably not all these were used as grocery wrappings (as was almost the fate of the organ Fantasia and Fugue in C minor), and some are probably still lying in odd corners waiting to be turned out.

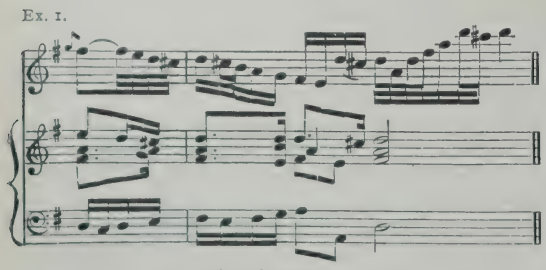
This conclusion is forced on one by the recent discovery and publication of a Bach Sonata for violin and cembalo. The work was unearthed last year in the Manfred Gorke Library at Eisenach.

The fact of the manuscript being in Bach's handwriting would, of course, be no proof of authorship, for we know that he was all his life given to making copies of works that took his fancy or that were likely to be useful for teaching or other purposes. The only reliable evidence is that of style, and the Sonata contains a sufficiency of characteristic touches to satisfy us as to its authenticity.

The work is in four movements, and is far less difficult than Bach's other sonatas for the same medium. Presumably it was an early work (the fact of its being found at Eisenach may or may not be evidence on this point), or it may have been written for educational purposes.

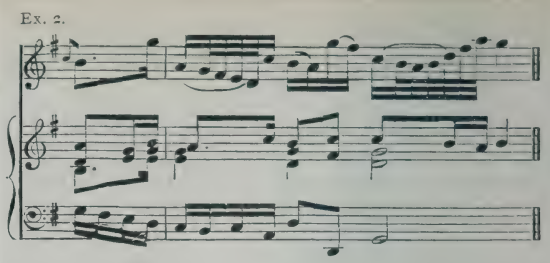
Mention was made of characteristic touches. Let us look at some of them. The final cadence of the opening Adagio is one. The first half ends thus:

Ex. 1.



The second half might have closed with a tonic version of this. But Bach—the least mechanical of composers in such matters—writes this:

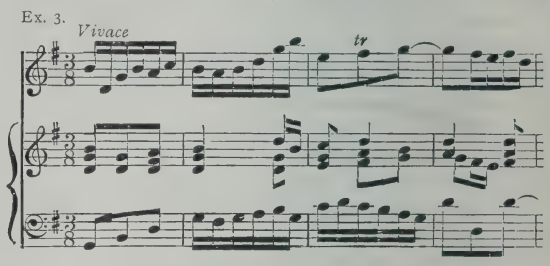
Ex. 2.



Note a convincing detail in Ex. 2. The flourish on the chord of D in Ex. 1 is conventional, whereas that on the tonic chord in Ex. 2 has the true Bach touch. Many parallels will occur to the Bach student. That fourth-dropping leading-note at the end of the violin's second group is also a characteristic touch.

The Vivace that follows is a spirited affair of two pages, opening with a couple of bars that we meet with frequently in Bach:

Ex. 3.



The keyboard parts move on accustomed lines with an almost continuous semiquaver bass, but considerable enterprise develops later in the violin part, and a point worth notice is the completeness of its harmonic implications. Much of it might well pass for an unaccompanied violin piece.

The Largo is not of the family of nobly emotional slow movements—it would not be in keeping with the rest of the Sonata if it were—but its graceful melodic line has many typical Bachian curves. Moreover, the return of the opening theme is so free that the result is almost new material. Thus, although the cembalo part remains almost note for note the same, this in the violin part:

Ex. 4.

becomes

Ex. 5.

And Bach follows on with new material for the violin, while repeating the original cembalo part, until a few bars later he ends on a half-close.

The final Presto begins fugally, the subject being given to the bass, answered by the violin:

Ex. 6. Presto

All the material of this movement is contained in the quotation, the violin part consisting entirely of the subject and its quaver counter-theme, plus a liberal use of the wide leaping bass motive. The entries of the subject are not preceded by rests, and the order is always the same—bass, violin.

This Presto is perhaps the best movement of the four. It has a fine swing, and there is a good deal of harmonic interest. For example, half-way through occurs a very unconventional sequence which modulates through G, C, D, A minor, E minor, B minor, E minor, and D major back to the tonic.

It will be seen that the Sonata is not a great work; but no authentic composition by Bach can be negligible. This one, however, has a value and interest apart from its origin. Its freshness and spontaneity (which at times recall Mozart) are adequate recommendation, and the moderate demands it makes on both players will be sufficient to ensure for it a wide welcome.

ARTHUR HONEGGER

By Paul Landormy

A happy and expansive countenance, with finely-cut features, laughing though keen and piercing eyes, an athlete in build, broad-chested and vigorous; a man easy of approach and delightfully simple-minded, though his outward appearance reveals nothing of the artist within. One should see him conducting an orchestra, with wide-apart legs firmly planted on the ground, sometimes rising on his toes like a boxer ready to pounce upon his opponent! In this significant gesture appears the entire secret of his art, so vivid and potent in its expression.

Very modern in his outlook, he once said, 'I love motor-cars as other men love women or horses.'

At home, his office walls are entirely covered with pictures of cars of every kind, which have gradually replaced the portraits of the great musicians. He knows cars intimately, down to the slightest technical detail.

. . . . . .

Honegger was born of Swiss parents, at Le Hâvre, on March 10, 1892. He began to study harmony with M. Ch. Martin, and then spent two years at the Conservatoire of Zurich. It may be that here he came under Germanic influences likely to account for the somewhat solid polyphony of which he is so fond. In 1912 he entered the class of Gédalge, at the Conservatoire of Paris, where he also attended the lectures of Widor and of Vincent d'Indy.

Already Honegger's compositions are extensive: several collections of songs, settings of poems by Guillaume Apollinaire, Jean Cocteau, and Paul Fort; the 'Chant de Nigamon' and the Prelude of 'Aglavaine et Sélysette' for orchestra; ten Dances, two Interludes, and a Coda for the 'Dit des Jeux du Monde'; a String Quartet; two Sonatas for pianoforte and violin, a Sonata for pianoforte and alto; a Sonatina for two violins; a Rhapsody for two flutes, clarinet, and pianoforte, and various pieces for pianoforte and organ.

He is best known by his works for the orchestra (e.g., 'Pacific 231'), and by his oratorios: 'Le Roi David,' 'Horace Vainqueur,' 'Judith,' and 'Antigone.'

In the group of the 'Six,' Honegger is the symphonist par excellence. 'I attach great importance,' he wrote to me recently, 'to musical architecture, which I hope will never be sacrificed in favour of literary or pictorial considerations.' He added: 'I have a tendency, perhaps excessive, towards polyphonic complexity. My great model is J. S. Bach. . . . I make no attempt, as do certain anti-impressionist musicians, to return to harmonic simplicity. On the contrary, I consider that we ought to make use of the harmonic material created by the school that has preceded us, though in a different way, as a basis for lines and rhythms. Bach uses the elements of tonal harmony as I should like to use the harmonic, modern, and polytonal equivalents.'

Honegger's works are indeed built upon broad and solid foundations, with a strong background of counterpoint. By no means do they constitute a return to the simplicity extolled by Jean Cocteau, the theorist of the 'Six.'

Nor does Honegger's music, like that of certain of his companions (and after the formula dear to Cocteau), receive its inspiration from the Café-Concert or the Cinema. As Honegger frankly declares, 'I have no love for fairs and music-halls; on the contrary, I love the serious and austere elements of chamber and symphonic music.'

Honegger makes no attempt to seduce us by a capricious wit, by the grace and pungency of more or less droll sallies, as do so many others of the modern school. He is serious and anxious, seemingly preoccupied with poignant scruples,* occasionally inclined towards mystic meditation (as in his curious 'Pâques à New York,' for voices and string quartet); he often expresses himself in harsh, rough, and vigorous language.

. . . . . .

Honegger possesses original ideas on his art. For instance, he aims at renovating the entire plan of the sonata.

As everyone knows, the first movement of a classic sonata consists of three parts: exposition, development, and recapitulation. It is also well known that the two themes A and B of the exposition reappear in the same order during the re-exposition, A always preceding B.

Now, declares Honegger, 'your re-exposition of the order A followed by B is illogical, showing, as it does, a defect in symmetry. In architecture you have a façade, the two left pillars of which, for instance, are arranged so that A is followed by B. Your object is solidly and harmoniously to rest the architrave and the pediment upon these pillars and upon those that form a pendant to them on the right. Symmetry, as regards those on the right, will inevitably give you B followed by A, not vice versâ, as the first time. Very well; in the sonata the pillars correspond to the themes; the pediment is the central development. Symmetrically, then, you must have B followed by A in the recapitulation, since you had A followed by B in the exposition.' And indeed Honegger has made application of this new method in his sonatas.

At first glance, it seems a rational process. But may there not be some hidden reason which would justify the practice followed in the classics? May not the argument be something like this:

The conditions of perception in time are not the same as those of perception in space. This it is that makes comparisons between architecture and music always unstable in some respect. Whereas, theoretically, we isolate the subjects A and B as distinct entities, the listener, who knows nothing of theory, does not do this. To him, the whole of the exposition is no more than a continuous sequence of impressions bound together in an inevitable and necessary order, one that is irreversible—irreversible as time itself. The exposition forms one aggregation and cannot be repeated except as identical with itself.

On the other hand, the second theme clearly has the meaning of a response to the first, a characteristic that finds itself emphasised by modulation to the dominant. Thus, when the exposition is repeated, it would seem indispensable to begin with the first—the principal—theme, and in certain respects the theme that generates (though it be only along distant paths) the second theme. To begin with the response would be meaningless.

Here, then, is a point regarding which we are not of the same mind as Honegger.

. . . . . .

Our composer has also interesting opinions regarding tonality and polytonality. He makes use of polytonality, though never for its own sake. In harmony, the central idea seems to him to be that of the dominant: 'an isolated note is a dominant.' Understand that every sound has a natural tendency to fall back upon its lower fifth or to rise to its upper fourth. Of itself, no sound possesses a static character. There is dynamic force included in all sound. Or, if you prefer, every sound is accompanied by its harmonics—the seventh, ninth, eleventh, thirteenth—which indeed confer on it the function of the dominant. There is no such thing as a 'perfect chord' regarded as a stop, an absolute pause. Above the three notes C, E, G, I cannot help hearing the B flat. And, if I wish to give the impression of a definitely established tonality, I am compelled to efface this impression of the seventh (B flat) by the addition of other notes which counteract its effect.

If, therefore, I rightly understand the mental condition of Honegger when he is composing, he troubles himself neither about tonality, atonality, nor polytonality. To him music is the interplay of attractions between dominants and their resolutions—resolutions that are always provisional, since every new sound reached immediately assumes the character of a new dominant which tends to be resolved in the direction determined by its function.

Here we are confronted with an important point of view which has been characteristic of a great portion of musical art ever since the time of Richard Wagner.

. . . . . .

Original ideas abound in Honegger's mind. For instance, he wonders why, in a sonata for pianoforte and violin, the same themes are successively entrusted to the pianoforte and to the violin, when it is quite certain that each of these themes does not equally well suit the sonorousness of both instruments.

* I speak of the musician, more especially of his music. Perhaps the man is somewhat different. Like Handel and Gluck, his soul is filled with a robust joy.

* The order of the elements of space, on the other hand, may be traversed in any direction: it is reversible.

Would it not be better that a theme, if it has been in the first place intended for the violin and must sound ill on the pianoforte, should never reappear save in the violin part? The pianoforte should have its own themes; the same with the violin. And the composer applies this personal view in his Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte.

Much might be said on this point. And here I do not think that Honegger is altogether and absolutely right in every case. I do not think they are so frequent—the themes which can be heard only by the medium of a single instrument, and which, expressed on other instruments, lose all meaning. The contrary appears to me true, that most musical phrases assume new meanings when they pass from one instrument to the other.

Undoubtedly they by no means retain the same character in these successive transfers. But does that matter? The main thing is that in each timbre they should prove interesting. The composer's art consists in taking advantage of these transmutations, viz., in introducing and working them up. There is a way of playing a violin motive on the pianoforte. It is sometimes necessary to modify the exposition as regards the detail. All the better! This will be one way by which the composer may give variety to his work.

Nowadays, indeed, we cultivate to excess the scrupulous concern for individuality of timbres and of their so-called irreducible properties. 'I hear this motive only on the flute,' asserts one composer, 'I cannot hear it in any other way!' Such expressions contain a great deal of exaggeration—perhaps a certain 'pose.' What a delicate ear! How could one be content with a single sauce, a single relish! The ancients were very different; see how skilfully a Bach—or, nearer to our own times, a Liszt—succeeded in transferring from violin or voice to pianoforte a theme most calculated to fit in with the original intention!

Without reverting to the 'abstract' music of the 15th and 16th centuries, which lent itself to every kind of performance and was played on every kind of instrument without distinction, let us not go to the opposite extreme and confine ourselves to an impoverishing exclusiveness. Nor let us shut the door upon these happy exchanges in the various regions of timbre. In using them, we shall make many another discovery.

. . . . . .

Of all Honegger's works, the one that has most contributed to his reputation is 'Le Roi David.' '"Le Roi David" is an historic event in our musical France,' says André George, a far-seeing friend of the composer's. Nor is he wrong. This work marks a return to the tradition of good taste and the golden mean abandoned by our young school, which hitherto had been occasionally lost in its own excesses; and it also marks this return with success, force, brilliance, and a notable effect on the public.

On the other hand, however, if we examine this success closely we find that it is not based upon any profound meditation. The work, improvised, does not express the best and the essential elements in the artist. Honegger put into it more technical skill than thought or heart. André George is right in concluding: '"Le Roi David" is not so lofty as the public imagines, and far less low than they were beginning to declare it to be two or three years after the first performance. As Pascal says, "S'il s'abaisse, je le vante." . . .'

Then why does the work deserve to be extolled? Because of one undeniable quality which atones for all its defects, for its occasional lack of personality, its looseness and incongruity of style, &c.—the quality of greatness.

This is no ordinary quality, indeed! But Honegger possesses it, and that supremely. He conceives greatly and he acts greatly. About the smallest movement in 'Le Roi David,' consisting sometimes of only a few lines, there are a breadth and expansiveness that gratify and that incline one to believe in great things to come. Honegger is a true Master.

. . . . . .

As a rule, Honegger concentrates his efforts upon the most grandiose poetical subjects—as witness 'Judith,' his real masterpiece.

Like Handel, he possesses the epic strain, the Biblical sense. This does not prevent him, in his minor works, so sweet and tender and engaging, from attaining distinguished success. His grace and charm are wholly exquisite.

He has the gift of pleasing the masses, the gift of clear and ringing composition, with broad and well-defined outlines—music composed for immense expanses, music which appears to be easy, and yet which tells.

He is the most popular of all our young symphonists.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

THE PHILADELPHIA AMATEUR ORCHESTRA CLUB

So much beneficent musical work fails owing to a shortage of various factors, from cash to commonsense, that it is both interesting and useful to hear of one that seems to lack nothing. We refer to the Amateur Orchestra Club of Philadelphia, which owes its existence to Mr. Edwin E. Fleisher.

We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Fleisher recently, and induced him to talk of the Club.

'Twenty years ago,' he said, 'I started to form a little orchestra among the slum boys in Philadelphia. The idea proved to be so attractive that in a few months we found it necessary to organize ourselves, so we started the Club. The little body of strings with which we began has now expanded into three orchestras. We have a Junior String Orchestra of seventy-five players, a Senior String Orchestra of the same number, and a full Symphony Orchestra of a hundred and ten. The Juniors are aged from six to fifteen, and their orchestra is a preliminary training ground for the Senior band, which in its turn feeds the full Symphony Orchestra with picked players. From the first, of course, we were well supplied with stringed instruments, as most players possessed their own; but wind instruments have usually been purchased.'

We asked if the membership was confined to Americans.

'Oh, no!' replied Mr. Fleisher, 'We have pretty well every nation represented. There are Russians, many negroes, one real American Indian, inhabitants of the Malay Peninsula and the Philippines, and we once had a Japanese girl who came in native dress until we found her costume attracted rather too much attention.'

'How often does the Symphony Orchestra rehearse?' we asked.

'At present we hold two rehearsals a week, each lasting two hours. This is an increase on our former rehearsal time, and it is significant that the change was decided on by a hundred per cent. vote of the members.'

'You have no difficulty, then, in maintaining interest in rehearsals?'

'No; one thing we do with a view to keeping interest alive is to introduce a new piece at every rehearsal. This not only stimulates interest; it also develops sight-reading.'

'Your library must be pretty comprehensive to admit of two new works being provided each week.'

'It is,' said Mr. Fleisher; 'in fact we believe it to be the largest collection of orchestral music in the world. It contains over nine hundred pieces for string orchestra alone; there are sixteen hundred works for full orchestra; and about a thousand concertos. Note, too, that every one of these works is provided in full score and complete parts. The library will become increasingly valuable as time goes on, if only for the fact that it contains many numbers that are now unobtainable, having been withdrawn from circulation. All this music is placed in the Philadelphia Free Library during the summer months, and the whole of it has been deeded to pass to the Philadelphia Free Library at my decease. Every piece is kept in a separate dust-proof cover, plainly lettered and numbered on the back. Members of the Club may consult any work, and may use it for practice in the music rooms of the Free Library during the summer. In the winter, of course, it may be studied in the Club's own library.'

We reproduce a photograph of the room at the Philadelphia Library in which this magnificent collection of music is housed. It is of interest to know that the beautifully clear lettering and numbering has been done throughout by Mr. Fleisher himself.

We inquired as to the type of music studied.

'We include a certain proportion of light music, of course, but no rubbish,' said Mr. Fleisher. 'A good idea of the taste and likings of the players was obtained by a plebiscite at the end of last season, when we took a vote as to the principal orchestral works to be put in rehearsal. Brahms's second Symphony came out at the top of the list, followed by Tchaikovsky's fourth, the Franck Symphony, Beethoven's No. 5, and the Prelude to 'The Mastersingers.' So you see there is nothing much the matter with the taste of our young folk.'

'Are the Club orchestras heard in public?'

'One public performance is given annually, and is open to friends and parents of members. We charge no admission fee. All three Orchestras are present, and each in turn plays items from its repertory.'

'Who teaches all these young players?'

'We engage the best professional help available. Obviously the coach must be a trainer even more than a conductor. A man who was a conductor and nothing else, however distinguished he might be, would not suit our purposes. He would probably be too temperamental, for one thing. The need is for practical methods in imparting knowledge, plus plenty of patience. I may add that a good many of our members gravitate to the rank of the musical profession.'

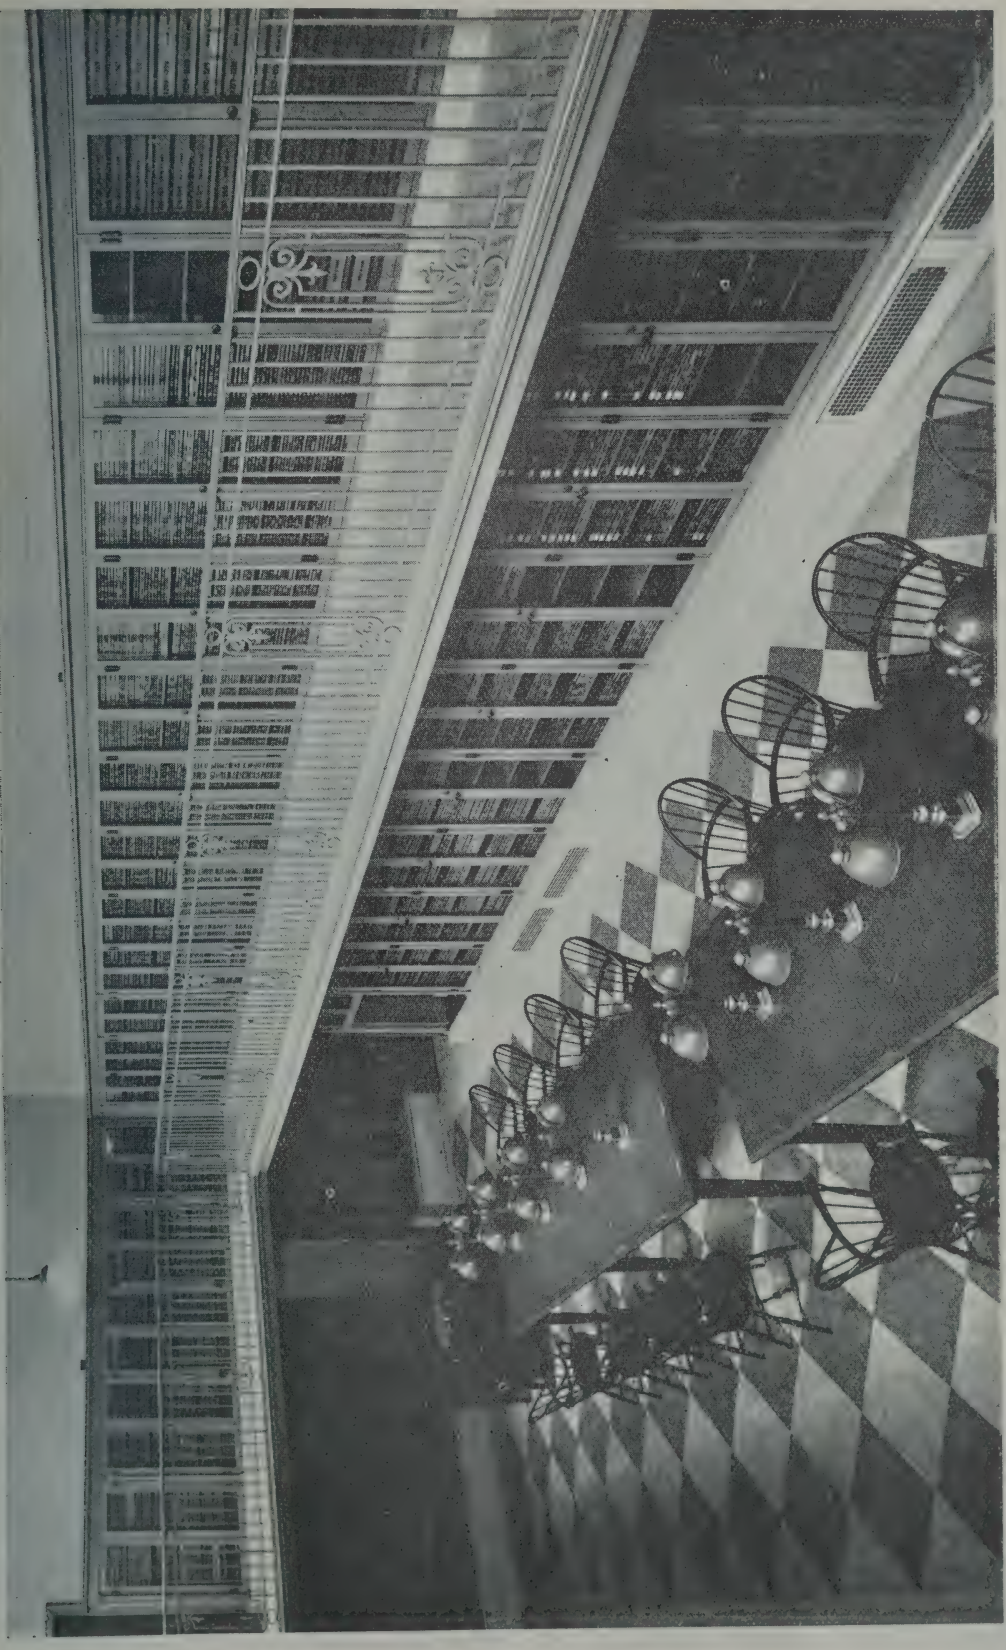
'Is the work of the Club orchestral only?'

'No,' replied Mr. Fleisher, 'we have chamber music classes, theory classes, and two grades of pianoforte classes, all open to members, and all very much appreciated.'

When we met Mr. Fleisher he was on a European tour, the main object of which was the collection of fresh music for the Club library. During his stay in London he made substantial additions to the English side of the repertory, including the more important works of Elgar's.

Here is a musical philanthropist of the first order. He sets people playing, rather than listening, and playing nothing but good music. Moreover, his players are in the main drawn from folk in humble circumstances, and above all, they are caught young. It is difficult to overestimate the influence exerted by that orchestra of youngsters of six to fifteen years of age, when we think of the number of children that must pass through it in the course of a few years.

England has a good many admirable organizations for developing music among young people. One that has much in common with Mr. Fleisher's Club is the Junior Philharmonic Orchestra and Choir, trained by Mr. Ernest Read and Mr. Kennedy Scott; but there is nothing on so comprehensive a scale as this Philadelphian enterprise. Nor can there be, of course, until the advent of a man who is wealthy, musical, and philanthropic. Our trouble is that the second of these qualifications is so rarely found combined with the other two.



Philadelphia Amateur Orchestra Club: Music Collection in the Philadelphia Free Library

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

CODDLING THE LAZY LISTENER

Last month's discussion of 'Ops. versus Titles' has provoked sufficient correspondence to justify a supplement. First, however, let me bring forward evidence of the length to which the 'title' enthusiasts will go if we give them their head. In the August number of the Gramophone Mr. J. D. Blyth, of Carlisle, submits a list of titles which he and his friends already use for certain works. There is, of course, no objection to a few kindred spirits using nicknames thus, but we must draw the line when an attempt is made to extend that use to the public.

Mr. Blyth says: 'Personally, I have found that after listening to a piece of music several times a name will often occur to me.' That is an experience common to many of us, but we are not justified in therefore supposing that these titles will be of interest or value to the rest of the world, above all when they are so poor as those which Mr. Blyth suggests for our adoption. He begins his letter by regretting that Mr. Compton Mackenzie's suggestions have been pitched into by critics, who act thus through 'mere laziness.' People can't be bothered by a new idea, he says; but 'there are many who are willing to adopt names for numbers if someone else will take the initiative.'

It does not seem to have occurred to Mr. Blyth that the really lazy people are those who are not equal to the strain of memorising a few numbers or keys. I say 'or' because usually one of the two will be sufficient; and 'few,' because we musn't be misled by the large aggregate total of a composer's work. Only a smallish proportion of, e.g., Beethoven's formidable sum is in sufficiently regular use to be involved in this discussion. This proportion, it is true, makes a longish list; yet in how many instances does any intelligent average musician find trouble in identifying a given work? Thus, only two of the Symphonies are in the same key—Nos. 6 and 8; and, as No. 6 was labelled 'Pastoral' by Beethoven himself, everybody knows that the 'Symphony in F' means No. 8. In the string quartets there is, of course, more duplication of keys, but in the cases of duplication one of the two works involved is more widely known than its fellow. For example, when we speak of the Quartet in B flat, we should be generally understood to mean the greater of the two works. And if we can't recollect the opus numbers we should naturally use such terms as 'the earlier' or 'the greater.' Even when we come to the pianoforte sonatas there is really very little difficulty. Of the two in F minor for example, one is already known as the 'Appassionata'; and the 'Pastoral' label (not Beethoven's, but well established and certainly a good fit) leaves us in no doubt as to the D major pair. The 'Waldstein' tab does the same service for the C major Sonatas. And so on.

At this point the label-mongers rush in gleefully. 'Why,' they chorus, 'you are admitting the necessity of the title!' Not a bit of it. If these few sonatas had not been nicknamed, numbers would have been easy; we should have made a point of overcoming the very slight difficulty of memorising their numbers. Moreover, there is all the difference in the world between titles that have become traditional (some of them at least tacitly approved by Beethoven himself) and a brand new set devised to-day as part of a wholesale scheme.

There is much in the point made by Mr. ——— in the correspondence columns in this issue of the Musical Times. As he says, many opus numbers are highly significant. For a musician, the mere mention of Opus 111 is sufficient to call to mind the Beethoven of the last period. No fancy title could do justice to the conflict of the first movement and the Olympian calm of the Arietta; the bare opus number is suggestive, even eloquent. Similarly, it is useful and interesting to think of the first three sonatas as Opus 2. The figure almost invariably recalls the dedication to Haydn, which in its turn reminds us of the tiff between the two composers, and the hot-headed younger one's refusal to acknowledge on the title-page the fact of his having been a pupil of the elder. In fact, this controversy, by setting us thinking about opus numbers reminds us how full of suggestiveness these apparently dry figures have been all along.

But let me get back to Mr. Blyth. I promised to bring forward evidence as to the length to which he and his like are prepared to go. Here it is. Mr. Blyth says:

> 'I can see nothing fantastic in a tradition [of titles] being started in the 20th century. Thus in the case of Schubert's Trio in B flat, music-lovers of 1990 (if there are any) may relate the story of Casals, Thibaud, and Cortot's inspired playing which led to the work being named, just as music-lovers of to-day may be heard referring to Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor as "The Philadelphians Bach Toccata and Fugue."'

But who calls the Bach work 'The Philadelphians'? Not I, for one. Even if I admired the recorded performance of that work by the Philadelphia Orchestra as much as most of my fellow critics, I should never dream of tacking their name on to it. Here's one good reason: Suppose the Minneapolis Orchestra came along with an admittedly better performance than that of the Philadelphians; shouldn't we be bound in fairness to change the label? Instructions would be received from Jethou, or Switzerland, from the Arch-Labellers, or perhaps from Carlisle, to the effect that the Bach work hitherto known as ..... &c. Besides, as I don't care overmuch for the Philadelphians' performance, may I call it after somebody's which I do like? However, what does Mr. Blyth suggest as the title of the Schubert Trio in B flat played by Casals, Thibaud, and Cortot? Prepare for a shock! He calls it 'The Big Three' Trio. Could cheapness and vulgarity go further? Even so do the more sensational of our newspapers speak of the 'Big Three' (or is it Four or Five?) of Scotland Yard when a particularly juicy crime calls for investigation.

Here are a few of Mr. Blyth's suggestions; Schubert: Sonatina in D major (Op. 137, No. 1), 'The Zephyr Sonatina.' Quintet in C (Op. 163), 'Death and the Man.' Symphony in C major, 'The Royal Symphony.' Mozart's Concerto for bassoon and orchestra, 'The Pompous Mayor Concerto.' Beethoven's Symphony No. 4, 'The Three Graces Symphony.' Brahms's Symphony No. 1, in C minor (Op. 68), 'The Horn Symphony,' and Violin Concerto in D (Op. 77), 'The Joachim Concerto.'

Other titles suggested by Mr. Blyth are even more absurd, and quite superfluous. For example, nobody is ever confused between the G minor Symphonies of Mozart. When we speak of the G minor, we mean the G minor—which is just as easy to say and write as the Blythian title 'The Minuet Symphony.' Moreover, the key reminds us of its G minorishness, that key being one of the most melancholy of the whole set; whereas 'The Minuet Symphony' merely focuses attention on one of its lesser movements.

'Fate Symphony,' for Beethoven's No. 5, is obvious but unnecessary, and it perpetuates a fiction. It is pretty certain that the so-called 'Fate' theme was derived from nothing more portentous than the call of the yellow-hammer. Clearly its title should therefore be 'The Yellow-hammer Symphony'—or why not the 'Copper Nob'? Besides, we may be sure that many of the tribe of Blyths have already named Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony 'The Fate,' by reason of the menacing motive that dominates it.

All Grieg's sonatas are full of suggestions of folk-song. To label the C minor 'The Folk-Song Sonata,' as Mr. Blyth does, is to involve confusion between the three violin sonatas and the one for pianoforte.

Again, what is there in the homely and purely personal humour of Beethoven's eighth Symphony to suggest the title 'Carnival'?

And so on. In a word the enthusiastic Mr. Blyth has dealt a death blow to the scheme he set out to support. 'Ops. v. titles?' I asked last month. This first crop of titles answers plainly 'Ops.'

In fairness to Mr. Compton Mackenzie, I admit at this point that one of his contentions—if not his main one—was that the use of titles would tend to popularise classical works by making a greater appeal to the imagination than a mere opus number. I discussed this point pretty fully last month, and refer to it here only in order to show that I am not unmindful of it.

Among the letters received as a result of last month's article is one addressed to me personally and not for publication, the writer having no desire to become embroiled. I propose to draw on his letter, however, because it is a useful reminder that the question is merely one detail of a general problem that will soon have to be faced fairly and squarely. My correspondent, by the way, is an unusually level-headed musician, and an educationist of ripe and wide experience. He begins by saying that the proposal to substitute fancy names for numbers and keys is 'only one more proof of the way things would go if some of the popularisers had their way. The real need is for a wider acceptance of musicianly principles.' In this, as in other matters, the danger is in the apathy of the profession; he gives examples of the futility of some recent debates and conferences he has attended, and goes on:

> 'At a time when one branch or another of the profession is living in the most exciting and changing times it has ever experienced, the societies go on calmly holding their conferences and droning away as if the world were in the comfortable days of the century.' (And he gives further instances.)

He holds the opinion (and I agree warmly) that we must promptly begin to cope with the lazy amateur and amateurish notions:

> 'I blame the B.B.C. for placidly allowing the "every man his own critic" line of talk (with the implication that it's all as easy as shelling peas). As to this labelling of works, all one's instincts are against it. Knowledge and training cry out too, but the deepest feeling is almost an instinctive one. I feel in my bones that it is bad art and bad teaching, and certain to guide people's feet still further on the sloppy path. More and more I long for a stiffening of fibre in musicians; at least one might expect them to survey the world as they find it instead of talking and acting as if they were in the happy 'nineties. Nowhere have I seen any real attempt to face up to the world as it is. Even before the coming of the B.B.C. there were big shiftings of ground. The B.B.C. has completed the change, and now the musician's life and thought can never be as they were before the war. His life is not necessarily worse, but he must re-shape himself towards the world—a less tolerant and dutiful world, and a more cruel and get-rich-quick world. Yet there are plenty of folk to be got at and taught what music is and demands. Why don't all speakers and writers and the B.B.C. chiefs realise this? Mainly because they are not all round musicians, and they haven't been through the mill. I throw out the suggestion that the professional pages of the Musical Times may be the chief gathering ground for sense and philosophy about the musician's attitude to the world he has to live in. I do feel convinced that that attitude needs defining and understanding, and that we haven't really begun to scratch the ground yet. Meanwhile, any stand you can make against sloppy sentiment, and the weakening doctrines of "you needn't work hard to understand music," will have every ounce of strength "some of us can bring to support it."'

Well, here is matter for debate. I am with my correspondent up to the hilt, but I reserve my fire until such readers as are interested have had a round or two. I will then attempt to sum up, and draw conclusions. Meanwhile I lay down these general and arguable propositions:

(1.) The slogan (used recently in an American journal) 'Music for everyone and everyone for music' is falsely based, although (or perhaps because) it sounds well. The receptivity of music (for the purposes of this debate 'music' means that which is generally accepted as good music), like that of any other branch of art, calls for training. This training is of course less exacting and less definite than that required for the practice of music, but it is no less necessary. The half-baked listener is only a degree more tolerable than the half-baked performer because we don't hear him listening; when he talks airily and confidently, as he too often does, he is the bigger of the two nuisances.

(2.) We have no more right to provide the lazy listener with short cuts that are clearly opposed to the spirit of music (a spirit that is suggestive, comprehensive, elusive, and rare, rather than descriptive, limited, definite, and cheap) than we have to provide the lazy performer with emasculated and childishly-simplified versions. If listener and performer can't or won't acquire the necessary technique they must confine themselves to activities within their power. If they cannot rise to conquer, why should music stoop to be conquered?

(3.) It is no disgrace to be unmusical, despite the ridiculous tag about 'the man that hath no music, &c.' It is a mere misfortune, and not a fatal one. Many who have no ear for music have a taste for fine literature—a taste lacking entirely among a host of musicians. What would literary men say if it were proposed to popularise great literature—especially music's analogy, poetry—by methods similar to those suggested in the case of music?

(4.) A natural liking for the very best in music exists in the most unlikely quarters. In the hearing as in the composition of fine music, the spirit bloweth where it listeth. To-day, thanks to the gramophone, wireless, and other accessible and inexpensive methods of acquiring knowledge and improving taste (including musical journals, which are now far more plentiful and better than ever they were), there is no listener placed beyond the reach of ample means of self-improvement. 'The spirit bloweth,' but it stops at that; it doesn't finish the job. That is left to the individual. If he is too lazy, or too brainless, we must leave him—regretfully but mercilessly—in the darkness of ignorance. What is cheaply got may be cheaply held: music must be neither. We may dissent from the old view that music is an aristocratic art; but we must beware lest our methods of democratising it merely cheapen and debase. But is the word 'aristocratic' wrong after all? There are several kinds of aristocracies—of birth, wealth, and genius. Let us add those of hard work and self help. Music itself will gain in vigour from the growth of these aristocracies, just as certainly as it will lose by being peptonised, watered down, and sugar-coated to accommodate the lazy and rabbit-brained.

P.S.—Just as I end, I catch sight of an article in The Musician (New York), entitled 'Music, A Loyal Handmaid of the Dance.'

I dare not trust myself to comment on this.

PP.S.—But I revive on seeing in The Times of August 15 the following quotation from a lecture by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw:

> 'The crying need is to intellectualise music and give up pseudo-poetic sentimental talk about it. Some people apparently think that it is not possible to have a piece of music unless it represents mermaids, fairies in the moonlight, or some such rubbish. Children get a collection of little stock phrases of this sort, so that if one does not fit they try the next one. How can anyone imagine there is teaching value in any such rot? A child taught in this way never gets to know that there is such a thing as pure music, but imagines every piece must have a silly story attached to it. We must allow the music to speak for itself.'

I'm glad to find so authoritative a voice as Mr. Shaw's raised in defence of music. I hope he'll fare better than I did about six years ago, when I protested against the then growing practice at children's concerts of setting the youngsters to sing themes from the classics to jingles and nursery rhymes. My reward was to be assailed with cries of 'wet blanket,' 'spoil-sport,' and the like.

STAGES IN THE HISTORY OF OPERA: II.—EARLY ENGLISH OPERA

By J. A. Westrup

We have seen how Italian opera came into being, developed, and became established as a direct product of the Renaissance. In England there is a very different tale to tell. It is only by the inclusion of a large number of works which do not deserve the title 'opera' that we are able to draw up any consecutive account of the early history of opera in this country. There are, in fact, but two operas which have survived and which are rightly so-called—Blow's 'Venus and Adonis' and Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas.' Those who are inclined to pay serious attention to monuments of stupidity and ineptitude will add Grabu's 'Albion and Albanius.' Practically all the other works which are conveniently included in histories of English opera are far more in the nature of revues—kaleidoscopic productions in which music is but a willing handmaid to scenic art. Yet it would be a mistake to attempt to separate the operas from the non-operatic works. They have a common ancestry, and often exhibit the same characteristics, the same merits, and the same faults.

Opera in England was an abortive experiment which was not supported by the librettists of the time. It was the masque and the play with music which absorbed the literary, musical, and decorative talents of the 17th century. With the best will in the world we cannot pretend that the masque was a home-grown product. Brought over originally from Italy as a novel form of Court entertainment it survived and flourished as an English form of the French ballet de cour. Its popularity under James I. was naturally continued under Charles I. and his French consort. It was essentially a series of dances performed by persons of noble rank—even royalty—for the amusement of the Court. Declamation to explain the performance and the introduction of the 'antimasque' to form a contrast followed in the natural course of development, and the final revels, in which the performers selected partners from the distinguished audience, continued to be regarded as a proper conclusion. Though these spectacles have often been studied as a part of the history of literature and music, they were regarded at the time principally as a vehicle for scenic display. The circumstances of their production—at the Court or at the Universities—encouraged lavishness, and eminent artists were engaged to do justice to them. So when Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones collaborated, the architect had no doubt that he was a more important person than the author. This tendency to magnificence in the stage setting, for which the French ballet and French taste in England were largely responsible, survived the Commonwealth and made its influence felt anew in the performances of masques and operas after the Restoration. By the time of Dryden the presence of 'machines' in opera is considered essential. Hence the never-ending delight in the supernatural, and the extraordinary popularity of witches in the Restoration spectacles.

The despotism of Cromwell put an end to the Court masques of Charles I., but the entertainment was not killed. It was kept alive by private performances, many of them in schools, and by the public productions of Sir William Davenant. By a curious anomaly, though plays were forbidden by the Puritans there was no objection to the performance of music. Davenant was thus able to present dramatic works with music. He began, in the spring of 1656, with what he called 'Declamations'—a queer hotch-potch sort of entertainment—and followed this up with a full-dress opera later in the same year. 'The Siege of Rhodes' (generally hailed as the first English opera) would have more importance and interest if the music had survived. As it is, we have to be content with the knowledge that Henry Lawes and Locke both contributed to it, the latter also taking the part of the Admiral. Both 'The Siege of Rhodes' and its successors were divided not into 'Acts' but into 'Entries' (a term frequently employed in the masques), in order to allay any suspicion that plays were being performed—for Davenant was first and foremost a playwright, and the fact that he produced operas is due more to the Puritan ban on theatres than to any special affection he may have had for the form. It has even been shown that 'The Siege of Rhodes' was probably originally intended as a play, and was subsequently converted into an opera.*

The significance of 'The Siege of Rhodes,' popular as it was, is dramatic rather than musical. Of more interest to the musician are the masques which were still performed by amateurs under the Commonwealth. Of these the best known are those written by Shirley for 'young gentlemen,' an interesting parallel to the private performance of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas.' As some of them were written under Charles I. and others after his execution we can be assured of the continuity of the tradition. The only difference was that schoolboys became the actors in place of noblemen. Little is known of the music of these masques, but that to 'Cupid and Death' (1653), by Matthew Locke, has been preserved. It will be considered presently. The Restoration saw the re-opening of the theatres and a renewed interest in everything French.† This time it was the comédie-ballet which invited imitation. So we find Shadwell and Locke collaborating to produce 'Psyche,' an English copy of the joint work of Molière, Quinault, and Lully.

The performance of plays with music was not confined to imitations of French models. The Elizabethan theatre, in which music had played an incidental part, was not forgotten, and the revival of Elizabethan plays was eagerly undertaken. Unfortunately, in their enthusiasm the revivers found it necessary to adapt the originals, in order to make them, as they thought, more suitable to the tastes of the day, and to give more opportunity for the introduction of music. The works of Shakespeare did not escape their hands. 'Macbeth' was performed with additions from Middleton and with new music. 'The Tempest' was mutilated by Dryden and Shadwell in turn. 'A Midsummer-Night's Dream' re-appeared as an elaborate masque entitled 'The Fairy Queen,' with music by Purcell. Beaumont and Fletcher's 'The Prophetess' was transformed by Betterton into 'Dioclesian.' These works, and the many others which appeared at this time, were not operas in the strict sense of the term. They ignored the French opera of Lully, and continued rather to keep alive the tradition of the Elizabethan play and the Jacobean masque. Grabu's 'Albion and Albanius' to Dryden's libretto is an exception. But Grabu was a Frenchman himself, and in any case the dismal failure of the work, which betrays only too clearly the composer's ignorance of English, is sufficient to render it negligible, except in so far as it provided a model for some of the scenes in 'King Arthur.' Purcell certainly was influenced by French and Italian composers. But that influence was purely musical, and did not show itself in the construction of his dramatic works. It was moreover in direct opposition to Grabu that Blow composed his masque 'Venus and Adonis,' which is really an opera, and 'Venus and Adonis' undoubtedly encouraged and influenced Purcell in the composition of 'Dido and Æneas' some four or five years later.

* Dent, 'Foundation of English Opera,' pp. 65-68.

† A season of French operas was given in London during the reign of Charles II.

This short sketch gives some idea of the various stages of the operatic problem in England. It is obvious at once that the movement towards opera differed considerably from the more or less logical development which occurred in France and Italy. It is equally obvious that the ancestry of even so unconventional a work as 'Dido and Æneas' is extremely complicated. French, English, and Italian traditions all play a part in the production of Purcell's own individual genius. Like Monteverde, he finds the materials ready to hand, and transmutes them into pure gold by his magic touch. Only in 'Dido and Æneas' he leaves the beaten track of professional routine to create something well-nigh unique, whereas Monteverde's 'Orfeo' conforms superficially to the Florentine plan almost as closely as Peri's 'Euridice.'

Nothing is so important in the history of these early operatic attempts as the way in which English was set. In Italy the peculiar problem of reproducing the declamation of the Greeks was simplified by the unusual suitability of the Italian language for singing. In France the practice of the Académie had been to assign equivalent musical notes to long and short syllables, without regard for time as we understand it by the division into bars. Though the practice lapsed, we can discern its influence in the frequent changes of time-signatures in the recitative of Lully and other French opera composers. In other words, the tendency to follow closely the line of the text in the music still persisted. In England, on the other hand, the setting of words by Lawes and his followers, though derived from the stricter style of the Florentines, was complicated by the peculiar difficulties which English presents. The result was that while the words were treated with that respectful admiration which is mirrored also in the works of Wesley and Parry, the musical effect was decidedly unsatisfactory. The main attraction of this early English song lies in fact in the words: a poor libretto reveals the comparative emptiness of the music. As time went on continued contact with Italy helped to enrich the melodic and harmonic style. Thus there is real musical expressiveness in Locke's vocal writing in 'Cupid and Death,' and passionate beauty of a high order in Blow's 'Venus and Adonis.' But the early beginnings were unpromising.

What seems strange to the modern ear is the use of free declamation where an obvious air in simple rhythm seems indicated. So obsessed were composers with the problem of setting words to music that they seem deliberately to have forsaken the path of simplicity for the elaborate complications of this rhetorical style. Precedents for simple airs were certainly not wanting in the early stage-plays performed by child actors. But sophistication had its way. High hopes are often raised by the title 'Air,' only to fall to the ground when it is discovered that a simple poetic structure has been wilfully distorted into a kind of formless recitative in strict time. Here again the development of the aria in Italy and the growing popularity of the coranto in England led towards a more rhythmical style and the general adoption of triple time for solo songs, exemplified in so many of Purcell's beautiful melodies. But it was some time before declamation was abandoned.

Apart from this unsatisfactory method of setting songs there was recitative proper. Its employment was never general in the masques, though one of Jonson's—'Lovers made Men'—was sung throughout in stylo recitativo.* Still more unusual was the use of accompanied recitation in a masque by Campion, performed a few years earlier. The normal method in the masque was to set the 'songs' in a declamatory style, to write choruses where any were provided, and to supply an abundance of instrumental music for the dances. The principal characters would speak in dialogue, while the songs would be sung by subsidiary characters or by musicians without any part in the masque. This method held sway throughout the history of the masque and the play with music, largely no doubt because of the difficulty of securing competent actors who could sing.† If this difficulty could be met, some of the dialogue would be set in recitative, which was used in preference for supernatural characters.

The rhythmic structure of the choruses naturally induced composers to make some at least of their 'airs' fit the same scheme, so that by the time of Purcell the 'song with chorus' is a recognised feature of the musical play. The function of the chorus is insignificant. It generally comments on the situation of the piece in a few well-chosen platitudes, whose only justification is that they are an excuse for delightful music. Most important of all were the dances. As these were numerous and complicated we get a very large variety of instrumental movements in the masques. The movements are habitually short, with repetitions, and are often distinguished by the changes of rhythm. The apparent inconsequence and triviality of these instrumental sections is abundantly redeemed when they are accompanied by the appropriate dances on the stage. Their model was the French ballet, with its bewildering and spectacular succession of dances of every conceivable kind.

* Dent, Op. cit., p. 26.

† A well-known example is Purcell's 'King Arthur.'

Locke's 'Cupid and Death' (performed in 1653 and again in 1659), to which Orlando Gibbons's son Christopher also contributed some music, is a valuable work, not only because specimens of masques complete with music are rare, but also because it has qualities which are too often lacking in the works of his predecessors. The dances are spirited and vigorous, even at the expense of delicacy, and refreshingly free from traditional ornaments. The declamatory songs are saved by Locke's genuine feeling for melody, and the duets and choruses are graceful examples of 17th-century part-writing. Towards the end of the masque there is a good deal of highly expressive recitative, added probably for the second (public) performance in 1659. In this recitative there are harmonic progressions and abrupt changes which are quite foreign to the style of Lawes, who kept with almost monotonous regularity to one key. It is no doubt interesting to observe the growth of the modern feeling for tonality, but there can be few who would prefer the monotony of Lawes to Locke's excursions, which are a definite attempt to represent emotion.

In 'Cupid and Death,' as in most of the masques, the principal characters do not sing. The 'songs' are performed either by the chorus, or by singers who do not act in the play. The characters represented are homely—a Host, a Chamberlain, an Old Man and Woman, and so on—and there is ample scope for that grotesqueness which the 'antimasque' required in the dance of the Old Man and Woman rejuvenated by Cupid's dart mistakenly sped by Death, and in the dance of the Satyr and the Apes. A general criticism which may be made of the masques and musical plays as a whole is that they lack continuity. The aim of a French opera composer was to link the whole work together by a continuous system of recitative, song, and dance, so that it might be felt to be an organic unity. Problems of this kind did not worry the English composers and dramatists. We can see this in Shakespeare, in Beaumont and Fletcher, and in the masques and musical plays. Episode succeeds episode, often without any connecting link, and there is ample justification for the remark of a French critic of the time: 'They do not matter tho' it be a Hodch Potch, for they say, they mind only the Parts as they come one after another, and have no regard to the whole Composition.' That unity which was secured in late Italian opera by a scheme of arias linked by recitative, in Mozart by the ensembles which are the natural complement of a dramatic climax, in Wagner by the leitmotiv, in Debussy by a continuous web of sound, was lacking in English musical plays and masques just as it was lacking in English drama.

Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' like 'Cupid and Death,' was performed by amateurs. To those who are familiar with 'When I am laid in earth' it needs no commendation. Purcell had much in common with Locke, and doubtless owed something to him, but his gifts were of a far higher order. We may trace the influence of Italian and French composers in 'Dido and Æneas,' we may point out where Purcell has learnt from Blow and even taken a hint from Grabu, we may indicate the ancestry of all that is supernatural and grotesque, yet there still remains that mysterious something which marks a work of genius. It may be the well-ordered scheme of tonalities employed throughout the work, or the peculiarly concentrated poignancy of the recitative, or a lilt in the tunes which Purcell's predecessors, for all their Englishness, had never quite caught. And with all this there is a profound instinct for what is immediately effective on the stage. Yet 'Dido and Æneas,' almost our solitary English opera, could hardly have formed the model for larger works of the same kind. It is doubtful whether Purcell could have used a wider canvas with the same skill and success. It is doubtful even whether so concentrated and dramatic a style would have been tolerable in a work of normal length, for Purcell could not have written those stretches of recitative which are essential to the French operas, and are only saved from being meaningless by the sense of the words.

When Locke set 'Cupid and Death' he was helped not a little by the dignity and intrinsic worth of Shirley's text. Purcell had to struggle with the pitiful doggerel of Nahum Tate. That 'Dido and Æneas' is a masterpiece in spite of its libretto is in itself an eloquent testimony to Purcell's genius. The work has its faults—faults common to the period when it was written, and a lack of construction which would have been fatal to the development of English opera even if it had survived Handel. But when one can set innumerable beauties in the other side of the scale the faults are of small significance. We can easily forget to-day that the traditions of the masque and the requirements of the school for young ladies necessitated the introduction of irrelevant dances, and be content to enjoy the opera simply as a work of art. 'Cupid and Death' and 'Dido and Æneas' survive as valuable examples of what English musicians had to offer in the 17th century, contributing little, perhaps, to the solution of the eternal problem of opera, but not unworthy by their own merits to command our attention.

THE BADEN-BADEN FESTIVAL: MUSIC FOR WIRELESS AND FILMS

By Oscar Thompson

With the English it is wireless, with the Americans radio, with the Germans Rundfunk.

At Baden-Baden, where the young modernists of the Hindemith-Haas-Burkhard group have held their annual Deutsches Kammer-Musik-Fest (July 25-28), Rundfunk not only has had its day, but its two days, of recognition as a medium for musical regeneration.

Der Tag, die Zwei Tage of Rundfunk, arrived with music composed especially for, and not merely transmitted by, Rundfunk. Simultaneously arrived the Rundfunkian audience.

For this was no instance of lazy listeners turning the dials of receiving apparatus in their own homes or hotels, but of enterprising concert patrons, each equipped with the necessary admittance ticket, going by cab or on foot to the Kurhaus and taking assigned places in one or another of the several rooms given over to the radio programmes of the festival. Whether in the Damen Salon or the Speisesaal, they were seated about tables in a manner to suggest quite another hunger than that for music; but knifeless, forkless, spoonless, the perfect picture of a Barmecide feast.

At the appointed hour, loud-speakers in each of these rooms explained away the absence of viands from these dinner groupings. Each chamber reverberated with an announcer's preliminaries, couched in the best radio German and broadcast from somewhere else in the Kurhaus. Thereafter the tympanum of every ear experienced the impact of 'Lindberghflug,' the most widely bruited of the Baden-Baden adventurings; and in the course of the two Rundfunk Aufführungen, became acquainted also with 'Pep, oder God's Own Country'; 'Tempo der Zeit' ('Ja, die Tempo der Zeit kostet Geld'); some Serenades, Suites, and the like, a Cantata recognisably like a cantata, and a Kleines Messe that was, indeed, a little Mass.

All of this music, it was made known, had been written specifically for broadcasting, and presumably with certain difficulties, limitations, and advantages of the medium in mind. By way of demonstrating that these existed, the first wireless programme was preceded by an acoustical lecture which proved its points almost too effectively. At least one listener was left to wonder whether what he heard subsequently was a result of good or bad technique or of good or bad transmission. A repetition of the 'Lindberghflug' music in concert form, sans loud-speakers and in the presence of the performers, indicated the former, or both. Though certain details of contrapuntal writing for chorus had a more musical effect in the concert performance, the orchestral scoring sounded much fuller and less sketchy in the wireless projection, and the work possessed a better line, due to an increased sense of continuity—sundry extra-musical and mechanical sounds merging more successfully with the voices and the instruments when transmission had done its part in fusing and welding these diverse concomitants.

Conceding, therefore, the relative success of the mechanical phase of the experiment, whatever the details that can be left for radio acousticians to argue over, the mere music critic will feel that his particular part of the discussion should be confined to the music rather than to its projection. Two paladins of modernity, Paul Hindemith and Kurt Weil, collaborated on the score of 'Lindberghflug.' To serve their needs, Bertolt Brecht indicted a text involving dialogues between the flyer and his motor, flyer and cloud, flyer and sleep. It gave solo voice not only to Lindbergh, but to the City of New York, to the snowstorm, and to some British fishermen. Paris, first watchful, then exultant, was choralized.

Out of this scheme emerged something incredibly naïve. If Hindemith's part of the music sounded less pedestrian for the most part than Weil's, perusal of the text inclines one to the belief that Weil was assigned the more childish sections with which to wrestle. What, in the name even of the composer capable of making a fugue of a table of logarithms, was Weil to do with words like these?—a literal translation:

> 'My name is Charles Lindbergh,
> I am twenty-five years old,
> My grandfather was a Swede,
> I am an American';

or with a section of the text which takes an inventory of the accoutrement, from 'zwei electrische Lampen' to the ever so essential 'Gummiboot,' carried on that breath-taking flight of the grandson of the Swede? Weil did better, as is not surprising, with the dialogue between Lindbergh and his motor, where the mechanism is deftly and simply suggested; but not so well as Hindemith did with the section devoted to the insinuations of sleep, answered at each period by the flyer's spoken words, 'I am not tired.' Since the beginnings of the art, the allure of this siren of slumber has found seductive voice in the music of men who may have drowsed a bit on their own, and Hindemith's 'Schlaf' was none the less a charmer for being 20th century and somewhere far out at sea.

One more good word for Hindemith. He avoided the jazz obsession that is cartooning German music. But Weil could not resist the temptation to 'characterize,' to be 'American.' It is high time the composers of Central Europe learned that of all their talents the one most notable for its non-existence is the ability to imitate successfully and idiomatically the musical slang of Broadway's 'blues.'

Hearkened to three times, 'Lindberghflug' reduced itself to about four interesting sections, with another ten that overwhelmed these four by their childishness and their lack of anything savouring of creative inspiration.

'Pep, oder God's Own Country,' otherwise designated 'Amerikanisches Liederbuch,' was one of the most depressing examples, musically, of that American-parody obsession already referred to, that this visitor has encountered anywhere in Germany. Though the tango long since ceased to interest the jazz strutters, and the waltz became a dim dream before the tango went out, tango and waltz do duty with fox-trot and 'blues' in this genial but blunderbuss satire on Dollarland. 'Pep,' as is made known, is a word, an American word; 'the average American has a vocabulary of seven hundred words; the average woman, eight hundred; chauffeur, nine hundred; President Coolidge, none; W. Shakespeare, fourteen thousand; G. B. Shaw, three thousand seven hundred'; but the one great word is 'Pep'—for 'Pep' it is the many dollars makes. Herr B. W. Smith discloses himself, solo-wise; so, too, Louetta Frink, who, lest there be some misunderstanding as to her identity, or her importance, or her wealth, explains at length what it means to be Wilham Washington Frink's Frau. She fox-trots her Europa-trip, after she has waltzed the family possessions. Perhaps it is all very droll, very clever; but Walter Goehr's music suggests that the words of Leon Feuchtwanger set him a task beyond his musical means to accomplish. Something of a refrain is made of 'Wozu aber hat er die vielen Dollars gemacht?' with the answer, 'Pep.' This particular work will never net its composer a million for any such reason.

Of somewhat similar cast was 'Tempo der Zeit,' though Hans Eisler's music put on a mournful face beyond the implications of David Weber's ironic words. This work was called a cantata, and like the others described it made use of soloists, chorus, and orchestra; also of a 'Referent,' by means of whose stentorian tones all listeners were forewarned of having arrived at Nineteen hundred and twenty-nine.

A more ambitious cantata came from the pen of Paul Gross, a setting of words by Ernst Toller. It savoured of 1913 more than of 1929, for its spirit was early Schönbergian, a belated expression of a Weltschmerz grown weary and monotonous from too much bleeding at the hands of the romanticists. Its burden, 'Nirgends blüht das Wunder,' was the cry of a vanished day, bleakly echoing what once was sentient and warm; a skilful work, but on first hearing, a sterile one. Ernst Pepping's 'Kleines Messe,' beautifully sung by the Hugo Holles Madrigal Choir, was a surprising achievement, in miniature, in a form that has had a spaciousness quite its own; a condensation of what the liturgical masters expanded; a little model such as after-architects fashioned of the Cathedral at Cologne. Radio may well profit from any music so cunningly contrived, though one may hesitate to consider a mass at tea-time, with its Kyrie, its Gloria, and its Sanctus lasting just long enough for the comfortable sipping of three fillings of the cup.

Of the lesser numbers of the Rundfunk programmes, a few words only, though these, too, represented a considerable measure of successful adjustment of material to means. A wireless ensemble, the Frankfurter Rundfunkorchester, xylophones and all, gave clarity and quality to a Serenade by Jerzy Fitelberg, to a work called simply 'Musik für Rundfunk,' by Hans Humpert, and to another styled 'Suite for Rundfunk,' by Hugo Hermann. Of these, the Fitelberg Serenade, though obviously derived from Stravinsky, was perhaps the most incisive example of good radio composing.

Tonfilme, as the 'talkies' are styled in Germany, occupied a place only secondary to the wireless music. Last year, the Badenians experimented with compositions for movies of the elder order, and among the cinema works then brought out was one captioned 'Vormittagspuk,' a collaboration on the part of Hans Richter, Werner Gräff, and the indefatigable Hindemith, whose music was conceived for mechanical piano. Perhaps on the theory that it was misunderstood a year ago—when it seemed to this writer one of the least consequential of the film dabblings—these 'morning spooks' had another audition in company with the newer tone-films. The music did not gain in significance thereby. Perhaps scales, up and down, down and up, when delivered with the dehumanized perfection of a mechanically operated keyboard, are actually the tonal equivalents of bowler hats floating through the air and alighting on previously unoccupied craniums. It may also be that arabesques apparently devoid of any 'literary' or 'scenic' suggestion give just the right fillip to pictures operated sideways, backwards, or upside-down; but the musical value of this bit of jugglery still seems to a willing investigator the cube-root of nugacity. Nor was an attentive ear competent to derive much more of significance or quality from Walter Gronostay's 'Alles drecht sich—alles bewegt sich,' another collaboration with Richter and Gräff. Slapstick foolery has yet to supply any very potent afflatus for music.

Darius Milhaud did not disdain the street tunefulness of the popular song in his deftly wrought and necessarily absurd score for 'La p'tite Lilie,' a French incursion into the terrain of comic-strip music. There was less of cartooning and more of musical description—perhaps the very attribute the others sought religiously to avoid—in Paul Dessau's 'Episode,' otherwise a film-and-music glorification of a mercantile establishment's revolving door. The music was played first, alone; then with the film, depicting what happened when a man of many bundles emerging from a department store, stopped to look back lingeringly at a smiling model in a bathing suit, blocking all ingress and egress thereby. Nympholepsy brought up to date! Dessau wrote music capable of standing alone, small as it is; but once heard in conjunction with the film, it revolves, doorwise, thereafter. No one will predict immortality for it, but if there is to be music for this sort of thing then this is the music that 'belongs.'

Wolfgang Zeller went around the world with a travel picture, assisted by one of the largest German merchant marine corporations. For 'Melodie der Welt,' Rimsky had given him some hints, and so had Wagner. He made good use of them. The film, too, has its art. All of these numbers, save that for mechanical piano, were projected by the 'talkie' mechanism, as were an overture by Hugo Herrmann, and an Intermezzo by Wagner-Régeny.

An evening devoted to 'Music for Amateurs' calls for no extended comment. Jörgen Bentzon, Alois Pachernegg, Walter Leigh, Friedrich Wilhelm Lothar, and Wagner-Régeny contributed numbers scored for various combinations of instruments, such as school and 'Verein' organizations can easily muster. Sundry phases of modernity were expressed. Some of the playing had an 'amateur' sound, but there was more than a suggestion that our school boys and girls, to do these works justice, would have need to be further advanced in the emancipation of the tonal art than are, alas, most music critics. To the instrumental numbers was added a cantata, with alto solo, chorus, and orchestra, by Paul Gross, admirably sung, but not by amateurs, the ensemble being the very professional one of the Hollechor.

Of the last event of the Baden-Baden festival, a farrago called 'Lehrstück,' this commentator hesitates to write, since he can profess no clear understanding of its intent. A leaflet containing the text describes it as a 'Fragment.' The festival programme-book refers to it as an experiment embodying a theory of combining musical, dramatic, and 'politischer' art; a 'collective' expression, but apparently one better termed a congeries than a synthesis, since the various elements are successive rather than synchronized in performance. The title itself remains a conjecture to one who did not feel called upon to cross-examine the co-authors as to what they meant. Was it because this was a 'Lehrstück,' that Hindemith, from the platform, prevailed upon his audience to sing notes and words flashed upon a screen? Public participation, if not an unprecedented affair, was at least one of the curious elements of this most curious scheme.

'Lehrstück' was given in the bare reaches of the Stadthalle, where more people than could be seated were assembled as uncomfortably as they might have been at a political protest meeting. Something of that character subsequently invaded the proceedings, when hisses, catcalls, and whistlings were evoked by certain of the less appetizing episodes of the evening. On the platform with Hindemith and his text-writer, Brecht, were singers, and an orchestra of strings. In a balcony some distance removed was another band of brass. At the end of the hall was a screen for motion pictures, and over Hindemith's head one for stereoptican projection of the occasional phrases the audience was called upon to sing.

The chorus and the soloists on the platform projected words telling of the death of an aviator, falling from the sky. The brass in the balcony blared commentaries, whether ironical or sympathetic, let him who knows declare. Hindemith, very earnest in his most quotidian attire, waved both arms, and the audience responded, a few measures at a time; at first in monotone, later with phrases even a little involved. The music at intervals gave way entirely to other elements: a speaker holding a glass of water and a cushion, in obvious symbolism of the text; a film of somewhat ghastly suggestion, depicting a woman writhing in what could be assumed to be an agony of dissolution, otherwise 'the contemplation of the dead'; a scene of crude dialogue between three clowns, one a giant in pain—to ease whose complaint the others obligingly made use of a carpenter's saw for the removal first of a foot, then a leg, the top of the skull, and finally the entire head; not a pretty business or prettified in the doing; during all of which no music was heard, and through some of which refractory members of the audience jeered and hooted.

Perhaps a writer on aeronautics, or universal suffrage, or prison reform, or the ethics of the mortician, could unriddle all this in terms of protest against man's ingratitude to man, or the futility of flying high, or the impossibility of righting the world's chronic wrongs by piecemeal amputations that in the end must kill the patient; but the music criticule can only admit his microscopic mentality and put it all down as a new variety of three-ringed circus in which the tonal art is sacrificed to ends far less worthy than its own. One gleam of light was vouchsafed this benighted listener. Hindemith's choral music at times had the semblance of beauty, even of compassion. Not so the brasses overhead. Other than this, let us make the sorry confession that we were left unmoved, and in the end were sorely wearied by this 'Lehrstück,' 'einige Theorien musikalischer, dramatischer und politischer Art,' 'eine kollektive Kunstübung'—translate it as you will.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN UNKNOWN PART-SONG BY LISZT

In the June Zeitschrift für Musik, Seb. Röckl announces his discovery of the manuscript of a part-song for male voices, 'Trinkspruch,' one of two composed by Liszt for the Munich 'Stubenvollgesellschaft.' These songs were referred to in a letter from Liszt to Count Franz Pocci, of January 19, 1844. The song is published in full by way of music supplement.

GERHARD VON KEUSSLER

The May-June Auftakt is devoted to Keussler and his music. Dr. F. Stein writes in praise of the oratorios 'Jesus of Nazareth,' 'The Mother,' and 'Zebaoth'; Prof. L. Sachse describes the symphonic dramas, 'The Prisons' and 'The Journey of the Lash'; and Prof. Ludwig Hess calls attention to the interest of the songs.

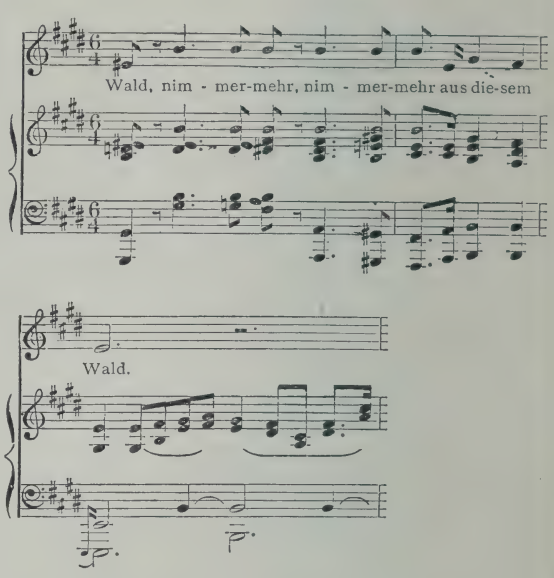
POLYPHONY IN CHOPIN'S MUSIC

In the Kwartalnik Muzyczny (No. 3), Dr. Wojcikowna considers the polyphonic elements in Chopin's music. Her conclusions are: (1.) There exist two types of polyphonic procedure in this music—one is traditional, the other individual, proper to Chopin alone; (2.) The former plays a secondary, the latter an essential part.

THE GENUINE TEXT OF SCHUMANN'S OP. 39

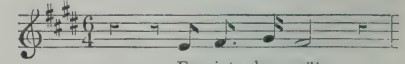
Having compared current editions of Schumann's Op. 39 with the first edition (Haslinger, 1842), Leopold Hirschberg (Musik, July) calls attention to significant differences.

For instance, in the first edition, 'Waldesgespräch' is in 6-4 time, not 3-4; only once does a 3-4 bar occur, thus:

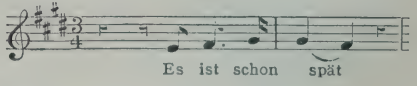


Other differences are:

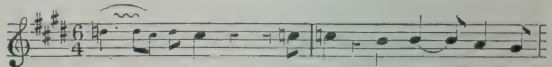
Schumann wrote:



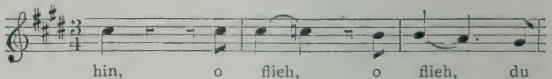
and not:



He wrote:

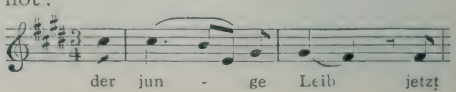


and not:



Also:

and not:



There can be no doubt, the writer continues, that the Haslinger edition gives us the genuine 'good' text, and the others 'improved' versions. The alterations in the Whistling and later editions were surely approved by Schumann, and perhaps suggested by him. But it is obvious that their sole purpose was to do away with 'difficulties' which might have made the songs less popular with amateur interpreters; hence the suppression of syncopated notes, the substitution of 3-4 time for 6-4, and so forth.

PERIODICITY IN MUSICAL HISTORY

In the June Musik, Alfred Lorenz devotes an essay to the fact that musical history shows regularly alternating periods:

'As regards Western music, starting at the end of the 4th century with the works of St. Ambrosius we have a homophonic period which reaches its climax in the works of Gregorius, circa 600. Polyphony appeared at the end of the 7th century, leading to Hucbald's "Organum" (900). A century later begins a new homophonic period. With the 14th century the "Ars Nova" appeared, followed by the great period of polyphony which was succeeded in turn (circa 1600) by the monodic period of the Florentines and the homophony of the Protestant Chorale; and so on. In short, homophonic periods start from the years 400, 1000, and 1600; polyphonic periods from the years 700, 1300, and 1900.'

AGAINST PERSONAL REACTIONS IN CRITICISM

In Muzyka i Revolutsia (No. 3) an unsigned article says:

'Current analyses of musical works are written from the merely æsthetic point of view: they reveal the taste and intellectual level of their author and nothing more. They are therefore confusing to readers, and especially to readers belonging to the working classes. There exist no scientific (i.e., "Marxistically" established and tested) standards for the appraisement of music. Hence the anarchy, the supremacy of individual taste, in which respect the musical columns of our press are as bad as those of the Western bourgeois press. A school of musical criticism ought to be organized, and the Marxist-scientific method of dealing with music studies in schools and other appropriate circles.'

BARTÓK'S 'BLUEBEARD'

In the May-June Melos, Edwin von der Null examines points of style in the music of Bartók's 'Duke Bluebeard's Castle.' He considers that Bartók owes not a little to Debussy, the other influences which worked upon him being that of Beethoven and of Hungarian folk-song.

LADISLAUS LAJTHA

In the same issue, Otto Gombosi writes on Lajtha, one of the younger Hungarian composers. He describes him as a born writer of chamber music, and sees certain affinities between his tendencies and César Franck's.

STRADELLA

The June Bolletino Bibliografico Musicale contains a bibliography of Stradella's works, compiled by Enrico Magni Dufflocq.

SZYMANOWSKI

In the May Anbruch an essay on Karol Szymanowski, by Erwin Felber, ends with the following remarks:

'He inclines towards the Oriental, and in his big, most diversified output there are many purely Polish features. He is sensitive, unrestrained, and has no use for high-sounding slogans. He stands alone, a belated romanticist who longs for great peace. Sedulous, and mindless of passing fashions, he remains true to himself and preserves the heritage of the dying art of expression. So that in a way, he is a modern although outside his time: he carries the death-dream of romanticism to the border of awakening.'

DVORÁK

The May-June Hudební Vychova is a special Dvorák number, containing articles by Ant. Sova, Vit. Novák, J. B. Foerster, Richard Veselij, Karel Hoffmeister, and others.

COLOUR AND TONE

In the May Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft, Albert Wellek writes on the psychology of association between music and colour, with special, most instructive references to this form of association in China, India, Western Asia, and Egypt.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

H.M.V.

There can hardly be a more delightful example of touched-up juvenilia than Elgar's two 'Wand of Youth' Suites. Their re-recording will give abundant pleasure. A few of the quieter passages are on the foggy side, otherwise there can be nothing but praise for the reproduction. Of the five records, I like best that giving the Overture, Serenade, Minuet, and 'Sun Dance,' and the one with the March, 'Little Bells,' and 'Moths and Butterflies.' The tenth side of the five records is filled by the 'Beau Brummel' Minuet. The orchestra is the London Symphony, and the composer conducts.

It was a good idea to put together a number of the little German dances of Mozart and make them into a suite. Steinbach has done the arranging and scoring, and has earned a good mark by showing both skill and moderation. The dances are well played by the Berlin State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Leo Blech.

In the way of light orchestral stuff there is 'Lehariana,' made up from Lehar tit-bits, brilliantly played by Marek Weber's Orchestra; and a couple of dances, 'From the Canebrake,' by Gardiner, and a 'Juba Dance' by the negro composer Dett—quite a striking piece this latter. The players are the New Light Symphony Orchestra.

There are a couple of church choir records—the Canterbury Cathedral Choir singing Purcell's 'Remember not' and Oakley's 'Comes at times,' conducted by Dr. Charlton Palmer; and the Temple Church Singers in the hymns 'O worship the King,' to the 'Old 104th,' and 'Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven,' to Goss's well-known tune, accompanied by Mr. Thalben Ball. The singing of the Canterbury Choir is excellent. I do not think the Oakley is a very good companion to the Purcell, because those who can appreciate the strength and harmonic daring of the former will have little use for the latter, and vice-versa. I like Mr. Thalben Ball's organ part to the 'Old 104th,' but I am not impressed by the singing. The treble tone is a little on the sentimental side, and the diction is of the 'refaned' type that shirks plain, honest vowels—e.g., 'Elleluia' for 'Alleluia.'

There are two fine pianoforte records—Paderewski in Chopin's E flat 'Valse Brillante' and Rubinstein's 'Valse Caprice,' and Lamond in Liszt's 'Valse Impromptu' and 'Sonetta del Petrarca' in E.

I am one of those who admire the guitar-playing of Andres Segovia without being able to get up much enthusiasm for his instrument, which soon palls, like any other medium that lacks the power of sustaining tone. Segovia plays delightfully a Bach Courante and a lively Sonatina in A by Torroba.

Prodigy-worshippers are looking forward to the London debut of the boy fiddler Yehudi Menuhin. Like others of the prima donna tribe, he is preceded by records which show him to be a remarkable youngster. The solos recorded are 'La Cappriciosa,' by Ries, and an Allegro by Fiocco. He is at his best in the former. In the Allegro his rhythmic sense seems not too secure, and he lets the scheme slip at some points. His technique is brilliant, and his tone strong—perhaps too strong. I have an idea that he was placed a bit too near the microphone.

A first-rate vocal record is that of Stuart Robertson in Lane Wilson's arrangement of the old song 'When dull care,' and an attractive number by John Ireland, 'When lights go rolling.' Mr. Robertson's words are unusually clear, and his singing is first-rate all round. The excellent accompaniments of Gerald Moore should not go unnoticed.

Cedric Sharpe plays very expressively an Air by Pergolesi and a rather trivial piece by Friml, 'Twilight.' So good a 'cellist as Mr. Sharpe ought to be employed on better fare.

COLUMBIA

Of the orchestral records I am most attracted by that of a Concerto Grosso in D minor by Vivaldi, capitally played by the Zurich Tonhalle Orchestra, conducted by Volkmar Andræ. This is a strong piece of work, showing Vivaldi in far better form than he is apt to be in his solo music. He does astonishing things, for example, with the plain scale-passage at the opening of the first movement. This is a record worth having by the ordinary listener no less than by those interested in the historical development of the art.

Willem Mengelberg and the Concertgebouw Orchestra (I beg pardon; the label says 'His,' not 'the'—how proprietary these conductors are getting nowadays!) give a good all-round performance of the 'Oberon' Overture. It fills three sides, the remaining space being occupied by Sir Henry Wood and the New Queen's Hall Orchestra playing vigorously the G minor Slavonic Dance of Dvorák.

The two best-known of Brahms's Hungarian Dances—those in D and G minor—receive similarly vivid treatment from Sir Hamilton Harty and the Hallé Orchestra. I feel, however, that more breadth and weight of tone in the middle section of the D major would have been a gain. All the above orchestral records, by the way, suffer from the prevailing fault of over-keenness of tone. This applies above all to the strings. I don't object to a little of this quality from the wood-wind—especially the piccolo, for after all, if a piccolo doesn't picc, so to speak, it might as well be silent. But strings should sound like strings in ff no less than in pp.

The Zurich orchestra and conductor mentioned above are heard to great advantage in the Gavotte from 'Idomeneo.' The quiet passages are charming, touched off with the right daintiness, but the loud passages are rather too loud. They should have been scaled down to suit the style of the piece. The other side of the record gives us a pleasant Andante for flute and orchestra by Mozart, the flute being played by Jean Nada.

Those who enjoy straightforward, clean-cut, vigorous, and resounding performances of rousing tunes played by army bands (I do) will like two records made by the Grenadier Guards Band under Captain George Miller—one consisting of a Scottish March and an Anglo-American March, the other of an Army March and a Navy March, all four being made up of good old tunes. These records will be just the thing for use at schools or Scouts' camps, or under any other conditions where rousing, far-reaching, and stirring music of rhythmic character is required.

Only one pianoforte record has been received, and it is a first-rater—Percy Grainger playing his own 'Country Gardens' and 'Shepherd's Hey.'

The solitary chamber music record is of the Canzonetta from Mendelssohn's Quartet in E, and the Serenade from Haydn's Quartet in C, Op. 5, No. 4, played by the Poltronieri String Quartet. Performance and reproduction are excellent. Haydnite though I am, I do not much care for this Serenade, because I feel it is wasting a string quartet to make three of its instruments imitate a guitar; but those who don't share this feeling will find the records very enjoyable.

The familiar Beethoven-Kreisler Rondino and the Gluck-Kreisler Melody could hardly be better played than by Jelly d'Aranyi, with Conraad von Bos at the keyboard.

Catching sight of the words 'London Male-Voice Octet' on a label, I put the disc on hastily, expecting 'Ye shepherds, tell me,' or 'Discord, dire sister.' To my surprise and delight there issued the most beautiful Anglican chanting I have ever heard. Every word was distinct, the rhythm was a constant delight (as the rhythm of the Psalms always is when it is given a fair chance instead of being hammered into uniformity), and above all, the diction was perfectly natural. On the purely vocal side the singing was no less excellent. On taking off the disc I discovered (without surprise) that the chanting was from the 'English Psalter.' Every parson, choirmaster, and chorister should hear this record, and learn (perhaps for the first time) what a beautiful thing Anglican chanting can be. Nor must they suppose that it can be achieved only by a handful of picked singers such as those here engaged. I have heard first-rate chanting in the most unlikely centres—wherever, in fact, there has been a good teacher and a willing set of singers. Before leaving this arresting record, I add that it would be well for members of congregations to hear it, and ask themselves why they should continue to endure stereotyped, casual, slovenly treatment of the Psalms, when, if their choirmaster did his duty, such delightful chanting as this is within their reach. Every psalter leads off by saying that good chanting should be like good reading, and then in most cases proceeds to point the Psalms in a way that makes it impossible to carry out the axiom. This record shows that at last we have in the 'English Psalter' a method capable of producing a result that is as near to speech rhythm as any concerted performance can ever be.

Very high marks must go to the record made in St. George's Hall (sic the label), Windsor Castle, on the occasion of the Thanksgiving for the King's recovery. The music consists of the Coronation Offertorium, 'Oh, hearken Thou unto the voice of my calling,' by Elgar; the National Anthem; and a Psalm of thanksgiving, written by Arlington and set by Sir Walford Davies, who conducts. The singing has some quite thrilling moments, and the organ is certainly one of the most effective for recording purposes that I have heard. Why not a few organ records from this evidently suitable instrument?

Of the operatic records, by far the best is that giving a couple of duets from Verdi's 'Otello,' sung by Harold Williams and Francis Russell. The diction of the former is extraordinarily clear.

BRUNSWICK

Most of the records received for review are of the dance and comic-song type, and so are of no interest to readers of a musical journal. Of the few records calling for notice I mention specially a couple of really first-rate pianoforte examples. Leopold Godowsky plays Liszt's fiendishly difficult 'Rigoletti' paraphrase with the utmost ease—perhaps too much ease; he seems to be almost casual about it. Nevertheless, this is a real tour de force. The companion piece is Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso in E, which is of course treated with the utmost deftness.

The other pianoforte record is of Ignace Hilsberg, who plays a not very exciting Etude by Scriabin, and a couple of pieces by Chassins—a Prelude in D and 'Rush Hour in Hong-Kong.' The latter of these two pieces is of no moment as music, but as a brilliant display of fireworks it comes off remarkably well. The pianoforte tone in these records is rather above the average.

Tartini's 'Devil's Trill' Sonata is played conscientiously by Alexander Sebald. He is a bit too level for my taste; I feel that a very little more contrast in power and tone-colour would have made all the difference. A less retiring disposition on the part of his unnamed pianist would also have been an improvement.

An organ record played by Lew White in the Lew White Organ Studios, New York, the music being transcriptions of Stephen Adams's 'Holy City' and Fauré's 'The Palms,' would call for no word here were it not for the exceptionally good recording. It is, in fact, annoying to find such results obtained from such poor material. When I think of the blurred discs of fine organ music finely played by some of our best organists, and compare it with this far superior reproduction of second-rate music and playing, I want to break this disc across my knee.

I took up the record of Eric Marshall singing the Prologue from 'Pagliacci' with pleasurable anticipations. They were not realised, however, for, good as the singing is on the purely vocal side, it is very bad in the matter of diction. I defy anybody to hear what Mr. Marshall is singing about at times, especially in the final passage, 'Will ye hear then the story as it unfolds itself,' &c. This might just as well have been sung in Choctaw. The companion piece, to which in my annoyance I gave a miss, is a song by Guy d'Hardelot.

John Charles Thomas has a fine voice, but there is a touch of commonplace about his singing of the Kipling-German 'Rolling down to Rio.' He is rather better in the companion piece.

DECCA

Only a few of this month's issue are likely to interest musical readers. The only orchestral records are on the light side—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Dream Dances,' very well played by the Hastings Municipal Orchestra in the White Rock Pavilion, conducted by Basil Cameron. The odd side in two records is made up by Fincke's 'Silhouette.'

There is one organ record, introducing gramophonists to a new organ and organist—Mr. Arnold Goldsborough, on the St. Martin-in-the-Fields instrument. He plays a couple of chorale preludes by Parry, those on 'Martyrdom' and what the label tells me is the 'Old 100th,' but which my ear recognises as the 'Old 104th.' 'Martyrdom' comes through well, but the 'Old 104th' is badly blurred. This is the more annoying because Mr. Goldsborough gives it one of the finest and most fiery performances I have ever heard. Perhaps the choice of piece was not good, seeing that it depends a good deal upon the delivery of the theme by the pedals, notoriously the poorest recording part of the instrument, and also that a very quick pace is a necessity. I look forward to hearing more recording by this admirable organist.

Readers who like out-of-the-way instruments should try the record of Durand's Waltz No. 1 and a Russian Dance played on the cymbalon by C. Vladescu, who is described on the label as a virtuoso on this particular instrument.

There are three vocal records worth notice: Frank Titterton singing well in 'None shall sleep to-night,' from Puccini's 'Turandot,' and 'Let her believe,' from 'The Girl of the Golden West'; Dale Smith in good form in a couple of songs from Elgar's 'Fringes of the Fleet'; and a very fine tenor, Solomon Strava, in two Yiddish songs. Even those who do not understand this language, and are even doubtful as to whether the singer is engaged in a comic or a serious song, will enjoy the voice and the singer's assured and varied style.

Occasional Notes

Not many years ago the word genius was used with caution, and people distinguished between genius and talent. In those days, too, a composer was one who composed. Both terms are now slung about so casually that for most people they have almost lost their meaning. So long as this hazy sense of values and proportion was confined to lay folk protest was useless, but now that one of our best dramatic critics has started hyperbolising it is time to make a stand. Let us begin at the beginning.

The operetta 'Bitter Sweet,' now running at His Majesty's, is entirely by Mr. Noel Coward. He wrote the libretto, the song words (euphemistically called lyrics—a prostitution of a word that has as definite and choice a meaning in poetry as chamber-music has in music), and also (we are told) 'composed' the tunes. What, then, is a composer? For Mr. Coward's share in the 'composing' consisted of picking out the tunes on a pianoforte, the writing down (perhaps the harmony as well, but there is some doubt about this) and orchestration being done by two subordinates who were unnamed on the programme. Opinions differ as to the merit of the music thus syndically produced; nor indeed does that point arise here. What does arise is Mr. Coward's right to be called a composer. If he is a composer, another name must be invented for the man who can not only conceive a musical idea but can produce it, and give it shape and form—in a word, a man who can do the job from start to finish. We said above that some doubt exists as to the origin of the harmony. Mr. James Agate, in his notice of 'Bitter Sweet,' said that Mr. Coward was responsible for the melodies 'as originally executed on a baby grand.' The Daily Express critic suggested that, in fairness, the names of the transcriber and orchestrator should have been mentioned on the programme. This drew from Mr. Charles Cochran a letter in which he said:

> 'I am sure that the composer, Mr. Noel Coward, will be delighted if I remedy the omission by stating that the transcriber is Miss Elsie April, who has worked with Mr. Coward since 1923, and to whom he has dedicated his score [his score!] as a mark of gratitude. For the orchestration Mr. Coward was fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. I. A. de Orellana. . . . I think it only fair to add that the harmonies taken down by Miss April were note for note as Mr. Coward composed them.'

On the whole, Mr. Coward's claim to be called a composer is of the very slightest. Most people would hesitate before mentioning him in the same breath with Wagner and Mozart. Most people—but not all; and among the exceptions is Mr. James Agate. Writing in the Sunday Times of July 21, Mr. Agate, after speaking of Mr. Coward's 'genius,' says that nobody else has ever done it [that is, acted as librettist, composer, and producer] 'except Wagner. And "Meistersinger" is not strictly an operette.'

Having thus put one foot in it, Mr. Agate proceeds to plant the other even deeper. He goes on:

> 'Consider what Mr. Coward's achievement means. Mozart had need of Beaumarchais, Richard Strauss of Hofmannsthal, Johann Strauss of lots of people, and ditto Oscar Straus. Offenbach, Lecocq, Planquette, Hervé, Audran, Messager, all the Frenchmen had their librettists . . .'

We rubbed our eyes over the reference to Wagner; but we could hardly believe them when we saw this mention, in the same breath, of the most supremely gifted composer the world has ever known, and a smart young man who taps out reminiscent tunes on the pianoforte for one underling to write down and another to orchestrate. However, if Mr. Coward beats Mozart in one respect, Mozart wins in another. He had need of Beaumarchais, it is true; but he was able to do without a Miss April or a Mr. de Orellana.

On the day of the appearance of Mr. Agate's dithyramb the Referee contained an article by Mr. Irving Berlin entitled, 'How I became a song writer.' Mr. Berlin is another genius whose 'composing' stops short at the keyboard. We quote a naive passage. After mentioning that he would like to be a cartoonist, he says:

> 'Another thing I'd like to be is a musician—not simply a composer. It would be such a distinct advantage. I could get things done so much more quickly. And that would give me time to attempt other things than just the verse and chorus of a melody. My greatest pleasure would be to be able to write a real folk-song, like "Annie Laurie" for instance.
>
> 'You've probably heard that I don't even know the notes on the piano, but that isn't anything—well, so freakish. You might be able to write a story, yet not know how to type it. The keys of the typewriter transcribe the words of an author. So, then, the keys of the piano are the medium that transcribes the song of a composer.
>
> 'I have a music stenographer. He understands the science of music, and takes down the notes the same way I'd dictate a letter to him. Then I read it over. If it doesn't sound right I change it.'

We should say that Mr. Berlin's logic is almost as shaky as his musicianship, but for the fact that he has no musicianship wherewith to make the comparison. The keys of the pianoforte don't transcribe Mr. Berlin's songs; that job is done by his 'music stenographer.' The analogy to a composer who can't put his music on paper is an author who can't spell, let alone write. The one may be able to conceive a melody and the other a story, but both are illiterate, and the terms 'writer' and 'composer' are not for them. Mr. Berlin goes on:

> 'But I wouldn't give up my sense of melody to be the best musician in the world.'

He forgets—did he ever know?—that the greatest melodists have usually been found amongst the best musicians.

> 'Music is something you can learn in a college. Composition comes to you.'

It seems somehow to have missed Mr. Berlin.

'What does all this matter?' asks an impatient reader. It ought to matter a great deal that the editors of responsible journals should allow their contributors to write concerning music drivel that would be blue-pencilled if it had to do with any other art. So long as musicians complacently tolerate the sort of thing quoted above they cannot fairly complain if the great mass of the public still remains with no sense of values where music is concerned.

We don't suppose for a moment that Mr. Coward's withers will be wrung by anything we have written. Why should they be? He has the satisfaction of knowing that 'Bitter Sweet' will yield him about £250,000—which is even more than Mozart got as the result of collaborating with Beaumarchais. He can afford to laugh at mere musicians who deny that he is a composer, and who say that his 'music' bears less relation to the real thing than a 'Heartsalve Novelette' does to literature. We make this comparison for the benefit of Mr. Agate. He is not likely to find a music critic writing about plays and books and turning out nonsense comparable with that written by himself about music. If ever he does, we hope he'll have no mercy.

This quaint note is from an Iowan paper:

'The personnel of the orchestra is the same as at the initial concert, with the exception of Louis A. Meier, of Lostant, Ill., who will be timpanist for the orchestra. He will be featured in the famous timpany solo in the second movement of Beethoven's first symphony.'

We hope that the audience will not forget that more than one Louis is featured in this symphony.

Musical America has provided us with so much interest and entertainment over many years that we are sorry to hear of its end. We quote the obituary notice in the Musical Courier:

'The Musical Courier sheds a passing tear over the misfortunes of its one-time and short-time contemporary, and feels a sense of deep loneliness, for again our fifty-year-old journal is without competition anywhere in the world. During its half-century of ceaseless and profitable activity the Musical Courier has seen many other musical papers come hopefully and go inevitably. (The Musical Courier, for instance, has seen Musical America in bankruptcy twice, the first time in 1898.) And meanwhile our paper has marched progressively onward and upward, increasing in importance, prestige, power, and circulation, and able always to offer wider fields to its advertisers and to give better news service to its readers. The Musical Courier shall continue its forward course logically, steadily, successfully (and may we say it, modestly) with unabating confidence and deep pride.'

The Musical Times drops a tear as well, but prefers not to join the Courier in thanking God that it is not as other journals are. It cannot refrain, however, from pointing out that the Courier needn't feel so lonely. The Courier is not the only journal that has managed to live fifty years—the Musical Times was nearly forty years old before the Courier was even thought of. If the Musical Times possesses any other virtues beyond that of longevity, it leaves the proclamation thereof to its readers.

Few events of the coming season are likely to exceed in interest and importance the Delius Festival, which is announced for October 12, 16, 18, 23, 24, and November 1, under the auspices of the Royal Philharmonic Society, the B.B.C., and the Columbia Graphophone Company. A new work will be heard—a poem for voice and orchestra, 'A Late Lark'; and first performances in England will be of 'Arabesk' and the 'Gerda' episode from the opera 'Fennimore and Gerda.' The Festival will end with the 'Mass of Life.' The Royal Philharmonic and B.B.C. orchestras will take part, and the choral work will be shared by the Philharmonic Choir and the London Select Choir. At the time of writing the list of soloists is not available. The prime movers are Sir Thomas Beecham and Mr. Peter Warlock; Sir Thomas will conduct all the concerts. Full particulars are to be had from the Hon. Secretary, Delius Festival Committee, 90, Regent Street, W.1.

Messrs. Novello have in the press a supplement to 'The Choralist's Handbook,' consisting of twenty-four studies in sight-singing and choral interpretation by Sir Walford Davies, Dr. E. T. Sweeting, and Messrs. Thomas Dunhill, Geoffrey Shaw, Armstrong Gibbs, Julius Harrison, W. McNaught, and Harvey Grace. Like the studies in the 'Handbook,' this new set is provided with words, and is intended to serve for the study of technique and interpretation no less than for sight-reading purposes. Choirs who wish to develop their sight-singing are advised, however, to commence with the 'Handbook,' which contains ten octavo pages of hints on that subject and on choralism generally. The supplementary studies will be published on or about October 1.

We are glad to hear that the fact of the present year being the Centenary of Rubinstein's birth is not to be entirely overlooked. A special concert is being projected to take place at the Crystal Palace—a fitting venue, as it was the scene of many of his most successful appearances. We have no particulars as to the date of the proposed Centenary concert.

The Canterbury Festival of Drama and Music is running its course with great success as we make up this number of the Musical Times. We hope to include a summarised report in October.

Speaking at Malvern on July 17, Mr. Bernard Shaw said:

'Although I am rather a conceited man, and feel I could carry my head high compared with any other artist in England, I am quite sincerely and genuinely humble in the presence of Sir Edward Elgar. I recognise a greater art than my own, and a greater man than I can hope to be.'

This handsome tribute will be read with pleasure by musicians. It deserves to be placed on record also as being apparently the only public utterance in which Mr. Shaw has acknowledged himself to be second to any creative artist, living or dead.

The re-discovery of old composers goes on steadily. From a Scottish newspaper report of a musical service at a church near Berwick we learn that the programme included examples 'from the works of Descant, Faux, and Bourdon.'

We hope the choir will now turn its attention to those neglected masters Gymel, Organum, and Diaphony. We think, too, that the time is ripe for a performance of the best works of Hocket.

BERLIOZ AS MELODIST

By Tom. S. Wotton

Such an elusive thing as melody defies exact description, but probably Mr. Edwin Evans's definition that it is 'chiefly our recognition of the familiar' * is as good a one as we shall find. He goes on to say: 'I am convinced that that melody will gain the largest number of adherents which imposes on the listener of whatever standard [i.e., he includes trained musicians] the least effort in the direction of acquiring a new habit.' If this be true—and it would be difficult to bring conclusive arguments against it—it explains many things. It accounts for such a melody as the 'Joy' one of the Ninth being generally admired, since, laboriously constructed to be playable on the limited scale of the natural trumpet, it is the glorified quintessence of all the trumpet calls and hunting fanfares ever invented. It explains also why too much originality in a tune, too much deviation from the familiar, is against its ready acceptance. In the lower walks of musical life this is undoubtedly true. 'Feste,' by the way, quotes from a garbled translation of Berlioz's words. He said nothing about 'shallow musicians' and their funny little melodies. His expression is 'le bas peuple musical'—the vulgar musical herd, lovers of jazz and the like, who would probably be more bored by Brahms and Bach than by some of Berlioz's works. The latter's definition of music as 'the art of moving by a combination of sounds intelligent men endowed with special organs duly exercised' is sufficient to show that he did not seek the plaudits of the crowd, though (as Wagner admits) he might have won them had he condescended to write music for money.

To secure a minimum of effort on the part of the listener, the composer may make his melodies short, or he may construct them with bars identical or on the same pattern, so that the hearer, knowing half the tune, has learnt the rest. As regards the first plan—putting aside the setting of words—it must not be forgotten that brevity of theme may often originate quite as much from poverty of invention as from a deliberate attempt to make things easy for the groundlings. As an example of the second method, the 'Valhalla' theme of 'The Rhinegold' will serve as an illustration, with its first two bars repeated, and bars 6, 8, and 10 (all on the same pattern) mere repetitions of those immediately preceding each. I apologise for citing this passage of twenty bars, since, being a motif, it does not pretend to be a melody. But are there not many tunes that profess and call themselves melodies which follow much the same plan, and are even admired by misguided enthusiasts for possessing attributes vaguely suggestive of a 2-ft. rule?

There are no limits to the length of a melody. That it is usually some multiple of four bars—the first three in most cases—is probably due to the human habit of thinking in twos rather than threes. To the ordinary person a clock, though its ticks are perfectly even, sounds 'tick, tick: tick, tick.' He has a difficulty in hearing it as 'tick, tick, tick,' while such a feat as making it perform in five or seven time is beyond him. It is this habit, dating from prehistoric man's first drum-beat, that accounts for the square-cut nature of most of the melodies of the world. But surely it is possible to understand that someone with a keen sense of rhythm who could hear a clock ticking in uneven numbers, might resent being tied to a legacy bequeathed us by Pithecanthropus erectus? Berlioz, who perhaps initiated the intricacies of modern rhythms, was such a one. Schumann long ago pointed out that the second half of his themes rarely corresponds with the first—without however condemning the practice, and certainly not suggesting that it affected their vocal character, since he advocated the singing of Berlioz's melodies not sotto voce but full-throatedly, the better to appreciate and understand them. Whether his advice was intended for 'le bas peuple musical,' or for men with organs duly exercised, I do not know. And the same doubt arises over the present discussion. Are Berliozians called upon to prove the melodiousness of the master to the whistler who has managed to learn the themes of the Hungarian March, or to trained musicians? Are we addressing those whose melodic horizon is bounded by a double-chant, or those whose vision is long enough to grasp the forty-five bar melody in 'The Childhood of Christ,' to which, I believe, the late Charles Maclean was the first to draw attention?

Brought up in an atmosphere practically musicless, Berlioz had behind him no tradition as regards melodies. He came under the influence of the 'familiar' when it was too late for his melodic originality to be destroyed, though naturally it was modified through hearing the works of his favourite composers. His normal mode of musical expression was by means of melody, and his wonderful orchestration was the outcome of it. As an orator, sensitive to the value of words, realises the precise tone suited to a particular phrase, so Berlioz knew instinctively the instruments best fitted to emphasise the meaning of his musical speech. He admits that 'it is open to anyone to question the value of his melodies, their distinction, their novelty, their charm,' but, he insists, 'to deny their existence is dishonest or foolish.' And, I would add, to compare them (in many cases) with those conceived on a different principle is unreasonable. To take an extreme case—and unfortunately in arguing one often has to take them—how is it possible to compare our Ex. 4 with (say) the theme of the Andante of the 'Surprise' Symphony, which, for aught I know, might be included amongst the hundred 'fine tunes' of Haydn, jotted down at lightning speed by the average musician. (We must remember that the present discussion is about tunes—just tunes, and has nothing to do with their appropriateness, their suitability for thematic treatment, or even to the voice or instrument for which they were intended.) One does not compare Walt Whitman's 'Ode to Death' (known to musicians through Holst's setting) with a sonnet, bound by strict rules as to length, rhymes, and metre. If we must have a comparison, we must select a melody of Haydn's of twenty or thirty bars, surely not an impossible task for the aforesaid average musician, especially as the old master claimed to possess a recipe for the making of melodies—he needed one, poor man, for his position of Court Musician! That is, he did consciously what a Schubert would do unconsciously, and he is not alone in his manufacture of melodies. What about Beethoven hammering out the fine theme of the Andante of the C minor Symphony from the bald tune found in the sketch books? And then achieving only eight bars for all his labour! The result may be ascribed to the 'infinite capacity for taking pains,' but by no stretch of language can the process be described as fertility of invention. To say that Berlioz never resorted to the art of melody-making would be a mis-statement. In the course of polishing his work retouching would be inevitable. But it certainly never occurred to him to curb his natural expression, and force the second half of his tunes to balance the first, or boil down one of twenty bars to one of eight, merely to oblige listeners 'of whatever standard' who craved for the 'familiar.' It never struck him that 'intelligent men with special organs duly exercised' required tunes cut to the same pattern as the petites drôleries that appealed to 'le bas peuple musical.'

* 'The Margin of Music.' As I am unfortunately unable to lay hands on the book, I am indebted to Miss Norah H. Bore's admirable article on 'The Material of Music' (Musical Times, May, 1929) for my quotation. It is significant that both she and Dr. George Dyson, from whose 'Rhythm and Melody' she also quotes, agree substantially with Mr. Evans.

But although Berlioz did not write for the latter, yet, according to Wagner,* at least one of his works—the 'Funeral and Triumphal' Symphony—is within the comprehension of the populace. 'When I heard the Symphony,' he says, '. . . I had a strong feeling that the first gamin in a blue blouse and red cap ought to understand it completely.' As he makes no reservations, and describes the work as 'grand and noble from the first to the last note,' we may take it that he was not particularly referring to the main theme (Ex. 1) of the last of the three movements as especially appealing to the hypothetical gamin:

Ex. 1. Allegro non troppo e pomposo

He included such melodies as this from the 'Funeral Oration':

Ex. 2. Andantino poco lento e sostenuto

* From a letter addressed to a Dresden magazine, and dated May 5, 1841. It is to be found in 'Wagner, musiciens, poètes et philosophes' (Paris, 1887), a selection from Wagner's writings translated by Camille Benoit.

and the first and second subjects of the first movement, of twenty and thirty bars respectively. One is tempted to quote the latter, beginning:

Ex. 3. Moderato un poco lento

But perhaps the former is better adapted to stand the fierce light that necessarily beats upon a single melodic line. (How often would the bare tunes of many an acknowledged masterpiece induce an overwhelming desire to hear the work?) Here it is:

Ex. 4. Moderato un poco lento

On its repetition it is somewhat modified, following the frequent practice of Berlioz, resembling that of a fluent speaker emphasising a statement, and by very reason of his fluency, not employing precisely the same words. The method perhaps makes things confusing for the whistling gentleman, but possibly Wagner realised that the French are not a whistling nation.

Of like vigour to Ex. 1 is the 'Song of the Bretons,' with its sixteen bars carefully halved, making at least one concession to the 'familiar':

Ex. 5. Allegro fieramente (♩. = 90)

And there is a swing about the 'Chorus of Goldsmiths' from 'Benvenuto Cellini' that should appeal to any audience:

Ex. 6. Allegro con fuoco (♩. = 184)

Hans von Bülow, by the way, wrote a ' Humorous Quadrille ' on melodies from the opera. Whether they would all be admitted as ' fine ' is of course a matter of opinion, because the value of an operatic air depends so much on the dramatic situation.

To turn to a totally different style of melody, take the first air of Chorèbe in ' The Trojans ' (Act 1, Scene 3) :

Ex. 7. Larghetto (♩ = 63)

The septet from the same opera, which Sir Henry Hadow includes amongst the melodies of Berlioz that ' place him incontrovertibly in the first rank of musicians,'* hardly lends itself to quotation. But in another instance he cites—the ' Chorus of Shepherds ' from ' The Childhood of Christ '—the upper part gives as good an idea of the whole as the treble one of a hymn tune :

* ' Studies in Modern Music,' 4th Ed. (1898), p. 137.

Ex. 8. Allegretto. (♩. = 50)

It was this chorus with which the composer mystified Paris by attributing it to a mythical Pierre Ducré of the 17th century, when, as Fétis pointed out, they did not modulate. Here, no one could reasonably carp, but elsewhere Sir Henry and others have reproached Berlioz for the modulatory character of his tunes. The first example the former gives is however hardly convincing. He cites the charming ' Villanelle ' of ' The Summer Nights '—scarcely the product of one who could not invent tunes—which he describes as beginning in A major, and ' after two or three bars thrown over the wall into B flat ' :

Ex. 9 Allegretto. (♩=96)

To slide into the chromatic chord on the minor second (considered by some as one of the available triads of the key), and then immediately return to A major by means of a chord formed of the third, minor ninth, and thirteenth of the tonic—a tolerably common one—does not seem a very serious crime. In any case the transient modulation (if it be such) is justified by the words, ' Quand auront disparu les froids ' (' When the frosts shall have passed '), the composer seeking to illustrate the contrast between winter and spring. Nevertheless, there can be no question that Berlioz did modulate in many of his melodies more than is acceptable to the slaves of the 'familiar,' and at times ended them in another key. Whether we account it a mannerism or impute it to some vague adumbration of atonality matters little. It was part and parcel of his musical expression, and we must accept it in the same way that we accept in all the masters things we would not tolerate in others. True love is proverbially blind! *

Another chorus from which the upper line will bear quoting is 'The Menace of the Franks,' beginning:

Ex. 10. Allegro fieramente (♩ = 132)

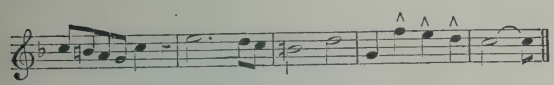
and later:

Ex. 11.



both modulating within their energetic eight bars.

As one nears the confines of the generous amount of space for musical quotations allowed by the Editor, one is more plagued by 'alternatives' than any cross-word puzzler—the more so because it is impossible to gauge the amount of ignorance of Berlioz's works on which the accusation of unmelodiousness is based, or the hardness of heart—or hearing—of those who make it. Weingartner relates† how he sat down to read the score of the Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini'—the first of Berlioz's he had seen—firmly convinced of the truth of the legend that the French master had no gift of melody. Before he had finished the introduction he had discovered three 'expressive themes, one of them a melody of absolutely classic beauty'—the one in D major, twenty-three bars long. Later he found two more, making five 'grand themes, all plastic, original, of admirable workmanship, varied in form, and rising gradually to a culminating point to finish with intense effect.' And not mere scraps, adapted for thematic treatment, but melodies of sixteen, twenty-three, twelve, twenty-one, and twenty bars respectively—all in a work playing about ten minutes! Weingartner was converted, and there is no need to impute to him any special virtues, either mental or physical, to account for his change of front. Few of us require to drink several dozen of a particular wine before we are assured of its possessing a certain attribute.

As to a knowledge of Berlioz's works, it seems almost an insult to quote any melody from the 'Fantastic' or (say) 'The Damnation of Faust.'

* Many years ago somebody was bold enough to read a paper before the Musical Association on the 'Mannerisms of Beethoven.' I forget what happened to his fragments!

† Le Guide Musicale, November 29, 1903.

Even the wondrous theme:

Ex. 12. Adagio (♩ = 100)

from the 'Love Scene' of the 'Romeo and Juliet' Symphony, which has affected several composers from Gounod to Wagner, must be fairly well-known. The 'Harold' Symphony has not been given in London of late years, but surely anyone who has heard it must have felt the melodic charm of the 'Pilgrims' March.' Here is the first strain of eight bars, with the modulation at the end, to which Hadow objected:

Ex. 13. Allegretto (♩ = 96)

Thrice more the same thing happens in a varied form, the idea being the pilgrims stopping every few paces to mutter their litanies—a realistic effect that scarcely interferes with the beauty of the tunes.* And surely the theme of Harold himself is admirably adapted for whistling? Although the broadcast 'Requiem' may have meant as little to the majority of the 'listeners' as any other Mass, some of them must have grasped the melody of the 'Lacrymosa' and that of the tenor solo of the 'Sanctus,' together with its attendant fugue:

Ex. 14. Allegro non troppo (♩ = 56)

which drew from the critic of the Athenæum (on the first performance of the work in England in 1883) the remark that 'whatever may have been the causes of Berlioz's antipathy to fugues in general, inability to compose in that style was certainly not one.'

Although Novello's published an English edition of 'The Summer Nights' as long ago as forty years, the work is not well-known, so no excuse is needed for quoting 'Absence':

Ex. 15. Adagio (♩ = 44)

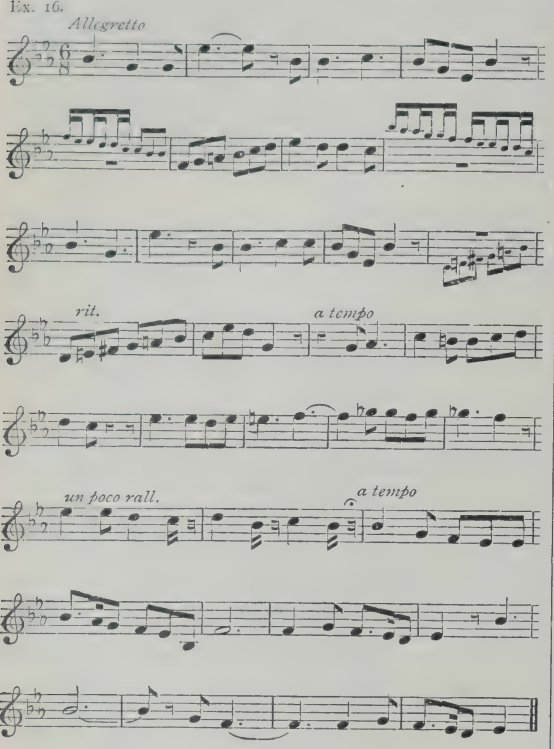
* To avoid verbal repetition one uses tune and melody as synonymous words, but is there not a difference between them in the minds of most? I personally should describe the canon between clarinet and bassoon as the finest tune of Beethoven's fourth Symphony, while undoubtedly the theme of the Adagio is the finest melody.

which, especially in its proper orchestral setting, is one of the songs of the world.

To conclude, the 'Aubade' (composed in 1834 and revised in 1850) might be chosen as a good specimen of Berlioz's melodiousness, though there are many others that might take its place:

Ex. 16.



By way of epilogue, I would venture to suggest with all due deference that Berlioz affords some musicians a convenient safety-valve. It is an open question whether the admirers of Gluck or Handel did not derive quite as much satisfaction from their vilification of Piccini or Bononcini as from the glorification of their favourites; whether the followers of Brahms or Wagner, in more recent times, did not find more enjoyment in screaming abuse of the opposite camp than in chanting the praises of their own elected idol. It is quite probable that Spohr and Weber obtained more honest fun from their tiltings at Beethoven's Symphonies than from their subsequent recantation. We all require 'to let off steam' at times, and musicians are not exempt from human frailties. Having piously told their beads at the shrine of the C minor for the two-hundred-and-forty-ninth time, they have an irresistible desire to mingle invective with their devotions. The question is—on whom? Now Berlioz, for many reasons that cannot be here detailed, is an ideal object for this pent-up emotion. His very originality, and his deviations from the 'familiar,' render him peculiarly open to attack. His admirers need not be unduly distressed. He still survives, and, as Weingartner epigrammatically remarked, 'will never grow out of fashion, since he never had anything in common with it.'

THE PRESENT STATE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION IN ENGLAND

By Herbert Hilton (Cape Town)

It is upwards of a year ago since Sir Henry Wood's strictures on present-day singing were quoted in these columns, and no adverse comment, as far as I am aware, from any external source appeared. But an admirable article which stressed the over-emphasisation of words, rhythm, and interpretation at the expense of the voice as a wind instrument was contributed by Mr. W. S. Drew (Musical Times for April, 1928), and now, through the agency of a recent mail, South Africans are informed that Sir Thomas Beecham has commented upon the condition of singing in much the same language as that employed by Sir Henry. This being the case, I have decided to dwell upon certain facts that appear to be unknown to writers whose enthusiasm for the subject is beyond question. These facts, if they concerned any other subject than singing, would undoubtedly be regarded as important, and I would therefore beg the reader to put aside the old prejudiced view that singers, as a class, are deficient in musicianship. Moreover, in fairness, it should be remembered that neither the pianoforte nor the violin received such a set-back in the evolution of their technical side as the art of singing experienced nearly forty years ago.

This, by way of preliminary, would seem to suffice; but it is right to add that when vocal history is touched upon it would be preferable to look back sixty years, i.e., about the time of Santley's going to Italy to study under Gaetano Nava. However, this would entail much research, and would unduly lengthen this article; a personal experience of forty years' professional life should suffice, or forty-six years' continuous singing—for I did not rest during the 'breaking' stage.

For the benefit of the younger reader it must here be mentioned that Nava taught Santley, Foli, and J. B. Welch at one and the same time, and that the last-named taught the late Henry Blower, whose important prophecy is mentioned later.

As a direct descendant of Nava I have been faithful to his method for thirty-six years, and thus do not plead guilty to Sir Henry's charge of 'running' about from teacher to teacher. So it has occurred to me that I am not altogether unqualified to speak against the commonly-held views that we singers are poor musicians, and that singing masters of the early days either would not or could not explain the technical side of singing.

I will now endeavour to assign the responsibility for the set-back that English vocal technique (which was being satisfactorily evolved from Italian, and to some extent from French sources) received at the hands of musicians, and critics in particular.

AN INSIDIOUS INFLUENCE

I date this setback to about the time of the advent of artists from the Continent, who gave in London the form of concert now known as the 'vocal recital.' It became an insidious influence, affecting all but a few half-trained students, and all but a few professors. The former were beginning to increase rapidly, the economic factor arose, and many succumbed to the attractive influence upon audiences of the methods employed by the vocal recitalist—and for a very good reason. This has probably been forgotten, so explanation is needed for the benefit of those who are young enough to have missed hearing the vocal giants of the 'nineties. In those days, students were told that their professors were not good musicians; that, for example, the greatest bass of the day had broken down at the final rehearsals of the Norwich Festival, and, as a poor musician and sight-reader, he had to be assisted by Madame —— in his part. Suspicion as to the capabilities of the average singing-master was abroad, and, what was worse, the professional critics of the day added to the students' mental uncertainty by emphasising the virtues of the Continental artist. Actually these critics ignored the necessity for a well-set singing technique, and asked the young English singer to show in his work 'atmosphere,' 'expression,' 'tone-colour,' 'interpretation,' 'impressionism,' 'word-painting,' and so forth. With what result? Organists (I was one at the time), composers, conductors, and every type of all-round musician joined in the general chorus of approval when these virtues were demanded. One could scarcely blame them (though, personally, I was soon taught to think differently), for there was good cause for doubt as to the ability of the average singing-master. I shall never forget my amazement when, just before coming to South Africa, I interviewed the late Dr. —— at a well-known teaching institution with reference to a position on his staff. He gave me details of how his brother's wife had had her voice entirely spoiled by two of the most prominent and respected professors in London.

Soon after the critics had demanded 'interpretation' and 'expression' in English singers, one heard of people entering the profession whose voices were indifferent, but whose work was extremely 'artistic.' The birth of the 'Impressionistic School' was talked of on the one hand; and on the other, the question was asked as to where were the singers to take the places of the famous Festival quartet—Albani, Patey, Lloyd, and Santley. This question not only proved that a section of the public were not convinced by the new style of singing, but it also showed that behind this gathering cloud over vocal technique there existed the inevitable 'silver lining.' In other words, a few stalwarts were resisting this premature employment of expression, for it was clear that the demand had emanated from people who had not realised the importance of a well-set technique, a mechanism, an automaticity, which should be as reliable (granted good health) as is the beautifully finished pianoforte action which the modern pianist finds beneath his fingers—provided by a logically-minded manufacturer.

Two instances will suffice to show how damaging to students and to the development of technique was this over-emphasis on expression. Examples from Covent Garden will surely satisfy; I refer to its most palmy period, that of the 'nineties.

In the first case students used to attend Covent Garden, and, admiring the finished artist, they specially noted his ability to sing sustained notes —evidently the sign of the vocal 'oak tree,' or finished article; yet the next day when they practised they found at the very beginning of their vocal primer sustained notes; nor did it occur to them to ask, in their inexperience, what was the vocal equivalent of the acorn! The other example was very much more flagrant, for it reflected on the moral courage (where technique was concerned) of certain professors. Students after attending operatic performances frequently discussed the soloists next morning with their professors, and the opinions expressed would be brought down to the common-room and further discussed—with what result? That the work of the most technically perfect soprano in those days was described as 'perfect, but extremely cold.' And so an evolving and promising technique received a bad slap in the face, and the more impatient students turned to that harbour of refuge, 'impressionism,' with its tricks and 'fakes.' It would have been more creditable if the teachers concerned had pointed out that neither in the case of Adelina Patti nor Charles Santley had perfect technique stood in the way of adequate interpretation.

It should be noted that similar impressionistic methods had for several years been in use in the sister art of painting, but the legitimacy of such a procedure turned upon the nature of the art medium. One does not damage the human body if one fakes 'effects' with the medium known as paint.

To sum up: Is it any wonder that people are now remarking upon the absence of good singers? On the other hand, such writers as remember the great singers of forty years ago regard the average vocal control of to-day as mixed, mongrel, or hybrid.

A PROPHECY FULFILLED

Among the stalwarts who upheld the lyrical standard were two professors who possessed voices with which to illustrate their vocal principles: they were the late Henry Blower and the late Gustave Garcia, of the Royal College. (In fairness it must be stated that Mr. Frederic King, happily still alive, is admirably upholding the Nava tradition at the Royal Academy.) I studied with the first-named, and during a three-years' scholarship I am proud to say that I became his friend as well as pupil, chiefly because I had the privilege of playing for him during lessons, which often numbered a couple of dozen weekly. He was the 'father' of that happy band of sixty scholars in the early days of the National Training School under Sullivan.

It will be remembered that a few years ago the correspondence that passed between Madame Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) and Sir George Grove was published in the Musical Times. It is stated that she refused to join the staff of the Royal College because Sir George could not guarantee vocal unanimity among his singing teachers, but she consented to act as an examiner. Under these circumstances she examined a batch of Henry Blower's pupils at the very outset of his career as a teacher, and she was so delighted with the work that she asked Sir George to send for Mr. Blower so that she could offer him her congratulations. This testimony to his worth was again strikingly upheld by Mr. Harold Samuel when in Cape Town recently as an examiner for the Associated Board. He explained to me that he often acted as accompanist when he (Blower) was at the prime of his experience. Mr. Samuel dwelt on his fine musicianship, his beautiful musical mind, and admitted that he had learned a great deal from one whose attitude towards his art was exceptional.

Now I admit that the above is unusual matter to insert in an article of this type, but I have purposely drawn attention to the late Henry Blower's qualities in order to give weight to his prophecy. He foretold that the premature insistence on expression in student work would gravely imperil if not actually destroy vocal technique. How true this seems to be, after thirty-six years!

OF LIKE MIND: SIR HENRY J. WOOD

Is it not something of a coincidence that the gentleman who was the last to offer me an engagement before my departure for South Africa* should now express the opinion that the premature study of interpretation is the main reason why there are so few competent singers in England? In doing so, Sir Henry has unconsciously upheld the late Mr. Blower's dictum. Unanimity here! But this is not the only hopeful sign, for reading between the lines of contributions to the musical and daily press, I am of opinion that there is much more latent agreement in singing-teaching circles than is actually acknowledged. It should result in England becoming a recognised centre of all that is truly healthy, sound, and sincere in singing; but such a happy consummation must inevitably turn upon the technical side of the art receiving its just recognition, and therefore occupying the position in the estimation of understanding teachers which it began to occupy nearly forty years ago.

THREE SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS UNANIMITY

In a contribution of the above type the reader will probably look for some constructive suggestions. Perhaps I may therefore be allowed to round off these details by recommending (as a result of teaching for thirty-five years the Nava principles) the three following points. These are: (1.) That the medium in singing is voice—vibrating air—and, correspondingly, the teacher must regard the point at issue as voice-control and not breath-control. (When one asks one's neighbour to pass the butter one does not expect the jug of cream!) (2.) That the usual mistakes in singing, such as throatiness and so forth, are merely the presentation of so many secondary fulcrums, and should be treated as effects and not causes, as they have been in the past. (3.) That if it is agreed (as it should be) that singing, technically considered, is the antithesis of pianoforte playing, seeing that the pianoforte is a perfect instrument and the voice is not, then the most important exercise used for the express purpose of rectifying this wind instrument's inefficiency must be one capable of defeating the more prominent of its imperfections at a single bound, so to speak. I have for several years used (at first intuitively) an exercise of this type; and its particular efficacy seems to lie in the fact that (during a sustained note or a long musical phrase) both slipping fulcrum and slipping finish can, respectively, be recreated and rejuvenated without taking, to assist this rectifying process, a new breath!

The logic of this should be apparent to the reflective reader, for whereas golf, cricket, tennis, or billiards are games of discontinuity (individual strokes), singing is essentially a matter of continuity. Taking a new breath disturbs, and does not give the human body the chance of acquiring, nor the owner of the voice the chance of appreciating, that physical reliability and direct intimacy with the sound (literally, the 'action' of the vocal instrument) which is possessed by the pianoforte through its perfect action. Hence it follows that as under modern conditions scales, reiterated exercises, and pages of semiquavers à la Czerny, are considered to a large extent unnecessary in teaching the pianoforte, the reverse is the case with singing. Therefore modern vocal studies had better be practised not only reiteratively and frequently, but they must, in their build, be possessed of, or suggest, graded cunning, sensitiveness, and intent. The pupil will then know exactly why and for what purpose they have been put together. Men in the past have wasted years over the physiological aspect of singing, instead of using their inventive powers to limit the intangibility of the art medium. But they will fail unless the resultant devices are, in effect, truly 'cats' calculated to catch this (vocal) 'mouse,' for the latter is the most elusive medium in the world of art.

* At the Norwich Festival of 1908—I was actually on the boat at Southampton when the letter was delivered at my home.

BERLIOZ'S 'LELIO': A STRASBOURG PERFORMANCE

By W. G. Whittaker

Berlioz is much in the air at present, and most thinking musicians who have read the recent discussions in the Musical Times and elsewhere are no doubt taking stock of their opinion of that composer. Even the most hardened anti-Berliozites are bound to consider whether their failure to respond to his music is due to lack of sufficient intimacy with the subject, or to a psychological lack of contact. I cannot pretend to any special knowledge, nor to any particular viewpoint; I have been mostly content to sit upon the fence. It was therefore with some excitement that I saw, when motoring through Alsace, on holiday bent, an announcement of a performance of 'Lelio' at Strasbourg. As everyone knows, 'Lelio ou le Retour à la Vie,' Monodrame Lyrique, was written as an epilogue to the 'Symphonie fantastique,' to conclude that early and masterly work on the supposition that its episodes and final catastrophe were a dream. We occasionally hear the Symphony; Sir Hamilton Harty's vivid performance of it at a National Symphony Concert last year stirred many people to a desire for repetitions and a more practical acquaintance with the works of the elusive Frenchman. Reading in the quiet of a study is one thing, but the concert-room frequently reveals far different aspects.

I must confess to having examined 'Lelio' only casually, and that its wild grotesque scheme, or lack of scheme, prejudiced me against it. One is always dubious of sequels, especially when they form no part of the plan originally in the creative artist's mind. The chaotic rantings of the actor, the extraordinary mixture of musical and spoken media, the confusion of ideas, the theatricality of the device of drawing a curtain and revealing conductor, chorus, and orchestra, are sufficient to antagonise one's mind at once and prevent one from examining the music itself in detail. I looked forward, therefore, with much curiosity to the performance. It was held in the restaurant of the Orangerie, a kind of Zoo garden pleasure resort; the movements of the waiters, the chink of coin in payment for liquid refreshment, and the holiday attitude of the crowd, were factors which would somewhat disturb the stolid Britisher's attitude towards serious music. The forces were the Municipal Orchestra, under the direction of M. E. G. Munch, and the local Chœur de St. Guillaume.

It was a disappointment to find that the work was not given in its entirety, but represented by only four extracts. The opening number was the 'Chanson de Brigands,' for baritone solo, male chorus, and orchestra. No one can take brigands in the Byronic vein of Berlioz; the average Englishman is willing enough to laugh at them in musical comedy or enjoy them in a mild way in opera, but to regard them as other than a collection of vagabonds and ruffians and in the light shone by the romantic Hector is not his wont. Apart from that, however, the number proved attractive. One leading theme, a drop of a fourth on strings and wind, answered immediately a semitone lower by brass, has an innate savagery about it which removes the music far from the conventional stage chorus. The 'Chœur d'Ombres,' for mixed choir and orchestra, proved more than interesting. The colour effects, as one might imagine, were entrancing, even though they were partially ruined by the inability of the chorus to keep in tune. With 'La Harpe Eolienne' (for orchestra only) we came to the real Berlioz; it revealed much charm.

The chief number was the 'Fantasie sur la Tempête, de Shakespeare,' an odd insertion into the oddest scheme ever conceived by musician. Most students are familiar with it only through the extract in Berlioz's treatise on orchestration, where he quotes his treatment of the pianoforte (with two performers) as an experiment in scoring. Though effective enough, the pianoforte was soon lost in the mass of sound, and there was a little sense of disappointment when one recalled the brilliant modern usage of Stravinsky and de Falla. The plan of the 'Fantasie' is curious. It begins with a choral and orchestral invocation to Miranda in Italian, the 'Chœur d'Esprits de l'Air,' and merges into a lengthy, almost purely orchestral, series of movements, beginning with upper strings (the famous counterpart of the 'Vorspiel' to 'Lohengrin' in the use of four solo violins), flutes, clarinets, and pianoforte duet (mostly in the higher registers). Afterwards the string basses, 'cellos, and violas enter, and lead to the dénouement for full orchestra. The choir only has short phrases addressed to Miranda and Caliban. The scheme as a whole is unsatisfactory. The use of the choir is too incidental; the final climax calls for united forces. But there is much fascinating music, to say nothing of delightful scoring. Every now and then, when one feels that the harmonic basis is becoming threadbare, there occurs one of those abrupt, almost uncouth, modulations which arrest interest and create a sense of great power. Altogether one felt that this music had been unduly neglected, and one wondered why British choral societies have not exploited it and added to their rather limited Berlioz repertory. It is true that few conductors could dare to produce the entire 'Lelio' as the composer planned it, but that is no reason why the best numbers should be relegated to obscurity. If I remember rightly, Breitkopf issues the work with English words. Perhaps this firm might be induced to publish the better parts separately. The work needs a good orchestra, as interest lies chiefly in that direction. It would be an interesting programme to give the Symphony, with these extracts, which take half an hour to perform, as a sequel.

The concert ended with Brahms's 'Gipsy Songs,' arranged by the conductor for vocal quartet, choir, and orchestra. Here the chorus showed its mettle much more satisfactorily, and sang in German. The venture in three languages was not so surprising as it would have been in an English city, for Strasbourg is bilingual; it is not uncommon in the shops to be wished, 'Guten Abend, Monsieur.'

A TRIBUTE TO GERHARDT

By Charles W. Orr

I do not suppose that I am the only person who is annoyed by a section of Lilliputian sharpshooters who have made it their business in recent years to indulge in petty and foolish criticisms of the singing of Elena Gerhardt. I know these people well: they belong to the army of unsuccessful professional vocalists and self-satisfied students of singing, of whom there are so many in England, whose chief pleasure in life consists in snatching a fearful joy from pouring streams of verbal acidity over any artist who is definitely among the elect. These midget-critics sometimes assume an air of patronage; sometimes it will take the form of a contemptuous pity for those incapable of seeing the flaws in their idol. In either case I find their attitude insufferable. One would have thought that Gerhardt, who is admittedly one of the greatest Lieder-singers of the century, would have been immune from this gutter-snipery, but these curious individuals spare no one. Needless to say, Gerhardt's reputation is in no way affected by these attacks, but it may be of interest to examine some criticisms that are made of her singing if only to expose their complete falsity.

A common complaint is that she sings a great many songs too slowly. Mr. Turner knocked this nonsense on the head in one of his essays published some years ago, in the course of which he complains that almost all music is performed too fast nowadays, and I, for one, constantly hear soloists, especially pianists, whose craze for speed would seem to indicate that Brooklands, and not the concert platform, is their proper environment. The fact is that Gerhardt, as Mr. Turner points out, far from singing too slowly, is merely giving certain songs their correct interpretation, so that such things as 'Du bist die Ruh',' 'An die Musik,' 'Feldeinsamkeit,' and many other masterpieces, are sung by her with complete understanding of their essential character, which demands a deliberate, slow, long-breathed rendering, if their full beauty is to be revealed. After the hasty, scrambling performances of these songs inflicted on us by countless incompetent singers, Gerhardt's tempos may seem slow to the unthinking listener, but a moment's thought should convince even the most obtuse that she is simply providing a magnificent object-lesson in interpretation and in the technique that makes such interpretation possible. As Mr. Turner rightly points out, there is more sheer artistry in Gerhardt's singing of a Schubert song in slow tempo than in all the avian acrobatics of a Tettrazini—a view shared, I should imagine, by every lover of musical singing. Indeed the dignity with which Gerhardt invests certain songs is entirely due to her capacity for singing them in slow tempo and at the same time maintaining an even, lovely tone throughout. In short, the correct answer to give to those who complain of her dragging the pace is, 'Don't you wish you could do the same?'

Another constantly repeated remark is that she owes everything to Nikisch. In other words, we are to suppose that Gerhardt is merely a mechanical automaton which Nikisch originally set in motion, and which has gone on working ever since obedient to this ghostly mainspring. It would be equally true to say that Josef Hoffmann owes everything to the great Rubinstein, or that Suggia owes everything to her studies with Casals. Let us grant that any young artist stands to gain enormously by being brought into contact with a musician of ripe experience who has also the capacity to impart the fruits of his knowledge to a gifted pupil. But having admitted that, it is quite obvious that the greatest teacher in the world can achieve remarkable results only if he has superb material to work on, and such material Nikisch found in Gerhardt. That he was conscious of her genius is clear from a letter he wrote to a friend in America just before her first recital in New York. 'I am sure,' he wrote, 'that the Americans, musical as they are, will be astounded by her extraordinary art.' Words like these do not suggest that Gerhardt was at any time a kind of Trilby, singing under the influence of a Svengali-Nikisch. A gifted pupil learns from a great teacher a knowledge of how to make the best possible use of his or her talents—neither more nor less, and doubtless Gerhardt profited by her association with Nikisch to this extent, but to say that she 'owes everything' to him is stark nonsense. (Incidentally, the legend that Gerhardt was more 'inspired' when Nikisch accompanied her is quite unfounded. Gerhardt sang equally beautifully when accompanied by Paula Hegner; and it is pretty certain that had these two played for her from behind a screen no one in the audience would have known from Gerhardt's singing who was accompanying any particular song.)

Finally, there are complaints that her voice is not what it was. To this one may reply that admittedly some of that exquisite 'velvety' tone has somewhat deteriorated as far as her higher notes are concerned, and that the passing of years has not left her breath-control entirely unimpaired; these two defects resulting nowadays in a certain hardness in forte passages and a slight unsteadiness in long, sustained phrases. But having said this one has said all. The lovely voice is still capable of conveying the most varied emotions by means of the subtlest gradations of tone, and has never lost that extraordinary moving quality that is lacking in the vocal timbre of even so delightful an artist as Elisabeth Schumann, and which one recognises again with pleasure in the singing of Lottie Lehmann. To pretend, as do some of the 'superior people,' that Gerhardt's voice has deteriorated to the extent that it can give only a qualified pleasure to the listener is a pose that could only be adopted by that select circle of critical incapables. Her singing is still far and away more beautiful than that of nine-tenths of the vocalists who appear on our concert-platforms, and her art is as compelling and subduing as ever in its effect. Perhaps one of our musical institutions will at long last produce a singer who shall rival her; what is certain is that this genius-to-come will not spring from the ranks of the hyper-critics who sneer nowadays at one of the very greatest artists of the age.

CANONS OF MUSICAL JUDGMENT: THE QUESTION OF KEY-RELATIONSHIPS

By Hugh Arthur Scott

'When doctors differ who shall decide?'—especially when the doctors happen to be musical ones! For in this case no subsequent coroner's inquest is available for a final verdict.

I have been moved to the reflection by an amusing conflict of judgments on the part of two musical practitioners of the highest eminence, namely, M. Vincent d'Indy and Prof. Donald Tovey, which is disclosed in articles which they have contributed to Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music, the subject at issue—I had nearly written corpus vile—being César Franck's String Quartet. A more striking example of diversity of opinion on the part of the best-equipped authorities it would indeed be hard to find.

In other words, while M. d'Indy can scarcely find words sufficiently eloquent in which to express his admiration of the quartet in question, as one of the greatest works of its class ever written, Prof. Tovey rates it so poorly as to reckon it hardly worthy of serious consideration at all. Let me quote a few words from each, beginning with M. d'Indy:

> 'With this last of César Franck's chamber compositions we are surveying the most astonishing conception of the mind of this genius in tonal architecture. . . . The first movement presents absolutely new features, and is to this day absolutely unique in the history of music. . . . No musician before Franck had ventured to attempt so marvellous a feat, none has since attempted it. [The reference is to the form of the first movement.] . . . But—and so it always is with a masterpiece—the hearer has no idea of the unusual structure of this work of art, a structure to whose influence he must yet perforce yield with the certainty attained that here is a mighty work that charms his very soul and raises him to heights whereon eternal beauty is enthroned. . . . Since the Andantes of Beethoven's last quartets we do not think it possible to instance in the whole range of music anything so lofty, so perfectly beautiful in conception, in proportion, and in its total effect than this prayer-like slow movement.'

Prof. Tovey, on the other hand, writes (in his article on 'Chamber Music'):

> 'We must not confuse the criteria of mere part-writing with those of the treatment of an instrument as a whole. There is no reason why a string quartet should not, by reason of double stops, produce a passage that effectively imitates an octet. But there is no excuse for making a string quartet play for pages together in such masses of double stops that there is no more evidence of four individual players than in a pianoforte four-hand duet. It is no defence that such writing (as in Grieg's G minor Quartet) is "effective"; to prolong it is to do a ridiculously easy thing at the expense of all higher

(Continued on p. 821.)

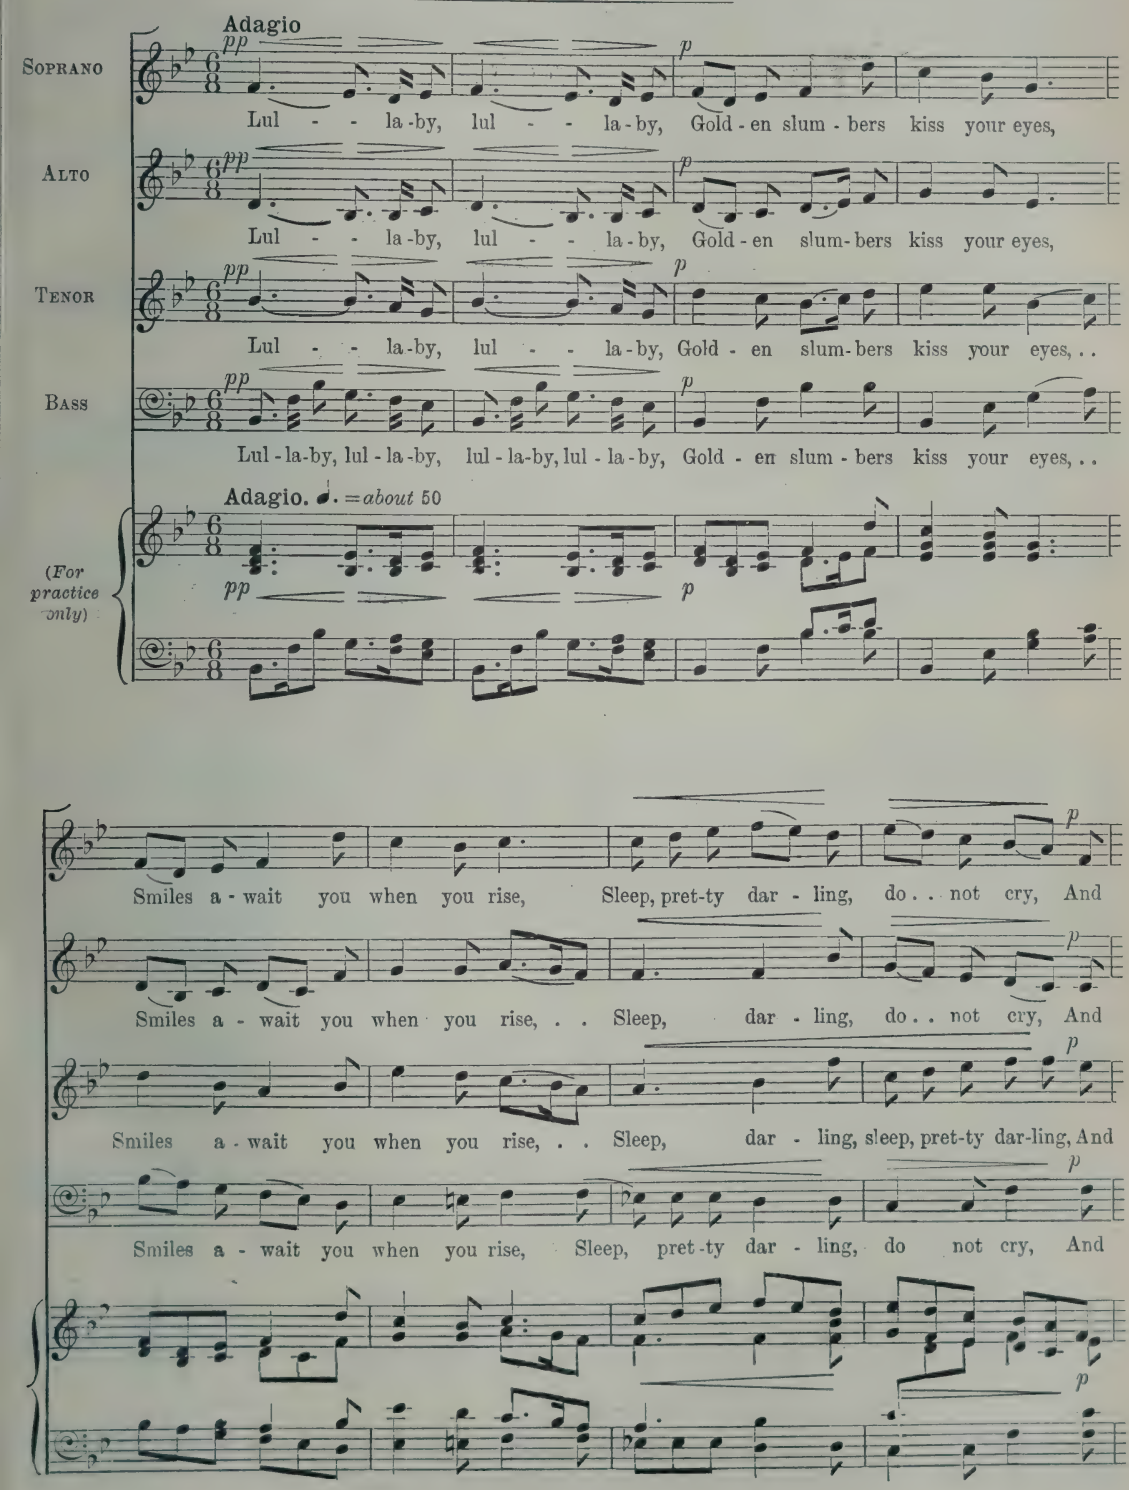
Golden Slumbers

FOUR-PART SONG

17th Century Air
Arranged by H. A. Chambers

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Adagio
Soprano
Lul - - la-by, lul - - la-by, Gold-en slum-bers kiss your eyes,
Alto
Lul - - la-by, lul - - la-by, Gold-en slum-bers kiss your eyes,
Tenor
Lul - - la-by, lul - - la-by, Gold-en slum-bers kiss your eyes, . .
Bass
Lul-la-by, lul-la-by, lul-la-by, lul-la-by, Gold-en slum-bers kiss your eyes, . .
Adagio. ♩. = about 50
(For practice only)
Smiles a-wait you when you rise, Sleep, pret-ty dar-ling, do . . not cry, And Smiles a-wait you when you rise, . . Sleep, dar-ling, do . . not cry, And Smiles a-wait you when you rise, . . Sleep, dar-ling, sleep, pret-ty dar-ling, And Smiles a-wait you when you rise, Sleep, pret-ty dar-ling, do not cry, And mp

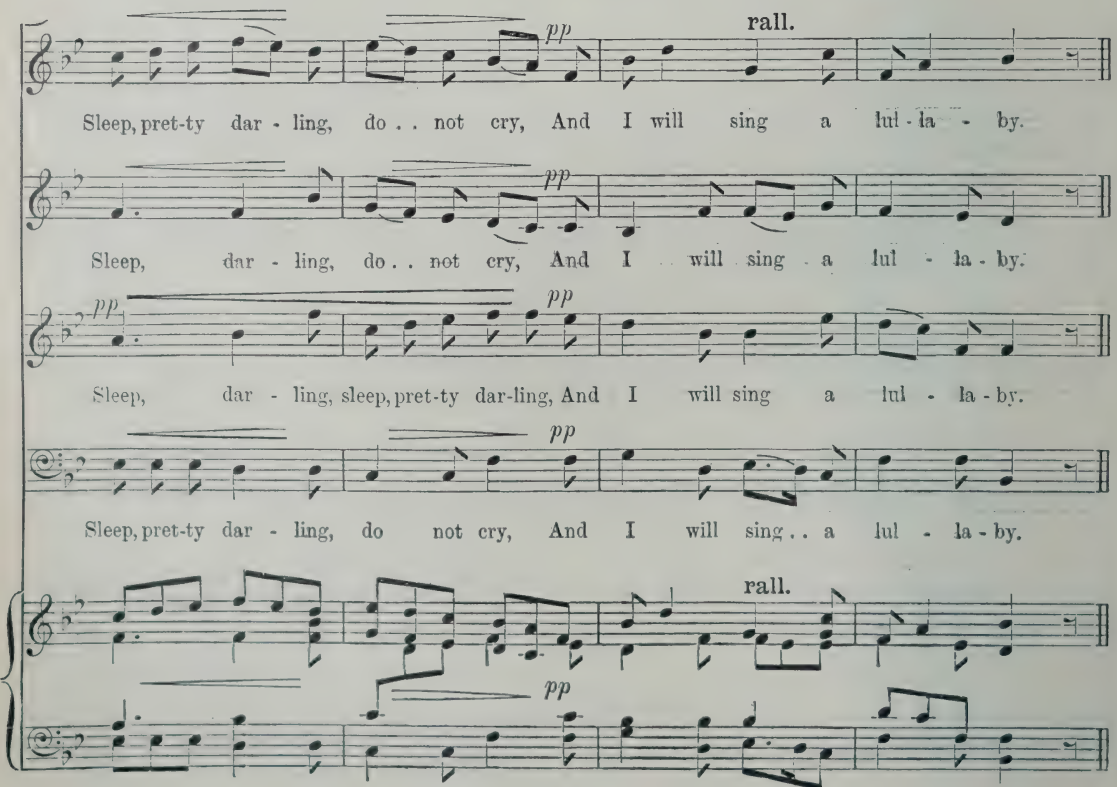
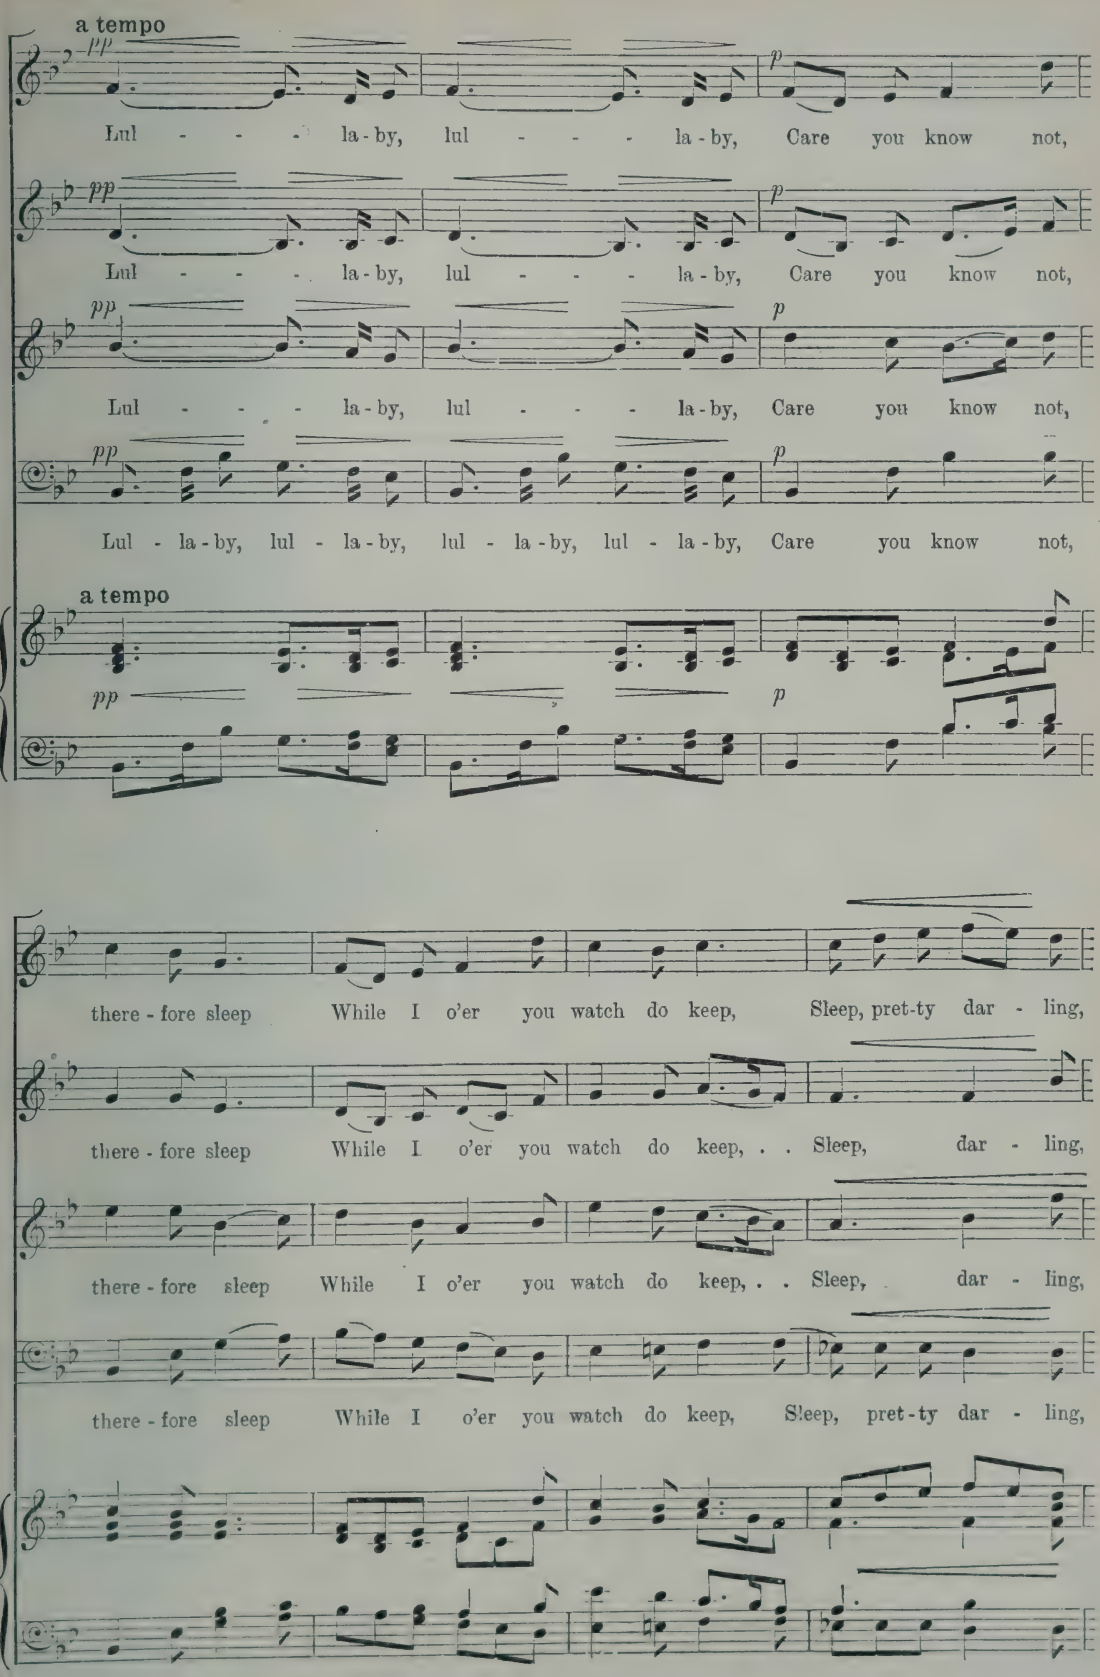
pp
I will sing a lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la-by, lul - la-by,
p
pp
I will sing a lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by,
p
p
I will sing a lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by,
p
pp
I will sing . . a lul - - - - la-by, lul - - - - la-by, lul - - - - la-by,
p
pp



pp
rall.
Sleep, pret-ty dar - ling, do . . not cry, And I will sing a lul - la - by.
pp
Sleep, dar - ling, do . . not cry, And I will sing a lul - la - by.
pp
pp
Sleep, dar - ling, sleep, pret-ty dar-ling, And I will sing a lul - la - by.
pp
Sleep, pret-ty dar - ling, do not cry, And I will sing . . a lul - la - by.
rall.
pp



a tempo
pp
p
Lul - - - la - by, lul - - - la - by, Care you know not,
Lul - - - la - by, lul - - - la - by, Care you know not,
Lul - - - la - by, lul - - - la - by, Care you know not,
Lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, Care you know not,
a tempo
there - fore sleep While I o'er you watch do keep, Sleep, pret - ty dar - ling, there - fore sleep While I o'er you watch do keep, . . Sleep, dar - ling, there - fore sleep While I o'er you watch do keep, . . Sleep, dar - ling, there - fore sleep While I o'er you watch do keep, Sleep, pret - ty dar - ling,

do . . not cry, And I will sing a lul - la - by,
do . . not cry, And I will sing a lul - la - by,
Sleep, pret - ty dar - ling, And I will sing a lul - la - by.
do not cry, And I will sing . . a lul - - - - la - by,
lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, Sleep, pret - ty dar - ling, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, Sleep, dar - ling, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, lul - la - by, Sleep, dar - ling, lul - - - - la - by, lul - - - - la - by, Sleep, pret - ty dar - ling,
rall.
do . . not cry, And I will sing sweet lul - - - la - by. . .
do . . not cry, And I will sing, will sing sweet lul - la - by. . .
sleep, pret - ty dar - ling, And I will sing, will sing sweet lul - la - by. . .
do not cry, And I will sing sweet lul - - - la - by. . .
rall.

(Continued from p. 816.)

possibilities. César Franck's String Quartet is in this way a disappointment to everyone who can appreciate the essential, if sometimes harmlessly-orchestral, quintuplicity of his great Pianoforte Quintet. The String Quartet is full of excellent organ music, and it imitates the organ very skilfully. But except for the Scherzo, which is full of anybody's brilliance, there is strangely little evidence that it is a quartet at all.'

It must be agreed that these are sufficiently diverse estimates of the work, though less so than might appear because, as it will be noticed, they are not based on the same criteria. It is to some extent a case of the shield with different sides—for while it is the structure of the Quartet that d'Indy especially praises, it is on the score of its texture that it is condemned by Prof. Tovey. 'Marvellous construction!' says d'Indy; 'rotten part-writing,' growls Tovey; and so in the result they arrive at totally different conclusions, largely because they have adopted such entirely different canons of judgment—each of which, be it noted further, has reference to purely technical considerations which, so far as the ordinary music-lover is concerned, may be said to go for next to nothing.

And this brings me to the question I wish to ask: Do not the pundits and the pedagogues attach altogether exaggerated importance to matters which, in the case of less learned musicians, count for very little? Here is Prof. Tovey, for instance, cavalierly dismissing one of the most noble works in the whole literature of chamber music merely because it does not conform to certain purely technical requirements which he regards as supremely important, but with which the ordinary music-lover—including in this case actually Vincent d'Indy—hardly concerns himself at all.

Does not the conclusion suggest itself that there must be something wrong in a method of criticism which leads to judgments so surprising? Or if, alternatively, your critic tells you that he is actually incapable of enjoying such a work as Franck's Quartet because of its shortcomings, or alleged shortcomings, in the purely technical matter referred to, is he not seriously to be pitied? Are we not reminded of the danger of bestowing undue attention upon the letter that killeth? And the risk which is entailed in following too closely the procedure of the historic picture connoisseur whose judgment of a landscape was summed up in the devastating question, 'Where 's your brown tree?'

Certain it is that so far as ninety-nine music-lovers out of a hundred go, they are not worried in the least when listening to Franck's noble work by those alleged shortcomings in the matter of its texture which would appear to constitute in Prof. Tovey's eyes its outstanding characteristic. Not only are they not worried by them: they are totally unaware of their presence; and, what is more, they will go on being equally indifferent to their existence even now after they have been pointed out by Prof. Tovey.

In other words, they will go on deriving unlimited delight from Franck's Quartet without the smallest arrières pensées in respect of those technical details which provoke Prof. Tovey's strictures and apparently prevent his enjoyment of it; and therein they will assuredly be right. It will even be open to them to go farther if they choose, and to maintain that the learned professor is positively wrong, if not on the actual facts, at any rate in attaching so much importance to them, and in allowing them to affect so seriously his judgment of the work as a whole and (presumably) his capacity to derive enjoyment from it.

And this applies no less in respect of various other well-known and admired works which, in the same article, he condemns on similar grounds, notably the glorious Pianoforte Quartet and Pianoforte Quintet of Schumann, concerning which he writes:

> 'He [Schumann] has altogether lost the power of sorting out his material into its proper planes, and the exquisite first trio of the Scherzo of the Pianoforte Quartet is in such a tangle of useless and arbitrary doublings that it is impossible to discover the persons of the dialogue. Mozart, Beethoven, and Brahms would have delighted in making it stand out as a beautiful dialogue between five singing parts, the three strings, and the pianist's right and left hand, with no confusion between these parts and the supporting chords, to which each instrument would contribute between its own distinct entries with the theme. It is impossible to argue that there is æsthetic value in Schumann's unclarified scoring of this passage. The Pianoforte Quartet is more highly organized than its delightful and popular brother the Pianoforte Quintet. But the perversity of inattention to the integrity of parts can hardly be more clearly demonstrated than by the fact that while the string parts of the Quintet are such a mass of harmony that there is no reason why they should not be arranged for quartet, sextet, or string orchestra, the opening of the Pianoforte Quartet shows serious practical reasons why it should have been a quintet!'

Now this, it must be agreed, is a very interesting and penetrating bit of criticism, but the question none the less remains whether the point made is really one of any particular importance, except from the purely pedagogic standpoint, as a question of technical correctitude. Schumann himself, who doubtless gave the matter due consideration, apparently thought that it was not, being evidently satisfied to get the results he wanted without troubling particularly as to the means. And César Franck, in turn, when he adopted a similar course, was evidently of the same way of thinking; and this was assuredly not due to any laziness or slackness on his part, as may be readily gathered from the particulars which d'Indy gives of the unsparing toil which he lavished on this Quartet in other ways.

Then again as to the question of form. There is, I suppose, hardly any aspect of a composition to which the average music-lover, whether cultivated or uncultivated, pays less regard; and one is driven once more therefore to wondering if the academic analyst—I use the term in no disrespectful sense—does not entirely overdo the significance which he attaches to this matter of structure as expressed in terms of tonality and key-relationship. In the case of the ordinary fairly-cultivated music-lover it goes, I venture to say, for nothing at all.

He does not care, he does not even notice, whether a given section of a movement is in one key or another, and to this extent—that is, so far as concerns the average listener—it might be said that all the care which composers conscientiously bestow on this aspect of a work is absolutely wasted. Not one concert-goer in a thousand has the ability to follow and grasp and retain in consciousness throughout the progress of a movement the various changes of key which occur even in the simplest works of the classical period; while as for attempting anything of the kind in the case of those, so vastly more complex in character, in works of a later date, it is of course still less to be thought of.

The vast majority, I am convinced, simply do not pay the slightest attention to this aspect of a work at all. They are perfectly content to enjoy the music from moment to moment as it proceeds, following the composer contentedly into whatsoever keys he chooses to take them, and entirely unconscious whether the course which he is pursuing in this respect is 'correct' or 'incorrect,' orthodox or the reverse. Considered in this light indeed the position is really amusing. Earnest composers attach the greatest importance to getting their key relationships 'right,' or conversely, if they want to be considered 'daring' and 'advanced,' to getting them 'wrong,' and the vast majority of their hearers are completely indifferent in either case.

Hence, therefore, the astonishment with which the average music-lover takes note of the (to him) inexplicable significance attached to this matter by the 'great, wise, and eminent.'

In this matter of form it is important to bear in mind the distinction between design in the sense of proportion, contrast, and those other characteristics of a composition which give it shape and leave the impression of a definite, satisfying plan and design in the altogether narrower sense having regard to key-relationships merely.

The necessity for design in the former sense is not to be denied by anyone, and even the least learned hearer would be conscious of something wanting—or at any rate would find less enjoyment—in a work from which it were absent. As Sir Henry Hadow has well put the matter, 'The need of some structural coherence and organization is fundamental; it is satisfied by different plans in different generations, but to each generation the requirement is equally imperative.'

What is much less certain is that there is anything like the same necessity and imperative justification for design in the more restricted sense—i.e., in respect of keys—although it is to this aspect of the matter that the theorists appear to give almost exclusive attention. Certain it is that, so far as the vast majority of music-lovers are concerned it goes for very little. 'So much the worse for them,' the theorists would say no doubt; 'they don't know how much they are losing in being unable to appreciate these finer points.'

But what leads one to suspect that there is a large element of make-believe—or let us say rather, self-deception—about this matter on the part of the pundits is the readiness with which they are able to reconcile themselves on occasion to works which are entirely unorthodox in this respect, although if their theories were sound such works should really be intolerable to their sensitive ears. As things are, however, their course is usually to salve their theoretical consciences by more or less far-fetched explanations of the composer's procedure and then—to enjoy the work in question just as lesser mortals do.

Vincent d'Indy supplies a characteristic instance of this when, in his fine article on Beethoven in Cobbett, he comes to deal with the Quartet in F minor (Op. 95), in respect of which he writes:

> 'The key chosen for the second movement of this Quartet may well astonish us. It is very rare for Beethoven, usually so respectful of natural musical law, to find in a work in F minor a movement in D major, an entirely unrelated key. We can explain this anomaly only by the frequency in this work of keys containing G flat, which becoming F sharp, may excuse excursions into the sharp keys.'

A simpler explanation would be, of course, that it is really a matter of very little importance in what key the movement was written—the best proof of which is the simple fact that Beethoven has written it in this highly unorthodox key, and that no one in practice is a penny the worse. But naturally your theorist could not be expected to assent to this!

There is another example of the same kind of not very convincing special pleading in Fuller-Maitland's book on Brahms, in reference to the Sonata for pianoforte and 'cello in F (Op. 99), concerning which he writes:

> 'It opens in a mood of wild energy such as is not frequent in Brahms's later works; the unrest is increased by the unusually distant key chosen for the slow movement, for F sharp major is not a common successor to F major, though it is easily explained by reference to the key of D flat, to which the main key is the mediant or third of the scale, and F sharp the subdominant key (by enharmonic change).'

Again it is surely a much simpler explanation of the matter that—no explanation is required! In other words, what Brahms did needs no defence at all, for the simple reason that in actual practice no one finds anything amiss. As Schumann said, 'what sounds right is right'; and in the result it is the theory, not the practice, which is really proved to be wrong.

ROYALTY AS MUSICIAN, COMPOSER, AND COLLECTOR

By Hilda Andrews

When George Frederick Handel—boon companion of George the Second of England—died, among the items in his will was a bequest to his friend and amanuensis, John Christopher Smith, of 'my large Harpsichord, my little House Organ, and my Musick Books. . . .' This was in April, 1759, exactly a hundred and seventy years ago. In due course, the son of this same J. C. Smith who played small Boswell to Handel's Johnson, left the 'Musick Books' to George the Third as a mark of gratitude for ten years of Royal patronage. The king, like his father and grandfather before him, was a zealous patron of music and a great lover of Handel, and had bought up a private music library in 1762 to form the nucleus of a Royal collection, in which the gift of J. C. Smith the younger was duly absorbed. Here we have the story of the famous Buckingham Palace Library, which has ever since been accumulating a store of musical treasure full of historic Royal associations.

The Handel manuscripts are still the centre of interest. Nine have been added to Smith's set, and they have been uniformly bound in red—ninety-seven priceless volumes that art-lovers cross the world to see. They include the score of 'Solomon,' exhibited by the King's wish at the performance of that work by the Royal Philharmonic Society a year ago. Probably this was the first news to many of the existence of the King's Music, although in 1911 the entire library was generously lent to the nation and moved from Buckingham Palace to the British Museum. There it is housed in the Royal Music Room, presided over by bronze busts of Mendelssohn and of that genial spirit Handel himself. The latter has something of a proprietary air as he gazes across perpetually at his own red-bound autographs, and as one enters the room he seems to catch one's eye with a wink and an inquiring eyebrow curiously like that of George Robey.

There are a thousand odd volumes, hand-written, and Royal associations go far back. The earliest in date are three 16th-17th-century manuscripts known to students of Tudor music as unique records of the Golden Age—the virginal books of Ben Cosyn and Will Forster, and a book of Church music, including several pieces by Henry the Eighth, compiled by John Baldwin, of Windsor. These are full of historic interest.

In describing the rest of the library one is faced with an embarras de richesses. Works by English composers are in bulk quite overshadowed by the prolific output of Continental musicians. The age was one cradled in the Handelian and Italian tradition, and native genius was in comparison sterile. 18th-century Italian operas, settings of the plays of Metastasio and Zeno, multiplied and throve exceedingly. There are numerous copies of complete operas and books of favourite arias, many inscribed, 'Per Uso Di Sua Altessa Reale,' and of course the peculiar individuality of the collection lies in memories of past Royalty. A set of slim volumes are labelled 'Musica Composta da S.A.R. Prencipe di Gallia e Poesia di my Lady Erwin'—a little pastoral cantata with a ballet by Giuseppe Sammartini, written 'for the Lady Augusta's Birthday.' This 'Prencipe di Gallia' was Frederick Prince of Wales, father of George the Third, and Sammartini's great patron.

Some of the most interesting autographs are pieces inspired by Royal patronage in a century when every native composer seems to have been a self-appointed Musician Laureate. Among these are the original odes of J. C. (the 'English') Bach to Queen Charlotte, dated 1758 and 1761, the latter 'On the auspicious Arrival and Nuptials of Her present most gracious Majesty Queen Charlotte, by John Lockman. Set to music by Mr. Bach.' A little later one comes across a charming lyric 'On the Coverlet of the Royal Cradle.' Half a century earlier are the thanksgiving odes of Purcell and dear old Dr. Croft, bursting into song with an 'Ode upon ye Suppressing of ye rebellion at Preston, 1715.' And next to it on the shelf is Purcell's 'Blessed are they' written with naïve solemnity, 'Upon ye Thanksgiving ordered to be proclaimed at S. Paul's and for twelve miles round upon the Queen's being with child,' of which one can only say that evidently no stone was being left unturned to welcome the Royal baby. Royalty was encompassed about, as it were, by a select bodyguard of musicians, hastening to anticipate in song any occasion of rejoicing or regret; and odes on Royal birthdays and funerals filled the air.

Queen Charlotte treasured her presentation copies; many of them are inscribed on the fly-leaf 'This volume belongs to the Queen, 1788.' The immediate outburst of song inspired by Royal festivities was a charming feature of the age, and one that we might welcome nowadays, were it not that those forced flowers of musical talent are usually barren and wither in a day.

Since the death of its Royal founder a certain amount of 19th-century music has crept into the King's library by gift, interesting by reason of its source or dedication. One of the Dukes of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha sent a composition of his own, with the inscription, 'To my own darling Grandmamma, from Ernie.' This was to the Duchess of Kent, and Queen Victoria's mother herself left several books of her own pieces in bound manuscript. The Prince Consort was no mean hand at composition, with a leaning towards Church services and charming German songs—'An meiner Theuren Victoria von Ihrem Theuren Albert' runs one dedication. He was a talented musician, and these little works are worthy of a better end than to fade as museum curiosities, however honourably and royally. Even the ex-Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany leaves us here in the Royal Music Room an original work dedicated 'To dear Granny'—a strange echo from a distant, untroubled age.

Leisure hours at Windsor are responsible for a shelf full of trifles thrown off by ladies of the Court and presented to the Queen, and innumerable copies of favourite songs and ballads. Why so much copying by hand was done is hidden from us, unless it was by way of protest against the vulgarity of contemporary engraved music. All these popular Victorian airs are tainted with the sentimentalism of their time, but the glory of binding and elaborate script may well have made the recipient overlook their shortcomings. The proportion of Victorian music in the library is quite small, but it catches the eye first. Plush and gilt, beribboned and embossed, watered silk with embroidered initials, and dedications wrought marvellously upon vellum covered a multitude of artistic sins. Some poor French bandmaster created a Quartet for four horns upon the theme of 'God Save the Queen,' and presented it in exquisite and proud manuscript with 'hommage à la Reine Victoria,' too lovely to be opened, which is perhaps the reason why it so rarely is. Royalty has never been allowed to exercise the privilege of looking a gift-horse in the mouth, and one can only guess what it must have suffered at the hands of pseudo-artistic subjects and admirers.

During the last twenty years there have been few additions—naturally, since the specific function of a Royal manuscript collection is now discharged. We circulate our music in manuscript no longer, and since the 18th-century Court patronage has been slipping away with changing times. But this famous collection of the past has kept for us many treasures that might otherwise have perished, and much is to be learnt from it of the manners and modes of former generations of English musicians. We owe a great debt to George the Third, and to our present King for making it accessible to the public.

New Music

Owing to limitations of space it will not be possible in future to discuss fully all the music that publishers are good enough to send: and in order to avoid making this column a mere list of titles, only those works likely to be of interest to Musical Times readers as a whole will be mentioned.

PIANOFORTE

Ernest Walker's 'Three Dedications' (Oxford University Press) reveal in a short space a rich musical personality. The pieces are based on the initials of three good friends of music and musicians: and perhaps only those who know them will fully appreciate the insight of Dr. Walker's 'dedications.' All musicians, however, will feel that a wealth of affection, humour, and thought is packed in these short preludes. They repay the closest study, and others will get from them, I feel sure, as keen a pleasure as I get.

Margaret Parsons's 'A Cornish Day' is out of the ordinary in style and poetic in outlook. It might have been laid out with more reticence, perhaps: there are a lot of notes in some places: but there is a freshness that deserves notice. Freshness is the word, too, for Robin Milford's 'Sweet Auburn,' which is meant to accompany the composer's two recently issued Goldsmith songs. It is extraordinary how, in spite of moments of banality, of clumsiness and of amateurishness, Mr. Milford can still hold one's attention. The style is most uncertain, but the poetic idea is there, and manages to shine through (Oxford University Press).

Teachers on the look-out for music of medium difficulty, picturesque but musicianly, 'bright but not sensational' as the old Morning Post advertisement used to say, might well notice Markham Lee's 'Rivers of Devon.' This suite of four pieces is published by Goodwin & Tabb. T. A.

SONGS

The Oxford Press has embarked upon the issue of a series of songs and duets from the works of Monteverde, and some eight numbers have already been published, under the musical editorship of J. A. Westrup. The venture is much to be welcomed: students in the past have heard and read of Monteverde without having access to any of his music, as they will now have: and the interest is not merely antiquarian; for such things as 'I behold thee,' for soprano and baritone, and 'Something strange,' for soprano and tenor, have sufficient musical personality to appeal on other grounds than those of age and quaintness. It is a very interesting series.

Peter Warlock is in happy mood in three songs published by Elkin. Difficult and lying very high, but full of charm, is 'The Passionate Shepherd,' which is perhaps the best of the three. The other songs are somewhat ordinary for this writer—though sprightly, they fall below the high level of distinction that he has set himself. This publisher issues also a graceful and fluent song by James Lyon, 'Shadowtown,' for a low mezzo-soprano. Another musicianly work is Felix White's 'The trees in spring,' from Murdoch.

Two effective but somewhat turgid songs are published by Augener: 'Night' and 'The Awakening,' by Aloys Fleischmann. The style is luscious, but the songs are written with a knowledge of effect, and might with convinced performance be made to sound more spontaneous than they are. Alfred Reynolds has also over-elaborated two attractive old English tunes, 'Oh, had I been by fate decreed,' by Howard, and 'Oh, how shall I in language weak,' by Carey. Especially Carey's tune is over-done: but the thing is so pretty with its artificiality and graceful airs that it is well worth the attention of a soprano or light tenor.

One of the best issues of recent date is Stainer & Bell's third volume of 'Irish Countryside Songs,' in arrangements of unobtrusive skill by Charles Wood. Some of the tunes, such as 'Down by the Sally Gardens,' are beautiful, and Wood's settings are just what is wanted—never a note too much, never a note too little; it is only when you look carefully that you see what a lot of personality there is in such an arrangement as 'Herself and Myself.' Charles Wood was a fine craftsman, and a man of modest but vivid imagination.

It is amusing to see what good folk-music a composer of adaptable style like Bantock can write. Two Hebridean songs are almost the real thing. Look at 'Boat Song of the Isles' (Elkin). As with furniture, so with music: it is difficult to decide for oneself the artistic value of a really good reproduction of the antique.

Curwen sends songs by Ursula Greville, Josef Holbrooke, and E. Duncan-Rubbra. The last composer's 'Why so pale and wan' is an original and telling work. It calls for a voice of big range, extending over an octave and six notes to top A flat; but the song is worth effort and attention. T. A.

VIOLA

A Sonata by the 18th-century composer Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf deserves attention, partly on account of its medium (a viola sonata is something of a rarity) and partly because of the unconventional plan, which embraces the usual three movements (Allegro moderato, Adagio, Tema con variazioni) and also two movements one of which is played before and the other after the slow movement. It is a pleasant and perfectly guileless piece of music which repays well the little labour its preparation and study implies. F. B.

ORCHESTRA

Not long ago a play, 'Beau Brummel,' was brought out at Birmingham with incidental music by Sir Edward Elgar. The play was received well enough at the time, but apparently its fortunes declined since. The most charming page of the musical score, however, has now been rescued, and appears under the title of 'Beau Brummel Minuet' (Elkin). It is a characteristic page of Elgarian melody scored for small orchestra, fluent and facile, worthy of a place beside the lighter unsophisticated pieces which have endeared the composer even to those who find symphonies and oratorios too stern for their taste. F. B.

TRIOS

There is something to be said for 'emergency music,' i.e., music which may be played indifferently by three performers or two, and the Elkin Trio

No. 1191 NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS Price (2d.)

In Derry Vale

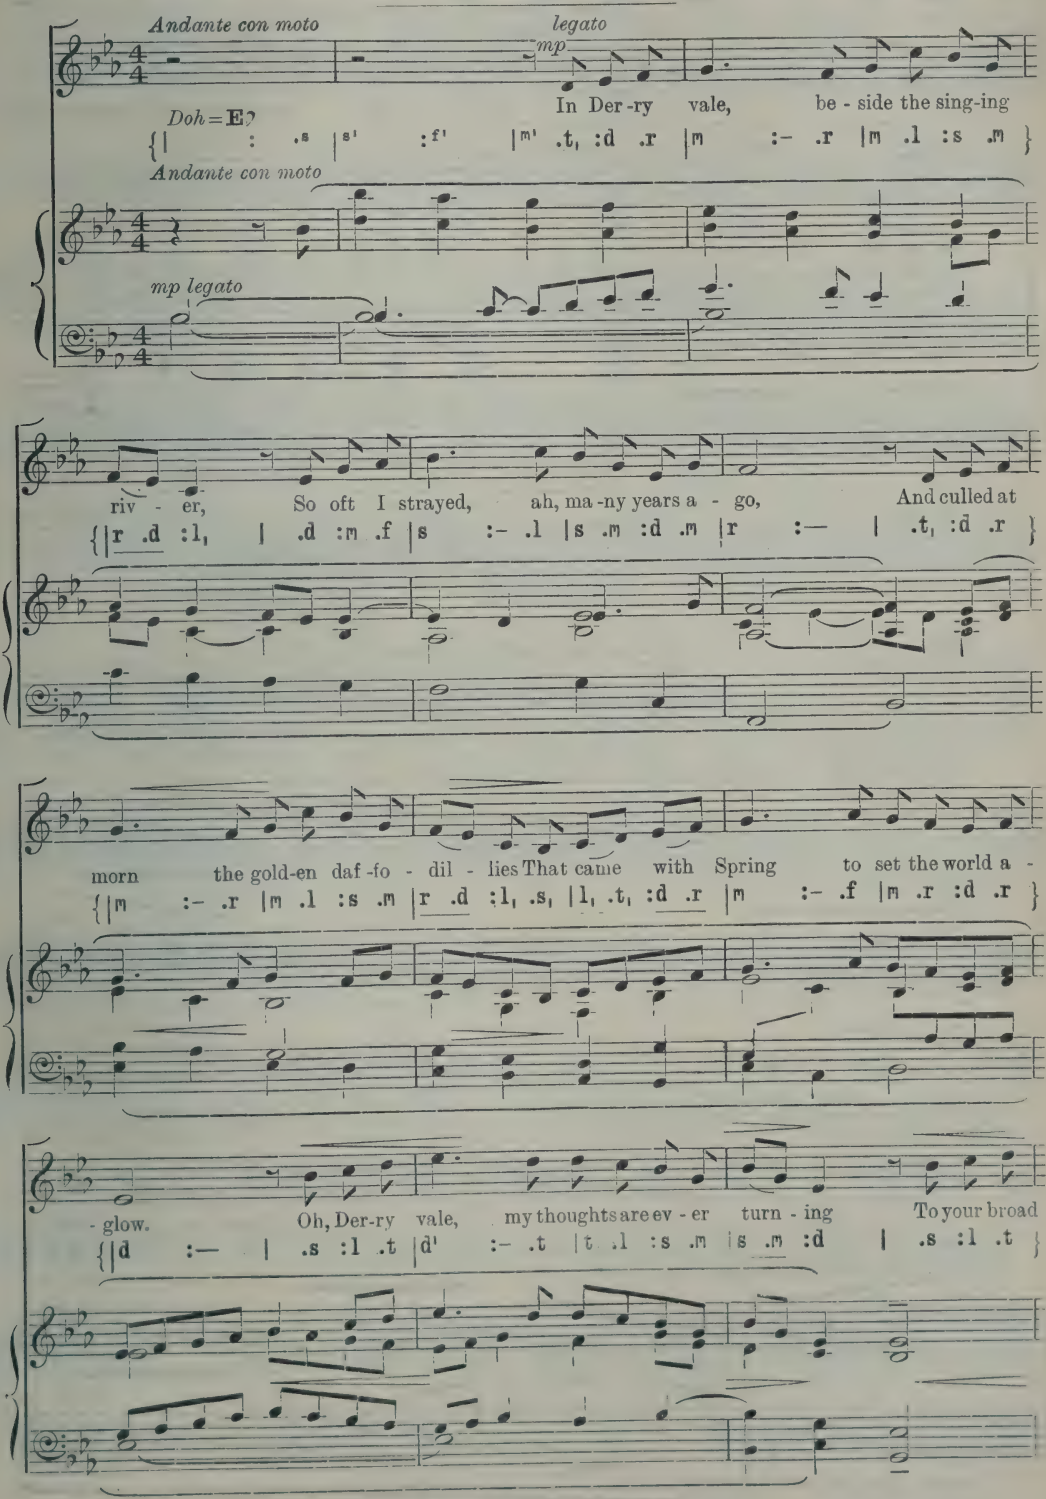
(THE LONDONDERRY AIR)

WITH DESCANT

Words by W. G. Rothery

Arranged by Geoffrey Shaw

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Andante con moto
legato
mp
In Der-ry vale, be-side the sing-ing
Doh = E♭
Andante con moto mp legato riv - er, So oft I strayed, ah, ma-ny years a - go, And culled at morn the gold-en daf-fo - dil - lies That came with Spring to set the world a -
- glow. Oh, Der-ry vale, my thoughts are ev - er turn - ing To your broad

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited stream and fai - ry - cir-cled lea, For your green isles my ex-iled heart is yearn-ing, So far a - way . . a - cross the sea.

DESCANT
In Der - ry vale . . . .
MELODY
(The Melody slightly predominant)
In Der - ry vale a - mid the Foyle's dark
. . . a - mid dark wa - ters, The sal - mon leap . . . .
wa - ters, The sal - mon leap a - bove the surg - ing

The Musical Times EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. September 1, 1929
No. 1438 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK Price (4d.)

Composed for the Hampstead and Hendon Musical Competition Festival, 1930

BREAK FORTH INTO THANKSGIVING

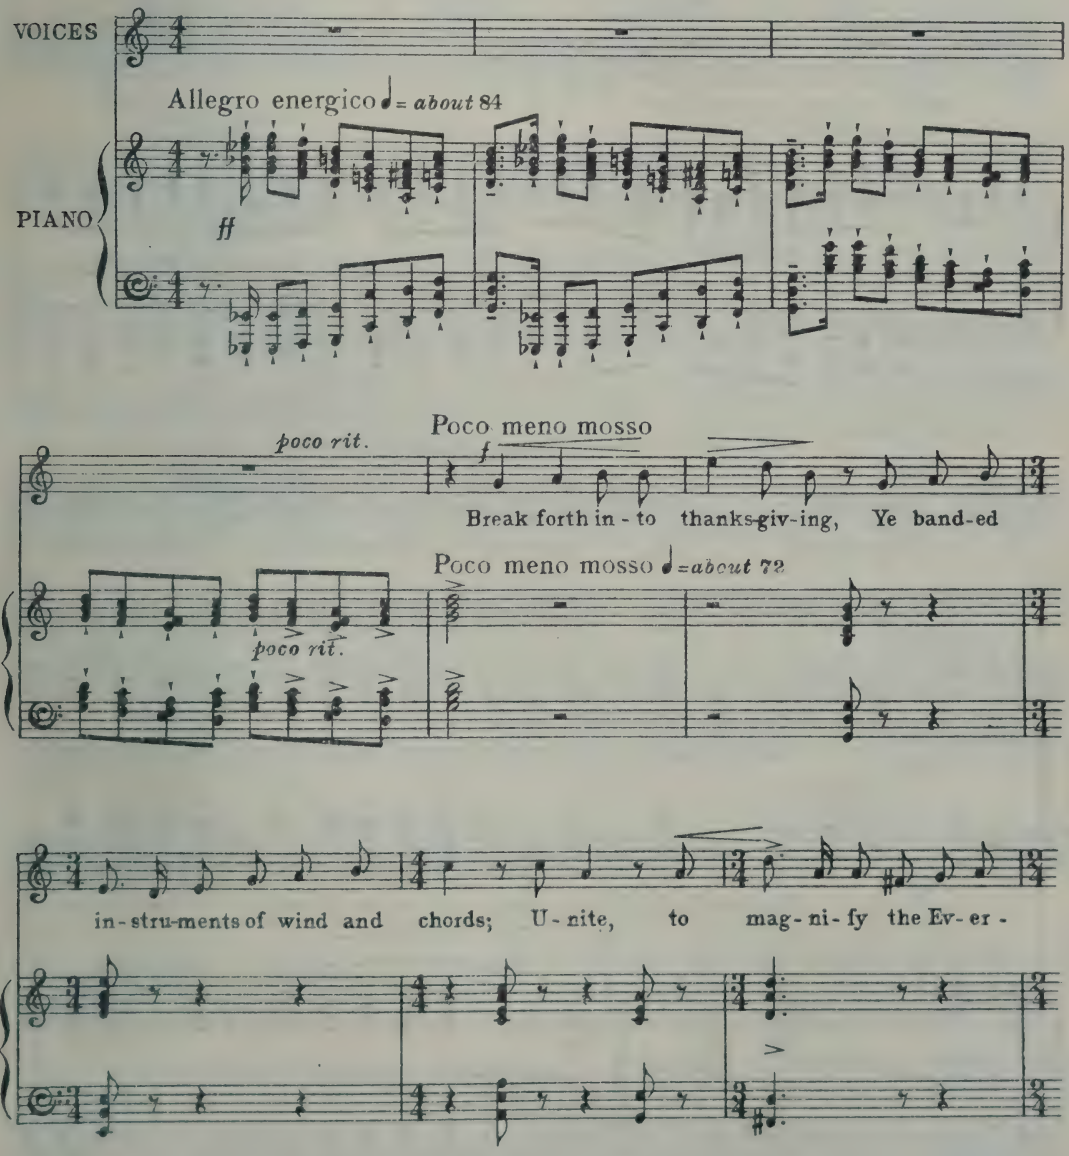
SONG FOR MASSED VOICES IN UNISON
(Or for S. A. T. B.)

WORDS FROM WORDSWORTH'S "POWER OF SOUND"

MUSIC BY

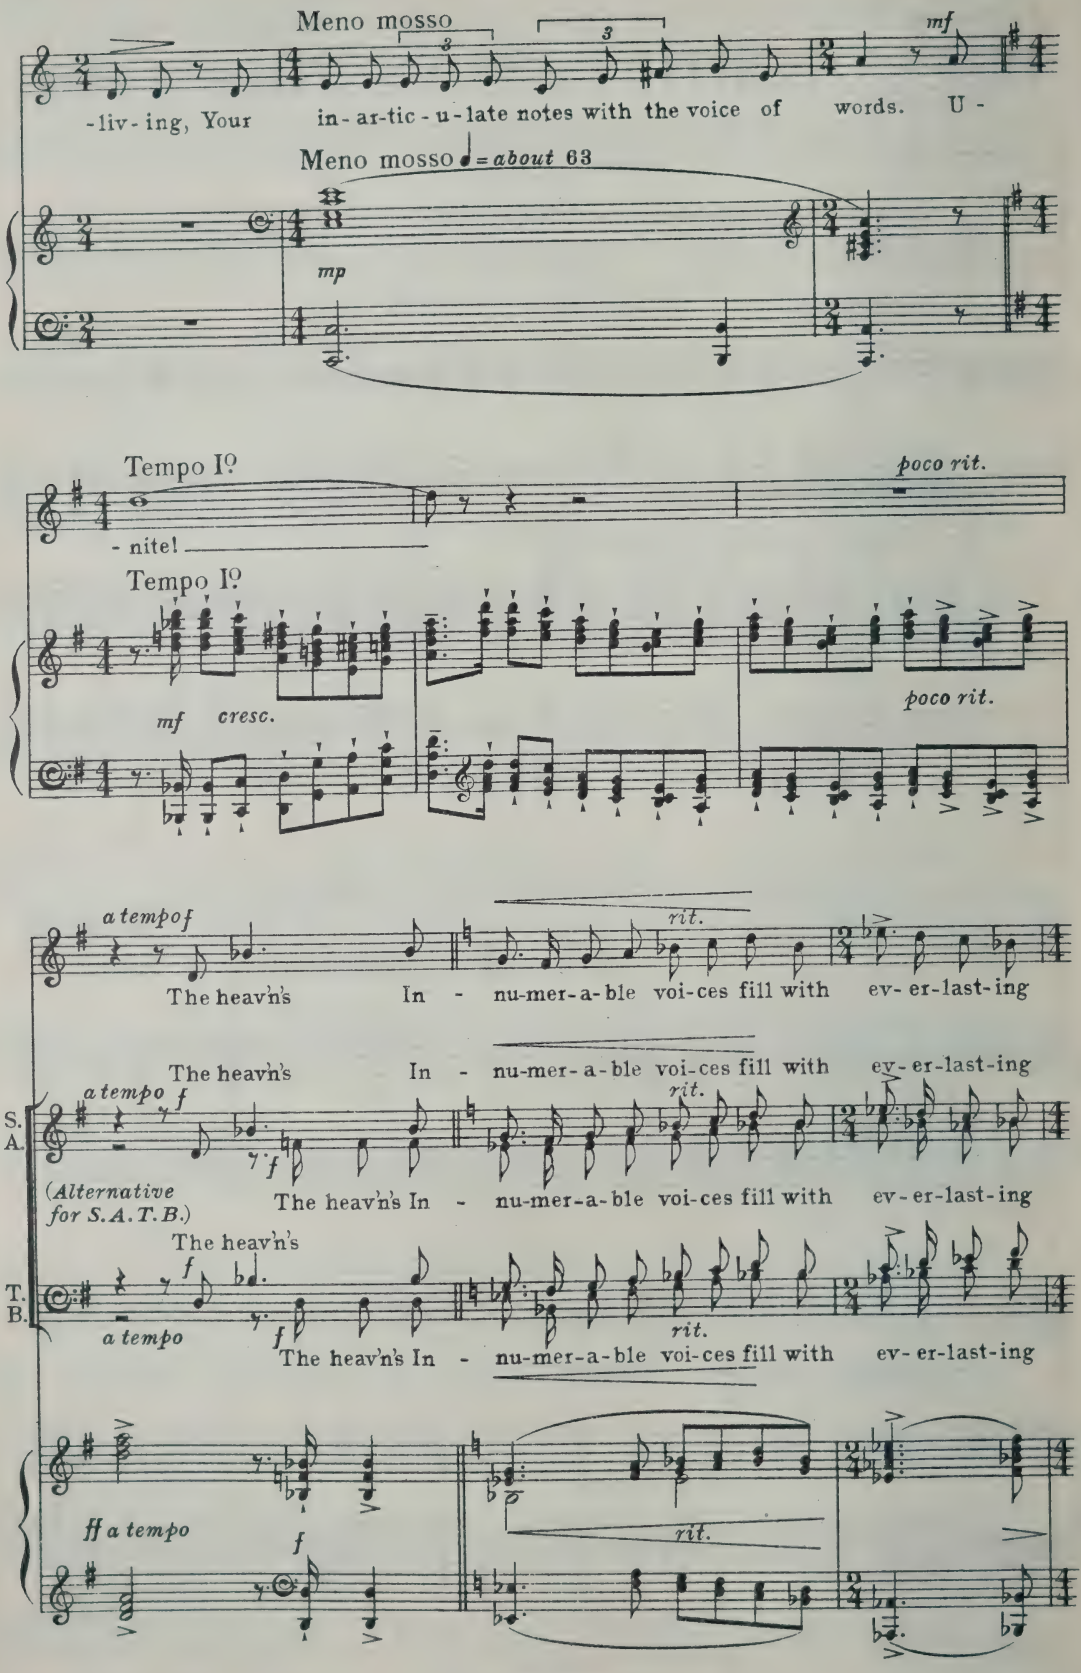
MARTIN SHAW

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited; New York: The H.W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



VOICES
Allegro energico ♩= about 84
PIANO
ff
poco rit.
Poco meno mosso
f
Break forth in - to thanks-giv-ing, Ye band-ed
Poco meno mosso ♩=about 72
poco rit.
in - stru-ments of wind and chords; U - nite, to mag - ni - fy the Ev - er -

Copyright, 1929, by Novello & Company, Limited. MADE IN ENGLAND.



Meno mosso
mf
-liv-ing, Your in-ar-tic-u-late notes with the voice of words. U-
Meno mosso ♩ = about 63
mp
Tempo Iº
poco rit.
- nite!
Tempo Iº
mf cresc.
poco rit.
a tempo f
rit.
The heav'n's In - nu-mer-a-ble voi-ces fill with ev-er-last-ing
The heav'n's In - nu-mer-a-ble voi-ces fill with ev-er-last-ing
S.
A.
a tempo f
rit.
(Alternative for S.A.T.B.)
The heav'n's In - nu-mer-a-ble voi-ces fill with ev-er-last-ing
T.
B.
The heav'n's
a tempo
rit.
The heav'n's In - nu-mer-a-ble voi-ces fill with ev-er-last-ing ff a tempo
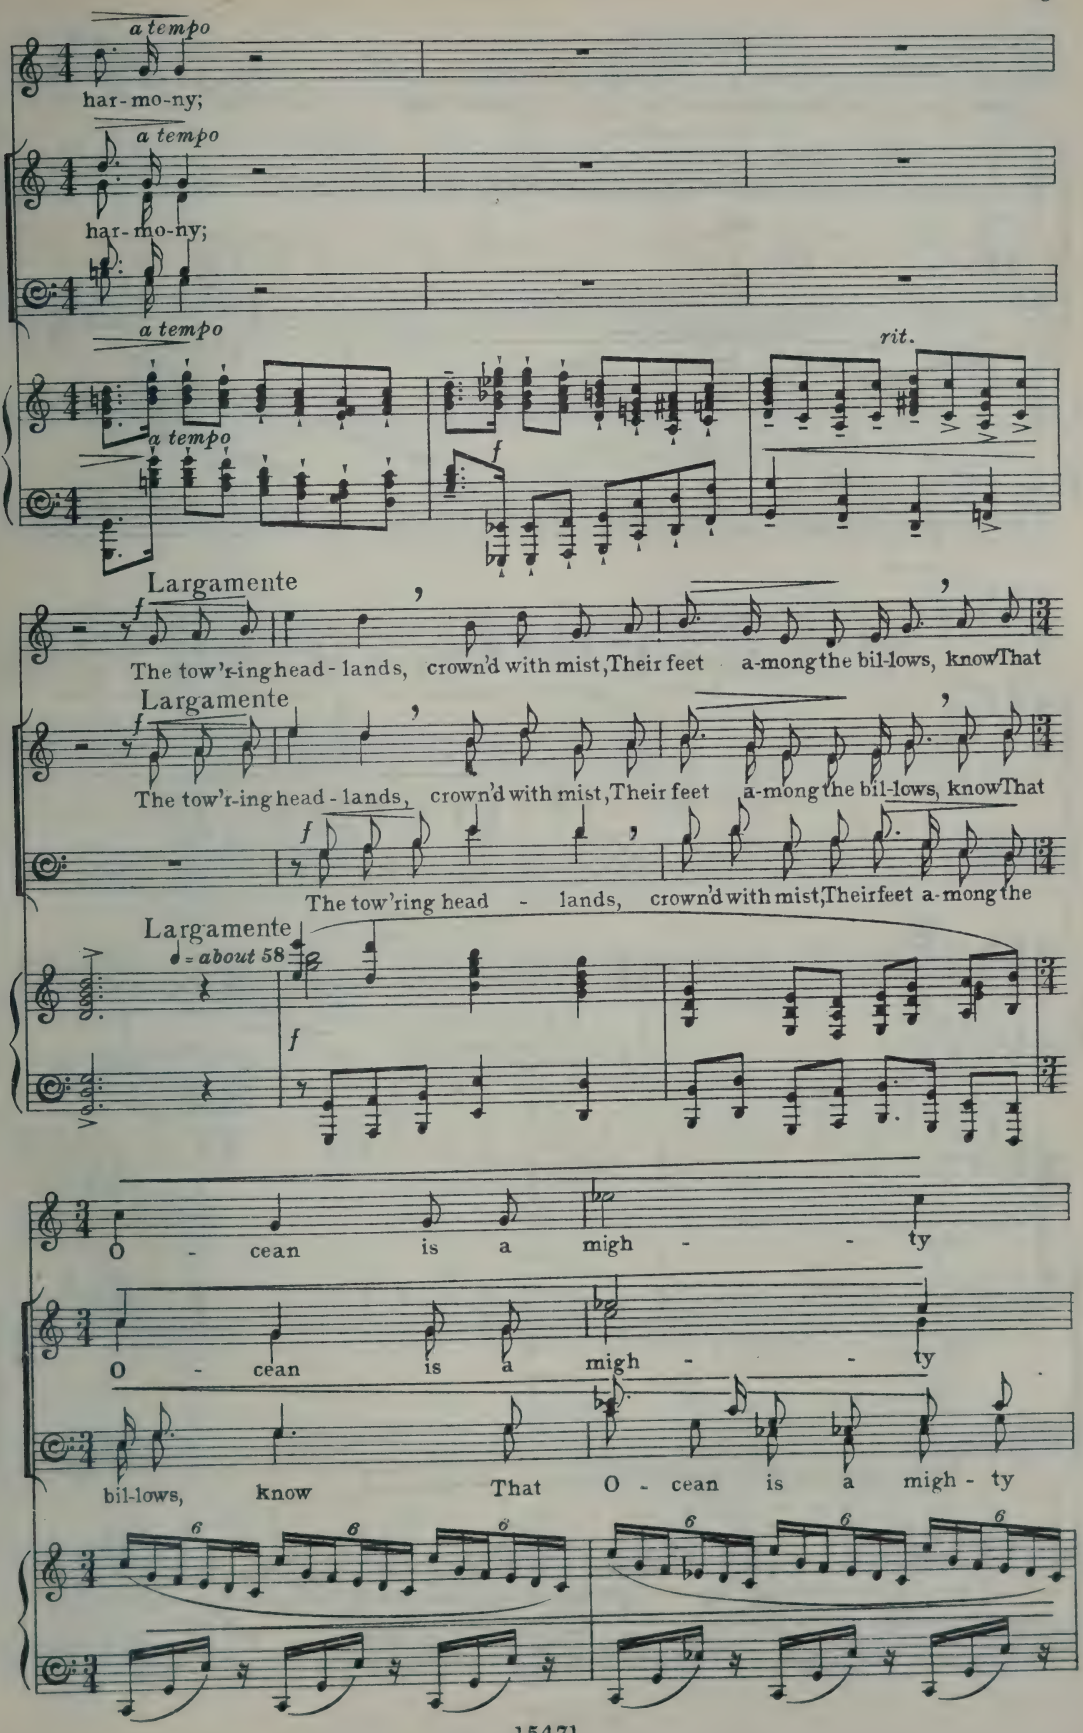
rit.



a tempo
har-mo-ny;
a tempo
har-mo-ny;
a tempo
a tempo
rit.
f
Largamente
The tow'r-ing head-lands, crown'd with mist, Their feet a-mong the bil-lows, know That
Largamente
The tow'r-ing head-lands, crown'd with mist, Their feet a-mong the bil-lows, know That
f
The tow'ring head - lands, crown'd with mist, Their feet a-mong the Largamente
♩ = about 58
f
O - cean is a migh - - ty
O - cean is a migh - - ty
bil-lows, know That O - cean is a migh - ty 6 6 6 6 6 6 6

har - - mon - ist;
har - - mon - ist;
cresc.
Thy pin - ions, u - ni-ver - sal Air, Ev - er Thy Thy pin - ions, u - ni-ver - sal Air, Ev - er Thy Thy pin - ions, u - ni-ver - sal wav - ing to and fro, Are pin - - - ions
wav - ing to and fro, pin - - - ions Are
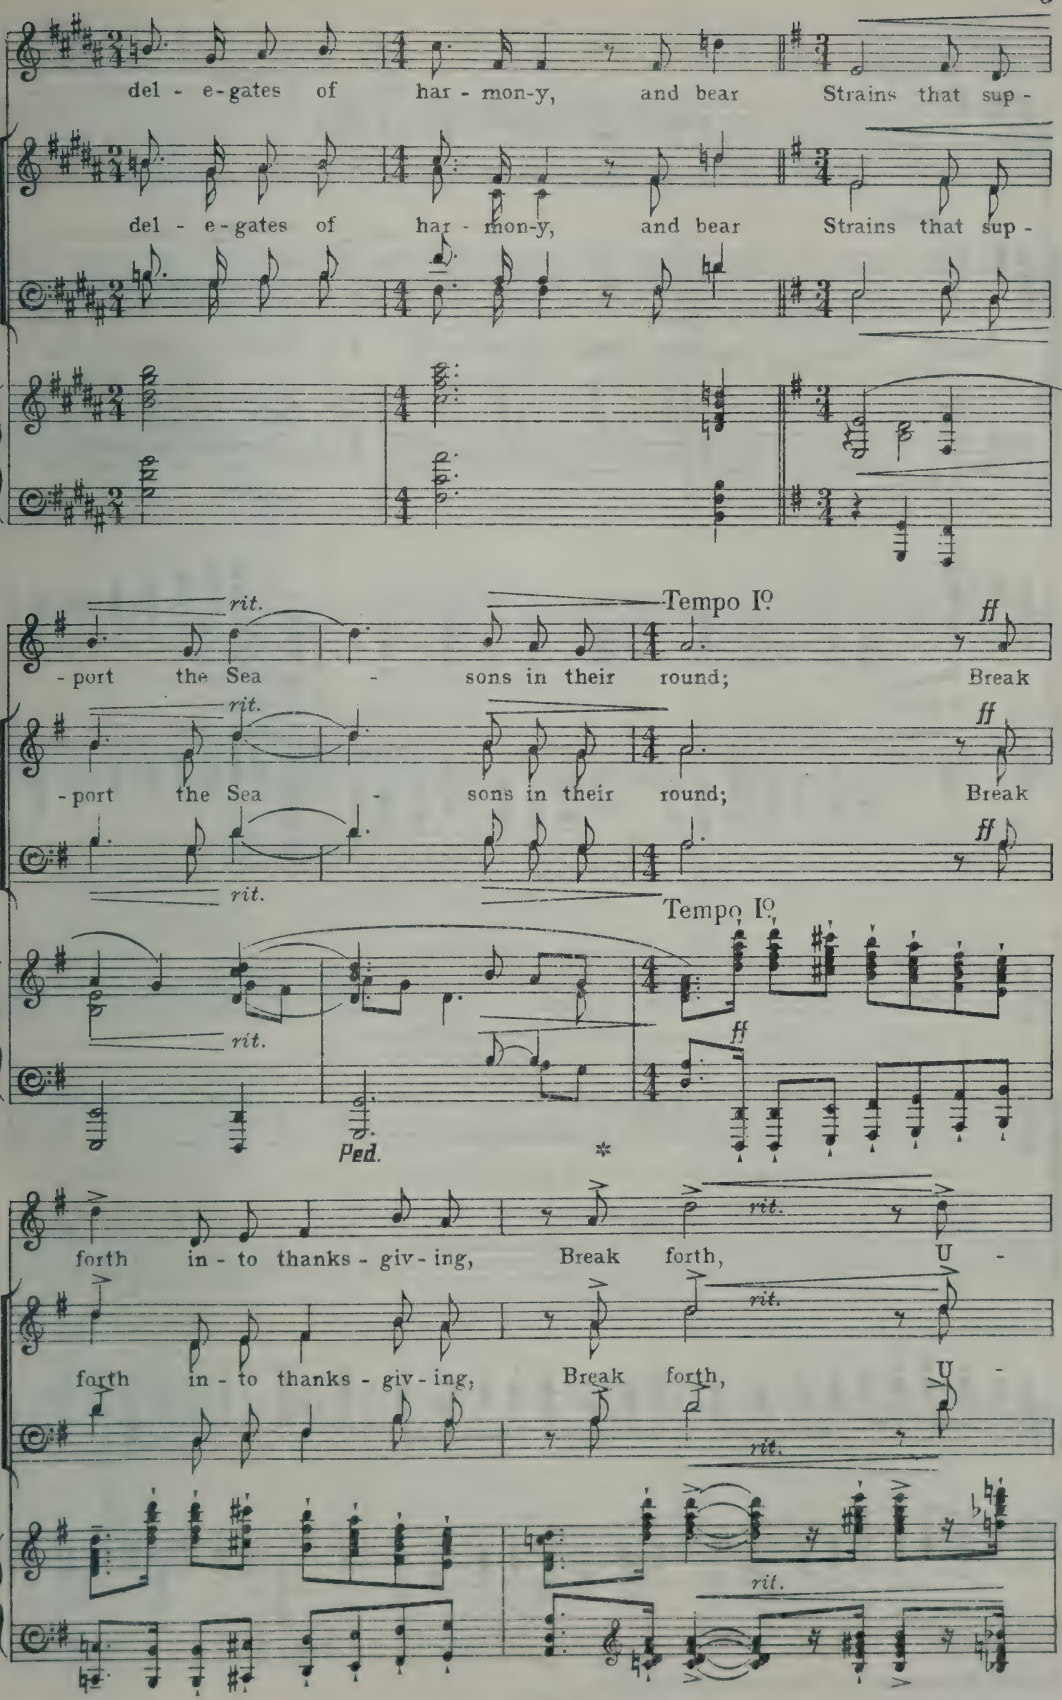
Air,



del - e - gates of har - mon-y, and bear Strains that sup - del - e - gates of har - mon-y, and bear Strains that sup -
rit.
Tempo I°
ff
- port the Sea - sons in their round; Break
- port the Sea - sons in their round; Break
rit.
Tempo I°.
ff
Ped.
forth in - to thanks - giv - ing, Break forth, U - forth in - to thanks - giv - ing, Break forth, U -
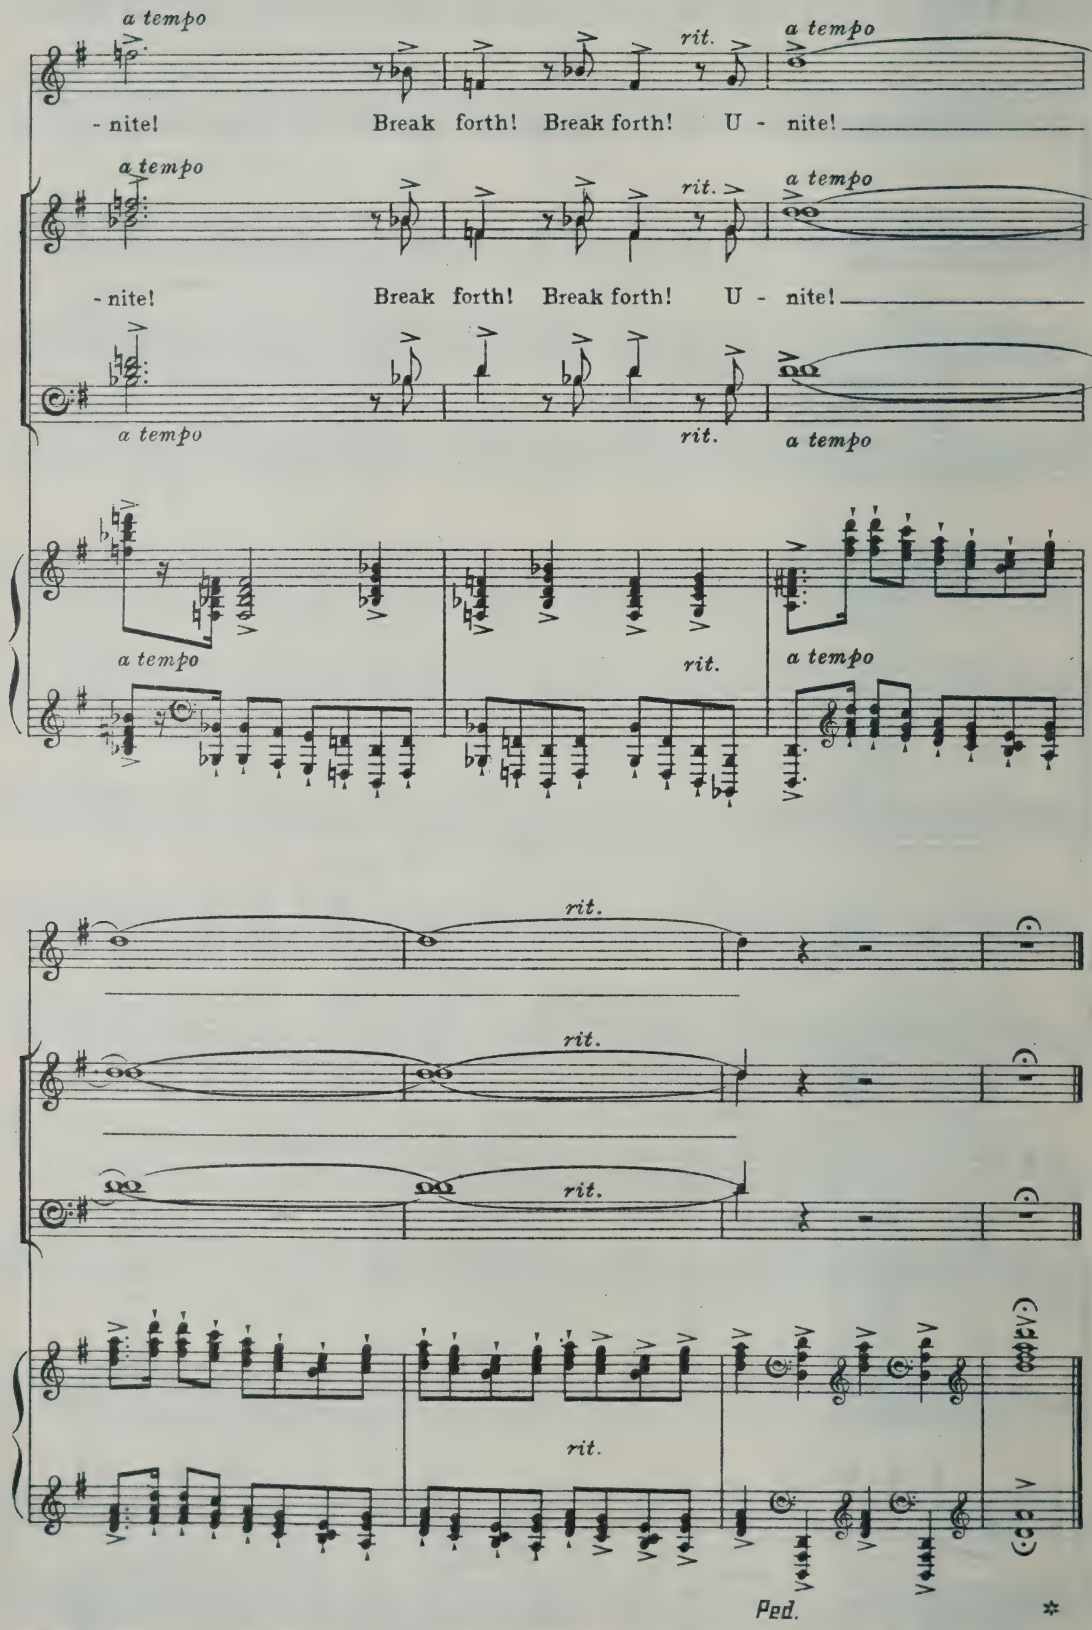
rit.



Novello & Company, Ltd. Engravers & Printers.

15471

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF

PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

No.
1	Our Native Land ...	Reichardt	3d.
2	Cricketers' Song (T.T.B.)	Macfarren	3d.
3	Boating Song	Monk	3d.
4	Song of the Railroads	Macfarren	4d.
5	Good-morrow, fair ladies	Morley	3d.
6	Home Fairy (T.T.B.B.) ...	Winter	3d.
7	The Wreath	Benedict	3d.
8	Countryman's Song ...	Rimbault	4d.
9	Student's Greeting (T.T.B.B.)	Berner	3d.
10	Magdalen College Song ...	Monk	3d.
11	Integer Vitæ (T.T.B.B.)	Flemming	6d.
12	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren
13	Harvest Song	Macfarren	3d.
14	Come, heavy sleep ...	Douland	3d.
15	Fisherman's Song ...	Rimbault	3d.
16	In all thy need	Douland	3d.
17	All among the barley ...	Stirling	3d
18	When icicles hang ...	Macfarren	3d.
19	Jolly Cricket Ball	Monk	4d
20	Emigrant's Song ...	Macfarren	3d
21	Shepherd's Song	Brewer	4d.
22	Pedlar's Song	Douland	3d.
23	Fairies' Song (S.S.S.S.) ...	Bishop	8d.
24	June (S.S.A.)	F. Dun	3d.
25	Awake! the starry	Mendelssohn	3d.
26	Fair Flower	Rimbault	3d.
27	O happy he who	Gastoldi	3d.
28	Green Leaves	Taylor	3d.
29	Dirge	S. Wesley	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting Tree ...	Corfe	4d.
31	The Dream	Stewart	3d.
32	God speed the Plough ...	Richter	3d.
33	There is a ladie sweete ...	Ford
34	Football Song	Monk	4d.
35	Haymakers' Song	Stewart	4d.
36	Come away, Death ...	Macfarren	4d.
37	Old May-day, in A ...	Benedict	2d.
38	Invocation to Sleep ...	,,	4d.
39	A Night Song	,,	4d.
40	Dirge for the faithful lover	,,	2d.
41	A Drinking Song (T.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
42	Sylvan pleasures ...	,,	6d.
43	Consolation	H. Smart	2d.
44	Good-night, thou glorious Sun	,,	2d.
45	Hunting Song	,,	2d.
46	Lady, rise, sweet Morn's	,,	2d.
47	Summer Morning ...	,,	2d.
48	The Sea King	,,	2d.
49	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren	2d.
50	When Icicles hang ...	,,	4d.
51	Come away, Death (S.A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
52	When Daisies pied ...	,,	3d.
53	Who is Sylvia	,,	4d.
54	Fear no more the heat	,,	2d.
55	Blow, blow, thou winter wind	,,	2d.
56	The Belfry Tower ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
57	England	,,	2d.
58	Come, celebrate the May	,,	2d.
59	Song to Pan	,,	2d.
60	The Indian Maid	,,	6d.
61	The Pearl Divers ...	,,	4d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
63	Break, break on thy cold grey	,,	2d.
64	Echoes (The Splendour falls)	,,	2d.
65	Song of the Railroads	,,	3d.
66	Christmas	,,	4d.
67	Adieu, Love, Adieu ...	,,	2d.
68	Sir Knight, Sir Knight	Macirone	2d.
69	The Wounded Cupid	,,	4d.
70	Woman's smile	,,	2d.
71	Autolycus' Song	,,	4d.
72	Footsteps of Angels ...	,,	2d.
73	The Sun shines fair ...	,,	2d.
74	The Pilgrims	H. Leslie	4d.
75	My soul to God	,,	2d.
76	Awake, the flow'rs unfold	,,	3d.
77	How sweet the moonlight	,,	2d.
78	Land, Ho!	,,	2d.
79	Up, up, ye Dames ...	,,	6d.
80	Thine eyes so bright ...	,,	4d.
81	All is not gold	Westbrook	4d.
82	Hark how the birds ...	H. Lahee	2d.
83	All ye woods (S.S.A.T.B.)	,,	2d.
84	My love is fair (S.A.T.B.B.)	H. Leslie	4d.
85	Charm me asleep (S.S.A.T.B.B.)	,,	2d.
86	When twilight dews ...	H. Hiles

No.
87	A Finland love song...	H. Hiles	2d.
88	Evening	,,	2d.
89	To the Morning Wind	,,	4d.
90	To Daffodils	,,	4d.
91	Summer longings ...	,,	4d.
92	Night, lovely Night ...	F. Berger	2d.
93	Essay, my Heart ...	,,	4d.
94	Childhood's melody	,,	2d.
95	Now	,,	4d.
96	Sunset	,,	2d.
97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	,,	4d.
98	Night winds that ...	J. B. Calkin	2d.
99	Breathe soft, ye Winds	,,	2d.
100	My lady is so wondrous fair	,,	2d.
101	Chivalry of Labour (S.S.A.T.B.)	,,	6d.
102	Come, fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
103	Echoes	,,	2d.
104	Phœbus	J. Barnby	2d.
105	Luna	,,	2d.
106	A Wife's Song	,,	2d.
107	Home they brought...	,,	2d.
108	Annie Lee	,,	2d.
109	Starry Crowns of Heaven	,,	4d.
110	The Wind	,,	2d.
111	The Skylark	,,	2d.
112	The Sands of Dee	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
113	Alton Locke's Song ...	,,	2d.
114	The Starlings	,,	2d.
115	The Three Fishers ...	,,	2d.
116	The World's Age ...	,,	2d.
117	Sing heigh ho!	,,	2d.
118	Fairy Song ...	A. Zimmermann	2d.
119	Good-Night	,,	4d.
120	Gone for ever	,,	4d
121	Flowers	,,	2d.
122	To Daffodils	,,	4d.
123	Good Morrow	,,	3d.
124	Sigh no more, ladies	Macfarren	4d.
125	You spotted snakes (S.S.A.A.)	,,	2d.
126	Take, oh take those lips away	,,	6d.
127	It was a lover and his lass	,,	2d.
128	O mistress mine ...	,,	2d.
129	Under the greenwood tree	,,	4d.
130	Hark, the lark	,,	2d.
131	Tell me where is fancy bred	,,	4d.
132	The Violet	H. Leslie	4d.
133	One morning sweet in May	,,	2d.
134	Daylight is fading ...	,,	2d.
135	Down in a pretty valley	,,	2d.
136	The Primrose	,,	2d.
137	Arise, sweet love ...	,,	3d.
138	'Tis break of day ...	H. Smart	3d.
139	My true love hath my heart	,,	2d.
140	Doth not my lady come	,,	2d.
141	Spring Song	,,	2d.
142	The Curfew	,,	2d.
143	Hear, sweet spirit ...	,,	4d.
144	Spring Voices	S. Reay	4d.
145	Waken, lords and ladies gay	,,	4d.
146	As it fell upon a day...	,,	4d.
147	Huntsman, rest ...	,,	4d.
148	'Tis May upon the mountain	,,	2d.
149	Take, oh take those lips away	,,	2d.
150	The Rainy Day... ...	A. Sullivan	4d.
151	Oh, hush thee, my babie	,,	2d.
152	Evening	,,	3d.
153	Joy to the Victors ...	,,	2d.
154	Parting gleams	,,	2d.
155	Echoes	,,	2d.
156	Spring	W. Macfarren	2d.
157	Summer	,,	4d.
158	Autumn	,,	4d.
159	Winter	,,	2d.
160	You stole my love ...	,,	2d.
161	Dainty love...	,,	2d.
162	Drops of Rain ...	J. Lemmens	4d.
163	The Fairy Ring... ...	,,	4d.
164	The Light of Life ...	,,	4d.
165	Oh, welcome him ...	,,	4d.
166	Sunshine through the	,,	4d.
167	The Corn Field... ...	,,	2d.
168	Wake! to the hunting	H. Smart	4d.
169	Dost thou idly ask ...	,,	2d.
170	A Psalm of Life ...	,,	2d.
171	Only Thou	,,	2d.
172	I prithee send me back	,,

No.
173	The Moon	H. Smart	4d.
174	A Spring Song	Ciro Pinsuti	4d.
175	An Autumn Song ...	,,	4d.
176	The Two Spirits ...	,,	4d.
177	The Crusaders... ...	,,	2d.
178	The Caravan	,,	2d.
179	Stradella	,,	4d.
180	When evening's twilight	Hatton	2d.
181	Absence	,,	2d.
182	April showers	,,	2d.
183	The red, red rose ...	,,	2d.
184	Beware, beware ...	,,	2d.
185	The Sailor's Song ...	,,	2d.
186	Good-Night	,,	3d.
187	Blythe is the bird ...	,,	2d.
188	Stars of the summer night	,,	6d.
189	The hemlock-tree ...	,,	2d.
190	Jack Frost	,,	4d.
191	I loved her	,,	2d.
192	The Village Blacksmith	,,	2d.
193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	,,	4d.
194	Softly fall the shades of	,,	4d.
195	Auburn (Sweet village)	,,	4d.
196	Bird of the wilderness	,,	3d.
197	The Summer gale ...	,,	3d.
198	I met her in the quiet lane	,,	4d.
199	If thou art sleeping ...	,,	4d.
200	Spring Song	,,	4d.
201	Good wishes	,,	3d.
202	Parting and Meeting	,,	4d.
203	Whether kissed by sunbeams	,,	2d.
204	The roses are blushing	,,	4d.
205	The Rivals	,,	4d.
206	The village dance ...	,,	2d.
207	Song of the Gipsy maidens	,,	4d.
208	The Waterfall	,,	4d.
209	Over hill, over dale ...	,,	4d.
210	Love me little, love me long	,,	4d.
211	Going a-maying ...	,,	4d.
212	See, the rooks are homeward	,,	4d
213	Sweet Lady Moon ...	,,	4d.
214	Hark, the Convent bells are	,,	2d
215	When evening's (male voices)	,,	4d.
216	Warrior's Song ,,	,,	3d.
217	Absence ... ... ,,	,,	2d.
218	April showers ... ,,	,,	4d.
219	The red, red rose ,,	,,	2d.
220	Beware, beware ,,	,,	2d.
221	The happiest land ,,	,,	4d.
222	The Sailor's Song ,,	,,	3d.
223	Busy, curious fly ,,	,,	3d.
224	Good-night, beloved ,,	,,	4d.
225	Bacchanalian Song ,,	,,	2d.
226	Stars of the summer, ,,	,,	4d.
227	King Witlaf's Song ,,	,,	4d.
228	Tars' Song ... ... ,,	,,	6d.
229	The hemlock-tree ,,	,,	4d.
230	Jack Frost ... ... ,,	,,	4d.
231	The Lye ... ... ,,	,,	4d.
232	I loved her ... ... ,,	,,	4d.
233	Village Blacksmith ,,	,,	4d.
234	The Letter ... ... ,,	,,	4d.
235	Shall I wasting in ,,	,,	6d.
236	Way to build a boat ,,	,,	6d.
237	I loved a lass ... ,,	,,	4d.
238	The Lifeboat ... ,,	,,	2d.
239	Shepherd's farewell...	H. Smart	4d.
240	The waves' reproof ...	,,	2d.
241	Ave Maria	,,	3d.
242	Spring	,,	4d.
243	Morning	,,	2d.
244	Hymn to Cynthia ...	,,	2d.
245	Cradle Song	,,	4d.
246	The joys of Spring ...	,,	2d.
247	Dream, baby, dream	,,	4d.
248	A song for the Seasons	,,	3d.
249	O say not that my heart	,,	4d.
250	Love and mirth... ...	,,	4d.
251	Sweet Vesper hymn	,,	2d.
252	Crocuses and Snowdrops	,,	2d.
253	Stars of the summer night	,,	4d.
254	Wind thy horn... ...	,,	4d.
255	The land of wonders	,,	3d.
256	Ye little birds that sit and sing	,,	2d.
257	How soft the shades of	,,	3d.
258	How sweet is summer	,,

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK (continued).

No.
259	Now May is here	H. Smart	4d.
260	Hunting Song ...	W. Macfarren	2d.
261	Summer Song	,,	4d.
262	The Curfew Bell	,,	4d.
263	The Warrior	,,	4d.
264	Love's heigh-ho!	,,	4d.
265	Good-night, good rest	,,	4d.
266	The Fairies	,,	2d.
267	Cradle Song	,,	4d.
268	Morning Song	,,	4d.
269	Ye pretty birds	,,	4d.
270	More life	,,	4d.
271	Sweet content	,,	4d.
272	Sea Song ... (T.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
273	The stars are with the	,,	3d.
274	Autumn	,,	4d.
275	Highland War Song	,,	4d.
276	Shortest and longest	,,	4d.
277	Windlass Song ...	,,	4d.
278	O Lady, leave thy silken	,,	4d.
279	Lover's Parting	,,	4d.
280	Shepherds all and maidens	,,	2d.
281	Night, sable goddess ...	,,	4d.
282	Hence, all you vain delights	,,	4d.
283	Swallow, swallow, hither	,,	4d.
284	Hardy Norseman... ...De Pearsall		2d.
285	Nymphs are sporting...	,,	4d.
286	O who will o'er the downs	,,	2d.
286*	Ditto (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
287	Who shall win my lady fair	,,	2d.
288	Why with toil	,,	2d.
289	When Allen-a-Dale went	,,	2d.
290	I saw lovely Phillis ...	,,	2d.
291	River Spirit's song (A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
292	It was upon a Spring-tide day	,,	4d.
293	Take heed, ye shepherd	,,	2d.
294	Spring returns (S.S.A.T.B.)	,,	3d.
295	Great god of love (8 voices)	,,	4d.
296	In dulci jubilo. Carol	,,	4d.
297	Song of the Frank companies	,,	4d.
298	How bright in the May-time	,,	4d.
299	Winter Song	,,	3d.
300	Bishop of Mentz	,,	2d.
301	When last I strayed ...	,,	3d.
302	See how smoothly ...	,,	3d.
303	Let us all go maying ...	,,	3d.
304	List! Lady, be not coy	,,	4d.
305	O ye roses	,,	4d.
306	Sing we and chaunt it (8 voices)	,,	3d.
307	Ditto (4 voices)	,,	3d.
308	Red Wine flows (T.T.B.B.)	,,	3d.
309	Shoot, false love, I care not	,,	2d.
310	Laugh not, Youth, at Age	,,	6d.
311	Down in my garden fair	,,	4d.
312	Adieu! my native shore	,,	3d.
313	Purple glow the forest	,,	3d.
314	Caput apri defero ...	,,	4d.
315	A Chieftain to the Highlands	,,	3d.
316	A King there was in Thule	,,	3d.
317	Come, let us be merry	,,	3d.
318	Mihi est propositum (A.T.B.B.)	,,	3d.
319	Light of my soul	,,	4d.
320	Lay a garland	,,	4d.
321	Summer is y-coming in	,,	3d.
322	Why should the Cuckoo's	,,	4d.
323	Why weep, alas!	,,	4d.
324	There is a paradise (A.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
325	O! all ye ladies fair and true	,,	3d.
326	War Song of the Baron	,,	3d.
327	Why do the roses... ...	,,	3d.
328	Sweet as a flower in May	,,	3d.
329	Praise of good wine (T.T.B.B.)	,,	3d.
330	Watchman's Song (T.T.B.B.) / Ditto (S.A.T.B.)	,,	3d.
331	Waters of Elle (S.S.A.T.B.)	,,	3d.
332	No! no! Nigella (8 voices)	,,	3d.
333	Sir Patrick Spens. In 10 parts	,,	6d.
334	Already snow has fallen	Franz	2d.
335	At parting	,,	2d.
336	The fairest time	,,	2d.
337	Spring's faith	,,	2d.
338	May Song	,,	2d.
339	A morning walk	,,	4d.
340	Home that I love	F. Abt	2d.
341	Eventide	,,	2d.
342	O thou world so fair ...	,,	4d.
343	Spring's awaking	,,	2d.
344	Night Song	,,	2d.
345	Evening glow on the woods	,,	4d.
346	Dost thou hear the trees	F. Hensel	2d.
347	The unknown land ...	,,	4d.
348	In Autumn	,,	2d.
349	Morning greeting	,,	4d.
350	The woodland valley ...	,,	2d.
351	When woods are glowing	,,	4d.
352	How I love the festive...	Mackenzie	4d.
353	Autumn	,,	2d.
354	When Spring	,,	6d.
355	The day of love	,,	4d.
356	Stars are with the voyager	,,	2d.
357	Hail to the chief	E. Prout	6d.
358	At the coming of the	J. L. Hatton	4d.
359	Calm night	,,	4d.
360	Come, live with me ...	,,	4d.
361	Echo's last word	J. L. Hatton	2d.
362	He that hath a pleasant face	,,	2d.
363	Keep time, keep time ...	,,	4d.
364	Lo, the peaceful shades...	,,	2d.
365	Not for me the lark is singing	,,	4d.
366	Spring, the sweet Spring	,,	4d.
367	Take heart	,,	4d.
368	The fishing boat	,,	2d.
369	The lark	,,	4d.
370	The moon shone calmly bright	,,	4d.
371	The reproach	,,	2d.
372	The swing	,,	4d.
373	The wrecked hope	,,	4d.
374	Twilight	,,	2d.
375	Twilight now is round us	,,	4d.
376	What is got by sighing? ...	,,	4d.
377	Where shall the lover rest	,,	2d.
378	Night	Gounod	4d.
379	The dawn of day	S. Reay	6d.
380	The calm of the sea... ...	H. Hiles	6d.
381	The wreck of the Hesperus	,,	8d.
382	Uncertain light	Schumann	4d.
383	Confidence. Double Chorus	,,	4d.
384	The Dream	,,	2d.
385	The Boat	,,	4d.
386	Spring's approach	Seymour Egerton	4d.
387	Wild rose	,,	4d.
388	In the woods	,,	4d.
389	The rose and the soul ...	,,	2d.
390	Adieu to the Woods... ...	,,	4d.
391	King Winter	,,	4d.
392	The Miller	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
393	At first the mountain rill...	,,	2d.
394	All is still	,,	2d.
395	Sleep! the bird is in its nest	J. Barnby	4d.
396	Hushed in death	H. Hiles	8d.
397	Evening (It is the hour) ...	Hy. Leslie	2d.
398	Now the bright morning star	,,	4d.
399	Boat Song (Hail to the chief)	,,	2d.
400	The triumph of Death ...	C. Holland	4d.
401	Now the bright morning star	Pierson	4d.
402	The bright-haired morn ...	S. Reay	4d.
403	Red o'er the forest	,,	4d.
404	Sweet is the breath of early morn	,,	4d.
405	Where wavelets rippled	Ciro Pinsuti	8d.
406	We'll gaily sing and play	,,	8d.
407	Gently falls the evening...	Marenzio	4d.
408	Lilies white, crimson roses (5 v.)	,,	4d.
409	The shepherd's pipes (5 v.)	,,	4d.
410	Spring returns (5 v.) ...	,,	4d.
411	See where with rapid bound (6 v.)	,,	4d.
412	Those dainty daffadillies (5 v.)	Morley	4d.
413	Dainty, fine, sweet nymph	,,	4d.
414	Shoot, false love, I care not	,,	4d.
415	O say what nymph (6 v.)...	Palestrina	4d.
416	Ye singers all	H. Waelrent	4d.
417	Now fie on love...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
418	Winds of Autumn! ...	Chas. Oberthür	3d.
419	Softly fall the shades ...	E. Silas	3d.
420	Love me little, love me long	L. Wilson	3d.
421	Shall I tell you whom I love	Wesley	4d.
422	It was a lover and his lass	J. Booth	2d.
423	Love's question and reply	J. B. Grant	3d.
424	Hence, loathed melancholy (5 v.)	Labee	6d.
425	Evening Song	E. M. Hill	4d.
426	Welcome dawn of summer's day	,,	4d.
427	Charge of the Light Brigade	Hecht	6d.
428	There is beauty on the mountain	Goss	2d.
429	O my sweet Mary (5 v.) ...	,,	6d.
430	Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd hours	,,	6d.
431	Her eyes the glow-worm	,,	6d.
432	Bells of St. Michael's ...	Stewart	6d.
433	The Cruiskeen Lawn (5 v.)	,,	4d.
434	The wine cup is circling	,,	4d.
435	Ye mariners of England	H. Pierson	2d.
436	The Vesper Hymn ...	Beethoven	3d.
437	What though sorrow ...	Naumann	3d.
438	The Swallows	Pohlentz	3d.
439	Hope and Faith	Weber	3d.
440	Hark, hark, the Lark ...	Kücken	4d.
441	A walk at dawn	Gade	4d.
442	Winter days	A. J. Caldicott	6d.
443	Homeward	Henry Leslie	6d.
444	To sea! the calm is o'er ...	Marshall	6d.
445	Rest hath come...	,,	3d.
446	Hymn to the Moon ...	Josiah Booth	6d.
447	The Brook	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
448	The Secret	,,	4d.
449	Is it to odours sweet ...	R. Müller	4d.
450	On the water	R. de Curvy	4d.
451	The Water-lily	N. W. Gade	3d.
452	There 's one that I love ...	F. Kücken	4d.
453	The trees are all budding	,,	4d.
454	There sings a bird	Franz Abt	3d.
455	O world! thou art so ...	Hiller	6d.
456	Winter Song	H. Dorn	4d.
457	The arrow and the song...	W. Hay	4d.
458	Kings and Queens ...	Ciro Pinsuti	4d.
459	Would you ask my heart?	,,	4d.
460	The Rhine Raft Song ...	,,	4d.
461	The Silent Tide	,,	2d.
462	The April time	,,	3d.
463	The Song to Pan	,,	4d.
464	Autumn is come again ...	F. Corder	4d.
465	My love beyond the sea	F. H. Simms	4d.
466	Lord Ullin's Daughter ...	Prescott	6d.
467	Slow, slow, fresh fount...	Walmisley	4d.
468	Song of the Wind ...	Gertrude Hine	6d.
469	Gentle winds ...	J. T. Musgrave	3d.
470	The Curfew	Oliver King	3d.
471	Waken, lords and ladies gay	E. Louis	6d.
472	Tell me where is fancy bred	Pinsuti	4d.
473	Hymn to Cynthia	B. Tours	4d.
474	Two lovers	E. Hecht	6d.
475	'Tis twilight's holy hour	Clippingdale	4d.
476	Oh, I wish I were a swallow	O. Wagner	4d.
477	Slumber on, Baby dear	Oliver King	4d.
478	Allen-a-Dale	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
479	The sweet spring	F. E. Gladstone	4d.
480	Rustic coquette ...	F. Champneys	4d.
481	Pack, clouds, away	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
482	A chafer's wedding	L. Lewandowski	8d.
483	Joy in spring	J. Raff	4d.
484	Ave Maria	,,	4d.
485	And then no more	,,	3d.
486	This day, in wealth of light	,,	3d.
487	Starlit is night-time ...	,,	3d.
488	In the moonlight	,,	4d.
489	Silent happiness	,,	3d.
490	Snowdrops	,,	3d.
491	May-day	,,	3d.
492	Good-night from the Rhine	,,	4d.
493	Evening	G. C. Martin	3d.
494	O too cruel fair	W. S. Rockstro	6d.
495	The Miller's wooing ...	E. Faning	8d.
496	When twilight dews	J. L. Gregory	3d.
497	The East Indian	,,	3d.
498	When at Corinna's eyes	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
499	I love my love...	G. B. Allen	2d.
500	The Troubadour	H. Leslie	2d.
501	The Lass of Richmond Hill	,,	2d.
502	In this hour of softened	C. Pinsuti	2d.
503	The sea hath its pearls...	,,	2d.
504	Ye gallant men of England	E. Hecht	4d.
505	The Moorland Witch ...	E. Hecht	4d.
506	It was a lover and his lass	J. Barnby	4d.
507	Come live with me...	W. S. Bennett	2d.
508	Looking for Spring	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
509	Tell me not, in mournful	C. Pinsuti	4d.
510	There is music by the River	,,	4d.
511	O sunny beam ...	R. Schumann	3d.
512	O red, red rose	,,	3d.
513	Wanderer's Song	,,	4d.
514	Evening Song	,,	3d.
515	Ah! woe is me...	H. Labee	6d.
516	Sweet evening hour ...	S. Reay	4d.
517	Fair land, we greet thee	Ciro Pinsuti	6d.
518	Rise, Fair Goddess ...	H. Smart	2d.
519	A garland for our fairest	J. L. Hatton	4d.
520	Around the maypole tripping	Hatton	2d.
521	The boatman's good-night	F. Schira	2d.
522	The serenade	J. Brahms	3d.
523	Vineta	,,	4d.
524	The dirge of Darthula ...	,,	6d.
525	As I saw fair Clora ...	F. Corder	4d.
526	Up! up! ye dames... ...	W. Bendall	4d.
527	If love be dead	C. Wood	6d.
528	The Norse Queen's gift	W. Hay	4d.
529	Cavalry Song ...	C. A. Macirone	4d.
530	The winds that waft	Vincent Wallace	3d.
531	Corin for Cleora dying	,,	4d.
532	Madeleine	J. L. Roeckel	2d.
533	Earth, with its troubled voices	Costa	4d.
534	Music, when soft voices die	A. King	6d.
535	The days of long ago ...	B. Tours	4d.
536	The present ...	C. Carr Moseley	4d.
537	The triumph of Victoria	J. Stainer	8d.
538	The three merry dwarfs	Mackenzie	6d.
539	Sleep, darling baby	Ricardo Mähllig	4d.
540	The rosy dawn creeps	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
541	If doughty deeds	C. Lee Williams	4d.
542	Radiant sister ...	Rosalind F. Ellicott	6d.
543	To Chloris, on her singing	Pringle	4d.
544	The blue-eyed lassie	F. Brandeis	3d.
545	Bonnie Bell ...	A. C. Mackenzie	3d.
546	Peace be around thee	R. F. Ellicott	4d.
547	O Mistress mine ...	H. MacCunn	3d.
548	There is a garden	,,	4d.
549	It was a lass	,,	4d.
550	How can a bird help singing?	Abt	4d.
551	In Spring time	,,	4d.
552	The Rover's Joy	,,	3d.
553	Evening Song...	,,	3d.
554	The Flowers' review ...	,,	4d.
555	The Rose in October	Wm. Robinson	3d.
556	The Hunters ...	W. W. Pearson	6d.
557	The Inconstants ...	R. Schumann	4d.
558	The heath rose	,,	3d.
559	The Recruit	,,	3d
560	The Highland Lassie ...	,,	4d.
561	Rattlin' roarin' Willie ...	,,	3d.
562	The lovely Adelaide ...	Volkslied	3d.
563	To the wood we'll go ...	,,	4d.
564	The Douglas raid	O. Prescott	4d.
565	When the hunter's horn	J. Benedict	4d.
566	The Fountain	F. Schira	4d.
567	The three lays ...	J. L. Roeckel	3d.
568	Airs of Summer	,,	3d.

. . a - bove the surg - ing weir, The sea - birds call— . . . .
weir, The sea - birds call— I still can hear them
. . I still can hear them call - ing In dreams so call - ing In night's long . . dreams of those so . .
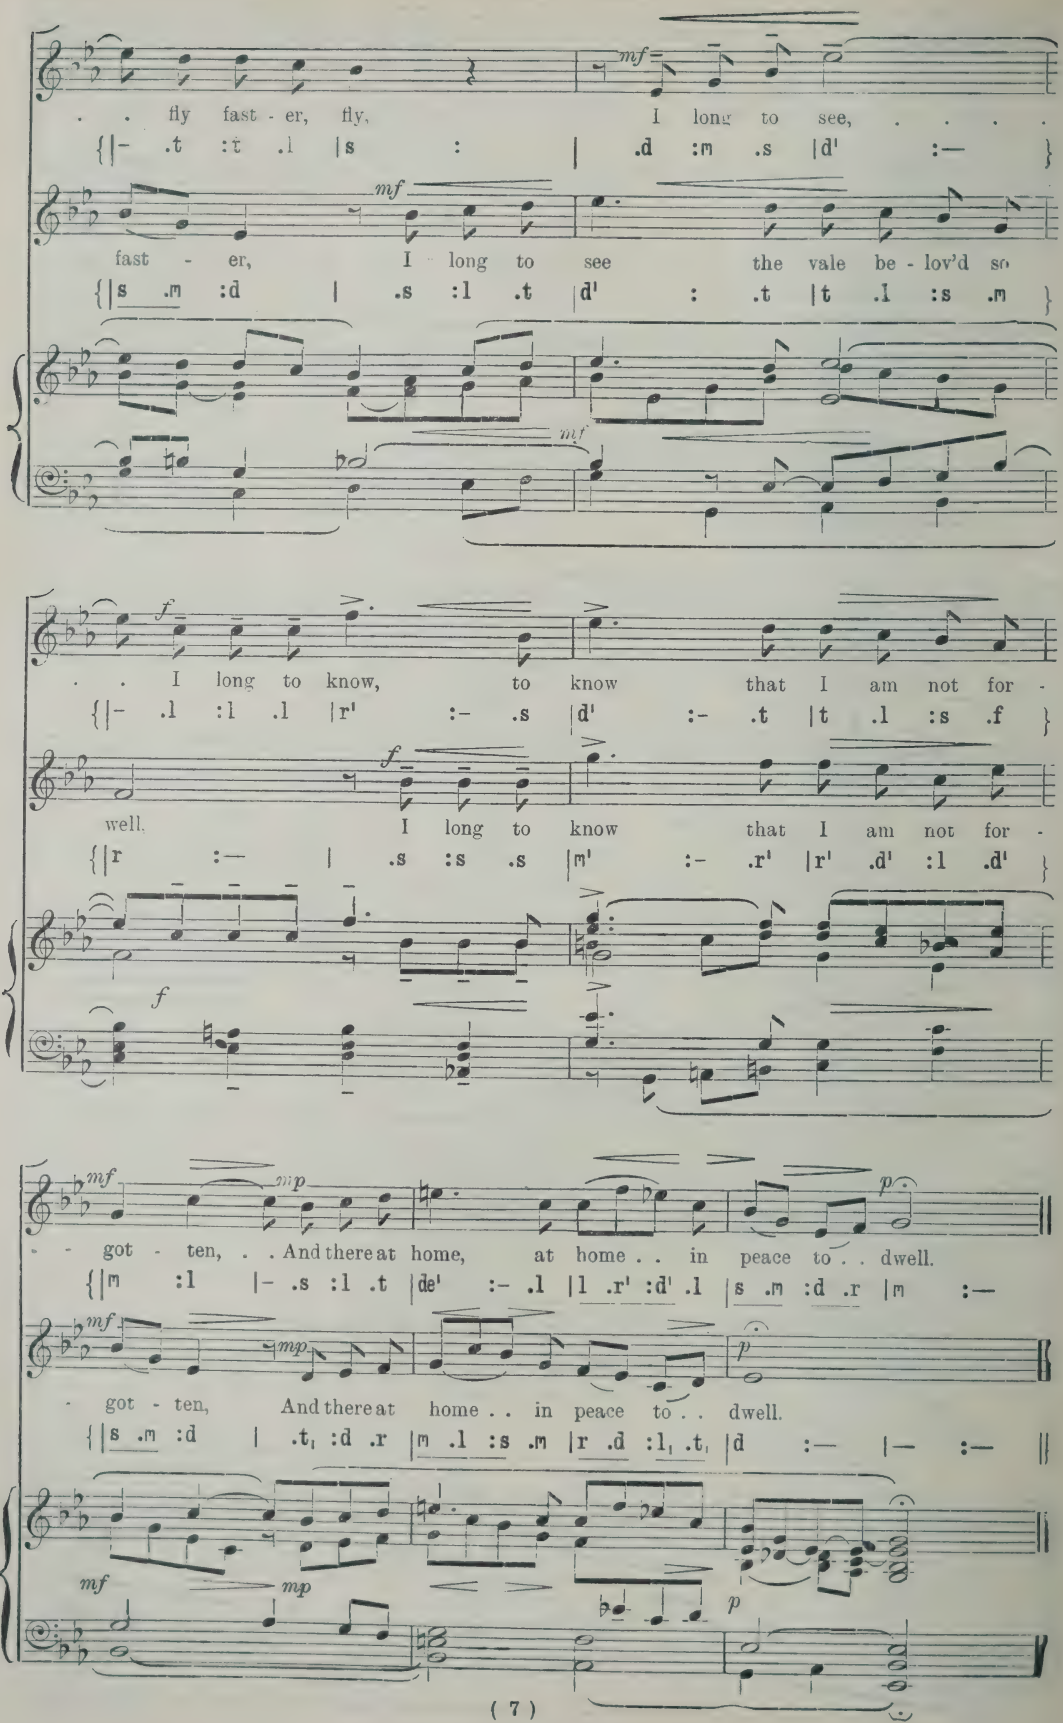
R.H.
dear. Oh, tarry - ing years, . . .
dear. Oh, tarry - ing years, fly fast - er, ev - er



. . fly fast - er, fly, I long to see, ...
fast - er, I long to see the vale be - lov'd so . . I long to know, to know that I am not for - well. I long to know that I am not for -
- - got - ten, . . And there at home, at home . . in peace to . . dwell.
- got - ten, And there at home . . in peace to . . dwell.

Series (Elkin), providing a number of short, well-written pieces which can be used either as a trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello or as a pianoforte and violin duet, may fulfil a want. The technical standard is not uniform, however, and Elgar's 'Carissima' (No. 1 of the series) requires a more skilful violinist than the graceful, melodious 'Valse' of Cyril Scott (No. 2), or the light-hearted 'Fairy Frolic' (from 'Where the Rainbow Ends') of Roger Quilter (No. 6). F. B.

UNISON

I have heard it ingenuously suggested that a reviewer on holiday may be inclined, if compelled then to exercise his horrid trade, either to be too lenient or (because of interruption of his freedom) too severe. August sunshine in Devon might possibly, I suspect, attune the spirit rather to praise than blame; but when the sunshine is changed to Bank-holiday week-end rain, one easily assumes the balanced judicial mood, feeling that one is using virtuously time that could not in any case be spent in the proper pursuit of holiday pleasures outdoors.

My parcel this month is larger than might be expected in midsummer. The quality, like my holiday weather, is mixed. The level of freshness and imagination is not high. Much of the output (apart from some Brahms arrangements) is 'made' music—nearly all of it well made, but not more than that.

Cyril Winn sets Hosmer's 'O beautiful, my country,' as a 'choral song,' with a good many strong stresses on weak words, and a reasonably good vocal line (rather on the low side, in general) (Rogers).

Felix White has four new songs—'Little Bo-peep,' 'The Pedlar's Caravan,' 'Which way does the wind come?' and 'Where the bee sucks.' The first is airily lively, but suffers from an undistinguished tune, the last part of which reminds me of old music-hall ballads. 'The Pedlar's Caravan' has more of this able writer's quality in it. It runs in nine-eight, on well-oiled wheels, and suits children who have heard of Captain Cook, mentioned in the verses. The third song is a brief setting of one of Dorothy Wordsworth's sedately imaginative poems. It must be sung 'rather broadly, with a good swing,' and uses a waltz-rhythm. Its music is a good example of the adequate reflection of a mild bit of pleasant verse. The new setting of the Shakespeare lyric pleases me. In a couple of dozen bars Mr. White, without being finicking, uses resource, and asks a class of neat little artificers to polish his work so that it shall shine with the authentic fairy lustre (Keith Prowse).

'Parasols for Two' is an action-song for boys and girls in 'old-fashioned Georgian or crinoline' costume. Alec Rowley makes the music (in gavotte style), and Doris Rowley the words. This is unpretentious and agreeable. 'Clever Kiddies' (E. Moy and D. Rowley) has both a march and a waltz tune. The former is reminiscent; but in such a piece that may be intentional. Indeed, a good many children's songs have tunes that recall the comity of the Early Christians. I prefer fewer songs and fresher strains (Leonard, Gould, & Bolttler). W. R. A.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

In the Winthrop Rogers edition, edited by Julius Harrison, are three Brahms songs, arranged for S.S.A. They are suitable for older girls and grown-up choirs, though 'A Little Bird' is meet also for younger folk. For singers who can soar (mentally) this is not difficult. 'To an Æolian Harp' tests the power of holding a slowly-unfolded picture. It is much more difficult, and has humming effects (divided parts). This is the kind of lovely thing any choir should aspire to do well: it needs real musicianship. I doubt if the 'Sapphic Ode' is choir meat. It is so very personal—the rapture and tears of one soul alone. But hundreds of choristers don't know the grandeur of Brahms. Best of all for them to sing his songs as he wrote them (never minding the voice: the spirit can be caught); but if they funk that, by all means let them learn his greatness from arrangements so musicianly as these. Ivor Davies arranges 'Begone, dull care!' for voices with descant, bringing in the well-known neat canonic treatment at the last verse. This is a good brisk ditty. The old melody is described as of the 17th century. Is this certain? I had the idea that it is 18th (Rogers).

Henry L. Read has two songs for S.S., one a gentle piece on Campion's 'There is a garden in her face,' and the other a 'Huntsman's Song' (S. T. Coleridge). Both keep to familiar idioms, and will please best those who have affection for the part-song feeling of the 'eighties. They are nicely made (Elkin). W. R. A.

MALE VOICES

Stuart Young's 'Follow the Gleam' (Tennyson) is for T.T.B.B. It begins with a stanza for all the second-basses. The music aspires honourably, but does not rise high. Its rhythmic scheme (in the accompaniment, chiefly) is rather stiff, and the tune at the end of the first stanza is triter than ever the great poet was (Cramer).

'The Serenade' ('In Moorish Lands') from 'Il Seraglio' is done for T.T.BAR.B., by Julius Harrison. Some light tenors (or altos) are needed for the top line. The accompaniment is to suggest the guitar. There is some division of the parts. This is a pretty tit-bit for clever choirs (Rogers).

Corbett Sumsion is poet and composer for the 'Farmer's Tale' (T.T.B.B.). It is a kind of miniature Webbian report upon agricultural depression, which is not, I suppose, to be taken too seriously. Its colour is a little curious, and should attract spirited singers. There is 'la'-ing and humming, and a variety of vocal device new to me—'tu'-ing. I can imagine this going well, upon a carefully prepared background of bovine countenances (Curwen).

Boughton's 'The Donkey' (Chesterton's little masterpiece of a poem) is for T.T.BAR.B. Somehow I feel that this is a thought too intimate to be put to music. It needs silence, not sound: the sort of poem to read rather than to hear declaimed. It is difficult to sing, and seems designed for competitive work. The music overweights the poem, and tries to do too much. It does not greatly impress me (Williams). W. R. A.

MIXED VOICES

'Come soon' is the familiar Brahms song beginning 'Why are we waiting from day to day?' arranged by Julius Harrison for S.A.T.B. Easy; a few divided alto bars. Here is music that soothes and satisfies—a bit of simple sentiment of which few grow tired. Harrison sets R. L. S.'s 'Blows the wind to-day' for eight-part chorus. The music surges strongly, with purpose and insight. It has direction and subtlety. Much care should be expended on the vocal orchestration; the balance of values within the chords will require the finest attention (Rogers).

Alec Rowley's 'Vocal Pavan' (S.A.T.B.) is another of the composer's pleasant ideas. 'Slow and stately' is the requirement—good, easy practice in solid yet light tone-blending. 'Lovelady Shield' (S.A.T.B.) is by Dr. Whittaker. As always, the style is personal, vivid, with often a sting in it. Some chords look as if they would sound odd. When they are heard, usually they fall into place in a plan that schemes for character or atmosphere. So it is not enough to tackle these things as if they were straightforward little songs, where blend is nearly all that matters. They bite, and are meant to. Whether you like the nip depends chiefly on your feeling as to the bounds of choral harmony, and your liking for starkness and direct if sometimes rough paths. 'Burglar Bill' is Boughton's setting of Anstey's mock-pathetic tale of the thief who was conquered by the artless prattle of a little cherub. Anstey has an old-fashioned sense of fun (he was one of those who established a distinctive flavour in Punch forty years ago), and my only doubt here is whether the composer has found just the right thickness for his sentimental music, which seeks to match the sweetly-pretty grocer's-almanack charm of the spirit behind the humorous (perhaps rather tenuously humorous) verse. Much will depend on the choir. The blend is worth tasting. There are on pp. 15 and 16 some unnecessary accidentals. S.A.T.B., unaccompanied.

Hubert Foss has arranged for S.S.A.T.B.B. one of the 'North Country Folk-Songs' that Dr. Whittaker collected—'O! I ha'e seen the roses blaw.' Sometimes five, sometimes four of the parts accompany the melody on 'ah,' in soft, dreamy style. A beautiful bit of rich, mellow harmonizing—not merely pretty (Curwen).

Cyril Jenkins's S.A.T.B. arrangement of 'David of the White Rock' (English and Welsh words) has some strong moments and some rather weakeningly chromatic ones. It is easy to sing. Edric Cundell's setting of Masefield's 'The Emigrant' (S.A.T.B.) does not strike out far, but has a simple burliness and a hearty swing in it. It does not ask high technique (Paxton).

Two Royal Welsh Eisteddfod pieces appear. One, 'Spirit of Delight,' by J. Owen Jones, was sung at last month's Liverpool meeting. It is a twenty-page setting of Shelley's 'Rarely, rarely comest thou,' for tenor, S.A.T.B. chorus, and orchestra. Its fluent, familiar romanticism runs on well-known lines—particularly well known at eisteddfodau. The imagination does not catch the note of rapture. This is music meet for, say, Wordsworth in his didactic mood. Shelley demands a higher potential. Dr. Vaughan Thomas is early with his test-piece for the 1930 Eisteddfod (to be held at Llanelly). This is a short S.A.T.B. piece, 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' to which the composer has added a Welsh translation of the poem. The music evokes and consistently holds the spirit of the nocturne. It is not difficult, and will please choirs that do not care for stunts, and like something quiet, thoughtful, and direct (Rowland).

W. R. A.

CHURCH MUSIC

Ernest Bullock's setting in D of the Te Deum—composed for the Thanksgiving Service held at Westminster Abbey on July 7, 1929, for the recovery of H.M. The King—is a finely-written, impressive work, worthy of the occasion. Both voices and organ are handled with great skill and effect. It opens with a stately brass-like passage for the organ, which subsequently combines with the voices in some massive climaxes, e.g., at 'Holy, Holy,' 'Thou art the King of Glory,' and finally at the close of 'in glory everlasting,' where an optional conclusion is possible. The final section is effectively treated in free rhythm, a solo bass (or priest) intoning the first half of each verse and the choir responding in four-part unaccompanied harmony. The work—which, by the way, is of no great difficulty—is published by the Oxford University Press.

C. H. Kitson's settings in F of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis and the Benedictus are welcome additions to Cramer's Library of Church Music edited by Martin Shaw. The writing is smooth and fluent, noteworthy in this respect being the admirable examples of ingenious but unobtrusive counterpoint to be found in both settings. Choir-masters, particularly of school chapels, looking for a Benedicite that shall not take too long in performance, might examine one by M. L. Davies in F sharp minor (Curwen). It is arranged for two unison groups of voices—choir and congregation. In mixed choirs these could be taken by women and men respectively. Verses frequently overlap, and sometimes two different verses are going at the same time. The music is thoroughly well written and is not difficult.

Charles Wood's setting in C of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (No. 262 of Stainer & Bell's Modern Church Services) is an effective, straightforward work easily within the powers of the average choir. An anthem by Stanford—'How long wilt Thou forget me?'—consists of an expressive Andante (alla breve) in F minor and a short concluding section—'But my trust is in Thy mercy'—in 3-4 time, con moto. It is not difficult. Misprints have been noted on p. 4, l. 2 (treble E natural should be E flat), and the bottom line of p. 5 (first bass note in organ part should be B flat). Frederic H. Wood's Festival Anthem for chorus and orchestra—'God is our refuge and strength'—is a fairly elaborate work needing a good choir. The vocal writing, much of it contrapuntal, is skilful, and, capably sung, should sound effective. On p. 13, l. 2, the last quaver in the bass part should be a crotchet. Both these anthems are published by Stainer & Bell, who also send a Communion Service (Mass in D) for four-part chorus, soli, and organ, by George Henschel. It is of moderate length and difficulty, and as might be expected from the veteran composer, contains many distinctive touches. At the bottom of p. 28 the low B in the organ part should be C.

The Sanctus from Palestrina's 'Missa Regina Cœli,' with English translation adapted by Herbert G. Smith, appears as an Anthem, 'Holy, Holy,' in the York Series (Banks, York), and makes an attractive number for unaccompanied singing (S.A.T.B.). The smoothly flowing counterpoint presents no serious difficulties, but a well-balanced choir is, of course, necessary. Another anthem in the same series—'Jesu, grant me this, I pray'—is an arrangement of Orlando Gibbons's well-known tune with verses in faux-bourdon by E. C. Bairstow. The last verse—'Death will come one day to me'—with the tune low in the bass (p), accompanied by the three upper voices (ppp), makes an impressive close. The hymn may be sung as an anthem by the choir, preferably without organ, but suggestions are given for other treatment making less demands on the choir and enabling the congregation to participate. From the Oxford University Press comes a short anthem, 'I have found David My servant,' written by C. Charlton Palmer for the enthronement of the Archbishop of Canterbury, December 4, 1928. It is a sound piece of work with the Gloria treated in jubilant fashion, and is intended for unaccompanied singing.

Those looking for a Sacred Cantata suitable for Christmas should examine 'The Saviour's Birth,' by Kenneth Finlay (Bayley & Ferguson, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Tonic Sol-fa, 1*s.* 3*d.*), and 'The Holy Child,' by Eric Gritton (Stainer & Bell, 4*s.*). The first of these is a well-written work, dignified and devotional in style, which makes no great demands on either choir or organist. It takes about half an hour to sing. Mr. Gritton's work contains much excellent stuff, the opening and concluding choruses being particularly good. There are some attractive numbers for solo voices, S.S.A., and A.T.T.B., and settings—with descant—of 'O come, all ye faithful' and 'I saw three ships.' It should be noted that each number is also published separately. Length of performance is about an hour and twenty minutes.

G. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Erinnerungen an Franz Liszt.' Von August Stradal. Pp. 173. Bern/Leipsic: Verlag Paul Häupt.

'Art and Reality.' By Greville Cooke. Pp. 67. Joseph Williams, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'The Divisions of Music.' Edited with a Summary by Basil Maine. Pp. 72. Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Schumann's Songs Translated.' By A. H. Fox-Strangways and Steuart Wilson. Vols. 1 and 2. Oxford University Press, 5*s.* each.

'Beethoven's Sketches.' An analysis of his style based on a study of his sketch-books. By Paul Mies. Translated by Doris Mackinnon. Pp. 198. Oxford University Press, 8*s.* 6*d.*

'Up to Now.' By Martin Shaw. Pp. 218. Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'The Origin of the Family of Bach Musicians.' Edited, with Pedigree Tables and a Facsimile of Bach's Manuscript, by Charles Sanford Terry. Oxford University Press, 12*s.* 6*d.*

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN MUSICIANS' CONFERENCE AT LAUSANNE

By Edwin Evans

After the success of the British-American Music Educationists' Field Day, held in London on July 7, 1928, the next step was the organization of an Anglo-American Summer Holiday Conference of Musicians and Educationists, to further the object of bringing together, for the exchange of ideas and experiences, as many as possible of those sharing the same interests on both sides of the Atlantic. Committees were appointed in both countries. Much preliminary work was involved, and demanded a considerable amount of unselfish energy, but even the difficulty of maintaining contact between bodies acting at great distances from each other proved no deterrent, and ultimately over four hundred musical educationists found themselves gathered at Lausanne for a week's conference which was opened on August 2.

The Conference was inaugurated at the University by Sir Henry Hadow, the British President. His American colleague, Dr. Walter Damrosch, being unable to attend, his place was taken by Miss Mabelle Glenn, of Kansas City, President of the Music Supervisors' National Conference. After M. P. Rosset, Syndic of Lausanne, had welcomed the members on behalf of the civic authorities, various messages were read out expressing good-will to the enterprise. A loyal telegram was sent to The King, who, in reply, was 'confident that such meetings cannot fail to help towards the development of musical education in both countries.' The Prime Minister wrote to Sir Henry Hadow, 'There can be no doubt music must have a place, and an important place, in any complete and well-balanced educational scheme. On the other hand the methods to be adopted in teaching it need to be very carefully studied; for the child's appreciation of music is a sensitive plant which has to be tended carefully if it is to develop, and which may easily be blighted altogether.' He expressed the hope that the Conference would help to advance the technique of general musical education. Similar messages were received from the Minister of Education, Sir Charles Trevelyan, from Mr. Baldwin, and from Mr. Lloyd George. After these encouraging preliminaries, the gathering adjourned to the Gardens of the Palace Hotel for what our American cousins would call a 'mixer,' that is to say, a social function arranged for the express purpose of enabling the members to become acquainted. Badges were worn as a substitute for introductions, and as most of the members were already known to each other by name it was not long before they had identified those whom they wished to meet. Thus the ice was already broken before the pilgrims had entirely recovered from the arduous journey—arduous because Neptune had so willed it—which had brought most of them to Lausanne that morning.

The meetings were of two kinds. Twice daily the members gathered to hear an address on some subject of general interest. Once daily they split up into sections for the informal and intimate discussion of special problems. There were eight such sections gathered simultaneously in as many rooms of the University, the Church musicians being assigned to the Zoology class. It would thus have needed eight reporters to keep pace with the speakers, and a volume to contain their reports. That being manifestly out of the question, it only remains to enumerate some of the subjects treated, adding that, in the opinion of most of the members, it was on these occasions that the debates became most interesting.

The two Committees had adopted different modes of procedure. The Americans had prepared a number of sets of papers in advance, whereas the British preferred to call upon such qualified speakers as they found on arriving at Lausanne. The list therefore shows a preponderance of American names, whereas in fact honours were evenly divided. A few of the subjects treated were: 'The Creative side of Teaching Music to Young Children,' by Mrs. Satis Coleman, of Lincoln School, New York; 'Approach to the Arts through Creative Opportunity,' by Miss Inez F. Damon, Director of Public School Music, Lowell, Mass.; 'American Indian Music,' by Frederick Jacobi; 'Methods of Teaching Harmony in America during the last Fifty Years,' by Prof. Arthur E. Heacox, of Oberlin College, Ohio; 'A Historical Survey of Church Music Conditions in America,' by Dean Peter C. Lutkin, of North Western University, Evanston, Ill.; 'Follies in Vocal Teaching,' by Miss Marie Withrow, of San Francisco; 'The Training of the National Chorus,' by Miss Helen McBride, of the Louisville Conservatory; 'The National High School Orchestra,' by Mr. Hanns Pick, of the University of Michigan. Mr. Ernest Fowles spoke on pianoforte technique. There were also occasional 'talks' of a similiar nature in the evening, notably one by Mr. Robert Mayer, on Children's Concerts, and a joint discussion, by Dr. George Gartlan, of New York, and Mr. J. C. Stobart, of the B.B.C., of the educational aspects of broadcasting in the two countries.

The addresses delivered before the general body of members opened on Saturday morning, August 3, with one by Prof. Leo Rich Lewis, of Tufts College, Mass., on 'Mechanism and Artistry,' meaning the era of automatism in music as represented by the automatic organ, player-piano, talking machine, radio, and sound-film. He urged that though these devices might mean economic hardships for some, musicians should resolutely face the problems of re-adjustment, and in any case they involved no blight on education. Unfortunately educationists had been slow to realise the value of the devices, and even now, if there was a danger it was that conservatism might prevent teachers from keeping pace with this evolution. Mr. Robert Mayer protested against the mechanisms being given too great a share of credit for the improvement in musical taste, and Mr. Steuart Wilson pointed out that great personality, such as that of Paganini or Liszt in the past, could not be transmitted by mechanical means, this being the reason why the B.B.C. was 'the home of the second-raters, since they could not be distinguished from first-raters at the other end of the mac' ine.'

In the afternoon Dr. C. W. Saleeby spoke on 'Music as Medicine,' dividing his subject between its therapeutic and hygienic aspects. By the latter he meant its use in social hygiene, and quoted military authority for asserting that there was less venereal disease in military establishments when the soldiers were given concerts and similar entertainments. The instances of cures by musical means given by the speaker, by Sir Henry Hadow, Dean Peter Lutkin, and others, were mostly attributable to the associations awakened by music, rather than to music itself. Mr. Percy Scholes asked for scientific information regarding the direct action of music, but was told that the data could not be obtainable until some musician qualified himself to record clinical observations. If memory serves, however, such observations have been numerous since the days of Charcot, and Dr. Ingegnieros, for one, has published some interesting results. The tone of the discussion was idealistic and inspiring, but it was not productive of much definitely informative material.

On Monday, August 5, Dr. Augustus O. Thomas—who had just come from presiding, at Geneva, over two thousand five hundred men and women of all countries assembled at the fourth biennial conference of the World Federation of Educational Associations—addressed the members on 'Music, a Universal Language, and its Place in Education.' He surprised them by appearing to delight in the prospect of a standardized world, in which we should receive our news through the same agencies, eat the same food, ride in the same cars, dress alike, and presumably think alike. But when challenged later he explained that he meant only standardization of procedure. He spoke of music as being the expression of the emotions which were common to all mankind, and even shared by some of the animals. It was thus a universal language, which should be taught in every school throughout the world. Sir Henry Hadow, however, was not content to regard music as merely emotional, claiming that above that plane it was intellectual, and above that again spiritual. It was not a translation of anything, but carried its own meaning within itself. He concluded by saying that it made for comradeship and good feeling, and quoted a 'community singing' enthusiast as declaring that 'you can't be in a bad temper when you're singing.' Dr. Will Earhart, of Pittsburg, Pa., also challenged Dr. Thomas's definition of music, and preferred to speak of 'basic affective states' which made us different one from another, and were lost sight of by the layman, who thought only of emotional reactions to outside influences. Protesting against standardization he put forward the plea: 'In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity.' Though Dr. Thomas's address had had this provocative effect, it also showed him to be a sincere and consistent friend of music, for which he claimed a prominent place in any well-planned educational scheme the world over. This was not forgotten when his other utterances were subjected to the fire of debate.

That afternoon Mr. Percy Scholes spoke on 'Good and Bad in Music—an Attempt to Solve one of the Educationist's biggest Problems.' After admitting that America, with her standardized system of Supervisors, her High School orchestras, and so on, was ahead of England, he said that, compared with America, we had very little bad music in our schools. The little we had was mostly specially written. He quoted at some length from an article, 'The Cultivation of Discrimination,' by Prof. Paul Weaver, of Cornell, in which the latter spoke of the overwhelming proportion of trash published in America. It was a sensible, straightforward address, commendably free from pedantry, and led to a spirited debate in which Mr. Clement Spurling, of Oundle, Mr. Forbes Milne, of Berkhamsted, Mr. G. E. Linfoot, of Sheffield, Mr. Will Earhart, of Pittsburg, Miss Inez Damon, of Lowell, and other well-known educationists, took effective part. The nature of the subject made it practically inevitable that the debate would be inconclusive, but thanks to the practical and broadminded opening speech it was retained in useful channels and proved very stimulating.

A GROUP OF MEMBERS ON THE UNIVERSITY STEPS

The following day Dr. E. C. Bairstow spoke on 'The Training of Church Choirs,' which he described as differing from ordinary choirs in four respects: (1.) They sang more often without a conductor, and therefore needed a better ensemble; (2.) They used boys' instead of women's voices; (3.) They were called upon to perform a different class of music—though in its performance they employed every variety of vocal colour except the comic; and (4.) Free rhythm. Most of his remarks were therefore applicable to all choirs indiscriminately, and in fact, many solo singers would have profited by listening to them. He said that four 'loves' were necessary to the singer: (1.) Love of the act of singing, without which the voice will remain confined; (2.) Love of words, for without the literary instinct they cannot be adequately expressed; (3.) Love of music; (4.) Love of one's neighbour, because unless the singer is moved to 'give' of himself, he cannot hope to 'put it across.' These are samples of the practical wisdom he put before his hearers, but he had much to say concerning the essential nature of singing (speech made beautiful, but still speech), the part played by vowels and consonants, phrasing, and other matters of importance to singers. In the afternoon, Dr. J. F. Cooke, Editor of The Etude, read a paper on 'Musical Idealism in the United States,' which, by the time this report appears, will be accessible in the journal he conducts, to those who wish to see a clear statement of America's claim to a place in the musical sun. He was followed by Mrs. Ruth Ottaway, who brought greetings from the National Federation of Music Clubs of America, and described that remarkable league of about five thousand autonomous musical associations. She also outlined the international policy it now proposes to develop, but was apparently unaware that much of the work it proposes to undertake is already being done by the International Society for Contemporary Music. There were no debates on this day.

On Wednesday, August 7, Mr. William Arms Fisher, of Boston, President of the Music Teachers' National Association of America, read a paper 'What is Music?' which passed in review all the definitions of music given by musicians of all kinds, scientists, mathematicians, philosophers, and others, during all the ages, without finding an adequate answer to his initial question. The paper was an eloquent piece of rhetoric. It struck a lofty note, which was maintained in the discussion that followed, but whether it produced much that was of practical use to hard-working teachers, is another question.

In the afternoon, the present writer spoke on 'What the Modern Movement in Composition means to the Teacher.' He explained that when the subject was assigned to him, he had had little experience of teaching, whether as operator or as patient, but since then he had been confronted with the problem in practical guise, by visiting as a guest-professor the State University of Iowa. From his experience he declared that to the teacher, modern music meant first and foremost some hard thinking. In regard to the classics the thinking had already been done for him in advance, for there was a consensus of opinion on which he could lean, but writings on modern music were subjective and conflicting, so that the teacher must do his own thinking. Nor could he shirk the task or he would be failing in his duty, for he was responsible for preparing students to face the conditions that they would find on emerging from studentship, not those that had prevailed when their teacher's teacher was a student. He thereupon outlined the method he had adopted at Iowa City, based upon a classification, not of composers or works, but of ideas. A brief discussion followed.

Thursday, the last day of the Conference, opened with a Demonstration of Eurhythmics by M. Jaques-Dalcroze and a group of his pupils. This proved one of the most popular attractions of the Conference, and of great educational interest, but the method in question has so often been described that it is scarcely necessary to do so again. In the afternoon, Dr. W. G. Whittaker spoke on 'The Use of Classical Song in School Work.' He deprecated the term 'classical' as of somewhat forbidding aspect to the man in the street, but used it to mean songs by standard composers of the past or by men who have left a few first-rate things out of a mass of undistinguished music. Twenty-five years ago there was very little really good music available for school music. To-day there was a vast amount of material, consisting of (1.) Folk-songs, to be used with discrimination, avoiding in particular those which dealt with old racial animosities; (2.) Songs specially written by many of our great composers, such as Parry, Stanford, Delius, Vaughan Williams, Holst, Frank Bridge, Ireland, which were not written DOWN but written UP. Apart from the music, these songs excelled in literary quality over folk-songs and over most translations; (3.) Adaptations from the classics (care being taken to ensure good translations), and some examples of value for the teaching of musical history such as Tudor lute songs, which showed the music of the home in the time of Shakespeare.

The constant meetings left little time for actual performance, but there were two evenings of sacred music at the Cathedral, on the Sunday and Tuesday, the second one resulting in a donation of over £40 to the organ fund. The list of organists heard, headed by Dr. Bairstow, included Frederick H. Candlyn, of Albany, N.Y., Melvin B. Goodwin, of Philadelphia, W. H. Kerridge, and H. V. Spanner, the last two being Londoners. The singers were Miss Millicent Russell, Mlle. Marguerite Rossett (daughter of the Mayor), Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Percy Manchester. Dr. Bairstow had recruited and trained an excellent mixed choir which appeared on Tuesday in works by Bach and Parry. There were also a few short recitals. One remembers an admirable performance of Brahms's F minor Sonata by Prof. Willard MacGregor, of Indianapolis. Two American violin sonatas which were new to most of us were played on separate occasions by M. André de Ribeaupierre and Mr. Arthur Shepherd. One was by Prof. Stanley Smith, of Yale, and proved admirable as to the writing, but reticent as to the writer, in other words an acceptable but somewhat academic performance. The other sonata was by Mr. Arthur Shepherd himself, and revealed a better defined personality, expressing itself with freedom within the form, occasionally turgid in its harmony, but nearly always interesting and particularly so in the middle movements.

Socially there should be recorded an official luncheon offered by the Syndic and the City to some forty of the leading musicians attending the Conference, and a farewell banquet. Both functions owed much of their unalloyed success to the relative paucity of the oratory administered to those taking part in them.

Teachers' Department

REVIEWS

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

T. F. Dunhill's album of five pieces—'Elfin Glade'—contains some charming music, much of it calling for light, delicate treatment (Lower). The publishers are Leonard, Gould, & Bolttler, who send also an attractive piece, 'Pierrot and Columbine,' by R. Drigo (Higher), and a number of short pieces, issued separately at sixpence each, under the title 'Useful Teaching Pieces' (Elementary). This admirable set includes 'A Hunting Jig,' by T. F. Dunhill, 'Hornpipe' and 'A-Sailing,' by Edgar Moy, E. Markham Lee's 'The Mer-King's Palace' and 'In a garden red,' and Gladys Wood's 'Hyde Park.' 'A Burlesque,' by Herbert Brewer (Paxton), is a lively, taking piece, providing excellent practice for both hands (Lower).

An album by Eric Mareo—'Five Little Tales'—is excellent, and may be cordially recommended (Augener). The composer has something fresh to say and says it very delightfully (Elementary). From the same house come four 'Miniature Fancies,' issued separately, by Mari Paldi. They are tuneful though somewhat conventional, especially in the treatment of the left-hand part (Lower). Donald Gray's 'Tunes of all Times,' for sight-reading, with fifty graded time exercises, may be recommended for elementary pupils. The little pieces — folk-songs, airs, and traditional melodies from various sources—make an attractive collection which, used in conjunction with the time exercises, should prove profitable as well as entertaining (Boosey).

Two capital albums which should be appreciated by elementary pupils come from Forsyth—Leslie Fly's 'Scotland's Story,' in the form of twelve miniatures, and twelve delightful sketches by Cyril C. Dalmaine under the title 'Dick Whittington.'

A new album by Julia A. O'Neill—'An Excursion through all the keys'—should interest teachers. In a prefatory note the composer refers to the dearth of easy pieces in keys of more than one or two sharps or flats, with the result that beginners regard all other keys as being very difficult. This little volume takes the pupil systematically through all the major and minor keys by means of melodious little pieces and accompanying preparatory exercises. These, we are told, have been tested on many beginners, both children and adult, 'and proved successful in securing a clear knowledge of all the keys, and also a marked improvement in sight-reading' (B. F. Wood Music Co.).

The following are from the Oxford University Press and may be recommended: 'Spring Idylls,' by Arthur Baynon (a well-varied set of six pieces); 'Three Little Pieces,' by Arthur Benjamin (pleasant cantabile work in Nos. 1 and 2); 'Rigadoon' (well-written and attractive, mainly staccato) and 'Siciliana' (a short, flowing Andantino con moto), both by Harold Rutland; Arthur Baynon's 'Dainty Devices' (six taking pieces mainly calling for quick work); and 'Six Irish Tunes' by E. T. Sweeting. These last are a most attractive set in which both hands take an equal share in the tune-playing. All the above are of about Lower Division standard. Teachers using Books 1 and 2 of the admirable 'Sight-Reading Tests for Beginners,' by Dora Pierce and Lilian Leavey, should note that Book 3 is now available from the Oxford University Press.

G. G.

'Voice-Placing and Training Exercises.' By George Dodds.
[Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

'Singing at Sight.' By G. E. Linfoot.
[Manchester: Hope's Educational Company: price not shown.]

Mr. Dodds's book—the fruit of many years' experience as a teacher of solo singing—provides an admirable collection of carefully graded exercises which should prove useful for beginners. Exercises in breathing and breath-control—taken from 'The Control of the Breath' (Dodds and Lickley)—and a section on vowels and consonants are also included. The book is issued in two editions: (1.) Soprano and tenor; (2.) Contralto and baritone.

'Singing at Sight' may be cordially recommended to the notice of teachers of class-singing. It is a very gently graded course of instruction in reading from the Staff notation. The author, who is musical adviser to the Sheffield Education Committee and Lecturer in music in the University of Sheffield, has been at great pains 'to build up the course in the easiest and most natural way,' and has aimed at making the exercises melodious and interesting to sing, even from the very simplest. The work is issued in six books, each providing material for a year's work. There are two editions of each book—one for the teacher (containing the exercises with suggestions as to their use and hints on various auxiliary devices and methods for ear-training, musical dictation, and the like), and the pupil's book, which contains the exercises only.

'Graded Counterpoint Exercises.' By T. Keighley.
[Bayley & Ferguson: five books, each 1*s.* 6*d.*]

These books, each containing a hundred exercises, together with staves and suitable spaces for the answers, are primarily intended for use in conjunction with the author's 'First Lessons in Counterpoint.' Book 5 contains exercises on Combined Counterpoint and Applied Counterpoint, suitable for A.R.C.O. candidates. The books provide a useful course of work in a handy form.

G. G.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. Our 'Answers to Correspondents' column closes on the 14th of the month. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

O. J. IMAI (Japan).—(1.) Information as to modern works such as those you mention can be got only from a variety of sources, such as annotated programmes, magazine articles, &c. No one book deals with them all, but you will find much that will help and interest you in the little books of concert programme annotations by Mrs. Newmarch, just published by the Oxford University Press under the title 'The Concert-Goer's Library' (two books, 3*s.* 6*d.* each book). (2.) Nor is there a history of music dealing exclusively with modern composers. There are some excellent chapters thereon in Cecil Gray's 'A History of Music' (Kegan Paul, 12*s.* 6*d.*), and much information appears, of course, in the 'Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians,' edited by Eaglefield Hull (Dent, 35*s.*). See also Cecil Gray's 'Contemporary Music' (Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*). Frequent articles in this and other musical journals will help you.

BEDFORD.—It is difficult to suggest material for your Handel lecture-recital without knowing the capacities of your singers. We are sending you a list of Handel choruses published by Novello. Consult this, and select a couple of dozen or so from the less familiar oratorios (we note with pleasure that you wish to get off the beaten track) and ask Novello's to send them on approval for your final choice. As to vocal solos, see the excellent set of Handel song albums just published by Boosey, edited by Walter Ford, in which appear many fine and unfamiliar things. (Seven books, S., Dramatic S., M.-S., C., T., BAR., and B., 3*s.* 6*d.* each.) There is not very much for S.S. or S.A., and apparently nothing for men's voices beyond such duets as 'The Lord is a Man of War' and 'Go, baffled coward.'

OLD ENGLISH.—(1.) For the pronunciation of musical terms, see 'A Pronouncing Pocket Manual of Musical Terms,' Dr. Th. Baker (Chester, 2*s.*). (2.) By all means let your choral society sing popular choruses from various oratorios at your village concert if a complete work is beyond them. We doubt if even the purest of purists would object. If he does, let him! (3.) You ask for a text-book of hints to organ recitalists. We know of none, nor do we see the need of such a work. Assuming the recitalist can play—a wilder assumption than appears on the surface—all he needs is taste and commonsense in arranging his programme. He will acquire these far better by thinking than by reading.

E. B. (Birmingham).—We recommend you to undertake to carry on your predecessor's Dalcroze work, if it is understood by the authorities that you have to learn as you go. Consult Dalcroze's 'Rhythmic Movement,' vol. i., 4*s.* 6*d.*; vol. ii., 6*s.* (Novello), and write to the London School of Dalcroze Eurhythmics, Store Street, W.C.1, for particulars as to any forthcoming course you may be able to attend. If your pianoforte playing is not up to the mark, and you cannot make it so, call in the help of a colleague. It seems a pity to refuse the work because of this minor incapacity.

BM/SKDO.—(1.) Your failure to pass the examination is not due to any shortcomings on the part of the text-books you name, which are all sound. What you need is to work a bit more in every department. For example, transposition: keep on transposing anything and everything suitable that you can lay your hands on; score-reading: devour stacks of choral music in open score. Not many candidates pass the R.C.O. examinations without an ample margin of knowledge and practice.

R. H.—You are right. A good knowledge of Tonic Sol-fa will help you greatly. You can't do better than obtain choral works in which both notations are used, and practise reading from the Tonic Sol-fa, checking yourself by the old notation, with which you say you are proficient. Hundreds of works are published annually in both notations, from part-songs to oratorios. Write to Novello's for a dozen or so of part-songs for a start, specifying that you require those in which both notations appear.

P. J.—We know of no book 'describing different styles of music for the pianoforte.' But surely a candidate for A.R.C.M. Teacher's Diploma ought to be able, from his acquaintance with the pianoforte repertory, to say all sorts of interesting things about composers' styles! The specimen question you quote as to 'the difference between the style of the Classical Beethoven and the Romantic Chopin' ought not to stump any pianist worthy the name.

C. H. F.—We can't advise you as to the publication of your songs without knowing the kind of work you have written. All we can say is, send the manuscript to such houses as deal in that sort of song. You say you can 'write songs by the score, but when it comes to composition must seek aid.' We presume you mean 'words for songs.' If so, submit typed copies to composers who set your particular brand of words.

E. M. C.—You ask, 'What does Masonic work mean?' and, 'To whom should I apply for such work?' We are not a mason, so we don't know. But we imagine that it has chiefly to do with the playing of the organ at Lodge meetings. This is, we believe, an honorary task carried out by none but members. But you'd better ask a friend who belongs to the Order.

CAPETOWN.—We have no copy of the work at hand, so cannot provide you with the analysis. But if you can play music of this degree of difficulty you ought to be able to do your own analysis, surely. Try! We are sorry to appear disobliging to a far-off reader, but it is no kindness to do for you what you may with all-round profit try to do for yourself.

R. C.—'Legal responsibility under Workmen's Compensation Act when choir-boys are paid a small quarterly sum.' Legally you are breaking the law by employing boys on Sunday or after school hours. The way out is to call those quarterly sums 'prize money,' not 'pay.' You are then under no sort of legal obligation at all.

A. S.—The fact of Dibdin including the tune 'The Bells of Aberdovey' in his opera 'Liberty Hall' doesn't prove that he composed that delightful air. We have always understood it to be a genuine Welsh folk-tune, though obviously it is of fairly modern origin.

R. H.—In scoring for military band it is usual to write for horns in F or E flat.

J. D. D.—We should play the notes with the thumb of the left hand. This method brings out the theme, and makes it easy to differentiate the tone and power from that of the accompanying part in the right hand.

ORPHEUS.—We don't feel qualified to give an opinion as to the possible value of the old book of catches. Write to Mr. Harold Reeves, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.1. You may rely on his verdict.

A. B. F.—We know nothing of the origin of the song. Write to the composer. His address is: Wilfrid Sanderson, c/o Messrs. Boosey, 295, Regent Street, W.1.

A. E. W.—The college you mention is one of those whose diplomas are of little value.

L. H.—We know nothing about the grade of the Leipsic distinction you quote.

Church and Organ Music

The late Charles Hancock served St. Martin's Church, Leicester (now the Cathedral), as organist and choirmaster from 1885 to 1927. His many friends will like to know that a worthy memorial of him is projected. It will take the form of a case for the new organ, and a tablet bearing a record of his life and work at Leicester. The estimated cost is about a thousand pounds. The first list of subscribers shows that half of this sum has already been raised. The honorary treasurer is Major L. V. Wykes, 24, Friar Lane, Leicester. In order that the case may be ready for the opening of the organ in the New Year, it is hoped that the response to the appeal will be such as to enable the work to be started at once. Payment of a promised donation may, if desired, be postponed until later in the present year. The case has been designed by Sir Charles Nicholson.

An appeal has been issued by the Bishop of Uganda on behalf of the fund being raised to provide an organ for Uganda Cathedral. The old Cathedral was struck by lightning and burnt down in 1910, and the new building has so far been without an organ. A harmonium is a poor substitute, as the attendance averages over two thousand, and the singing is congregational. A specification has been prepared for a two-manual organ of fifteen stops, at a cost of £1,500. Towards this sum £500 has so far been contributed. There is an excellent organist and choirmaster available in the Rev. J. M. Duncan (an occasional contributor to this journal, by the way). Readers who wish to help the fund should write to Mr. A. Danvers Power, Strand House, E.C., or to the General Secretary of the Uganda Mission, C.M.S., Kampala, Uganda.

Under the auspices of the South-Eastern Branch of the Oxford Diocesan Church Music Committee, and by invitation of the Provost, a service for combined choirs took place in Eton College Chapel on July 20. Thirty parishes were represented by nearly five hundred singers. Following Evensong, a Hymn Festival and practice was held, conducted by Sir Walford Davies, with Dr. Henry Ley at the organ.

At Hexham Abbey, on July 15, Mr. C. S. Richards, music master of the Grammar School, gave his fiftieth organ recital to an audience drawn from local schools, playing the 'St. Anne' Fugue, and pieces by Vierne, Parry, Charles Wood, Liszt, Scriabin, Lemare, and Hollins. These recitals are prepared for by talks on form, &c.

The Kingston (Jamaica) Glee Singers' Society gave a capital recital of sacred music at the Scots Church, Kingston, on July 3, the programme comprising items by Byrd, Purcell, Bach, Schubert, Charles Wood, Dvorák, and Armstrong Gibbs. Mr. George D. Goode conducted.

RECITALS

Mr. Owen le P. Franklin, St. Alban the Martyr, Holborn—Introduction and Toccata, Walond; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.

Mr. Clifford Roberts, St. John's, Hove—Toccata and Fugue in D minor and four Chorale Preludes, Bach; Choral Improvisation, 'Nun danket,' Karg-Elert; Allegro Appassionato (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant.

Mr. W. H. Burrows, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro in D minor (Concerto No. 4), Handel; Air and Gavotte in F, S. Wesley; Grand Chœur, Hollins.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, E.C.—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Marche Pontificale, de la Tombelle; Fantasia, 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. Reginald Goodall, St. Alban the Martyr, Holborn—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Madrigal, Vierne; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. Nicholas Choveaux, St. Stephen's, Walbrook—A Karg-Elert programme: Seven Choral Improvisations; Sonatina in A minor; Three Pieces from 'Cathedral Windows'; Prelude and Postlude.

Mr. Ralph T. Langdon, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Evening Rest, Rheinberger; 'Jesu dulcis memoria,' Walford Davies; Chorals Nos. 1 and 2, Franck; Carillon, Herbert Brewer; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. W. Harry Gabb, Christchurch, Gipsy Hill—Allegro (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Postlude in D minor, Stanford.

Miss Edna C. Howard, St. Mary-le-Bow—Larghetto, Allegretto, and Fugue, Dupuis; Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Chorale Fantasia on 'Darwell's 148th,' Darke; Fugue in A, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue, Willan; Overture in D, Smart; Suite No. 1, Lyon; Five Variations on an Old English Melody, Stuart Archer; Prelude, Chorale, and Allegro, Gigout; Overture in D minor, Handel-Elgar; Prière, Franck.

Mr. G. F. Guyll, St. George's, Belfast—'Orchard Blossom,' Frederic Wood; An Easter Alleluia, Gordon Slater; Cathedrals, Vierne; Angelus, Bonnet; Prelude, Franck; Choral, Jongen; 'Laus Deo,' Harvey Grace.

Dr. Harold Rhodes, Coventry Cathedral—Prelude in E minor, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Prelude, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' Bach; Concert Overture in C minor, Hollins.

Miss Kathleen Hay, Holy Innocents, S. Norwood—Sonata No. 8, Rheinberger; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Larghetto, Mozart.

Dr. Bernard Jackson, Boston Parish Church—Introduction and Fugue in C sharp minor, Wesley; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Voluntary, Gibbons; Allegretto grazioso, Frank Bridge.

Mr. Guy Michell, St. Matthew's, Worthing—Marche Solennelle, Lemare; Spring Song, Hollins; Légende, Dvorák; Fugue in D, Guilmant.

Mr. J. C. Ridgway, Hampton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Trio-Sonata in G, Bach; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant; 'Finlandia,' Sibelius. (Collection in aid of the Organists' Benevolent League, £3 8*s.* 6*d.*)

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. C. Leslie Page, choirmaster and organist, St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, S.E.

Mr. Frank W. Uppington, choirmaster and organist, St. Stephen's, Putney.

Mr. Reginald A. Jevons, choirmaster and organist, Clapham Congregational Church, Grafton Square, S.W.

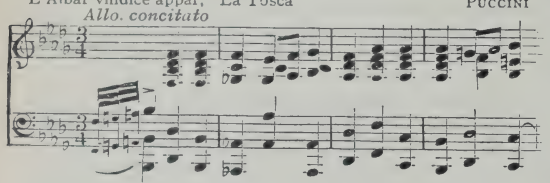
Letters to the Editor

DAVY AND BEETHOVEN

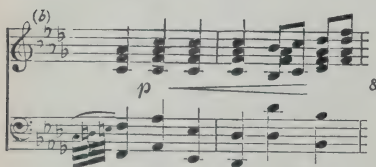
SIR,—It seems to have escaped the notice of your correspondents that Beethoven might have written his 'Cello Sonata previous to Davy's writing his song. Nevertheless, it raises an interesting query as to how often the great composers have been indebted to their minor brethren. Whether such cases are rare or no I leave to others who make a speciality of pointing out the similarity of one composer's work with another. From time to time cases have been noted of composers consciously or subconsciously copying each other literally. These excite little comment when both are of the same grade or school, or when the lesser composer borrows from the great master, as in the following example :

Ex. 1. (a) Allor che sorge, 'Rodrigo' — HANDEL

L'Albar vindice appar, 'La Tosca' — PUCCINI

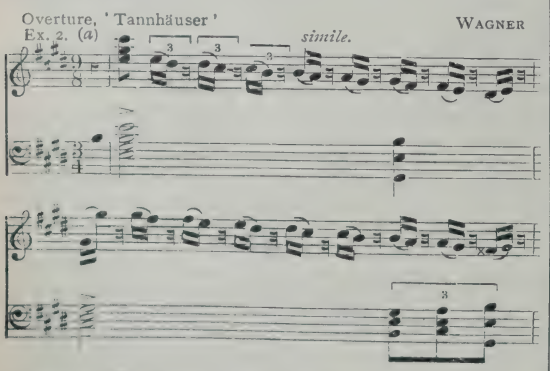


(b)



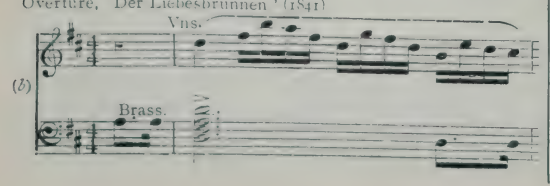
When one meets in a great master's work with a passage which has previously appeared in the composition of a minor composer, the fact is, I suggest, worthy of record. For instance, I cannot help thinking that Wagner in his 'Tannhäuser' Overture got some of his ideas from an obscure opera, 'Der Liebesbrunnen,' written in 1841. Note its points of resemblance in the subjoined extract :

Ex. 2. (a) Overture, 'Tannhäuser' — WAGNER



Overture, 'Der Liebesbrunnen' (1841)

(b)

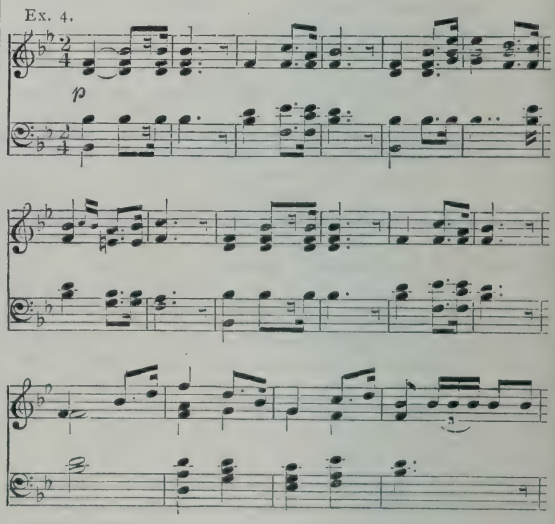


Wagner is said to have obtained his idea of the Leit-motiv from Weber, yet his earlier operas show but little, if any, examples of this device. 'Das Traumbild,' an opera written in 1840, contains more (and better) examples of Leit-motiven than 'Tannhäuser.' The composer of 'Das Traumbild' wrote, in 1844, another opera called 'Das Mädchen von Markenplatz,' in which he introduced, as far as the exigencies of the libretto permitted, a subtle form of Leit-motiv more indicative of coming events than a mere distinguishing label for the characters of the opera. Wagner perhaps studied this work to his advantage, for his next opera, 'Lohengrin,' marked a great advancement on his previous use of Leit-motiv. I suggest this because both operas have a 'Bridal Chorus' and both are written in B flat. In the earlier opera there is a strain for male voices in the dominant of the key, as follows :

Ex. 3. Bridal Chorus, 'Das Mädchen von Markenplatz' (1844) Moderato

This is very like Wagner's well-known chorus—in design, at any rate :

Ex. 4.

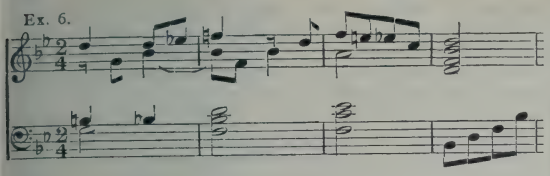


A few bars later the chorus in the older opera proceeds thus :

Ex. 5.

Perhaps it is not surprising that Wagner, also a few bars later, has used almost the same notes :

Ex. 6.



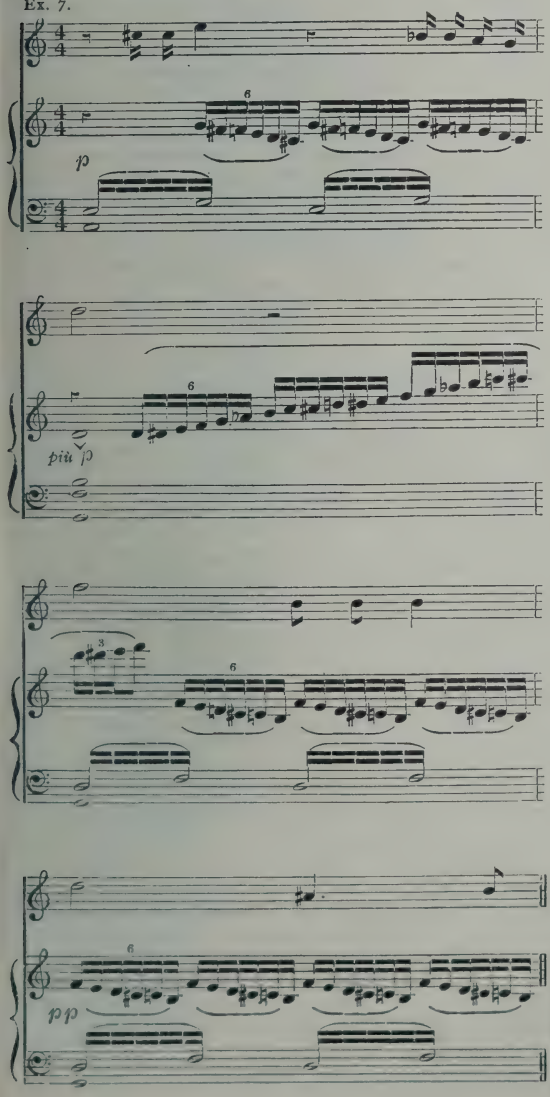
It may be coincidental of course, but I am inclined to believe that Wagner got his idea of Leit-motiv not from Weber and other generally accepted sources but from the composer of ' Das Traumbild,' ' Das Mädchen von Markenplatz,' and other operas.

There is a similarity to be noted between the chromatic figure Saint-Saëns uses in the accompaniment to the well-known ' Softly wakes my heart,' from his ' Samson and Delilah,' and the chromatic figure used by another composer—and a lesser—in the opera ' Blanche de Nevers,' written fourteen years earlier.

I will take the point where they are nearly alike :

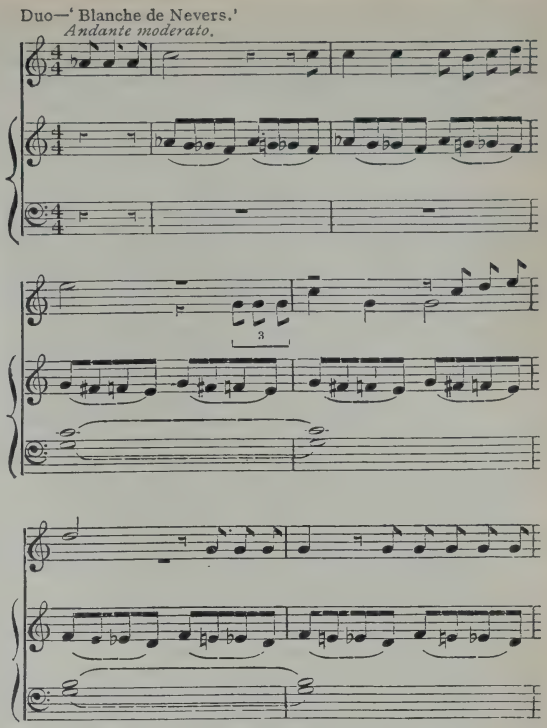
Duo—' Samson et Dalila ' SAINT-SAËNS

Ex. 7.



Duo—' Blanche de Nevers.'

Andante moderato.



The late Dr. Eaglefield Hull, in his ' Modern Harmony,' quotes the following extract from Elgar's ' Falstaff ' as a species of ' reflective music ' :

Orchard Theme—' Falstaff '

Ex. 8.

The following is also from a ' Falstaff,' an opera produced at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1838 :

Ex. 9. Voci siete un' nom dispirito ' Falstaff '

You will agree that these are very similar, yet it is almost certain that Elgar has never even heard of the old opera. I venture to suggest that very few people are aware of its existence, yet at least one melody from it survives and is very well known. I refer to the national song, ' A Life on the Ocean Wave,' which Henry Russell—unless he made some arrangement with its composer — deliberately purloined from ' Falstaff,' even to the smallest detail. True, he added a few bars of his own at the end of the piece, in lieu of the usual terminating bars peculiar to Italian opera arias of the period, but in all other respects the whole thing is another's, and not his. Russell, in his autobiography, tells how he came to compose ' A Life on the Ocean Wave,' and certainly proves himself to be a perfect Ananias.

I took this matter up with your late lamented contributor, Dr. Grattan Flood, shortly before his death. He seemed to be greatly interested, and was pressing for further details when his last illness put an end to the subject between us. Dr. Grattan Flood was partly interested, no doubt, because the composer of 'Falstaff' was an Irishman, Michael Balfe, who, I might add, was also the composer of those operas, extracts of which I have given, which bear no composer's name.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM E. LLOYD.

'OPS. v. TITLES'

SIR,—May I thank 'Feste' warmly for his stand, last month, against ideas which are clearly growing amongst the less informed and more arrogant amateurs of music? The modest, intelligent amateur is the professional man's best friend; but certain 'Bright Young People' have been so often told that the ordinary listener is as good as the professional man (better, really, because he has none of the poor fellow's prejudices), that they are taking to criticism of the critics with renewed gusto. It always was a fine game, and more are joining in every year. Mr. Desmond McCarthy, in the Sunday Times of August 11, had a suggestive phrase about 'the prevailing taste of the moment—that irrational preference for what is unfinished and incomplete in art, whether in the art of painting, music, or letters.' That taste, as many professional musicians know to their cost, is expressing itself in the intolerance of some amateurs for professional opinion. A recent exchange of letters in the Gramophone between its critic 'K. K.' and a Mr. A. James is typical of many incidents of which doubtless your readers can tell. The question of the amount of skill which Schumann displayed in the orchestration of the Pianoforte Concerto having been casually touched on by the journal's critic, Mr. James wrote to controvert his opinion. 'K. K.' naturally asked his censor to show his credentials. The reply was that Mr. James had no competence in the matter; apparently he could not even read a score!

This is the sort of thing we have to put up with. No! I take back 'have to': and I should consider myself a poor craven creature if I did not. Why should we endure this arrogant assumption of superiority by ignorant persons? No body of men with self-respect would tolerate it. You will remember the notorious case a few years ago, in which the opinions of two experienced competition judges at the Blackpool Festival (one of them Mr. Harvey Grace) were insolently pooh-poohed by an amateur critic. Recently, in the Sunday Times, Mr. Newman's opinion of the value of the late Samuel Langford's work was called in question by a Mr. Harry Cooper. With the merits or demerits of the deceased critic's writing I am not concerned. The significant phrase in Mr. Cooper's letter concerned Langford's having 'too fine a nature to degenerate into the specialist upon musical criticism.'

Does not this show the same arrogant dismissal of the trained man's arduously gained competence?

I wish very much that professional societies were alive to this increasing menace. It is difficult enough for a professional man to make a living to-day, without having to bear, and to try to explain to well-wishers, this kind of impudent criticism by those who know little or nothing about music. No competent business man would for a moment tolerate dictation as to the technique of his trade by an ignorant outsider. Why do not the musicians discuss this steadily growing menace, and take steps to master it?—Yours, &c.,

GENERAL PRACTITIONER.

SIR,—In regard to the 'Ops. v. Titles' discussion, it is surely significant that the so-called 'Moonlight,' 'Pathétique,' 'Appassionata,' and 'Waldstein' Sonatas are played to death, whereas 'Op. 78,' in F sharp major, is almost completely neglected.

Theoretically, I am all in favour of plain 'Ops.' inasmuch as a mere nondescript number enables us to approach a work in a comparatively unexpectant state of mind, with thus the greater likelihood of formulating an accurate judgment, but there can be no doubt whatever that an attractive title is bound to make a far greater appeal to the imagination, and for this reason it is useful in musical propaganda work.

That is to say, it is far easier to gain the attention and interest of someone not accustomed to thinking in terms of music, by first referring to some extra-musical association of a relevant nature such as 'New World Symphony,' 'Funeral March Sonata,' 'Revolutionary Study,' &c., rather than by use of 'cold statistical treatment'—'Op. 95, in E minor,' 'Op. 35, in B flat minor,' 'Op. 10, No. 12'—which is apt to repel the uninitiated.

Moreover, there is something in a name, whatever the Bard may have said to the contrary.

'A rose by any other name would smell as sweet,' but would it sound as attractive? Just think of a rose and then of a mangel-wurzel!* Opus numbers and speed indications may have been adequate titling for the productions of the classical era, but they would sound curiously inappropriate if applied to present-day music.

Look at the works of Delius: 'On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring,' 'Brigg Fair,' 'In a Summer Garden,' 'Summer Night on the River,' 'Songs of Sunset'; John Ireland: 'Ragamuffin,' 'Chelsea Reach,' 'Soho Forenoons,' 'The Island Spell,' 'Moonglade'; Arnold Bax: 'The Maiden with a Daffodil,' 'Mediterranean,' 'Lullaby,' 'In a Vodka Shop,' 'May Night on the Ukraine.'

Would 'On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring,' 'Ragamuffin,' and 'Lullaby,' enjoy the popularity they do, had they been entitled respectively 'Adagio in C,' Op. 26, 'Allegro in E,' Op. 55, and 'Andantino in A minor,' Op. 33, No. 6 (K.1001)? I wonder! †

A good work will, of course, ultimately survive on its own merits independently of numbering or titling, but its appreciation by the general public is, I am convinced, greatly expedited, particularly in the early stages of its career, by some attention-focussing device such as that under consideration.—Yours, &c.,

38, George Street, W.1. CLINTON GRAY-FISK.

SIR,—I should like to say how much I agree with 'Feste's' argument against naming the masterpieces of music, as suggested by Messrs. Mackenzie and Scholes on behalf of the ordinary listeners. Particularly in the matter of opus-numbers, I am surprised when Mr. Scholes talks as though it is above the intelligence of the man in the street to remember them. As an absolute amateur myself, and with no unusual memory, I could tell Mr. Scholes the opu and key of any work he cared to mention, that gets played to any extent, and if he thinks that the number suppresses the work's individuality, well, such numbers as 106, 111, 125, 17, and 99, with no name, key, or anything else attached, speak worlds among genuine musicians, while a title like 'Moonlight' means nothing, is irrelevant, and nothing more than sentimental rubbish.

Those works of pianoforte literature that have been given fancy names have been hackneyed and murdered all the more for that name when they have been technically easy to play. The beautiful opening Adagio of Op. 27, No. 2, is played by the most profoundly unmusical and abhorrently sentimental apes in existence. On the other hand, opus numbers have the additional value of giving the listener a clue as to the date of composition in the composer's life. In fact it is remarkable that a critic like Mr. Scholes, who has gone out of his way to produce stacks of books pointing out to the 'ordinary

---

* But a mangel-wurzel is not cultivated for its aroma, and indeed has practically no smell—at all events, prior to the decomposition stage.—EDITOR.

† All these titles were conferred by the composers themselves. 'Feste's' objection was to those invented by other people—frequently quite incompetent and irresponsible.—EDITOR.

listener' that it is always helpful to know what period a work was composed in, as it gives him some idea of what to find in the music, should decry a practice that is of material use in the assimilation of a work. (In most cases, at least. In Schubert's case the opus numbers are unreliable.) When, for instance, an amateur sees 'Trio, Op. 1,' by Beethoven, on a programme he knows it is an immature work, in the classical style, whereas 'Trio, Op. 97, in B flat,' suggests that is a much later and mature work, and will want more preparation for digesting. Whereas were the programme to say 'Archduke Trio' (the title of Op. 97) it would tell the listener nothing at all, excepting perhaps that it was dedicated to the Archduke Rudolph (to whom half-a-dozen other works happen to be dedicated, so that is no distinction whatever).—Yours, &c., D. POWNALL.

36, Newland Road, Coventry.

ELGAR'S 'FALSTAFF'

SIR,—In his criticism of 'Falstaff' Mr. Scholes appears to be confusing detail of musical development with detail of picturisation. Doubtless the elaborate treatment of the themes is of enthralling interest to anyone who can study the score (for which purpose a wet towel is quite unnecessary), but I think that the average concert-goers who listen to the work 'merely as a splendid piece of music, with the fat knight at the back of their mind,' will get a full measure of enjoyment from it. (Incidentally, Mr. Scholes neatly misquotes 'H. G.'s' words in support of his own argument.) Further, I have always felt that the 'plot' of 'Falstaff' is simple compared with, say, 'Till' or 'Don Quixote.' The work falls into four clearly-defined sections, and from the 'programme' point of view each section is treated as broadly as its title suggests. There is no point of realistic detail in 'Falstaff' as definite as, for example, the flute-passage depicting the flight of Till's soul to heaven or the pizzicato bass notes which represent Sancho Panza shaking water off himself.

I suggest that Elgar intends his admirable prose study to be regarded as a commentary on his symphonic study by those who are sufficiently interested to go deeply into the subject, and not as a mere programme note of which the thousandth word should coincide with the last note of the music. (In treating of this, Mr. Scholes makes a little slip: the mendacity theme does not appear in Section 1.) Goodness knows, an analysis which is 'at once so copious and so felicitous in its expression that it would be an impertinence on the part of any other writer to attempt an analysis of his own' is needed by a public whose ignorance of and indifference to the world's greatest dramatist is notorious.

I do not see how Mr. Scholes can claim 'that the big public has never taken to "Falstaff."' The big public can listen only to such works as conductors condescend to perform, so it cannot be blamed for the comparatively few performances the work has had; so few, in fact, that the public has hardly had a chance to absorb it. The second performance of 'Falstaff' at Manchester (a mutilated one at that) took place last October, and those to whom I spoke who heard it for the first time wondered at its neglect, while my student-friends who have subsisted on the score for some years cannot understand how such a wonder of orchestral craftsmanship has been so consistently overlooked.—Yours, &c.,

Manchester. 'A STUDENT OF MUSIC.'

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Percy Scholes's article on Elgar's 'Falstaff' in particular, and on the question of listening to programme music in general, I do not see that the value of 'H. G.'s' advice on the subject has been materially lessened.

Sir Edward Elgar's exhaustive notes, from which Mr. Scholes gives extracts, appeal to me as being of secondary interest, in that they indicate in detail the sources of the composer's inspiration. It is interesting, of course, to know that 'the gargantuan, wide-compassed fortissimo' in Division I. of the work under discussion arose from Elgar's conception of Falstaff's 'boastfulness and colossal mendacity'; but the passage, once written, might as easily serve for the expression of a hundred and one other things, just as these particular aspects of Falstaff's character might well be 'exhibited' in a hundred and one other musical ways.

As long as musical depiction is a matter of subtle association and suggestion, defying strict analysis and classification, and being unable to convey a direct message, I see no point in attempting to follow any programme music in pictorial detail, however desirable it sometimes may be to bear in mind its general import. If, heard in the normal way, the music as a whole fails to stimulate, few musicians would undertake to defend it on the ground that it is good detailed description.

'Falstaff' appeals to me by its musical vitality; so do the pick of the Strauss tone-poems. It so happened that I knew and loved 'Till Eulenspiegel' and some of its brethren long before I became familiar with the detailed programmes. I cannot say that the knowledge has either added to or detracted from my enjoyment. I conceive 'programmes' to be important only so far as general atmosphere is concerned.—Yours, &c., J. H. ELLIOT.

Silverdale, Scholes Lane, Prestwich, Manchester.

SIR,—Mr. Percy Scholes in his article on Elgar's 'Falstaff' in the current number of the Musical Times said that he would like the opinions of a good many other people—a consensus of opinion for or against 'P. A. S.' as compared with 'H. G.'

May I say, then, that I consider the honours are equally divided? Unquestionably 'H. G.' is correct when he advises us to 'drop the programme book and listen [to 'Falstaff'] in a more general way.' In order to appreciate anything to the full it is necessary to give our keenest concentrated attention, a feat which is quite impossible if we attempt at the same time to refer to programme notes, however admirable they may be in themselves, or to visualise scenes supposedly 'illustrated' by the music.

On the other hand, there can be no doubt, as 'P. A. S.' points out, that Elgar, if we are to judge from his article in the Musical Times of September, 1913, intended us to listen programmatically to this work, and that is why, in my opinion, it is the one striking instance where the composer has, musically, missed the mark.

As a musician Elgar is the natural antithesis of a man such as Stravinsky, who is at his best in 'illustrative' music requiring the support of stage action, scenic and lighting effects, &c., and is a complete and utter failure when he attempts to write 'absolute' music such as the sterile Pianoforte Sonata and Concerto.

Whereas the Elgar Symphonies, Variations, Concertos, and Introduction and Allegro, to mention but a few, are outstandingly successful, 'Falstaff' remains an interesting but unconvincing experiment because it attempts the impossible.

That the authentic Elgarian hand is at work is obvious, with a good deal of fine music as a result, but I cannot agree with 'H. G.' when he says that '"Falstaff" is gorgeous in sum because of its extraordinary wealth of detail.'

Just as work may pall by reason of its monotony, so may too much variety defeat its own ends, and though I have listened to 'Falstaff' on various occasions both with and without the programme, I have never been able to enjoy it as unreservedly as the other Elgar works on account of this lack of unity.

In contrast to this, I would cite that exquisite work, the 'Cello Concerto, which exemplifies to perfection the unity-plus-variety principle, the musical interest being consistently maintained from first note to last.—Yours, &c., CLINTON GRAY-FISK.

38, George Street, W.1.

SOPRANOS ARE RARE

SIR,—In attempting to bring before the musical public, especially the student section (amateur and professional), what I conceive to be a fact of universal significance, I hardly expected so innocent an intention to have created quite so great a sensation.

Let me first deal with certain remarks from some of those who have written to your paper, or have written to me, by stating that I had no intention of offending anyone employed by, or even remotely connected with, the B.B.C. Indeed, I have nothing but admiration for the work of the Musical Department. May I then plead, that now the name of this Corporation, as also of all employers on a large scale, of vocalists, be left out of the question? My object is not to deal in personal matters, corporate or individual. It is my opinion (this is I think the legal mode of expression) that nowadays all employers of large numbers of vocalists who style themselves sopranos, are, in spite of their competency as selectors, forced to take the best that are offered. My phrase 'nine out of ten' is only a façon de parler. I mean that the great majority of those who insist on being classified as sopranos would not be acknowledged by connoisseurs to be pure sopranos, nor indeed, in many cases, as pure mezzo-sopranos. This will, I trust, satisfy to some extent those who have considered my statement sweeping, exaggerated, or due to impulse only. As it is a matter that very often proves a tragedy to the ordinary student, I will make my language as understandable as possible. I hope it will supply part of the proof asked for by Mr. Bell Porter, and correct a certain misunderstanding, both of Mr. Pearce Small and your very kindly writer 'F. H. K.' Mr. Small surely does not forget that there are two distinct classes of contralto voices, just as there are also two distinct classes of bass voices. There is the deep or real (as he calls it) contralto, which he certainly is right in affirming to be rare, just as the voice called basso profundo is rare in men. But there is also the high contralto (or, as some define it, the mezzo- or light-contralto), analogous to the bass-baritone in men. This is the voice I had in mind when I wrote 'high contraltos.' There are also two distinct classes of soprano voices—the heavy and the light (analogous to the tenor robusto, and the pure tenor on the male side).

Some classify the high mezzo-soprano among the sopranos, but this is not correct—though it should be recognized that the pure mezzo-soprano (as also the pure baritone in male voices) runs the soprano fairly close in scarcity. All these are distinct the one from the other, differing in compass, weight, volume, and depth. The voice most generally possessed among women is the high contralto, as is the bass-baritone among men. But the high contralto is an exceedingly wonderful voice in one respect. It possesses in a specially marked degree two distinct kinds of production, i.e., the 'full' voice, which determines the real character of any voice, and a secondary voice, usually defined as 'mezza-voce,' which should properly only be used for light singing. This 'mezza-voce' is of small depth, volume, weight, and power compared to the 'full' voice; therefore by careful manipulation its compass can be extended in an upward direction in an extraordinary manner by exceptional organs of voice. If such gifted vocalists are persuaded by their teachers to use only a thin, superficial, light kind of production (really somewhat analogous to the male head-voice, wrongly called 'falsetto'), they can in many cases reach the top D in alt. Two of my high contralto pupils can do so, but they know that this is not their 'full' voice.

One girl who came to interview me, by employing a very thin, superficial, and powerless production, also forced exaggeratedly against the lower part of her larynx, succeeded in reaching a top G in alt., a certainly wonderful, but dangerous performance. She had been taught by a well-known opera singer, and was quite confident that her voice was the purest of sopranos because of this G in alt. Under my direction, she brought into being, quite naturally, another voice of a far deeper, bigger, more solid nature, and immeasurably more powerful, but she preferred to ignore this voice. I am deeply sorry for this girl's future, but there are literally thousands who are making the same mistake. The end of such cases is tragic, because if the treatment is persisted in, the voice gradually deteriorates, and finally dies.

In spite of the high compass of this production in women, it should not be forgotten that the voice called 'falsetto' in men, being really somewhat of the same nature, is capable of the most remarkable development in exceptional cases, with respect to volume, solidity, depth, and power. In some very exceptional cases it can be developed into a fair imitation of the deep female contralto. I will close for the present by saying that I have been teaching for over twenty-five years; and that, from the thousands (without exaggeration) that I have either taught, or interviewed, I have not in that time been able to secure, at the outside, more than a dozen genuine soprano voices. Under proper, reasonable training, the vast majority of those who supposed themselves to be sopranos went down into high contraltos, some indeed into the deepest. I have done everything in my power to obtain the real article. I have given free tuition, guaranteed a good professional career, which I had no difficulty in doing in the cases of the genuine sopranos and tenors that took up work with me. There were those, and they not amateurs, who spread a report that my method of training 'changed' sopranos into contraltos. Such ignorance is truly pathetic. There is no method on earth whereby a genuine soprano can be changed into a contralto. If a supposed soprano under training becomes a contralto it is only because she is a contralto. I can therefore assure 'F. H. K.' that the 'sopranos' I have in mind would alter to a very small extent their faulty tone by development. An entire change in kind is needed.—Yours, &c.,

H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

SIR,—A friend of mine placed your paper in my hand and asked me to give my opinion on what Mr. Travers Adams has written about B.B.C. troubles. I give it for what it is worth, with pleasure.

I have been a manager and producer for over thirty years in all sorts and conditions of first-class entertainments, including revue, musical plays, drama, pantomime, popular concerts, &c., and very little has passed my notice.

Mr. Travers Adams, who seems to be one of your first-class men (and I am sorry for him and his like, these days) is right about the B.B.C. soprano singers for the most part, but they are not the only poor stuff, and it is no fault of the B.B.C.

In musical comedy, revue, sketch, &c., 'straight singing' is now non-existent. Success is only to be gained by all sorts of 'trick' singing. There are not many genuine oratorio, high opera, or class concert singers left. All singing is highly commercialised nowadays.

Results are demanded by pupils and striven for by teachers in as short a time as possible. The race of 'straight' singers seems to be dying out in our land, and there will soon be no masters left who are competent to teach such singing.—Yours, &c.,

South Parade Pier, Southsea. H. ROUSBY.

SIR,—A short time back I wrote to the Musical Times on a subject which at that time I myself and many others considered to be of musical importance, and you kindly inserted my letter. May I again beg a like favour.

I have read Mr. H. Travers Adams's recent letter and the replies to it with deep interest, and have shown them to a good many people who are interested in the subject under discussion. They, one and all, agree that the subject-matter is of the widest musical importance. It speaks much for the fairness and breadth of view of the Musical Times that publicity should be freely afforded to the letters which have been sent in.

I seek to make no remark just now on what has been written except that I am hopelessly unable to accept Mr. Adams's pronouncement, but in close connection with the subject I beg to be allowed to make a statement and ask a favour.

Both in the Musical Times and in several other musical papers I have from time to time read letters on Voice Production and Voice Building by Mr. H. Travers Adams, and the replies evoked by them. Much of the information supplied was of great value to me, and apparently to many I met who were interested in the subject, but the discussions usually closed too soon to allow of a quite satisfactory solution to the problems involved. It seems a little unfortunate, because there are so few singing masters of reputation who will either dare or take the trouble to write on the problems connected with voice production. Yet such discussions surely prove the best means of arriving at the absolute truth in vocal matters, and I know would be welcome to hosts of singers all over the musical world; especially is this so, I am confident, respecting the problem now under review.

May I ask that a discussion as full as conveniently possible to Mr. Adams and yourself may take place, please?—Yours, &c., F. P. SYLVESTER MILLS.

190, Camberwell Grove, S.E.5.

SIR,—Mr. Travers Adams has brought into prominence a question of supreme importance.

There is little doubt that the 'soprano element' everywhere is unsatisfactory. But my own experience offers one of the solutions of the point in question.

The great majority of singing teachers compel the consistent and entire use of the vowel 'ah,' with the result that the sound of the voice is thin and metallic, and the larynx is high in the neck and contracted.—Yours, &c., MARIE L. RIVERS.

53*a*, Hillfield Park, N.10.

ORGAN PEDALLING, PAST AND PRESENT

SIR,—Since the letter from your correspondent, Mr. George Goode appeared in the July Musical Times, I have had an opportunity of perusing a copy of the book 'On Organ Playing,' by Page, to which he refers.

In this admirable but small book of forty-seven pages in all, including a great many examples in music-type, it is obviously impossible to deal adequately with the various aspects of organ playing which are discussed in its seventy-eight paragraphs. Fingering, pedalling, church music, accompaniment, organ stops, unaccompanied singing, introductions to anthems, &c., are all touched upon in this 'Hints for Young Organists.'

The fourteen and a half pages which are devoted to the subject of pedalling are full of excellent material, and there is little with which I am not in agreement. His scales of E and E flat are the same as those in the Lemmens 'Organ School,' but his arpeggios revert to the older all-toe method, which I feel is a pity, and not in keeping with his comments about playing scales with all toes, where possible, vide p. 20, par. 33, where he writes:

> 'We contend that any system which demands that the toe shall be almost under the organ stool one instant and then dashed forward suddenly to get at a short key must of necessity be a bad one, and yet some writers require "alternate toes as far as possible in all scale-passages," quite regardless of long or short keys.'

There will be much more 'dashing backwards and forwards' in playing arpeggios with all toes, than if the heels are freely used.

Page's ideas on pedalling passages of scale formation, or phrases consisting of broken thirds, somewhat similar to the little pedal solo in the opening of the Prelude in B flat, No. 8, of Bach's 'Eight Little Preludes and Fugues,' are absolutely sound, and some of his statements must have appeared very startling at the time his book was published (by Charles Vincent, London, in 1899), when it is remembered how engrained the all-toe principle was in those days, or even as it is in many quarters to-day.—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

19, Menlove Gardens West,
Mossley Hill, Liverpool.

P.S.—In my letter in your August issue there is an error which, although perfectly obvious, I shall be glad if you will be good enough to correct.

It occurs on p. 736, right-hand column, the last paragraph but one, and the fourth line from the bottom of that paragraph.

It reads as follows: 'left-hand note high up the board,' and it should be 'left-heel note, &c.'

SIR,—I have read with interest the controversy on the above subject, and specially the criticism of the book 'The Science of Organ Pedalling' (Ellingford and Meers).

I cannot refrain from writing to express how helpful I have found everything contained in this treatise. I have used for a long time Mr. Ellingford's 'The Organ and Pedal Scales and Arpeggios' for teaching purposes, with great success, and his latest book, compiled in conjunction with the late E. G. Meers, only develops what he wrote in the Novello Primer in 1918. Therefore I feel I am in a position to vouch for the soundness of the principles laid down in the book.

The outstanding feature in the 'Science of Organ Pedalling' not mentioned to my knowledge in any previous text-books, are: The method of pedalling under a direct system once shown to a pupil enables him to help himself, and to find a reasonable line to adopt, while at the same time it prevents him from labouring at useless exercises which will not only not help him in his technique, but will seriously hinder him. There are exceedingly few text-books published hitherto which have boldly and unflinchingly taken this saner and more logical view. It would take too much of your valuable space to enumerate all the points in this book which I have found helpful, but I should like to lay particular stress on the following: (1.) The utmost freedom in muscular movement from the thighs downwards to the feet, giving a natural rise and fall of the knees. (Previous books tell us to avoid all up and down movements of the knees, which is an impossible task.) (2.) The outward and inward oblique angle movement of the feet from the ankle joint so that the unoccupied toe or heel will be turned in the direction of the next note. (3.) The backward and forward slide of the toe and heel necessary for the toe to reach the short keys, or vice-versâ. (4.) The use of the inner and outer sides of the broad part of the soles, and the inner and outer sides of the heels; a perfect legato can be obtained by this method when the knee is allowed to swing left or right. (5.) The toe on the short key, and the heel on the long key, is a common-sense view, and toe and heel alternately for consecutive notes gives a systematic rule. This of course is subject to exceptions.

These are only a few of the many improvements in pedalling suggested in this book, but the main object is to avoid unnecessary crossing of the feet, thus saving a great deal of leg movement, and this I think is attained.

In conclusion, I consider that Messrs. Ellingford and Meers in their book, 'The Science of Organ Pedalling,' have done for 'pedalling' what Mr. Tobias Matthay has done in 'The Act of Touch,' and such a book has been long overdue.—Yours, &c.,

Wem, Salop. NORMAN CHAMBERLAIN.

ARNOLD BENNETT AND BEETHOVEN

SIR,—Have you not lost the whole point of this? The version I have seen is that it was the Op. 111 he was adventuring on. The Op. 3 you give might have been less ruined by his 'meddling with'; but Arnold Bennett coming through the Arietta! No wonder 'the great pianist' interfered! Can you not tell us who it was—one wants to honour him afresh?

May I, for the thousandth time, argue against those who will so perversely, and may I say ignorantly, assert that the Beethoven early Pianoforte Sonatas are (vide Musical Times, July, p. 610) 'a great advance in every way' on those by Mozart? It is, of course, nothing of the kind, from a purely musical point of view. It is the content, not the perhaps fuller manner, that should count. Beethoven's are from an entirely different mentality, and are—as all his work—fuller of Beethoven than of music. Mozart's are music, pure music, unalloyed by any problems, messages, worries, &c. For tragic beauty, will any reader who has not realised my thesis turn to the A flat Sonata, K570, and say if the Adagio does not make the Beethoven, 'even Op. 1,' slow movement jejune in comparison, and in no sense 'an advance in every way'?

Beethoven, on the pianoforte, tires and exhausts one; Mozart and Bach always refresh and satisfy. They give us music, pure music; Beethoven was music plus something more, a 'more' I don't always want and do get tired of. Pure music is always new—invigorating, and re-creating. Problem music gets exhausted and worn out. Mozart and Bach will get more and more valued as the real thing; Beethoven is getting near to be out-moded—he wears thin in the Pianoforte Sonatas; one can know them too well. But who ever yet knew Mozart or Bach too well?—Yours, &c.,

FREDERICK H. EVANS.

32, Rosemont Road,
Acton, W.3

[Mr. Evans is right: the Sonata was Op. 111. The misprint was the result of a not infrequent confusion between roman and arabic numerals. As to the relative value of Mozart's and Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas, Mr. Evans is of course entitled to his opinion. May we also be entitled to ours, without being accused of 'perverseness' and 'ignorance'?—EDITOR.]

'THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE'

SIR,—In his article on 'The Spirit of the Age,' Dr. Froggatt says that the turmoil of the 16th century caused nothing revolutionary to appear in the work of four of the greatest composers of the period—Palestrina, di Lasso, Victoria, and Byrd.

Palestrina, quite truly, seems to have been untouched by the spirit of the Renaissance, and we notice in such masterpieces as the 'Stabat Mater,' 'Papæ Marcelli,' 'Assumpta est Maria,' or 'Æterna Christi' Masses a wonderful grace and calm flow of melody unaccompanied by any of the restlessness of the age. Victoria's work reveals the same qualities plus a mystical fervour shared with St. Teresa of Avila, which, dare it be said, stamp him as an even more inspired figure than the Roman master. His great 'Officium Hebdomadæ Sanctæ' gives us good examples of these qualities. He can be dramatic (witness the 'Responsa Turbæ' in the Passions), and he reveals his mysticism well in the 'Responsoria,' but his means do not savour of anything revolutionary. The more one examines this remarkable collection, the more does one recall to mind the old saying 'Ars celare artem.'

Di Lasso, like these two, can achieve beauty by simple means, as in his four-part 'Regina Cœli' redolent of Easter joy. But differing from them, does he not sometimes show the spirit of the Renaissance in ingenious successions of chords, less smoothly-flowing melody, and abrupt chromatic changes?

Finally, does not Byrd also show the spirit of the age in such devices as the employment of the major and minor third together, and that of the minor third with suspended fourth when resolved on to the major third? He was, it seems, almost the first to use them, and the effect on the hearer was so striking that Byrd warned him to accept 'any jarre or dissonance' not as printer's errors, but as his own guaranteed work. Weelkes, to take a great name not mentioned by Dr. Froggatt, was even more daring in some of his madrigals. Although these technical devices did not sound so harsh at that time as they do to-day (owing chiefly to the fact that equal temperament was then unknown), and on that account should not be frowned upon, nevertheless their use seems to point to reflection of the turmoil of the age. After repeated hearing and reading of certain pieces in which these devices are to be found, I feel that although such devices reflect the spirit of the times, they have gone to the making of works, not of mediocre quality but of genius.—Yours, &c.,

GABRIEL SHARP.

36, Finborough Road, S.W.10.

SIR,—Full-blooded criticism of the 'extraordinary characteristics of much of our modern music'—without fear, refusing to bow to the shallow dictates of 'Fashion'—is long overdue.

The splendid article of Dr. A. T. Froggatt in the August Musical Times, 'The Spirit of the Age,' will surely delight many who, like myself, earnestly hope that it is only the commencement of a campaign to expose the grotesque fallacies which have become part and parcel of the cult of what is known as 'Modern Music.'

Dr. Froggatt clearly shows that—judging by the evidence of the last three hundred years—only mediocrity has, in the world of Music, been moulded by the 'Spirit of the Age.' Were this not the case we might never have been able to speak of 'old Bach.'

On the evidence of Dr. Froggatt, 'Young Modern Composers' would, it seems, be wise to claim their inspiration from the Spirit of the Age with less fervour than is their habit.—Yours, &c.,

Plymouth. HERBERT W. FISHER.

BOYS' VOICES: THE BREAKING STAGE

SIR,—The statement attributed to Mr. Cyril Winn, Inspector of the Board of Education, that boys' voices do not break, should not be allowed to go unchallenged.

Whether they ought to break may be another matter, but that is a question which should be left to the doctors—throat specialists.

All boys' voices do not break, it is true, but it is also certain that a large number are broken every year through wrong and over use.

When the voice changes suddenly from that of a boy to that of an adult, it is in most cases what we call broken. The broken voice implies a relaxed throat. We can all, adults and children, sometimes produce fine deep notes when the voice is relaxed, as with a cold, but a lot of harm is done if the voice is much used when in this unhealthy state.

Boys' voices are often broken through using the voice too much and in the wrong way. It is an unfortunate fact that the majority of those entrusted with the training of young singers, such as church organists, school teachers, &c., have very little knowledge of voice-production. The damage done by these people is chiefly apparent to those teachers who have to train the adult voice. I can honestly say that in my experience the hardest voices to train are those of men who have been solo choir-boys. Such voices are often permanently injured as the result of over-use of the boy's voice, and wrong methods of production acquired in the choir or school room. I believe most teachers who have to do with adult singers will agree with me.—Yours, &c.,

GLYN EASTMAN.

25, Cromwell Road,
St. Andrew's Park, Bristol.

THE LATE DR. CHARLES WOOD: A MISSING MS. WORK

SIR,—I shall be grateful if you can help me to find the score and orchestral parts of my late husband's Orchestral Variations on the Irish Air 'Patrick Sarsfield,' by publishing this letter in the Musical Times. The work was last performed at the Royal College of Music in December, 1918. At some subsequent date it was lent from the College to some one whose identity was not recorded, owing to the change of librarian perhaps, and all trace of it has been lost. The score is the original MS., and the parts the only ones in existence. Every effort to find the Variations has so far proved unavailing, so I venture to write to you.—Yours, &c.,

23, Millington Road, Cambridge. CHARLOTTE G. WOOD.

'AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER FROM MOZART'—A CORRECTION

SIR,—I should like to make a correction in the text of the Mozart letter which was printed in your July number. Mr. Wouter Hutschenruyter, of Wassenaar, has suggested that the word in the postscript which I read as wiederkomen should probably be niederkomen, and a further inspection of the manuscript has convinced me that the latter reading is correct. The translation will now run: 'From my wife, who is expecting her confinement at any moment, &c.' As a matter of fact, a daughter, Theresia Mozart, was born on December 27, 1787. She died on June 29 of the following year.—Yours, &c., C. B. OLDMAN.

'A DIFFICULT RHYTHM'

SIR,—In his letter on this subject in your August number, 'Mus. B.' discusses the pace at which Widor's Toccata in F should be played. Many years ago I heard Widor play it on the four-manual organ which then stood in the concert hall of the Hampstead Conservatoire of Music. He took it quite slowly, every semiquaver being perfectly distinct and staccato. The building was low-roofed and non-resonant, and a considerably faster pace would have involved no risk of 'blurring.'

Some years later I heard Dr. Alcock play the Toccata on the same organ. He took it much faster; there was an added brilliance, but at the expense of some sacrifice of the dignity and impressiveness which the composer seemed to wish to emphasise.—Yours, &c.,

'Highlands,' Eastbury Avenue, Northwood, Middlesex. OWEN THOMPSON.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC

After a lapse of several years the Summer School of Church Music (which is now under the auspices of the Church Music Society) was revived with great success on August 12-15. No more delightful venue could have been chosen than St. Nicolas College, Chislehurst. The only drawback was that the accommodation was not sufficient to meet the demands, and the number was therefore limited to about fifty. Welcome overseas visitors were Dr. Healey Willan, formerly well known in London, and now of Toronto, and Canon Daniel and Mr. Lilich, both of Oberlin, U.S.A. The lecturers were Dr. Sydney Nicholson ('Anglican Chanting'), Capt. Francis Burgess ('Plainsong'), Dr. Henry Coleman ('Music in Village Churches'), Mr. C. Hylton Stewart ('Communion Services' and 'The Oxford Psalter'), and Mr. Harvey Grace ('Congregational Practices' and 'Music for Small Organs'). Chapel services, practices, and free and easy after-supper discussions, made up a crowded but enjoyable time-table. Mr. Eric Hunt was warmly thanked for his admirable work as organizing secretary—work done at very short notice. Before separating, the members discussed the future, and it was unanimously decided to meet again next year at some centre where at least a hundred members can be accommodated. It was found, however, that St. Nicolas College is admirably adapted for the purpose of meetings of a smaller and more specialised type, and arrangements are therefore being made for the holding of a school of this type devoted specially to choir-training, next summer or autumn.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Soprano wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Ealing district.—SOPRANO, 26, Guilford Street, Russell Square, W.C.1.

Young lady vocalist wishes to meet good accompanist for mutual practice. S.E.27 district.—P. E. V., c/o Musical Times.

Young oboe player wishes to join amateur orchestra, low pitch, for the coming season.—E. W. CHINNOCK, 44, Harris Street, Leyton, E.17.

Lady accompanist wishes to meet instrumentalists or vocalists for mutual practice. Also keen on duet playing. Classical music. N. London.—X. L., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur instrumentalists required to form quartet or quintet (violin, pianoforte, 'cello, &c.). Weekly rehearsals.—French Speaking Y.M.C.A., 15, Upper Bedford Place, Russell Square, W.C.1.

First violin wanted to fill vacancy in quartet. Chamber music. Fortnightly practices.—B. M. D., 19, Wyatt Park Road, Streatham, S.W.2.

Baritone wishes to meet gentleman accompanist for mutual practice. Operatic, ballads, &c. S. London district.—W. R. F., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (young lady) wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice of classical music. Kew district.—F. M. S., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist and violinist wish to meet capable 'cellist and viola player for chamber music. W. or S.W. districts.—S. H. JORDAN, 9, Greyhound Road, W.6.

Young gentleman wishes to meet another pianist for mutual practice. S.E. London.—F. W. B., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced amateur musician wishes to meet string players with a view to the performance of chamber music. W. London district.—BECHSTEIN, c/o Musical Times.

Lady wishes to meet pianist for the practice of violin sonatas, &c. S.E. district.—SONATA, c/o Musical Times.

Competition Festival Record

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

I fancy the Liverpool Eisteddfod was the least representative event of its kind in recent memory. People said it was a success. But an event of this magnitude with the great fuss that is made of it in the local press, always is a success. The fact remains that the National Eisteddfod of 1929 did not cover its expenses, that on the whole the support accorded to it was mediocre, and that again, on the whole, it was a tedious business. Why? Well, it was typical in so far that the organization was well up to the Eisteddfod standards. That is, there were the usual delays, diversions, and postponements in the programme. How is it that the English festivals (may I instance Blackpool?) manage to carry through their far more complicated programmes more or less to schedule, whereas the Eisteddfod thrives on its happy-go-lucky, go-as-you-please atmosphere? There is something, but not much, to be said for this informality. It is constantly rammed down our throats that the Eisteddfod is as much a social as an artistic event.

We musicians are perhaps apt to judge it a little hardly for its failure to conform to a time-table, and we view with vexation the interminable ceremonies, the speechifying, the would-be witticisms of the platform-conductors, which are rendered all the more tedious inasmuch as we do not understand a word of them all. Far be it from me to decry the motive which inspires this annual outbreak of the national spirit. But questions were raised this year, not for the first time, as to whether the conduct of the musical events could not be a little more business-like.

It was debated, for instance, whether many of the smaller competitions could not be relegated to a smaller pavilion, instead of occupying, as they do at present, so much of the time in the main building. It must be an unforgettable experience for the young Welsh singer or instrumentalist to appear in a vast hall capable of seating ten thousand people. Still, I wonder if it is quite healthy that these youngsters should acquire at so early an age their terrific aplomb in face of a large audience, or even whether it is to the best advantage of the vocal and instrumental art that the aid of the microphone should so early be called in. I heard some youngsters who appeared to have phenomenal voices, but the truth is the loud-speakers were doing their work. It is always interesting to discover new talent, but in point of fact, many of these competitions might just as well have been disposed of in more intimate surroundings. The classes for chamber music, solo instrumental work, and even some of the vocal classes, though confined to the finalists, proved a rather tedious intrusion on the major events of the Festival.

Let us now come to these. The two mixed choral competitions were of very unequal interest, and principally because the test-pieces in the so-called 'second' choral were nothing like as important as those in the chief event. The difference between the two contests is merely a matter of scale, but in the secondary contest—for choirs from seventy-five to a hundred voices—there was a miniature type of test-piece which lowered the whole tone of the competition. In the chief choral we had the 'Sanctus' from the B minor Mass along with a chorus from Holbrooke's 'Dylan,' both of which bore repetition, and were musically attractive apart from their technical difficulty. In the male-voice choir competition the standard of the test-pieces was extremely poor in anything save technical interest, with the exception of Bantock's 'Moab,' which was the chief piece in the first event. The singing of the male-voice choirs inevitably tends towards the cultivation of heavily emphatic contrasts, and the technical finish of the performances did not disguise the poverty of the artistic standards in the leading events.

Welsh choirs carried the day in three out of the chief competitions. The chief choral went to Port Talbot, with Llangefni as runner-up. The American choir from Scranton, Penn., U.S.A., came down rather heavily. Its male-voice section, evidently the strongest, carried off the prize at Treorchy last year, but the choir proved to be weak in sopranos, and was bracketed at the bottom of the list. Wales likewise won the second choral and the second male-voice contests (Llangollen Choral Society and the Gwent Glee Singers from Monmouthshire, respectively). In the chief male-voice competition it was comforting to English partisans to find the honours going so handsomely to the Nelson and Colne Orpheus Glee Choir, which won a very decided victory against some technically brilliant, if somewhat too exuberant, South Wales choirs.

The finances of the Festival would have been considerably worse off but for the night concerts. Rain hampered the proceedings on the opening days, and the attendances were disappointing at all except the main events. But the concerts were well supported. We had Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' and Berlioz's 'Faust' for the chief works. There was also a concert of Welsh compositions, which included works by Josef Holbrooke (who played, very splendidly, the solo part in his pianoforte concerto 'Gwyn ap Nudd') and by Messrs. Vincent Thomas, Maldwyn Price, and J. Owen Jones—all of whom showed a facile gift of expression, if no great originality of utterance. The most attractive of the concerts was devoted to a survey of music from Elizabethan to modern times, and ranged ambitiously from madrigals to Vaughan Williams (a Welsh composer, of course, for these purposes). The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. John Coates, and among the choral works were the 'Credo' from Beethoven's Mass in D and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.'

The Liverpool Eisteddfod was almost aggressively Welsh. I suppose that being held in England it was felt to be more than usually symbolical of the Cymric national spirit. The English visitor learned little from the adjudications, which were mainly delivered in Welsh, when they were delivered at all, for the prolonged nature of the proceedings each day usually forbade any extended adjudication in the major events, always reserved till the afternoon session. One missed the spontaneity of the Welsh Eisteddfod audiences, and there was very little massed singing, except a few hymn-tunes at the final Saturday night concert. The choir, composed very largely of the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, shaped pretty well under the direction of Dr. Hopkin Evans. It was a pity that the weather conditions were so unfortunate as to interfere with the concert devoted to Berlioz's 'Faust.' Nothing surely is more melancholy than music performed, under a steady downpour of rain, in a half-empty pavilion of the Eisteddfod size. But it is certain that but for the concerts, the deficit on the Eisteddfod would have been even more considerable than it was.

DOVER.—At the annual Kent Co-operative Festival on July 20 an excellent performance of Bainton's 'A Federal Song' by Sheerness Choir was awarded ninety-nine marks and the shield. Six choirs from Women's Guilds, &c., sang the 'Eriskay Love Lilt,' that of Dover being the best by a mark. A number of competitions for solo and quartet singing helped to make a busy and successful day.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The end of the Academy year was marked by two pleasant functions, both of which took place on the same day, Thursday, July 18. At the Duke's Hall, at 12 noon, Mrs. Philip Snowden distributed the bronze and silver medals. She had a cheery word and a smile for each recipient, and her little speech was quite a model, a combination of charm and sound advice. The function was preceded by some music—Douglas Hawkridge played an organ solo, Miss May Turtle and Miss Jean Campbell-Kemp sang Saint-Saëns's vocal duet, 'El Desdichado,' and sang it exceedingly well, with fine dramatic effect, and the Ladies' Choir sang four part-songs under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Read. The Principal proposed a vote of thanks to Mrs. Snowden, and the proceedings terminated with the hearty singing of 'Floreat Alma Mater,' composed by J. B. McEwen, the soloist being Miss Freda Townson.

At 3 p.m., at Queen's Hall, the prizes were distributed by the Duke of Connaught, the President of the Academy. This too was a pleasant function, best described by the words 'holiday atmosphere.' Miss Dorothy Manley and Miss Jacqueline Townshend gave a good performance of Rachmaninov's Romance and Tarantelle for two pianofortes from the second Suite, Op. 17. The Principal read his report of the year's working, and proposed a vote of thanks to the President.

The Annual Dinner of the R.A.M. Club took place at the Trocadero Restaurant on Friday, July 19, the President, Lady Cooper, being in the chair. The evening passed off most successfully.

F.

London Concerts

QUEEN'S HALL PROMENADE CONCERT

At the moment of writing, the Promenade concerts have been running for just over a week. The usual features are as usual: Wagner on Mondays, goldfish in the area, Sir Henry's carnation, packed houses for Bach and Handel, Mr. Charles Woodhouse leading, Mrs. Newmarch's programme notes, and all the other practices and rituals which secure the special place in our affections which these concerts have in spite of their inevitable drawbacks. Or it would be more correct to say the inevitable drawback, which is that six symphony concerts a week cannot be adequately rehearsed, and are bound to fluctuate in quality according to the sympathies of the conductor, the freshness of the players, and the competence of the soloists. This is a defect inseparable from the immense advantage of being able to drop into Queen's Hall on any night of the week with the certainty of hearing something that will give pleasure. The unique value of Sir Henry Wood is that his sympathies are so catholic, and that even on an 'off' night the standard of playing and of interpretation never falls very low. The mediocre performances are balanced by an occasional performance of superlative quality, such as that which Elgar's A flat Symphony received on the first British composers' night. In general the symphonic works are well played—'Till Eulenspiegel' on the opening night, the 'Unfinished' Symphony on the first Tuesday, and the eighth Symphony of Beethoven on the first Friday.

The outstanding feature of the season so far is the brilliant success of the first programme of British works. The wisdom of segregating the British composer has been questioned, and will certainly be questioned further before October. And we shall doubtless hear in the vestibule on Thursday nights the riddle asked, 'What is British music, anyhow?' But the answer so far to all these interrogations is that the concert on August 15, when works by composers so diverse as Ethel Smyth, Bishop, Sullivan, Delius, and Elgar were played, was satisfactory from every point of view, and produced not only in the Elgar but in the Delius the best actual achievement we have had. The credit for the excellence of Delius's Violin Concerto has to go in the greater part to the soloist, Miss Orrea Pernel, who plainly is one of the people who grasp intuitively the inwardness of Delius (a composer who is by no means an open book to every interpreter who reads his notes). The audience showed in no uncertain fashion its very proper gratitude to Sir Henry Wood for the inspiring and inspired performance of Elgar's first Symphony.

Having given credit where credit is certainly due, we may perhaps say with less danger of appearing to lack appreciation of his magnificent work for these concerts that Sir Henry's orchestral arrangements and transcriptions (mostly of the earlier composers like Bach and Purcell) are out of character, and that we wish he would not do it. He appears to think that all composers' scoring ought to sound alike, viz., like Wagner, and Wagner played turgidly at that. He ruthlessly adds clarinets, doubles string parts with wind, adds trombones to Bach, and destroys all sense of line in the contrapuntal type of scoring by sheer weight of redundant notes. Not only is it bad, it is wrong; not only is it wrong, it is unnecessary. Why, then, do it?

The singers have mostly been good. Miss Suddaby's 'Should he upbraid' was delicious. Mr. Stuart Robertson, who has appeared twice already, gave a restrained and exactly right interpretation of Beethoven's 'Busslied,' Miss Rachel Morton a highly polished performance of 'Depuis le jour.' It suffices to mention Miss Balfour and Mr. Horace Stevens, Miss Brunskill and Mr. Norman Allin as Old Wagnerians. It was a pleasure to welcome Mr. Craxton among the players of Concertos, but he chose Mozart in a more passionate mood than suits his style, and the C minor (No. 24) in his hands was but its outward husk.

Two novelties have been given—a ballet by Philip Sainton, the viola player, entitled 'The Dream of a Marionette,' and the American, Leo Sowerby's, Suite, 'From the Northland.' Mr. Sainton wrote the rather muddle-headed scenario of his ballet himself, and his music is really pure illustration. As illustration it is apt, and would doubtless enhance the effect of action on the stage, but it has not the structure to stand upright on its own feet on the concert platform. The American work, which describes the scenery round Lake Superior, is pictorial, but it is not illustration. The four numbers each present with economy of means a single mood. The method is a combination of modern devices, but the picture painted by the composer is his own, and it is one which is quite unambitious in aim and distinctly pleasant to contemplate.

The great innovation of this year is the British composers' night on Thursday. Tuesdays are for the most part to be shared between Mozart and A. N. Other, usually Haydn or Schubert. The songs in the second part continue to be respectable music. So begins the thirty-fifth year of the chief British musical festival.

F. H.

Music in the Provinces

CARLISLE.—A very large audience assembled in the covered market on the evening of Sunday, July 28, to celebrate the anniversary of last year's very successful Pageant, by listening to a combined performance of the Pageant music by a band and chorus of about five hundred, under the conductorship of Dr. F. W. Wadely, the Cathedral organist. The proceedings terminated with the singing of the Civic Anthem 'O God of Wisdom,' specially composed for the Pageant service in the Cathedral last year by Dr. Wadely, the words being by Mr. James Walter Brown.

HARROGATE.—The Festival of British music given by Mr. Basil Cameron and the Municipal Orchestra on July 24-26 has been acclaimed on all sides a success. The public came in great numbers, and seemed to enjoy both the music and the opportunity of making acquaintance with the composers. The chief figure among the visitors was Mr. Cyril Scott. He played the solo part in his Pianoforte Concerto, and added some of his solo pieces, and he conducted his 'Dance of the Citizens' from the ballet 'The Short-Sighted Apothecary.' His scena for soprano and orchestra, 'Rima's call to the Birds,' was given its first performance, with Miss Gertrude Johnson as the singer. Mr. Mark Raphael sang a new setting of 'I arise from dreams of thee,' by Roger Quilter, who conducted his 'Children's Overture' and 'Three English Dances.' Percy Grainger was represented by 'Hill Song' No. 2, 'Spoon River,' the 'Jutish Medley,' and a Rhapsody for 'cello and orchestra, played by Miss Beatrice Harrison; Delius by the 'Song before Sunrise,' 'Summer Night on the River,' and 'On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring.' Mr. Norman O'Neill conducted his Festal Prelude, 'The White Rock' (written for the opening of the White Rock Pavilion at Hastings two years ago), and his ballet music to 'Alice in Wonderland.' Other works in the three programmes were Bax's 'Romantic Overture,' Warlock's Suite 'Capriol,' Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance,' Bedford's 'Hamadryad,' Heward's 'Nocturne,' Holbrooke's 'The Birds of Rhiannon,' an Overture in B flat by Arne (recently discovered in the British Museum), Hurlstone's suite of dances arranged from Purcell, Eric Milner's 'In a Pine Forest,' the Gigue from German's music to 'Much Ado About Nothing,' Dora Bright's 'To Daffodils,' and Dunhill's 'Sea Dirge' (these sung by Mr. Frank Phillips), and Frederic Austin's music to Capek's Insect Play.—— At the Symphony Concert on August 1 Miss Kathleen Frise Smith played the solo part in Bloch's Concerto Grosso for pianoforte and strings.

Music in Scotland

Sixty-seven concerts were run by the Glasgow Corporation on Saturday afternoons in St. Andrew's and City Halls, and on Saturday evenings in the City Hall last season. These were attended by 90,844 people, and resulted in a loss of £82 18*s.* 10*d.*——A loss of £227 was incurred on the series of Popular Orchestral Concerts given by the Scottish Orchestra under the ægis of the Corporation, and there was a loss of £73 on the Orchestral Concerts for School Children, also given by the Scottish Orchestra, under the joint auspices of the Corporation and the Education Authority of Glasgow.

The Scottish Summer School in Music and Music Teaching, organized under the auspices of the Federation of British Music Industries, the British Music Society, the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, and the Scottish Music Merchants' Association, was again held at St. Andrew's. About a hundred and fifty students attended, under the direction of Mr. Geoffrey Shaw. The subjects studied were: music teaching in schools, pianoforte playing and accompanying, songs and singing, chamber music, choral singing and conducting, Scottish country dancing, and verse speaking. The lecturers included Messrs. Harold Craxton, John Goss, Ivor James, Ronald Biggs, and Geoffrey Shaw, and Misses Marjory Gullan, Agnes E. D. Bruce, and Marjorie Watson.

Mr. Lionel Powell has issued the prospectus of next season's 'international celebrity' concerts, which will, as usual, be given in the principal towns in Scotland. The artists announced for the series of six concerts are: (1) 'The Incomparable Jeritza, supported by Wolfi, the Sensational Boy Prodigy Violinist (aged 13)'; (2) Rachmaninov, 'the Greatest Living Composer-Pianist'; (3) the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Albert Coates: soloist, Cherkassky, 'the Phenomenal Boy Pianist, the Greatest Musical Find of the Generation (aged 16)'; (4) the Léner Quartet, 'the Perfect Ensemble, the World's Greatest String Quartet, in a Novel Programme' (Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Dvorák, and Tchaikovsky!); (5) Florence Austral, 'the World's Greatest Dramatic Soprano,' John Amadio, 'the World-Famous Flautist' (what! not the World's Greatest? Tut! tut!), Mozjoukine, 'the Phenomenal Polish Bass,' 'brother of the Celebrated Film Star of that name,' and Vronsky, 'the World's Greatest Lady Pianist (aged 17)' (apparently claimants to the proud title of the World's Greatest Woman Pianist may still apply); and (6) Paul Robeson, 'the Celebrated Actor Vocalist, with Lawrence Brown at the Piano,' and Poldowski, 'the Celebrated Pianist.'

After this dizzy whirl through stellar space, it is sobering to come to the modest prospectus of the Max Mossel Subscription Concerts, also to be given as usual in the principal towns in Scotland. The lovable personality of the late Mr. Mossel will be much missed at these concerts, which have been taken over by Mr. Mossel's concert agents, Messrs. Ibbs & Tillett, London, and are therefore in good hands. The arrangements announced for the series of four concerts are: (1) a 'cello and pianoforte recital by Suggia and Egon Petri; (2) a programme of works for two pianofortes, to be played by Myra Hess and Irene Scharrer, and songs by John Goss, baritone; (3) a recital by Szigeti, violin, Arthur De Greef, pianoforte, and Isobel Lamond, mezzo-soprano; and (4) a vocal and pianoforte recital by Elisabeth Schumann and Arthur Rubinstein. Mr. Mossel was the post-war pioneer in organizing and running throughout the provinces an annual series of concerts of superlative musical quality at a remarkably low rate of subscription, and the concerts which bear his name continue to hold the field against all comers.

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF MUSIC

The National Council of Music, under the chairmanship of the Director, Sir Walford Davies, held its tenth annual conference at Gregynog from July 12 to 15, by the kind invitation of the Misses Davies. The reports of activities during the year covered a very wide range of service. The work in the distressed areas, as the result of a Carnegie grant, aroused great interest, singing meetings, concerts, and concert-lectures—including visits by the National Orchestra of Wales—having been organized and carried out, besides terminal and one-year classes under the Board of Education, and study circles in connection with the use of wireless sets and gramophones in workmen's halls and institutes, partly through the generosity of the B.B.C. and H.M.V., and a special male-voice song-book had been prepared and issued for the use of men's choirs. Other work consisted of terminal and one-year classes conducted in various parts of the country, the National Library of Wales having afforded considerable assistance by the loan of books from its special educational lending department. In connection with these and other classes, the chairman emphasised the fact that the Council was providing means for filling up the gap between the leaving age for the elementary schools and the qualifying age for University extension courses. It was thus bringing the people to the doors of the University and taking the University to the people. Violin classes, junior orchestras, and children's festivals had been assisted or continued, and strenuous efforts were being made to ensure the existence of the National Orchestra of Wales after the preliminary period during which the Broadcasting Corporation had borne the total expense. Negotiations for establishing and assisting the Federation of Welsh Eisteddfods and working with the Welsh Folk-Song Society were dwelt upon, and methods for promoting and maintaining the efficiency of instrumental teaching and performance in the University colleges were also discussed. The publications edited by the Director, Sir Walford Davies, were reported upon, especially a new song book recently issued in bilingual form, mainly for schools and colleges, and the steps taken to promote music teaching and study in the training colleges and elementary schools. Alderman William George and Principal Maurice Jones thought that the activities of the Council were not sufficiently realised by the general public, and that greater publicity should be secured.

CARDIFF AND SOUTH WALES.—The National Orchestra of Wales, supplementing other activities, has given experimental open-air concerts in Llandaff fields, and has been paying visits to neighbouring places, including the seaside suburb of Penarth, and Merthyr and Ferndale, two towns in the distressed areas. The programme of the Merthyr visit included the accompaniment of choral selections from 'Elijah,' sung by the Merthyr Choral Society. These visits roused intense interest and enthusiasm, and packed audiences gathered to meet the players and profit by the uplifting influence of their music, to which the explanatory introductions by Mr. Warwick Braithwaite, the conductor, greatly contributed. The Society of Friends, and the National Council of Music have worked persistently to combat the deadening influences of the coalfields distress, and Mr. W. Wharton, of the first-named Society, expressed the greatest appreciation of the visit by the orchestra.

The first Festival of the Baden Bruckner Society will take place at Karlsruhe on November 6-10. Among the works to be performed are Symphonies 1, 5, and 8, the String Quartet, the Mass in F minor, &c. For particulars write to Prof. Fritz Gruninger, Triberg, Black Forest, Germany.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

The musical activity of Berlin came to a close much later than usual on account of the May and June Festival which was established this year, and which is to be made a regular feature of Berlin musical life. The result of the Festival was very satisfactory both on the artistic side—as might have been expected—and on the financial side, which came as a surprise. Nearly everybody predicted a great deficit, but in the end the management declared that the guarantee fund need not be touched. Even the very expensive Toscanini week, with about four hundred participants from Milan, was fully paid for by the sale of tickets, in spite of the exorbitant prices.

Since the close of the Festival little worth mentioning has occurred. The return of Max von Schillings to the State Opera was much discussed. Several years ago he had to quit his post as general-director of the State Opera rather suddenly, and public attention was much occupied with this sensational case. The same authorities who dismissed Schillings so brusquely have now called him back again, and he has been active in the last few months as a guest-conductor, though not as director. The good understanding that exists between Schillings and the artists, the orchestra, and the general public was unmistakably shown by the hearty reception that greeted him when he conducted his opera 'Mona Lisa,' one of the very few German operas of the present century that have been able to maintain a place in the regular repertory. As an interpreter of Wagner Schillings enjoys a well-founded and very considerable authority. He had almost complete charge of the last week of State Opera performances before the vacation in July, and conducted 'The Ring' with extraordinary success. Schillings belongs to the older generation of Wagnerians who maintain the Bayreuth spirit and tradition, and is less prone to problematic experiments of interpretation than some of the younger conductors of note. He also conducted the performances of the open-air forest theatre at Zoppot, on the Baltic sea, near Danzig, where 'Die Meistersinger' was given with the assistance of a distinguished caste of singers, mostly members of the Berlin State Opera.

In July the Hochschule für Musik (State High School of Music) holds a series of semi-public recitals in which the most advanced pupils of the different classes show the state of their artistic proficiency. Some of these recitals deserve to be taken seriously enough for public mention. Thus, in Paul Hindemith's composition class the String Quartet of Walter Leigh, a young English musician, won much applause and encouraging praise in the Berlin press on account of its musicianly attitude, its pleasing sound, its natural flow of ideas, and its excellent workmanship. The young Hungarian, Zoltán Gardonyi, a former Kodály pupil, was more successful in a well-written String Trio than in a sacred cantata for three solo voices accompanied by a chamber music ensemble of strings and wood-wind instruments, a rather meagre and unattractive piece. Harold Geuzmer came closest to his master Hindemith's manner in a straightforward and very unsentimental Trio for flute, clarinet, and bassoon, which impressed the listeners considerably more than the same composer's String Quartet. Though of course it cannot be considered the main duty of a teacher to make his pupils imitate his own personal manner of writing, yet the rather objective contrapuntal style of Hindemith invites imitation to an exceptional degree, and will hardly do any harm to the natural development of a young composer if practised with proper sense and direction.

Prof. Willy Hess, the eminent violin teacher, celebrated his seventieth birthday on July 14. He was compelled to retire from his professorship at the Hochschule a year ago in consequence of a rather severe law forbidding the further activity of academic teachers at the German universities and high schools after the age of sixty-eight. As a private teacher, however, he still enjoys an international reputation, which he has earned in a long and extremely successful career. His first teacher was his father, at Mannheim. Later he became a pupil of Vieuxtemps and Joachim. Then he entered upon his professional life as a distinguished soloist, and as conductor of various famous orchestras—in Frankfort, Cologne, Holland, England, and Boston. In 1910 he was offered a professorship at the Berlin Hochschule as successor to Halir, and Berlin has been his residence ever since. Many well-known and highly esteemed violinists in numerous countries call themselves pupils of Willy Hess with pride and gratitude.

The three Berlin opera houses have published lists of the new works to be performed during the coming season. The State Opera promises Weinberger's 'Schwanda, der Dudelsackpfeifer,' a very successful opera given during the last year in many German cities; Giordano's 'Il Re'; Latuada's 'Le Preciose Ridicole'; and two of Milhaud's Ballets. The list of novelties to be given at the second house of the State Opera under Klemperer's direction comprises Weill-Brecht's 'Mahagonny,' Milhaud's 'Le pauvre matelot,' Ravel's 'L'heure espagnole,' and Ibert's 'Angélique.' The Municipal Opera has accepted Schreker's 'Irrelohe,' already given in a number of German theatres without marked success, and 'Tyll Eulenspiegel,' a work by a hitherto little-known young artist, Mark Lothar.

At the two series of symphony concerts of the State Opera, conducted by Kleiber and Klemperer, the following new works will be heard: Casella's 'Scarlattiana,' Korngold's Suite from the music to 'Much Ado about Nothing,' Mraczek's 'Variété,' H. H. Wetzler's 'Symphonic Dances,' Prokofiev's second Symphony, and a 'Little Symphony' by H. Wedig. Klemperer's prime favourite will be Stravinsky, of whose compositions we shall hear 'Les Noces,' 'The Kiss of the Fairy,' and the first performance of the second Pianoforte Concerto, played by Eduard Erdmann. Schönberg's 'Gurrelieder,' promised for a considerable time, will at last be performed. Casella's Violin Concerto and Matthias Hauer's 'Wandlungen' complete the rather abundant list of new orchestral works in the State Opera's symphony concerts.

The first summer season of the lately founded German Institute of Music for foreigners has just been brought to a close. The Institute was opened in June, under the patronage of the Prussian Minister of Education, and with sufficient funds, thanks to the munificence of private donors. The purpose was to form classes for the needs of somewhat advanced students from abroad, giving them the opportunity to widen their knowledge and proficiency under the guidance of well-known teachers, and to utilise the immense educational advantages of Berlin musical life during a vacation period of eight to ten weeks. The school is at the same time a competitor to the French and Italian summer schools of music for foreign students—at Fontainebleau, and at the Villa d'Este at Rome—with a view to reconquering for Berlin the universal reputation accorded to this city in musical matters before the war. The government placed at the disposal of the Institute quarters in the Castle of Charlottenburg, and a staff of distinguished teachers constantly in touch with foreign countries was formed under the presidency of Wilhelm Furtwängler. About two-thirds of the students came from the United States, the rest from England, Canada, the Scandinavian countries, Rumania, Hungary, and Holland. Most of the students were pianists, and there was universal recognition among them of the value of the instruction they received in the classes of Eugen d'Albert, Edwin Fischer, and Walther Gieseking. A course of lectures in English and German on historical topics was held by Prof. Johannes Wolf, director of the musical department of the State Library, by Prof. Kurth Sachs, who is in charge of the museum of musical instruments, and by Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, who also gave instruction in theory and composition. A practical course of orchestral conducting had to be abandoned at the last moment owing to an accident to the instructor, Karl Schuricht from Wiesbaden. Prof. Willy Hess was in charge of a violin class. As considerable interest in the work of the Institute has been manifested in many different countries, and as the success of the first summer term fully met all expectations, the Institute will be made a permanent summer school, and will be reopened on a still broader basis in the summer of 1930. An English prospectus will be available in the autumn.

Another course for foreigners was recently held at Berlin by the Central Institute for Musical Education and Instruction. It was limited to pedagogic subjects, and offered to its participants from many countries an interesting and valuable insight into the modern systems of musical education practised in Germany. The questions of music in the public schools, of private instruction, of organization of conservatories and high-schools, of the relations of the state to musical culture, &c., were treated in all their numerous varieties by lectures, by inspection of schools, and by practical work under the guidance of authorities in the various subjects. HUGO LEICHTENTRITT.

HOLLAND

Although it was unquestionably a disappointment that Karl Schuricht was prevented by his accident from taking up his duties as conductor at Scheveningen during the first half of the season, this was to some extent compensated for by the brilliance of his deputy, Hans Weisbach. The vivacity and power of his interpretations, his splendid technique, his remarkable memory, and his quickness at studying unfamiliar works, all came as a great and pleasant surprise to the visitors to this seaside resort, most of whom were unfamiliar even with his name. Apart from the direct and immediate pleasure of his lively performances of many well-known and several less-known works, his methods have stirred the orchestral players out of the apathy that besets them early in the summer season, so that it can truly be said that they have played individually and collectively in a manner that could scarcely have been expected. Of course, one does not agree with all his interpretations, but whether one agrees or no, it is difficult not to fall under their spell. The most remarkable of his performances has been that, or rather the three, of Mahler's second Symphony. It is not one of the greatest of this composer's works, but to me it is one of the most attractive, and the clarity and finesse, combined with a rare vigour, which Weisbach put into it made his performance one that critics and public alike acclaimed as great. If only to get a performance such as this it was worth while engaging him for the month, and it is most likely that, whatever their previous intentions have been, the management will be compelled by public opinion to engage him again for next season. But this was by no means all. He has put new life into several of the Tchaikovsky Symphonies, let us hear the inner framework of Brahms, made the 'Symphonia Domestica' of Richard Strauss almost convincing, given us a new appreciation of Johan Wagenaar's 'Saul and David' Overture, introduced us to a charming little Scherzo by Rudolf Mengelberg, and made Bruckner's eighth Symphony less tedious than usual. Among the soloists have been Mischa Elman, Edwin Fischer, Sam Swaap, and Charles van Isterdael (all in Brahms), Gregor Piatigorsky in Dvorák, and Liesbeth Poolman-Meissner in Wagner and Weber.

Hermann Abendroth has now succeeded Weisbach, and the first impressions of his work have been that he also is a conductor of a character and artistic standing as well as an energy and vitality with which Scheveningen is all too unfamiliar. His programmes also seem likely to be of unusual interest.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

NEW YORK

The ghost of music-in-public has begun its rather hesitant midsummer strolling in two or three strongholds of the muse; elsewhere the victory of the god of heat is complete.

At New York an orchestra drawn from members of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra gives outdoor concerts every evening in the Stadium of the College of the City of New York. Willem van Hoogstraten, a young Dutch conductor who was very much in vogue with New York winter audiences a few seasons ago, and whom the fickleness of popular favour has now relegated to Seattle, Oregon (a post which, it must be said, is more nearly appropriate to his talents), presides over most of these summer sessions. We are also to have a two-weeks' visit from Coates, and one from Molinari, the excellent conductor of the Augusteo at Rome. In the famous natural amphitheatre at Hollywood, the Bowl, there are similar concerts. The conductors for the present season, I believe, include Goossens, Molinari, and Hertz.

The programmes for these concerts easily bear comparison with the winter programmes. There is usually one Symphony or other large work and several smaller works. Modern music is not neglected; during the present week Prokofiev's 'Scythian' Suite and Bloch's 'America' are both to have their first Stadium hearings. Beethoven's Ninth is scheduled for two performances next week. During the season there are usually two or three opera performances, in concert form, and several evenings given over to the Denishawn Dancers. The operas scheduled at Hollywood this year are 'Tannhäuser,' 'Walküre,' and 'Carmen.'

Among the plans announced for next season by far the most interesting is the news that Toscanini is to make the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra his major concern, conducting at New York for eight weeks at the beginning and eight weeks at the end of the season. New York at last may reasonably hope to develop an orchestra to rival those of Boston, Philadelphia, Berlin, and Vienna.

An organization at least equally promising for the more distant future is the 'Friends of Music.' This choral society has been conducted for several years by Artur Bodanzky, who this year terminated his connection with the Metropolitan Opera House as conductor of the German repertory, and is reputed to have said a final and a not unwilling good-bye to the Valkyrs, Volsungs, Nibelungs, and the rest of the Wagnerian horde. Outside the opera house Mr. Bodanzky blends the desirable qualities of a conductor in almost perfect proportions. He is, notably, personally very self-effacing, which alone would be enough to mark him off from the majority of his fellow-members of the American musical fraternity.

Under his excellent baton the 'Friends' give, it is safe to say, in one season, more really significant music than any other American musical organization, and give it a quality of performance which is not excelled at Berlin or at the Concertgebouw. The Passions of Bach, the B minor Mass, the 'Christmas Oratorio,' several cantatas, Haydn's 'Seasons,' Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' and 'Samson,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' Brahms's 'Requiem,' 'Parzengesang,' 'Schicksalslied'—these and many other choral works of the first importance the 'Friends' give every year. They have always used the unenthusiastic orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera House. At present they are engaged in a campaign to raise funds to endow their own independent orchestra, which, if it succeeds, will give America perhaps its premier musical organization in point of excellence of performance and seriousness of purpose. Their popularity among the musical public is gratifyingly large; those who hold the purse-strings of musical philanthropy, however, seem to find the 'Friends' inadequate as a publicity medium.

This period in the American musical year is marked Morendo, and there will soon be a Grosse pause preceding the wild Crescendo of October and November.

Meanwhile, two Britons work valiantly to sustain the breath of our musical life—Coates conducting here in the New York City College Stadium, and Goossens directing the Hollywood Bowl concerts. I should not be surprised if Coates has had the easier time of it, for he followed Hoogstraten, with whom he can hardly help comparing favourably, while Goossens follows Molinari, who is also an excellent conductor.

Naturally, in these out-door concerts, the one inescapable necessity is rhythmic vitality, which all these men except Hoogstraten abundantly possess. Such other refinements as he may have are lost en plein air. Coates's programmes have been excellently varied, too, although one might have wished for a little more of the music of Vaughan Williams, Holst, William Walton, and other Englishmen whom we do not know as well as we should like to. The 'London' Symphony and one of Mr. Coates's own 'Pickwick Sketches' have so far been the only contemporary English compositions he has let us hear (I speak only from memory; I have not the programmes at hand). At Hollywood I find only one English work on the programme of the first week—William Walton's 'Portsmouth Point' Overture.

ARTHUR MENDEL.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

CHARLES ALBERT EDWIN HARRISS, at Ottawa, on July 31. He was born in London on December 16, 1862, and received his first musical instruction from his father, an organist. At the age of twelve he became a chorister at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, where he won the Ouseley scholarship. On leaving Tenbury he held an assistant organist's post at Reading for a year, and was then appointed organist of the parish church of Welshpool, and private organist to the Earl of Powys. Two years later he went to Ottawa, where he obtained the post of organist at St. Alban-the-Martyr. He remained there only ten months, being then appointed to Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal. The cathedral appointment was poorly paid, and in order to eke out his income young Harriss—he was now barely of age—gave lessons to the children of the mechanics in the workshops of the Grand Trunk Railway. He also founded a Choral Union of a hundred voices, and so began the career of choral conductor which was destined to become the chief work of his life. In 1897 he married Ella Beatty, the widow of George K. Schoemberger, of Cincinnati, and her wealth enabled him to give effect to his cherished project of making music a link between the Mother Country and the Dominions. In fulfilment of this aim he organized in 1903 the first series of Music Festivals in the Dominion of Canada, the whole of the music performed being by British composers. In 1908 he invited Dr. Henry Coward and the Sheffield Choir of two hundred voices to visit Canada; and two years later he set out on an Empire tour, lecturing on musical reciprocity. In England he was well known as an organizer and conductor of musical events on a large scale. In 1913 he took his large Imperial Choir of London, two thousand strong, to sing British music at the Ghent Exhibition, afterwards giving a command performance, with a contingent of three hundred, before the King and Queen of Belgium at their palace at Laeken, near Brussels. He conducted an immense choir in Hyde Park at the conclusion of the war, and was appointed musical director of the concert in the Stadium at the British Empire Exhibition of 1924. He also arranged a concert tour of the Scots Guards Band through Canada for the benefit of war veterans. In fact, his activities as organizer and conductor are too numerous for detailed record here. As a composer his activities lay chiefly in the field of choral music, where his practical experience as a trainer and conductor enabled him to write effectively. He was the recipient of many distinctions, including the degree of Mus. Doc. conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1905. He was a Freeman and a silver medallist of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, an honorary life member of the Royal Society of Musicians, and an honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music; for a time he served as Professor of Music at McGill University, Montreal; and he was adviser in the Dominions for the Royal College of Organists. He was a man of generous disposition, and boundless energy and enthusiasm. His home at Earnscliffe, on the banks of the Ottawa River, was a famous centre of Canadian musical life and hospitality.

SERGE DIAGHILEV, on August 19, at Milan. He was born near Nijni Novgorod, on March 19, 1872, and soon showed a bent towards the arts in general that foreshadowed his later brilliance in the co-ordination of arts that constitutes the ballet. He read law at St. Petersburg, but was no less interested in music and journalism, and in his twenty-fifth year he took up the latter as a profession, his special line being art criticism. In 1899 he founded an important art journal, which, however, lived only six years. In 1903 he went to Paris, where he produced 'Boris Godounov,' his company including Chaliapin; and two years later organized there an exhibition of Russian art. Six years later saw the beginning, also at Paris, of the medium with which his name will always be identified—the Russian Ballet. He brought his company to London (Covent Garden) in 1911, and despite some opposition, at once captured a large public whose enthusiasm remained unabated even through some lapses from the standard of the Ballet's early days. In 1914 Diaghilev collaborated with Sir Joseph Beecham in a series of Russian operas and ballets, but subsequently his concern had been entirely with ballet, sometimes given as part of a Coliseum programme, sometimes (and usually with far better effect) as a complete entertainment at a theatre taken for the season. Music played a prominent part in the programmes, in addition to its use in the ballet. The orchestral interludes brought forward many notable modern compositions, some of which might otherwise have remained unknown to London. In fact, for many musicians the chief interest and value of the Russian Ballet lay in the fact of its having been the origin of such outstanding scores as 'Petrouchka,' 'The Firebird,' 'La Boutique Fantasque,' &c. Of late years the art of Diaghilev seemed to be going through a transition stage. Even so original a medium as the Russian Ballet may become stereotyped, and apparently the realisation of this danger (signs of which were not unnoticed by his patrons) led him to break ground in directions that were too eccentric to hold much promise of development. But always he was the richly-gifted and uncompromising artist, the born leader, and the whole-hearted enthusiast.

(A special article on Diaghilev, by Mr. Edwin Evans, will appear in our next issue.)

HENRY KING, on August 16, in London, aged seventy-four. He was assistant vicar-choral at St. Paul's Cathedral from 1876 to 1891, and choirmaster of Christ Church, Westminster, from 1893-1924. He did much organizing and secretarial work, specially in connection with choirs, having for many years held posts of secretary to the Abbey Glee Club, assistant-librarian to the Madrigal Society, librarian to the Western Madrigal Society, &c. He acted as choir secretary at the Coronations of King Edward and King George. In 1891 he joined the staff of Novello's, retiring in January of this year. One of his most valuable pieces of work for the house was in connection with 'Words of Anthems,' of which he prepared the second (1888) and subsequent editions. He had an encyclopædic knowledge concerning hymnals, psalters, and chant books, and other matters connected with Church choir work and material—information which he was ever ready to place at the disposal of inquirers.

THOMAS ANSELM BURGE, O.S.B., at Grassendale, Liverpool. He was born in London, in 1846, and after being educated at Woolhampton (now the Douai Abbey School), he proceeded to Ampleforth, where he became a monk. Ordained priest in 1874, he served on the staffs of Woburn Park School and the Penarth Mission. From 1885 to 1898 he was Prior of Ampleforth, afterwards becoming, and remaining until his death, Rector of St. Austin's, Grassendale. An authority on liturgical music, he wrote largely on that and kindred subjects, besides composing a good deal for Church use. He was chairman of the Liverpool Ecclesiastical Music Commission, and a past member of the Philharmonic Society.

HUGO VON HOFFMANNSTHAL, at Rodaun, near Vienna, aged fifty-five. He was born at Vienna, on February 1, 1874, and at first studied law and philosophy, but literature and the drama soon claimed him. Though of European fame as a writer and poet he is known in England chiefly as the librettist of Richard Strauss's operas. His mystery play 'The Great World Theatre,' founded on the work of Calderon, had its first production in this country at St. Edward's Church, Holbeck, near Leeds, in 1924. An English translation of his correspondence with Strauss was published in the spring of this year.

JEAN GERARDY, at Spa, Belgium, on July 4, aged fifty-two. He began studying the 'cello at seven; at the age of ten he graduated at Verviers Conservatoire; and a year later was touring Europe with Paderewski and Ysaye. After completing his education at Liége Conservatoire, he made his first appearance in England at Nottingham, his London debut taking place soon after at St. James's Hall, with brilliant success. He toured extensively, and achieved great popularity in the United States, Australia, and throughout Europe. During his later years he turned to chamber music, wherein his exquisite taste and musicianship enabled him to be no less successful than as a soloist.

EDOUARD RISLER, at Paris, aged fifty-six. A native of Baden-Baden, where his father was a painter, he came to Paris as a boy and studied the pianoforte with Diemer, winning a prize at the Conservatoire at the age of sixteen. He made his debut at the Salle Pleyel, and thereafter met with constant success all over Europe. He distinguished himself specially as a Beethoven player. He was a professor at the Paris Conservatoire, and recently had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

THOMAS EDWARD PEARSON, who died suddenly last month at the age of forty-nine. Though not widely known to the public he had musical gifts of a high order, which he gave whole-heartedly and unobtrusively to his work as organist and choirmaster at Halifax Parish Church, conductor of the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, and chorus-master to the Bradford Festival Choral Society. He became F.R.C.O. in 1903, and Mus. Doc. (Oxon.) in 1911.

WILLIAM SMITH, at Falkirk. He was a successful choral conductor at the principal Scottish competitive Festivals, but was best known as an outstanding singer of Scottish songs, and was for many years a favourite tenor soloist in the Glasgow Orpheus Choir.

MOZART ALLAN, at Glasgow. For many years he was widely known as a music publisher at Glasgow. His publications, mostly popular teaching pieces and Scottish music in Victorian settings, had a wide sale throughout the country and overseas.

ALFRED WILLIAM FLETCHER, at Paignton, on June 28. A native of Derby, he went as a young man to Australia, returning later to England and settling at Paignton, where he held the post of organist at the Congregational Church. He was the father of Mr. Percy Fletcher.

Miscellaneous

The Music Teachers' Association celebrates its coming-of-age during September with a Reunion, on the 12th, at 7.45 (reception by Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Macpherson and an address by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw); a lecture-recital by Mr. Stewart Macpherson on the 13th, at 11, followed by a Festival Luncheon and an excursion to Windsor by motor-coach; and a Conference on the 14th, at 11. Full particulars from the Acting-Secretary, Miss L. Bull, Æolian Hall, Bond Street, W.1.

A series of twenty-four University of London Extension Lectures will be given by Miss Elsa West at Morley College, 61, Westminster Bridge Road, on Fridays, at 7.30 p.m., beginning on September 27. The subjects will be (a) 'The Development of Music and Musical Instruments' and (b) 'Music of some Special Nations.' The series will be illustrated by chamber music and vocal and instrumental solos. Full particulars and syllabus may be had from the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. Reeden, Morley College.

Last month we referred to a booklet entitled 'Civic Opera as the Basis of British Music,' and said that readers could obtain copies from the author, Capt. Reaveley, 45, Albany Street, N.W.1. Capt. Reaveley now asks us to say that he will be glad if applicants will facilitate his secretarial work by enclosing with their request a fairly large stamped addressed envelope.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Organization of Musical Science. By Leonid Sabaneev	785
A New Violin Sonata by Bach	788
Arthur Honegger. By Paul Landormy	789
The Philadelphia Amateur Orchestra Club (illustrated)	791
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	794
Stages in the History of Opera: II.—Early English Opera. By J. A. Westrup	797
The Baden-Baden Festival: Music for Wireless and Films. By Oscar Thompson	799
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	802
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	803
Occasional Notes	805
Berlioz as Melodist. By Tom. S. Wotton	808
The Present State of Voice-Production in England. By Herbert Hilton (Cape Town)	812
Berlioz's 'Lelio': A Strasbourg Performance. By W. G. Whittaker	814
A Tribute to Gerhardt. By Charles W. Orr	815
Canons of Musical Judgment: The Question of Key-Relationships. By Hugh Arthur Scott	816
Royalty as Musician, Composer, and Collector. By Hilda Andrews	822
New Music	824
The Anglo-American Musicians' Conference at Lausanne (illustrated). By Edwin Evans	827
Teachers' Department: Reviews; Answers to Correspondents	831, 832
Church and Organ Music	833
Summer School of Church Music	841
The Amateurs' Exchange	841
Competition Festival Record	842
Royal Academy of Music	842
London Concerts	843
Music in the Provinces	843
Music in Scotland; Music in Wales	844
Musical Notes from Abroad	845
Obituary	847

MUSIC.

'Golden Slumbers kiss your eyes.' Old English Air. Arr. for S.A.T.B. by H. A. CHAMBERS ... 817

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS given with this number: 'Break forth into Thanksgiving.' Song for Massed Voices in Unison (or S.A.T.B.). By Martin Shaw.

'In Derry Vale' ('The Londonderry Air'). With Descant. Arr. by Geoffrey Shaw.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:	£	s.	d.
TWO LINES	0	3	0
THREE LINES	0	3	4
FOR EVERY ADDITIONAL LINE	0	0	10
ONE INCH (DISPLAYED)	0	10	0
HALF A COLUMN	2	0	0
A COLUMN	4	0	0
A PAGE	7	10	0

Special Pages (Covers, &c.) by arrangement. A remittance should be sent with every Advt. To insure insertion in their proper positions Advts. for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour St., London, W.1, not later than

THURSDAY, September 19, 1929

During the Last Month

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED

CHAMBERLAIN, MABEL.—Eye Training in Music. Steps 1, 2, and 3. For children from 4 or 5 to 6 or 7 years of Age. (No. 105, Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.) 2s. 6d.

—— My Music Book. To be read with Step 3 of the above. (No. 105A, Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.) 8d.

DAVIES, WALFORD.—Christ in the Universe. For two Voices, Chorus, Pianoforte, and Orchestra. 1s.

GORST, C.—Chants for Te Deum and Benedictus. Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa. 2d.

GRAINGER, A. E.—Two Harvest Hymns:—"We thank Thee, Lord of Harvest," "Rejoice with the Lord of Harvest Home." 6d.

HANDEL, G. F.—"Prepare, then, ye immortal choir." From "Semele." (No. 249, Two-part Songs for Female or Boy's Voices.) 2d.

JONES, H. W.—"Come, ye thankful people, come." Anthem for Harvest, for Soprano and Bass Soli, and Chorus. 4d.

MATTA, A. L.—Chants to the Canticles and some special Psalms. 3d.

NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGED INSTRUMENTS:

No. 33. Minuet in G. L. VAN BEETHOVEN. Arranged by JOHN POINTER 2s. 6d.
,, 34. Minuet from "Berenice." G. F. HANDEL. Arranged by JOHN POINTER 2s. 0d.
Extra String Parts to either, 4d. each.

OLD ENGLISH AIR.—"Golden Slumbers kiss your eyes." Arranged for S.A.T.B. by H. A. CHAMBERS. (No. 1039, The Musical Times.) 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 447, contains the following music in both notations: "The Piper" (Unison Song). ERIC H. THIMAN. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
Book 63.	Eighteen Songs by G. F. HANDEL	2s.	—
No. 684.	"Spring-time" (Action-Song). EDGAR MOY	4d.	—
,, 1547.	"There is a spirit singing" (Unison Song for massed Singing). GEOFFREY SHAW	—	2d.

SHARMAN, CECIL.—"Tell me where is fancy bred" (Two-part). (No. 246, Two-part Songs for Female Voices.) 3d.

SMART, H. B.—The Preces and Responses (Ferial). (Arranged). 3d.

SMITH, T.—"Ye shall go out with joy." Harvest Anthem. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2579. "Christians, be joyful." Chorus from "The Christmas Oratorio." J. S. BACH 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK

AMERICAN ORGAN QUARTERLY.—Vol. 10, No. 30. July, 1929. Containing 9 pieces. $2.50 (10s.)

URTEAGA, L.—"I am the Living Bread." Communion Motet for S.T.B. 10 cents (6d.).

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., available for deputising and recitals. J. E. Hope, 11, Milton Avenue, N.6.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., can deputise September. Box 51, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., seeks appointment. 21 years' experience. Recitalist (pupil of Joseph Bonnet), Voice-Trainer (A.R.C.M. Teacher of Singing). Box 52, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PERCY RENDELL, A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., is free to deputise as Organist, and/or Choirmaster, anywhere, week-day or Sunday, period if required. Full Cathedral Service, or Congregational. Twenty years' experience. 31, Old Park Villas, Palmers Green, N.13. 'Phone, Palmers Green 0021.

ACCOMPANIST (Pianoforte).—Voluntary, required by Choral Society in S.W. London. Works by Bach, Mendelssohn, and Elgar. Thursday Rehearsals. Write, Box 53, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, TENOR at St. Anne's Church, Soho, W.1. £25 per annum. Expenses up to £5. Apply to Eric Warr, at above address.

EDITOR and PROOF READER required by leading Music Publishing House. Apply in the first instance by letter, giving all particulars of previous experience, in confidence, to "Editor," c/o Pool's Advertising Service, 180, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

MUSIC TEACHER (leaving for America) wishes to dispose of first-class connection (South Wales) to qualified person. Write, Box 54, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN, partly built. Two manuals. Also other material, including bellows, &c. Address by letter to "Musical," 11, Elm Road, Crumpsall, Manchester.

DINNER SUITS, Dress Suits, 35*s*. to 55*s*. Dinner Jackets, Dress Coats, White Vests, Dress Shirts, High Quality Second-hand. Inquiries please. Carter, Evening Wear Specialist, 10, Grafton Street, Cambridge.

Henry Purcell

STRING ORCHESTRA

SUITE, from the Dramatic Music. Arranged and Edited by ALBERT COATES.
1—Rondeau 2—Slow Air 3—Air
4—Minuet 5—Allegro
Score, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES, from "The Gordian Knot Untied" (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
SUITE No. 1: 1—Overture 2—Air
3—Rondeau Minuet 4—Air 5—Jig
SUITE No. 2: 1—Chaconne 2—Air 3—Minuet
Each Suite: Score 4s.; String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE MARRIED BEAU (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Hornpipe 3—Slow Air
4—Trumpet Air 5—Jig 6—Hornpipe
7—March 8—Hornpipe on a ground
Score, 6s String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE VIRTUOUS WIFE (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Slow Air 3—Hornpipe
4—Minuet (I.) 5—Minuet (II.) 6—Allegro
Score, 4s. String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

The Psalms of David

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

Upon the Principles of Natural Speech Rhythm

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(Late Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral)

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(Organist of York Minster)

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(Formerly Director of Music in Harrow School)

PRICES :

Demy 8vo size	... ...	Four Shillings net
Imperial 32mo	... ...	Two Shillings net
Canticles only	... ...	Sixpence net

Gramophone Records by The London Male-Voice Octet may be obtained of Psalms 23, 95, and 145 ... (Columbia No. 9502—4s. 6d.)

Psalms 65 and 85 ... ... (Columbia No. 5428—3s. 0d.)

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

YORK SERIES

916.	SURELY HE HATH BORNE	Smith-Palestrina	2d.
922.	BEHOLD AND SEE ...	Smith-Palestrina	2½d.
958.	THY REBUKE HATH BROKEN	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
977.	HOLY, HOLY	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
1000.	JESU, GRANT ME THIS ...	Gibbons-Bairstow	2½d.
1009.	WILL GOD IN VERY DEED?	Chas. L. Naylor	6d.

BANKS & SON, YORK

VESPER
(SAVE US, O LORD, WAKING)

T. E. P. ATTEWELL

CUCKFIELD, SUSSEX

Price One Penny. On Card, Twopence

JUST PUBLISHED

ANTHEM

O LORD, MY GOD

BY

CHARLES A. SALT

F.R.C.O.

PRICE TWOPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use,"—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c.

Popular Church Music by J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D ...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Twelve Introits or Short Anthems

——SET TWO——

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	Jacques Arcadelt
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	Philip Armes
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD...	Hugh Blair
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	Thomas Ford
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	Alfred R. Gaul
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY...	Alan Gray
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. Gore Ouseley
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	Palestrina
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	John Stainer
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE ...	Arthur S. Sullivan
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	Christopher Tye
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. Wesley

PRICE ONE SHILLING

EACH INTROIT MAY BE HAD SEPARATELY

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Pilgrim's Progress

(IN TWELVE PARTS)

Narrative Tone-Poem for Organ with Optional Percussion Parts

BY ERNEST AUSTIN

Part I. 2s.
PILGRIM'S UNHAPPINESS

Part II. 2s.
PILGRIM AND HIS CRITICS

Part III. 2s.
PILGRIM WANDERING IN THE FIELDS, MEETS EVANGELIST AND BEGINS HIS JOURNEY

Part IV, 2s.
PILGRIM AT THE HOUSE OF THE INTERPRETER, AND BY THE CROSS

Part V. 2s.
PILGRIM'S JOURNEY TO PALACE BEAUTIFUL

Part VI. 2s.
THE VALLEY OF HUMILIATION AND COMBAT BETWEEN PILGRIM AND APOLLYON

Part VII. 2s.
THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW OF DEATH

Part VIII. 3s.
VANITY FAIR

Part IX. 2s. 6d.
THE DELECTABLE MOUNTAINS

Part X. 2s. 6d.
THE DESCENT TO THE ENCHANTED LAND AND HOPEFUL'S VISION OF CHRIST

Part XI. 2s. 6d.
THE LAND OF BEULAH AND THE RIVER OF DEATH

Part XII. 3s. Optional Chorus Part, 9d.
THE CELESTIAL CITY

Descriptive Booklet, by AMBROSE P. PORTER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., will be sent on request.

J. H. LARWAY,
Music Publisher*, 2, Percy Street, LONDON, W.1

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS
OF THE
Favourite Operas
ADAPTED FOR CONCERT USE

BALFE
*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL	- - -	Price 3s.
BIZET
*CARMEN	- - Price 3s.	Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.
DONIZETTI
*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT	-	Price 3s.
FLOTOW
*MARTHA	- - - - -	Price 3s.
GOUNOD
*FAUST	- - Price 2s.	Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
PURCELL
KING ARTHUR	- - -	Price 2s. 6d.
VERDI
*IL TROVATORE	- Price 3s.	Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
WAGNER
TANNHÄUSER	- - - - -	Price 3s.
WALLACE
MARITANA	- - - - -	Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CHORALES

Harmonized by
J. S. BACH

Collected and arranged in melodic order by
H. ELLIOT BUTTON

THIS Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for four voices. It includes also an index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price, Cloth,
TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

13
CHORALES

From the Church Cantatas and Motets
Of
J. S. BACH

THIS Collection of Chorales is made with a view to various purposes. Primarily they may be used as short unaccompanied Motets or Anthems, or as choral items in an Organ Recital, especially in conjunction with Chorale Preludes on the tunes sung. The tunes themselves may serve as alternative settings to well-known hymns for special occasions.

Price, paper cover,
ONE SHILLING

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

COMPOSITIONS BY

WALFORD DAVIES

Published by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

JUST PUBLISHED CHRIST IN THE UNIVERSE

(COMPOSED FOR THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL, 1929)

For Two Solo Voices, Chorus, Pianoforte and Orchestra. - Price One Shilling.

1. OTHER CANTATAS.

	s.	d.
EVERYMAN. Morality Play for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra	4	6
FANTASY. Founded on DANTÉ'S DIVINA COMMEDIA. For Tenor Solo, Chorus and Orchestra	1	0
FIVE SAYINGS OF JESUS. For Tenor Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra	1	0
HEAVEN'S GATE. For Mezzo-Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Small Orchestra	1	0
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	6
HIGH HEAVEN'S KING. For Soprano and Baritone Soli and Chorus	1	6
LIFT UP YOUR HEARTS. A Sacred Symphony. For Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra	4	0
MEN AND ANGELS. A Choral Suite for Chorus, Tenor Solo, Orchestra, and Organ	2	0
NOBLE NUMBERS. For Soli, Chorus, Violoncello, and Orchestra	4	6
ODE ON TIME (Milton). For Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra	1	6
THE TEMPLE. An Oratorio for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra	6	0
HERVÉ RIEL (Browning). For Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra...	1	6
Tonic Sol-fa	1	0
THE THREE JOVIAL HUNTSMEN. For Chorus and Orchestra (or Chorus, Violin, and Pianoforte	2	3

2. CHURCH SERVICES.

COMPLETE MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE IN C (suitable for unaccompanied singing). Te Deum and Benedictus ...	0	6
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	0	4
COMPLETE MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE IN G, with Kyrie and Introit (Temple Chant Service). Vocal Score 8vo.	1	6
Do. Post 8vo. (Voice parts only, Close Score)	0	8
Or separately—Te Deum (Vocal Score) ...	0	6
Benedictus (post 8vo)	0	3
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Vocal Score)	0	6
Kyrie and Introit (post 8vo)	0	2
FERIAL MORNING, EVENING AND COMMUNION SERVICE in F. Vocal Score	2	0
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis from ditto ...	0	4
COMPLETE MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE in G (Festal Setting)
Te Deum and Jubilate in G	0	8
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	0	8
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C, with Organ Accompaniment	0	6
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, adapted from Marbeck	4	0

3. FOURTEEN SPIRITUAL SONGS 2 0

The following are also issued separately :

KING OF GLORY	0	4
LORD, IT BELONGS NOT TO MY CARE	0	4
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	3
MY BLOOD SO RED and O SAVIOUR WITH PROTECTING CARE	0	3
O SONS AND DAUGHTERS (O Filiæ et Filii)	0	3
THE SOULS OF THE RIGHTEOUS ...	0	3
THREE INTROITS	0	3

4. OTHER ANTHEMS.

AND JESUS ENTERED INTO THE TEMPLE	0	6
GOD CREATED MAN FOR INCORRUPTION (for Double Choir)	1	6
GRACE TO YOU AND PEACE (Motet) ...	1	0
IF ANY MAN HATH NOT THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST	0	6
LET US NOW PRAISE FAMOUS MEN	0	6
LITANY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT (from "Noble Numbers")	0	6
OUT OF THE DEEP	0	6
THE WALK TO EMMAUS...	0	8
THESE SWEETER FAR (Unaccompanied Motet)	0	8
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	6
WHAT SWEETER MUSIC (from "Noble Numbers")	0	8
WHATSOEVER IS BORN OF GOD ...	1	0
WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN	0	6

Copies of the following works may be hired on application to Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd.

SONG OF ST. FRANCIS. Cantata for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Birmingham Festival, 1912)

DANTÉ FANTASY (See above) HEAVEN'S GATE

MEN AND ANGELS HIGH HEAVEN'S KING

MS. Orchestral Works. For particulars apply to Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34 Percy Street, W.1.

FESTIVAL OVERTURE in B flat

WORDSWORTH SUITE in C, for Piano and Orchestra. (Philharmonic Concerts, 1912.)

CONVERSATIONS for Piano and Orchestra. (Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, 1915.)

MEMORIAL SUITE. (Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, 1923.)

A CHILDREN'S SYMPHONY. (Hereford Musical Festival, 1927.)

PARTHENIA SUITE

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

YOUTH'S OWN BOOK of GREAT COMPOSERS

(FIRST ISSUED AS THE CHILD'S OWN BOOK OF GREAT COMPOSERS)

By THOMAS TAPPER and GERTRUDE AZULAY

Price 6d. each net

Each Book contains a sheet of pictures, illustrating the story, to be cut out by the reader and pasted in the places allotted to them.

Space is provided in which the reader can write an essay on the life of the composer. Great scope is afforded for competitions.

Single copies can be sent on approval.

Now ready: HANDEL, BEETHOVEN, SCHUBERT, BACH

In course of preparation: Haydn, Mozart, Purcell, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin.

A NEW EDITION OF HANDEL By WALTER FORD

Comprising Volumes of Select Songs for the following voices:

Vol. I. Light Soprano. Vol. II. Dramatic Soprano
Vol. III. Mezzo-Soprano Vol. IV. Contralto
Vol. V. Tenor Vol. VI. Baritone
Vol. VII. Bass

Selected and edited, with Introductory Notes and an Appendix on the Singing of Handel.

Price: 3/6 each net, paper cover; 6/6 each net, limp cloth (gilt).

TRIOS FOR MIXED VOICES

(S.A.B. and S.S.B. UNACCOMPANIED)

Four new volumes of Part-Songs for use in Schools, Arranged and Composed

By ARTHUR SOMERVELL

Price 1/- each (combined Staff and Sol-fa Notations).

These pieces should prove useful in schools, for choirs in boys' schools containing trebles and basses, or the upper classes of boys and girls, and should present no difficulties to any well-trained group of scholars.

TEN DESCANTS

WRITTEN TO NATIONAL SONGS

By ARTHUR SOMERVELL

Price 1/- net

At the mid hour of night
Avenging and bright
Dove (The)
Dulce Domum
Farewell, Manchester
Flow gently, sweet Afton
On Richmond Hill
Rising of the Lark
Silent, O Moyle
We be three poor Mariners

Also published separately at 3d. each.

BOOSEY & Co., Ltd., 295, Regent Street, London, W.1

NOVELLO'S

Music for Cinema Orchestras

Published for Full and Small Orchestras, with two Pianoforte copies included in each set.

	Full Orch.	Small Orch.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.
Four Characteristic Waltzes:
No. 1. Valse Bohemienne ...	7/6	5/-
2. Valse Rustique ...	7/6	5/-
3. Valse de la Reine ...	7/6	5/-
4. Valse Mauresque ...	7/6	5/-
COWEN, FREDERIC H.
Four English Dances:
No. 1. Stately Dance ...	7/6	5/-
3. Graceful Dance ...	7/6	5/-
4. Country Dance ...	7/6	5/-
A Suite of Old English Dances:
No. 1. Maypole Dance ...	7/6	5/-
2. Peasants' Dance ...	7/6	5/-
FLETCHER, PERCY E.
Valse Lyrique ("The Smile of Spring")	7/6	6/6

	Full Orch.	Small Orch.
ELGAR, EDWARD
Chanson de Matin	5/-	3/-
Chanson de Nuit	5/-	3/-
The Wand of Youth: Music to a Child's Play (1st Suite)
No. 2. Serenade	5/-	3/6
3. Minuet (Old Style) ...	4/-	3/6
5. Fairy Pipers... ...	4/-	3/6
6. Slumber Scene ...	4/-	3/6
7. Fairies and Giants ...	7/6	5/-
The Wand of Youth: Music to a Child's Play (2nd Suite)
No. 1. March	7/6	5/-
5. The Tame Bear ...	5/-	3/6
6. The Wild Bears ...	7/6	5/-

Extra Orchestral Parts may be obtained, price 6d. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

An Abridged
Concert Edition of CARMEN

AN OPERA FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

By GEORGES BIZET

Selected and adapted by W. McNAUGHT
The Libretto from the English Version of the complete Opera by
LUCIA YOUNG

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, price 2s. Book of Words, Price 41s. 8d. per 100.
STRING PARTS, 29s. 6d.
Newly Printed Full Score and Wind Parts on Hire.

The time of performance is about 1 hour 15 minutes. For this edition a new full score has been prepared with cues, so that the orchestra may either be full, or reduced to: Strings, 2 Flutes (each changing to Picc.), 1 Oboe (1st, changing to English Horn), 2 Clarinets, 1 Bassoon (1st); 2 Horns (1st and 2nd), 2 Trumpets (or Cornets), 1 Trombone (2nd); Timpani; Percussion.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTION FOR . . . .
CONCERT PERFORMANCE of FAUST

AN OPERA
WRITTEN BY
JULES BARBIER and MICHEL CURRÉ
ENGLISH WORDS BY HENRY F. CHORLEY
The Music by Ch. GOUNOD
Edited and arranged by JOHN POINTER

This Selection takes about 50 minutes in performance.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 19s. 6d. Wind Parts, 42s. 11d.
Book of Words, 9s. 6d. per 100

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

LIE STREWN THE WHITE FLOCKS

PASTORAL

For Chorus, (Mezzo-Soprano Solo), Solo Flute, Drums, and String Orchestra.

The Poems selected from the Works of BEN JONSON, JOHN FLETCHER, POLIZIANO, THEOCRITUS, and ROBERT NICHOLS.

By ARTHUR BLISS

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

PRESS NOTICES:

Observer.—"The new Bliss work has a great deal that is beautiful to listen to, and some interesting modernities for singers and players to compass. The linking-up of poems from different literary periods with instrumental movements is successful, and the whole work hangs properly together. It must be heard again soon."

Manchester Guardian.—"It was worth while missing the second act of 'The Mastersingers' in order to hear Arthur Bliss's new 'Pastoral' produced by the Harold Brooke Choir at the Bishopsgate Institute. The great compliment implied is by no means an exaggeration. Mr. Bliss is not a feverishly productive composer, but when he does bring out a new work nowadays one may be certain to find it interesting and hardly less sure to enjoy it. Last night these high expectations were more than justified, for the 'Pastoral' at once impressed itself on one's mind as the most refreshingly spontaneous and individually conceived musical novelty one has heard for some time. . . The whole text is a little bucolic anthology chosen with exquisite taste and . . . admirably unified by the music. The scoring . . . is like a fastidiously chosen and exactly appropriate binding. . . . It is possible to complain that in the declamatory sense the words are not entirely well set. In the wider poetical sense they could not have been treated more imaginatively or with greater charm and quickly responsive inventiveness. . . . The performance . . . usefully showed that an efficient small choir and a few players for the string parts are quite enough to do justice to this wholly delightful work."

The Times.—"There is a strength, a melodic beauty, and a complete individuality of idiom (if we except an obviously intentional compliment to Sir Edward Elgar, to whom the work is dedicated) which prove that the composer has now definitely found his feet. . . . Though less brilliant superficially than his earlier works, the 'Pastoral' is far more assured, and on that account never misses its effect. The choral writing is, in comparison with most modern works, remarkably straightforward."

Daily Mail.—"Nine or ten years ago Mr. Bliss was one of the young rebels of music. In the 'Pastoral' he is still vivacious, youthful, and unconventional enough—but in a way that will affright no one. The new work is extraordinarily attractive. The reapers sing boisterously, the naiads dreamily; echo discourages the love-lorn shepherd, and in 'The Pigeon Song' a flute adds charming decorations to a girl's amorous ditty. The composer's freshness and inventiveness well match the excellent verses."

Morning Post.—"The choral writing is in the true English tradition, and the musical idiom in general is entirely straightforward . . . The most sincere and musical expression of lyrical personality that I have heard from an English composer for a long time.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

SONGS BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH

(S) Soprano; (M-S) Mezzo-Soprano; (C) Contralto; (T) Tenor; (Bar) Baritone; (B) Bass

	Range of lowest key
A BLOOD RED RING HUNG ROUND THE MOON. G minor (C), C minor (M-S)	G —C
AS THE MOON'S SOFT SPLENDOUR. B (C or Bar)	B —E
BEAT, BEAT DRUMS. (No. 6 of Six American Lyrics.) B flat (C or Bar)	C —E
CANOE SONG. D flat (C or Bar); F (S or T)	B♭—E♭
ELEANORE. A (Bar); B flat (Bar); C (T); D (T)	C♯—D
GREAT IS HE WHO FUSED THE MIGHT. (Drinking Song from "Ulysses.") F (T) ...	F —G
HER LOVE. (No. 3 of Six American Lyrics.) F (C or Bar)	C —E
HIAWATHA'S VISION. (From "Hiawatha's Departure.") (Bar).	B♭—F
O PRAISE ME NOT. (No. 2 of Six American Lyrics.) G (C or Bar)	D —E
O SET THE SAILS. (From "Ulysses.") E flat (T)	E♭—G
O SHIP THAT SAILEST SLOWLY ON. (No. 5 of Six American Lyrics.) F♯ minor (C or Bar)	C♯—E
O THOU, MINE OTHER, STRONGER PART. (No. 1 of Six American Lyrics.) E (C or Bar)	C —E
ONAWAY! AWAKE, BELOVED! D flat (Bar); G flat (T)	C —F
SONS OF THE SEA. E minor (B); F minor (Bar)	B —E
SPRING HAD COME. (From Hiawatha's Departure.") D (S)	F♯—A
SWEET EVENINGS COME AND GO. F (C or Bar); B flat (S or T)	C —E♭
THE DARK EYE HAS LEFT US. (No. 4 of Six American Lyrics.) (C or Bar)	B♭—E
WHO CALLS? (From "Endymion's Dream.") D (T)	F —A
YOU'LL LOVE ME YET. G minor (C or Bar); B minor (S or T)	D —D

THE SOUL'S EXPRESSION Four Sonnets

(Contralto)

THE SOUL'S EXPRESSION. E minor (A♯-E); GRIEF. E (G-E); TEARS. A (C♯-D♯); COMFORT. F (C-E♭)

COMPLETE, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF

POPULAR CANTATAS

FOR FEMALE VOICES

		Tonic Sol-fa	O.N.
ABT, F.	Minster Bells (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	Springtime „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	Summer „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Fay's Frolic „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Golden City „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Silver Cloud „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Water Fairies „ „	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Wishing Stone „ „	0/8	2/6
BARNETT, J. F.	*The Wishing Bell (S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	1/6	4/–
BEHREND, A. H.	Singers from the Sea (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„	Through the Year „ „	1/–	3/–
BENDALL, W.	A Legend of Bregenz (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„ „	*Song Dances. Chorus only (S.S.A.)	0/8	1/6
„ „	*The Lady of Shalott „ „	1/0	2/6
BENDL, K.	The Water Sprite's Revenge (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
BOOTH, J.	The Day of Rest „ „	1/–	2/6
BOYCE, E. M.	A Vision of the Simple (S. Solo ad lib. and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
„ „	The Sands of Corriemie „ „	0/8	2/–
COWEN, F. H.	A Daughter of the Sea (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/6	3/–
„ „	Christmas Scenes „ „	1/–	3/–
„ „	Summer on the River (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	3/–
„ „	The Rose of Life (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	3/–
„ „	Village Scenes (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
FERRARI, G.	*Impressions (L'Almanach aux Images) (French and English words (S. and M.-S. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
FOSTER, M. B.	Snow Fairies (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
„ „	*The Angels of the Bells (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
„ „	*The Bonnie Fishwives „ „	1/–	2/6
„ „	The Coming of the King (Sacred) „ „	1/–	2/6
GAUL, A. R.	Around the Winter Fire (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	1/6
HAYNES, B.	A Sea Dream (S.M.-S. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus, with accompanied recitation)	0/8	2/6
„ „	The Fairies' Isle (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
„ „	The Sea Fairies (S. Solo and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
HOFMANN, H.	*Song of the Norns (S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	1/6
KING, O.	The Naiads (S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
KINROSS, J.	Songs in a Vineyard (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
LAHEE, H.	The Sleeping Beauty (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
LLOYD, C. H.	The Gleaners' Harvest (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
MACFARREN, G. A.	Songs in a Cornfield (S.M.-S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	1/0	2/6
MUNDELLA, E.	*The Victory of Song (S.S.A. Chorus only)	—	1/6
ROGERS, E.	The Forest Flower (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
SELBY, B. LUARD	Summer by the Sea (M.-S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
SMART, H.	King René's Daughter (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
TAYLOR, COLIN	John Gilpin. Unison (second part optional)	—	2/–
TOURS, B.	*The Home of Titania (S.M.-S. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
TOZER, F.	*King Neptune's Daughter (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
TSCHAÏKOWSKY, P.I.	*Nature and Love (S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	0/6	1/6
VINCENT, C.	The Little Mermaid (S.S.A. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6
„ „	The Village Queen (S.S.A. Soli and S.A. Chorus)	0/8	2/6
WOODS, F. C.	*Old May-Day (S. Solo and S.S.A. Chorus)	1/–	2/6
WOOLLEY, E. M.	The Captive Soul (S.M.-S.T. Soli and S.S.A. Chorus)	—	2/6

A selection of the above may be had on approval.

* Orchestral parts may be obtained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A Selected List of

Secular Cantatas, Ballads, &c. for CHORUS ONLY (S.A.T.B.)

	s.	d.
ARNOTT, A. D. Young Lochinvar (Sol-fa, 8d.)	2	6
BANTOCK, G. A Pageant of Human Life (Choral Suite for Mixed, Male, Female, and Children's Voices) (Unaccompanied)	2	6
BETJEMANN, G. R. Song of the Western Men	1	6
BLAIR, H. Trafalgar (Sol-fa, 1s.) ...	2	6
BOUGHTON, R. The Invincible Armada	2	6
—— Midnight	3	0
—— The Skeleton in Armour... ...	3	0
BRAHMS, J. A Song of Destiny (Sol-fa, 1s.)	1	6
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only)	1	6
BREWER, A H. A Song of Eden ...	1	6
—— Summer Sports	2	6
BRIDGE, J. F. The Inchcape Rock (Sol-fa, 8d.)	1	6
CLIFFE, F. Ode to the North East Wind (Sol-fa, 1s.)	3	0
COWEN, F. H. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— Ode to the Passions (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
DUNHILL, T. F. Tubal Cain (Sol-fa, 8d.)	1	6
ELGAR, E. The Black Knight (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The Banner of St. George (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
FLETCHER, P. E. The Deacon's Masterpiece, or The Wonderful One-Horse Shay (Humorous) (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
GADE, N. W. Spring's Message (Sol-fa, 4d.)	1	0
GARDINER, H. B. News from Whydah (Sol-fa, 4d.)	1	0
GOETZ, H. Nœnia (Sol-fa, 1s.) ...	1	6
GRAY, Alan. The Legend of the Rock-Buoy Bell	1	6
HARRISS, C. A. E. The Sands of Dee	1	6
HATTERSLEY, F. K. How they brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix	2	6
HIGGS, H. M. The Erl-King	1	6
HOLST, G. King Estmere	3	0
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn (Slow Movement from First Choral Symphony	1	6
—— Ode to Death	1	6
ILIFFE, F. Sweet Echo	1	6
LANG, C. S. Lochinvar	2	0
MCCUNN, H. Lord Ullin's Daughter (Sol-fa, 1s.)	1	6
—— The Wreck of the Hesperus (Sol-fa, 8d.)	1	6
MACKENZIE, A. C. The Cotter's Saturday Night (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The New Covenant	2	6
NORTH, S. In the Morning (Sol-fa, 1s.)	1	6
PARKER, H. W. The Kobolds... ...	1	6
PARRY, C. H. H. Blest Pair of Sirens ("At a Solemn Music") (Sol-fa, 1s.)	1	6
—— The Chivalry of the Sea (Sol-fa, 1s.)	1	6
—— The Glories of our Blood and State	1	6
ROOTHAM, C. B. For the Fallen ...	2	6
SACHS, E. King Cups	1	6
—— Water Lilies	1	6
SMITH, A. BRENT-. In Glorious Freedom	1	6
SMITH, A. M. Ode to the North East Wind	1	6
SPEER, W. H. The Jackdaw of Rheims	3	0
—— The Lay of St. Cuthbert... ...	3	0
STANFORD, C. V. The Battle of the Baltic	2	6
—— East to West	2	6
—— The Revenge (Sol-fa, 1s.) ...	2	6
STEPHEN, D. The Laird o' Cockpen (Sol-fa, 8d.)	1	6
STOCKER, S. Song of the Fates ...	1	6
STOJOWSKI, S. Spring-Time	1	6
SULLIVAN, A. King Arthur (Incidental Music)	2	6
WADDINGTON, S. P. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1s.)	3	0
WALKER, E. A Hymn to Dionysus ...	1	6
WOODMAN, R. T. Falmouth	1	6

A selection of the above may be had on approval.
Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

No. 104.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS AND EDUCATIONAL SERIES

A Handbook for Choralists

By HARVEY GRACE

CONTAINING HINTS ON SIGHT-SINGING AND CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION

Thirty-four Studies specially composed by Edward C. Bairstow, Harold Darke, T. F. Dunhill, Julius Harrison, Geoffrey Shaw, and the Author. Six Rounds by Beethoven

WITH A FOREWORD by SIR WALFORD DAVIES

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

Novello's Classical Songs

by VARIOUS COMPOSERS

VOL. 5

CONTENTS

Blacksmith, The	Brahms	Lonely am I now	Weber
Come unto Him	Handel	Lonely woods	Lully
Erl-King, The	Schubert	Or let the merry bells	Handel
Hark! The echoing air	Purcell	Questioning	Salvator Rosa
If with all your hearts	Mendelssohn	Serenade, A	Schubert
I'll sail upon the Dog-star	Purcell	Shepherd, The	Weber
In the golden morn	Tschaikowsky	Shepherds and Maidens	Lotti
King of Thule, The	Berlioz	Sorrow	Pergolesi
Knotting Song, The	Purcell	Sweet Echo	Lawes
Ladybird	Schumann	Sweet Rose and Lily	Handel
Let me wander	Handel	Talisman	Schumann
Little Spinner, The	Mozart	Where the Bee sucks	Sullivan
		Willow Song, The	Sullivan

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

PAPER BOARDS - - - - - THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS

Folio Songs

SACRED

	s.	d.
AS A SPIRIT DIDST THOU PASS. Tenor Solo, from "The Light of Life" ... ... Edward Elgar	2	0
BIRDS, THE. In 2 keys, C and D ... Eric H. Thiman	1	6
COME, O THOU TRAVELLER UNKNOWN. In 2 keys, D and F. Melody by Robert King, 1722. Arr. by H. A. Chambers	2	0
GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS, THE. In 2 keys, F and A♭ ... ... Eric H. Thiman	2	0
IN THE BLEAK MIDWINTER. In 2 keys, D and F Eric H. Thiman	2	0
JESUS, THE VERY THOUGHT OF THEE. In 2 keys, B♭ and D ... ... Eric H. Thiman	2	0
MY MASTER HATH A GARDEN. In 2 keys, F and G Eric H. Thiman	1	6

SECULAR

DOLLY (THE MILKMAID). In 2 keys, C and E flat E. Douglas Tayler	2	0
LORDING'S DAUGHTER, THE. In 2 keys, D minor and F minor ... ... Edward German	2	0
PRAISE OF CYNTHIA. In 2 keys, C and D Edgar L. Bainton	2	0
RAINBOW, THE. In 2 keys, E and G Eric H. Thiman	2	0
SILVER SWAN, THE. In 2 keys, B♭ minor and C minor Eric H. Thiman	1	6
SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN (arr. by John E. West). In 3 keys, C, D and F	1	6
SPRIG OF SHAMROCK, A (Four old Irish Airs). String Quartet or Pianoforte accompaniment. High or low voice. Adapted and arranged by A. Herbert Brewer	3	6

Part-Songs for Female Voices

BLESSED DAMOZEL, THE. S.S.A.A., with Semi-Choruses, 1 and 2 ... ... Julius Harrison	1	6
BRIDAL SONG (S.S.A.) ... ... Edgar L. Bainton	0	3
GREEN LINNET, THE. Two-Part ... Edgar L. Bainton	0	4
O LOVELY NIGHT (S.S.A.) (arr. by Alfred Moffat). M. Prætorius	0	3
PERSEPHONE (S.S.C.) ... ... Ethel Boyce	0	4
PREPARE, THEN, YE IMMORTAL CHOIR ("Semele") Two-Part ... ... Handel	0	2
RAINBOW, THE (S.S.C.) ... ... Ethel Boyce	0	4
*SONG OF THE WATERS, THE. Two-Part. George Rathbone	0	4
TELL ME WHERE IS FANCY BRED. Two-Part. Cecil Sharman	0	3
*TO DAFFODILS. Two-Part in Canon ... Eric H. Thiman	0	3
*WHEN THE GREEN LEAVES COME AGAIN. Two-Part Percy E. Fletcher	0	4
*WHO IS SYLVIA? Two-Part (arr. by John Pointer) Edward German	0	4
WOODED HILL, THE (Four Two-part Songs):
No. 1. EARLY SPRING, THE ... ... Ethel Boyce	0	4
2. SUMMER HEAT ... ... ,, ,,	0	3
3. AUTUMN TIME ... ... ,, ,,	0	4
4. THE HOLLY ... ... ,, ,,	0	4

Part-Songs for Mixed Voices

BEES (S.A.T.B.) ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	0	4
BREAK FORTH INTO THANKSGIVING. For Massed Voices in Unison (or S.A.T.B.) ... ... Martin Shaw	0	4
*CAMEL'S HUMP, THE (arranged) ... Edward German	0	4
*COME, LIVE WITH ME ... ... Frank Idle	0	4
GOLDEN SKEIN, THE ... ... Edgar L. Bainton	0	3
GOLDEN SLUMBERS (Old English Air) Arr. by H. A. Chambers	0	3
*MADRIGAL OF SPRING ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	0	3
SLEEP (S.A.A.T.B.B.) ... ... Bernard Johnson	0	4
*SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN (S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.) Arr. by H. Balfour Gardiner	0	4
*STARS OF THE SUMMER NIGHT W. A. C. Cruickshank	0	3
THERE IS A GARDEN IN HER FACE H. A. Chambers	0	4
THERE IS A LADY SWEET AND KIND Eric H. Thiman	0	4
*THERE IS A SPIRIT SINGING (Unison Song for Massed Singing) ... ... Geoffrey Shaw	0	3
TO BLOSSOMS ... ... W. G. Alcock	0	3
TURTLE SOUP (Humorous) ... ... N. F. B. Johnson	0	3

Part-Songs for Male Voices

	s.	d.
CALL, THE (T.T.B.B.) ... ... Thomas F. Dunhill	0	4
*FAIN WOULD I CHANGE THAT NOTE (T.T.B.B.) R. Vaughan Williams	0	3
FAREWELL, MANCHESTER (arr. for T.T.B.B.) Thomas F. Dunhill	0	3
IF I WERE YONDER WAVE (T.T.B.B.) Edgar L. Bainton	0	4
*IN SILENT NIGHT (T.T.B.B.) German Folk-Song Johannes Brahms	0	3
*SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN (T.T.B.B.) Arr. by H. Balfour Gardiner	0	4
THE LEE SHORE (T.T.B.B.) ... ... Percy E. Fletcher	0	4
THE LEE SHORE (T.T.B.B.) ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	0	4
TURTLE SOUP (T.T.B.B.) (Humorous) N. F. B. Johnson	0	3

Anthems

AND I SAW A NEW HEAVEN ... ... Edgar L. Bainton	0	4
COME, MY WAY, MY TRUTH, MY LIFE (with Solo for Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano) ... ... Roy Thompson	0	3
GOD OF LOVE MY SHEPHERD IS, THE. (Vesper Anthem) ... ... Roy Thompson	0	3
HAIL, GLADDENING LIGHT. (Short Anthem for Evensong) ... ... Hugh Blair	0	3
HOLY, HOLY, HOLY (Trinitytide) ... G. A. Alcock	0	3
*I'LL PRAISE MY MAKER ... ... J. A. Meale	0	4
*LET ALL THE WORLD IN EVERY CORNER SING Eric H. Thiman	0	4
O FATHER, WHO DIDST ALL THINGS MAKE. (Unaccompanied, for Evensong) ... ... Eric H. Thiman	0	3
O GOD OF WISDOM ... ... F. W. Wadely	0	4
O REND THE HEAVENS. (Motet) ... Johannes Brahms	0	4
O WORSHIP THE KING. (Harvest or General use) Ernest Bullock	0	4
*PRAISE, O PRAISE THE LORD OF HARVEST Eric H. Thiman	0	3
REMEMBER, O THOU MAN (Carol-Anthem) ... C. S. Lang	0	4
SUN OF MY SOUL (Hymn-Anthem) N. F. Byng Johnson	0	4
THUS SAITH THE LORD. (Short unaccompanied Anthem for Saints' days or General use) H. C. L. Stocks	0	2
*STRIFE IS O'ER, THE ... ... Eric H. Thiman	0	4
WHEREFORE NOW HATH LIFE. (Motet for S.S.A.T.B.B.) Johannes Brahms	0	6

Cantatas, &c.

GOD WITHIN. Motet for Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ A. Herbert Brewer	1	0
JOHN GILPIN. For Female (or Boys') Voices, in Unison (2nd part optional), with Pianoforte accompaniment (2 Violins and percussion optional) ... Colin Taylor	2	0
LIE STREWN THE WHITE FLOCKS (Pastoral). For Chorus (Mezzo-Soprano Solo), Solo Flute, Drums, and String Orchestra ... ... Arthur Bliss	2	6
LOCHINVAR. Ballad for Chorus and Orchestra C. S. Lang	2	0

Violin (or 'Cello) and Pianoforte

CRADLE SONG ... ... Byron Brooke	2	0
NOCTURNE ... ... Colin M. Campbell	2	0

Organ

ALLELUYA. Festal Prelude on "Lasst uns Erfreuen" W. Faulkes	1	6
BENEDICTION (Wedding Souvenir) ... Alfred Hollins	1	6
BOURREE ... ... Alfred Hollins	2	0
CHORALE, "Jesus bleibet meine Freude" (J. S. Bach) arr. by John E. West	1	6
CHORALE PRELUDE, "Ye servants of the Lord" (Tune, "Narenza") ... ... Charles Macpherson	1	6
ELEVEN CHORALE PRELUDES (Ed. by John E. West) Book 1 (Nos. 1-4) ... ... Johannes Brahms	3	6
Ditto Book 2 (Nos. 5-11) ... ... ,,	3	6
FANTASIE IMPROMPTU ... ... W. G. Alcock	2	0
FIVE SHORT AND EASY PIECES, founded on Hymn-Tunes ... ... C. Hylton Stewart	2	0
MAYTIME (Gavotte) ... ... Alfred Hollins	1	6
PARTITA IN E (Op. 100), in seven movements S. Karg-Elert	5	6
SICILIANA ... ... Alfred Hollins	1	6
SUITE FROM "BONDUCA" (arr. by Eric H. Thiman) Henry Purcell	2	0
THREE DANCES FROM "HENRY VIII." Edward German ... ... each	2	0
VARIATIONS ON ARNE'S "WHERE THE BEE SUCKS" (arr. by Chastey Hector) ... Julius Benedict	2	0

A selection may be had on approval.
Compositions marked * may be obtained in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF

Instruction Books & Studies

FOR USE IN VOCAL TRAINING

		Price Paper Covers	Price Paper Boards
BATES, JAMES. ...	Voice Culture for Children. Complete.	5/6	6/6
,, ,,	,, ,, (Part 1) Instructions ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,	,, ,, (Part 2) Exercises ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,	,, ,, (Part 3) Appendix, Two-part Studies, with accompaniment	1/–
BORDOGNI. ...	24 Vocal Exercises for Mezzo-Soprano. Edited by A. Randegger	2/6
CONCONE. ...	50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice	2/6
,, ...	25 Lessons. Sequel to the above	2/6
,, ...	15 Vocalises ,, ,, 25 lessons	2/6
,, ...	15 Vocalises for Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano	2/6
,, ...	40 Vocalises for Contralto	2/6
,, ...	40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone	2/6
ELLIS, A. J. ...	Speech in Song	3/–	4/–
GARCIA, G. ...	A Guide to Solo Singing	3/–	4/–
GRACE, H. ...	A Handbook for Choralists. Containing hints on Sight-Singing and Choral Technique and Expression ...	1/6
HENSCHEL, G. ...	Progressive Studies for the Voice, with accompaniment: Part 1. (Sustained Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
	Part 2. (Florid Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
HULBERT, H. H. ...	Breathing for Voice Production	3/–	4/–
,, ,,	Eurhythm: Thought in Action. The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy. Cloth, 7/– ...
,, ,,	Pronunciation for Voice Production. (Part II. of Eurhythm)	1/6
LARKCOM, AGNES J.	The Singer's Art	1/6
MANN, R. ...	A Manual of Singing, for use of Choir Trainers and Schoolmasters	1/6
MARTIN, G. C. ...	The Art of Training Choir Boys	4/6	5/6
,, ,,	,, ,, Exercises only, for the use of boys ...	1/6	2/6
NICHOLLS, M. ...	School Choir Training. For the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing	3/–
PALMER, E. D. ...	Exercises for the Tenor Voice, with Introductory Remarks on its Training and Development	1/6
PANSERON, A. ...	40 Melodic and Progressive Exercises for Soprano or Tenor. Edited by A. Randegger: Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-26	3/–
,, ,,	Part 2. ,, ,, 27-40	3/–
,, ,,	42 Melodic and Progressive Vocal Exercises for Contralto, Baritone, or Bass. Edited by A. Randegger: Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-29	3/–
,, ,,	Part 2. ,, ,, 30-42	3/–
,, ,,	50 Vocalises, for Two Voices. Soprano and Mezzo-Soprano or Tenor and Soprano, or Tenor and Baritone. Edited by A. Randegger: Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-30	3/–
,, ,,	Part 2. ,, ,, 31-50	3/–
RANDEGGER, A. ...	Singing	6/–	7/–
STAINER, J. ...	Choral Society Vocalisation. Instructions and Exercises in Voice Training, to be used at ordinary rehearsals Complete	3/–	4/–
	Or in four parts ... ... each	8d.
,, ,,	The Exercises in the above Primer, adapted and arranged for the use of Choirs and Classes of Female Voices by A. W. Marchant	2/6	3/6
STOCKENHAUSEN, J.	Method of Singing	6/–	7/–
TAYLOR, D. C. ...	Self-help for Singers. A Manual for Self-instruction in Voice-Culture, based on the old Italian method ...	2/6	3/6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

EYE TRAINING IN MUSIC

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, No. 105)

A course to familiarise children with musical notation and to afford practice in thinking and singing the sounds which the symbols represent. (To be worked in conjunction with "Ear Training" Primer No. 101.)

STEPS I. II. and III.
FOR CHILDREN OF FROM FOUR OR FIVE TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price, 2s. 6d.

MY MUSIC BOOK

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series No. 105a)

The pupil's book to be read with STEP III. of "Eye Training Course."

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

BOOKS 4 and 5

School Marches (easy)

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE

CONTENTS

BOOK 4

Brighton Camp ... ... English Air
James the Second's March "The Dancing Master," 1690
John Brown's Body ... American Marching Song
Lady Frances Nevill's Delight "The Dancing Master," 1690
March ... ... E. Duncan
March ("Alceste") ... ... Gluck
March ("St. Cecilia's Day") ... ... Handel
March ("Idomeneo") ... ... Mozart
Marching Through Georgia ... ... H. C. Work
Old King Cole ... ... Traditional
Playing at Soldiers ... ... Arnold Krug
See, the Conquering Hero ("Judas Maccabæus") ... Handel
Soldier's March ... ... Schumann
The Loud Tattoo ... ... Dibdin
The Soldier-Boys ... ... Myles B. Foster
Tom the Piper ... ... H. A. C.

BOOK 5

Mall Sims ... ... English Air, 16th Century
March ("Riccardo") ... ... Handel
March ... ... Haydn
March ("King Arthur") ... ... Purcell
March ("Notturno") ... ... Spohr
Marching ... ... S. P. Waddington
Minstrels' March ("Tannhäuser") ... ... Wagner
Nursery Rhymes ... ... Traditional
Soldiers' March ("William Tell") ... ... Rossini
The Campbells are Coming ... Scottish Traditional Air
The Lincolnshire Poacher ... ... English Air
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Toreador ("Carmen") ... ... Bizet
When Johnny Comes Marching Home English Air
Ye Sons of Albion ... ... English Folk-Song

Price 1s. 6d. each Book

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

YOUNG SINGERS

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice-production, enunciation, and singing to boys and girls.

By JAMES BATES

To be obtained from:
Messrs. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.

Price One Shilling and Twopence, post free.

No. 103.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS AND EDUCATIONAL SERIES

THE ART OF PIANOFORTE PRACTISING

WITH AN APPENDIX ON

LEGATO-PEDALLING

BY

C. EGERTON LOWE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 63

Eighteen Songs

BY

G. F. HANDEL

CONTENTS

Angels, ever bright and fair ("Theodora")
Art thou troubled ("Rodelinda")
Come, ever-smiling liberty ("Judas Maccabæus")
Come, gladsome Spring ("Xerxes")
Come unto Him ("The Messiah")
Hear thou my weeping ("Rinaldo")
How beautiful are the feet ("The Messiah")
I know that my Redeemer liveth ("The Messiah")
Let me wander not unseen ("L'Allegro")
Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson")
Lord of our being ("Rinaldo")
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ("Joshua")
Or let the merry bells ring round ("L'Allegro")
Rejoice greatly ("The Messiah")
Smiling dawn of happy days, The ("Jephtha")
Sweet rose and lily ("Theodora")
Verdant meadows ("Alcina")
Where'er you walk ("Semele")

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Seventeen Songs

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited and arranged, with accompaniment for the Pianoforte, by

ARTHUR SOMERVELL

A PASTORAL ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN PLAYFORD
AH! CRUEL NYMPH
AH! HOW PLEASANT
AH! WHAT PAINS
AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MATTHEW LOCKE
ANACREON'S DEFEAT
CEASE, O MY SAD SOUL
HOW DELIGHTFUL'S THE LIFE
I FAIN WOULD BE FREE
IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF LOVE (2nd Version)
LET EACH GALLANT HEART
LOVE ARMS HIMSELF
OLINDA
ON THE BROW OF RICHMOND HILL
SAWNEY IS A BONNY LAD
THE FATAL HOUR COMES ON
THE QUEEN'S EPICEDIUM (Elegy on the Death of Queen Mary, 1695)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Foreign Organ Music

Messrs. NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, have now issued a

NEW CATALOGUE OF FOREIGN ORGAN MUSIC

This Catalogue contains a selection of the best works of the most prominent foreign composers, with prices in English currency. Copies will be sent post free. Ask for Catalogue No. 1B.

METRONOMES

MAËLZEL METRONOMES—Best Foreign make.

	s.	d.
In Oak, with bell ... ... net	17	6
In Mahogany finish, with bell and nickelled fittings ... ... net	20	0
In Ebony finish, do. do. ... net	20	0
In Walnut, do. do. ... net	20	0

ORGAN DUETS (4 Hands)

	s.	d.
ANDRÉ.—24 Pieces, Op. 35. 2 Books ... each	3	0
BACH.—Fugue on 3 Themes from "The Art of Fugue"	2	0
HESSE.—Fantasia in D minor, Op. 87	2	0
HÖPNER—Prelude and Fugue, Op. 9	2	0
LACHNER.—Introduction and Fugue, Op. 62 ...	1	6
LISZT.—Fantasia and Fugue	5	6
LÖFFLER.—Fantasia, Prayer and Fugue ...	2	0
RUDNICK.—"Reformation" Fantasia on "Ein Fest' Burg"	2	6
SCHNEIDER.—Prelude and Variations, Op. 65 ...	1	6
THIELE.—Concert Piece in C minor	3	6
WOLFRUM.—Choral and Fugue, Op. 4, No. 3 ...	2	0

Miniature Scores

FOR THE

Promenade Concerts

EULENBURG, PHILHARMONIA, and various French Editions in stock

CATALOGUES OF FOREIGN EDITIONS WILL BE SENT FREE ON REQUEST.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Sir Landon Ronald says—

Photo by Claude Harris

"I have just tried the Chappell Grand you have so kindly delivered for my use, and I feel I must offer you my congratulations on producing such a superb instrument."

The opinion of Sir Landon Ronald is endorsed by the most eminent of pianists and professors of music, and the leading colleges of music.

The installation of Chappell Pianos in every B.B.C. station is yet another proof of the fact that where absolute purity of tone is essential this great British instrument is always the first choice.

UPRIGHTS FROM 65 GNS. GRANDS FROM 122 GNS.

The Chappell Piano Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, London, W.

CHAPPELL

CHAMBER DIVERSIONS

For STRING QUARTET

or String Orchestra

ARRANGED BY CEDRIC SHARPE

TAMBOURIN	... GOSSEC
BERCEUSE	A. JARNEFELT
GAVOTTE from "MIGNON"	A. THOMAS

Others in preparation.

PRICE 2/- NET EACH NUMBER

EXTRA STRING PARTS, SIXPENCE NET

These admirable arrangements will be found most agreeable to play as interludes between the standard works, while string orchestras cannot fail to consider them a real enrichment of their repertory.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough Street, LONDON, W.1

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, August 31, 1929.

By Royal Appointment Established 1804

CHALLEN

By Royal Appointment Established 1804

BRITAIN'S LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF GRAND PIANOS

AS SUPPLIED TO THE B.B.C.

95 GUINEAS

95 GUINEAS

CHALLEN'S PIANOS LTD.

13 & 14, HANOVER ST., REGENT ST., W.1 'Phone MAYFAIR 4218

The School Music Review

No. 447 | AUGUST, 1929 | Price 3d.

Annual Subscription, Post Free, Four Shillings

(PUBLISHED THE 15TH DAY OF THE MONTH.)

CONTENTS.

SINCERITY IN APPRECIATION ... ... By William Walton
SOME MUSICAL SHORT STORIES ... ... By G. Kirkham Jones
THE SCHOOL ORCHESTRA ... ... By Maud V. Stell
EVERYDAY TEACHING PROBLEMS ... ... By J. Raymond Tobin
A PAGE FOR PIANOFORTE TEACHERS ... By Ernest Fowles

MUSIC

"THE SWAN": Echo Song ... ... H. A. C.
"THE PIPER": Unison Song ... ... Eric H. Thiman
"A SONG OF REST": Three-part Song ... H. Walford Davies

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

THE ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC & THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

ASSOCIATED BOARD:

COLONEL RAYMOND W. FFENNELL, F.R.C.M., Chairman.
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., Principal of The R.A.M.
SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon. et Cantab., D. Litt., Hon. R.A.M., Professor of Music, University of Oxford, Director of The R.C.M.

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.M., Professor of Music, University of London.
H. C. COLLES, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.M.
GEORGE DYSON, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.M.
STEWART MACPHERSON, F.R.A.M.
STANLEY MARCHANT, Mus. Doc., F.R.A.M.
ERNEST READ, F.R.A.M.
H. W. RICHARDS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., Hon. R.A.M.
S. P. WADDINGTON, F.R.C.M.

Secretary: JAMES MUIR.
Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND, Western Branch, Burlington Gardens, London, W.1.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and in the Colonies, in both Theoretical and Practical Music, and in Elocution in Great Britain and Ireland.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	VIOLA.	WIND INSTRUMENTS
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.	VIOLONCELLO.	PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.
HARMONY.	DOUBLE BASS.	CLASS SINGING.
PIANOFORTE.	INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL ENSEMBLES.	SINGING.
ORGAN.	HARP.	ELOCUTION.
VIOLIN.

Local Centre Examinations in Music (Syllabus A). Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March—April and November—December at all Centres. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 9th, 1929.

"School" Examinations in Music (Syllabus B) held three times a year, viz., March—April, June—July, and October—November. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 2nd, 1929.

Elocution Examinations will be held in March—April, June—July, and November—December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually Six Exhibitions in Music tenable at The Royal Academy of Music or The Royal College of Music for two or three years. These Exhibitions are limited to Candidates who fulfil certain conditions set forth in Syllabuses A and B.

Syllabuses A and B, Ensemble and Elocution Syllabuses, Forms of Entry, and any further information, may be obtained, post-free, from the Secretary—

JAMES MUIR.

TELEGRAMS:—"ASSOCIA, LONDON."
TELEPHONE:—MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE: 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.1.

London: Printed by Novello and Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, August 31st, 1929.
MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1040

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

OCTOBER 1, 1929

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828)

USED EXCLUSIVELY AT THE

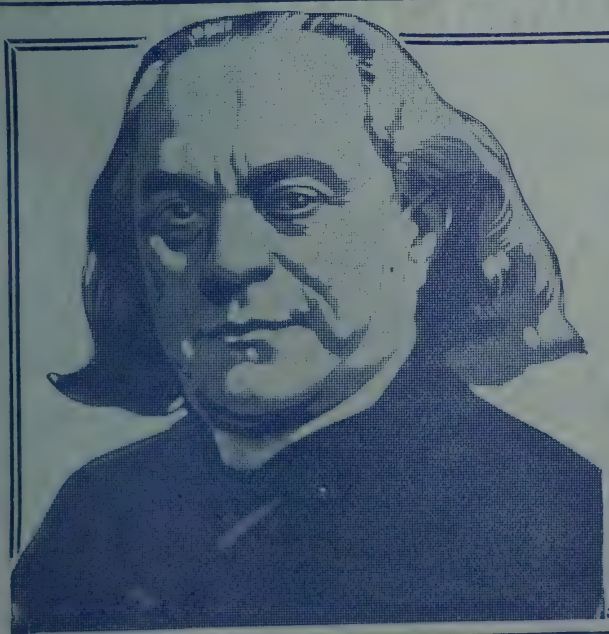
ROYAL OPERA COVENT GARDEN

GRANDS FROM £200

Sole Agents

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.,

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.



PACHMANN'S

Tribute to

ROGERS

PIANOS

"I HAVE been much delighted with the perfect responsiveness and charm of tone of the Rogers Pianos. They are without doubt the foremost British Pianos of the present day."

We should welcome the opportunity of showing you these fine instruments at our new Showrooms.

GEORGE ROGERS AND SONS

68 NEW BOND STREET LONDON. W.1.

Telephone: Ambassador 9180.

THE

"HUNDRED BEST"

FROM

CZERNY

SELECTED, GRADED AND EDITED BY

FREDERICK MOORE, F.R.A.M.
Royal Academy of Music.

MARMADUKE BARTON, F.R.C.M.
Royal College of Music.

WADDINGTON COOKE, F.G.S.M.
Guildhall School of Music.

IN

(Books 1, 2, and 3, 2/6 each) FIVE GRADED BOOKS (Books 4 and 5, 3/6 each)

FIRST THREE BOOKS OF THIS IMPORTANT SERIES NOW READY
THEMATIC LIST GIVING FULL PARTICULARS ON APPLICATION

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.,

LONDON : 36 Wigmore Street, W.1. — GLASGOW : 152 Buchanan Street — NEW YORK : 114 Fifth Avenue

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1040—Vol. 71
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage

OCTOBER 1 1929

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

Royal Choral Society

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

PATRON: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

FIFTY-NINTH SEASON—1929-30

Conductor-in-Chief - - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1929, at 8 p.m.

ELIJAH - - - Mendelssohn

MISS STILES-ALLEN MISS GLADYS RIPLEY
MR. BARRINGTON HOOPER MR. HORACE STEVENS

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1929, at 8 p.m.

WAGNER CONCERT

MADAME MIRIAM LICETTE
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND MR. PERCY HEMING

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS MEGAN FOSTER
MR. WALTER GLYNNE MR. JOHN GOSS

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1930, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - Handel

MISS DORA LABBETTE MISS OLGA HALEY
MR. WALTER WIDDOP MR. NORMAN ALLIN

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1930, at 2.30 p.m.

Scenes from FAUST - . - Gounod

And other Operas

MISS NOEL EADIE
MR. TUDOR DAVIES MR. TOPLISS GREEN

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1930, at 8 p.m.

MASS in B minor - - - Bach

MISS DOROTHY SILK MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL
MR. HUBERT EISDELL MR. KEITH FALKNER

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1930, at 8 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS Elgar

MISS MARGARET BALFOUR
MR. STEUART WILSON MR. HAROLD WILLIAMS

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 1930, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - Handel

MISS FLORA WOODMAN MISS ASTRA DESMOND
MR. BEN DAVIES MR. ROBERT EASTON

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT

Double Chorus of 850 voices
THE NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
At the Organ: MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR

Of the EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol Concert on December 14, will be comprised in the Subscription Series.
Prices of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £2 14s. 6d.; Arena, £1 19s.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 7s. 6d.
Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.
Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830
Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (four lines)

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)
President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM
BEGINS MONDAY, 4th NOVEMBER, 1929

THE STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA. Conducted by Sir HENRY J. WOOD, D. Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M. Tuesdays and Fridays, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE. Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' COURSE. For the Training of Conductors.

OPERA COURSE for the Training of Operatic Singers.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

SCHOLARSHIPS. Seventy-two Scholarships and Exhibitions for all subjects.

L.R.A.M. Last day of entry for the Christmas Examination 31st October.

Prospectuses, Entry Forms, and all further information from:
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE
Royal College of Organists

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. Examination are:

Fantasia "Valet will ich dir Geben," in B flat, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 2; Augener, p. 863; Peters, Vol. 7, No. 50.)

Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Alan Gray. (Stainer & Bell.)

Allegro con grazia (5-4 time) from Symphony No. 6, Pathétique, Tchaikovsky, arranged by Charles Macpherson. This arrangement only. Martin's arrangements, No. 56. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1930, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1929.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 5, for Associateship by December 12. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in by November 28. No names will be entered after the above dates.

For the convenience of members, past examination papers have been bound in one volume: Fellowship and Associateship Organ Work, January, 1913, to July, 1927; Paper Work, July, 1924, to July, 1927. Price 4s., to be obtained by members only.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the Revised TESTS set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily, 10 to 5; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7 H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

THE

Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

CHRISTMAS HALF-TERM

The Christmas Half-Term will commence on Monday, November 4th, 1929.

A copy of the Prospectus and all particulars may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
The College possesses a fully equipped College Opera Theatre for an audience of 600.

SCHOLARSHIPS, EXHIBITIONS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES
There are Vocal and Instrumental Ensemble Classes, and Pupils sufficiently advanced in this work are given the opportunity of putting their knowledge into practice at College Concerts.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year, in December, April, and September.
Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

Guildhall School of Music

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

PRINCIPAL - SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject; and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £12 12s. and £14 14s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations open to general public) free. Students can commence at any time.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc. LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1928-1929

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
PARADISE STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

THE SCOTTISH
NATIONAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SESSION 1929-1930

The Session consists of Three Terms: Monday, September 9; Monday, December 2; Monday, March 10.
Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.
Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of forty-three senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

THE TEACHING OF TEACHING.—SIX PSYCHOLOGY LECTURES by the PRINCIPAL. Alternate Wednesday evenings at 7. Open to Students and also to NON-STUDENTS.
Also Mr. FREDERICK MOORE alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

Manchester School of Music

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

PRESIDENT ... ... H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
PRINCIPAL ... ... R. J. FORBES
REGISTRAR ... ... JOHN HOLME

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Mr. WILKINSON URQUHART

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte: Performer, Teacher, and Accompaniment); A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching); F.R.C.O.; Certificate of Merit in Pianoforte, Harmony and Counterpoint, and Aural Training (Highest Award of the Royal Academy of Music); Registered Teacher; Professor of Pianoforte, Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School.

MR. URQUHART specialises in coaching for the Practical and Paper-work sections of the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas in the above-mentioned subjects. Lessons personally at his London Studio, or by correspondence.

New correspondence course now ready for the Paper on General Musicianship which must be worked in future by practically all L.R.A.M. candidates (Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, &c.).

Recent successes: L.R.A.M. (Practical), 13; (Paper-work), 22. A.R.C.M. (Practical), 8; (Paper-work), 10. Successes in L.R.A.M. accompaniment diploma: Practical 4 and Paper-work (by correspondence) 6.

July, 1929, pupil gained the Essex County Music Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal Academy of Music.

Address:

40 Cranbrook Rise (Cranbrook Park) Ilford, Essex

(Phone: VALENTINE 4065).

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

PRESIDENT FOR 1929: G. THALBEN-BALL, F.R.C.O.
Organist, Temple Church.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, are eligible. Register of vacant appointments. All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,
DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5

IS MEMORISING ESSENTIAL ?

Alfred Cortot
Tobias Matthay
Myra Hess
Harold Bauer
Irene Scharrer
Serge Koussevitzky
Vaclav Talich
Adrian Boult
Percy Scholes
Stewart Macpherson
Katharine Goodson
Harriet Cohen
Rae Robertson
Maurice Cole
Ivan Phillipowsky
Ivor Newton

recommend the

MACKINNON METHOD

It is not only essential—it is INEVITABLE.
Every time you practise you are memorising.
If you practise well, you are memorising good habits;
If you practise badly, you are memorising bad habits—that is the only difference.

All Practice is a work of Memory.

THE

Mackinnon Method

By teaching you how to practise in the right way, will render your memory both rapid and retentive.

Read what correspondents say :

An Organist writes :—"I find that memory-playing is now a matter of habit, and that new music can be memorised in quite a short time."—Oxford.

Another Organist writes :—"I no longer work in the dark, and my practice has become a very real thing to me, with a corresponding improvement in playing from memory."—Jersey.

A Teacher writes :—"You have not only taught me how to memorise, but how to practise in the right way."—Hampstead.

A Student writes :—"It is good to know that it is possible, and moreover much easier to memorise without the awful drudgery of endless repetition."—London.

An Amateur writes :—"Pieces memorised your way can never be forgotten."
—Richmond.

COMPLETE IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS FOR £3 : 3 : 0

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3
Without any obligation on my part please send me your free booklet on "MEMORY-TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

S.J.9 .....

STUDY THE PIANO AS AN ART

STUDY THE PIANO AS AN ART.

OLD CONVENTIONAL METHODS ENTIRELY SUPERSEDED.

THE TECHNIQUE OF THE GREAT PIANOFORTE MASTERS SET FORTH IN 12 POSTAL LESSONS (300 pages).

THE MOST EXHAUSTIVE, LUCID, AND THOROUGHLY PRACTICAL COURSE EVER WRITTEN.

TESTIMONY, sufficient to form a book, from all grades of musicians.

As this Teaching is of a serious nature, and NOT a "short cut" or "Royal Road," the merely curious are asked not to apply.

For full particulars apply, The Secretary,

The CHARLES A. GILLETT Pianoforte School,

11, South Molton Street, London, W.1

THE LONDON ORATORIO AND CONCERT ASSOCIATION

FOUNDED 1912.

THE ASSOCIATION exists for the purpose of bringing Secretaries of CHORAL SOCIETIES, OPERATIC AND MUSICAL SOCIETIES, Etc., into direct communication with capable and reliable Artists, without the intervention of an Agent, and is based on the co-operation of its members. Choral Societies engaging a quartet of soloists for any work, can have the advantage of preliminary rehearsal of the principals by the musical director.

Musical Director: Mr. Hubert Bath.

For Prospectus and List of Artists, address Secretary,

26, Guilford Street, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

The Committee will consider applications for auditions from well-trained singers, who are facile readers, and have an extensive Oratorio repertoire.

Sign. TOSTI'S VOCAL STUDIO

Sign. Tosti, the world-famous singer, with her experience of about 2,000 Concerts, prepares Concert-Opera Singers and Amateurs. Her pupils are engaged at the most important Theatres and Concerts. Tuition in her special perfect (Helmholz) method of Voice Production. Operas and Lieder in Italian, French, German, and English.

Write to Secretary:

Mr. WALTERS, 29, Belsize Crescent, Hampstead, N.W.3

PAPER WORK by Mus.B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include: 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928); 3 A.R.C.O.; 2 L.R.A.M.; 1 A.R.C.M. (Theory), in September, 1929.

2s. 6d. PER LESSON AND POSTAGE

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co. Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

Lyrics Set to Music, Melodies Harmonized, Music Transposed and Copied, Band Parts Written, MSS. Prepared for Publication by a Master Hand, Accompaniments of Distinction Written to Songs.

FOR TERMS WRITE, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS

Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

Bow and Bromley Musical Festival

(President: H.R.H. Princess Beatrice)

ST. STEPHEN'S HALL, BOW, E.3

NOVEMBER 23-27, 1929

(Latest Date for Entries, November 1, 1929)

COMPETITIONS for Organ, Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Viola, Elocution, and Dancing. (Special Lieder Class)

Syllabus from C. E. BELL, 10, Bonwell St., E.2

BROMLEY (KENT)

Musical Competition Festival

NOVEMBER 16 to 23, 1929

Adjudicators: H. Plunket Greene, Harold E. Darke, Ernest Fowles, W. H. Reed, &c.

Entries close October 5 (late entries, October 12)

Syllabus and all information from the Hon. Secretary:

H. SAUNDERS, 9, MINSTER ROAD, BROMLEY, KENT

North London Musical Festival

For North of the Thames and Open Competitions

ENTRIES DUE OCTOBER 21

Orchestras, Chief Choral and School Choirs, November 16.
Classes on other evenings for many Choirs, including Infants (twelve Judges).
Open Solo Classes for Solo Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Elocution. Country Dances. Over 100 local Classes. Public Halls at Kentish Town. November 15 to 23.

Syllabus free from JOHN GRAHAM, Hon. Sec., 74, PARK HALL ROAD, LONDON, N.2

SCARBOROUGH

COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

MAY 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 1930

GRAND HALL, THE SPA

Solo, Duet, Quartet, Choral, Orchestral, School Choir, Male, Female, and Mixed-Voice Choir Competitions.

Syllabus, now ready, may be had from:

Mr. F. CROMACK, Sec., Scarborough Townsmen's Association

Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough

THE TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION

The Monthly Meetings will be resumed on Saturday, October 26, 7 p.m., at the King's Weigh House Club, Thomas Street, London, W.1.

LECTURE: "The Story of School Music"

By Mr. T. Maskell Hardy. With vocal illustrations by the Lecturer, and the Girls of Battersea Park Road L.C.C. School.

Admission Free. Full particulars from the Secretary, Mr. T. H. Warner, L.T.S.C., 82, Ashgrove Road, Goodmayes, Essex.

NORTHERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COMPLETE COURSE IN COMPOSITION.

A most notable success was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,

WILLIAM BAINES,

who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT.

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS:

Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.

SPECIALIST TEACHING IN SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION, INTERPRETATION; Diagnosis of Faults and

COMPLETE ERADICATION OF FAULTS.

Personal Tuition in

LEEDS, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, ACCOMPANIMENTS WRITTEN TO SONGS, &c.

State Exam. or Subject.

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS.

"Finger Magic"

HOW THE MASTER MUSICIAN IS MADE.

"I have been reading a little booklet which I have termed 'Finger Magic,' and I would very much like to place this book in the hands of every pianist, violinist, and 'cellist in the Kingdom.

"We all know that the secret of the virtuosi does not consist in the amount of time they expend in instrumental practice—one recently stated that he often does not touch the instrument for a week, and another has affirmed that musicians are positively superstitious about practice. The secret of the success of the great masters must therefore be looked for in another direction than in the capacity for hard grinding practice on orthodox lines, and I have been experimenting with a system which may well prove to be a solution, or at any rate to a large extent.

"The system to which I refer develops the hands not by practice in the ordinary sense, but by a series of exercises, based on sound psychological as well as physiological laws; the almost immediate effect of which is to increase the stretching capacity of the hand, and the descriptive booklet, issued by the Cowling Institute, contains some astonishing letters from musicians which would convince me, even if not backed up by my own experience, that the quickest and easiest way to develop the strength and flexibility of the wrist and fingers so essential to pianists, violinists, and 'cellists is to perform the operation away from the instrument, when the mind can be centred upon that object alone.

"I anticipate that within a measurable period the knowledge contained in this little booklet, and in the lessons given by the Cowling Institute, will form part of the curriculum of every teacher and be a necessary equipment of every violinist, 'cellist, and pianist."—

ERNEST JAY, F.R.C.O.

NOTE.—The booklet referred to above may be obtained free of all cost on application to Secretary, T., Cowling Institute, 71, Albion House, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1. (State if a teacher.)

Do You Know ?

Do You Know how to concentrate when you practise?
Do You Know how to improve your Sight-reading to an unlimited extent?
Do You Know when and why you should correct the phrase-marks in music?
Do You Know how to express through music your feeling and your personality?
Do You Know how to increase the stretch of your hands without straining them?
Do You Know how to gain fluent technique with mental and muscular ease?
Do You Know how, when, and when not to use the damper pedal?
Do You Know how to simplify your methods of Fingering?
Do You Know how to make Scale - Practice interesting and musical?

MUSICAL SECRETS

NINE PAPERS by LILIAS MACKINNON

As a Teacher, Miss Mackinnon is well known, not only for her originality of thought, but for her simplicity of expression. These Papers are the outcome of her personal experience as Performer and Teacher, and they contain practical suggestions of the greatest value, and ones that have never before been available to the public.

The NINE PAPERS are these:

1. The Secret of Concentration
2. The Secret of Sight-reading
3. The Secret of Phrasing
4. The Secret of Interpretation
5. The Secret of Hand-Extension
6. The Secret of Technique
7. The Secret of Pedalling
8. The Secret of Fingering
9. The Secret of Scale-Practice

Nos. 1-5 for all Instrumentalists.
6-9 for Pianists.

The price of each Paper is 2s. 6d., plus 2d. for postage (two or more post free); but the Set of NINE, if taken together, may be had at the inclusive fee of £1 : 1s.

A Teacher in Boston, U.S.A., writes:
"The 'Secrets' are all so good*—it is impossible to choose which one likes best."*—7/7/29.

Fill in Coupon for these unique Pamphlets.
Descriptive list sent (if desired) on receipt of 1d. stamp.

COUPON
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3

Please send me Papers Nos.....

I enclose.....

Name.....

Address.....

S.J.9. .....

Organ Recitals

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, HART ST., BLOOMSBURY (MUSEUM TUBE)

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17th
AT 8 P.M.

Mr. G. D. CUNNINGHAM
Birmingham Corporation Organist

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31st,
AT 8 P.M.

Dr. ERNEST BULLOCK
Organist, Westminster Abbey

St. Michael's Church
CHESTER SQUARE, S.W.1
(Near Buckingham Palace Road and Eaton Square)

A SHORT SERIES OF

Organ Recitals

Will be given in the above Church by

REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.

Commencing

On Saturday, October 26

at 5.30 p.m.

This fine 4-Manual Organ, with an Echo Organ in the Memorial Chapel, recently restored by Messrs. Willis & Sons, is well worth hearing.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL, CORNHILL, E.C.
SIX BACH RECITALS
WILL BE GIVEN BY
DR. HAROLD DARKE
ON THURSDAYS, AT 6 P.M., OCT. 3rd to Nov. 7th.
Complete Programme, price 6d., can be obtained at the Church, or by sending a stamped addressed envelope to Dr. HAROLD DARKE, ST. MICHAEL'S VESTRY, CORNHILL, E.C. 3.

ST. ALBAN THE MARTYR
BROOK STREET, HOLBORN

TWO ORGAN RECITALS

THURSDAY, October 24, at 8 p.m.
MR. G. THALBEN-BALL

WEDNESDAY, November 20, at 8 p.m.
DR. HENRY G. LEY

Collection towards Fund to provide new Console.

ST. JAMES'S, MUSWELL HILL, N.—Organ Recital by Mr. H. A. Bate, every Saturday, at 5.45 p.m., commencing October 12. Choral and Organ Recital, October 2, 8 p.m. Organist, Dr. Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (2,018th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on October 1, and every Tuesday at 1 o'clock.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING
New Address: GROTRIAN HALL STUDIOS, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

PRESIDENT ... ... A. NETTLEFOLD
PRINCIPAL ... ... DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal Subjects. A thorough musical education if desired.
Special Voice-curing Courses for all voice defects, caused by overstrain and incorrect production.
Practice with Accompaniste can be obtained at the School at a moderate fee.
Particulars from Secretary, Miss M. HEATH. Welbeck 6846

£250 SINGING, PIANO, and ELOCUTION Free Scholarships, Cups, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition, October 26th, November 2nd and 9th. Adjudicators: Mr. Frank Gilbert, Mr. Joseph Hannah, Miss Phyllis Windsor, and Miss Florence Ager. Results at Lecture-Recital, "Expression in Singing," by Mr. Clifton Cooke, King George's Hall, Tuesday evening, November 19th, at 7.30. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

THE REV. J. E. ROSCOE
Is open to give his Lecture on the Vedic Hymns

Miss ROSCOE, A.R.M.C.M., will sing Holst's settings of these Hymns.

CHRIST CHURCH VICARAGE, BACUP

Can you "IMPROVISE" at the Piano?
Improvisation, or the delightful art of playing and accompanying "by ear" and without the aid of any written music, can be learnt by anyone of average intelligence.
My booklet, "THE PIANO AND ITS POSSIBILITIES," which will be sent free on receipt of a post-card, demonstrates how YOU can learn to improvise, improve your technique, play at sight, and memorise music, without difficulty.
MR. H. CRAWFORD, KINGSLEY GREEN, HASLEMERE

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD. 2s. 6d. post free; Abroad, 3s. Pre-eminent Technique. It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor." M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

FORSYTH EDITIONS

SCENES at a FARM

(FIRST PIANO LESSONS. Book I.)

WALTER CARROLL

A Series of Easy Pieces and Duets for Beginners.

Each piece is headed by an appropriate verse, written by H. LANG JONES, which the pupil may sing while playing the piece. This book, now familiarly known as The Farm Tunes, is delightfully simple, and makes a direct appeal to the child's interest.

Mrs. Curwen writes: "The little Farm Tunes are delightful."

Price Three Shillings

TUNES FROM NATURE

(FIRST PIANO LESSONS. Book Ia.)

WALTER CARROLL

A Series of Easy Pieces and Duets for Beginners.

Verses, set to the Music, by H. LANG JONES. The pieces in this book correspond in number, length, and style to those in Scenes at a Farm. The keys used are those which have not more than one sharp or flat, and the signatures, both for key and time, are inserted. The degree of difficulty is SLIGHTLY in advance of Book I.; but the difference is so small that it could be practically disregarded.

Teachers will find the work useful, not only for children, but equally for pupils of any age who need a beginner's book.

Price Three Shillings

The COUNTRYSIDE

(FIRST PIANO LESSONS. Book II.)

WALTER CARROLL

A third set of pieces, equally interesting and slightly harder than Scenes at a Farm and Tunes from Nature. This book may, with great advantage, follow either or both of the foregoing, but is also suitable for independent use. Though written for the young, it is quite adapted to the needs of older pupils who may require very simple music.

Price Three Shillings

FOREST FANTASIES

WALTER CARROLL

A set of nine pieces, rather more advanced than The Countryside. Though less difficult than Sea Idylls, they are written in the same picturesque style. They make a strong appeal to the imagination and are specially valuable in the development of phrasing and pedalling.

Price Three Shillings

First Lessons in Bach

Book I.

EDITED BY

WALTER CARROLL

These charming pieces, in progressive order, have been selected and published with the object of awakening an interest in the music of Bach at a time when the pupil is still in the early stages of instruction. They are not simplified, and (except for the fingering and phrasing) are as Bach wrote them.

Price Three Shillings

To TEACHERS

If you have difficulty or experience undue delay in obtaining Forsyth Editions from your music-seller, please write us. Thematic List of works by :—

DR. CARROLL
JAMES CHING
PERCY WHITEHEAD
LESLIE FLY
THOMAS F. DUNHILL
CYRIL SCOTT
BALFOUR GARDINER
&c.

Post free on application.

First Lessons in Bach

Book II.

EDITED BY

WALTER CARROLL

This collection, rather more difficult than Book I., but still fairly easy, is also arranged progressively. The widespread approval accorded to these works by music teachers generally is sufficient evidence of their great value and charm.

Price Three Shillings

FORSYTH BROS. Ltd., 34 BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1
and 126-128 Deansgate, Manchester

Blüthner Studios

23, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1

Studios supplied with new Blüthner Pianos have now been opened at the above address. A large room suitable for Lectures, &c., and several smaller rooms are available to teachers of music. For particulars, apply to :

BLÜTHNER & CO., Ltd., 17-23, Wigmore Street, London, W.1

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

Used and highly recommended by—

COVIELLO, ELLINGFORD, FRYER, LAMOND, MEALE, POUISHNOFF, REDDIE, SPENCER-DYKE, WALENN, and many other well-known Professors and Teachers.

Send for full list of testimonials and particulars post free.

"Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers. Recommended by the Editor of the Musical Times.

IMPROVED MODEL

Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

E. C. M., 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE

The "FLEXA" System of Finger and Hand Development

For Violinists, 'Cellists, Pianists, and other Instrumentalists.

A new and concise course in 12 exercises, complete. Greatly recommended by the profession.

A sure means of obtaining that suppleness and ease of execution so necessary to a perfect technique.

Twenty minutes devoted every day to the exercises contained in this course will be amply rewarded by quickly gained facility which otherwise would be obtained only after years of strenuous practice.

Full particulars obtainable from:

The Secretary, "Flexa" System

CRANE'S STUDIOS, OLD SQUARE, BIRMINGHAM

Issued by Authority of the Associated Board.

A Book of Aural Tests

Giving numerous examples of the tests for all Divisions of the "School" Examinations and for all Grades of the Local Centre Examinations.

By BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ

In Two Parts :

Part I. "School" Examinations 1/6
Part II. Local Centre Examinations ... 1/6

Aural Tests for Diploma Examinations

L.R.A.M. (Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music).
A.R.C.M. (Associate of the Royal College of Music).
L.A.B. (Licentiate of the Associated Board).
(Overseas)

By BASIL C. ALLCHIN and ERNEST READ

Price 1/6

Vocal Studies for School Class Singing

By FREDERICK KEEL

From Primary to Advanced Standard ... Price 6*d.*

Copies may be obtained through any Musicseller or direct from the Publishing Manager :

MUSIC PUBLISHING DEPT., The Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M.,

14-15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1

Modern Corr. College

Principal - - ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

MATRICULATION Successes 166

Are You Afraid of Matric?

We guarantee to secure you a PASS in from 6 to 9 months.

Notice to Prospective Students

We should require 10 to 12 PAGES of the Musical Times to publish all the letters of appreciation we have received from successful students. This month we publish A FEW of those received from A.R.C.O. Students. In succeeding months we hope to deal with F.R.C.O., A.Mus.T.C.L., —— L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching), &c. ——

- A.R.C.O. -

A.R.C.O. 5th Attempt

"Previous to my joining the M.C.C. I had made 4 attempts. Please accept my grateful thanks."

A.R.C.O. 1st Attempt

"Your Lessons were extremely valuable . . . the MODEL WORKINGS of Counterpoint and Melodies, showing clearly the STYLE required."

A.R.C.O. Failed twice under other tuition

"I had previously failed TWICE under other tuition, but thanks to your EXCELLENT METHOD, I was successful."

A.R.C.O. No other Theoretical Teaching

"I have been prepared entirely by you FROM FIRST PRINCIPLES—in fact, I never had any other THEORETICAL TEACHING."

A.R.C.O. Last Lessons 18 years since

"My success is entirely due to the EXCELLENT coaching I have received from you. My last lessons in Harmony and Counterpoint were received over 18 years since."

A.R.C.O. Mastered the Right Style

"I felt that I had mastered the right style, and my success in the PAPER WORK is due to your EXCELLENT TUITION."

ALL OUR SUCCESSES ARE BY CORRESPONDENCE

Modern Corr. College Cropwell Bishop, NOTTS.

WALKER ORGANS

Some Contracts in hand:

Humberstone Parish Church, Leicester (New Organ)
St. Michael's Church, Northampton (New Organ)
Ealing Green Congregational Church (rebuild)
Private Chapel, Windsor Great Park (Additions)
St. George's Chapel, Windsor (in conjunction with Messrs. Rothwell) (New Screen Organ)
Ninth Church of Christ, Scientist, London (New Organ)
Royal College of Music, London (Additions to Concert Hall Organ)
St. Ambrose Church, Edgbaston (Additions)
St. Stephen's Parish Church, Redditch, Worcs. (rebuild)
Fenham Memorial Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne (New Organ)
St. Luke's Church, Wimbledon (New Organ)
R.C. Cathedral, Georgetown, Demerara (New Organ)

J. W. WALKER & SONS, Ltd.,

FRANCIS WORKS, SOUTHFIELD ROAD, LONDON, W.4

Now Ready.—Leaflet P (Stop-Key Control). Post free.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS
ALSO SHORT COURSE OF PERSONAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

ALSO SINGING LESSONS

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
41, Avondale Road, S. Croydon. 'Phone: Croydon 2703
And Weekes's Studios, 14, Hanover St., W.1

A WORD TO COMPOSERS

If you are tired of being asked to pay for publication, send a card to a qualified publishers' reviser, who has assisted many composers to place their works with reputable firms, including Boosey, Chappell, Ashdown, Elkin, &c., and whose services are at the disposal of a limited number of composers. Over 70 per cent. successes. Full particulars:

DENIS WRIGHT, Mus. B., 5, Walpole Gardens, London, W. 4

PIANO REPAIRS

"WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost)
PERFECT SATISFACTION

Wigmore Hall and Piano Galleries, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1

"BY CORRESPONDENCE"

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. (LONDON), L.R.A.M.

Full preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. B., Mus. D., and Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH'S COURSES:

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
   For December, 1929, and April, 1930
2. T.C.L. and R.C.O. Diplomas
   For January and April, 1930
3. Mus. B. and Mus. D.
   London and Durham
4. Separate Subjects:
   Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Art of Teaching, Touch and Technique, &c.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES:

These Correspondence Lessons are so devised as to give a complete grip of everything necessary for success in the shortest possible time. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for Degrees and Diplomas in Music.

CONSULTATION LESSONS also in BRISTOL and LONDON

Address: DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, 46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

The OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

MUSIC DEPARTMENT

remind you that owing to expanding business they have moved to more extensive premises in the West End. Their two addresses are now:

*Aeolian Hall, New Bond Street, W.*1

Here is a completely equipped music-salon, in a position convenient to all musicians and teachers.

96, *Wimpole Street, W.*1

A branch depot has been retained next to their old quarters for the convenience of professors and students at the Matthay School, the Royal Academy of Music, Trinity College, and many West-End studios.

At both these addresses there is held a full and representative stock of all publishers' catalogues, as well as Oxford Music, under the supervision of an expert musical staff.

Professional Notices

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO
Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.
28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869

EDWARD REACH

TENOR
GENTLEMAN OF H.M. CHAPELS ROYAL
Tel: Streatham 9287. 12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17

ANDREW REAN

TENOR
SPECIALIST IN VOICE PRODUCTION (Italian method), accepts Pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Highest Recommendations.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS
Address:
WEEKES' STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER STREET, LONDON, W.1.
Private 'Phone: CLISSOLD 2509

LANGDALE BROWN

BASS-BARITONE
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.
29, Sedgeford Road, W.12

FRANK POULTON

BASS-BARITONE. L.R.A.M. (SINGING-PERFORMER)
Available for Oratorio, Concerts, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow, Mdx. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536

VOICE TRAINING — FIELD-HYDE METHOD

MISS ELSIE DUNIAM-JONES

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., M.R.S.T.
Specialist Coach for diplomas and concert platform. Short courses or single lessons on Interpretation of English, French, and Italian Songs. Vacancy for accompanist pupil.
EDUCATIONAL LECTURE SONG-RECITALS TO SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, MUSICAL CLUBS.
Specimen Titles: Songs, their making and their hidden beauties. Shakespeare Songs—old and new settings.
From a Headmistress: "A very delightful and truly educational evening."
British Music Bulletin: "Miss Duniam-Jones sang with delightful finish and sympathy, and proved herself an entrancing lecturer."
Studio: 17, Cavendish Square, W.1.; and at Barnet, Herts.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma)
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing; coaches for singing examinations; leads and trains choral classes and choirs; also gives lessons on the guitar. Moderate charges for all subjects.
26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627

J. M. MORRIS, MUS. BAC.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), F.T.S.C.
SPECIALISES IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
Harmony and Counterpoint. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper Work. All Tonic Sol-fa Diplomas. Vocal Physiology and the Art of Teaching Singing for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas.
Address: 93, ST. MARY STREET, CARDIFF

MISS PITT SOPER, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.
Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).
For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

ELOCUTION AND SINGING

MR. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M.
(Double Diploma Elocution and Singing), A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.
Correspondence Courses: (a) ELOCUTION; (b) VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING; (c) ASSOCIATED BOARD ELOCUTION EXAMS.
Studios: 5, Park Row, Nottingham; and 14, Hanover Street, W.1

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON
Lecturer and Adjudicator
Receives pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Prepares candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas as Teacher or Performer. Also gives
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS
to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1 'Phone: Langham 3909

EDGAR CARR, A.R.A.M.

Professor of Pianoforte Playing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Coaches for all examinations and public performances. Consultation lessons given to teachers, and unsuccessful candidates advised.
WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, W.1.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. BAC.

Postal Tuition in Rudiments, Elementary Harmony, and Counterpoint (10*s.* 6*d.* for 10 lessons).
Also Advanced Courses, and Courses for Degrees and Diplomas.
Recent Successes include: 6 L.R.A.M., 3 L.T.C.L., 1 A.T.C.L., 3 Hons. Cert. T.C.L., 1 A. Mus., 1 L. Mus. T.C.L., 32 Local Exams., mostly at First Attempt.
ADDRESS: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY

W. R. HUNN

MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Joint Author of Form and Teaching Test-Papers)
Specialises in Coaching for Mus.Bac., R.C.O., R.C.M., and R.A.M. Exams. Latest successes: "Mus.Bac." Exercise, Dunelm., 1929.
105, REGENT ROAD, GREAT YARMOUTH

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC., LOND., L.R.A.M.
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES. See page 875.

WILLIAM SANDS

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC, REDDITCH PARISH CHURCH
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST
For vacant dates, terms, &c., apply to:
99, Plymouth Road, Redditch, Worcs,
or 42, Valley Road, Shortlands, Kent.

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.
is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.
For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, Bryanston Square, W.1.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, MUS.BAC., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 14, St. Stephen's Avenue, Blackpool, N.S.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, MUS. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory) at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L.Mus. T.C.L., (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for R.C.O., R.C.M., R.A.M., &c., Diplomas. Study Aids, 9*d.* Studies in Modulation, 3*s.*
Send for interesting pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY

DR. W. A. BARLOW, F.R.C.O., gives Personal or Postal tuition for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. 1,514, Ashton Old Road, Hr. Openshaw, Manchester.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams. as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

LILIAN COOMBES, F.R.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster, Brixton Independent Church, S.W.9). Tuition in Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint. Preparation for Exams. Large 4-manual organ. "Hughenden," Bush Hill Road, N.21. Telephone: Enfield 0760.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams., 1910-29 ... 348 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams., 1914-29 ... 104 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional Correspondence Courses:

(1.) The "Mus.Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work. (38 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony and Counterpoint. (23 Successes.)

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, Kingsway Hall), 57, Tooting Bec Gardens, Streatham, London, S.W.16.
Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.
SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.
RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 A.R.C.M., 1920	1 L.R.A.M., 1919
1 L.R.A.M., 1924	4 A.R.C.O., 1921
1 A.R.C.M., 1928	3 A.R.C.O., 1922
2 F.R.C.O., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., 1923
6 F.R.C.O., 1923	4 A.R.C.O., 1924
5 F.R.C.O., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., 1925
5 F.R.C.O., 1926	7 A.R.C.O., 1926
5 F.R.C.O., 1927	8 A.R.C.O., 1927
5 F.R.C.O., 1928	9 A.R.C.O., 1928
4 F.R.C.O., 1929	8 A.R.C.O., 1929

During the past few years pupils of Mr. Allan Brown have gained "Lafontaine" (F.R.C.O.), "Turpin," and "Sawyer" Prizes.
"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates," to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

R. F. CUTBUSH, A.R.C.O. Accompanist and Recitalist. Organ or pianoforte. Free Sundays or week-days. The Elms, Station Road, Harpenden.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 1, Newington, Liverpool.

ARTHUR GREGORY, L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), educated R.A.M. Teaches Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form. Examination candidates prepared. Write, 3, Gladys Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

VOICE-CULTURE.—Bladon Hackett, Professor. Placing, Breathing, Voice Mechanics. Huskiness and strain banished. Dr. Wm. A. Hall, Mus. Doc., Oxon., writes: "A mass of overwhelming testimony to his extraordinary gifts." Teachers communicate confidentially, 14, Hanover Street, W.1. (Purley 3460.)

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 414 Successes in Mus.D., Mus.B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., and the paper-work requirements for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas in pianoforte playing. For terms, &c., apply to 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus., Oxon., L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. Compositions revised. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.
3, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

FLORENCE HOLLOWAY, A.T.C.L., ORGANIST (recommended by Mr. Herbert Hodge), is free to deputise on Sundays or week-days. 65, Marylands Road, Maida Hill, W.9.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, 1928, Mus. Doc., 3 Final Mus. Bac. and 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent Successes: 4 Mus. Doc. and 4 Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. Over 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto: F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

THE REVISION OF MSS. IS UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in piano, singing, theory. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Road, Canonbury, N.1.

Complete preparation for Teachers of Singing and the Pianoforte by CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A, Performer and Teacher Pianoforte).
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on "Musical Appreciation" to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1*s.* 6*d.* "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6*d.*
All papers up-to-date.
Over 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone Maida Vale 1715.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., M.R.S.T. One Guinea Ten Lessons. Har., C'p't, Fugue, History, Choir-Training, General Musicianship, &c. F.R.C.O. Analysis, January, 1930, 3*s.* Recent successes: A. Mus. T.C.L., L.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., 1928; F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., 1927, 1928, 1929; also T.C.L. and G.S.M., Pass and Hons. Certifs. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

MR. E. L. M. PRITCHARD, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., A.R.C.M. (Organ Playing), gives correspondence tuition in all theoretical subjects, including Plainchant Accompaniment. Also available for Organ Recitals and Pianoforte Accompanying. Address, Tan Llann, Bath Street, Rhyl, North Wales.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—FINISHING LESSONS given on replica of R.C.O. organ at National Institute for the Blind, London. Apply, Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., 17, Lanercost Road, London, S.W.2. Candidates should apply early.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—F.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 3/6; 15 Score-reading Tests, 2/6; 24 Basses, or 24 Melodies fully Harmonised, 2/- each set; 12 Complete Test Papers, 3/6; 16 Themes for Extemporisation, fully worked out, 5/-; 24 Sight-Reading Tests, 4/6; Analysis of Set Score, 3/6; F. or A. hints, 3/6. A.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 2/6; 27 Vocal Score-reading Tests, 3/6; 24 Hymn Tunes for Transposition, Books, 1, 2, 3, 2/6 each; 24 Accompaniment Tests, Books 1, 2, 5/- each. In MS. Successful Paper Work Coaching. July, 1929, Paper Work Successes, 8. FRCO/L, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MATRIC., MUS. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. examinations. Individual postal preparative courses at specially moderate fees. Write for particulars, Geo. H. Skaer, B. Mus., 44*a*, South Street, Worthing, Sussex.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Assoc. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Assoc. Board; C.C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. Bac. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and Systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Major Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., 80, Warwick Gardens, London, W.14.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O., Recitalist and Examination Coach. Teacher of Piano, Organ, and Harmony. Studio, 7, Durand Gardens, London, S.W.9.

CONDUCTOR available, Orchestral, Choral, Operatic. Also Conducting Classes held. Successes include L.R.A.M. (T.C.). Box No. 17, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS-BARITONE VOCALIST, wishing to extend connection, would accept oratorio or other engagements from high-class Choral Societies, in return for expenses only. Highest references for ability and musicianship. Apply, Box 31, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOFORTE.—Lady has few vacancies for beginners. Would be coached for Scholarship, either at Studio or would visit. £1 1*s.* quarter. G. Cornell, 53, Vernon Road, Seven Kings.

VIOLIN TUITION by experienced Teacher. London and Suburbs. From October. Box 1, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2.) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3.) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. Bac. successes at Durham, Dublin, and London.
R.C.O. EXAMINER SAYS: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite ability for the examination in view.
347 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
205 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1928	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1928
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1929	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1929
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1929	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1929

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

GIRLS' BOARDING SCHOOL, Castello Bianco, Lugano - Castagnola (Switzerland). Seeks English teacher with good accent, who is also teacher with diploma for pianoforte.

LADY PIANIST desires permanency, accompanying Chamber music, Lieder, Operatic work, &c. Would tour. First-class sight reader. Apply, Box 9, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY (fully-trained G.S.M.) DESIRES ACCOMPANYING WORK to a singer or violinist; can also sing—Mezzo-soprano. Free evenings. Box 4, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

STUDENTS preparing for A. and F.R.C.O. Exams. should send stamped addressed envelope for particulars of free lesson and criticism of work. Seymour Perrott, F.R.C.O., Borough Organist, Neath.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS (Postal). Profitable profession or side-line taught quickly by Certified Tuner, M.T.A. Instructor to Ministry of Labour. G. W. Bakes, "Hartman House," 15, Jesmond Avenue, Bradford.

ST. ALBAN-THE-MARTYR.—Brook Street, Holborn. SOLO BOY required. Salary, £25—£30. Apply, letter, Choirmaster.

TWO LEADING BOYS REQUIRED for Christ Church, Streatham Hill. Payment according to ability. Apply, by letter, to Howard Poole, 240, Parchmore Road, Thornton Heath.

ALTO, TENOR, and BASS VOCALISTS available for deputy work, &c. Solos or Trios, C. of E. Apply, Box 5, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CONTRALTO, (Diplomée, Gold Medalist, &c.), excellent vocalist, will accept engagements for expenses fee. London district. Box 7, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

S. MARY MAGDALENE, MUNSTER SQUARE
Tenor Wanted, preferably young. Plainsong and modern music. £25 p.a. Anglo-Catholic Church. Applicants must be confirmed communicants. Write, E. F. Mather, Marylebone Studio, 72, High Street, Marylebone.

TENOR WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—St. Luke's, Finchley, N.3. £20. Applications to Rev. G. K. Hackett, Vicar.

ST. MATTHEW'S, CROYDON
Solo Tenor required. £20. Light duties. Good reader essential. Apply, Organist, 22, Wellesley Road.

TENOR REQUIRED for Putney Presbyterian Church. Friday rehearsal, Sunday Services 11 and 6.30. Four weeks' holiday. £20 p.a. Letters to Mr. N. A. Sayers, 4, Grosvenor Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

BASS WANTED.—St. James's, West Hampstead. Communicant and good reader. £18. Write, Organist, 62, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

THE SAVOY AGENCY
SOLO and CHORUS MEN SUPPLIED for Church Services, Weddings, &c., Choral Society Concerts; only experienced men registered, and can be engaged at shortest notice. Apply, G. Hugh Weedon, 102, Park Avenue, South Hornsey, N.8. 'Phone, HOLBORN 6966. Please note new address.

AN IMPORTANT FREE CHURCH in N.W. London requires the services of a Choir Trainer one evening in each week. Write Box V.891, Willings, 86, Strand, W.C.2.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST REQUIRED for Christ Church, Wanstead, E.11. Duties: Sunday, sung Eucharist (Congregational), 10; Children's service, 3.30; Fridays, full practice, 8. Honorarium about £10 p.a. Write, Sydney Harrington, F.R.C.O., 16, Woodcote Road, E.11.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Recitalist, can deputise October. Box 10, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., seeks appointment. 21 years' experience. Recitalist (pupil of Joseph Bonnet), Voice-Trainer (A.R.C.M. Teacher of Singing). Box 11, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST (gentleman) will give services as assistant, to Nonconformist Church with good organ, in exchange for practice. Central or West London. Write Box 2, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for St. Nicholas Church, Whitehaven. Noted Harrison organ. Prospects for school appointments for man with qualifications. Salary, £70. Apply, with copies of recent testimonials, to the Vicar.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for Coventry Road Wesleyan Church. Apply, by letter, stating experience, qualifications, and salary, to F. W. King, 73, Dora Road, Small Heath, Birmingham.

PUPIL-ASSISTANT required by Organist of well-known Church near Liverpool Street Station. Free tuition to keen student able to sing in choir. Good music, and modern organ. Write, "G," Box 6, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ALL HALLOWS', BROMLEY-BY-BOW, E.3.—Organist and Choirmaster required. Communicant. Salary according to qualifications and experience. Apply, Rector.

WINCANTON CHURCH, SOMERSET.—Organist and Choirmaster required. Good choir-trainer essential. Salary commences at £75. Apply to the Rector.

ORGAN CLASS (Saturdays, 3 p.m.)
High-Class Individual Tuition. Friendly Interest. Any Grade. Full particulars from W.B.M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.
ORGAN LESSONS AT ST. STEPHEN'S, WALBROOK, E.C.4.
GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

BARGAINS. — Apollo Organ, two manuals and pedals. Also Upright Concert Grand Piano, nearly new; noted maker. Write A. B., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ORGAN-PEDAL ATTACHMENT for Piano. New. Complete with stool, £7. R., 165, Waterloo Road, Uxbridge.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS. — One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 45, Grays Inn Road, London, W.C.1.

ORGAN PEDAL ATTACHMENT for Piano. Complete with stool, "Rummen's Patent." £9, carriage paid. Mountain, 56, Essex Street, Halifax.

ORGAN PEDALS for Piano, by Norman & Beard. Pneumatic action, concave. Complete with stool, £8. 8, Blyth Road, Worksop.

FOR SALE.—THREE-MANUAL ORGAN, 27 Stops. Pneumatic action to Pedals. Approximate measurements, 10 ft. 9 in. x 10 ft. 2 in. x 8 ft. 6 in. Exceptionally fine tone. Price £350. Specification on application. Write, Miss Gritton, Talfourd Cottage, Reigate.

WANTED.—Mustel Organ in good condition; must be cheap. Write, giving full particulars and price, to Box 3294, c/o Pool's Advertising Service, 180, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—Photo, new Console, 5*s.* Scores of others. Benham, 6, King Edward Road, New Barnet.

FOR SALE.—Broadwood Grand, 7-ft. 6-in., walnut case, good condition. Seen by appointment. 40 guineas, or near offer. 43, Wood Vale, N.10. Tel., Tudor 2696.

HARP.—Good condition. Erard. Offered at low terms. Box 3, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VIRGIL CLAVIER FOR SALE.—Perfect condition. £5 10*s.*, or offer. Also reading desk. W. L., 90, Fairlands Avenue, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

FOR SALE (cheap).—Full Orchestral Scores (not miniatures): Beethoven, Symphonies 1, 2, 3, 6, and 9; Schubert's C major Symphony; Schumann, 1st Symphony (B flat); Mendelssohn, "Hymn of Praise," "Walpurgisnacht." What offers for all or any? Courtenay, Eskdale, Sillock, Carlisle.

OLD COPIES OF SONGS, OPERAS, including the "Beggar's Opera," original edition, and other music for Sale. Bound volumes.—E. C., 48, Sheen Road, Richmond.

"GROVE'S DICTIONARY Music and Musicians," 1928 EDITION. Recently purchased; £7 10s.; accept £6. Particulars, Box 8, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Purcell's Sacred Music, 4 volumes, Folio, fig. bass, £2. Burney's History, 4 volumes, £3. Burney's State of Music, 3 volumes, £2. W., 21, Thurlestone Road, S.E.27.

TO BACH LOVERS.—Complete Organ Works of J. S. BACH. Peters edition. 9 volumes bound in 4. Half-calf. Scarcely soiled. No reasonable offer refused. Abernethy, Wishford, Salisbury.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., January, 1930. Important. A New Series (No. 3) of Six Model Essays on "The English Language," with "Hints" on writing the essay. Also Series Nos. 1 and 2, on same book. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* per each Series to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

COMPOSERS' MSS. Revised and Prepared for Publication. Music Composed to Lyrics. For terms, send MSS. to the Carlton Music Agency, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

AUTHORS AND COMPOSERS.—SONGS, Lyrics, Piano Solos and Suites wanted for Publication. Send MSS. to The Carlton Publications, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

No. 1.—SET TO MUSIC BY HENRY T. TILTMAN.

Price Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

PIANO PEDALS WITH OCTAVE COUPLER

THIS WONDERFUL INVENTION SUPERSEDES ALL PIANO PEDALS, AND IS A MASTER PATENT

St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 9*th April*, 1921

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 gns. cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.

London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19 NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

Please mention this Paper when writing.

PIANOS

BY

Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer, Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

and other celebrated makers

The Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW

LONDON, W.C.1.

'Phone: MUSEUM 0439.

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1929 LATEST MODELS

BABY GRAND ...	100 Gns.
UPRIGHT GRAND	60 Gns.
UPRIGHT PLAYER	100 Gns.

FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Reconditioned Pianos, Grands and Uprights, at greatly reduced prices for cash or hire purchase terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS

THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,

1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1

'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

JUST PUBLISHED

THE FAIRY QUEEN

AN OPERA

Composed by HENRY PURCELL Edited by J. S. SHEDLOCK

THE CHORUSES ONLY

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY. Limited

Trinity College of Music

(Instituted 1872)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., P.C., G.C.V.O.

Principal:
E. STANLEY ROPER, M.A., Mus.B.

Controller of Examinations:
EDWARD D'EVRY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

Wednesday, October 9th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concert.

Wednesday, October 16th, at 3 p.m. Lecture by Mr. Hubert Foss, on The Music of Frederick Delius, C.H.

Wednesday, October 23rd, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Archy Rosenthal.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Orchestral, Choral, the Operatic, and Chamber Music Classes are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED

SPRINGTIME in the FOREST

SIX PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE:

THE PIPES OF SPRING
QUEEN MAB SUMMONS HER COURT
SONG OF THE RIVULET
MOONLIGHT DANCE OF THE GNOMES
A FAIRY LULLABY
DREAM OF THE WATER-LILY

By
HAROLD GREENHILL

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

	PRICE
BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK (Repeatedly featured at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society)
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule	3d.
Christmas Day	3d.
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
The Star of the East. A Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS. A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s.
ADAMS, THOMAS Six Christmas Carols. Price, in one volume	9d.
separately, each	3d.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

DERING, RICHARD Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts)	4d.
GOSS, JOHN Behold, I bring you good tidings	3d.
HANDL, JACOB Behold, thou shalt conceive	4d.
HOPKINS, E. J. Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	3d.
LASSO, ORLANDO DI Let Zion resound with praise	4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts)	4d.

Specimen copies sent free.

Bosworth's Famous Manuscript Paper

Most beautiful writing surface. All rulings. Upright or oblong. SENT FREE—Specimens and Price List.

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd. 8, Heddon Street, Regent Street,
Music Publishers —— LONDON, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED

No. 33.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET IN G

By BEETHOVEN

Arranged by JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

No. 34.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET

from "Berenice"

By HANDEL

Arranged by JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY. Limited

The Musical Times
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR
OCTOBER 1, 1929
(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 944)

THE ARTS IN REVOLT

By RUTLAND BOUGHTON

From time to time I have referred in this journal to the dissatisfaction that is generally felt in all the arts of to-day, and to the confusion that is evident in all that pertains to æsthetic criticism. Many professional artists of real capacity feel that the methods pursued by the great masters are no longer valid; and so experiment in various directions, apparently in the hope of lighting upon methods more applicable to modern life. Music-lovers, including a few wise critics, remembering how often the judgment of their predecessors has been at fault when artistic development took an unexpected form, fear to exercise that free judgment without which even first-rate artists are liable to labour wastefully—for the finest art has never been a purely personal expression.

Communal elements and values are recognised in the finest Gothic architecture and sculpture. Little less obvious is the impersonal spirit in the works of men like Fra Angelico, who renounced his own name and personal fame for the sake of his religious life; or like Botticelli, whose name was not his own but the name of his master; or Palestrina, whose name is not that of a man but of a city.

During the more important period of their development the arts of literature and music are known to us under the personal names of the artists who were engaged in them; that period had not the communal background of Christendom during the ages of the greatest architecture and painting. Even so it is clear that no maker of verse or prose, of song or symphony, wrote solely with his own personal joy in view. He did not fail to consider the communal relation which is reached between writer and readers, between composer and performers and audience. Without that relation it is certain that no work of literary or musical art can be said to be complete. We pity the artist who attains posthumous fame much as we pity the lover who could never win his lady.

It is not likely that such a relation has ceased to be essential to the consummation of artistic activity. However spirited the pioneering of the most 'advanced' artists of our own time, their work must depend for its validity upon its power to win a satisfactory relation with the fairly educated part of the public, with or without the interposition of a group of disciples. However slow that public may be in reaching an understanding of new works of art, it is that which gives final sanction to the works of to-day no less than to the works of Giotto, Shakespeare, and Bach.

We can scarcely pretend that there is any sign of such understanding—not even the first faint glimmer of it—in regard to such writers as James Joyce and Gertrude Stein or to composers like Schönberg and Stravinsky; for we must not be deceived into believing that the pieces of Stravinsky's and his like are works of good musical art because they are often associated with good public shows. Had Stravinsky been unable to lay his scores upon the clever and often delightful backs of the Russian Ballet, it is safe to say that he would have remained as remote from public favour as other less cute or less fortunate but equally noisy pretenders.

The majority of musicians who have maintained connection with the traditions of great music from the 16th century up to the time of Brahms and Wagner not unnaturally feel that what Stravinsky and his kind are doing is the negation of music. On the other hand, there are a considerable number of thoughtful people, very earnest about life itself, who feel that in some way which they cannot explain the art-movements which are generally labelled 'futuristic' are expressing an æsthetic rebellion akin to the mood of revolt which has pervaded the material world during the last two decades. (A deeper study would, I believe, show that such revolt began not twenty, but seven hundred years ago; but to show that would take us beyond the limits of the present study.) Thus, the late Dr. Eaglefield Hull came to the conclusion that the music of Stravinsky was in some way the equivalent of the doings of Lenin and Trotsky; and I am told that Mr. Percy Scholes has also proclaimed the revolutionary nature of Stravinsky. But it is in the West of Europe and associated with the émigré (and presumably anti-Bolshevik) Russian Ballet that Stravinsky's music has its vogue and following. In Soviet Russia the classic and national-romantic schools of music hold the field. So, whatever connection there may be between the cacophonic schools of art and the wave of revolutionary feeling which followed the great war, I scarcely think that Dr. Hull's suggestion will help us in our æsthetic bewilderment.

Under such circumstances, may it not be useful to consider the work of those artists who have been associated with ideas of revolt—artists of whose greatness there is no question? To consider the ideas which moved them to revolt, and notice what effect their revolt had upon their æsthetic tendencies, may help us to appreciate the rights and wrongs of the most provocative modern art.

One of the earliest of such artists whose records are available was Euripides, and looking up Prof. Gilbert Murray's 'Euripides and His Age,' in the Home University Library, I come across a passage which seems very useful for our present consideration:

'Euripides, like ourselves, comes in an age of criticism following upon an age of movement and action. And for the most part, like ourselves, he accepts the general standards on which the movement and action were based. He accepts the Athenian ideals of free thought, free speech, democracy, "virtue," and patriotism. He arraigns his country because she is false to them. We have spoken of the tradition as a homogeneous thing, but for any poet or artist there are two quite different webs in it. There are the accepted conventions of his art and the accepted beliefs of his intellect, the one set aiming at the production of beauty, the others at the attainment of truth. Now for every artist who is also a critic or rebel there is a difference of kind between these two sets of conventions. For the purposes of truth the tradition is absolutely indifferent. If, as a matter of fact, the earth goes round the sun, it does so not a whit the less because most ages have believed the opposite. The seeker for truth can, as far as truth is concerned, reject tradition without a qualm. But with art the case is different. Art has to give a message from one man to another. As you can only speak to a man in a language which you both know, so you can only appeal to his artistic side by means of some common tradition. His natural expectation, whether we try to satisfy or to surprise it, to surpass or to disappoint it, is always an essential element in the artistic effect. Consequently the tradition cannot be disregarded. This distinction is often strongly marked in the practice of different artists. One poet may be both a pioneer of new roads in thought and a breaker of the laws of technique, like Walt Whitman—an enemy of the tradition in both kinds. Another may be slack and anarchical in his technique though quite conventional in his thought. I refrain from suggesting instances. Still more clearly there are poets, such as Shelley or Swinburne, whose works are full of intellectual rebellion while their technique is exquisite and elaborate. The thoughts are bold and strange. The form is the traditional form developed and made more exquisite. Now Euripides, except for some so-called licences of metre, belongs, in my judgment, markedly to the last class. In speculation he is a critic and a free-lance; in artistic form he is intensely traditional. He seems to have loved the very stiffnesses of the form in which he worked. He developed its inherent powers in ways undreamed of, but he never broke the mould or strayed away into shapelessness or mere realism.'

We have now to consider the work of those outstanding artists who, like Euripides, Shelley, Swinburne, and Whitman, were in some measure of revolt against the thought or conditions of their time, and to learn in what degree their æsthetic tendencies were affected.

Dante was in continuous and open rebellion against the heads of the mediæval Christian Church. One Pope, who was eventually canonised by the Roman authorities, was placed by Dante in his 'Inferno.' During the reign of the next Pope (who had persuaded his predecessor to that act of renunciation which Dante regarded as specially infamous) the poet took definite hostile action in the political sphere. The facts which lay behind the quarrel concerned the well-being of the commune of Florence. Dante supported Giano della Bella, the knight 'who had identified himself with the popular cause'; but the clerics were intent on Giano's overthrow, and by his eventual fall the reins of government definitely passed 'to the rich burgher class.' Dante was in revolt against what he regarded as the outstanding evils of his time, but he was no revolutionary in art. That he derived from the tradition of cultured verse. He declared himself a pupil of Guinicelli, the poet who wrote that delicious ode to 'The Gentle Heart,' and the form of the 'Divine Comedy' was derived from the sirventes of the troubadours. (Edmund Gardner's 'Dante' in the Temple Primers, Sismondi's 'History of the Italian Republics,' and Bell's 'Short History of the Papacy.')

Botticelli (1444-1510) was in a gentler but equally genuine revolt against a later phase of the same evils. The tendencies of his mind came through his work. One of his paintings ('The Temptation of Christ') depicted the tempter in the garb of a monk. Botticelli renounced much well-paid work that he might devote his time to the illustration of Dante's 'Inferno,' his purposes being to reach the eye of the people themselves and the more fully to serve their cause. One of his engravings extolled the person of Savonarola, the great Florentine rebel against the most villainous of all the Renaissance Popes. He finally renounced even his art because its true service was becoming impossible. Ruskin's description of the nature of Botticelli's revolt seems to be the correct one: 'not a preacher of new doctrines, but a witness against the betrayal of old ones'—a sentence which parallels Prof. Murray's statement that Euripides 'arraigns his country because she is false to' her ideals. Botticelli accepted both the Christian tradition and the paganism of the Renaissance; and there seems to have been no element of revolt in his technique, which was of a masterly nature in the chief age of painting. (Vasari's 'Lives of the Italian Painters,' and Ruskin's 'Ariadne Florentina.')

(To be continued.)

THE DEEPER QUALITY OF MUSIC

By A. E. F. Dickinson

Many musicians must have noted with satisfaction the telling exposure, in the September Musical Times, of the amazing self-confidence of some views recently expressed in regard to the art of composing, and on the question of adding titles to hitherto untitled pieces of music. Perhaps the case has been met by the citation of the most flagrant statements. It may be profitable, however, to carry the analysis deeper, especially in regard to the title-enthusiasts. It is to be feared that these people miss much of the finer quality of music.

This type of misunderstanding and misuse of music is a very old one, and is headed, so to speak, by the naif pictorialism of Byrd and Bach, the too dramatic 'Leonora' Overtures of Beethoven, and the more elaborate programmes which Wagner encourages us, in outside commentary, to read into his operatic preludes. I refer to cases in which the composer unwarrantably expects us to interpret his music in terms outside itself. The further fact that in legitimate instances of programme music—music with words or action—the programme is taken by many listeners as the raison d'être, not as the mere starting-point, of the music, all adds to the superstition that it is the function of music to describe events or to present conscious thoughts and feelings.

In the instances I have given, the programme receives, whether legitimately or not, the authority of the composer, and claims superior consideration to one supplied by a less qualified person, for there is no doubt that it has found a place in the composition of the music. But the real importance of a programme depends, not on its official origin, but on how much it counts in the final impression, and in all the cases quoted the programme is soon forgotten and only the wider and more general appeal—the music in itself, shall we say?—remains. It is only in the weakest or lightest works of the great composers, or in the works of composers like Berlioz whose musical significance is open to question, that a programme is anything but a jumping-off point. The last thing one wants to do, after hearing even the dramatic 'Leonora No. 2,' is to go back in thought to the commonplace melodrama which inspired it. If this is true of a composer's official programme, much more is it true of some amateur attempt at defining the meaning of an abstract piece of music after it has been written.

But in saying 'the last thing one wants to do'—meaning myself, and therefore every reasonable person—I have in reality begged the question, because, of course, the title 'fans' do want to name the canonised but hitherto unbaptised works of music. And it is here, in particular, that it is necessary to 'consider further.' It is not just a question of mental effort or logical consistency, but of musical attitude.

There is more than a conventional truth in Pope's reference to those who rush in where angels fear to tread. The first quality of an angel, human or more than human, is surely reverence—reverence (humanly speaking) for the deeper and wider meaning which the commonest experiences of life may reveal, given the right conditions of mind and environment. The opposite tendency has happily been summarised by a lady in one of Galsworthy's earlier novels, when she complains that in a certain household she feels 'all body.' We may contrast with this familiar product of modern civilisation the quaint but sincere attempts of primitive man at living in co-operation with the spiritual world, of which attempts 'The golden bough' is a magnificent record. It may also be noted that some of the most truly original thinkers—men like Socrates, who would suffer death rather than deny their principles—have begun and ended with a humble and profound belief that truth is always a far wider thing than we as individuals ever know.

Nowhere is the downright, prosaic attitude so out of place as in the world of music. Here least of all are things what they seem on the surface. Every experienced musician knows that one of the thrills of a musical life is the revelation of new beauties in a familiar work, whether the fresh inspiration comes from a new interpreter or from the listener's own growth of mind. To limit a work to one interpretation is thus to miss the mysterious plasticity of musical expression, and to wish to define it within the narrow limits of a title is an æsthetic monstrosity.

By all means let us hear or read what Mr. X. makes of Bach's preludes and fugues, if it will widen our understanding of the music, not merely save us the trouble of thinking for ourselves; nor let us invariably repress any reflections which music may throw out to us of a world outside itself, for musical thought is not necessarily unconnected with other kinds of human expression. But let us clearly recognise for what it is that vulgar familiarity with a wonderful art, which is surely at the bottom of all these ill-considered and dogmatic pronouncements on music and its meaning (I include here those light-hearted references to composing, so aptly quoted in the September Musical Times). Music, like the countryside, is (praise be to our modern democracy) within the reach of all as it was never before, and both remain our sacred inheritance, on which we do not want the casual visitor to leave his unnecessary finger-marks. It is easier to ignore those finger-marks on music than on the countryside, but we can at least ask the markers to be more careful in the future, out of consideration for their own enjoyment as well as from a sense of decency.

In conclusion, the words 'for their own enjoyment' must be stressed, as containing the final appeal of the argument. We can hardly force men to be free—least of all by abusing them. But we can at any rate warn the superficial type of musician that he is on a rotten track, recognised by experienced travellers as leading (like Alice's path) definitely backwards, instead of into the wider and more glorious domains. As with Alice, the only advice of any use is 'Try the opposite way.'

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

In the September number of the Gramophone Mr. Compton Mackenzie takes me to task for my attitude in regard to 'Ops. v. Titles.' He scores a few hits, though I feel that he misrepresents my attitude somewhat. For example, after quoting what I said about the man in the street—'if his High Mightiness doesn't think good music worth a little trouble, let him go without it'—he says:

> 'Very well, then, let the man in the street go without music, and if musicians prefer to exist in an archaic mumbo-jumbo world [we don't!], let them do so; it will not worry the man in the street, that is a sure thing. The point Mr. Scholes and I have tried to make is that for the benefit of musicians, but by no means necessarily for the benefit of music, we wish to give the classics the benefit of what the classical composers would certainly have given themselves if they were writing to-day.'

Probably, but not 'certainly.' And if they did, nobody would complain; for the composer, and he alone, has the right to give picturesque titles to his works. What we object to is the prospect of anybody and everybody being let loose a-labelling, with their 'Big Threes,' and 'Pompous Alderman,' &c. Mr. Mackenzie says he 'never suggested treating the Haydn and Mozart quartets as programme music.' But practically every kind of label implies some kind of programme.

Mr. Mackenzie goes on:

> 'To argue, as "Feste" does, that such titles as the "Pathétique" and the "Appassionata" are tolerated because the consensus of musical opinion has decided that they fit, is to throw up the sponge in favour of Mr. Scholes and myself, who are only anxious to find titles which the consensus of musical opinion will accept as suitable. If any titles not given by the composer are justifiable, then all titles are justifiable [in other words, the "Big Three" is justifiable!] and if "Feste" enjoys the notion that the Prussian Academy of Arts and Sciences is now collecting evidence to obtain the passing of a law in Germany for the safeguarding of the musical classics, it is only one more piece of evidence of the conspiracy among intellectuals to Teutonise this country. If Mr. Scholes and I label the whole twelve hundred and forty-eight works which comprise the opus numbers now in existence, we should certainly not achieve such a disservice to music as by placing the classics under the tutelage of the Prussian Academy of Arts and Sciences.'

But if the Prussian Academy really protected musical works from, e.g., the foul paws of the Jazz compounders, I should vote for it with both hands. After all, is there anything necessarily objectionable in the idea of such safeguarding? I fancy there is a Society for the Protection of Ancient Monuments (if there isn't there ought to be). If we take steps against the fools who cannot see a relic of antiquity without wanting to scribble, scratch, or carve their names (or worse) on it, we ought to do no less on behalf of the great things in music. And one of the things they ought to be protected from is the unauthorised programme.

Mr. Mackenzie is severe in his final paragraph:

> 'The ill-concealed chagrin with which so many musical critics regard the violation of their pet sanctuaries would be laughable if obscurantism were ever laughable. Some of them have written more like gamekeepers than critics about my suggestion, more as if they were trying to preserve salmon than sonatas, quails than quartets. The disrepute into which many a composer and painter and writer falls when the vulgar herd begins to enjoy his work is a notorious phenomenon. Small-minded exclusiveness has been as much the enemy of art as it has been of religion. What maggot in the human brain makes a work of art more desirable because it can only be enjoyed by the few?'

This leaves most of us with a clear conscience. The greater part of my own life, for example, has been spent in various kinds of missionary work on behalf of good music, from teaching factory girls' choirs and slum and village choral societies, to lecturing and adjudicating up and down the country. One of my supporters in the correspondence columns, Mr. W. R. Anderson, has laboured indefatigably in the same vineyard; and the correspondent who signs himself 'S' is another supporter of good works in this way. Mr. Pengelly, who writes from Cardiff, is solo pianist and accompanist in the broadcasting studio of that city; and so on. Do these correspondents look like 'exclusive obscurantists'? The bigger the number of people who can be brought to enjoy fine music the better will musicians be pleased. I don't believe there is more than a stray crank or two who regards music as his pet sanctuary. Almost to a man, we are all for free and open seats in the Temple of Art, but we refuse to stand at the door and dangle enticements before the eyes and nose of the wayfaring man—a packet of sweets, a bag of nuts, or a bowl of soup. He is welcome to enter, but he mustn't expect us to water down and emasculate the doctrine for his benefit. What's worth having's worth an effort.

However, as the letters of Mr. Anderson and Mr. J. T. Frankland show, this subject is, after all, only a detail in a general problem that has arisen owing largely to the sudden access of an enormous new musical public. We may now drop our 'Ops. v. Titles,' as the project is at least scotched, and concentrate on some of the urgent points that concern the welfare of the profession. For example, I continue to receive letters concerning the bogus college abuse, and the cheap, incompetent teacher. But what can a journalist do beyond calling attention to the evil? Action is the duty of the profession. Here again is a detail that shows how far off we are from any settled policy. The Musical Times and Musical Opinion have long since refused to insert advertisements and other announcements referring to certain colleges; and they took this action as a result of representation from the Teachers' Registration Council. They have willingly borne the consequent loss of revenue because they were convinced that their step was for the benefit of the teaching profession, and of music generally. But the advertisements of these institutions appear regularly in most, if not all, of the remaining musical journals published in this country. This means that Musical Opinion and the Musical Times are being penalised for taking action in the interests of the profession. Have the Teachers' Registration Council, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Music Teachers' Association, taken any steps in regard to the continued advertising of these Colleges? It is useless to complain of the issue of floods of worthless diplomas so long as nothing is done to end the most telling kind of publicity on behalf of those who issue them, i.e., regular advertisements in reputable musical journals. I observe, too, that the advertisement of one of the banned colleges appears in the Promenade programmes. Are the musical organizations mentioned above aware of this? If so, are they approaching the B.B.C. on the matter?

Musicians will watch with interest Mr. Richard Capell's crusade in the Daily Mail on behalf of an increased use of English musical terms, in place of the present polyglot jargon. Some years ago I wrote an article on the subject in these columns, using almost the same caption, the slight difference serving to indicate the gulf that separates a mere musical journal from The Paper That Gets Things Done. 'Why not Plain English?' my article asked diffidently. 'Let's Have Plain English!' demands the Daily Mail, pretty much as it might say 'Let's Have Standard Bread!' or 'Baldwin Must Go!'

Mr. Capell would drop 'oboe' for the good old English 'hoboy.' His special aversion is 'cello, and he wishes us to anglicise 'the spoken word and write "chello," forgetting all about the derivation.' He objects to 'bass viol' as a substitute, on the ground that the true bass viol still survives. Its survival, however, is so sporadic as to be scarcely worth consideration. A better solution, I think, would be to adopt a set of terms for the string family. I suggest violin, tenor viol (viola), bass viol (violoncello), and double-bass (or simply bass) for the remaining instrument.

Another annoyance to Mr. Capell is 'piano,' which he regards as an absurdity. But surely it is no more absurd to speak of a 'soft' than of a 'loud-soft' or a 'soft-loud.' 'Piano' is the most natural and euphonious contraction of the rather clumsy compound original, and so might be allowed to survive.

Mr. Capell (backing up Mr. Eric Blom, who has also ventured into this field) advocates 'consort' for concerto, and 'clavier' for pianoforte. The former is a promising suggestion, though it will lead to awkwardness when we speak of a concerto grosso. Shall we say 'great consort'? I like 'fantasy' for fantasia—in fact the English word has already got its foot well in. I don't agree that 'kettledrums' is a good substitute for timpani; why not merely 'drums'? There would be no confusion, as we always call the other sort bass-drum and side-drum. Moreover, the great majority of musicians already use the term 'drums' in speaking of the timpani. Mr. Capell objects (rightly) to cor anglais, but he doesn't suggest an alternative. I do. Seeing that the instrument is neither English nor a horn, why not give it a name that really describes it—tenor oboe? Even better would be the revival of the flowing and now obsolete 'teneroon'—an appropriate term for several reasons, among them being the probability that the cor anglais solo in the 'William Tell' Overture was played on the defunct instrument of that name when the opera was first given in England.

'Study' for étude ought to need no special advocacy. I am not converted, however, to the Grainger-Capell 'foursome' for quartet. It is true that a word is badly needed to distinguish between the players and the played. Every musical journalist has to dodge such awkard repetitions as 'So and so's quartet was played by such and such a Quartet.' But if we accept 'foursome' (which sounds smooth and familiar because of its long standing as a sporting term) we incur 'fivesome,' and a group of even uglier terms—above all, 'sevensome' for the players of a Septet, and 'twosome' for duettists. Why not 'string four,' and so on? I put this to a friend, who objected on the ground that it recalled those curious sets of music-hall moaners known by such labels as 'The Harmony Four.' But Harmony Fours are fleeting things: the string four is one of music's institutions. 'Lener String Four' is better than 'Lener String Foursome,' and 'London Wind Five' than 'London Wind Fivesome.'

Most of us will wish Mr. Capell luck, though I fancy there are more difficulties in the way than he realises. Apart from custom, convention, and conservatism, there is a practical business point that is rarely considered by reformers of musical terms and notation. I mention the latter, because hardly a month goes by without my hearing from some optimistic inventor of a system of notation that will do away with accidentals and all the inconsistencies and anomalies that are alleged to disfigure our present system. But do they disfigure it? Any system that is the growth of centuries must inevitably bristle with illogicalities; but there is history—sometimes even poetry—in almost every one of them. The practical business point of view that I mentioned has to do with both notation and terminology. A publisher who adopted a new system of notation would have to scrap his existing plant and plates—a large part of his capital. A reform of the kind would never be adopted by all publishers, and it would be welcomed by very few teachers and professional musicians, so the quixotic publisher would be hard hit in the matter of sales, and as a result would be avoided by composers.

In a much smaller degree he would be handicapped by the adoption of some of the reforms advocated by Mr. Capell. An English publisher of instrumental music always has (or should have) an eye on the Continental market. If he brings out a string quartet, or a work for oboe or 'cello, or pianoforte, the musician in every part of the Continent recognises the works described in those terms, whereas a bass viol consort or a consort for clavier might mystify him — and mystification is bad for sales. Similarly, the publishers of a string quartet who wished to announce on the title-page that the work was in the repertory of (say) the 'London String Quartet' could hardly be expected to say that it is played by the 'London String Foursome.'

There is much in the principle advocated by Mr. Capell, and I do not wish to be regarded as scoffing when I go on to suggest that its adoption, combined with the Blythian nicknames referred to in last month's 'Ad Libitum,' will add a stimulating touch to programmes. We may yet read:

Big Three Trio ... ...Schubert
London Threesome.
Philadelphian's Toccata and Fugue Bach
The Pompous Mayor Consort for Bassoon ... ... Mozart
Triple Consort for Clavier, Hoboy, and Chello ... ...Peabody
Great Consort in E ... ... Handel

Mr. Capell declares his intention of following the Poet Laureate in pronouncing 'ensemble' as it is spelt. This needs far more courage than writing 'foursome' in the Daily Mail. But even Mr. Capell seems to hold back where 'timbre' is concerned. He merely tells us cautiously that Dr. Bridges recommends 'tamber.' 'Recommends,' observe. The red badge of courage should be bestowed on the journalist who deliberately writes 'tamber,' and an even higher reward should be devised for the one who is more logical, and (like Mr. Capell with chello) anglicises the spoken word and bravely calls it 'timber.'

A LONDON MUSICIAN LOOKS AT IOWA

Visits of English musicians to the United States have nowadays become so commonplace that it savours of officiousness to describe one in print, but mine differed from the majority in at least one important particular: Instead of becoming acquainted with America through cosmopolitan New York or through other large urban aggregations, I travelled almost without a break to and from Iowa, 'where the tall corn grows,' and my acquaintance with American city life is limited to a day and a half in New York and a few hours in Chicago. I went in response to an invitation to be a guest-professor at the State University, and owing to other, previously made, engagements, my impressions of America are almost entirely impressions of Iowa City, a moderate-sized township of the Middle West. The first of them, and a very definite one, is that Americans themselves are disposed to malign their Middle West. It is by no means so provincial as they affect to believe. Its very consciousness of the geographical handicap of distance makes it the more eager to make the most of any 'contact' with other cultural areas, American or European. Quite apart from the fifty-four lectures I gave at the University, I do not believe I have ever talked so much in my life. I was made to, and not by leading questions, but by conversations which showed a degree of acquaintance with the various subjects raised that could not have been acquired in Iowa except by cultivating a form of curiosity which is anything but typical of provincialism. In fact, Iowa is remarkably well-informed. It would be even more so but for the pusillanimity of its press, which is afraid to expound an unpopular point of view. The popular ignorance concerning European reactions to American politics is due to this. To tell the truth about them might endanger the advertising revenue, or it might not; but editors are taking no chances, so they bolster up the legend that has gained ground and thus fertilise the soil for future misunderstandings.

Iowa City was formerly the Capital of the State. Some eighty years ago the seat of government was removed to Des Moines, the scene of the recent disturbances at a 'fundamentalist' denominational university, and the vacant Capitol became the administrative centre of the State University. The township lies on the Iowa river, an affluent of the Mississippi. The country is, generally speaking, wooded and hilly, and therefore picturesque near the rivers, and flat but extraordinarily fertile elsewhere. The saying that you can not only see the corn grow but almost hear it growing may be an exuberant figure of speech, but a favourite way of surprising a visitor is to take him past the same cornfield at a few days' interval during the 'corn weather.' That weather, by the way, is less trying in reality than by repute. There was one day when the newspaper told me the thermometer registered 97 degrees, but I would not have guessed it above 90 degrees. The excessive moisture is a disadvantage, but Iowa dresses accordingly.

Not being an educationist I scarcely feel competent to speak of the educational system. There were moments when its mass-production almost scared me. There seemed to be an educational Frankenstein at work somewhere. At other times I was almost equally surprised at the superficial quality of some of the results—some, not all; for if a student has it in him to be thorough there is certainly no lack of opportunity. At the back of it somewhere is a rather touching confidence in the potency of figures. If it can be said that some phenomenal number has passed or is passing through the educational mill, that figure in itself is held to possess some educational virtue. Or so it seemed to me on occasion. The one thing that stands out is the intense eagerness of the students to learn, and the industry with which they set about it. Certainly American educationists have some magnificent material to deal with. If this intensive educational drive does not produce commensurate results, I feel that it will be due to some flaw in the system and not to the type of students. At the worst, one might say their eagerness was for information rather than education—they carry voluminous note-books into which they write as much as they can of all that is told them—but even if that is so it is a desire that can easily be manipulated into more fertile channels than the mere garnering of facts. At least, I found it so.

They were an attractive crowd, the students of Iowa City, the girls neatly turned out, with a good natural sense of colour as regards dress; the boys in comparison rather careless and untidy in their appearance, in obedience to some obscure 'he-man' complex which fosters the illusion that neatness is not altogether manly. I grew to like them very much indeed, and hope at some future day to renew their acquaintance, or make that of others like them. There was something so genuine, so free from affectation about all but a very few.

The residential part of the township consists of broad avenues of elms, so much alike that it is difficult to recognise one's surroundings at any point, the more so that there is also a sameness of character about the 'frame' houses, and that every other porch holds the same pair of rocking-chairs. It would take a more philosophic observer than I can claim to be to decide whether the American character is the cause or the result of standardisation, but there can be little doubt that they take to it as a duckling takes to the pond. In one respect it operates entirely to their advantage, and that is in the general comfort of living. Without standardisation it would scarcely have been possible to equip every house, even those of comparatively very modest pretensions, with so many labour-saving devices which to residents of the same class in Europe are practically unattainable luxuries. The efficiency of the average American home is, in fact, one of the most striking things about life in the Middle West. But there is another aspect of standardisation in which it is less beneficial. It tends to create uniform habits not merely of conduct, but of thought, and this may perhaps be one of the causes of the relative sterility of America in the field of art. For my part I am inclined to attribute the whole tendency to the comparative proximity of the pioneering days, when the life of a new community often depended upon its formulating, and adhering to, certain uniform rules of conduct. To that historical cause may perhaps also be attributed the excessive paternalism which expresses itself in a veritable passion for recondite legislation. Whatever hard things may be said of prohibition considered objectively, it deserves worse if regarded as a symptom.

On that engrossing topic, however, I have little to relate. Like St. John Ervine, I had made up my mind to observe a guest's courtesy towards whatever regulations my host had made for the conduct of his household. I heard vaguely of professors who had a private hoard, of students who carried something 'on the hip,' but I myself never encountered anything of the kind whilst in the Middle West. I read in the local press that the number of charges of being drunk when in charge of a car was becoming serious, but I never witnessed an instance. Yet I have reason to suspect that, had I been so inclined, the difficulty of procuring a stimulant in Iowa would not have been very much greater than in Chicago or New York. It was only that the facilities were less openly flaunted.

The best prohibition story I heard was told me by a young airman who had recently crossed the Canadian border, bringing with him two bottles of whisky. The Customs examination taking place at night, he placed them conspicuously in his suit-case with a five-dollar bill, and a note asking whomever it might concern to be lenient. On opening his suit-case in the morning he found four bottles, with a note, 'Here are two more from a stingy guy in the next car.'

One baneful effect of prohibition is that the American who defies it drinks not for quality but for the 'kick.' He does not hold a glass up to the light to revel in its colour and bead. Not for him the generous glow of wine and the associations of the famous vineyard in which it grew. For him it is becoming just 'alcohol,' or more probably 'hooch,' to be gulped as anyone may see on crossing the twelve-mile limit.

That, however, has little to do with life at Iowa City, except perhaps that, to judge by some of the restaurants there, the Iowan palate is correspondingly uncritical as regards food. That horrible American noun 'eats' finds its justification there. Meals are consumed as rapidly as possible—and no wonder, for there is little sensuous pleasure in them. Food is eaten merely to sustain life. And yet in Middle Western homes the cooking, if generally simple, is quite palatable. A country dinner I had during a rainstorm at a roadside house was very enjoyable. There would seem to have crept into the menu, possibly through immigrants, a certain measure of German influence which blends readily enough with other habits. It seems all the stranger that crude methods should be tolerated away from home.

Yet one of the most interesting departments in the University is that called 'home economics,' one section of which is culinary in the best sense. Another teaches home decoration, including, for instance, the devising of original patterns, and the cutting of the blocks with which to print household textiles. Here the progress made was so marked as to make one wonder whether, after the new order of architecture engendered by skyscrapers, the next manifestation of the art impulse in America would not take the form of decorative art in the home. To be sure, the art impulse thrives on leisure, and if standardisation has done nothing else it has generously provided leisure for those most interested in the domestic applied arts. If they now learn how to profit by it, who knows but what some day we may look upon the ordinary fabrics and utensils of their homes as enviously as we now do upon their mechanical appliances.

A characteristic institution of Iowa City is its newspaper, the Daily Iowan, which is written, edited, printed, published, and to a large extent circulated, by students attending the University, most of them belonging to the School of Journalism. It is a mark of unusual enterprise to give the youngsters, so to speak, a daily newspaper on which to try their teeth. Their zeal in seeking practice leads sometimes to curious results. I was fortunate in falling only three times into the interviewer's net. Two of the resultant screeds duly appeared, one as an interview of normal type, the other as an encounter with an anonymous gentleman whose appearance was described in terms which modesty forbids me from quoting, but recognisable from certain details of attire.

A well-known violinist who came to give a recital was more harassed. He was interviewed by one charming young lady after another, at the station, on the way to his hotel, on arrival there, whilst refreshing himself on the threshold of his apartment, until it began to dawn on him that so small a city could not possibly support eight newspapers. He made inquiries, whereupon it transpired that a professor at the School of Journalism had advised the class of his arrival and suggested that it was an admirable opportunity of acquiring experience in interviewing.

On another occasion, when a famous pianist was expected, a youthful contributor pestered a musical member of the University for 'advance copy.' Thinking to administer a lesson, this gentleman said that the pianist was bringing with him, for his recital, the identical grand pianoforte on which Palestrina had composed all his Masses, a remarkable instrument with a keyboard of nine octaves. He assumed that the importunate one would be greeted with peals of editorial laughter, instead of which all these details appeared in due course, adorned with appropriate headlines.

Edwin Evans.

STAGES IN THE HISTORY OF OPERA: III.—HANDELIAN OPERA

By Dyneley Hussey

It was suggested in the first article of this series, that Monteverdi's operas have overshadowed his other music; similarly, Handel's fame as a composer of oratorio has eclipsed his contribution to the stage. It is not unnatural that this should be so — for whereas opera developed continuously since the 18th century until a work by Wagner or Verdi could almost be said to have no point of contact with one by Handel or Bononcini beyond the elementary fact that they were all intended for performance in a theatre, oratorio remains essentially, that is in all except musical idiom, very much the same as it was two hundred years ago.

The conventions of opera in Handel's day were so remote from those which prevailed in the succeeding century that his dramatic works were not unnaturally left on the shelf, from which they are now beginning to be taken down. In an age which was advancing more and more in the direction of realism until opera tended to lose its lyrical quality and with that its true reason for existence, the operas of Handel were regarded as no more than a collection of concert airs strung together on a thread of what was very justly called 'dry recitative,' in which an impossibly complicated plot was overladen with pompous banalities. In short, Handel's operas were misunderstood.

In order to understand them it is necessary first to consider the conventions which governed their form. Only so can we judge whether within those conventions they are living works of art which can still say something to us, or whether they are irrevocably dead. The first convention was that the plot should be heroic, whether the persons were drawn from mythology (as in 'Teseo' and 'Admeto'), from history (as in 'Scipio' and 'Giulio Cesare'), or from romance (as in 'Rinaldo' and 'Rodelinda'). Next, the principal singers must have an equal share of airs, and these must occur at certain fixed places in the various Acts. Furthermore, no singer was allowed two consecutive airs; nor might any two adjacent airs be of the same kind; nor might the singers—mainly because they were unwilling to do any such thing—join in an ensemble, though the primo uomo and prima donna might go so far as to mingle their voices in a duet and the whole company with chorus sing joyfully together at the inevitably happy ending. The chorus had little else to do, and the concerted Finale was still only in its infancy and was confined entirely to opera buffa, whence it found its way into serious opera through Mozart. Hedged about with these and other restrictions and formalities, the composer and his librettist had to do their best with one eye upon the singers, who had to be given what they wanted, and the other on the public, which must be provided with what it thought it wanted. Small wonder that a more enlightened age turned up its nose at such ridiculous conventions and at such craven weakness on the part of composers in the face of singers and public.

There was yet another convention, which set a practical, though happily not insurmountable, obstacle in the way of the performance of Handel's operas little more than fifty years after his death: for it was an absolute rule that the primo uomo, even though he were cast for Hercules himself, should be a castrato, and the secundo uomo was either an artificial soprano too, or an artificial contralto. Only secondary parts were allotted to tenors and basses. The obstacle consists not in the transference of these unnaturally high rôles to the normal male voice. That can be done by a change of clef. The difficulty lies in the fact that the music possible for a trained castrato-singer is often impossible for the tenor or bass. It appears that while castration prevents the natural thickening and elongation of the vocal cords, it also promotes in the rest of the body a greater development, and among other results an increase in lung-capacity. The voices of the castrati were therefore very powerful, and capable of extraordinary feats of sustained agility. Composers naturally seized upon these characteristics, and wrote for these popular idols passages which, if not absolutely beyond the powers of the normal male voice, sound awkward and clumsy in the lower register.

These are the general principles upon which Handel wrote all his operas, although he did not always conform with absolute strictness to the rules. His was not the temperament of a reformer, like Gluck's or Wagner's. He belonged to the type of genius which takes the material nearest to hand and turns it to better account than mere talent can. But while he was no innovator, and never gave a thought to theories, a natural instinct for the theatre guided him, as later in the century it guided Mozart, towards making the best of the form as he found it, and towards the introduction of improvements in that form, which are none the less real for not being obvious at a glance.

Let us now turn to an individual example of Handel's vast output of operas. I choose 'Giulio Cesare' for consideration not merely because we are promised performances of it at the Scala Theatre during the coming winter, but because I have had the good fortune to see it performed on the stage at Cologne. It can therefore be considered as a practicable stage-work, and not as a dusty score for examination in the library. Of the plot it must suffice to record that the action takes place in Egypt and embraces the death of Pompey, Cæsar's intrigue with Cleopatra, and the defeat of Ptolemy. The intricacies which the librettist, Nicola Haym, has woven about the story baffle understanding, and no useful purpose would be served by an attempt to make sense of their apparent inconsequence. The most that can be said for Haym is that he provides the composer with a series of loosely connected scenes, which are sufficiently dramatic to serve as the basis for operatic music.

Handel has magically transformed these scenes so that they become astonishingly real and moving. The listener must not expect to find the careful delineation of character to which he is accustomed in Mozart, Wagner, and Verdi. Even if the librettist had allowed of it by giving some consistent individuality to his persons, such a proceeding was remote from the conventions of Handel's day. Opera was concerned with heroic figures, whose actions were at a distant remove from everyday life. The very employment of castrati in the chief male rôles served to emphasise the remoteness of the figures on the stage. Yet, in spite of the formality of the proceedings, and the superficial coldness of the sentiments, there glows underneath the surface a warm and human passion which is not less moving for being restrained. I was astonished at the extraordinary dramatic power of the music, handicapped as it is (to our minds) by the strangeness of the conventions and all the changes in musical technique which have occurred since Handel died. Among the tragic moments, the scene in which Pompey's death is announced and that in which Achilles dies stand out as particularly striking by reason of the sureness of touch and the economy of means used to obtain such remarkable effects.

On the other side, the scene in Act 2 between Cæsar and Cleopatra has a voluptuous quality which is largely due to the warm colour of the orchestration. Handel adds to the usual oboes, bassoon, strings, and cembalo a harp and theorbo, and places a small orchestra on the stage. It is doubtful whether any Italian composer of the period could have written music so sensuous in feeling. It is not merely a question of greater genius in a Handel than in a Bononcini, but rather one of racial characteristic. As I have suggested elsewhere,* the German composer tends to think in terms of instrumental music, while the Italian thinks in terms of the human voice. This second Act of 'Giulio Cesare' is but one example of Handel's real contribution towards the development of operatic music in the direction of the symphonic style which was to be brought to its highest point by Wagner.

These qualities to which I have called attention are absolute, and not merely relative to the creakings of an outworn convention. If we can only accept them for what they are, there is no need to make allowances for Handel's operas. At the same time, their public performance in the theatre of to-day certainly requires special care if their beauty is to be made evident to an audience which is not specially interested in the history of operatic art. The pleasure derived from the Cologne production was due in a large part to the fact that the designer of the scenery and costumes, and the singers, worked within the conventions of Handel's day. The heavy baroque frame which enclosed Herr Rémond's beautiful scenes, the panached helmets, gold breastplates, and crinolined skirts of the actors, their stately movements and formal gestures, all conformed to the character of the music and revealed its intrinsic grandeur and dramatic force.

The revival of interest in Handel's operas, which is of some years' standing in Germany, is not without significance as a sign of the times. Realistic opera seems to have reached the extreme limit possible without becoming quite frankly melodrama, with the music supporting the speaking voice. It would seem that if any advance is to be made it must be in the direction of a more formal and a more lyrical style. That modern composers can, after all, learn something from the long-despised conventions of the 18th century is strikingly exemplified in Hindemith's 'Cardillac,' which is certainly a most successful work from every point of view. This opera is cast in a severely formal mould, and the characters sing da capo airs,

* 'Eurydice, or the Nature of Opera,' p. 29, ff.

one of which is a full-dress affair with instrumental introduction and epilogue, and solo concertante instruments taking part in the accompaniment, just as they do in Bach and Handel. The wheel of operatic convention seems to have swung full circle; it is only the musical idiom, not the form, which now shows an essential change.

RESPECT FOR RHYTHM

By Maurice Cauchie

[This article, under a different title, is one of the chapters of a 'Cours d'Education Musicale à l'usage des instrumentistes, chanteurs, organisateurs de concerts, et chefs d'orchestre de tout âge,' now in preparation.]

. . . . . .

Respect for the rhythm of a piece of music means exactness as regards the general pace at which it is to be taken, carefully setting forth the various rhythmical figures, and also seeing that these figures are not misrepresented in the rallentando and accelerando passages.

I.—THE GENERAL MOVEMENT OF A PIECE OF MUSIC

The pace at which a piece is to be taken is indicated above the first few notes by one or two words, either in Italian or in some other language, such as: Andante, Presto, Assez vite, Mässig langsam, &c. These words, the meaning of which varies according to the composer, give only an extremely vague idea of the pace at which the work should be played.

In these days we almost always over-emphasise the characteristic of the various movements, i.e., we play slow pieces far too slowly and rapid pieces (such as the Finales of Beethoven's Symphonies) a great deal too fast.

Let us see how we may determine the correct pace.

In many cases, when dealing with modern music, the general movement of a piece is given with the utmost precision by the composer himself by means of a metronomic mark. This informs us that a certain value lasts a certain fraction of a minute; for instance, the indication ♩ = 90 means that the minim lasts one-ninetieth of a minute.

To say that when a piece is being played—the composer of which has taken care to define the pace by a metronomic mark—one ought to pay scrupulous attention to this indication, may appear childish. All the same, there are extremely well-known musical works to which we are forced to listen, year after year, played at a pace different from the one which the composer has clearly indicated by a metronomic mark. For instance, the first movement of the ninth Symphony, which Beethoven marked ♩ = 88, becomes heavy and pedantic under the baton of our conductors, all of whom take it much too slowly. Things are even worse in the Adagio of this Symphony, to which we are always compelled to listen at a dragging pace that is like anything but the one (♩ = 60) expressly required by Beethoven. Another and a most characteristic example is the Allegro of Berlioz's 'Carnaval romain,' which is always played at a ridiculously rapid pace.

Such instances as these—and many others might be added—prove that it is by no means superfluous at this stage to remind both the players and the conductors of an orchestra that when preparing to play or to conduct a musical work the composer of which has indicated it metronomically, the first thing for them to do is to consult their metronome, even if they have heard the work played on several occasions; for it is extremely probable that their predecessors, whom they may have a tendency to imitate, have played or conducted it at a wrong pace. In this, as in everything else, the example of others should afford no reason for doing a wrong action.

In default of any metronomic mark given by the composer, if the latter has in any written document clearly expressed his desire with regard to the pace of one or other of his works, manifestly his wish ought to be respected. For instance, Berlioz, in his 'Mémoires,' when dealing with the Allegro in 6-8 of his Overture 'Le Carnaval romain,' an allegro which he borrowed from the second Act of his opéra-comique 'Benvenuto Cellini,' expresses himself as follows with reference to Habeneck, leader of the orchestra: 'He never succeeded in catching the lively pace of the saltarello danced and sung on the Place Colonne in the middle of the second Act. The dancers, unable to adapt their movements to his dragging pace, came complaining to me, and I kept saying to him, "Faster! Faster still!"' Again, when speaking of a performance of 'Le Carnaval romain' under his own baton, he said: 'I took the Allegro at the whirlwind pace habitual to dancers from beyond the Tiber. . . .' This is an important indication, placing us on our guard against a performance played too slowly. Nevertheless, one must not thereby regard oneself as authorised to exaggerate the speed of this Allegro. This leads me to mention another order of considerations which may enable one to determine the proper movement of a work.

The conductors of modern orchestras have certainly read the above-mentioned passage from Berlioz, for they take 'Le Carnaval romain' at a frenzied pace. At the time that I became acquainted with this marvellous Overture by simply reading the orchestral score, I had not come into possession of a metronome. Knowing the passage from Berlioz's 'Mémoires' just quoted, I played it over to myself mentally at as rapid a pace as possible—that is, as rapidly as, in my opinion, not only the clearness of the details, but, above all, the character of the themes, allowed. Subsequently, when listening for the first time to this work at one of our big Sunday concerts, I was astounded to hear it being given at an outrageously exaggerated speed; innumerable melodic details made me feel that Berlioz had intended the Allegro to be taken at a slower pace. At the time I was very young, and unable to understand why such a massacre of notes should raise no protest whatsoever, either in the hall during the performance or in the columns of the following day's newspapers. Not yet had I learnt that routine forms the sole guide both for the public and for the performers; I quickly discovered that this was so, however, by listening to the same Overture taken by two other conductors in succession at the same ridiculous pace. None the less did I persist in regarding my pace as correct. I hastened, however, to compare it with the metronomic indication given by Berlioz at the beginning of his work. When at last I came into possession of a metronome I was delighted to discover that my movement was identical with that intended by Berlioz (♩. = 156). Consequently, all the performances of this work given at Paris are merely caricatures.

I had thus reached the right pace by noting that certain melodic fragments could never have been intended by Berlioz at a more rapid pace than ♩. = 156. In many cases similar considerations will be of the utmost utility by making it possible to set a sure limit either to the rapid or to the slow playing. I will quote only one more example: I heard a conductor take the Finale of Beethoven's fifth Symphony at an andantino pace (𝅗𝅥 = 63), doubtless imagining that by doing so he would make it more pompous and stately. Now, one need only sing the first violin part of bars 22 to 26 of this Finale to discover immediately:

(1.) That at the speed I have just stated this passage is indescribably grotesque;

(2.) That the maximum slowness it is possible to endure for these four bars corresponds to 𝅗𝅥 = 76;

(3.) That the movement best adapted to all the melodic conceptions of the composer's corresponds to 𝅗𝅥 = 84, the first few bars of this Finale not being any the less pompous in this lively movement.

A particular instance of mistakes of this kind consists of the following irregularity. Many of our conductors begin andante pieces at an excessively slow pace; then, after about fifty bars, becoming conscious that the work if played in this way throughout would be horribly wearisome, they increase the speed, though the composer nowhere indicates the slightest change of movement. This kind of thing generally happens with the Funeral March of the 'Eroica,' which is begun so slowly that all perception of rhythm is destroyed; and it is played at a reasonable pace only from the seventeenth bar onwards.* The very fact that the pace adopted at the beginning of a piece cannot be maintained to the end is a sure indication that it is wrong—unless, of course, the composer has indicated a change of speed during the piece.

II.—PURITY OF RHYTHM

The greatest care must be taken that the various values (crotchets, quavers, &c.) last exactly the times that are intended. There are countless instrumentalists and singers who constantly replace many even go so far as to replace

They think that they are thus making their playing or their singing more expressive. What is it that they are really doing? They are substituting a work of their own composition for the one they imagine themselves to be performing.

During the entire period that a piece is being practised, one must first have a true conception of the various rhythmic groups it contains. To effect this, one sings or plays, for a score of times and on the same note, each of these rhythms, subdividing each tempo either mentally or aloud. For instance, in the group the counting is as follows (without slackening the movement):

In this way it will be noticed that the group possesses a rhythm that is rather tame than galloping; somewhat like the rhythm generally supposed to be that of the group

Special attention will be paid to the group the perfect execution of which is particularly difficult: unconsciously it is almost always replaced by

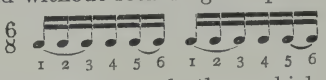
This happens more especially when the orchestra is playing the 'Ride of the Valkyries.' Immediately prior to playing a piece that contains this difficult rhythm we must, even if we think we are sure of ourselves, sing it mentally or aloud, counting as follows and without retarding the pace:



There is one more rhythm which is never executed except approximately: the triplet of crotchets in 2-4 bar-time, or the triplet of minims in ¢ bar-time. The performers generally tell you that when one hears two crotchets in a bar played or sung it is impossible simultaneously to play or sing three with the right precision. This, however, is the simplest matter imaginable if we but note that the third of two is equal to two-thirds of one. All that is needed, then, is to suppose that the bar-line, instead of being 2-4, is 6-8, mentally to beat time for the six quavers, and group them in two's in order to have the three crotchets of the compound triple; thus, for the reading which it is almost impossible to render perfectly, there is substituted the reading:

the strictly correct performance of which is mere child's play.

III.—RALLENTANDO AND ACCELERANDO PASSAGES

Rallentando and accelerando passages of very short time-length, whether exacted by the composer or introduced on his own initiative by the player in order to render his performance more expressive, ought always to take effect upon a sufficient number of notes to prevent the elementary rhythmic figures from being misrepresented, i.e., in order that the immediately adjoining notes may perceptibly retain their relative time-lengths. The majority of violinists, for instance, even the most renowned, commit a very serious fault between the 493rd and the 496th bar in the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto ; this passage consists of a curious succession of crotchets, some divided into three quavers, others into four semiquavers, and others into five semiquavers :

* The only conductor I have ever seen taking this funeral march at the right speed is Pablo Casals, when conducting his orchestra at Barcelona.

Thus the melody acquires a hesitant and jolting gait, which Beethoven evidently desired, and which players unfortunately quite destroy ; they retard the rapid groups and accelerate the slow ones, the result being that this passage becomes a dull and lifeless succession of notes all of which have the same time-length.

In all passages of this kind, where different rhythms follow one another within the space of a few notes, there should be permitted no partial rallentando or accelerando whatsoever ; such passages should be played or sung in strict mathematical time in order to bring out clearly the rhythmic differences which indeed constitute their very excellence. In particular, whenever a binary and a ternary group follow each other the whole should be played mathematically in time, so that the ear may be given the special enjoyment desired by the composer.

In all similar cases the accelerando and rallentando movements should take uniform effect upon the whole passage.

Another very common practice, one that exasperates anyone who has an instinct for rhythm, consists in accelerating the movement during the holding-notes which are common to all the parts. One would imagine that performers (conductors, pianists, &c.) hold an absolute rest in horror ; no sooner are all the parts simultaneously silent than they seem to find it impossible to count quietly, at the normal rhythm of the piece, the seven or eight—or even simply the three or four—beats required by the composer ; they seem absolutely compelled to count them at a more rapid pace. This is torture for anyone with an instinct for rhythm. Such a listener not needing to see anyone beating time, nor to do this himself, nor even to count time mentally in order to be aware, with utmost precision, when the holding-note should come to an end, is most disagreeably surprised to hear played, half a beat or a whole beat too soon, the note or chord that follows the holding-note. It is no exaggeration to assert that this is an extremely common practice, indulged in alike by conductors, by instrumentalists, and by singers. To quote only one out of a thousand examples, the beginning of Berlioz's ' Grande messe des morts ' is invariably mutilated by the shortening of each of the two affecting six-beat rests that separate the second phrase from the first and the third.

It is urgently necessary to oppose such inexcusable habits ; the conductor of an orchestra, or an instrumentalist, anxious to interpret a work with due respect, should take the holding-notes without hurrying the pace in the slightest degree. Similarly in the case of complete rests ; indeed, after quietly counting all the beats, to make an additional short pause would in many cases be effective.

Lastly, pauses, which nowadays are reduced to an insignificant duration, should always be long enough to afford the impression of a genuine stop ; the note, short or long, upon which a pause happens to occur, should be prolonged to the extent of at least two beats of an andante movement.

. . . . . .

Due respect for the precepts here mentioned ought to be the very basis of every performance of a musical work. They alone should guide both conductors and performers, and not the examples of their predecessors or their contemporaries, for as regards a due respect for pace and rhythm evil examples are countless and of every-day occurrence.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

SERGE DIAGHILEV

By Edwin Evans

Serge Diaghilev was in his 'teens when he spent his first holiday at Venice. Thenceforth he went there every year, with one exception, but as there was one year in which he took two holidays there he used to regard his record as unbroken. Now, on his fortieth holiday, he has passed away at the place which was dear to him above all others. His love for Venice was to some extent symbolic of his outlook on art and on life. Born in 1872, he knew as a young man the splendours of the Court of the Tsar Alexander, and there always clung to him something of the luxuriousness of the ancien régime. At Venice he found memories of even greater pomp and circumstance, side by side with the rather pathetic flickerings of modern elegance. Thus both the patrician and the ironist could find entertainment simultaneously, whilst the æsthete could bask in the glow of a favourite classical tradition as luxuriously as the man could bask in the glow of the Adriatic sunshine. He was originally an art critic, and necessarily looked upon Italy as a kind of spiritual home, but as a musician also he loved, next to the Russian composers, those of Italy, from the elder Scarlatti to Cimarosa. I well remember his glee on discovering at the end of ' Le Astuzie Femminili ' that the inevitable wedding festivities included a Russian ballet, for which Cimarosa, drawing upon his Russian memories, had written a moderately Italianised version of the Komarinskaya, later to be familiarised by Glinka. Thus his two loyalties were combined in his revival of that opera, of which subsequently only the ballet ' Cimarosiana ' remained in the répertoire.

He had received his training at the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, mostly under Liadov, whom he held in such high esteem that he commissioned from him his first ballet, ' The Fire-Bird,' and only Liadov's inveterate habit of procrastination let to the substitution of Stravinsky as composer of that work. Meanwhile, however, between his Conservatoire days and his foundation of the ballet, Diaghilev had had his phase of worshipping at German shrines, notably that of Wagner. He used in later years to say that the tragedy of Russian music was that every Russian musician at some time in his career became a German musician. He instanced Rimsky-Korsakov's ' German ' period, from which, however, he had emerged to write 'Coq d'Or.' There were other Russian composers who failed to emerge, and for these he had no liking. In the early days of our acquaintance, before the war, he once said to me: 'You know all our good Russian music, and I think it admirable of you. But you also know all our bad Russian music, and I cannot forgive you for it.'

For his part he naturally knew Russian music very thoroughly, but yet there were occasional lacunæ in his knowledge. One of them led to an amusing anecdote. There is a melody in the 'Ronde des Princesses' of Stravinsky's 'Fire-Bird' which is identical with a theme in the slow movement of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sinfonietta.' The circumstance is of no importance, since both composers were plainly indebted for it to the national inheritance of folk-lore. But in course of conversation it transpired that Diaghilev did not know the older work. So without enlightening him as to my reasons, I brought the four-hand version to him and we started to play it. The first movement mystified him. He thought it quite charming, but wondered why I had made such a point of playing it. But presently we reached the familiar melody. He jumped up from the pianoforte and exclaimed, 'Non, ce n'est pas vrai!'

Another Russian work which he had not encountered was Balakirev's volume of folk-songs for pianoforte duet (not identical with the vocal set). When I played it with him he was so delighted with it that he began to consider it as material for a ballet. Subsequently I played it again with Prokofiev, who happened to be in London, and we all came to the conclusion that the numbers, though charming, were too short and scrappy for the purpose.

These are the only two instances I can recall of Russian works of any importance which Diaghilev did not know, but when I drew Karsavina's attention to the delightful little 'Les Vendredis' Polka, which she afterwards danced at the Coliseum, Diaghilev pretended to make a scene because I had never brought it to him. His knowledge of Italian music was, of course, less extensive, but he accumulated a large number of works which had lapsed into oblivion. Particularly in the case of Pergolesi, he did not make his final selection for 'Pulcinella' until he had procured as much as seemed possible of his music, even to having many copies made at various museums and libraries. And he once told me that he and Tommasini had been through the whole five hundred and fifty 'sonatas' of Domenico Scarlatti before choosing those required for 'The Good-Humoured Ladies.' This brings us back to Venice, for that ballet owed as much to Pietro Longhi, to Francesco Guardi, and perhaps to Tiepolo as it did to Goldoni and Scarlatti. In some respects it is the most perfect of all the ballets resulting from Diaghilev's initiative. The first performance of it in London took place at the Coliseum in 1918.

Tommasini's score includes a harpsichord, for which there was no room in the long but narrow orchestral pit. Whilst the difficulty was under discussion I recalled a print I had once seen of a theatrical performance of the period, at which the harpsichord player was placed at the side of the stage. At my suggestion Andrée Conti was provided with an 18th-century wig and costume and placed at the side of the Coliseum stage, where she and her harpsichord, though almost inaudible, proved so effective that one of the Sunday papers went into raptures and described this as one of those flashes of genius which only occurred to these wonderful Russian producers. It was also on this occasion that a journalist, who came on behalf of a great London newspaper, asked me to ascertain whether Diaghilev had specially commissioned the music from Scarlatti. But I must desist from the anecdotal strain, which, where the Diaghilev Ballet is concerned, is almost inexhaustible.

As is generally known, it was the abortive revolution of 1905 which sent Diaghilev on his Western wanderings. There followed year by year in Paris: an exhibition of Russian paintings, a season of Russian symphony concerts, another of Russian opera, with Chaliapin in 'Boris Godunov,' and finally, in 1909, the inaugural season of the Diaghilev Ballet. Some confusion of ideas was caused by its announcement as Russian Ballet. The only link with the official Russian Ballet of the Imperial Theatres was that it was composed of artists who had found that institution too conservative for the realisation of their ideas. They were, in fact, rebels, though a friendly arrangement was made by which they could satisfy their rebellious instincts during Diaghilev's season and revert to their allegiance at its close. This they actually did at first, but soon the success of the Diaghilev Ballet warranted a complete breach with St. Petersburg, and it is somewhat pathetic to note that almost the only great European country where this Russian Ballet has not been seen is its native Russia. This is scarcely the place to relate its history in detail, but on broad lines it may be said to have begun with the romantic secession led by Fokin, which was followed by the brief interlude of Nijinsky's plastic and rectilinear choregraphy on the eve of the war.

The return of the Ballet in the Armistice year revealed the rise of a new choregraphist in Massine, under whose régime the Russian influence began to yield to that of the Mediterranean countries—Italy and Spain. Then followed a kind of interregnum during which some good work was done by Nijinska, the sister of the great dancer. This was the time when the Parisian atmosphere was steadily gaining the ascendancy. And recently a talented young choregraphist has appeared in Georges Balanchine. It will be noted that æsthetically it has been consistent. Nobody has satisfactorily explained the curious affinity there is between Latin and Slav culture, but long before Diaghilev's advent it was at Paris that the music of the Russian nationalists was meeting its warmest welcome. Whatever the reason, there would seem to be some fundamental cleavage leaving on one side these races, and on the other those of Teutonic origin. It shows itself even in the final forms assumed by their respective Christianities, and the favourite attributes ascribed to the Deity. In the arts it is equally pronounced. 'Art for art's sake' is a maxim on one side of the line, a heresy on the other. One side is susceptible to rhetoric, particularly of the ethical brand, the other is sceptical of all eloquence. The æsthetics of the Diaghilev Ballet have been consistently Latino-Slav, the only modification being that gradually the weight was shifted from the Slav to the Latin shoulder.

Meanwhile the knell of romanticism had been audible to the alert ears of Diaghilev before most people were ready to speed its parting, and he was prepared for the phase of hard, quasi-ironic brilliance that was to dominate for a time the greater part of artistic Europe. Naturally this brought him into collision with upholders of the other æsthetic creed, and in particular with Ernest Newman. Their exchange of passes was, and could only be, futile as, neither being willing to concede that the other might have valid reasons for the faith that was in him, they spoke no common language, and the very terms they used meant different things to each of them. There was, however, this difference between them—that whereas Newman was congenitally unable, or at least in his writings never showed himself able, to enter into the spirit of the party opposed to him, Diaghilev's spiritual adventures had been of both kinds, and he was merely impatient that Newman, whom he had really admired, had not reached his own conclusions. Newman's opposition gradually took such a form that eventually he and the paper he represented were excluded from the so-called 'press-list.'

I hope it is unnecessary for me to say that the view I took of this incident was the only one a journalist could take, and so far as I was consulted my advice was given accordingly. Had Newman found anything at all to admire, that view might have prevailed, but his anathema was only too comprehensive, and I found myself powerless to avert an incident which would have been ludicrous had it not been lamentable. When, a year ago, Newman did at last find something to praise in Stravinsky's 'Œdipe,' Diaghilev, whose profound admiration for that composer did not extend to that particular work, commented: 'Naturellement! Dès que c'est ennuyeux, ça lui plaît.' The two views were, in fact, irreconcilable. Since each is representative of a large and distinguished section of the musical world there is a fascinating problem in examining the fundamental reasons why groups of equally intelligent people should react in such opposite ways. But every time the question is raised it is met with salvos of polemical fireworks. It is, of course, so much easier to blame the French for not sharing our admiration for Brahms than to probe the reasons why a nation, not less musical than ourselves, and credited with some rudimentary notions of taste, should arrive at such opposite conclusions from the same premises.

Meanwhile the composers of modern Germany were themselves reacting against the rhetorical tendencies which were so characteristic of the century in which their predecessors had excelled, and Diaghilev, whose views were held exclusively on æsthetic, not on ethnic grounds, soon found himself attracted by them. A year ago he asked me to approach Hindemith (whom I have known since his early successes at Donaueschingen) and invite him to come and play the solo part in his Viola Concerto during the season at His Majesty's Theatre. Had his other engagements permitted he would have complied. The correspondence served, however, to break the ice. I have been out of touch during my recent visit to America, but I gather that Hindemith was engaged to write the music of one of the next Diaghilev Ballets, the fate of which is now in doubt owing to Diaghilev's untimely death.

That thought is now uppermost in the minds of all lovers of the ballet. Whether they admired all Diaghilev's productions or not, during these twenty-one years there has been no other man who has rendered the ballet, and with it all the arts associated in theatrecraft, such wonderful service. No other ballets during that period have excelled his for originality of invention and beauty of treatment, and it is not easy to recall any that have equalled them, or come sufficiently near to doing so to be included with the best of his in the future répertoire of the ballet. The art had become temporarily dependent upon him—temporarily because, as we all know, no man is ultimately irreplaceable—but with a completeness that makes its immediate outlook immensely difficult. Diaghilev was not one of those whose departure from the sphere of their activities makes us first realise the vital quality of their achievement. Ever since he assumed the leadership of the romantic secession from the beautiful but narrow classicism that preceded it, it was admitted on all sides that the future of the ballet lay in his hands. And now what is that future to be?

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL

By Herbert Thompson

The Festival which took place at Worcester, September 8 to 13, was described in the programme as 'the two hundred and ninth annual meeting of the Three Choirs,' so might well claim respect as the oldest musical institution in the country. It must, however, be allowed that in its old age it shows no sign of decreptitude. Its conservatism is indicated by the fact that it gave 'The Messiah' before Handel died, and since then—save in 1875, when an attempt was made to reduce the Festival to an event of purely local significance—that work has never been absent from the programme. The unvarying inclusion of 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah' has often been the subject of adverse comment, and it is not necessary to dwell upon this, save to suggest that to give these works without rehearsal makes it impossible to do justice to them, and to point out that the record of attendance does not bear out the contention that 'Elijah' retains pride of place in the popular mind. It is perhaps significant that on this occasion 'Elijah' attracted 1,904 hearers, Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' 2,021, and the 'St. John' Passion, 2,158.

It is difficult to see any way out of the impasse, for though not a moment was wasted in the rehearsals on the Saturday and Monday before the Festival, there were indications during the week that they were insufficient. It is one of the many problems on which the authorities will do well to ponder—as no doubt they have done in the past—for it is a matter of much importance if the festivals are to attain their aim of being of national, rather than merely local, importance.

The programme was an excellent one, showing a greater sense of proportion between old and new than is usually the case. Patriotism was indeed more than satisfied by the attention paid to living composers, and if one felt, after a long experience of these meetings, that there is some danger of the invitations being given to a little clique, it cannot be said that any of its members are undeserving of recognition. The predominance of Elgar, whose name appeared in six of the nine programmes, is not to be wondered at. He is emphatically the leading spirit of the Three Choirs, to whose interests he has devoted himself heart and soul, and it was rather amusing to find a writer complaining that he was neglected in his native city. It is a sufficient comment to say that on this occasion 'Gerontius' and 'The Kingdom' attracted two of the largest audiences, his Introduction and Allegro for strings was the central feature at the concert in the Public Hall, and, best of all, the fine Symphony in E flat was heard to great advantage in the Cathedral. If it, and its predecessor in A flat, do seem to suffer some neglect, this can fairly be attributed to their exacting character; their importance cannot be denied, but it is only when a large and well-equipped orchestra, and a capable and sympathetic conductor, are available, that justice can be done. Both conditions were present on the Thursday evening, when the programme under Elgar's direction confirmed one's opinion that in this Symphony we have the composer at his best; the note of elevation is well sustained, the slow movement is of rare beauty, and though his mannerisms are not entirely absent, one forgets them in contemplating the power and grip of an artist who can fill a big canvas.

Turning to the other works by native composers, though it may be said that not any one of the six novelties they contributed was of outstanding importance, they were not unworthy of the occasion; and the recognition of our creative musicians, which is always understood to be one of the chief functions of a self-respecting musical festival, is greatly to be commended. Taking them in the order of their appearance, Brent-Smith's 'Choral Concerto,' as he styles it for no apparent reason, was somewhat disappointing, considering the promise shown by some of his former works heard at these festivals. It is a setting of a text compiled from the Prayer Book version of Psalms 56 and 121, with some stanzas from the hymn 'Sing, and with a cheerful mind, Praise the Lord, for He is kind,' by way of an epilogue. The impression left by the work was of a certain advance in fluency and effectiveness at the expense of some of the individuality one has felt in his previous works. The themes are singable enough, but they too often lack distinction, and what the composer has gained in technique he seems to have lost in expressive power. There are two solo parts, for soprano (Miss Joan Elwes) and mezzo-soprano (Miss Olga Haley), but though they have some florid passages which seemed the sole justification for styling the work a 'Concerto,' they were too much over-weighted by the orchestra to be effective. Nor can Bainton's new orchestral rhapsody, suggested by Spencer's 'Epithalamion,' be considered a happy illustration of his exceptional musicianship. The scoring is too thick to be effective, but a greater drawback is that some episodes are dwelt upon at undue length, especially one couched in a more sentimental mood, in which solo violin parts are prominent. There is much excellent stuff in the work, if it seems to call for condensation. W. H. Reed's 'Miniature Suite' is, on the other hand, a model of conciseness, its short movements are handled with a knowledge of the instruments that makes it highly effective, and the three dainty little pieces of which it is constructed make very pleasant hearing. Two songs with orchestral accompaniment by Patrick Hadley were not announced as novelties, but were unfamiliar to most of his hearers, and one of them, a setting of a prose passage from Hardy's 'Woodlanders,' struck one very favourably by its air of quiet sincerity. Walford Davies's 'Christ in the Universe' is a setting of a mystical poem by Alice Meynell, for soprano (Miss Dorothy Silk), tenor (Mr. Steuart Wilson), and orchestra, in which there is a prominent part for pianoforte, played on this occasion by the composer. This is a work the charm of which makes an instantaneous impression; it is less ascetic in colour than is usual with the composer, and the sense of a gradual climax suggested by the poem is most effectively carried out. The only remaining novelty was a very pleasant little piece by H. W. Sumsion, who made such a good impression at Gloucester last year as the newly appointed conductor of the Festival. In a creative capacity this Idyll for small orchestra and violin obbligato, 'At Valley Green,' shows him to have musicianship and a feeling for gracious melody, though it displays no marked traces of a distinct individuality.

Three native composers conducted their own works, the chief of them being Vaughan Williams, whose 'Sancta Civitas' grows in impressiveness with every successive hearing. Like Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' it aims with simple sincerity at the expression of the strange mysticism of the text from the Book of Revelation, and it is heard to the greatest advantage in a spacious cathedral. He also conducted his genial 'Wasps' Overture at the evening concert. C. Lee Williams, who conducted his alla cappella setting of the Lord's Prayer at the opening service, has grown old in the service of the Three Choirs, from the time of his appointment to Gloucester in 1882, and one of the pleasantest incidents of the Festival was when Sir Ivor Atkins announced, at the concluding concert, in the College Hall, that the Archbishop of Canterbury had declared his intention of conferring upon Mr. Williams the degree of Doctor of Music. It is an honour long delayed, but most appropriate. He has been styled the Grandfather of the Three Choirs, and one trusts he may live long enough to be hailed as their Great-grandfather. Yet another composer-conductor was Armstrong Gibbs, whose Dance-Fantasy, 'The Enchanted Word,' for pianoforte (Miss Myra Hess) and strings, was a pleasing feature in the College Hall Concert. To make the tale of native composers complete it must be added that compositions by Byrd, Purcell (the dignified motet, 'Jehovah, quam multi,' which was orchestrated for the occasion by Elgar), Parry, Stanford, Brewer, Delius, Holst, and Quilter, were given, so that British music was fully represented.

The outstanding event of the Festival was undoubtedly the production of Bach's 'St. John' Passion for the first time at a Three Choirs Festival. Sir Ivor Atkins has always given Bach his due, and in this case, as in that of the 'St. Matthew' Passion in 1911, he has signalised the production of one of his most important works by preparing a new edition. In this he has had the co-operation of Dr. Lacey, one of the Canons of Worcester Cathedral, who has furnished a new translation of the versified portions, that, in its close relationship to the text, its faithfulness to the spirit, and its singable character, is a distinct improvement upon the current version. The text of the narrative portions and the music have been subjected to careful editorial revision, and this new edition is likely to remain the standard one for this country for some time to come. The exceptional interest taken in the work resulted in one of the best performances of the week, careful in detail, and reverent in feeling. Mr. Steuart Wilson was an admirable narrator, and Mr. Roy Henderson a dignified interpreter of Christ's words. Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Muriel Brunskill, Mr. Keith Falkner, and Mr. Archibald Winter, were the other members of a well selected cast.

Two works by living continental composers were among the interesting features of the programme. Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus' made such a good impression at Gloucester last year that its repetition was more than justified, and though the performance did not quite equal that given under the composer's direction, the choir being not at its best, the strong sincerity of the work was as impressive as ever. For giving the first performance in this country of the 'Magnificat' of Heinrich Kaminski the authorities deserve hearty commendation. It is a highly imaginative and beautifully conceived work. The text, which is in Latin, begins with the Salutation of Gabriel, 'Ave Maria, gratia plena,' which is sung by a concealed choir, the Blessed Virgin's response, 'Magnificat anima mea,' being sung by a soprano soloist (Miss Elsie Suddaby), the choir interjecting their hosannas, and a viola solo (Mr. Alfred Hobday) adding its decoration to the score. The work, which was first produced at Frankfurt in 1927, has distinction and charm, but unfortunately the imperfect performance at Worcester made it impossible to realise the finer qualities of the music. One only trusts its non-success may not stand in the way of its revival at another Three Choirs Festival, when with greater familiarity there will be a better chance of doing it justice. The manner in which Miss Suddaby stuck to her part in spite of confusion elsewhere, did infinite credit to her musicianship.

Other features of interest were the fourth Symphony of Brahms, which is comparatively neglected, but had been heard at previous Three Choirs Festivals at Worcester and Hereford, and Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto, which, with Miss Myra Hess as the soloist, sounded quite delightful in the Cathedral. Miss Hess was also soloist in the F minor Concerto, rather doubtfully attributed to Bach. Verdi's 'Stabat Mater' and Te Deum, which were introduced to England at Gloucester in 1878, were welcome features of the Festival, but coming at the end of a long programme it was impossible to do justice to them, and the choir's performance, though correct, seemed perfunctory. The concert in the ancient College Hall, which one has regarded as an innovation, seems, on the evidence of a programme of more than a century ago, to be really a revival. It was one of the pleasantest episodes in the Festival, and, ending with a genial Haydn Symphony (in G: No. 88 in the Breitkopf list), it enabled the hearer to go away with a wholesome taste in his mouth.

To end with a few generalizations: a word is due to Mr. Brent-Smith for his happy and really helpful notes in the programme books, to Dr. Hull, of Hereford, and Mr. Sumsion, of Gloucester, for their discreet use of the organ, and not least to Mr. Edgar Day, Sir Ivor Atkins's invaluable assistant, who occasionally introduced a pedal note on the Great organ in the choir with excellent effect in the ensemble, and whose services as chorus accompanist were fitly acknowledged by a presentation by the members of the Worcester choir. The choir was first-rate as regards the quality of the voices; in alertness and precision it left something to be desired, and on more than one occasion its intonation wavered. Other artists than those already mentioned were Miss Isobel Baillie, Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Millicent Russell, Mr. Eisdell, Mr. Widdop, Mr. Howard Fry, Mr. Heyner, and Mr. Horace Stevens. The organization was generally excellent, but the ceremonial observations suffered from the usual Anglican habit of sloppiness; and the taking of the collections in soup-plates, into which the rattle of the coins formed a most disconcerting accompaniment to the hymn at the opening service, was a striking example of how 'not to do it.' At the customary Cathedral service on the Sunday morning I had an opportunity of hearing the music at the Choral Celebration. The service was Vaughan Williams in G minor. This most devotional setting was sung by the Cathedral Choir, stationed in the Lady Chapel, with a refinement and devotional feeling that enabled one to realise not only the beauty, but the appropriateness of this music to the Church's highest act of worship.

Music in the Foreign Press

AN UNKNOWN OPERA BY MAX ANTOINE CHARPENTIER

In the August Revue de Musicologie, L. de la Laurencie describes and appraises two Acts of an opera, 'La Descente d'Orphée aux Enfers,' by Marc Antoine Charpentier, which are preserved in manuscript at the Paris Bibliothèque Nationale. The opera was composed before 1688 for the Duchesse de Guise, and was performed at her house. It is, we are told, a worthy example of Charpentier's genius. The third Act remains undiscovered.

ARMENIAN MUSIC

In the same issue, Amédée Gastoué contributes brief but useful notes on the native music of Armenia. This, contrary to the native music of neighbouring Georgia, is entirely monodic, and founded chiefly on the Phrygian tetrachord A, G, F sharp, E. But it is subject to many chromatic alterations, some similar to the Greek pyknon. Pure Hypolydian and chromatically treated Dorian also occur. No interval smaller than a semitone is used.

SCHUMANN'S INSANITY

The same issue contains a review, by J.-G. Prodhomme, of Dr. Henry MacMaster's 'La Folie de Robert Schumann' (Paris, 1928), according to which this book should be of great interest not only to pathologists but to biographers and other students of Schumann. Its conclusions are:

> 'Schumann's genius grew in spite of his insanity. This insanity did not affect the beauty of his output, which is not that of a maniac, but that of a strong mind, conscious of the onslaughts of disease and energetically fighting them. It may be the result of pathological cerebral excitability, but pathological states do not give birth to masterpieces unless the unborn genius is there. There has never been an instance of a maniac becoming a man of genius under the influence of his demency.'

JOHANN CHRISTOPH BACH

In the June-July Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft, Fritz Rollberg describes the life of Johann Christoph Bach at Eisenach from 1665 to 1703.

JACQUES IBERT

In the July Revue Musicale, Arthur Hoerée writes on Jacques Ibert, in whom he sees one of the most significant among the younger French composers, and gives careful consideration to his principal works.

ALBERT ROUSSEL

An excellent essay on this composer by Guido Pannain appeared in the June Rassegna Musicale. The main points made are :

'Roussel is the most significant French composer after Debussy and Ravel. He is spontaneous, genuine, clear-sighted, original, and endowed with an admirable, far-reaching sense of style. At the age of sixty he is the most truly youthful member of the French school.'

MALIPIERO'S DRAMATIC WORKS

In the July-August issue of the same periodical, G. Rossi-Doria examines Malipiero's dramatic compositions, expressing preference for 'Filomela e l'Infatuato' and for the 'Tre Commedie Goldoniare.'

BRUCKNER'S SEVENTH SYMPHONY

In the August Musik, Oskar Lang deals efficiently with the thematic structure of this work.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Up to Now.' By Martin Shaw.

[Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

We took up this book with misgiving, feeling somehow that Mr. Shaw was too young to be writing an autobiography. We laid it down (at an hour when we ought to have been asleep) wishing there were lots more of it. It has convinced us of two things : (1) that every man who has really lived, and done with both hands any kind of work that was worth doing, has material for at least one good book ; and (2) he should set about writing it while the impressions are still vivid and the sweat of the struggle still on him. The result would be so vital and interesting that we should rarely hear the old joke about the writer of an autobiography having reached his anecdotage.

Mr. Shaw's buffetings at the hand of Fortune have left him without a touch of bitterness. He doesn't even say in effect, 'My head is bloody but unbowed' ; that would be making a song about it, and although making songs is one of his chief jobs, we may be sure that he will never sing in that strain about his own troubles. He prefers to talk of them quite dispassionately, and if they have a funny side he will seize on it. In fact, we can at the moment think of no book of the kind that contains more good stories. We are tempted to lighten this page with some of them, but that wouldn't be fair.

The pluck that Mr. Shaw showed in making his way as a composer is seen also in other directions. For example, his adventures on horseback. Convinced that, in the words of the wise old doctor, the best thing for the inside of a man is the outside of a horse, he took up horse-riding (late in life for such a step) and graduated so successfully as to become a hunting enthusiast. He had his mishaps, but makes light of them. He speaks casually of his adoption of some fresh method of riding causing him some falls, but being well worth the cost. And he can even take the encouraging view that '. . . it is far more dangerous to fall from a stumble or slip of one's own than to fall from a horse. [He is speaking of ordinary riding, not of hunting or racing.] In the first instance the movement is sudden, unexpected, and unnatural ; in the second, merely a slow and gentle slide on to soft ground.'

It may be so ; nevertheless, we confirmed pedestrians will continue our preference for falls that we achieve for ourselves.

No less pluck, though of a less showy sort, was shown by Mr. Shaw in agriculture and tree-chopping. As field-labourer and harvester he was both braced and humiliated, being not the first to discover with surprise how much skill and strength go to the make-up of a successful agricultural labourer. Wood-cutting became almost a passion. He bought a tree on Hampstead Heath for five shillings, and, fired, began to keep an eye on sites that were being cleared for building.

'Up to the present I have never been without a tree. The Ivy Bank Estate on Rosslyn Hill belongs to the Bax family. It was sold recently for building purposes, and kept me in trees for some years, so that when Clifford or Arnold Bax came to see me I could invite them to sit at their own fireside.'

The hobby had its inconvenient side for some of his hosts, however. He tells us that in his journeyings as lecturer and conductor of hymn festivals he was wont to 'arrive at vicarages with a cross-cut saw, an axe, and several iron wedges' as part of his luggage. 'Like the parson in the story [he adds], I am afraid I overdo things at times.'

One reason why 'Up to Now' is so stimulating to the reader is Mr. Shaw's ability to be as enthusiastic about harvesting, wood-cutting, and falling off horses as about music. He holds that a man ought to acquire a fresh interest every few years in order to avoid stagnation. He says :

'I was telling my wife this the other day. I said to her : "In order to keep oneself young and fresh, new interests are required from time to time. Take my own case, for instance. I welcome new interests, and know how valuable they are. First there was you ; then the children ; then farm work ; then wood-cutting ; and now riding." All she replied was, "Well, really !" How strange women are !'

A Bohemian by instinct and experience, Mr. Shaw is fervidly domestic by conversion. He married on £150 a year—during the war, when that already small sum became infinitesimal for setting up house. 'He rides farthest who rides alone,' sings Kipling (if we don't misquote). Mr. Shaw takes the opposite view; he says:

> 'Far from domesticity cribbing, cabining, and confining, the most valuable and enlarging thing that can happen to an artist is for a baby to be sick on his waistcoat.'

We agree—so long as they are not our baby and our waistcoat. Especially our waistcoat.

Although this review has run beyond its space, it has done no more than touch on a few of the many interesting and amusing pages in 'Up to Now.' For the author has met and known hosts of well-known people, and his professional experiences have ranged from conducting the orchestra during Continental tours with Isadora Duncan to writing music criticism for the Daily Mail. We must prolong our review sufficiently to quote the latter experience:

> 'I got work on the Daily Mail as assistant music critic. I used to go to Carmelite House every Friday to receive payment. A man in spectacles with a foot rule and a week's issue of the Mail on a large table would take up a copy marked out in blue pencil with contributors' names and measure out the number of inches I had filled. Payment was so much per inch, an effective and quite simple method. I once got the following telegram from Carmelite House: "Cover Patti concert to-night Albert Hall. Bright personal par. What she wore, how she looked."
>
> 'I did my best; also, though not in my instructions, I threw in a few words about her singing. So I went from strength to strength, till one day Lord Northcliffe came into the office and said the paper was featuring music too much. And that was the end of me.'

'Up to Now' should be widely read. Its humour and humanity, and a rare kind of spirit that we can only describe as cheerfully gallant, make it an unusually stimulating newcomer to the musician's bookshelf.

'Samuel Langford: Musical Criticism.' Edited by Neville Cardus.

[Oxford University Press, 8*s*. 6*d*.]

In our obituary notice of Langford we said that the best of his writing was too good to be allowed to disappear, and we suggested that a collection from it should be made, adding that we could imagine few more attractive musical books than a study of 'S. L.,' bound up with a selection from the columns he poured forth year after year. No doubt the idea occurred to many other Langfordians. Anyway, here is the book, and nothing better need be said of it than that it is as readable as we expected it to be. Mr. Cardus says that it was gleaned from more than a million words—probably an under-estimate, seeing that Langford wrote regularly for the Manchester Guardian for twenty-one years. A few more thousands would have made the book even better than it is. We hope the success of this instalment will warrant a second.

A good deal of discussion—warm enough to be called dispute—has lately taken place between Mr. Ernest Newman and some of Langford's admirers as to whether he was a real critic or merely an unusually attractive writer whose chief concern happened to be music. We incline to the latter view, which is that taken by Mr. Newman. But we make haste to add that we do not regard this as a depreciation of Langford. We have always found his somewhat rambling articles not only more readable than the average good critical writing, but also far more suggestive. However, the attraction of such a book as this lies mostly in the success with which it gives us the essence of a truly delightful personality—a real 'character' of a type that is becoming rarer year by year; the present age of hustle, mechanism, and spurious 'efficiency' tends to iron out the creases that make for individuality. Langford's greatness (we use the word deliberately) lay in his rich allusiveness. To our mind, he was never better than when he appeared to the casual reader to be over-discursive, in the clouds, beside the point—anywhere, in fact, but on the spot. He had a fund of illuminating talk on practically any subject; it is a pity he wrote mainly on one alone. Happily, so wayward a mind as his could not be restrained by the subject in hand. Mr. Cardus tells us that Langford would often say, 'I would put down the best book or the best score in the world to speak to a man—or even a woman.' Therein we think is the key to the man and his style. His book is, in fact, talk of the rarest kind.

Those of us who had the privilege of knowing him personally will treasure some first-hand manifestations of his quaint, absent-minded, shaggy personality. The one that will stick in our minds, however, is that with which Mr. Cardus ends his charming little sketch. It shows Langford to have been among the many musicians to whom cricket appealed; and it happens (naturally) to be Mr. Cardus's favourite impression too:

> 'Of all my memories of S. L. perhaps I shall hold tightest the picture he once made at Old Trafford during a Test Match. He sat in the front row with the grass in front of him, between two perfect strangers, both honest, uncouth men. And as he chatted lightheartedly to them he ate a huge piece of currant cake, and the crumbs fell down his crinkled untidy waistcoat.'

'Bach's Organ Works.' By A. Eaglefield Hull.

[Musical Opinion Office, 5*s*.]

Any attempt to widen the average organist's knowledge of Bach is welcome. There are still far too many players—even eminent ones—who confine themselves to a mere handful of the organ works, and those not all of the best. Here is a capital little work of reference, giving the opening bars of every one of Bach's organ pieces (including even some that are of doubtful authenticity), with brief notes on each. The arrangement is alphabetical, and reference is made to the volume and page wherein every work may be found in the Bachgesellschaft, Novello, Breitkopf & Härtel, Augener, and Peters editions. Mr. Harold T. Scull has added further to the usefulness of the book by giving a list of pianoforte and other arrangements. The author has managed to include a good deal of information of all kinds. Critical opinions are quoted from Schweitzer (always spelt Sweitzer here, for some reason that is not apparent), Parry, Sanford Terry, Grace, &c.—an interesting and helpful feature, especially when the critics differ. Readers who have made a pretty close study of Bach's style will not see eye to eye with all the author's pronouncements, e.g., he considers the brilliant little 'Bicinium' Prelude on 'Allein Gott' to be a juvenile production. But two-part writing of such quality surely suggests the practised rather than the 'prentice hand. There are many helpful suggestions as to registration and interpretation. In all ways a companionable little book, that goes comfortably into the average pocket; it will no doubt go into many, for dipping into at odd moments.

'Kritik der Musik.' By Walter Hinz.
[Berlin: Kallmeyer, Mk. 2.50.]

There is an old story about someone who bought a book entitled 'De Stellis Marinis' in the hope of increasing his stock of astronomic lore, but only to find out, to his great disappointment, that the book dealt with starfish and sea-urchins. I could not help remembering it while perusing this 'Kritik der Musik,' for never did I encounter anything more unlike criticism in any sense—current or unusual—of the term; nor, in my humble opinion, anything less likely to prove useful so far as regards the investigation of the problems of musical criticism.

The only way in which I can deal with the booklet is to describe it as one-fourth philosophical, three-fourths rhapsodical disquisition on the true inwardness of music. A quotation may help to show its character at its mildest:

> 'Beethoven might have remained misunderstood up to the present day had not a man appeared who expressed definitely and clearly what Beethoven had expressed in his own particular way. This man was Schopenhauer. He found the conception of the essence of music, the essence of the world: Will, which is in itself a unity in the strict sense of the term, but appears as a duality, as a contradiction between time and space . . . Will in itself knows of no greatness, moral or intellectual; it is both positive and negative, affirms and denies, constructs and destroys, is quiescent and in motion; within it rest, like two latent principles, God and the Devil. . . . And Music speaks of Will, of this powerful, demoniac spirit, that knows nothing of beginning and end, of good or bad, of joy or pain, of happiness or unhappiness. Music speaks of Will, which rules without our co-operation, rules within us, because, indeed, we are Will.'

Besides Beethoven, the one composer mentioned is Wagner. But there are references to countless philosophers—including the old sages of India and China.

M.-D. C.

'Beethoven's Sketches: An Analysis of his Style Based on a Study of his Sketch-books.' By Paul Mies. Translated by Doris L. Mackinnon.
[Oxford University Press, 8*s.* 6*d.*]

For the student with a good elementary grounding, the best teachers of composition are the great composers, and, above all, the one who gives us the freedom of his workshop—Beethoven.

Unfortunately, the Sketch-books are among the things that people know about rather than know; and even those who know them are not likely to learn much from them without a guide. Mr. Mies's thoroughgoing, well-translated, and copiously-illustrated study is just what many musicians have been waiting for. It does more than show us Beethoven struggling with his material, altering and re-altering, concerned often about a single note or rest; it helps us to realise what is far more important—the æsthetic reasons for many of the changes. In the opening page, for example, we see Beethoven making two alterations in the first phrase of the Rondo of the Pianoforte Sonata in E, Op. 90. Trifling changes they seem, but the reader who is at once conscious of the part they play in vitalising the theme has learned the first of the many lessons the book has for him. This Rondo example is only one of many proofs of the care Beethoven took to start a theme with a live up-beat. Even more striking is the transformation brought about in the theme of the variations of the Sonata, Op. 109. By the simplest of means Beethoven ensures a melodic climax at the right moment. The pages which exemplify his care in the matter of melodic climax are among the most interesting in the book. The student-composer who wonders why this or that theme in his efforts somehow misses fire will find some of the reasons in this chapter—an apex weakened by anticipation, or reached too soon, or on a weak bar or part of a bar, or approached badly, &c. Mr. Mies shows us Beethoven dealing in the same searching manner with repeated notes, suspensions, notation, simplifications, elaborations, and so forth.

There has lately been some discussion as to the best definition of genius. Carlyle's famous attempt is now generally discredited, yet the Sketch-books show that although an infinite capacity for taking pains is not genius, it is the quality which above all enables a genius to make the most of itself.

'Music at Midnight.' By Muriel Draper.
[Heinemann, 15*s.*]

The author of this entertaining book is Ruth Draper's sister-in-law. As the wife of Paul Draper she spent much time in Europe while he was studying singing (Vienna, Florence, London). The London part of the book is the biggest and the most vivid. At Edith Grove, Chelsea, Mrs. Draper gathered round her a brilliant crowd of artistic folk, the musicians including Thibaud, Casals, Moiseiwitsch, Chaliapin, Rubinstein, and many others. Hence that music at midnight and long after, breakfast being taken at an hour when mere ordinary people with livings to get were well on with the day's work. For sheer selfishness it would be hard to beat Mrs. Draper's attitude when some neighbours sent a courteously-worded request that they might be allowed reasonable opportunity for sleep. Counter-demonstrating whistles, fireworks, and rattles had been regarded as something of a joke, to be answered by fortissimo four-handed pianoforte music; but, says Mrs. Draper, 'a signed document asking us to "refrain" was more serious.' Hence a visit to her lawyer, who sent her away in good humour, with the assurance that it was a 'frivolous objection,' and that the disturbers of the peace had only to take themselves and all their guests to court and repeat any one of the accused performances in order to prove their innocence.

Those were pre-war days, and perhaps the law stood so then. To-day such callous sleep-murderers would be pulled up. The recording angel must have been busy above Edith Grove during Mrs. Draper's tenancy! It is a pity the neighbours failed to realise that a few missiles of a soft, noisome, and fruity type sent through those open windows would have been more to the point than curses. We gather that Mrs. Draper has since been compelled to take to business as a means of livelihood. Rest at normal times now being necessary, she has perhaps come to see (by painful experience, we hope) the point of view of those Edith Grovers whom she, no doubt, regarded as stuffy and bourgeois. We detest her selfishness, but we like her book, despite some over-colouring and bad taste. She has the knack of hitting off a character in a few telling strokes, and she can tell a story.

'The Concert-Goer's Library of Descriptive Notes.' By Rosa Newmarch. Vol. 2.

[Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

The second instalment of this useful and attractive little Library deals with about forty Wagnerian extracts: symphonic poems and Fantasias by Borodin, Franck, Glinka, Harty, McEwen, Moussorgsky, Rachmaninov, Saint-Saëns, and other modern composers; and Marches by Berlioz, Elgar, Parry, &c.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Operas Old and New.' By Dudley S. Page and Bernard Richardson Billings. Pp. 342. Simpkin Marshall.

Catalogue of the King's Music Library. By William Barclay Squire. Part 2, 'The Miscellaneous Manuscripts,' by Hilda Andrews. Pp. 277. Part 3, 'Printed Music and Musical Literature.' Pp. 383. The British Museum.

'Versions and Diversions.' By the Rev. S. J. Rowton. Pp. 17. From the Author, St. Patrick's, West Runton, Norfolk.

'A Forgotten Psalter and Other Essays.' By Richard Runciman Terry. Pp. 206. Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'How to Teach Class Singing.' By Granville Humphreys. Pp. 155. William Reeves, 3*s.* 6*d.* paper; 5*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

'Questions on Mozart's Piano Sonatas.' By F. Helena Marks. Pp. 60. William Reeves, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'Berlioz: Four Works.' By Tom S. Wotton. Pp. 52. ('Musical Pilgrim' series, edited by Sir Arthur Somervell.) Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'Modern Gramophones and Electrical Reproducers.' By P. Wilson and G. W. Webb. With a Foreword by Compton Mackenzie. Pp. 272. Cassell, 10*s.* 6*d.*

Verdi's 'Aida,' unabridged, was given at Sedgley—a Black Country village—by the local operatic and dramatic society, on September 14, 17, and 19. With the exception of one soloist all were local singers. The moving spirit was Mr. Sydney Butler, who provided the accompaniments on the pianoforte. The performances reached a good standard, and the audiences were crowded and enthusiastic.

New Music

We owe such a debt to Prof. Otakar Sevcik that it would be gratifying to be able to give his latest work—a 'School of Interpretation' (Pazdirek, Brno)—praise similar to that bestowed on his deservedly famous 'School of Technique.' But technique and interpretation are two very different branches of knowledge, and those who excel in the one do not necessarily excel in the other. When Prof. Sevcik's best pupil, Mr. Kubelik, tackled a piece of purely technical interest the voice of the violin was like that of an angel, but when he 'interpreted' Beethoven it was more like poor Poll's. In any case, interpretation is so much part of individual temperament that it is difficult to see how one can seriously maintain that all students must aim at uniform reading. The results would inevitably prove the system fallacious, for no two players have ever performed the same piece exactly alike.

But perhaps I am doing Prof. Sevcik an injustice, and it may be that this collection is meant purely as a field wherein the admirable lessons of the 'School of Technique' can be put in practice. The truth is that those not conversant with the Bohemian tongue must find the English translation here appended not very illuminating. The very title, 'School of Interpretation for the Violin on a Melodic Basis,' is distinctly puzzling. I have never heard of interpretation on a melodic basis, nor of violins with a melodic basis. Can it be that the author means that his only concern is the treatment of melody? Some of the general rules are excellent—some, a little disconcerting. Take this, for instance: 'In order to play rhythmically one should often count aloud the eighths and then the quarters, never beat time by stamping one's foot, and very often march about when playing a phrase by heart. . . .' Is it really necessary to march and count aloud in order to play rhythmically? And could anything be more clumsily put than this: 'On the transition finger. The finger which was used before the change, changes the position. As soon as the shifting finger reaches the third position the fourth finger in its turn is placed so that only a slight gliding of the shifting finger is to be noticed'? Whatever the worth of this 'School,' it certainly deserves a better translation.

Some slight amendments could perhaps be suggested also in the letterpress of 'The Oxford 'Cello Method,' by William E. Brockway (Oxford University Press), which, the author tells us, 'aims particularly at the development of the long bow, accurate reading, and a good formation of the left hand.' On the whole, Mr. Brockway is much more reticent than Prof. Sevcik, and his remarks are more direct. If he errs at all it is because he follows the tradition of those writers of schools and methods, who in the past gave little attention to the need for short, logical statements. Yet the need is urgent; too many instructors indulge in long phrases when they should utter brief commands. But the exercises reveal a thoughtful mind, and should achieve the purpose for which they were evolved.

F. B.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Leos Janàcek is a composer who, almost unknown in this country, has been universally admired in his own—Czecho-Slovakia. His Suite for two violins, viola, 'cello, and double-bass (Pazdirek, Brno) shows him a thoughtful, accurate worker, gifted with some originality, and not above taking a hint or two from the great masters. It is to be noted that, at least in this score, he uses only two clefs for the 'cello—G and F. If this represents a conviction that simplification is desirable, Janàcek's idea is likely to appeal to many. Anything that tends to reduce misunderstanding must be welcomed, especially to-day when new musical centres seem to spring out of nothing —like ' Brno,' a name which I shall never dare to pronounce.

F. B.

UNISON

Some of the late Charles Wood's manuscripts are being published. We could wish that this gifted writer had issued more music in his lifetime, for he had grace and deep sensibility. ' The Trees in England ' (poem by de la Mare) has quiet happiness and peace in its flowing lines: happy thoughts, clothed with music as seemly as is the tree with leaves. His ' Sleep, my baby,' is another six-eight, suitable for quite small children; the dotted quaver-semiquaver occurs a few times. A pretty little song. Henry Ley's ' The Dandelion ' is issued both for unison and two-part singing (two editions). Like the flower, it is ' brave and gay,' needing a sprightly spirit in the singers and a neat finger at the pianoforte. E. T. Chapman's ' To-day ' sets Carlyle, didactic. Elder children will like its pleasantly pious flavour. It could appropriately be sung in Sunday School as well as on week-days (Year Book Press).

Four of Cecil Sharman's neat little Grade 1 (quite easy) songs are here: ' Doctor Foster,' ' Baa, baa, black sheep,' ' My Story,' and ' I had a little pony.' The first is quick and light, in six-eight; the second, in four-four, at moderate speed, has some semibreves, to be well held; the third steps dapperly in six-eight, with dotted quaver-semiquaver action; and the last is an engaging trifle, with jumps of fifths, taken briskly. Edgar Moy's ' Spring Time ' is an action-song for fairies, with scope for smiles and simple dance-steps. It suits tiny children. Eric Thiman's ' The Piper ' (Blake) has staccato work, and some smooth phrasing—good contrasts. A developed sense of mood is necessary to do it well. A neat, nicely-turned song. Geoffrey Shaw's ' There is a spirit ' is for massed singing (see it inset as supplement to the August Musical Times). It has agreeable freedom of bar-rhythm, and would serve well at school concerts, as an uplifting theme. One of the bargains still to be had in these expensive days is Book 63 of Novello's ' School Songs,' which contains eighteen songs by Handel, not only some familiar airs from ' The Messiah,' ' Where'er you walk,' ' Let the bright seraphim,' and so forth, but songs suave and gay from ' L'Allegro,' ' Theodora,' ' Alcina ' (the cool charm of ' Verdant Meadows '), and other less-known works. There is still much to be done ere we have the best of Handel dug out of the forgotten oratorios and operas, and dug into our concert programmes. A book such as this should be in the hands of soloists as well as of able school choirs. Some of the songs have runs, and so are difficult, but such sweet delights as ' Let me wander not unseen ' and ' Art thou troubled ? ' are well within the capacity of smooth phrasers who know how to stroke the music. Two shillings is the price (Novello).

W. R. A.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

Bantock's ' Rilloby-Rill ' (Newbolt) is for s.s.—an amiable, well-shaded and varied, imaginative song, simple enough if its marks and signs are well prepared and graded (Williams).

Dr. Fellowes has edited Byrd's round ' Hey ho, to the greenwood ' (three voices). This combines six-eight and three-four in a simple way. A useful addition to the list of lively canons. Dr. Kitson's ' A May Song ' (s.s.) has particularly happy words by Margaret L. Woods, and enticingly sets them with good spirit. The pianoforte part needs to flow easily (semiquavers, in six-eight). E. T. Chapman's ' A Cradle Song ' (Padraic Colum's ' O men from the fields ') is really a death-song (s.s., or s.a.). In the right hands it could be made impressive in its simple way. It is suited, of course, to elder scholars. Hilda Grieveson's two songs ' Merry, merry sparrow ' and ' An Old Evening Prayer ' are respectively chirpy and serene. The first is for s.s., and has running quavers, which must not be accented too squarely. The other, for s.s.s. (or s.s.a.), is unaccompanied, and needs quiet, sustained, delicately modulated tone (Year Book Press).

George Rathbone's ' Dream, baby, dream ' (words by Barry Cornwall), is for s.s. In twelve-eight, it needs nice long phrasing and creamy tone. C. Sharman's ' Tell me where is fancy bred ' (s.s.) moves daintily, with good variety of rhythm. Some neat avoidances of obvious accents make me wish that Mr. Sharman had not brought ' in ' (at ' It is engendered in the eyes ') on the first of a bar. Handel's ' Prepare then, ye immortal choir,' from ' Semele,' is issued as a s.s. duet. It has runs, and in three pages shows diversity of speed. The tone is mostly gentle. It must, of course, be very fluent, and the breath must be a well-trained servant (Novello).

' Midsummer,' by Evelyn Sharpe (s.s.), is tuneful but rather square-cut. It speaks of Cupid and Pierrot, so is suitable for older children—girls, I should say. Herbert Popple's ' Lullaby ' takes a capital little fancy of William Barnes, and gives it smooth if somewhat obvious melody, in which the parts (s.s.) weave agreeably (Cramer).

W. R. A.

MALE-VOICE

Coleridge-Taylor's old favourite, ' The Lee Shore,' is issued for t.t.b.b. It is in a fashion that once held almost omnipotent sway. At all competition festivals this, or some other piece equally well constructed for its purpose, was to be heard. Now we have a wider choice, but many choirs will like ' The Lee Shore ' as well as ever. I cannot say that the final outburst of Hood's, ' O God ! to think man ever comes too near his home,' has any more meaning for me than it used to have. It seems to be one of those thoughts that mean to be powerful, and just miss meaning anything in particular (Novello).

Armstrong Gibbs has generally something meaty for male choirs. Here is his ' Into Exile ' (t.t.b.b.), a march with an agitato middle and an effectively indecisive end. It is not difficult, and the idiom is not at all abstruse. 'Westward Ho' is written (words and music) by C. F. C. Candlish (T.T.B.B.). It is in an old-fashioned style, making its points with a yeo-ho-ho and all that. With a choir that can heave-ho and 'ha-ha,' and sing with conviction about ducats and Dons and such-like, it should go down well enough, but it is not remarkable for much more than vigour and noise, and tunes that we need not take off the hat to. Stuart Young's 'Ships that pass in the night' is for T.T.B.B. (unaccompanied, like all these male pieces except the last-mentioned). It is only a couple of dozen bars long, and its 1st tenor part is monotonous, the harmony squeezing out from below in a way I do not care for. For its hymn-tuney style it may be liked by choirs that want something easy. Maurice Jacobson sets Hood's humorous song about the visit of Mrs. Skinner, under the neat title 'Truth in Parentheses.' There is room for characterisation, and a touch of the sardonic. The indication at the head is 'Unctuously—but gracefully.' That is to say, the serpent's tongue in the smiling face (Curwen).

W. R. A.

MIXED-VOICE

Yet another setting of 'Music, when soft voices die,' by G. N. Leeds (S.A.T.B.). This has a good deal of success, I think, though, like most settings, it does not quite catch the varying speeds of the word-music in this short—desperately short—masterpiece of a poem. Philip Tomblings arranges 'Barbara Allan' for S.A.T.B. with the usual (and quite well contrived) 'Ah' effects. This is thoughtful work. Edgar Bainton's 'A Shepherd's Roundelay' (S.A.T.B.) takes a poem from Spenser, a merry affair that needs a bouncing spirit, like that of the maid who 'roved at me with glancing eye.' It is shaped rather like an old ballad, hearty and repetitive. Charles Wood's 'Hence away, begone!' is a setting of one of Longfellow's translations from the French—an injunction to carking care to flee. The piece has an eager spring and the parts are simply disposed. It is likely to be a favourite (Year Book Press).

D. Cleghorn Thomson sets Ben Jonson's 'The Noble Nature' ('It is not growing like a tree'). This is an excellent thing to put to music, and the composer has adopted a sturdy rhythm that fits comfortably the strong, upstanding sentiment (Cramer).

Sir Walford Davies's latest short cantata is a setting of Alice Meynell's 'Christ in the Universe,' for S. and T. solo, chorus, and orchestra (Op. 55). This was written for the Worcester Festival this year. The poem is not easy to treat, and some may feel that it is not quite the best kind of poetry for setting to music. The utterance, detached and sectional, does not preserve the poet's word-music, and though lofty in impulse, has not (so far as the small score shows) a powerful melodic appeal. There are some well-devised choral effects, as may well be expected from so experienced a scorer. These dispositions of masses and dynamics make up a good deal of the interest, so far as this copy shows it; but it is to be remembered, of course, that no such composition can fully be judged on a pianoforte score (Novello, 1*s*.).

W. R. A.

CHURCH MUSIC

Those looking for a simple, attractive setting of the Communion Service might examine one by H. A. Chambers, in the key of A flat (Novello). The music is tuneful, and while the part-writing is never difficult, there is plenty to interest all the voices. The setting contains Benedictus and Agnus Dei, and both forms of the Kyrie.

New numbers of the Year Book Press Series of Anthems and Church Music, edited by Martin Akerman, include a song anthem for trebles, 'The Way, the Truth, the Life'—a musicianly setting by J. B. Johnson of words by G. Hoyland—and three anthems by Charles Wood. 'How dazzling fair,' for S.A.T.B. and organ, is a setting in three verses—one in simple faux-bourdon—of words by Rev. G. R. Woodward (after Johann Scheffler, 1624-77). It is an impressive little work, founded on the melody of Psalm 1 in the French Psalter. It is quite easy, and there is an interesting and effective organ part. 'Father, All-holy,' words translated from the Latin by Rev. G. R. Woodward, is a motet for unaccompanied singing. The first two verses are sung by four solo voices; for the next verse the chorus divides, the three upper voices of the second chorus singing the tune; in the last verse the choruses unite, dividing again a few bars before the end in an imposing finish. The writing is nowhere difficult. 'O be joyful in the Lord' is a straightforward, robust setting for S.A.T.B. and organ, adapted from the 'Old 100th' tune, with the melody in the tenor for the middle part. Much of it is for unison singing, and it is all quite simple.

Choirs acquainted with the numerous plainsong settings of the Canticles with faux-bourdons from Byrd, Gibbons, and others of the old polyphonic school may be interested in 'Four Plainsong Settings of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis' with verses in faux-bourdon by Alec Rowley. These are well done, and should sound effective (Oxford University Press).

Two arrangements from Bach's 'Forty-eight' will be examined with interest by conductors of good choirs. For his 'Fugal Kyrie' Gerrard Williams has gone to the stately five-part fugue in C sharp minor (No. 4 of the 'Forty-eight'), which he has arranged for unaccompanied double chorus (S.S.A.T.B.). Christe eleison is sung to the third subject of the fugue (commencing bar 49), and is confined throughout to the second chorus. An adequate performance of this fine arrangement by a big chorus should be worth hearing (Paxton). Of the Fugue in E major (No. 9 of Book 2) Prof. Tovey has written: 'With the exception of two outlying bass-notes this whole fugue is singable by an unaccompanied four-part chorus or vocal quartet, and has in fact been so sung with exquisite effect, being actually easier for voices than almost any of Bach's vocal works.' From this fugue Greville Cooke has arranged an Anthem, 'God is our Hope and Strength,' for mixed choir and organ (or pianoforte) accompaniment. The opening is for unaccompanied voices (pp), and considerable variety of treatment is called for before the final climax (fff) is reached. The issue also includes the Prelude (for organ or pianoforte), and the orchestral score and parts to both the Prelude and Fugue can be had on hire (Joseph Williams).

G. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

For once in a way I begin this month's Columbia review with a set of vocal records, because they are easily the best thing in a parcel that is otherwise a bit below standard, I feel. One of the sensations of last year's gramophone output was the record (I think only one was made) of Sir George Henschel singing a couple of Schubert's songs. All the superlatives that were uttered in praise of that achievement may be applied to the set of four records now issued, and even then one feels more still might be said. The songs recorded are nine. On 10-inch records we have Schubert's 'Der Leiermann' and 'Das Wandern'; Schumann's 'Ich Grolle Nicht' and 'Lied eines Schmiedes,' and Schubert's 'Lachen und Weinen'; and on 12-inch records Schubert's 'Gruppe aus dem Tartarus' and Schumann's 'Die beiden Grenadiere'; and Loewe's 'Heinrich der Vogler' and 'Der Erl-König.' All are sung in German, and of course accompanied by the singer himself.

Gramophonists will no doubt choose the record that contains their favourite song; personally, my own choice is for the two Loewe ballads. We have always been told that Loewe's setting of the 'Erl-King' is a fine thing that happens to have been killed by a finer. But I feel that for once in a way Jack is not merely as good as his master, but a bit better. There is more atmosphere in the Loewe setting than in the Schubert, though that may largely be due to the extraordinarily vivid characterisation of the singer. He makes it positively uncanny. All these records, by the way, give the curious effect of the singer being in the room with us—a touch of intimacy and proximity that I do not remember having observed hitherto to anything like the same extent in vocal recording. The accompaniments are all that we expect them to be—crisp and full of point; and the pianoforte tone is well above the average. I am glad that the label bears the legend under Sir George's name, 'born 1850; recorded 1928.' It may be doubted whether the history of the art can produce a parallel to such veteran accomplishment as this in singing, playing, and interpretation. It is not likely to be equalled in the future, and in a sense we may hope it will not be. For the plain fact has to be stated: singing such as this in almost every respect is streets ahead of any that we hear from well-placed contemporary singers in their prime. The presence in the concert field of half a dozen veterans equal to Sir George would put most of the younger singers out of work.

The above pæan delivered, I must now regretfully proceed to much more qualified praise, and sometimes even to frank fault-finding. The 'Hebrides' Overture—surely one of the best things Mendelssohn ever wrote—is played by the New Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Henry Wood. I find this rather patchy, excellent passages being discounted by some fluffiness in the quieter moments. A fair record, and no more. It fills a record and a half, the remaining side being given up to the 'Spring Song' and the 'Bee's Wedding,' which come off excellently.

Praise of the diluted sort must go to the records of the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, played by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Oscar Fried. The Overture has the right lightness and quietness, but it is played much too fast; the craze for speed is even more evident in the Russian Dance, and not absent from the March. The Russian Dance becomes sheer noisy muddle. Noisiness, in fact, spoils most of the loud playing in these records. The successes of the set are the Arab and Chinese Dances and 'Mirlitons,' which have real atmosphere and clarity; and the final Flower Dance is also good. For the benefit of readers who wish to obtain their favourites only, I mention that the first record contains the Overture, the March, Russian Dance, and 'Sugar Plum Fairy' (the last-named is delightful except for the fact that the celeste is far too loud at times—so much so that it suggests a keyboard instrument in which anvils are used instead of tuning forks); the second, Arab and Chinese Dances and 'Mirlitons'; and the third, the Flower Dance.

The fault of noisiness is a blot on the records of Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome,' played by the Milan Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Molajoli. Some of the effect is piercing; at the beginning of the 'Triton Fountain' one visualises the piccolo player walking up to the microphone and doing his da——, I should have said, blowing his hardest.

A good military band record is that of the B.B.C. Wireless, conducted by B. Walton O'Donnell, playing transcriptions of Grieg's 'Dance of the Dwarfs' and Scharwenka's once-hackneyed Polish Dance No. 1. The only fault I have to find is that Mr. O'Donnell is inclined to over-point. Notice, for example, the exaggerated pull up on the emphatic pairs of chords in the Polish Dance. This band is so good in every department, and its music is so invariably well chosen and well arranged, that one wishes for more straight playing than it is usually allowed to give us.

One may praise practically without reserve the set of records of John Ireland's 'Cello Sonata, played by Sala with the composer at the pianoforte. Music of this sort requires some acquaintance, and probably only the slow movement will make much of an immediate impression on the average gramophonist. But as one of the best examples of Ireland's work, it should be persevered with. Sala is first-rate. The pianoforte tone is of no more than average excellence. Mr. Ireland is heard to better advantage as a pianist in the solo with which the eighth side of the four records is filled—his own 'April,' a piece in an attractive vein that many of us wish Ireland would discover more frequently.

The Dolmetsch family are heard in Dering's Fantasy for six viols; Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Dolmetsch play Morley's two-part Fantasy, 'Il doloroso,' and Arnold and Rudolph Dolmetsch the same composer's 'La Caccia.' I wish I could pump up some enthusiasm for these performances. But I feel that the tone is unvital and the style altogether too tentative and monotonous to be convincing. There is fine stuff in the music, however—unexpected massiveness and sonority in the six-part work and delightful counterpoint in the two-part Fantasies. At the risk of being dubbed a Philistine, however, I must express my preference for hearing such works transcribed for modern stringed instruments and played by first-rate performers. The interest here is almost solely antiquarian, and antiquarian interest is often a mere blight.

Perhaps I expect too much from records of Schumann's 'Scenes of Childhood,' played by Fanny Davies. Anyway, they disappoint me somewhat. At times the style and touch seem too strenuous and heavy for such little pieces.

The Don Cossacks are even more mannered than usual in their performance of Tchaikovsky's 'In the Church' and a Cossack Cradle Song. The former is distinguished by the usual concertina-like crescendos, and the Cradle Song is surely like no cradle song that ever was. It is loud and excited, and some of the solo work is grotesque. There may, of course, be some justification in the text for these strange goings on. But I doubt it, for babies being babies all the world over, there must needs be a family likeness between all lullabies.

The vocal records begin well with one of Isobel Baillie singing 'Hear ye, Israel,' from 'Elijah.' Miss Baillie has a very attractive, expressive, musical voice, and that makes her singing enjoyable; but I do not feel that she gives us all the variety this aria demands. There should surely be more difference in colour and style, as well as in power, between the two contrasted sections. Her words are no more than fair.

Here are three vocal records rather out of the ordinary, and of a type that cannot be judged solely by the ordinary canons of singing. Patuffa Kennedy-Fraser sings a couple of 'Songs of the Hebrides,' accompanying herself on the harp. I do not feel myself qualified to discuss this record, as the beauty of Hebridean folk-song has somehow hitherto evaded me, save in a few instances. The loss is mine, no doubt. I can only say that my insensibility is not owing to lack of acquaintance, as I have heard many of these songs sung by excellent Scots singers. Now and then I have struck one that seems to deserve all the encomiums pronounced on the type by Mr. Newman and others whose opinion is worth having, but as a whole I have always felt that they are over-rated.

A record of Richard Hayward singing a couple of Irish songs—'The Bonny Bunch of Roses' and 'The Old Orange Flute'—collected by himself, suggests possibilities. Mr. Hayward has a poor voice, and uses it poorly. One of the songs is of the 'Bonyparty' type that was popular in England at the time of the threatened invasion, and the other one of those semi-political, humorous songs of which Ireland has produced so many; and they are not remarkable either for wit in the words or beauty in the music. Yet this unsophisticated singing has an appeal of its own, and makes me think that here is a mine that might well be worked by recording companies. I have heard in some of the remoter parts of Ireland folk-singing of a most fascinating description. I believe it would be worth the while of a company to send an agent prowling round some of the competitive Festivals at which this excellent kind of singing is a common feature. If the best of these born folk-singers could be induced to face the microphone without loss of naturalness, the result would be some very attractive and unusual records.

William McEwen, tenor, is what is known as a 'Singing Evangelist.' My concern, however, is not with his evangelism but with his singing, and no amount of religious fervour can atone for bad singing when the performance is put before the public on a commercial footing. Mr. McEwen cannot have it both ways. At a gospel meeting he is an evangelist; per gramophone he is a public singer. I might possibly be edified at the meeting; I am certainly repelled by the record. He is heard in 'The Wonderful Story' and in 'I heard the voice of Jesus say,' sung to the tune of 'Drink to me only with thine eyes'—a bad fit. There are possibilities in the voice, but the singing is crude, and almost every elementary fault in singing is present. Frankly, I see no use whatever in publishing a record of this kind of performance. It is both unedifying and inartistic, lacking, as it does, the naïveté that makes so many negro 'spirituals' at least tolerable and sometimes even moving.

H.M.V.

At the time of writing only a small consignment of H.M.V. records has arrived; probably the remainder of the usual month's output will turn up too late for notice in this number. Among the few received, however, is a real prize in the set made by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Toscanini. The work chosen is one that, so far as I remember, has not hitherto been recorded—the 'Clock' Symphony of Haydn. We have been told so much of Toscanini's super-excellence both as drill-sergeant and interpreter that I approached this set of records with more than usual interest. Can the great man live up to his reputation? Let it be said at once that he does. These records give us not only some superlative orchestral playing, but also recording of an unusually high standard. For example, the string tone always sounds like string tone, even in the loudest passages; the power gradation is extraordinarily wide, and I cannot recall better soft playing than we get here, both from the strings and wood-wind. Reviewers have long been demanding a real pianissimo—not an almost inaudible effect of fluffiness, but real telling soft tone. Here we have it over and over again. So far as technical details are concerned, it need hardly be said that the performance is all we expect from a crack American orchestra made to extend itself to the utmost, as every orchestra conducted by Toscanini seems to be made to do. I find only one noticeable defect in the matter of balance. In the Trio of the Minuet the theme when played by the bass instruments is swamped by the loud chords of the upper strings. Among the finest bits of playing and recording is the fugal passage at the end of the Finale, which for delicacy, clarity, and point, would be hard to beat. One adverse criticism that may be made applies to practically all modern performances of Haydn and Mozart: the orchestra seems to be too large. I do not know the size of the force engaged, but certainly there is undue disparity between the delicate passages and the tutti effects. I hope some recording company will soon give us some Haydn and Mozart with the right kind of orchestra, that is, one of the chamber type. Save for this tendency to over-massiveness in the fortes, there can be nothing but praise for this fine set of records. I add that the opening movement, the Andante, and the Minuet and Trio, each fill one record; the Finale takes one side of the fourth record, the remaining half being given to a performance of the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Scherzo that is also first-rate, above all in the wood-wind playing, and especially the flute.

Mark Hambourg plays a transcription of the Bach Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor, a version and interpretation that will probably please everybody but those who know the work well, either as players or hearers, in its original form. He gives us the showiness and much of the fire, but (as is perhaps inevitable in a pianoforte transcription) we do not get the size as well.

DECCA

With its third batch of records this new company leaps at once to the front in orchestral recording. The 'Bartered Bride' Overture, played by the Symphony Orchestra conducted by Julian Clifford, is one of the best bits of orchestral recording I have heard for many a long day. The performance is first-rate, too. An all-too-rare virtue is the excellence of the string tone; the power never degenerates into noise, and the clarity of the quiet rapid playing in the fugal portions is admirable.

John Ansell conducts the Symphony Orchestra in Lord Berners's 'Fugue.' Here, again, the playing is good and the recording of an excellent standard. I can't say that the music itself strikes me as being worth while. Either the fugue is to be taken seriously as a fugue, or it is a parody. If the former, it strikes me (after several hearings) as a poor specimen in many ways; if the latter, it suffers, like most parodies and jokes, by repetition.

The standard of recording is well maintained in Svendsen's 'Carnival in Paris,' conducted by Leslie Heward. This fills three sides, the remaining portion giving us the 'Nuptial March' from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Le Coq d'Or.'

The Decca Company is making a capital start in thus getting off the beaten track both in regard to choice of music and in bringing forward some of the younger and, so far, less prominent conductors. Their confidence in the latter respect is fully justified; and if the standard of playing and recording shown this month is maintained, the older companies must look to their laurels.

It is unusual to find two solo performers recorded on one disc. Here we have two violinists, on one side Hans Kindler playing the well-known Délibes's 'Passepied,' and on the other Frank Howard in Herbert Hughes's effective arrangements of two Irish tunes—'Kathleen O'More' and 'Katie's Reel.' Of the two I prefer Kindler. Mr. Howard is too consistently heavy in tone. The unnamed pianist is perhaps the best artist of the three. His (or her) playing is both sensitive and full of point, and the pianoforte tone is exemplary.

Harold Foster has an excellent baritone voice with bass leanings, but his singing is a little on the monotonous side; and like most possessors of substantial voices, he does not fully realise the value and importance of lightening the tone from time to time. He sings Fothergill's 'The Emigrant' and Coates's 'Stonecracker John,' the latter being the better performance. Again the accompanying and the pianoforte tone are unusually good.

I ought to add that one of the best features in this batch of records is the greatly improved surface. The amount of scratch is now below the average. On all grounds, then, Decca is to be congratulated upon its rapid progress.

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Of a small batch of excellent quality, a four-handed arrangement of Delius's 'The March of Spring' (No. 4, from 'North Country Sketches') provides the greatest interest musically. The other sketches were reviewed in these columns some time ago, and these set a high standard of achievement which is maintained in the last of the set. Percy Grainger and Ralph Leopold give a really first-rate performance, and the reproduction is good (7192).

It seems hardly necessary to comment on Josef Hofmann's playing of the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 2, No. 3. The artist's name is sufficient guarantee of something good—and here it is (7305). Lastly, there is a capital performance by Rudolph Ganz of Moszkowsky's 'Malaguena' from 'Boabdil' (7311).

Apart from numerous dance rolls, there are two Themodist rolls—Cui's 'Romanzetta,' Op. 36, No. 6 (T30440*a*), and Liszt's 'Soirées de Vienne,' No. 4, in E flat (T30441*c*). Both these are of the good, light type, well cut and edited, and giving the player-pianist plenty of scope for careful power gradation and expression generally.

AMPICO

For the first time I have had the pleasure of hearing some Ampico recordings. These, like the Animatic and Duo-Art, can be heard to advantage only on their own instruments. Ampico rolls seem to be able to reproduce every possible degree of tone-colour, phrasing, &c., and in so fluent a manner that the reproduction of the artist's playing is almost uncannily faithful. I found the best example of this in Robert Schmitz's excellent playing of Debussy's 'Jardins sous la pluie' (68943*h*) wherein the pedalling is specially good. The varied tone and details are beautifully reproduced. Such a roll as this leaves even the best gramophone records of piano-playing far behind, if only on the score of tone quality—the weak point of the gramophone where the pianoforte is concerned.

Excellent, too, is Friml's 'Chanson' (Mélodie) played by the composer. This is an attractive piece of the good light type (68083*f*).

There is also an arrangement of the 'Londonderry Air' by Wilbur Chenoweth, played by himself (70103*f*). This does not make a good pianoforte solo because the instrument can hardly sustain the tone sufficiently. Chenoweth's rather thick treatment is aggravated by the sentimentality of the playing. The actual reproduction leaves nothing to be desired.

The rolls mentioned above are new, and not available for library use for three months.

Of two others chosen at random from the catalogue, one is of Godowsky playing Chopin's Polonaise, Op. 53, in A flat. All the rapid passage-work is a delight, especially that in which the left hand deals in octaves (56336*h*). The other is Levitzki's 'Valse,' a delicious trifle, played by the composer.

BLÜTHNER

Paula Hegner's playing of a couple of Chopin's Preludes—Nos. 20 and 7—takes first place this month. We have learnt to expect of her a high standard, and she rarely fails us (56363).

There is a good, sound performance of two Brahms Intermezzi (Nos. 3 and 4) by Artur Schnabel (55745).

Franz Wagner's playing of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 79) is disappointing. Neither in the Presto nor in the Andante is his rhythm good; in the latter especially this weakness is irritating. Other rolls made by this artist have been of such a quality as to lead us to expect something much better than this (58370 and 58371).

The Gottschalk type of piece has dated considerably, but there is still attraction in his 'Caprice Espagnol,' and it has the advantage of a capital performance by Chop-Groenevelt (59750).

There are two pieces by Pierné, both well played by the composer. 'Cache-Cache' (55568) is picturesque, but the Mazurka (57104) is rather dull.

Chabrier's 'Idylle' from 'Pièces Pittoresques' belies its title, and proves to be uninteresting, though Edward Bisley does what can be done for it so far as performance goes (51763).

The same player is not so successful in Chopin's Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4, in A, in which he makes the accompanying repeated chords rather too heavy; and his lack of variation in tone-colour makes the monotony of the music too evident (55777).

D. G.

Occasional Notes

Among the unprecedented stream of concert prospectuses for the season just started, that of the Royal Philharmonic Society still claims the chief interest of the London musical public. The arrangements for 1929-30 show even more enterprise and variety than usual. Eight concerts will be given, the first (October 24), forming part of the Delius Festival. Two programmes are still to be settled. In the remaining five we note the following new and unfamiliar works: Meditation on the Choral 'Svatý Václav,' Suk (November 14); Orchestral Suite No. 7, Hauer, and Rhapsody for violin and orchestra, Bartók—first performance in England (November 28); Symphony No. 4, Sibelius (January 16); Symphony No. 2, in D minor, Dvorák (February 20); Overture, Elegy, and Rondo, Bax; and Fantasy on Sussex Folk-Songs for violoncello and orchestra, Vaughan Williams—first performance (March 13). The conductors are Beecham, Talich, Scherchen, Cameron, Elgar, Barbirolli, and Busch. The soloists include Sammons, Petri, Szigeti, Schnabel, Cortot, and Casals.

A correspondent writes: 'It is surprising to find how little honour the world does to some of its greatest men, even in France, which is popularly supposed to be the home of hero-worship. But apparently when a statue has been erected, the "Marseillaise" has been sung, and a ministerial discourse has been delivered, the Great Man is forgotten as rapidly there as anywhere else. I was at Grenoble the other day, and I tried to get a picture post-card of Berlioz's statue. I tried about a dozen shops, in vain. In one of them the young lady who was serving said, "Ah, ce Berlioz. We used to have cards of his statue, but as nobody seemed to be interested in him, we have given up keeping them." She appeared to be intelligent, but spoke as if she did not quite know who or what Berlioz was. And yet Grenoble is supposed to be proud of him.'

The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music on Mr. C. Lee Williams. It was a happy thought on the part of His Grace to arrange that the fact should be announced during the closing concert of the Three Choirs Festival. What Dr. Lee Williams has done for the Festival in the past as a musician, and what he does for it to-day as one of the kindliest and most generous of hosts, only regular attendants at the Three Choirs fully know. We add our hearty congratulations to the chorus that will be showered on him.

From a report of a meeting of the Leyton Gramophone Society in The Gramophone (Radio and Music) Critic:

> 'Mozart was dealt with. Here we had the Overture to the "Marriage of Figaro," and "Isis and Osiris." And Handel, the ever-popular excerpt from Samson, "Softly awakes my heart."'

The seventh series of Mr. Robert Mayer's Concerts for Children opens at Central Hall, Westminster, on October 9. The orchestra will be led by Mr. Samuel Kutcher and conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent. The soloists will include Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Harriet Cohen, Mr. Albert Sammons, Mr. Artur Schnabel, and the Brosa Quartet. There will be at least one Bach work in each programme; modern English music will be given a good show; and some Beethoven and other symphonies will be performed complete. The prospectus says that this last feature is 'an advance on the past, when only parts of symphonies were performed.' It may be so, but we have doubts about its wisdom where an audience of children is concerned.

New light on Felix:

> 'Mendelssohn, though himself incapable of hearing, was instrumental in bringing charm and delight to his more fortunate fellow-men by his divine sonatas and musical compositions. —Antipodean Newspaper.

The Philharmonic Choir issues an appeal for an increased number of Associate Members. The beginning of the present season marks the completion of ten years' work distinguished by both enterprise and achievement. As we said in a recent issue, there is probably no choir in existence that performs, season after season, so many new, unfamiliar, and exacting works. This is another way of saying that it deserves, in an unusual degree, the support of the general musical public. For obvious reasons, its progressive policy and its high standard cannot be maintained on the box-office proceeds alone.

Associate Members not only give it financial stability; they also receive good value in the form of reserved and transferable tickets, and in the privilege of admission to all the weekly rehearsals (Guildhouse, Eccleston Square, Wednesdays from 6 to 8). These rehearsals provide fine opportunities for conductors, teachers, and singers, who wish to absorb instruction in the most direct and practical fashion, and they also enable keen amateurs to become familiar with much fine and out-of-the-way music. The hon. secretary is Mr. D. Ritson Smith, 70, Esmond Road, Bedford Park, W.4.

'I can only think up two lines of words,' said the tired song-writer. 'Guess I'll have to make it a "spiritual."'—Detroit News.

A correspondent tells us that he overheard the following in the Ostend Kursaal recently:

English Visitor, seeing programme announcement of 'Séance d'Orgue' (organ recital): 'What does that mean?'

Belgian Waiter (after due thought, pointing to the organ): 'The man up there, he press the big machine.'

'Why does that man next door keep hammering on only four notes of the pianoforte?' 'He 's very conscientious. So far he has only made one payment on it.'—Christian Science Monitor.

From the prospectus of the Paganini School of Music, Hawick:

'. . . The old and original School. Everything made so simple and clear. You simply cannot help but play.

Violin, Banjo-Mandoline, Banjos.

From 2*s.* 6*d.* per week covers the cost of both instrument and lesson. After thirty-six weekly payments the outfit becomes pupils' own property.

The outfit is worth the money.

The tuition is worth double the money.

Charming new models this season. Unapproachable. Come and see them. The classes are Instructive, Enjoyable, Social. Unequalled for Progress and Pleasure.

Both Classical and Popular Music. We specialise in the Popular.

Boys, learn the Banjo, and be prepared for the next boom in jazz.

Enrolment Fee, One Shilling.'

And much more in the same strain. But we note with surprise that the 'enrolment of pupils' is advertised to take place in the Public Library. Presumably these are a few musicians among the ratepayers of Hawick. If so, they should tell the Library Committee frankly that Prof. ——, the proprietor of the Paganini banjo-shop, should enrol his customers at his place of business, not in a municipal building.

Mabelle was a poetess,
But she married a plumber man;
'More cash in the pipes of a plumber,' she says,
'Than in the pipes of Pan.'

—Florida Times-Union.

As a part of the Bi-Centenary renovation of St. George's Church, Bloomsbury, the organ has been revoiced, &c., by Messrs. Willis & Sons. Recitals will be given on October 17 and 31, at 8 p.m., by Mr. G. D. Cunningham and Dr. Ernest Bullock.

Teachers' Department

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD PIANOFORTE EXAMINATIONS FOR 1930

By Ernest Fowles

The Associated Board pursues its valiant way from year to year. In view of the present trend of public fancy in relation to personal effort in music, its activities deserve to be fully recognised, not only by musicians, but by all who have at heart the social uplifting of their country. It is true that the examination system is often abused—by heads of schools, who submit the results as wholly indicative of the state of musical culture in their respective establishments; by teachers, who allow their work to be measured entirely by their number of 'successes'; by parents, who insist that their children shall enter despite the protests of far-seeing and capable teachers. All this is true, but we live in the most imperfect of all imperfect worlds, and it is our duty to acknowledge with gratitude every movement of assuagement which seems to promise some modification of the imperfections.

For this reason we have to bear with the examination system as it is at present devised. Some day a development will occur; when an examination in music will aim at discovering how far the ear of a candidate has been trained in habits of listening to music; when the reading of an example of notation, with some mental preparation allowed beforehand, will form an essential part of the programme; when an attempt will be made to get at the attitude of the individual towards the art itself. But that time is not yet. It is coming; but, for the moment, wisdom perforce must linger.

This year's choice of test-pieces is of high musical worth. One or two sentimental compositions are included, but the mass is worthy of the Board's traditions. The grading is not always of the best. In some cases, music is provided which clearly lies outside the experience of average candidates, and which, as a matter of course, leads to the execution of many notes with no understanding of the spirit behind them. When so much rests upon the act of pure performance (ninety marks, as against twelve for ear-tests and fifteen for reading notation), it is impossible to exercise too great care in the selection of material. Moreover, it should be remembered that the music has often to be held in the mind during many months, and that, to avoid a condition of sheer mental weariness, it ought to possess a side which appeals, or which is likely to appeal, to the average student. A comparison with poetry at once suggests itself. No one would knowingly inflict dull lines on a child, or expect him to pore over them continually for months on end.

The following notes are of a general nature, and have for their sole aim the arousing of interest in the music quâ music. They are not authoritative, except in so far as a life devoted to music and the things of music may seem to lend a species of authority to the counsels and opinions expressed.

Points may arise which call for further help. Questions may be addressed to the Editor of the Musical Times, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1. A pen-name should be used to identify the replies, which will be inserted in the following issue. The name and address of the sender (not for publication) must accompany the question or questions.

I am glad to be able to announce that my return from the United States is timed to enable me to give my usual lecture-recitals on the whole of the music. These will take place at the Training School for Music Teachers on January next, the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th.

PRIMARY DIVISION.—LIST A

No. 1. Czerny. Study in C, Op. 139, No. 6. (Crotchet 152.)—Is it not strange that in our efforts to promote early studentship, we should deliberately divorce music from the intellectually stimulating? Recall any poem written for a child, healthily expressive of a child's thoughts and outlook; and at once you have a starting-point in the quest of poetry. Compare such a poem with this dull effort, which sounds the tonic chord in twenty-one of its thirty-two bars, which, in brief, is a very stupid Limerick cast in musical form, and the parable is obvious. The child will not gain an impression of the Beautiful from this study. Any advantage will accrue merely from its keyboard side; and here it is easy to imagine many unpleasant happenings—such, for example, as an ungainly thumping out of the unattractive left-hand part. Poor children! They will have to learn to compensate for the unattractiveness by the beauty of the tone they produce. That is their one refuge.

No. 2. Schumann. 'Soldiers' March,' Op. 68, No. 2. (Crotchet 126.)—Here we pass to something exhilarating. Schumann's simple diction conveys as happy a message to the grown-up as to the child. Let the rhythm be absolutely clear-cut, not only because of the march-like strains, but because of their vivid suggestion of outdoorness. Do not miss the form of the whole. There should be a world of greeting for the return at bar 25. Care is necessary with the staccato chords, where hand-relaxation means entire ease in playing them; its absence, the reverse.

No. 3. Stanford. 'Lullaby.' (Dotted crotchet 76.)—The difficulty will lie in preventing the angularity of the diction from becoming prominent in the playing. The composer is not happy until he manages the approach to bar 13, which seems to set him at his ease. Hence some care is needful in the first page to avoid over-accentuation and exaggeration of the obvious rhythmic breaks. Let the thought of a lullaby permeate the whole. The one high-light, at bar 13, should not be overstressed.

PRIMARY DIVISION.—LIST B

No. 4. Lemoine. Study in A minor, Op. 37, No. 10. (Crotchet 126-132.)—Very useful for promoting good rotational habits. The first bar exhibits rotation of the whole hand, and the necessary actions should at first be made apart from the direct hand-finger exertion with which the whole passage is played. The scales in bars 3-4, 7-8, &c., are also useful, and for two reasons: (1.) Their moderate speed; (2.) The illustration they afford of the use of scales in actual music. It is notorious that children, and beginners generally, are allowed to practise scales unhelped by a consciousness of their mission in music. Dissociated scale-playing is one of the discredited relics of the past.

No. 5. J. S. Bach. Minuet in G. (Crotchet 96.)—Rather out of the grading, it would seem. Moving independent parts, however simply expressed, make hard running for juvenile minds. My oft-repeated advice may once more be of service: Accustom the child to sing one part and simultaneously to play the other. In no other way known to me is the problem of hearing two parts made so easily and so thoroughly possible. It is, after all, the hearing of the parts which leads to fluency in their playing. As a matter of fact, all keyboard fluency which is obviously not the issue of aural fluency ought to be sternly discouraged. The binary form of this Minuet may be observed with profit.

No. 6. Harold Craxton. 'The Herd-boy.' (Crotchet 126.)—Here we have the extreme antithesis of No. 5. In this case one part only is in prominence, the function assigned to the left hand merely being that of supporting chords; in other words, the mind is relieved from the strain of attending to two simultaneously moving parts. This point must be laboured for the sake of inexperienced teachers. It is curious that the composer adheres to a uniformly square formation throughout. There is a pleasant touch of mysticism in the music, and this clashes with the perpetual four-bar periods. This should be remarked in interpreting the piece.

PRIMARY DIVISION.—LIST C

No. 7. Bertini. Study in C, Op. 137, No. 1. (Crotchet 138.)—Useful for developing the correct muscular method of leaving the keyboard at the end of a figure or figure-like passage. The onus, therefore, is on the final sound of each five-note figure. Observe that some, not all, are detached. In these cases, a throw-off of the completely relaxed hand must be the rule. When the sound is held, the hand is still relaxed, but remains in slight contact with the depressed key. There are some items of musical interest to the student, such as the sequence in bars 9-14, the sudden modulation to the tonic at bar 20, and the variation in matter at the return to the original key.

No. 8. Tchaikovsky. 'Dolly's Funeral,' Op. 39, No. 7. (Crotchet 69.)—Since the rhythm of a march is in progress, the four-bar groups agree effectively with the atmosphere, and neither impede the music nor make it commonplace. That is to say, the diction is suited to its purpose. But what can be said of the imagination of those who selected this piece? Do they wish to limit this list to girls? Or do they conceive that a small boy would sit comfortably still under the imputation implied? The point is important, for I know of at least one case where the happiness of a teacher in a certain domestic relation was jeopardised through her choice of a piece with a similar title. It was a boy in question, and he kicked—and kicked vigorously. This piece can be made most effective as a slow march, with an almost inevitable climax in the middle section.

No. 9. John Longmire. 'Wee Wren.' (Dotted minim 60.)—Strongly characteristic of its subject. The direction 'pertly' is capital, and exactly expresses the character to be sustained. It will not be easy to little folk, who will probably find the speed rather trying. The 'pertness' involves that it be played in strict tempo from start to finish, and with some emphasis upon the starting-sound of each phrase, particularly when a high sound is concerned—as at the start.

ELEMENTARY DIVISION.—LIST A

No. 10. Loeschhorn. Study in C, Op. 65, No. 8. (Crotchet 100.)—Recall my remarks in No. 4 with reference to scales. Makers of elementary studies used to cling to the now antiquated notion that C major was par excellence the tonality best adapted for beginners! This is an instance. These scale-passages would be very much more valuable for elementary work if they contained black keys. The whole weight of amateur opinion is, of course, against the idea. It is almost universally imagined that the easier the notation the easier must be the execution. The obvious conclusion is that some experimental knowledge of scale technique ought to be acquired before this study is practised.

No. 11. Müller. Scherzo in F. (Dotted crotchet 58.)—Characteristic of that period in German music which produced the music of Hummel, to which this, as an 'educational' piece, is strangely akin. The rhythms run in blocks, tier upon tier, and there is little to relieve the monotony of the progression save, perhaps, the character of the writing. This, viewed as a relic of the 'instructive' music written during the mid-classic age, is very distinctly interesting in its acceptance of conventions which, in nearly all music of the kind, were to endure throughout the 19th century. The piece must be played with Mozart-like precision, great heed being paid to the dynamic indications. A touch here and there of cantabile, as in the first four bars of the Trio, will make a pleasant contrast with the more rapid passages. Very little pedalling is necessary, and in no case may the pedal be so applied that the passage-playing becomes blurred.

No. 12. Lesley Bamford. 'A Little Minuet.' (Crotchet 88.)—A very charming little dance-tune, with touches of real insight in the making of independent part-writing. Let my advice given in No. 5 be followed and the result will compensate for the added trouble. In only one twice-occurring bar does the composer offer the evergreen perplexity of playing three to two equally moving sounds. Let this difficulty be mastered before the student approaches the piece. After all, it means an added power to his equipment, and to let him touch the passage without this precaution may mean that the difficulty is passed over, and, in consequence, intensified. Let cantabile tone prevail throughout, the aim being to produce two singing parts, individually and clearly marked. Do not fail to observe the climactic phrase beginning in bar 12.

ELEMENTARY DIVISION.—LIST B

No. 13. Burgmüller. Study in D, Op. 100, No. 10. (Minim 66.)—Good practice in the phrase-mark known as the 'two-note slur.' Concentrate at the start upon the first bar. Get the technique right at that point. Then proceed to the similar passages throughout the study. Observe the phrasing generally. In only one place does it seem obscure, i.e., in the middle section. I presume it is the composer's own and has been allowed to remain, but the two long slurs in the four bars after the double-bar mean nothing, and it is hard to say what he intended by the phrasing in the fifth and sixth bars after the same place. Play the whole passage legato. It 's the safer way!

No. 14. Schumann. 'Song of the Reapers,' Op. 68, No. 18. (Dotted crotchet 80.)—An instance of irrational barring, of course; but we can forgive a composer who had fragrant isolated thoughts and expressed them in so fragrant a setting. This slight piece has difficulties all its own. Except in the short middle section two influences are at work: Firstly, the well-known tune; secondly, the part which sings with it. Let the right-hand part of bars 9 and 10 be first practised with both hands, so that the individuality of the two parts may be clearly brought out, Note that, for the most part, a type of tone approximating to cantabile should prevail, and that, the middle section excepted, the style should be tender and supremely personal.

No. 15. Grieg. 'National Song,' Op. 12, No. 8. (Minim 48.)—The Associated Board's single selection from Grieg—and one most happy and welcome, for the piece represents the composer at his best in the treatment of short forms. The song itself requires a large range of tone, and its effect is chiefly measured by the climax attained in the last phrase (bars 17-20). Let the trumpet-like introduction be played with immense decision, and with no shortening of the semiquavers in bars 3 and 7—as befits the martial character of the phrase. The effect of the whole is one of great boldness and breadth.

ELEMENTARY DIVISION.—LIST C

No. 16. Stamaty. Study in A minor, Op. 37, No. 10. (Crotchet 88.)—The virtue of this study lies mainly in the fingering, which must be observed without exceptions or modifications. Needless to say, the so-regarded weaker fingers are those specially singled out for discipline. The aim should be to play the right-hand passage between bars 1 and 5 with equal ease throughout, and this can, of course, be attained only through the use of proper and easy rotational and lateral adjustments.

No. 17. Kuhlau. First Movement of Sonatina in G, Op. 55, No. 2. (Crotchet 112.)—My remarks in No. 11 apply here in almost equal force, but Kuhlau possessed the power to gild the pills he offered for 'instructive' physic. There is often a rudimentary gracefulness in his phrases, and this marks him out as one of the early sentimental tune-makers of the 19th century. Everything here is straightforward. A touch approximating to, and often actually reaching, cantabile should be observed, and the whole played in Mozartian fashion. It is curious to note how much of the full sonata form Kuhlau manages to get in so small a space. The usual link between the first and second subjects is absent. The development portion is of eight bars, and there is an interesting expansion of the first subject in the recapitulation. There is naturally no room for a coda.

No. 18. Waddington Cooke. 'The Organ Man.' (Crotchet 76.)—This very effective piece depends upon the treatment accorded to the characteristic figure with which it starts (bars 1 and 2). This passes through a number of transformations and reaches its greatest moment of charm, not at the major, but when it returns in its original form and key. The generic likeness of the figure must be preserved through its various appearances. Each section has its own particular climax, the fullest obviously occurring at the 'Neapolitan Sixth' in the last section, where the movement may be expanded with great effect.

LOWER DIVISION.—LIST A

No. 19. Czerny. Study in G, Op. 139, No. 25. (Crotchet 116.)—Never was the incorrigible squareness of Czerny more manifest—three groups of eight bars each! Yet the study is welcome because of its usefulness. The double figure at the start recalls the principles referred to in No. 7, though in a different connection. Here, the tone continues strong throughout the figures, but the 'hold' on the last sound must be as slight as though it were played pianissimo. The Alberti Bass in bars 5-7 is a valuable form of discipline, provided it be seasoned with a wholesome degree of freedom. Perhaps a piano may be allowed for bar 12, this being continued, in the circumstances, through the grateful passage in bars 13-16.

No. 20. J. S. Bach. Two-Part Invention in F. (Crotchet 96-108.)—Surely out of the grading. This is a test of quick thinking, quick hearing, and quick playing. A distinguished player remarked not long since that he never attempted to play this on important occasions unless he felt at the top of his form. And here we find it in a Lower Division list! If to help the average student be the educational aim, it is scarcely fair to assign him so heavy a responsibility. This matchless piece requires the sense of part-movement in a very high degree, and the need for rapidity of utterance necessarily raises the difficulty immensely. All honour, then, to those who decide to choose this list. Much single-hand practice will be needful; though, during such practice, the existence of the other and, for the moment, unsounded part should be mentally clear.

No. 21. Gade. 'Christmas Bells,' Op. 36, No. 1. (Crotchet 104-108.)—What a colossal difference of standard after that of No. 20! Here is one of the sweetest thoughts of a composer who might have done great things had he been differently circumstanced. It is uniform in construction, but the usually conventional effect is largely compensated by the treatment of the second phrase (bars 9-12). A true cantabile is needed throughout, with a slight emphasis upon the tune, which remains always in the uppermost part. The pedalling is dominated in every case by the movement of the melody. Harmonic pedalling, however, is used in the introduction and coda, as well as in the central phrase (bars 17-20).

No. 22. Felix Swinstead. 'Valse-Idylle.' (Crotchet 144-152.)—A slight dance-tune which needs careful pedalling and an avoidance of the commonplace. The scansion is important, and the every-other-bar position of the main accents usual in a waltz requires to be remembered. The piece lends itself to casual diction. It must be played with accuracy, clearness, and taste.

LOWER DIVISION.—LIST B

No. 23. Bertini. Study in C, Op. 100, No. 23. (Crotchet 126.)—Likely to prove trying in study owing to its rigidity of diction. But the rigid form of expression is the characteristic feature, and must be duly observed. The pedalling opens an interesting question. It may be good practice to use the pedal in the two-note figure on the third and fourth beats. This is, of course, not necessary, but will help to develop control. The pedal may also be momentarily used to hold each low bass note, though not long enough to blur the semiquaver figures. A good effect can be made by playing the whole of the first page with lowered tone, applying a fairly full cantabile to the new melodic part of the middle section.

No. 24. Haydn. Last movement of Sonata in G. (Crotchet 108-126.)—Healthy, straightforward work; also a welcome reminder of how much we apostles of the pianoforte owe to Haydn. Look first at the plan of the whole. Superficially it might be regarded as that of a simple rondo, but the matter is clinched by the unity of the passage between bars 1 and 24, in which the main thought is divided by an interlude in effective contrast (bars 11-14). The episode (bars 25-48) enters squarely, but, in accordance with Haydn's rhythmic insight, the squareness soon gives place to a freer rhythmic atmosphere. The recapitulation of the main thought takes into account the original repetitions, and expresses them in varied form and in full. It should be needless to urge that a view of the form should precede any attempt to interpret the music. The decorative aspect of the work, particularly as regards all dynamic markings, also claims careful consideration. The whole must be played with a vivid realisation of the need for that superlative clearness which arises as much from the nature of the music as from the period in which it was written.

No. 25. Schumann. Theme with Variations, from Sonatina in G, Op. 118, No. 1. (Crotchet 84.)—Instances of inaccurate barring are frequent among the great, but this is a particularly flagrant case. Perhaps it does not matter much to-day, as the worship of the bar-line is a thing of the past. Yet the barring here might deceive the inexperienced, and it becomes a duty to draw attention to the bare fact. The movement provides excellent practice in a fairly difficult form of cantabile. In this respect, Var. 1 must be pronounced the hardest. On the other hand, the tone of the tune should not be exaggerated. It would be painful to listen to forceful repetitions of the tune through its six wanderings. The same tempo is retained throughout. Schumann gets his own variety of movement through the changes of time-values.

No. 26. Thomas F. Dunhill. 'At the Vesper Hour.' (Dotted crotchet 69-72.)—A calm and contemplative piece which must embody the qualities suggested by the title. Formally it is straightforward, with two happy extensions at bars 25 and 50, both of which must be realised in view of effective rhythmic interpretation. Note the touches of independent movement in the accompanying part. Play the whole with a very slight rhythmic swing, and be certain that the 'longs and shorts' of so-called compound time, with which the music is plentifully besprinkled, are accurately timed.

LOWER DIVISION.—LIST C

No. 27. Czerny. Study in F minor, Op. 139, No. 86. (Crotchet 96-104.)—A good rotation exercise. In bar 4 the fingering may prove awkward in speed. A substitute may be 4-2 for 5-3 on the tenth and eleventh semiquavers. Absolute physical freedom should be the aim, and every bar should be played with the same degree of freedom. This is a hard saying, but it is the only possible standard to hold.

No. 28. Leopold Ashton. 'Il Neige.' (Crotchet 80.) — Two diverse elements need attention: (1.) The semiquaver figuration unvarying throughout; (2.) The melodic side of the phrases. The semiquavers seem to call for a veiled tone, with moderate 'swells' at bar 5 and similar places. It is partly in this way that the atmosphere suggested by the title will be obtained. To complete the picture, the cantabile aspect of the phrases should not be stressed. Let the whole be played with, as it were, a hint of mysticism. Pedalling must be very restrained, and with frequent dampings to avoid thickening the texture.

No. 29. Hummel. 'Romance,' Op. 42, No. 4. (Crotchet 76.)—Not very inspiring (cf. No. 11), but useful as a means of cultivating the power to play a plain melody with an equally plain accompaniment. As a matter of fact, pieces of this kind are of great value in elementary work. The right hand is throughout free to concentrate upon tone-making, while the other hand merely supplies a simple support to the tune. Many an advanced player whose cantabile leaves something to be desired would greatly profit from studying this piece.

No. 30. Jessie Furze. 'The Cat's Reel.' (Dotted crochet 108-112.)—Surely 'Girls and boys come out to play,' which seems somehow to have lost its way! A sprightly little piece which might be in a previous grading except, perhaps, for the fact that it calls for not a little agility of thought. This form of agility is often misunderstood. Music demands various phases and degrees of quickness—of ear, of eye, of hand, and, above these and controlling all, quickness of thought. Hence the stupidity which strives for executive agility at the cost of the higher phases of such reaction stands revealed. Let the student take this piece into the region of the imagination (which means that he should study it away from the keyboard) and picture to himself the result he wishes to obtain. That process will invigorate both his mental grasp of the music and his power to play it.

(To be continued.)

The School Music Review for September covers a wide range of subjects, and contains much of interest and value to teachers. Robert H. Hull begins a series of articles on 'The Development of Harmony'; Maud V. Stell shows in a practical way how chamber music may be developed in schools; under the title 'Viva Voce' C. Egerton Lowe continues his series of 'Two hundred questions and answers for diploma candidates'; Kathleen Boland treats in a sensible way that difficult subject, 'Discipline in the Music Class'; J. Raymond Tobin gives some useful tips in an article on 'Settling the Speed of Music'—a subject on which we receive many inquiries; and reports, reviews of gramophone records, player-piano rolls, new books and music, answers to questions, &c., make up the balance of an excellent number. There are also several attractive musical supplements.

Three books of Aural Tests, by Basil C. Allchin and Ernest Read, should interest teachers. The first two are for use in connection with the Associated Board's 'School' and Local Centre Examinations respectively. Book 3 is for Diploma Examinations. They are published by the Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M., price 1*s.* 6*d* each book.

Another little publication worth noting by pianoforte teachers is Hetty Bolton's 'Scales and Exercises Time Table.' Its use should assist in the systematic practice of technical work. It is published in three books: 1. Elementary to Lower; 2. Lower to Higher; 3. Higher to Intermediate (Elkin, 1*s.* each book). G. G.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. When no answer is given, readers are to understand that the information is unobtainable, or that its provision would make unreasonable demands on our time and space. 'Answers to Correspondents' column closes on the 14th of the month. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Old English.—(1.) The composition of your little orchestra—two firsts, two seconds, 'cello, bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, and pianoforte—is so unusual as to restrict the music available. We think you will find the following useful: 'Chanson de Nuit' and 'Chanson de Matin' (Elgar), 'Suite Vénétienne' (Reed), Intermezzo (West), Valse Lyrique (Fletcher), Four Old English Dances (Cowen), and Four Characteristic Waltzes (Coleridge-Taylor) (all from Novello). It would also be worth your while looking at some of the 'salon orchestra' editions of the classics. Both Messrs. Schott and Hawkes issue some of these, fully 'cued.' Many old-time operatic overtures, such as 'Pique Dame,' would be suitable. (2.) We presume that this question refers to singing-phonetics. If so, try 'Pronunciation for Singers,' by Ellis (Curwen). (3.) Of course the L.R.A.M. conductor's diploma is useful. 'In what way will it help me?' you ask. Like all other diplomas that are worth having, it helps most through the work done in preparation for it. A secondary (and more popular) point about diplomas is that they may help their holder to increase his income. (4.) 'Orchestration,' by Cecil Forsyth (Macmillan).

F. H. C.—You ask if 'every word in song or hymn should be obtained from abdominal breathing, and if not, is it detrimental to the voice.' We do not quite understand your question. You say you are 'a robust tenor,' and we assume that you are also a singer. If so, you ought by now to be aware that breathing should be deep, i.e., abdominal. We do not quite see the point of your reference to 'every word.' Write to us again and make things more clear. You go on to say that you have a work by Caruso in which he advocated practice with the mouth closed. You ask, 'How can one articulate with the mouth closed?' We do not know the Caruso book, but evidently the reference is to humming, probably with the special aim of increasing nasal resonance.

Vocalist (Southfields).—(1.) You ask 'are six hundred and twenty bars too much for a Poetical Symphony. If so, what is the approximate number?' This sounds like a conundrum with a catch in it. If your Symphony is really poetical, six hundred and twenty bars are not too many. They may even be too few. There is no regulation number of bars. We know works containing many hundreds of bars that are still too short; and we have just been looking at a new work of fifty bars that contains just fifty bars too many. (2.) Beethoven's 'Faithfu' Johnnie' is published in an album with accompaniment for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello (Novello, 6*s*.). You say that this song was 'written by Beethoven when he lived in England, words as well, and it can be called a real Scotch folk-song.' Who told you this? Beethoven never came to England, nor did he write the words of any of his songs. He arranged several sets of folk-songs for the publisher Thomson, of Edinburgh. We do not see 'Faithfu' Johnnie' among them, so perhaps it appeared in the Set of twenty-five Scotch Songs he arranged for Schlesinger, of Berlin.

A. L. A. L. M.—We imagine that you will have to obtain permission to play pianoforte arrangements from Gilbert and Sullivan operas on any occasion where a charge for admission is made. But you had better write to the publishers and explain exactly what you want to do. You say that you are often called on to play light music at social gatherings; and that, apart from Gilbert and Sullivan and music-hall tunes, you don't know what to play for musically uneducated people. There is a great store of suitable music, original and transcribed. A week's listening to wireless concerts with the programmes before you, will help you. And as you live within easy access of the West End, you should pay a visit to music publishers. To give you a list would take up more time and space than we can spare, and will be merely encouraging your want of enterprise.

M. D. N.—(1.) Apparently there is no library from which you can borrow teaching music. You say you wish to keep in touch with new teaching material. If you are an accredited teacher, publishers of such music will no doubt be glad to send you specimen copies. Write to them. (2.) We do not know the Method personally, but we have heard it well spoken of, and we believe it is much used. You say that your pupils 'do not care to practise the duets.' Children 'do not care' to do many things that are good for them. Do you find them bursting to practise scales? It is your job to persuade them—peacefully, if possible, but, anyhow, to persuade them. (3.) The diplomas about which you inquire are of no value. (4.) 'Ritmico' means 'rhythmical.'

G. B. K.—Knowing nothing of the players' capabilities, we cannot usefully recommend music for your string quartet. But as the performances are to illustrate a lecture on 'Instrumental music during the past hundred years' you ought to have no difficulty in finding plenty to suit any type of player or hearer. As your audience will be of the simple, unsophisticated kind, aim at straightforward and tuneful music that will hit the mark at once; and (your lecture being about instrumental music generally) you will of course not despise arrangements.

Organe.—(1.) 'Transposition,' by Warriner (Novello), and '100 Transposition Tests,' Edwards (Novello). (2.) 'The Organ,' by Alcock (Novello). (3.) You ask for an Organ Tutor to be used by a pupil with no knowledge of pianoforte technique. We doubt if such a book exists, for it is almost hopeless to begin to learn the organ without having first acquired a grounding of manual technique. Obviously, this is more easily and conveniently obtained on the pianoforte. (4.) The writing of pianoforte accompaniments is a branch of composition, and is usually discussed in comprehensive and up-to-date books on that subject. The best way to learn, however, is by studying good models, such as you will find in all the best songs, violin solos, &c.

L. E. A. M. — (1.) 'Elementary Harmony,' Kitson (Oxford University Press). (2.) The best way of learning how to write a round is to study a number of specimens. Novello's 'Collection of Graduated Rounds' (1*s*.) will give you all the help you want. (3.) For good models of part-songs you need go no farther than those of Stanford and Parry. (4.) You ask for good models for the composition of violin solos. Don't forget that before writing violin solos you must know something about the instrument. You say nothing about the degree of difficulty, &c. We suggest that you listen to gramophone and wireless performances of violin solos, and obtain copies of those that are in the required style and length.

C. E. L.—(1.) We believe the best biography of Chopin to be Niecks's 'Chopin as Man and Musician' (Novello, 25*s*.). (2.) We do not know the book about which you inquire. We think you will find difficulty in obtaining any one volume which gives 'a short concise biography of each of the great composers.' The nearest approach, and the most up-to-date, is Percy Scholes's recently-published 'The Listener's History of Music' (Oxford University Press, 2 vols., 6*s*. each). (3.) 'The Pianoforte and its Music,' by Krehbiel (Murray).

H. D. C. P. N.—You raise a question that is probably worrying many other choirmasters. 'What are cathedrals and parish churches doing in the matter of alto voices in these days of depleted choirs, when male altos seem especially difficult to get?' You say you are given to understand that in many places, even in some cathedrals, boys are being trained to sing alto. We do not know how far this is the case. You ask what is the course to be adopted other than employing women's voices. Perhaps some readers will give us the benefit of their experiences.

R. G.—We don't know the Pianoforte Tutor you mention. As to how far you 'may safely proceed without the aid of a teacher,' we can only say that it depends mainly on how far you really apply yourself. The following works will be helpful: 'The Pianoforte,' by Ernest Pauer (3*s*); 'The Art of Piano-Playing,' by Ernest Pauer (3*s*); 'Hand Gymnastics,' by Ridley Prentice (2*s*. 6*d*.); 'Piano Practising,' by Egerton Lowe (2*s*.). All are published by Novello.

M. F. M.—'The Brass Band and how to write for it,' by Charles Vincent (Hawkes, 3*s*. 6*d*.). Write to the publishers of brass band music for specimens of the kind of march you mention.

(Continued on p. 919.)

While Shepherds watched their Flocks by Night

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

Words by Nahum Tate Music by Eric H. Thiman

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited

glo - ry shone a - round.
glo - ry shone a - round.
glo - ry shone a - round.
"Fear not," said he; for
glo - ry shone a - round.
might - y . . dread Had seized their troub - led mind; "Glad ti - dings of great Had seized their troub - led mind; "Glad ti - dings of great
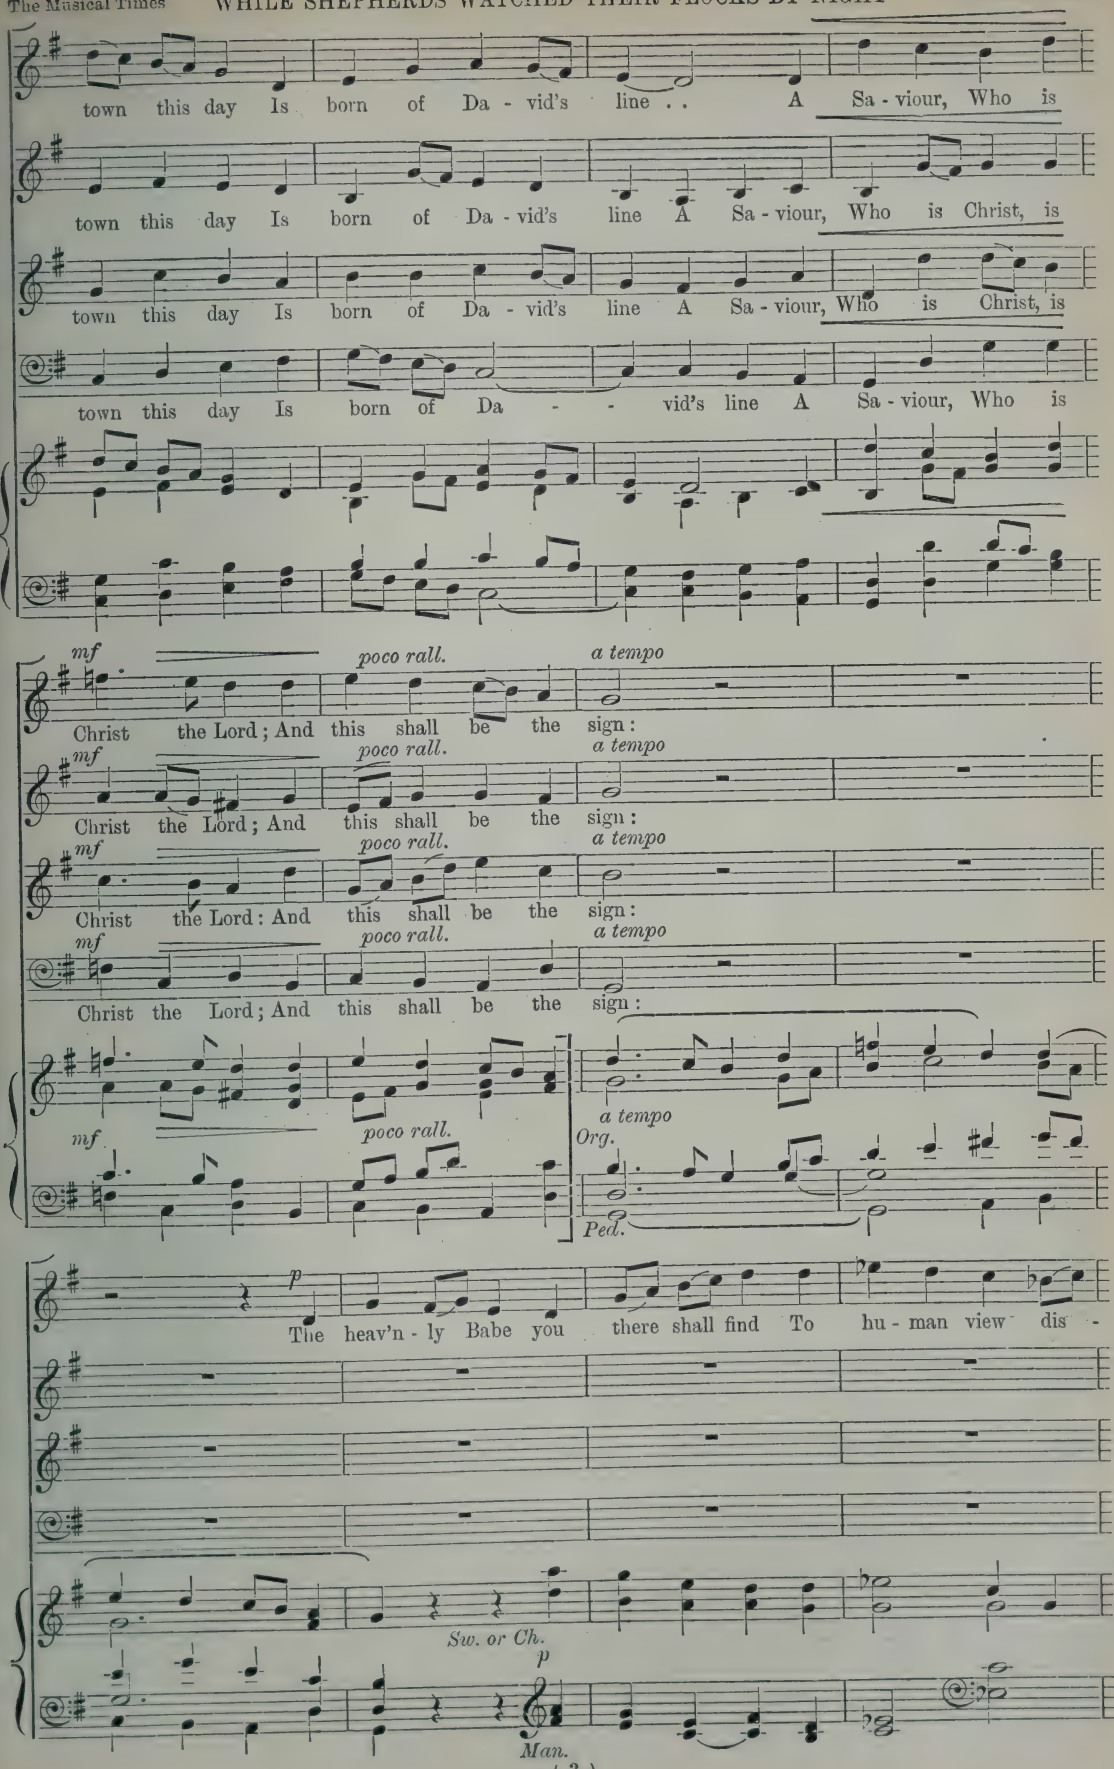
To you in Da - vid's
To you in Da - vid's
joy I bring To you and all man - kind.
To you in Da - vid's
joy I bring To you and all man - kind.
To you in Da - vid's
Voices alone



town this day Is born of Da - vid's line . . A Sa - viour, Who is town this day Is born of Da - vid's line A Sa - viour, Who is Christ, is town this day Is born of Da - vid's line A Sa - viour, Who is Christ, is town this day Is born of Da - - vid's line A Sa - viour, Who is mf
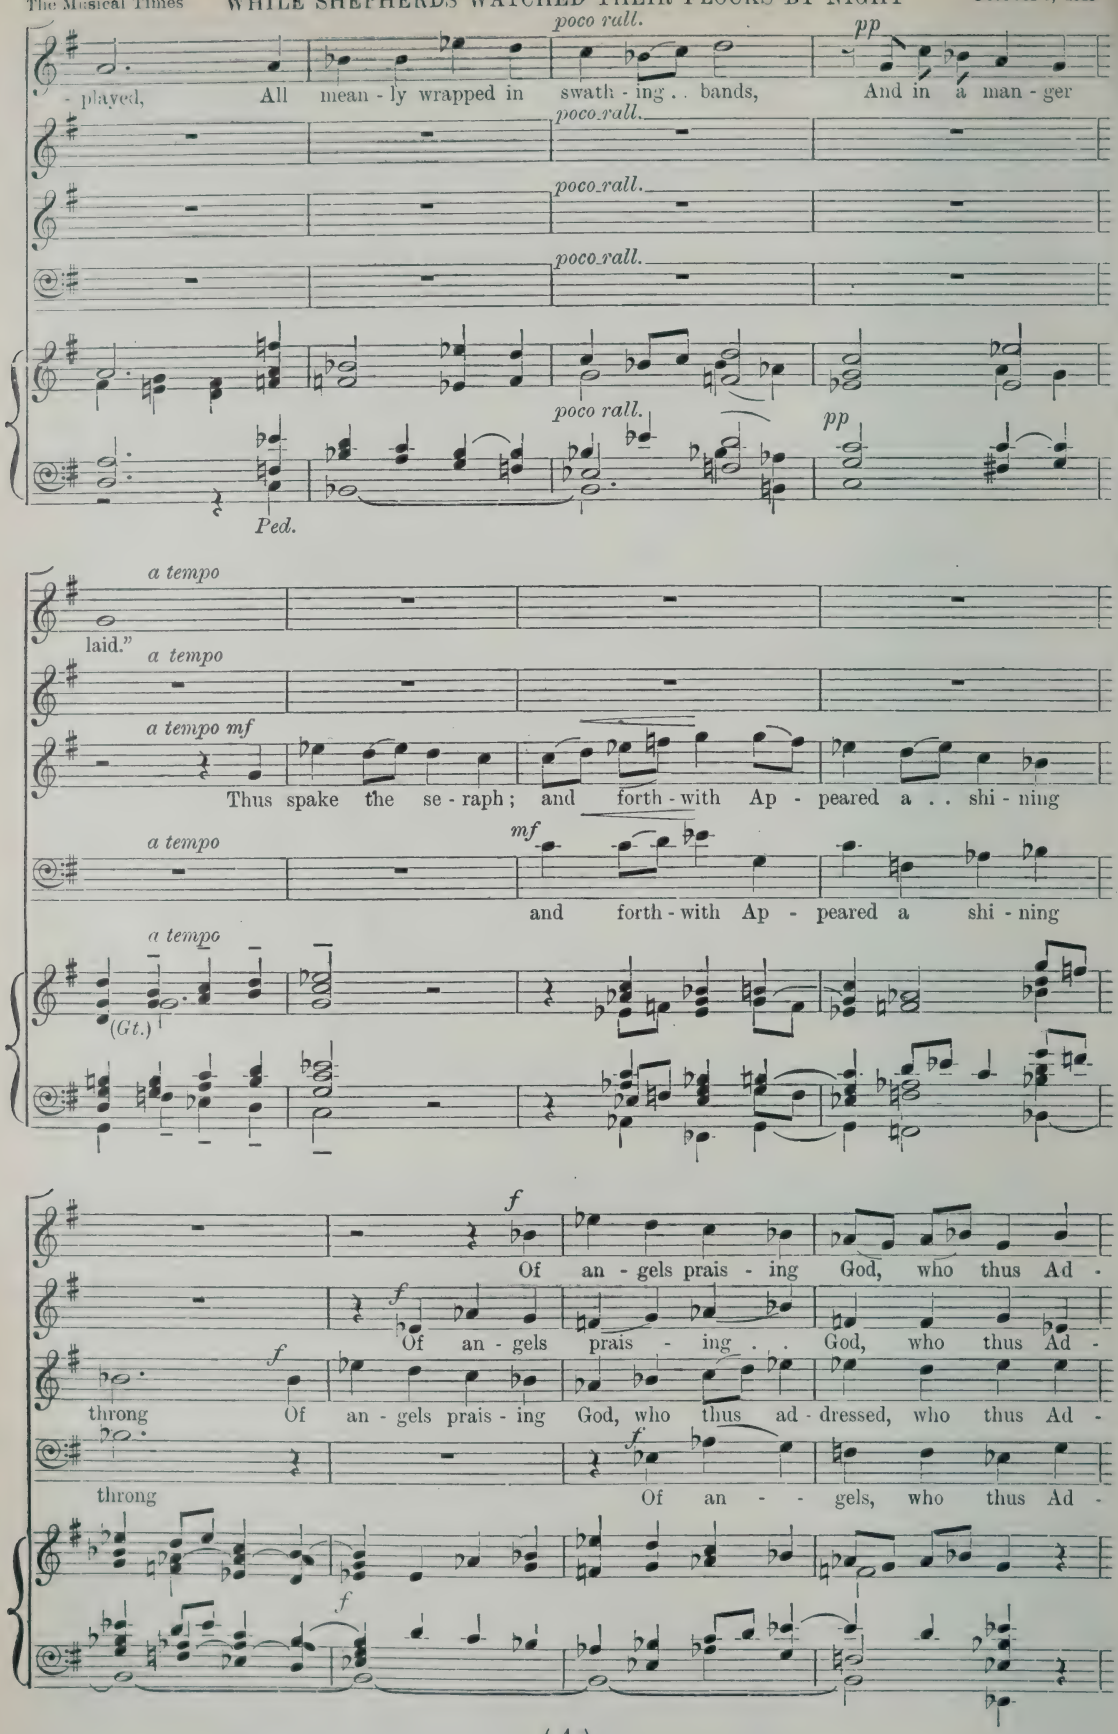
poco rall.
a tempo
Christ the Lord; And this shall be the sign:
Christ the Lord; And this shall be the sign:
Christ the Lord: And this shall be the sign:
Christ the Lord; And this shall be the sign:
Org.
Ped.
p
The heav'n - ly Babe you there shall find To hu - man view dis -
Sw. or Ch.
Man.



poco rall.
pp
- played, All mean - ly wrapped in swath - ing . . bands, And in a man - ger
poco rall.
poco rall.
poco rall.
poco rall.
pp
Ped.
a tempo laid."
a tempo
a tempo mf
Thus spake the se - raph; and forth - with Ap - peared a . . shi - ning
a tempo
mf
and forth - with Ap - peared a shi - ning
a tempo
(Gt.)
f
Of an - gels prais - ing God, who thus Ad -
f
Of an - gels prais - ing . . God, who thus Ad -
f throng Of an - gels prais - ing God, who thus ad - dressed, who thus Ad -
f throng Of an - - gels, who thus Ad -
f

rall.
Meno mosso
ff
- dressed their joy - ful song: "All glo - ry be to
f
poco dim.
God on . . high, And to the earth be peace; Good - will hence - forth from heaven to men Be - gin and nev - er cease, be - gin and nev - er heaven to men Be - gin, be - gin and nev - er cease, . . .

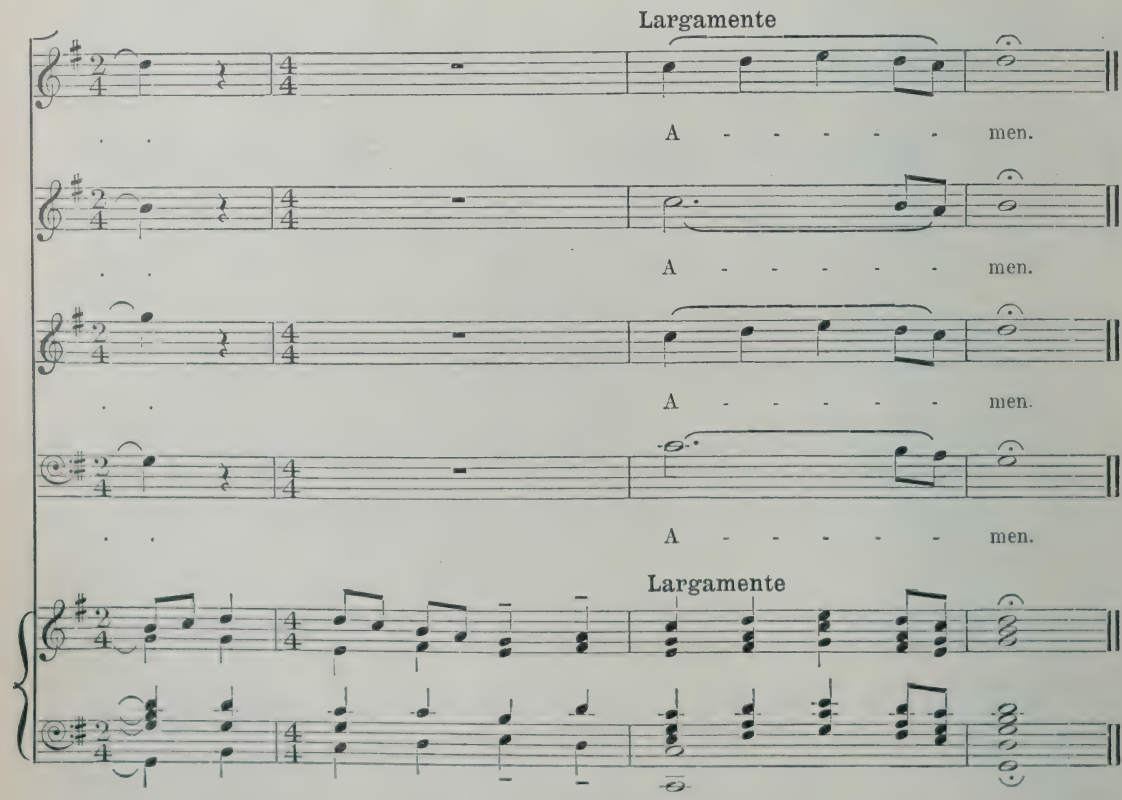
ff rall.
cease, . . be - gin . . and nev - er cease." . . . .
ff rall.
cease, . . be - gin and nev - er cease." . . . .
ff rall.
. . be - gin . . and nev - er cease." . . . .
ff rall.
. . be - gin and nev - er cease." . . . .
ff
rall.
ff



Largamente
. . A - - - - - - men.
. . A - - - - - - men.
. . A - - - - - - men.
. . A - - - - - - men.
Largamente

(Continued from p. 912.)

Nemo.—As to whether such words as 'given' and 'heaven' should be sung as a dissyllable, or as 'giv'n' and 'heav'n' depends partly on taste, partly on the pace of the music, and also on the melody—i.e., whether the word is set to notes of the same pitch, or not. It is impossible to dogmatise on such a subject. We can only say that what sounds natural is right.

Tonic (Cheshire).—The A.R.C.M. is the better diploma of the two you mention. The fact of your being exempt from paper work in the other examination no doubt attracts you; but you'll be all the better musician (and therefore the better player) if you tackle the paper work. So don't be lazy!

J. E. P.—We don't like your Suite a little bit. It is entirely lacking in vitality and originality. It says, in fact, simply nothing, and we are surprised that it should have achieved publication. We take no pleasure in saying this—on the contrary; but as you press us for our candid opinion, there it is.

Amateur.—You are one of many correspondents who ask if there is a subscription library from which they may borrow text-books, &c., on music. Apparently there isn't. Many free public libraries, however, now include a fair proportion of such works. Inquire of the nearest.

Earnest Student.—You had better be guided by your coach as to 'the best books for A.R.C.O. paper work.' Or do you intend to study off your own bat? If so, write to us again, and we will try to outline a course.

W. G. S.—If you intend to be your own teacher for Mus. Bac. we will suggest some books on hearing from you again. But if you are working with a 'coach' let him advise you.

Chordia.—'Lillibulero' and 'The Cat's Fugue' were composed by Purcell and Scarlatti respectively.

M. E. H.—The music of 'Vital spark of Heavenly Flame' is by E. Harwood. The song may be had from Ashdown.

W. H. wants to trace a pianoforte piece he heard about forty years ago, beginning thus :—

Church and Organ Music

INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF ORGANISTS: CONGRESS AT HULL

By W. A. Roberts

The annual Congress was held at Hull, from August 30 to September 2, and commenced with a reception given at the Guildhall. The Sheriff of Hull, Dr. T. Ritchie Rodgers, conveyed a civic welcome to the Association in cordial terms, and an enjoyable evening was spent listening to choral music contributed by the Hull Gleemen, and an instrumental trio (violin, Mrs. F. N. Wood; 'cello, Mr. R. Shepperd; pianoforte, Mr. R. A. Sales), who played a Beethoven Trio, Op. 1. The singing of the Hull Gleemen, a famous competitive A.T.B.B. male-voice choir, exhibited all the qualities of first-rate choralism. Admirably trained and conducted by Mr. A. Brown, these excellent singers were heard in music by Walmisley, Morley, Armstrong Gibbs, Schubert-Bairstow, and Bantock.

Saturday was a strenuous day, which opened with the annual general meeting, held in the Guildhall Council Chamber. Sir Hamilton Harty presided, and feeling reference was made to the losses the Association had sustained during the past year, notably by the death of Mr. John Hodgkinson, the hon. treasurer, whose personal qualities had endeared him to all. In his secretarial report, Mr. John Brook stated that steady progress had been made. Six new local Associations had been added, bringing the total to forty-one, with a membership of some three thousand. He was glad to say that the Royal College of Organists was well disposed to the Association, and the provision of R.C.O. lecturers for provincial centres was under consideration. Reference was made in eulogistic terms to the editorial work of Mr. J. Percy Baker in connection with the Quarterly Record, and the Association was congratulated in having Mr. W. H. Ellis, of Manchester, to succeed the late Mr. Hodgkinson as hon. treasurer, for he possessed business qualities very rarely found in a musician of his calibre. His printed financial statement showed a credit balance of £74, and the expenditure had been kept down to a minimum.

With regard to the Benevolent Fund, which, by the requirements of the Board of Trade, must now be administered as a scheme apart from the Association, after hearing Mr. Percy Baker's proposal, which was weightily supported by Dr. J. Warriner, it was resolved that the Fund be built up from voluntary contributions and donations. There were to be no compulsory subscriptions, or levies, and no restrictions as to granting relief in necessitous cases as they arose. Four trustees would be appointed, also an advisory committee. The Association's legal adviser, Mr. G. H. Hirst, of Dewsbury, attended the meeting, and explained the technical terms and conditions of the Trust Deed.

After hearing an able ambassador from Torquay, Mr. Hermon Kinch, it was resolved to accept the cordial civic invitation he conveyed from Torquay, and to hold the Congress there next year.

Pending the confirmation by the Board of Trade of the reorganization of the Association and of the Benevolent Fund, all officials will continue in their appointments for the ensuing year.

Saturday afternoon was devoted to a visit to Beverley Minster and to St. Mary's Church, two wonderful old churches in a commonplace town, of which the Minster in particular is regarded as the finest example in this country of a building in which the gradual development of English Gothic art can be studied in its three successive stages.

The fine Hill organ on the screen which rather interferes with the vista, includes some of the original work by Snetzler, 1767, and its ample powers were displayed by Mr. Stanley Roper and Mr. H. Malkin. During the brief visit to St. Mary's, a short recital was given on the Lewis three-manual organ by Mr. Malkin, organist of the church, who played three pieces by his former master, Dr. Warriner.

During the motor run across the Yorkshire wolds from Beverley to Welton, the sultry weather suddenly broke in a violent thunder-storm, which spoiled the outdoor reception that it had been planned to hold in the beautiful grounds of Welton Hall, the residence of Mr. S. W. Pilling. Another real damper over the proceedings was the serious eye-trouble that had overtaken Mr. Pilling. In his condition it was venturesome of him to leave his bed, but he did so, and personally welcomed the guests. He was unable, of course, himself to display the four-manual concert organ which adorns his music room, or the Walker organ in the ancient church near by. He had, however, secured a distinguished deputy in Mr. Stanley Roper. After visiting the Hall and Church, the visitors were entertained in the Village Hall, where Mr. Richard Pilling did the honours, and on the motion of Dr. Warriner a hearty vote of thanks was passed to him, with sincere wishes for his father's speedy recovery. As an amateur organist, Mr. S. W. Pilling has achieved a remarkable record not only in Yorkshire, and the notable part he has taken in promoting the interests of the Association, of which he was the first president, is a matter of general knowledge. It was pleasant to hear Mr. Brook's graceful tribute to Mr. Pilling's help in early and difficult days.

On the return to Hull a recital was given by Mr. W. F. Mahony on the fine organ by Forster & Andrews in the magnificent City Hall. This is one of the largest concert organs in the country, and contains a hundred and twenty-five stops. It is a noble instrument of great power and variety. The console is detached from the organ, which the player is thus enabled to hear. It has a Pedal organ Gravissima of 64-ft. tone, and also bass and side-drums and timpani, tubular bells, and steel-bars. Mr. Mahony's ably-played pieces included Bach's second Sonata, 'Pastel' No. 2 (Karg-Elert), and 'Dithyramb' (Harwood). Hull has no permanent City organist. It is said that organ recitals do not pay their way; but Hull could surely afford to take a larger view.

On Sunday morning the members attended service in Holy Trinity Church, the largest parish church in this country. The sermon was preached by the Rev. T. H. Tardrew, who spoke with freedom and pungency on the present state of Church music and organists' appointments.

On Sunday evening a noteworthy function was the reception given in Powolny's Restaurant by the Mayor and Mayoress of Southport, Mr. and Mrs. John Brook. It is felt that the honour paid to Mr. Brook at Southport casts a reflected dignity on the Association, whose members one and all regard him with affection as their hon. secretary. Musical items were provided, among others, by Mr. W. H. Ellis, Dr. Reginald Dixon, Mr. Cyril Church, and a gifted blind pianist, Mr. J. R. Lawson, with Dr. H. L. Read as accompanist.

On Monday morning Sir Hamilton Harty delivered his presidential address in Hull University College, where Prof. Gill welcomed the large assembly. In speaking on 'Some Problems of Modern Music' Sir Hamilton said there was a peculiar mental disease which had afflicted the present musical generation with special virulence. It might be called the fear of being left behind, and its symptoms were a feverish enthusiasm for everything that was new, coupled with a complete lack of any guiding principle or standard of judgment. Those who suffered from the disease in its worst form were so tortured by anxiety to keep well in the forefront of every fresh movement that they could not spare time to enjoy in peace anything which had already been accepted and approved. They were terrified at the thought of missing the coming of what they pathetically called 'the new music,' and they were so obsessed by a determination to be ultra-musical that in reality they were hardly musical at all. There were thousands of incompetent amateur critics in music nowadays. It was strange that music was the only art in which ignorant and untutored persons felt quite at liberty to lay down the law. Was it true, he asked, that music had temporarily lost its way and at present was wandering in barren and unfruitful wastes? During the last twenty years they had seen many instances of new works being produced with all the advertisement and technical equipment possible. At the time of their production these were acclaimed as works of importance and originality. The majority met with the same fate. In spite of extravagant approval in influential quarters the public were not convinced, the performances gradually dwindled, and soon the works were dead and forgotten. Composers to-day might be gathered into two groups. There were the serious pioneers seeking fresh methods of expression, and there were the charlatans, whose chief aim was always to go one better in the production of ugly and discordant noises. Anyone could give undistinguished music a surprising air of novelty by seasoning it with unexpected discords and startling splashes of colour. What were the principal emotions conveyed by the music of to-day? They were restlessness, hardness, brilliance, grotesqueness, and sardonic humour. These qualities were not sufficient to give music enduring life. They were still waiting successors to the great composers of the line which seemed temporarily to have come to an end. Jazz barbarians were being permitted to debase our music. Thousands of people were receiving their only musical impressions through the medium of wonderful and ingenious machines such as wireless and the gramophone. What would be the outcome of it? Art did not progress on descending curves; it met with peaks and hollows in its march, and it might be that we were at present in a hollow which would deepen still more. It was a dismal reflection, but it was conceivable that music had already attained to the highest point it would ever reach, and in the language of music nothing greater would be said than had been said already. Until we saw the silliness and futility of our present-day noise, hurry, and feverish unrest, we should look in vain for the coming of a really great composer, and Strauss and Elgar appeared to be the last in the line.

Photo by] COUNCILLOR JOHN BROOK, MAYOR OF SOUTHPORT [R. H. Gresswell

In the afternoon a lecture was given on the 'Youngest of the Arts,' by Prof. F. H. Shera, of Sheffield. It was followed by a visit to the great chocolate manufactory of Messrs. Needler. Later in the evening the annual dinner was held in the Guildhall. Dr. Prendergast presided, and the guests included the Lord Mayor and Sheriff of Hull, the Acting Bishop, and Sir Arthur Atkinson. The whole of the crowded business of the Congress passed off most harmoniously, and the visit to Hull was voted a success, thanks to Mr. C. H. Phillips, the president, and the able executive of the Hull Association.

A FRENCH ORGAN COMPETITION

A French reader signing himself 'Un Ami de l'Orgue' kindly sends us particulars of an important and interesting organ competition recently inaugurated at Paris. Two years ago a well-known Parisian organ enthusiast, the Comte de Miramon Fitz-James (a descendant, by the way, on his mother's side, of the Dukes of Fitz-James, and therefore a member of the Stuart family), founded an association called 'Les Amis de l'Orgue.' The Society had its attention drawn towards young French organists who, finding little more than mere pittances as a reward for their Church work, were drawn (like many English organists) towards the cinema. Consequently, it was felt, the pure style of organ playing was likely to suffer from neglect. The Society therefore decided to give young organists an opportunity of being heard in recitals before specially critical audiences, and it also founded a prize in order to bring forward young players of exceptional ability. The first competition for the Prix des Amis de l'Orgue was held in June, in the Eglise Evangelique de l'Etoile. It was open to French organists not more than thirty-five years old. Although the contest was announced a year in advance, only two competitors entered, but it is anticipated that in the future entrants will be far more numerous. The competitors had to play from memory an important work of Bach, an outstanding piece of modern organ music, and to extemporise on given themes in the form of (a) a chorale, (b) a development in symphonic style of a liturgical hymn melody, (c) a prelude and fugue, and (d) a sonata on two themes. A player who could come successfully through such a test as this would be not only a brilliant organist but also a fine musician.

The contest aroused the interest of many French organists, among them Joseph Bonnet. (It is of interest to note, by the way, that Bonnet, having heard of the English method of conducting contests with the candidates numbered and unnamed, and invisible to the judges, insisted on the plan being adopted for this competition.) The president of the jury was Vincent d'Indy, who took the place of M. Widor, unavoidably absent; and the other judges were Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, MM. Caussade (professor of fugue at the Paris Conservatoire), Vierne, Tournemire, Mulet, Bonnet, Cellier, and Marchal. The prize of five thousand francs was won by Maurice Duruflé, and an Honours Certificate was given to André Fleury. Despite the small entry, 'Les Amis de l'Orgue' feel that this opening competition was well worth while, and they intend to renew the contest in 1931, and also to organize one for foreign organists who have studied for some time in France.

ST. NICOLAS COLLEGE, CHISLEHURST

Courses of ten lectures, and a scheme of musical services of various types, have been arranged to take place during the term just started. The lectures will be as follows: Tuesdays, at 5 p.m., from October 1, 'The Musical Requirements of the Prayer Book,' the Rev. H. G. Salter (Chaplain of the College); Wednesdays, at 9 p.m., from October 2, 'The General Work of a Parish Church Organist,' Mr. Harvey Grace; Thursdays, at 5 p.m., from October 3, 'History of Church Music,' Dr. Sydney Nicholson (Warden of the College); Mondays, at 5 p.m., from October 7, 'Plainsong,' Miss Forbes Close. Full particulars of the lectures and special services may be had from the secretary.

Dr. Harold Darke will give six Bach recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on Thursdays, at 6 p.m., from October 3 to November 7. Dr. Darke's Monday 1 o'clock recitals have just recommenced. The complete programmes of both these series of recitals may be had, price 6*d*. each, at the church, or by post from Dr. Darke, St. Michael's Vestry (stamped addressed envelope).

Special music will take the place of the sermon at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on the first and third Sundays of the month, from September 15. The works to be performed from that date until December 15 will be (in order): Bach's cantata 'God so loved the world,' Darke's 'The Sower,' a selection of Boyce's anthems, Bach motets, modern anthems, Bach's cantata 'What God doth, surely that is right,' and Brahms's 'Requiem.'

The organ at St. Peter Port, Guernsey, has been re-built by Messrs. Hele. Ten new stops have been added, and the instrument is now a three-manual of thirty-one stops. Mr. O. le P. Franklin gave a recital at the opening, playing works by Bach, Walond, Parry, J. Matthews, and Vierne.

On October 26, at 5.30, Mr. Reginald Goss-Custard begins a short series of organ recitals at St. Michael's, Chester Square. The organ is a fine four-manual, recently rebuilt by Messrs. Willis.

The organ at Whetstone Congregational Church was opened on September 1, after re-building by Messrs. Rest, Cartwright & Son. Mr. L. H. Newling gave a recital (Prelude on 'Christ lag in Todesbanden,' Bach; Prelude and Fugue, Hesse; &c.).

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have reconstructed the organ at Radcliffe Bridge Wesleyan Church. The instrument is now a three-manual (choir enclosed) of thirty-one stops and twenty-two pistons.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have just erected an organ in St. Matthew's Church, Skegness—a three-manual of twenty-seven stops and seventeen pistons.

The opening of the new organ at Manor Park Primitive Methodist Church took place on September 12, Mr. Allan Brown giving a recital.

RECITALS

Mr. Clifford Roberts, St. John's, Hove—A Mendelssohn programme: Prelude in D minor; Sonata No. 1; Allegretto; Overture to 'Ruy Blas.'

Mr. T. Baker, Hexham Abbey—Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Evening Song, Bairstow; Coronation March, Elgar; Fantasy on Campion's Tune, Harris; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Finale (Sonata), Reubke; Finale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.

Mr. Geoffrey Sayers, St. James's, Great Yarmouth—Fuga in D minor, Mendelssohn; Heroic Suite, Rowley; Grand Chœur No. 2, Hollins; Minuet Antique, Watling.

Dr. M. P. Conway, Chichester Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Quasi Marcia and Pax Vobiscum, Karg-Elert; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Glazounov; Preludes for organ and strings, Dunhill; Two pieces for strings, Holbrooke. (The String Orchestra of the Bognor Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Norman Demuth.)

Mr. J. Harry Lee, St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare—Concerto No. 2, Handel; Chorale Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Scherzo in B flat, Wolstenholme; Introduction and Toccata, Boëllmann.

Major J. Godfrey Bird, Christ Church, Simla—'Clair de Lune,' Karg-Elert; Epilogue, Willan; 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' Bach; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Leaver, Parish Church, Barkway—March upon a Theme of Handel, Guilmant; Overture to 'Otho'; Choral No. 3, Franck; Hymn to the Sun, Rimsky-Korsakov.

Mr. Frank B. Porkess, Minehead Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Sonata in G, Elgar; Prelude on 'St. Mary,' Wood; Overture to 'Athalia.'

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Mundesley Church, Norfolk—Phantaisie in E flat (Sonata No. 13), Rheinberger; Largo in E, Handel; Sinfonia to Cantata No. 156, and Toccata, 'We thank Thee,' Bach; Resurgam, Harvey Grace.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Agitato and Improvisation, Rheinberger; Marcia Eroica, Stanford; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Grand Chœur, Salomé.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, E.C.—Voluntary in A minor, John Stanley; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Finale (Sonata No. 5), Rheinberger; Siciliana and Bourrée in B minor, Hollins.

Mr. Allan Brown, Kingsway Hall, W.C.—Chorale Prelude on 'Eventide,' Parry; Overture in C minor, Fricker; Fantasia and Fugue on 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Fantasia on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Adagio in E, Bridge.

Mr. Gatty Sellars, The Dome, Brighton—Festival Overture, Fletcher; Overture Fantastique, Sellars; 'Unfinished' Symphony; Chant sans Paroles, Lemare.

Mr. J. M. Preston, St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Prelude and Fugue, Emile Bernard; Andante, Scriabin; Chorale Prelude, 'Jesus Christ, Our Salvation,' Bach; 'A Song of Spring,' Holst; Finale (Symphony No. 7), Widor.

Mr. W. J. Comley, Southwark Cathedral—Allegro Appassionata (Sonata No. 1), Harwood; Postlude on 'London New,' Grace; Toccata and Fugue in G minor (the 'Short'), Bach; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Marcia Eroica, Stanford.

Mr. Guy Michell, St. Matthew's, Worthing—Toccata (Dorian Mode), Bach; Allegretto in B minor, Guilmant; Etude Symphonique, Bossi.

Mr. Vernon Butcher, Parish Church, St. Marychurch, Torquay—Introduction and Fugue in F minor, Gray; Intermezzo, Vierne; Gavotte and Carillon (Partita in E), Karg-Elert; Fantasia (Sonata No. 17), Rheinberger.

Mr. Stanley Curtis, St. Matthew's, Worthing—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Sonata in G, Elgar; Finale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.

APPOINTMENTS

Mrs. C. Langdale Brown, choirmistress and organist, Oaklands Congregational Church, W.12.

Mr. Leonard Castle, choirmaster and organist, St. Edmund, King and Martyr, Lombard Street, E.C.

Mr. Owen le P. Franklin, assistant-organist, York Minster.

Mr. E. H. Woodcock, choirmaster and organist, Church of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth.

Letters to the Editor

IS SINGING SIMPLE?

Sir,—I have been reading in the August issue of the Musical Times an article 'On the Simplicity of Singing,' by Mr. William Shakespeare, which I have not clearly understood, whether from my own fault or not I do not know.

After the usual short introduction the writer begins his theme with the statement, 'When a man sustains a whispered "Ah!" and can tune this whisper to the note C (an octave above the third space, treble clef), he has found out the greatest resonance belonging to that vowel, and realises, moreover, a remarkable sense of open throat and a surprising freedom and unconsciousness of the tongue. Should the vowel tune down to B natural or B flat, or up to C sharp or D, his throat no longer feels as wide open, nor is his tongue so free and unconscious as when he tuned the whisper correctly.'

This statement puzzles me. Is it really suggested that a man—tenor, baritone, or bass—can tune a whispered 'Ah' to the high treble C? I have tried, but by no stretch of imagination have I been able to think that any 'Ah' I whisper bears any resemblance to the high treble C. It may be that I have a 'low ear'—one incapable of hearing high harmonics, or that I have got the idea wrong.

In his excellent and fundamental books on 'Voice Training' and 'Song Interpretation,' Mr. W. S. Drew discusses the theory of vowel sounds, citing the research work performed by Prof. Miller of the Case School of Applied Science in America, and also that of Dr. W. A. Aikin and Sir Richard Paget in this country. So far as the vowel 'Ah' is concerned, the theory states that whenever this vowel is sung, a partial in the neighbourhood of C (1035) is reinforced strongly, no matter what the pitch of the fundamental note may be. So far as I can understand it, this means that the main energy of the voice must lie in these regions around C (1035) and that it is reinforcement of this upper partial which makes the vowel to sound 'Ah' and not something else. In other words, C (1035) is the chief determinant in the vowel 'Ah.' At any pitch of the fundamental 'Ah' which includes the partial C (1035) in its harmonic series or a partial very near to it, a true vowel sound 'Ah' can be made, and at any pitch where the partial C (1035) is not included in the harmonic series a true vowel sound 'Ah' cannot be made. If this be true, it seems somewhat strange to talk of tuning a whispered 'Ah' to a partial which, in the case of men's voices, must be there in any case.

The writer next proceeds to deduce from this observation a number of axioms good in themselves but hardly seeming to be evolved out of the preceding discussion. Some whispering exercises follow, and he goes on to say that 'it must not be expected, however, that we can all at once sing with the same ease that we whisper. The vocal cords have to be tuned and set in vibration.' Again I am puzzled. Even when resonance is completely understood and mastered —if it ever is—can one sing as easily as whisper? Is it possible on physical grounds? After all, the singer is in some measure conditioned by physical considerations. I have heard dozens of singers, but none so far who gave me the impression that they were having no more difficulty in singing songs than they would have in whispering them. Even the gramophone record of Battistini singing 'Eri Tu' remains unconvincing in this respect. Unless my memory be at fault I have read somewhere in a book by Plunket Greene that singing is continuous physical and mental effort.

The second sentence seems harder than the first. How does one tune the vocal cords? One can only think of a note and try to sing it, the closeness of correspondence of the result with the thought depending —save, perhaps, in cases of specific structural disabilities—upon the accuracy with which the note has been remembered mentally and can be reproduced physically. But in this operation the cords tune themselves automatically under the direction of the auditory centres in the brain.

Various other things follow. First, 'although we can tune the whispered scale by adjusting the resonance chambers, we cannot tune the vocal scale by anything we can see or feel, as we have no direct command over the vocal cords.' It might be argued that we can no more tune the resonance chambers by seeing or feeling them in whispering than in singing. Is there any essential difference between whispering and singing except the enormously amplified use made of the resonance chambers and vocal cords in the latter performance as compared with the former?

In the next statement Mr. Shakespeare comes to the heart of the matter. 'All we can do is to decide upon a note, and in singing this to observe how near is the result to the sound intended.' This appears a perfectly true statement of the extent of our powers on the tone-production side of the subject. Mr. Drew in a footnote to a Musical Times article not long ago said that 'a singer would need no more instruction in tone production than he could obtain by continuously listening to a singer like Battistini.' One believes it. Singing is received in the brain by way of the ear, and must be learnt chiefly by the ear. The voice-training appears to be largely ear-training, only the development of the power to hear excellent tones in the mind seems very much more rapid than the adjustment of physiological apparatus to reproduce them.

The remainder of the article, dealing with the sensations which should be felt, and the control of the breath, seems excellent good sense and sound counsel, and there is every reason to be grateful for it; but many people, surely, who have made any attempt to struggle with a subject which appears to bristle with difficulties, where the vocal and musical sides appear at first more as antagonists than mutual helpers and the open throat seems an apparent impossibility, will wonder where in all this the simplicity is supposed to come in.—Yours, &c.,

A. E. Cobill.

TECHNIQUE BEFORE INTERPRETATION

Sir,—An article entitled 'The State of Voice Production in England at the Present Time' appears in the September issue of the Musical Times, written by Mr. Herbert Hilton in a most scholarly manner, and on the face of it is apparently a plea for saner methods in the teaching of singing in this country. I think if Mr. Hilton is perfectly sure of his ground he would be quite justified in making a bolder stand than is apparent in his article. I take it that his subject is, broadly, an appeal for the study of the mechanical side of the voice to precede the spiritual or interpretative side. I must confess I read the greater part of his article with much pleasure, and looked forward eagerly to some helpful practical suggestions.

Apparently he was fortunate in the selection of his teacher, as in my forty years' experience as an adult singer and teacher I found that in a preponderance of instances a great deal of harm is caused by the teaching of interpretation—répertoire, pitch, duration and phrasing, &c.—to the utter exclusion of vocal mechanics, and I hold most strongly that to maintain the voice to its full capacity for a prolonged period of years it is essential (save in the case of most exceptional naturally 'placed' voices) to master the mechanical movements of larynx, pharynx, and soft palate, and to study the resonating cavities of mouth and nose, allied to careful intake and control of the breath.

Moreover, a close study of these salient points—after an unfortunate experience of twenty-five years' throat trouble caused through neglect of these features, subsequent recovery, and success in dealing with hundreds of similar cases—convinces me that there is not the slightest reason why every one with a desire to do so should not become a singer, that is, to sing with perfect joy and freedom within the limits of the endowment of Nature as to voice, ear, will, and brain, so long as the singing voice is produced on natural lines as in cultured speech. I fear that the vast majority of people who start singing lessons are permitted (chiefly through lack of necessary technical and practical knowledge and experience on the part of the teacher) to become artificial, with resultant throat trouble, pain, and distress which may easily be avoided.

I must join issue with Mr. Hilton (perhaps I have mistaken his intent) if he contends that voice control and breath control must be regarded as separate entities in the production of sound. I fail to see how the voice is to function without the assistance of the breath, and conversely, in my opinion, the control of the voice depends chiefly on the control of the breath. Surely the result of effort is likely to fall short of perfection unless the two factors are co-ordinated.—Yours, &c.,

Bladon Hackett.

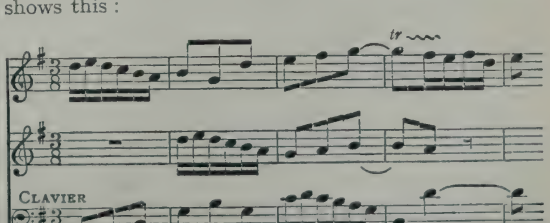
14, Hanover Street, W.1.

'A NEW VIOLIN SONATA BY BACH'

Sir,—With regard to the new Violin Sonata by Bach mentioned in the September Musical Times, may I draw attention to its points of similarity to one in the same key for violin, flute, and clavier?

Judging by the extract given by the writer, the first movements do not correspond, except in time-signature and tempo.

The four bars quoted from the Vivace, however, are identical in their harmonic basis, and in the third and fourth bars, melodically also. The following quotation shows this:



(Not having a copy by me, I quote from memory, so there may be one or two errors in the notes.) The almost continuous semiquaver bass mentioned by the writer of the article is here present, too.

The Largo also is closely connected: compare the following extract with that given in the Musical Times:

The movement ends with a half-close in E minor.

The theme of the Presto is absolutely identical, but the continuation (quaver movement), though having the same harmonic basis, has much more interesting figuration. I cannot recall, for the moment, the unconventional sequence mentioned by the writer of the article, but I must mention one, near the end, which immediately brings to mind the song 'The Bay of Biscay.' The effect at first hearing is really rather amusing.

It would, I think, be interesting to make a close comparison of the two works. As far as one can judge at present, it appears that the work for flute, violin, and clavier might be a later version and expansion of that for violin and clavier.—Yours, &c.,

90, Fairlands Avenue, Thornton Heath. William Lovelock.

[Several correspondents write concerning the similarity pointed out by Mr. Lovelock. Our article was written without reference to the Editorial preface, which we now find clears up the point. We give a translation of the passage concerned: 'The discovery of the Sonata is important because it brings to light an original Bach work of which until now only a version by a pupil was known—the Trio in G for flute, violin, and continuo. The Trio uses the Bach bass apparently note for note, but adds a new upper part that is certainly not by Bach. A comparison of the two works reveals the superior quality of the Sonata.'—Editor.]

A PROFESSION FIT FOR MUSICIANS TO LIVE IN

Sir,—It warms the heart to read 'Feste's' September article. Is it possible that musicians are going to stand up for themselves at last?. At a recent I.S.M. meeting I was astonished and delighted beyond measure to hear Prof. Percy Buck roundly declare that we are a trade union, and ought to behave like one (not in the naughty way of some unions, of course; we shall never be able to strike—alas!). For five years, when I had the agreeable if too little exciting task of editing the Music Teacher, I was insistent, in season and out (if there ever can be a close season for commonsense), in urging that the musical profession should begin to behave like other professions. The doctors organized themselves over a hundred years ago. Their trade is a necessity; ours is a luxury. If we more often remembered that, by the way, we might prosper better. Subtlety is no more a universal characteristic of our tribe than is push; I am very sure that if we do not display both qualities we shall droop, and lose what influence we now have.

Your contributor's admirable fighting article raises so many urgent matters that it is difficult to know where to begin to discuss them. At the moment I will confine myself chiefly to begging every musician who believes that the motto of the profession should be that of the Musketeers: 'Each for all and all for each,' to take part in the present discussion, and to try to discover how all may best face the new spirit in the world which your un-named correspondent so justly describes. As I see part at least of our problem, it is this: We have to assert ourselves—to define our artistic and social place in the community; and we have to do it without arousing the antagonism of the well-disposed. In the process of definition, I see no way in which we can avoid being a little firm with the foolish type of amateur. But if we have a sound and finely-toned body politic, with a nervous organization trained to the minute, we can do wonders, both for ourselves and for the intelligent public.

One obvious thing to do—a thing dreadfully overdue—is this: Whenever any corrupting cant appeared in the press (say a report of some noble lord's expressed scorn of good music—the sort of after-dinner 'wit' we know only too well), our professional body's 'Flying Squad' would immediately write a letter to the editor of the journals concerned, retorting upon the fool with, maybe, a wit more cutting than his own; we should, in fine, show him up for the ignorant boor he is. Whenever a report of the activities of a bogus college appeared, our Society would do its duty in protecting its members by instantly exposing with deadly certainty the truth about that cancerous body. One of the most necessary funds in any musical society is the Propaganda and Protection Fund, which should employ, say, ten per cent. of the whole income in these sanitary and most salutary energies. This obvious thing, again, has never been done—a circularisation, at intervals, of every journal in the Empire that is printed in English, giving the truth about bogus colleges. In spite of all that devoted and determined persons (far too few of them) have been able to do, we are still at the point where a leading London daily blandly prints reports of the doings of one of the most notorious of the proprietary colleges. And we call ourselves a profession!

Our defence must needs include a good deal of offence, and it is that which discommodes some good people. By reason of the fears of many for their comfort and 'dignity,' we are still beset by our own weak brethren teaching badly in back streets for a grotesque fee, and bolstered up by 'colleges' that in any profession worth the name would have been blown out of existence fifty years ago, either by legal dynamite or ridicule. The new thought is, I believe, sincerely seeking government of the profession by the profession for the profession; but we move very slowly, because we have not yet developed a wide and deep professional and civic sense, and so the professional societies suffer from the paucity of members. I am delighted to know that the I.S.M. is gaining a hundred members a month. As it grows, so must its aspirations and its propagandist activities. May I insist again that until a large sum is annually set apart for this last work no society can make much progress? We ought to organize with a blend of the methods of Scotland Yard and the liquor trade; with the deadly reach of the iron hand (not always gloved), and the subtlety of the serpent's tongue. How long, my brothers, how long?—Yours, &c.,

W. R. Anderson.

'OPS. v. TITLES'

Sir,—The object of any innovation is, or ought to be, to serve some useful purpose, and I fail to see how any material good can be attained by the substitution of titles for 'opus numbers,' especially when the titles are merely the result of some transient impression.

Your correspondent, Mr. Clinton Gray-Fisk, assumes that titles to certain of Beethoven's sonatas is the prime cause of their popularity. I disagree. Can he deny that some of the most popular of all Bach's works are many organ pieces that have no special title?

'Titles,' even to original compositions, are becoming not only fantastic, but positively dangerous. We are asked to believe that a pupil's imagination can be aroused and developed in this way; and we are living in an age when every piece for children is written to depict some scene, incident, object, or character. A child fed on this stuff grows up expecting to be spoon-fed on such semi-digested ideas for the rest of his life, and it is to assist such mental laziness that fancy titles are advocated for the classics.

In a recent discussion a Lancashire friend (a top-hole amateur) epitomised the whole question when he said: 'If all this coddling of the lazy listener and pupil is essential, how did you and I, and all the rest, come to have any musical intelligence? Was it not simply that we made the effort to understand, and are we not better musicians because we had to work hard for the knowledge which now enables us to appreciate the beauty of all that is good and worth-while in music?'

At the risk of being branded a 'wet blanket' or a 'spoil-sport,' I cannot understand why the attachment of a title is going to make one have a better understanding of the music, or even the more easily to recognise any composition. Further, assuming it is for the benefit of the amateur that these titles are being invented, does it matter a very great deal whether he can give a composition he hears a name or a number? Then again, who is to decide what is a suitable name? Even to contemplate such a wholesale labelling makes one shudder. I was recently asked if I had ever heard Beethoven's 'Knocking at the Door' Symphony. Here is another example, equally silly. A teacher told her pupil that the middle portion of a Chopin Nocturne (I won't say which, for fear others will adopt the idea) was meant to convey the impression of 'a very old man walking alone at midnight in a graveyard.'

Let us, for our personal pleasure, allow our imagination free play, but preserve us from insisting on, or even advocating, a wholesale list of labels which could not meet with anything approaching even general acceptance.

Instead of puzzling one's brain to find titles, or wasting time and space in discussing such a matter, would not a better purpose be served by ventilating our views on matters which are more practical and of vital importance to the musical profession? Your correspondent, 'General Practitioner,' makes a reference to amateur critics. What a curse these can be! Surely the man who is able to devote his whole time to the job is best qualified, both by experience and his independent position, to give unbiassed views on the merits or otherwise of a composition. How can we hope to educate the masses except by condemning all that is not of the best, and having the best commented on by men specially trained for the work?

And what about the interests of professional musicians, either performers or teachers? Surely something could be written which would prove a stimulant to many who are making a valiant fight for a livelihood? In this connection a Society of Professional Musicians in Ulster has been formed, and the benefit already realised exceeds the most sanguine expectations. This is an age of organization; lawyers, doctors, dentists, architects, &c., have each their central governing body, but the musical profession, especially the teaching portion, is still content to let each fight for himself.

Could not the I.S.M. be gingered up to taking a keener interest in this matter?—Yours, &c.,

Derry Cathedral. J. T. Frankland.

Sir,—You invite the views of your readers as to whether listeners should be 'spoon-fed' or should do their thinking for themselves. Very shortly, that is the question. The answer, I think, is to be found in the Promenade Concerts. Has the listener been spoon-fed? No. Year after year the best music of every school has been put before him, and with it analytical notes which are written by musicians for musicians. The listener has been treated as though he were an educated thinking individual. It has been taken for granted that he knows the structure of music and understands the meaning of 'second subject,' 'coda,' 'recapitulation,' and so forth. Have foolish titles been foisted on to music? I think not. Has Sir Henry Wood even turned to the audience and invited them to sing, 'Up we go, we like to go up,' in order that its members may grasp the theme of the 'Eroica'? I am positive he has not. Are the concerts a success—something living? The answer is emphatically, 'They are.' I think they are the best thing in the musical life of the country to-day. Nobody has tried to 'hanky-panky' people into going to them with silly sentimental talk. The music is there, and they can take it or leave it. They have taken it with avidity.

Here is an example of a real listener, a man I know well. He can't play the pianoforte, and was bored by music till he was sixteen. Then he went experimentally to a Promenade. He got interested, and began to look over my full scores. Two years later he went out to India and took all Beethoven's Symphonies with him in full score. Ten years later he came back knowing them all practically by heart. He can't play, he has never had a music lesson, but he is a musician. When he goes to a concert he can now listen with fine judgment. He has written and produced an opera for boys. I give him as an example of the good listener, the man who first hears music unwillingly, then suddenly realises, 'My hat, here 's something worth my attention'; gives it his attention, and gets to the heart of the matter. Would 'spoon-feeding' and sloppy talk have helped him? Would 'fancy' titles have helped him? A very big 'NO!' Music, whether you listen or play, can't be had without work and thought.—Yours, &c.,

S.

Richmond.

Sir,—A regular reader of the Musical Times, I wish to express my admiration for the writings of 'Feste' in general and for his article in the September issue in particular. I am in whole-hearted agreement with every word he has written about 'Ops. v. Titles.'

Music is a spiritual experience so strong that any external interference with that supreme joy is, to my mind, sacrilegious. Owing to its quality of other-worldliness, all great music must, and should, stand alone, without any meretricious aids whatever.

It does not need the help of shallow titles or the posturing of dancers or any other interference to make its meaning clear to those whose ears are messengers to their souls, and not mere receivers for agreeable titillations. The only exception is that of Song—and then only when the music is by great composers. Even then it is music that gives the words their added significance, and not vice-versâ.—Yours, &c.,

Cardiff. Hubert Pengelly.

[We are unable to include all the letters received on this topic.—Editor.]

AMBIGUOUS NOTATION OF TRIPLETS

Sir,—In Handel's Sonata in F for violin and pianoforte (Augener, Book 1, No. 3) the last movement has for violin this figure: and for pianoforte , and vice-versâ. Is this an example of the variable dot making sound in actual performance? Or should the distinction be made? The latter interpretation seems to me to break the swing.

Why did these old composers bother to write when would have been quicker and more accurate?

The same figure occurs in Chopin's Rondo for Two Pianofortes (Op. 73), where I am told, should be played owing to the speed of the piece. Why didn't Chopin write it like that?

In modern works where the figure occurs, e.g., 'Les Aves' (Grovlez), I imagine the distinction is meant to be made clear. Am I right? I shall be grateful if you will kindly explain.—Yours, &c.,

D. D.

Farnham, Surrey.

[The ambiguous notation of triplets was a convention of the Bach-Handel period. Usually but not always. The context, and the pace and style of the piece, are the determining factors in cases where the intention is not obvious. We agree that the in the Chopin piece should be played as semiquaver triplets. Chopin merely carried on the old convention for no apparent reason. In practically all modern music the distinction between and should be made.—Editor.]

'SOPRANOS ARE RARE'

Sir,—With due respect to the appeal of Mr. Travers Adams, I for one do not feel justified in leaving the name of the B.B.C. out of the question.

Mr. Adams pleads well, and there is something to be said for his divisions of the human voice. I am not, I admit, clear about that division defined by him as high or mezzo contralto, but even supposing it is as common as he says it is, I still fail to comprehend how so many could be trained by any method to become successful professional sopranos.

In justification of my own contention I ask anyone to glance over the B.B.C. programmes as given in the Radio Times. It will be noticed that (whatever may be asserted about the quality of their voices) the sopranos outnumber the contraltos by about eight to one. Now the contralto, however Mr. Adams may define its supposed varieties, is as beautiful a voice as any soprano—much more so, indeed, in the estimation of many musicians. Why, then, are so few of these beautiful voices engaged by the B.B.C. selectors, who must be businesslike as well as vocally expert? The inevitable conclusion is that it is the contralto, not the soprano, which is difficult to obtain.—Yours, &c.,

Pearce Small.

Tunbridge Road,
Southend-on-Sea.

Sir,—In regard to the correspondence 'Sopranos are Rare,' a little excitement has arisen in the Southend district and has reached us here.

I need not enter into details, but it will perhaps interest your readers if I relate an incident which may have some bearing on the chief point at issue, i.e., the possibility of a contralto being able to sing soprano also.

We have entertainments in the Pavilion here during the summer of the nature mentioned by your correspondent H. Rousby. The week before last, one of the performers, a lady, sang an operatic selection in a very high and powerful, but at the same time not unpleasing, soprano voice. She followed up this song by another in a voice like a man's, at the close of which she exclaimed, 'How about those for Clara Butt notes?' This 'double' voice, if I may so describe it, came as a surprise.

I confine myself strictly to facts, which can be vouched for by hundreds of listeners.—Yours, &c.,

Sheerness. 'Interested.'

Sir,—Encouraged by your kind indulgence to the request of Mr. Sylvester Mills, whose letter I have rejoiced to see, I hope that you will allow me also a little space.

The subject under discussion, if given time to spread and soak into the minds of the ordinary student, alluded to by Mr. H. Travers Adams, will undoubtedly be of the most 'wanted' on record.

If this ordinary student, generally a particularly simple, over-trusting, and often a very ignorant being, is really to derive any benefit, the phraseology of definition and explanation of your various writers ought to be simple and understandable to a degree. I plead that it may be so.

In a small book written by Mr. Travers Adams and commended by several musical papers, 'The Central Point in Beautiful Voice Production,' the author declares it to be written for the simplest readers. One of the northern papers objects that its language is severely technical in parts. Will Mr. Adams pardon my directing his attention to the fact?—Yours, &c.,

61, Rowfant Road,
Balham, S.W.17. C. L. Greenfields.

Sir,—In connection with the 'fact' which I have been attempting to bring before the musical public, I have had far more letters than I could possibly reply to. I will, with your consent, do my best to deal with some of them at least through the medium of your paper, and then I will deal with the letters to your paper. In the first place, I beg to supply the information that if letters, either for or against my views, are not accepted by the Editor, it can only be that in some way they are not suitable. I have perfect confidence in his discrimination. But the questions raised in others of these letters are so entirely and valuably related to the point I am emphasising that I have great pleasure in answering them.

One correspondent writes: 'In a pamphlet of yours entitled "The Soprano Voice" you recommend the practice of full voice singing from almost the commencement of practice. Would not the striving for power and the straining of the breathing organs be dangerous to the vocal cords and the parts connected with the breathing apparatus in the case of young people?' In the pamphlet referred to I certainly ought to have explicitly emphasised the point that 'full voice' does not imply, necessitate, or involve the striving for full power and penetration of the sound, or full strength of expiration of breath. This should be very clearly understood.

There is a soft, quiet, and gentle use of the 'full voice' as well as of the mezza-voce or half-voice. In 'full voice' the sound must at least be big (fat) and deep. It may even, comparatively speaking, be devoid of penetration or weight in some songs. There are structures of immense bulk that are extremely light and have little power of penetrating the feeblest of structures opposed to them—for instance, a full-sized balloon. Full-voice sound of this description is at least serviceable in drawing down the larynx and expanding it, which is a point of primary importance in preparing the way for the discovery of the true nature of a voice. Another writer, also referring to certain words in one of my books, suggests, 'Suppose, after lengthy and honest attempts to bring into existence notes below the compass of a soprano, these notes refuse to exhibit weight, volume, and depth suitable to a contralto, is not this clear evidence that such a voice cannot be a contralto?'

This is also a very valuable question, and I am glad to be afforded the opportunity of answering it. It would be very unwise to depend for accuracy of diagnosis only on the behaviour of the lower notes. It is on the behaviour of the upper middle notes that it is safest to depend. If a certain bigness of sound and a certain degree of weight and depth can be produced on these notes it is certain that the voice is not a soprano. In most young contraltos, or in some older people (also really contraltos) who have forced the voice up for any length of time, the lower notes are light, superficial, and powerless, but full volume can be easily induced to appear on the upper middle notes C (third space) and D (fifth line). Later on the lower notes will begin to show their heads in no uncertain fashion after the middle notes have been properly attended to. No useful point would be served by attempting to answer the other letters written to me, except one with reference to 'F. H. K.'

With respect to the letters written to your paper, it will be useful to make a few brief remarks. I fear that, up to the time of my writing, not one of your contributors has fully grasped my meaning. It is acknowledged, generally speaking, that 'the soprano element' (for the most part) is unsatisfactory at the present day, but they doubt the reason I put forward for much of this unsatisfactoriness. Their letters are of value only in an indirect sense.

'F. H. K.' presumably refers to my book, 'The Central Point in Beautiful Voice Production.' Here I certainly do attempt to disclose the method of obtaining full expansion, solidity, and depth of sound, and if this kind of practice was conscientiously carried out, naturally deep voices should run small risk of being permanently diagnosed as sopranos. This possibly is his real meaning.

H. Rousby, in a depressing letter, seems to blame the vitiated taste of the bulk of the present-day audiences and the laziness of the majority of teachers and pupils. But this would apply equally to all singers. Also there is a large public quite ready for the very best kind of singing, and there are really few pupils who would refuse to give up time and trouble to practise. It is, I regret to say, my opinion that it is entirely the fault of the teachers. There are so many who are really only theoretical musicians, harmonists, pianists, composers, accompanists, coaches, instrumentalists, &c. In their own sphere they may be brilliant, but they are not fitted either to study or teach voice production. It is too great a drudgery for people of their temperament. They are not likely to enter into public discussion.

Miss Rivers's solution is valuable though also indirect, but it would apply to all voices. If no vowel but 'Ah' is used it generally ends in producing such extreme thinness and hardness of sound that a belief might easily be induced that certain really deep voices were sopranos. I dare not ask for more space at present.
—Yours, &c., H. Travers Adams.

4, Albany Mansions, S.W.11.

[This correspondence is now closed. We hope to include next month a final article by Mr. Travers Adams.—Editor.]

MOZART'S PIANOFORTE SONATAS

Sir,—I take back the word 'ignorance' in my letter; it was impossible to have meant ignorance in matters musical of any of the Musical Times staff; but it was meant to refer to a particular ignorance of Mozart's pianoforte sonatas. I find them so little known as to merit this word, even among capable pianists who know the Beethoven sonatas well—though the Mozart's should give them, as adult musicians, far more satisfaction and musical delight.

I say adult. Youth is pre-eminently the time for enjoying Beethoven, with his turbulence, his revolt, his inquiries and problems; and these are always in front in his music. But as we grow older (and I own to fifty and more years of critical listening to the best music) we get a bit tired of this turmoil, and long for the rest of pure music, music for music's sake, in which Bach and Mozart are always satisfying.

The Mozart sonatas are a mine of delight in deep feeling, pure ornament, quite perfect part-writing, and lovely melody; and yet even among trained musicians are all but unknown in real detailed, familiar knowledge.
—Yours, &c., Frederick H. Evans.

32, Rosemont Road,
Acton, W.3.

A TRIBUTE TO GERHARDT

Sir,—I hope you will allow me to express agreement with the views of Mr. Charles W. Orr, as set forth in his article in the September Musical Times. We know perfectly well that the standard of singing leaves a great deal to be desired. It may be that Gerhardt's voice is not exactly what it was; and, being human, she will not always be at her very best. The fact remains that, as she is, she stands head and shoulders above the rank and file of singers. In listening to her, one is conscious of this truth. While the conscientious scribe may feel compelled to mention the deterioration in her high notes and the unsteadiness in sustained phrases to which Mr. Orr refers, he must, surely, recognise that the last word ought to be one of praise for so good a singer and interpreter. Mr. Orr's article pays a generous, but not too generous, tribute to a fine artist. Yours, &c., D. C. Parker.

Glasgow.

'THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE'

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Gabriel Sharp's courteous criticism of my paper in last month's Musical Times, I would say that I do not think there is a greater contrast between the music of Josquin des Près and that of Orlando di Lasso than exists between the early works of Haydn and the latest of Beethoven. Music, possibly the oldest of the arts as regards its origin, has always been the latest in each stage of Western civilization; the authors of the musical renaissance are not Palestrina and Di Lasso, but Peri, Cavalieri, and Caccini. As for Byrd, he was by no means the first to write the major and minor thirds simultaneously, or the minor third and suspended fourth in like manner. Tallis has written the former in the third bar from the end of the Nunc Dimittis in his Service in D minor, and in the Motet in Forty Parts he has written not only minor but many major thirds simultaneously with the suspended fourth. And still earlier examples might be quoted.

Mr. Sharp mentions Weelkes. This great composer, whose first works were not published until 1597, hardly counts as belonging to the 16th century. He was certainly rather fond of false relations and other crudities. But even so it cannot, I think, be denied that he was of the school which was passing away, and not of that just coming into life. He is to be classed with Gibbons rather than with Monteverde.—Yours, &c., Arthur T. Froggatt.

Twickenham.

A FORGOTTEN AMATEUR

Sir,—Everyone must have been greatly interested to read Mr. Hugh Arthur Scott's admirable article recently published in the Daily Telegraph, about distinguished musical amateurs, but among the famous Royal musicians whom my much-esteemed friend mentioned I am surprised at the omission of the most able and distinguished Royal musical amateur of all—Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Prussia, nephew of Frederick the Great, who was born at Friedrichsfelde, near Berlin, on November 18, 1772, and fell in battle near Saalfeld on October 6, 1806. He was a great admirer of his illustrious contemporary Beethoven, whose style is reflected in the Prince's own compositions.

Prince Louis Ferdinand's published compositions consist of a Quintet (Op. 1) for pianoforte and strings, an Octet for pianoforte, clarinet, two horns, two violins, and two 'cellos, a Nocturne for pianoforte, flute, and strings, a Larghetto with variations for pianoforte and string quartet (with double-bass), two Pianoforte Quartets (E flat, Op. 5, and F minor, Op. 6), an Andante for pianoforte quartet, two Pianoforte Trios, a four-part Pianoforte Fugue, Variations for pianoforte, and a Rondo with orchestra.—Yours, &c.,

Algernon Ashton.

22A, Carlton Vale,
Maida Vale, N.W.6.

DAVY AND BEETHOVEN

Sir,—In answer to Mr. Lloyd's letter in your September issue, I write to say that the point he raises did not escape me.

Two years before Sir Edward Elgar's Violin Concerto was produced I wrote a simple little pianoforte piece entitled 'A Thought.' It was never published, and at the present time is lying at the bottom of an old trunk. Sir Edward could never have seen or heard of it, as I had not the honour of his acquaintance then, although I have that privilege now. But the fact remains that the first four bars of the theme are identical with the melody of the slow movement of the Concerto.—Yours, &c.,

Reginald Silver.

Colyton, Devon.

'BERLIOZ THE MELODIST'

Sir,—Mr. Wotton has so admirably presented the case for Berlioz as a melodist in the September number of the Musical Times that I do not feel I can profitably add very much to what he has said. With your consent, therefore, I propose to withdraw my acceptance of your invitation to contribute a further article on the subject unless, in the meanwhile, 'Feste' or some other writer should present the case for the opposition, in which eventuality I shall certainly be pleased to reply.—Yours, &c.,

Cecil Gray.

['Feste' writes: 'I have no desire to present a case for the opposition. I can only say that a careful study of the examples given by Mr. Wotton leaves me unconverted. I'm sorry! One would have thought that however much musicians may differ on most points, they would agree as to the quality of a set of tunes. But they don't, so there's nothing more to be said.']

EARLY ENGLISH OPERA

Sir,—I should be grateful if I might be allowed to add a short postscript to my article on 'Early English Opera,' published in the September issue of the Musical Times. On p. 799, col. 1, par. 2, I wrote: 'In "Cupid and Death," as in most of the masques, the principal characters do not sing. The "songs" are performed either by the chorus or by the singers who do not act in the play.' It occurs to me that this is a little misleading. Of course some of the actors have to sing in the recitative, to which I referred in the previous paragraph. What I meant was that they did not sing the set songs, which, according to the usual custom, were assigned to special singers and chorus. I must apologise for not having noticed the ambiguity when reading the proof.—Yours, &c.,

J. A. Westrup.

BERLIOZ'S 'LELIO'

Sir,—I congratulate Dr. Whittaker on having heard so much of 'Lelio.' It is a pity that the music was not completed by the 'Song of Happiness' (without which 'The Æolian Harp' loses half its meaning) and the Ballad (with pianoforte accompaniment). The work has been given in England at the Crystal Palace, and at a Students' Concert of the R.A.M. under Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The only other performance that I know of was under Mr. Riseley, at the Bristol Festival of 1905, when the mise-en-scène of Berlioz was partially carried out, in that Lélio (played by the ill-fated Lawrence Irving, made up as the composer) in a dim light recited before a blood-red curtain veiling the chorus and orchestra until the Fantasia on 'The Tempest.'

The rhapsodical monologues are an obstacle to a production of the monodrama in its entirety. Of great interest to the student of the master, they contain so many references to his life and artistic conditions in Paris of the 1830's as to be almost unintelligible to the ordinary concert-goer. To omit them entirely, as Dr. Whittaker would seem to suggest, appears to be too drastic a proceeding, since a more critical audience than that at Strasbourg might want to know the train of thought that led from a Chorus of Shades to one of Brigands, even though they might accept as normal a Scherzo following an Adagio with little or no connection between them. Perhaps a well-considered programme would fit the case.—Yours, &c.,

Hastings. Tom. S. Wotton.

P.S.—There seems to be an impression that 'The Margin of Music' is unobtainable, since I, in a footnote to 'Berlioz as Melodist' said I could not lay hands on it. Though unnecessary in this case, I like to verify my quotations, but the book was unfortunately not in my library, and I knew of no place where I could consult it, short of the British Museum, some seventy miles away. The volume (Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*) can of course be easily purchased, and I am sorry that I have been the innocent cause of any misunderstanding.—T. S. W.

CRITICAL DISAGREEMENT

Sir,—Concerning a gramophone record, your contributor 'Discus,' in the September Musical Times, writes: 'There are three vocal records worth notice: Frank Titterton singing well in "None shall sleep to-night," from Puccini's "Turandot," and "Let her believe," from "Girl of the Golden West" . . .' Regarding the same record, 'Piccolo' in the Gramophone writes: 'It is no use beating about the bush; the Titterton is definitely bad, and the fault lies mainly with the recording, which makes it difficult to recognise the well-known tenor's voice and gives a most pronounced hurdy-gurdy tone to the orchestra.'

Presuming the Gramophone critic to be a sterner judge than 'Discus,' there is still evident between the two notices a difference not only of opinion but of fact, for how can the tenor be said to be 'singing well' if at the same time it is 'difficult to recognise his voice'? If it be argued that the reader should hear the record and judge for himself, the critics' remarks become of no use, and when two such responsible journals as the Musical Times and the Gramophone so entirely disagree on the matter of one record, by whom is the poor gramophonist to be guided?—Yours, &c.,

Eastbourne Terrace, Laurence M. Ager.
Seaford.

['Discus' writes: 'Evidently the sample disc recieved by 'Piccolo' was defective. His reference to the faulty recording, making the singer's voice unrecognisable, and the orchestra sound like a hurdy-gurdy, bears this out.']

NOT EVERY PEDAL, SURELY!

Sir,—The following description of an organ performance from 'The Willing Horse,' by Ian Hay, leads one to feel that the organist did indeed make a great crash. The passage occurs in the chapter entitled, 'The Undefeated,' and reads thus: 'The organ began to rumble again. I could see the young organ-blower working as if to crack every muscle in his back. Then, suddenly, explosively, with every pedal and stop in action, it crashed into 'God save the King'!—Yours, &c.,

Herbert Hodge.

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2.

ONE-FINGER 'COMPOSERS'

Sir,—I read the criticism of the Berlin-Coward musical prostitution with the greatest satisfaction.

This seems to me to be just the particular line of criticism which is called for. Humorous contempt and banter—but, above all, contempt. The conceit and ignorance displayed by Irving Berlin's remarks, which you quote, would be impossible were it not for the musical ignorance rampant everywhere amongst people who, having been led to suppose that music is 'for everyone,' proceed to foster and encourage the 'finger composer.' Why will musicians play into the hands of amateur ignorance? My best thanks to the writer of the 'Occasional Note.'—Yours, &c.,

'Devonian.'

No. 1423. THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE.—Arr. by Geoffrey Shaw. Price (3*d*.).

UNISON SONGS—GRADE I. (Very Easy).

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

A SPECIALITY OF NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS is that they are issued in Books, each book containing songs of about the same class and degree of difficulty. Most of the songs are obtainable separately. Specially selected numbers can be stitched in a cover to order on favourable terms. The Classified School Catalogue, in which all the songs are graded, will be sent post free on application.

Published in two forms. A. Voice parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment, 8vo size; B. Voice parts only in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. Where no prices are given in the B column, the A Edition only is published.

	A	B
BOOK 1. SIX EASY SONGS	8d.
1. Getting up ... ... A. Moffat
2. The Lark ... ... ,,
3. Lazy Sheep ... ... ,,
4. The Snowdrop ... ... ,,
5. The Autumn Daisy ... ,,
6. A Riddle ... ... ,,
BOOK 2. SIX EASY SONGS	8d.
7. The Little Fish ... ... A. Moffat
8. The Spring Nosegay ... ,,
9. The Old Beggar Man ... ,,
10. The Three Little Ants ... ,,
11. The Child's Evening Prayer ,,
12. The Meadow ... ... ,,
BOOK 13. SIX SACRED SONGS	1s.
68. Ye Gentle Flowers ... ... A. Moffat
69. O Jesus, Who didst suffer ,,
70. I love the Flowers so beautiful ,,
71. God of Mercy, we beseech Thee ,,
72. Jesus so Merciful ... ... ,,
73. The Gladsome Spring is coming ,,
BOOK 14. SIX SACRED SONGS	1s.
74. O Children, live in Jesus Christ (Easter Hymn) ... ... A. Moffat	1½d.
75. Gentle Jesus (Evening Hymn) ,,
76. O Heavenly Father ... ,,
77. The Little Birds ... ... ,,
78. Forward, Christian Children ,,
79. Carol, Christian Children... ,,	2d.
BOOK 21. NINE UNISON SONGS FOR JUNIORS	1s.	6d.
115. Rippling Waters ... W. W. Pearson	2d.
116. The Snail ... ... H. Elliot Button	1½d.
117. The Butterfly Chase ... S. C. Cooke	1½d.
118. Swinging ... ... ,,	1½d.
119. Over the Meadows A. Scott Gatty	1½d.
120. The Wanderer's Song ... ,,	1½d.
121. Ladybird ... ... C. A. Macirone	2d.
122. My Home ... ... ,,	1½d.
123. Evening Star ... ... T. Murby	1½d.
BOOK 23. TWELVE SACRED SONGS	1s. 6d.	8d.
133. Listening Angels ... ... J. Stainer	1½d.	1½d.
134. Morning Hymn ... ... ,,	1½d.
135. Hour by Hour ... ... ,,	1½d.	1½d.
136. The Beautiful Land ... ,,	1½d.
137. The Crown is waiting ... ,,	1½d.	1½d.
138. The Cross of Life... ... ,,	1½d.
139. We will praise Thee ... ,,	1½d.	1½d.
140. Sabbath Bells ... ... ,,	1½d.
141. The Good Shepherd ... ,,	1½d.	1½d.
142. The Haven of Glory ... ,,	1½d.
143. The Golden Shore ... ,,	1½d.	1½d.
144. Evensong ... ... ,,	1½d.

	A	B
BOOK 25. TEN UNISON SONGS	1s.	4d.
151. Summer Evening... Cath. van Rennes	1½d.
152. Little Brother ... ,,	1½d.
153. The Old Beggar ... ,,	1½d.
154. Little Things ... ,,	1½d.
155. Cock-a-doodle-do ... ,,	1½d.
156. Patience ... ... ,,	1½d.
157. Summer Showers... ,,	1½d.
158. A Song for Boys ... ,,	1½d.
159. The Sunshine of the Heart ,,	1½d.
160. Cradle Song ... ,,	2d.
BOOK 48. TEN UNISON SONGS FOR JUVENILES	1s.	4d.
274. The conceited fly ... A. Scott Gatty	1½d.
275. The Wasp at the Picnic... ,,	1½d.
276. Merrily glides our boat ...Thos. Murby	1½d.
277. Trip along ... ... ,,	1½d.
278. The dewdrop ... Arthur Richards	2d.
279. Fairy Joys ... ... ,,	2d.
280. Stay, pretty swallow A. Scott Gatty	2d.
281. Well-a-day ... ...Thos. Murby	1½d.
282. Were I a Fairy ... Seymour Smith	2d.
283. A Charm ... ... ,,	1½d.
BOOK 83. SONGS FOR THE LITTLE ONES	*1s. 6d.	8d.
Twenty-five Songs ... By W. W. Pearson
BOOK 84. THE JUVENILE SONGSTER	*8d.	8d.
Thirty-three songs, in one, two, and three parts. Composed and arranged by Lowell Mason
BOOK 101. UNISON SONGS FOR CHILDREN From "The School Music Review"	8d.
The Jolly Tester (No. 40) ... J. W. Elliott
Jack and Jill (No. 44) ... ... ,,
The old man clothed in leather (No. 45) ,,
The Soft-shell Crab (No. 50). Actions ad lib. ... J. W. Chadwick
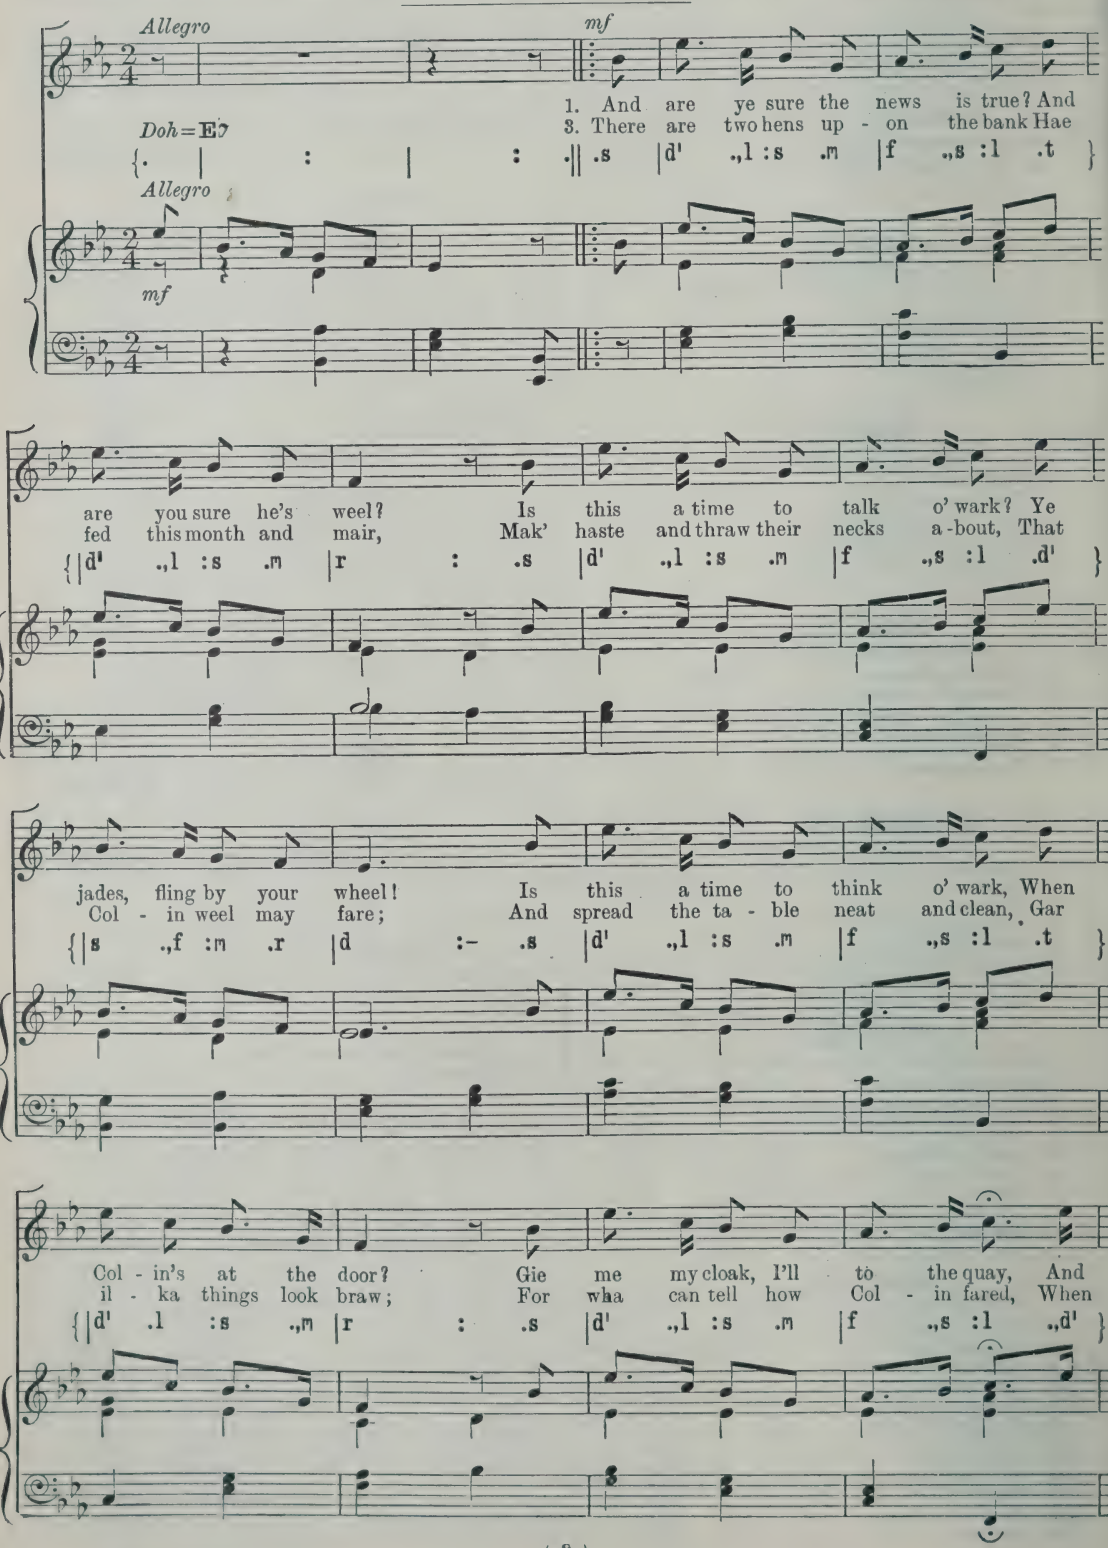
A Child's Evensong (No. 63) ... J. Stainer
I had a Little Doggy (No. 68)... J. W. Elliott
The Coming of Spring (No. 69) Schumann
The 'Logical Gardens (No. 70) G. F. Cobb
The Child and the Star (No. 66) J. W. Elliott
BOOK 147. TEN UNISON SONGS From "The School Music Review"	8d.
Hush-a-bye (No. 81) ... C. Egerton Lowe
The Story of the Grass (No. 82) Pearson
Winter Song (No. 93) ... W. W. Pearson
Swinging (No. 101) ... ... A. Medley
Christmas Eve (No. 103) ... A. Moffat
The Brook (No. 104) ... J. W. Chadwick
The First Brigade (Marching Song) (No. 106) ... ... P. E. Fletcher
Twinkle, twinkle (No. 107) ... Macdonald
Daddy Longlegs' warning (No. 117) Bridge
The Little Shadow (No. 122) ... K. Boundy
652. Diamonds ... ... R. H. Macdonald	2d.
653. The Fairy Book ... ,,	1½d.
654. A wet sheet and a flowing sea C. A. Macirone	2d.

Single Numbers from 1½*d. to* 3*d.* * Staff only.

There's nae luck about the house

Scottish Air
Arranged with Descant by GEOFFREY SHAW

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Allegro
mf
1. And are ye sure the news is true? And
3. There are two hens up - on the bank Hae
Doh = E♭
Allegro
mf
are you sure he's weel? Is this a time to talk o' wark? Ye fed this month and mair, Mak' haste and thraw their necks a-bout, That jades, fling by your wheel! Is this a time to think o' wark, When Col - in weel may fare; And spread the ta - ble neat and clean, Gar Col - in's at the door? Gie me my cloak, I'll to the quay, And il - ka things look braw; For wha can tell how Col - in fared, When

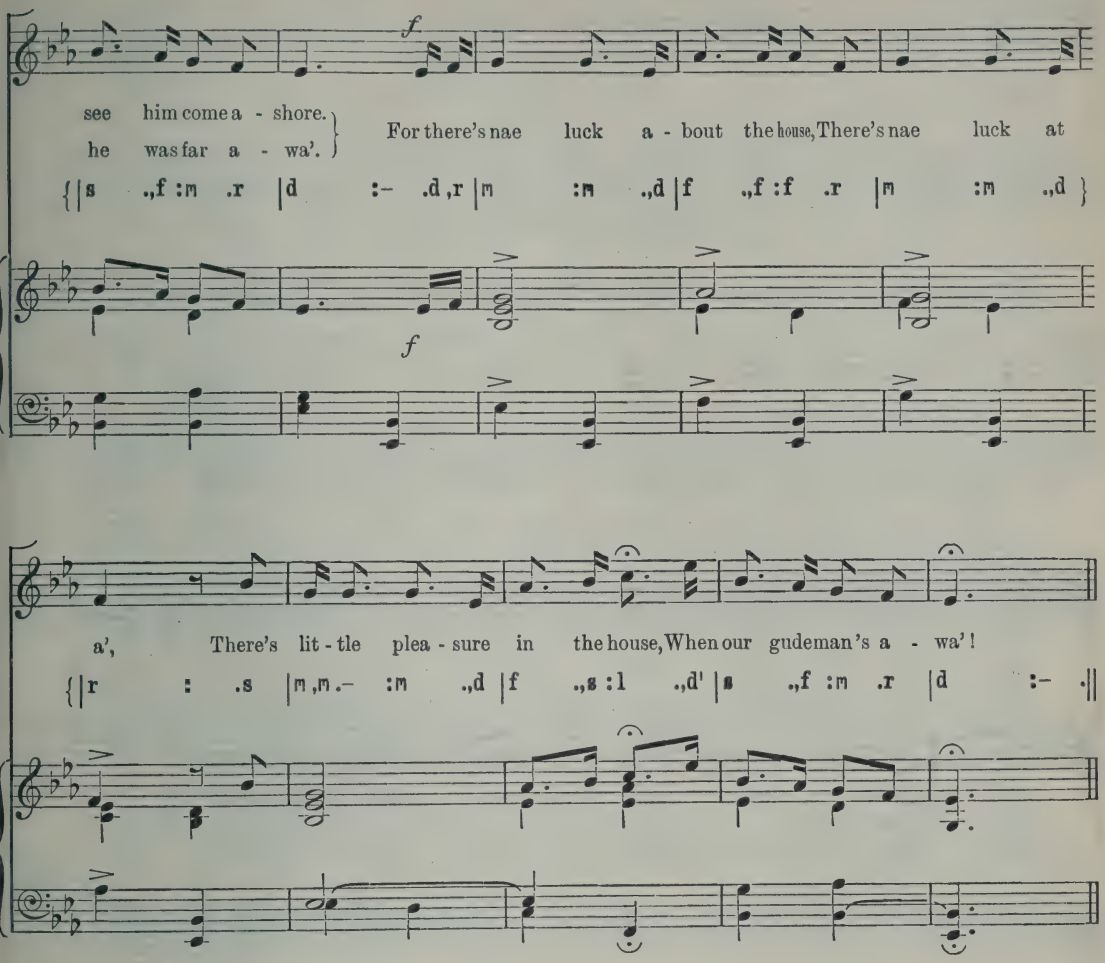
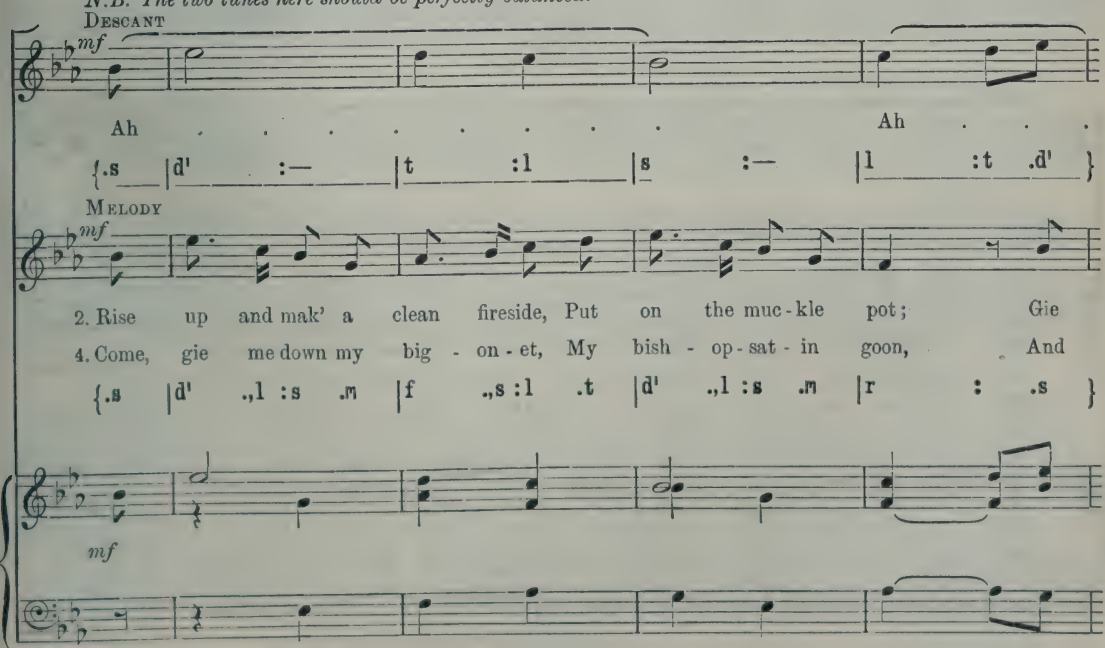
THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE



f
see him come a - shore.
he was far a - wa'.
For there's nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at
f
a', There's lit - tle plea - sure in the house, When our gudeman's a - wa'!

N.B. The two tunes here should be perfectly balanced.



Descant
mf
Ah . . . . . Ah . . .
Melody
mf
2. Rise up and mak' a clean fireside, Put on the muc - kle pot; Gie
4. Come, gie me down my big - on - et, My bish - op - sat - in goon, And mf

Ah . . .
lit - tle Kate her cot - ton gown, And Jock his Sun - day coat; And rin and tell the Bail - lie's wife, That Col - in's come to toon; My Ah . . . .
mak' their shoon as black as slaes, Their hose as white as snaw; It's tur - key slip - pers maun gae on, My hose o' pearl . . blue, It's ff
For there's a' to please my ain gude-man, He likes to see them braw.
a' to please my ain gude-man, For he's both leal and true.
For there's
ff

THE LEE SHORE

FOUR-PART SONG

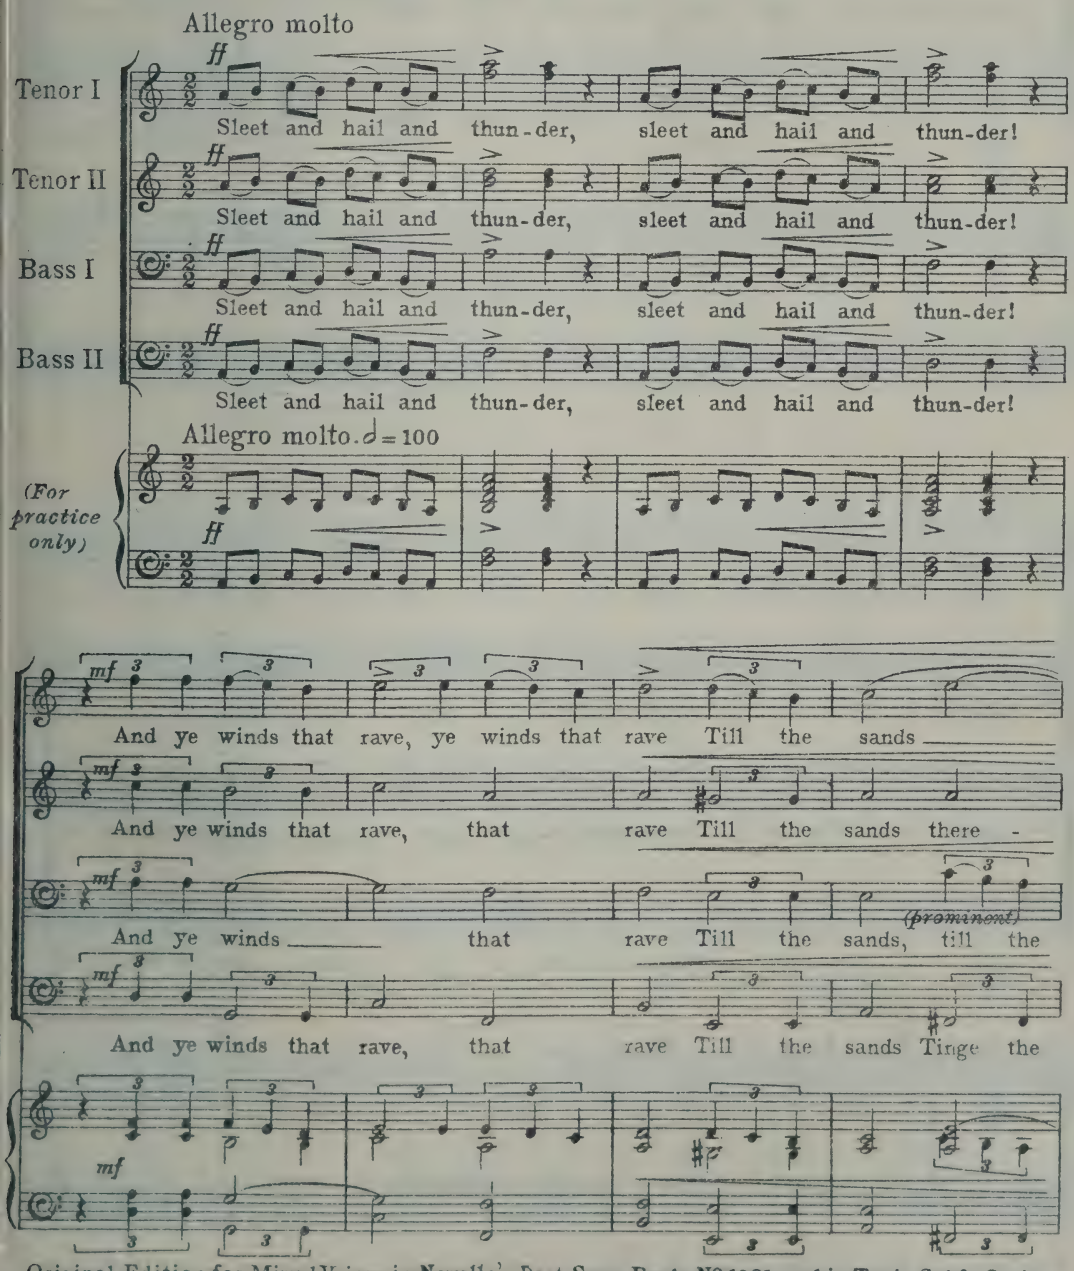
ARRANGED FOR MEN'S VOICES (T.T. B.B.)

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY THOMAS HOOD

THE MUSIC BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited; New York: The H.W. GRAY Co, Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Allegro molto
Tenor I
Sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
Tenor II
Sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
Bass I
Sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
Bass II
Sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
Allegro molto. ♩ = 100
(For practice only)
And ye winds that rave, ye winds that rave Till the sands
And ye winds that rave, that rave Till the sands there -
And ye winds that rave Till the sands, till the (prominent)
And ye winds that rave, that rave Till the sands Tinge the Original Edition for Mixed Voices in Novello's Part-Song Book, No 1231, and in Tonic Sol-fa Series, No 2039

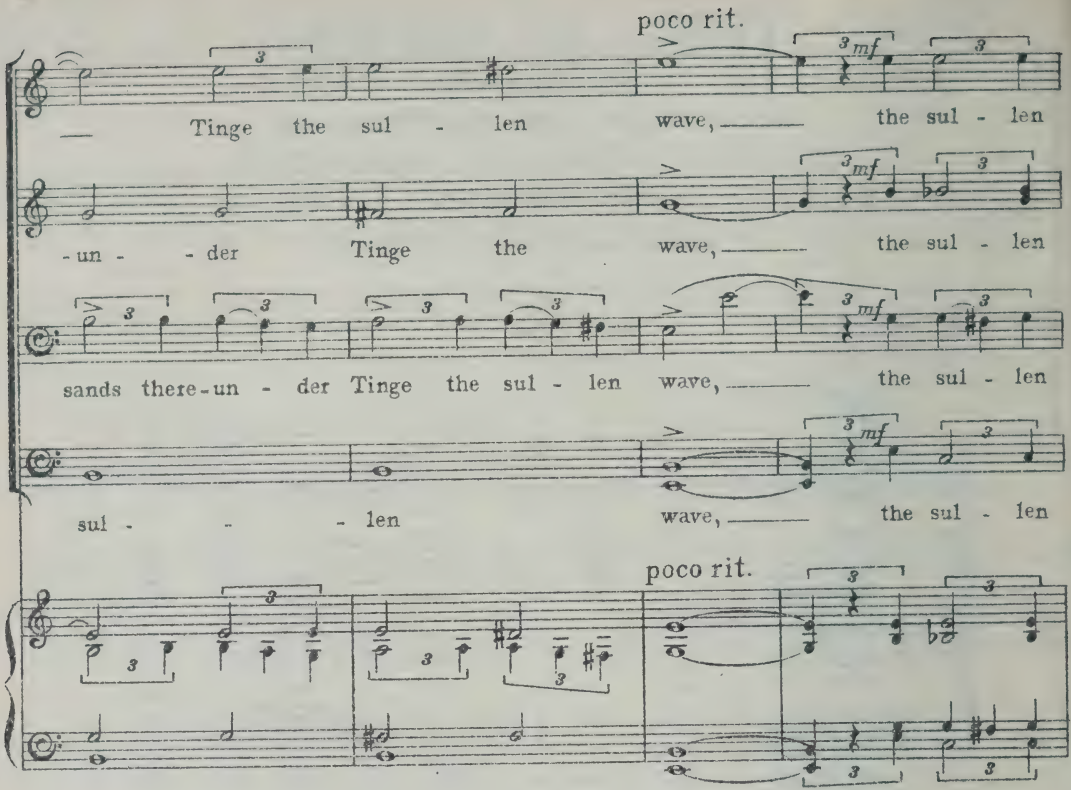
15485

Copyright, 1929, by Novello & Company, Limited MADE IN ENGLAND.



poco rit.
Tinge the sul - len wave, the sul - len
- un - der Tinge the wave, the sul - len sands there-un - der Tinge the sul - len wave, the sul - len sul - - - len wave, the sul - len
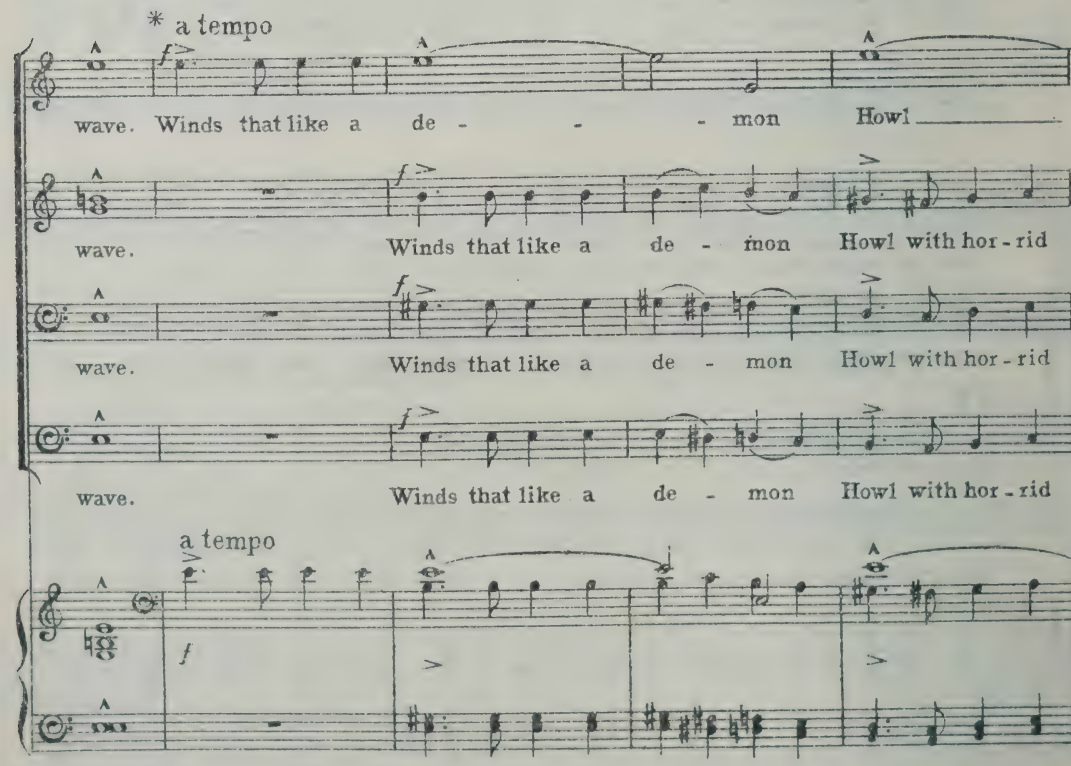
poco rit.



* a tempo
wave. Winds that like a de - - - mon Howl wave. Winds that like a de - mon Howl with hor - rid wave. Winds that like a de - mon Howl with hor - rid wave. Winds that like a de - mon Howl with hor - rid
a tempo

* For the next 20 bars the top line may be sung by all the Tenors, if considered desirable, the 2nd Tenor part being allotted to half the 1st Basses — with hor - - rid note. From his note Round the toil - ing— sea - man In his toss-ing boat.—

note Round the toil - ing— sea - man In his toss-ing boat.—
note Round the toil - ing— sea - man In his toss-ing boat.—
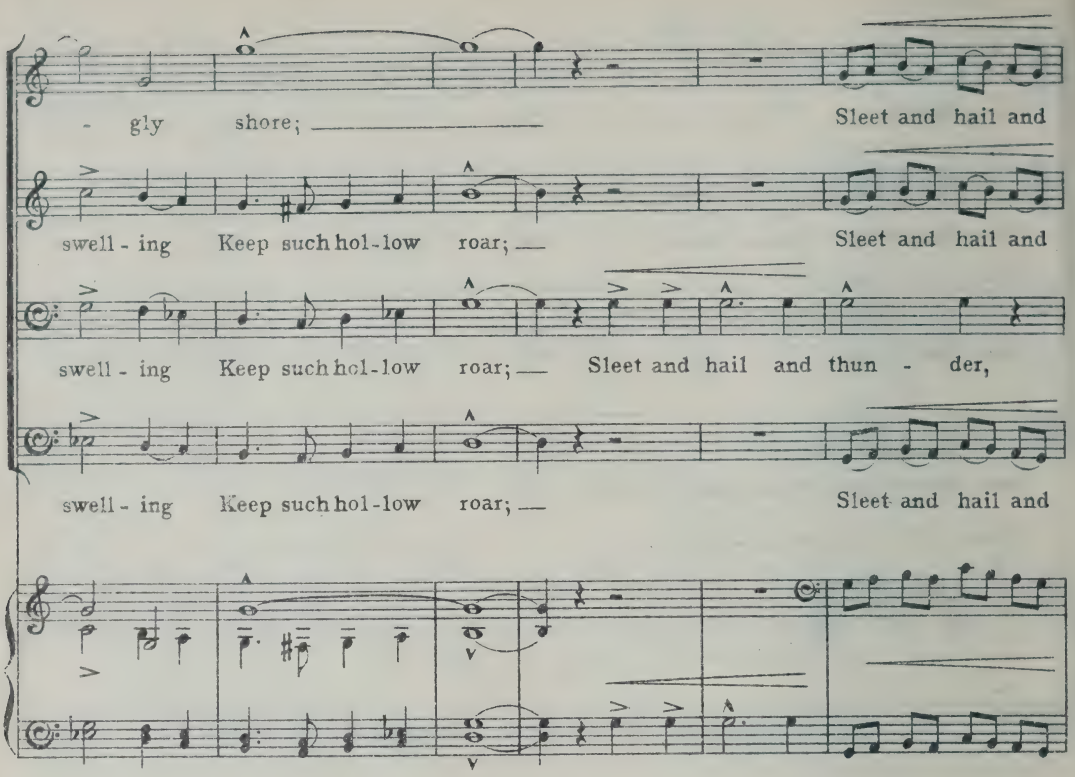
hum-ble dwell - - - ing On the shin -
From his hum-ble dwell - ing On the shin-gly shore, Where the bil - lows
From his hum-ble dwell - ing On the shin-gly shore, Where the bil - lows
From his hum-ble dwell - ing On the shin-gly shore, Where the bil - lows



- gly shore;
Sleet and hail and swell - ing Keep such hol - low roar;
Sleet and hail and swell - ing Keep such hol - low roar; Sleet and hail and thun - der, swell - ing Keep such hol - low roar;
Sleet and hail and

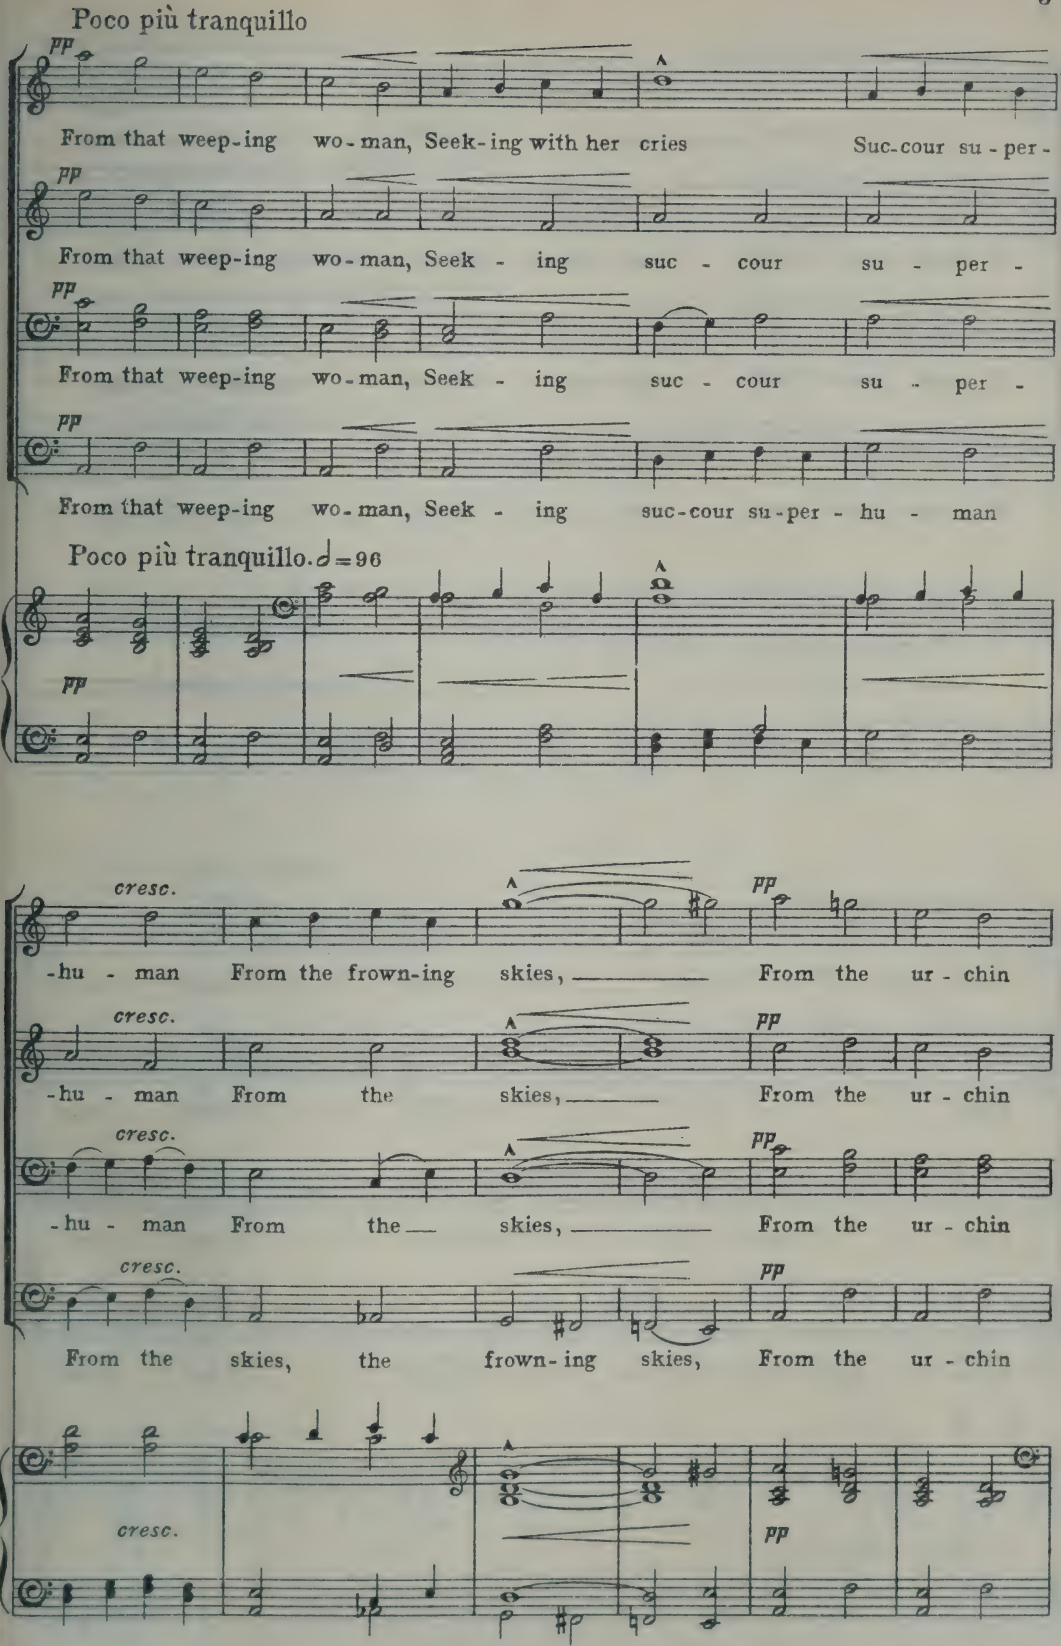
ff
thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
ff
thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
ff
thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
ff
thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der, sleet and hail and thun-der!
ff



Poco più tranquillo
pp
From that weep-ing wo-man, Seek-ing with her cries Suc-cour su-per-
From that weep-ing wo-man, Seek - ing suc - cour su - per -
From that weep-ing wo-man, Seek - ing suc - cour su - per -
From that weep-ing wo-man, Seek - ing suc-cour su-per - hu - man
Poco più tranquillo. ♩=96
cresc.
-hu - man From the frown-ing skies, From the ur - chin
-hu - man From the skies, From the ur - chin
-hu - man From the skies, From the ur - chin
From the skies, the frown-ing skies, From the ur - chin pi - ning For his fa - ther's knee, From the lat - tice shi - ning pi - ning For his fa - ther's knee, From the lat - tice

pi - ning For his fa - ther's knee, From the lat - tice
pi - ning For his fa - ther's knee, From the lat - tice Drive him out to sea. Let broad
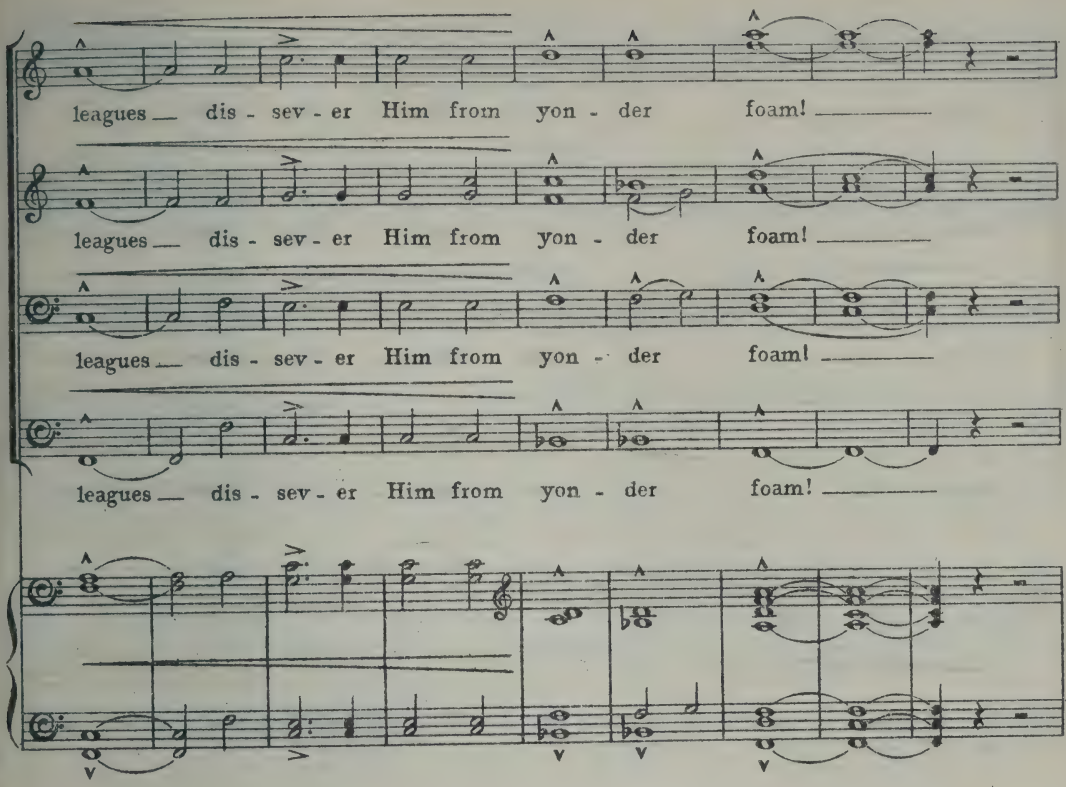
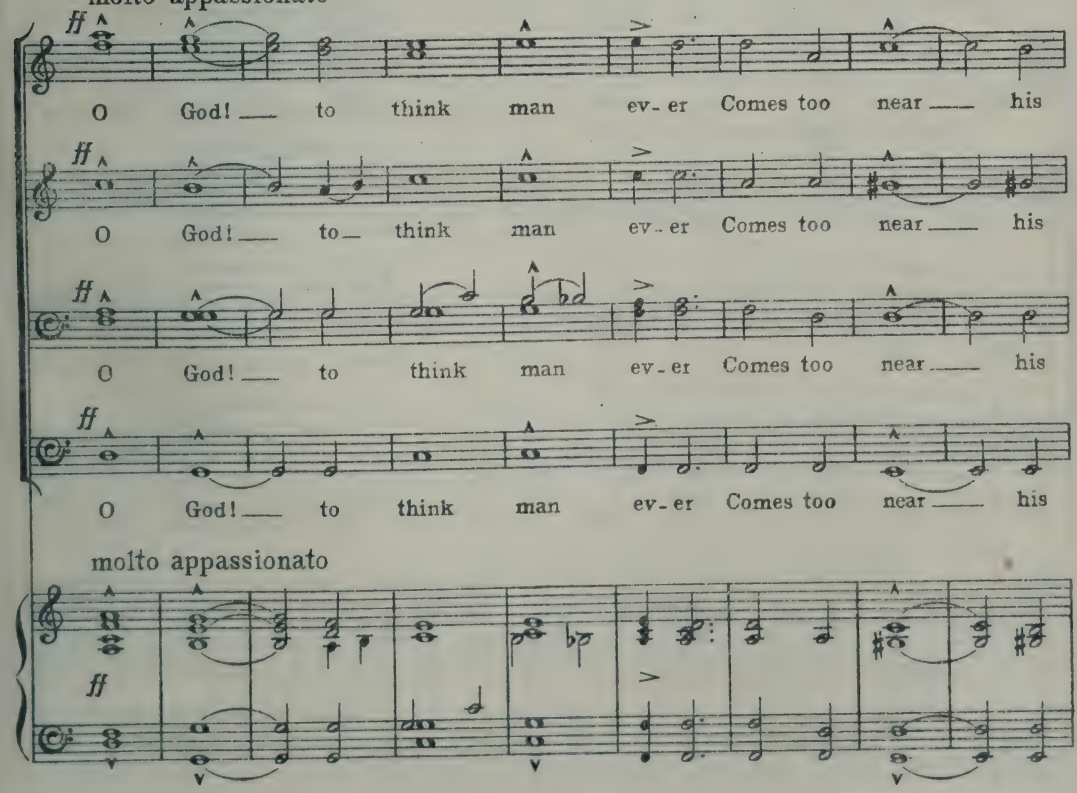
mf
Drive him out to sea. Let broad
mf
Drive him out to sea. Let broad
mf
Drive him out to sea. Let broad
mf
mf



leagues dis - sev - er Him from yon - der foam!
leagues dis - sev - er Him from yon - der foam!
leagues dis - sev - er Him from yon - der foam!
leagues dis - sev - er Him from yon - der foam!



molto appassionato
ff
O God! to think man ev - er Comes too near his
O God! to think man ev - er Comes too near his
O God! to think man ev - er Comes too near his O God! to think man ev - er Comes too near his molto appassionato
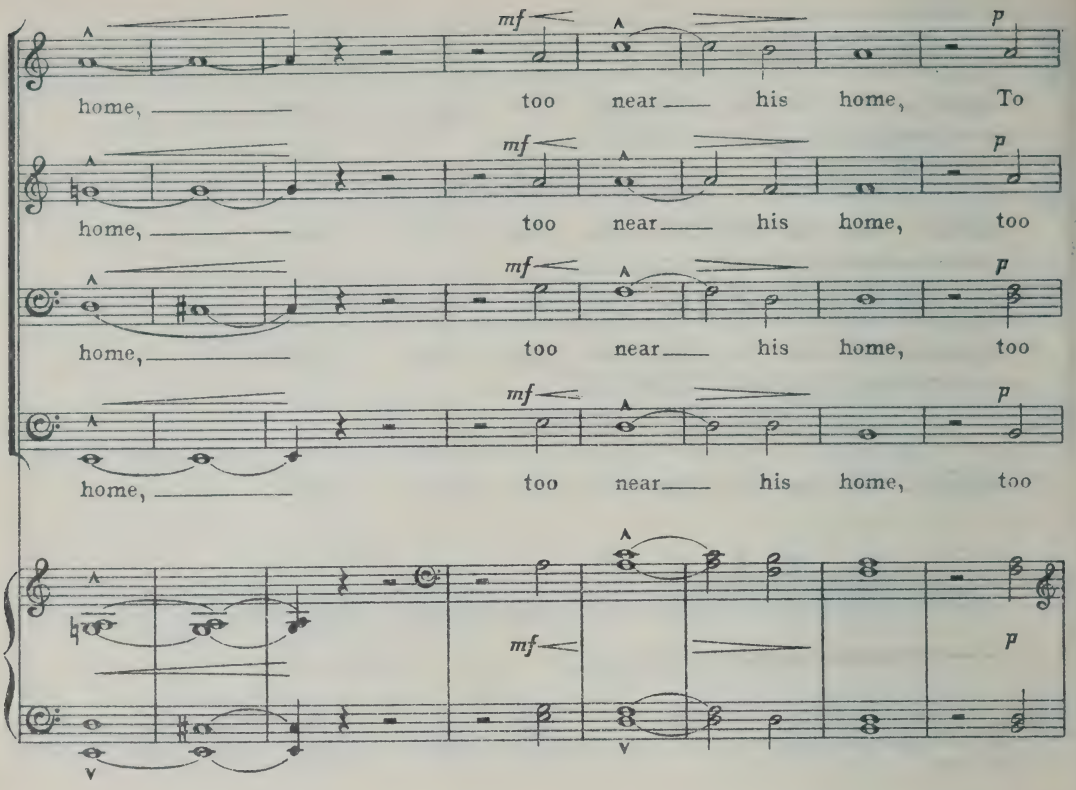
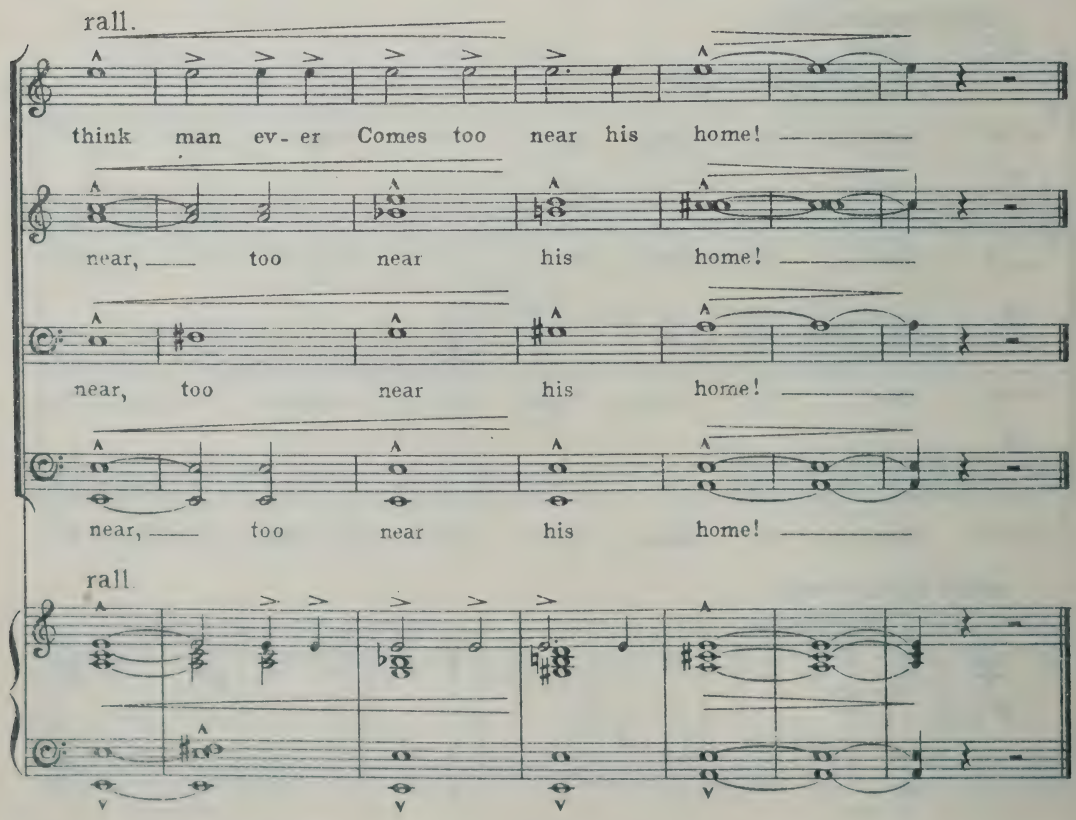
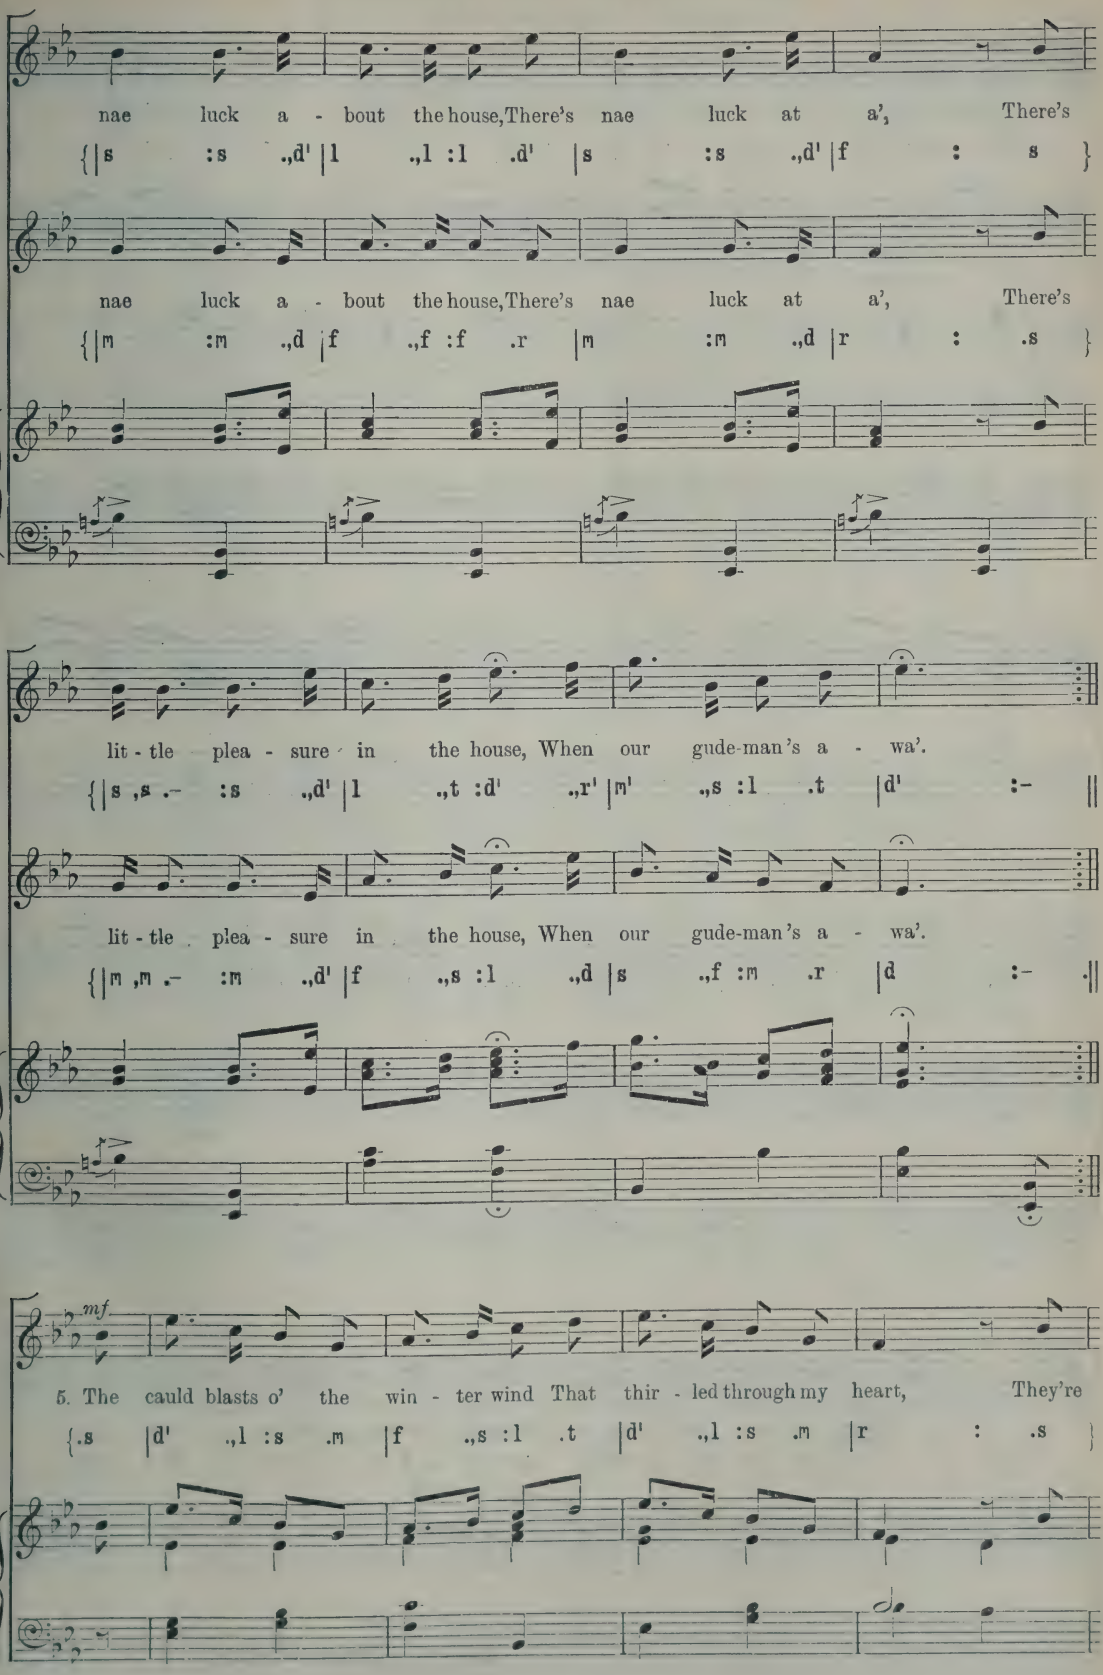
ff

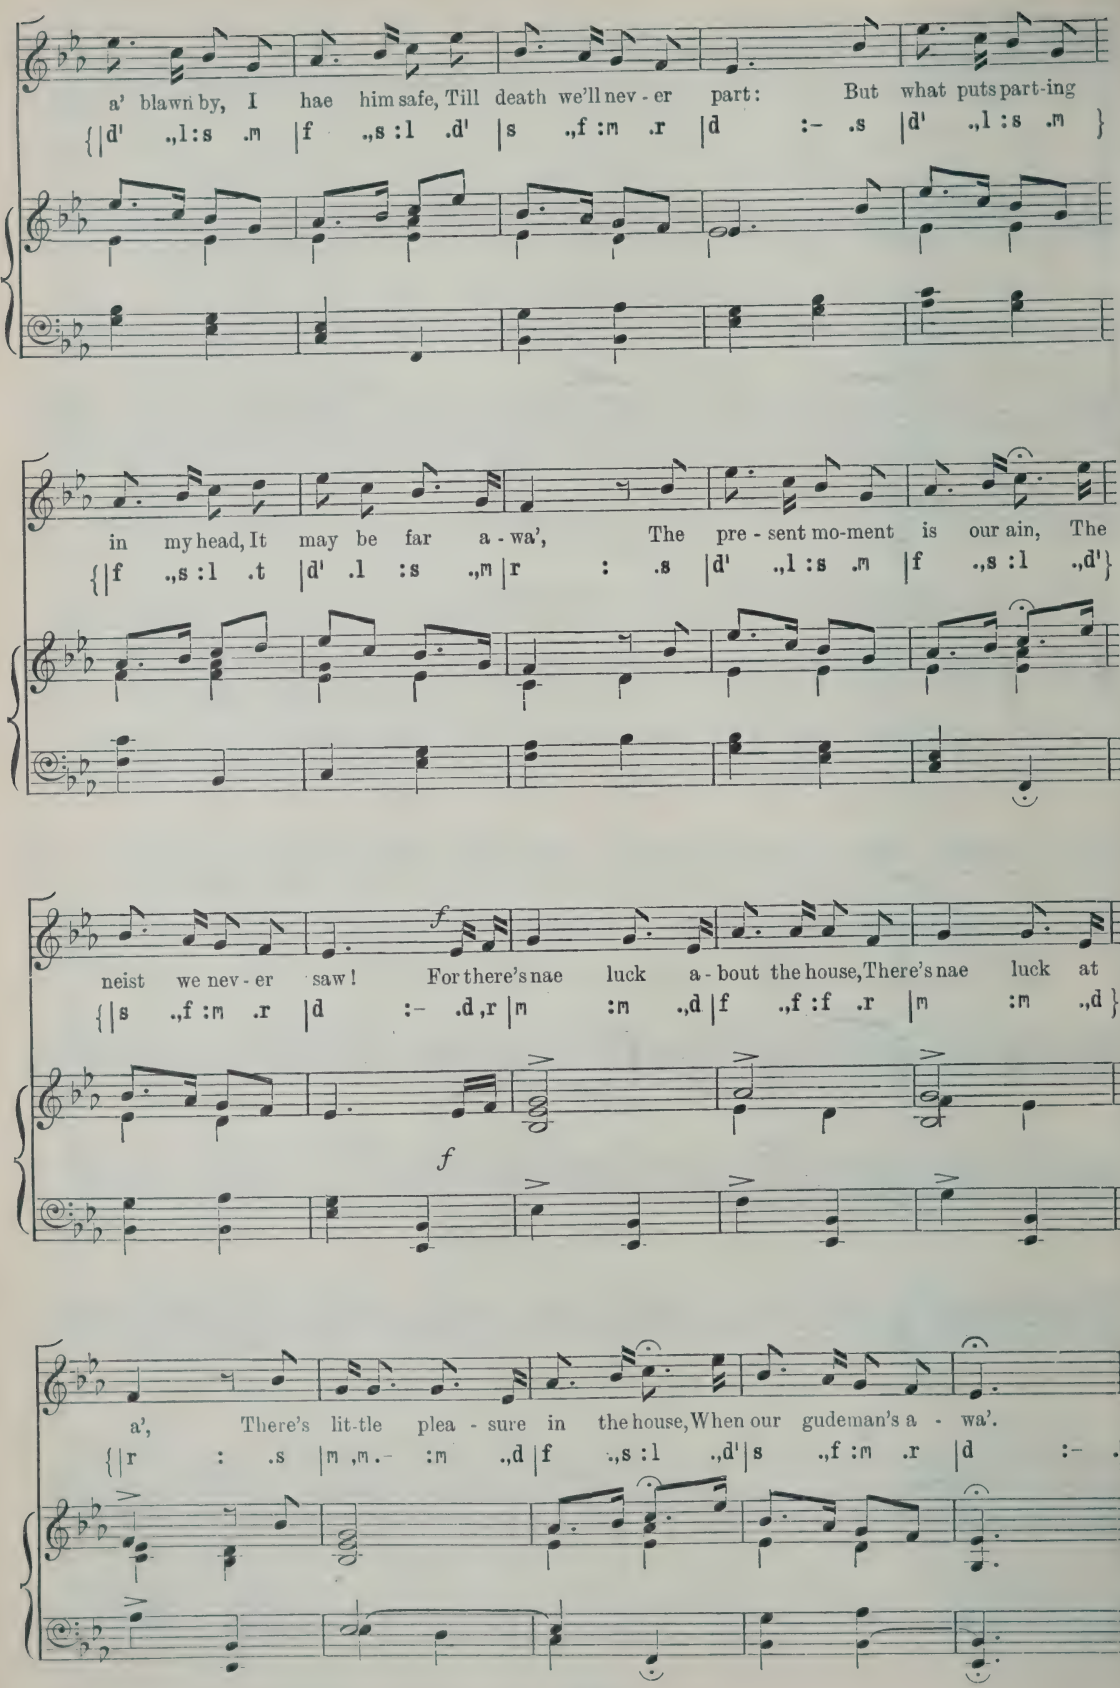




Novello & Company, Ltd. Engravers & Printers. 15485



nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at a', There's
{|s :s .,d' |l .,l :l .d' |s :s .,d' |f : s }
nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at a', There's
{|m :m .,d |f .,f :f .r |m :m .,d |r : .s }
lit - tle plea - sure in the house, When our gude-man's a - wa'.
{|s ,s .- :s .,d' |l .,t :d' .,r' |m' .,s :l .t |d' :- ||
lit - tle plea - sure in the house, When our gude-man's a - wa'.
{|m ,m .- :m .,d' |f .,s :l .,d |s .,f :m .r |d :- .||
mf
5. The cauld blasts o' the win - ter wind That thir - led through my heart, They're
{.s |d' .,l :s .m |f .,s :l .t |d' .,l :s .m |r : .s }



a' blawn by, I hae him safe, Till death we'll nev - er part: But what puts part-ing in my head, It may be far a - wa', The pre - sent mo-ment is our ain, The neist we nev - er saw! For there's nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at a', There's lit-tle plea - sure in the house, When our gudeman's a - wa'.

Descant
mf
Ah . . . . . Ah . . . .
{.s |d' :— |t :l |s :— |l :t .d' }
Melody
mf
6. Since Col - in's weel, I'm weel content, I hae nae mair to crave; Could
{.s |d' .,l :s .m |f .,s :l .t |d' .,l :s .m |r : .s }
mf
. . . . . Ah . .
{|m :— |f :r |d :— |- . :s }
I but live to mak' him blest, I'm blest a-boon the lave. And {|d' .,l :s .m |f .,s :l .d' |s .,f :m .r |d :- .s }
. . . . . Ah . . . .
{|d' :— |t :l |s :— |l :t .d' }
will I see his face a-gain? And will I hear him speak? I'm {|d' .,l :s .m |f .,s :l .t |d' .l :s .,m |r : .s }

ff
For there's down - right diz - zy wi' the thought, In troth I'm like to greet, For there's
ff
nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at a', There's nae luck a - bout the house, There's nae luck at a', There's lit- tle plea - sure in the house, When our gudeman's a - wa'.
lit- tle plea - sure in the house, When our gudeman's a - wa'.

MUSIC AS HANDMAID

Sir,—In the September issue of the Musical Times, p. 796, ' Feste ' refers to the title of an article in The Musician—' Music, a Loyal Handmaid of the Dance '—and says that he dare not allow himself to comment on it. On the following page, Mr. Westrup, in his article on Opera, states, ' Music is but a willing handmaid to scenic art.' Now this latter statement seems to me to be more serious than the first. The dance can hardly get along without music of some sort, but for scenic art, music is not essential. Perhaps ' Feste ' might comment on this.—Yours, &c.,

16, Annette Street, Glasgow, S.2. Jas. Watson.

[' Feste ' writes : ' If I felt myself unable to comment on the Musician title, I can hardly be expected to find words for Mr. Westrup's dictum.']

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Amateur string quartet practising in the West End (or North London) requires a 'cellist (preferably gentleman).—Quatuor, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wanted for strings and pianoforte combination practising on Saturday afternoons. Must be good sight-reader. Classical music only.—Smith, 24, School Road, Hall Green, Birmingham.

Young violinist (lady) wishes to meet pianist for practice of classical music. S.W.1 or S.W.3 districts, if possible.—H. J. M., c/o Musical Times.

Viola player wishes to meet violinist, pianist, or violist for practice of easy classical chamber music. One evening weekly. Osterley, Hounslow, or Isleworth districts.—E. Cousins, 13, Thornbury Avenue, Osterley Park, Middlesex.

Gentleman, playing 'cello or second violin, with orchestral experience, wishes to join small combination, commencing practice of good music. Evenings.—Prosser, 12, Beverley Road, Barnes, S.W.13.

Young lady pianist (advanced) wishes to join small orchestra. E. London district.—P. B., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet another for practice of classical music. Would also like to join amateur orchestra. Higher Broughton district.—J. C., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady, advanced) wishes to meet lady violinist or 'cellist (or both) for practice of sonatas or trios. N.E. district.—F. B. L., c/o Musical Times.

Two violins, 'cello, violone, and harmonium player (also able to play pianoforte) wanted for simple marches, dances, anthems, and easy selections from oratorios. Islington and Clerkenwell districts.—G. S. O., c/o Musical Times.

Small amateur orchestra desires additional players.—Alan P. Denhard, 246, Barking Road, East Ham, E.6.

Pianist wishes to meet instrumentalist for mutual practice of classical and modern works. N. London district.—S. R., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wishes to form trio or quartet for mutual practice. Hampstead or Highgate districts. Mornings or evenings.—P. E. A., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur saxophonist (lady) wishes to meet pianist and other instrumentalists for mutual practice.—Miss H. C. Davis, 8, Little Durweston Street, W.1.

Lady viola player desires practice in chamber music. Streatham or neighbourhood preferred.—Alpha, c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet advanced violinist or vocalist for mutual practice of classical music. Wembley district.—M. C. M., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady violinist wishes to join small orchestra. Evenings only. Hampstead district preferable.—H. S., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur pianist wishes to meet string players for performance and study of chamber music. Within three miles of Ashton-under-Lyne.—L. A. Nutley, 38, Richmond Street, Ashton-under-Lyne.

Lady flautist (low pitch flute) wishes to play in oratorios. (Three years' experience in L.C.C. orchestra as first flautist.)—Miss Atkinson, 21, Lexham Gardens, W.8.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet 'cellist and violinist for sonata and trio practice. N.W. district. (Will T. Siddaway write again ?)—L. B., 24, Acol Road, N.W.6.

First violin wanted for quintet. Practices fortnightly.—B. M. D., 19, Wyatt Park Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.2.

Experienced violinist available for pianoforte trio, quartet, &c. Would also like to hear of good amateur orchestra in London with vacancy for first violin.—Arco, c/o Musical Times.

[Will ' P. E. V. ' kindly send us her address ?—Editor.]

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Michaelmas term began on Monday, September 23, and it is satisfactory to report that the number of new students is well up to the average. A vacation course for teachers was held from September 17 to 20.

The chamber concerts at Duke's Hall will be given on November 4 and December 2, and the orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on November 26. The usual fortnightly practice concerts will be held during the term, the first taking place on October 9.

The last day of entry for the Christmas examination for the L.R.A.M. is October 21.

The ' Review Week ' will take place from December 2 to 7. This institution has become one of the features of the term.

An old student, Mr. Roy Henderson, sang with great success at the Three Choirs Festival at Worcester, and another old student, Mr. Arthur Fear, has been engaged to sing the leading bass rôles during the first provincial tour of the Covent Garden Opera Company.

F.

We have received the syllabus of the Bow and Bromley Musical Competition Festival (November 23-27 ; prize-winners' concert, December 14, at 7.30). We are glad to see included in the syllabus a class for viola. A class entitled ' Duet for Voice and Pianoforte ' turns out to be a competition for the singing of any song by Schubert, Schumann, or Brahms in English or German. This is a good move, especially as it tends to improve the standard of accompanying amongst amateurs. Entries close on October 15 (late entries, with extra fee, November 1). The secretary is Mr. C. E. Bell, 10, Bonwell Street, E.2.

The recently-formed Chelsea Church Choirs Union will hold its first annual Festival Service at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, on October 25, at 8 p.m. There will be about two hundred singers, representing practically every church choir in Chelsea. The Canticles will be sung to Brewer in D, and the anthems will be ' Let the bright seraphim,' ' Let their celestial concerts all unite,' and Vaughan Williams's ' O clap your hands.' The conductor will be Mr. H. L. Balfour, and Mr. G. H. Eldridge will be at the organ.

The annual Margate Festival was held with success during the second week of September, under the general conductorship of the new musical director, Mr. Herbert Lodge. The programmes consisted, as usual, of well-known popular symphonies, concertos, and other works, and the visiting conductors were Mr. Norman O'Neill, Dr. Sargent, Mr. Barbirolli, and Mr. Julian Clifford.

Music in Public Schools

Bruton (King's School).—Act 1 of Handel's 'Semele' was given, under Mr. N. W. Newell, at the Speech Day concert on June 20. On July 28 the orchestra played Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' Suite and some Sullivan and Edward German, also accompanying two movements of Mozart's Horn Concerto in D. The vocal part of this programme consisted of sea shanties. Mr. Newell has given lectures on 'The Historical Development of Music,' and the House Competitions were judged by Mr. W. N. McKie (Clifton).

Cheltenham.—The principal work given at the Christmas concert (1928) was Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore.' The programme also included Bizet's 'Petite Suite' for orchestra, and a movement from Mozart's Quintet in E flat for pianoforte and wind instruments. In March, a concert of songs and orchestral music was given by Mr. Keith Falkner and the Cheltenham Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. P. J. Taylor, at which the orchestra played Borodin's Overture to 'Prince Igor' and Bizet's Suite 'L'Arlésienne.' At the Summer concert, movements from Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' Suite and Sibelius's 'Finlandia' were played, and among the vocal items were part-songs by Ireland, Ernest Bullock, Armstrong Gibbs, and Walford Davies. The Musical Competition, held in April, was judged by Sir Ivor Atkins.

Cheltenham (Dean Close).—Three performances of 'The Merchant of Venice' have been given, the incidental music for which, except for one song (set by F. G. K. Westcott), was selected from Farnaby and Byrd. It was played by the school string orchestra under Mr. Heller Nicholls. The Music Competition, held on July 27, was judged by Mr. F. Delmar-Williamson. In addition to giving a programme of four items, each House sang Mr. Heller Nicholls's part-song 'We be the King's men,' and undertook a sight-reading test.

Chigwell.—The musical events of the Tercentenary Year (1928-29) have been as follows: At the Christmas concert the chief items were Bach's 'Peasant' Cantata, Grieg's 'Landerkennung,' and the first movement of the same composer's Pianoforte Concerto. On the Sunday before Easter, Part 1 and a few numbers from Part 2 of 'The Messiah' were sung in the Chapel, Mr. J. S. Lowe conducting both performances. At the Speech Day Service, on June 22, the choir sang Stanford's Te Deum and Jubilate in B flat and Mendelssohn's 'O come, let us worship.'

Eton.—Two organ recitals have been given by Dr. Ley, one in School Hall, with Mr. W. Barrand as soloist, the other in the Chapel, with anthems sung by the choir. Pianoforte trios by Beethoven (Op. 97) and Schubert (in B flat) were played on July 20 by Miss Irene Scharrer, Miss Orrea Pernel, and Mr. Sheridan Russell. On June 1 the E.C.M.S. gave an open performance, among the choral items being Bach's 'Spring comes laughing' (from the 'Peasant' Cantata) and sea shanties, with Mr. A. H. G. Kerry as soloist. Prize-winners in the recent competitions contributed solos, and a string quartet played the Andante from Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D minor. Members of the College also gave a concert at Westminster on June 24 (see under Westminster).

Fettes.—During the Easter term recitals were given by Mr. Douglas Dickson and Mr. Havergal (Sonatas for pianoforte and violin by Mozart, Brahms, and Dvorák), the Falconer String Quartet and Mr. Dace (the Dvorák Quintet and the Saint-Saëns Septet), Mr. Herbert Heyner and Mr. Knight (songs, and works for flute), and Mr. Steuart Wilson. Mr. Havergal gave a lecture-recital on 'The Pianoforte and its Literature,' and conducted the Reid Symphony Orchestra in a programme of Wagner, Beethoven, Brahms, Schumann, and Smetana. On Good Friday a part of Bach's 'St. John' Passion was given, the whole school joining in the chorales. The School concert included the Brahms 'Liebeslieder' Waltzes and a Fantasia on 'Die Meistersinger,' movements from Beethoven's first Symphony, and from concertos, the latter involving no less than fifteen soloists!——At the Founder's Day Concert the choir gave Holst's setting of the 'Old 124th,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and part-songs. The orchestra provided the accompaniments, and played Handel's Concerto Grosso in B flat and Mozart's Overture to 'Il Seraglio.'

Malvern.—During the Lent term organ recitals were given in the Chapel by Mr. J. A. Davison and Mr. D. S. Easton. On February 12 a Symphony concert was given by the City of Birmingham Orchestra, conducted by Mr. J. A. Davison. Portions of Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert were played, and Prof. F. H. Shera was the soloist in two movements of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A. Lectures were given on 'The Symphony' and on Bach's 'St. John' Passion, the latter work being performed on Good Friday with organ and orchestral accompaniment. Dr. George Dyson judged the Musical Competitions, which were held on March 27.

Oundle.—On February 18 the City of Birmingham Orchestra, under Dr. Adrian Boult, played Dvorák's fourth Symphony, the Overtures to 'Figaro' and 'Tannhäuser,' two numbers from Berlioz's 'Faust,' and other works. Various recitals have been given, including one of songs (to her own accompaniment), by Miss Helen Henschel. At the midsummer concert the chief choral items were the Soldiers' Chorus from 'Faust' and Holst's 'Festival Chime.' A movement from the Schubert Octet (six of the players being boys in the school), Lœillet's Sonata in G minor for two flutes and pianoforte, and two movements from Grieg's second 'Peer Gynt' Suite (for orchestra) were also given. Mr. C. M. Spurling conducted. At the Christmas concert four Bach Cantatas are to be given: 'Bide with us,' 'A Stronghold Sure,' 'God's time is the best,' and 'Sleepers, wake!'

Oxford (St. Edward's).—The programme of the summer concert had as its principal items C. S. Lang's 'Lochinvar' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' Three of Herbert Hughes's Parodies (for tenors and basses), part-songs by Purcell, Stanford, Lee Williams, and Balfour Gardiner, and a group of songs sung by Mr. J. R. Freebairn Smith (O.S.E.) were also included. Mr. L. H. Ovenden conducted.

Rugby.—The House Competitions were held on July 4, the final adjudicator being Mr. T. F. Dunhill. No less than nine of the ten Houses entered two teams apiece, and among many items worthy of mention were movements from Concertos of Bach for two, three, or four pianofortes (one with string accompaniment); Holbrooke's Trio for horn, 'cello, and pianoforte; Beethoven's Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments; the two Clarinet Sonatas of Brahms; Handel's first Organ Concerto (accompanied by pianoforte and strings); Herzogenberg's Trio for violin, horn, and pianoforte; and a Dirge for twelve hands on two pianofortes, by John Powell. The pianoforte solos included the Chromatic Fantasia of Bach and the Bach-Liszt Fugue in A minor.

Stamford.—At the summer concert Stojowski's cantata 'Spring Time,' Boyce's 'Song of Momus to Mars,' and the Epilogue from Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' were given by the choir and orchestra under Mr. H. Brook. The orchestra also accompanied Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio Brillante,' which was played by a boy in the school.

Wellington.—Two choral and orchestral concerts have been given during the term, under Mr. W. K. Stanton, the orchestra playing the 'Figaro' Overture (twice), movements from Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, and the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Mr. F. Bartlett as soloist. The principal choral works given were Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and C. S. Lang's 'Lochinvar.' The Rondo from Beethoven's Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments, and Blavet's Sonata in G for flute and pianoforte, were also included. Four recitals have been given by the Snow String Quartet, the programme being drawn from Haydn, Mozart, Ravel, Schubert, and Schumann, and the Pianoforte Quintets of Franck and W. K. Stanton. On June 1 Mr. Stanton gave an organ recital, and on July 14 the Musical Society gave a chamber concert.

Westminster.—A chamber concert was given by members of Eton College on June 24, the concerted instrumental items being three movements from Purcell's Golden Sonata, the Haydn-Brahms Variations for two pianofortes, the Andante from Tchaikovsky's String Quartet in D minor, a Scherzo for two flutes by Mozart, and the Minuet and Trio from the Trio for pianoforte, violin, and viola by the same composer. Songs by Lalo, Thomas Ford, Handel, and Armstrong Gibbs were sung, and Palmgren's 'Night in May' was played.——On May 31 a concert was given by the London Wind Quintet and Mr. Thornton Lofthouse. The Music Competitions were adjudicated by Messrs. Herbert Howells and R. Graham Carritt (solos), and Dr. H. G. Ley (concerted items). The House Orchestras played the March and Adagio from Handel's 'Occasional' Overture; and amongst the chamber-music items was an arrangement by J. R. C. Engleheart (a boy in the school) of the Bach Organ Fugue in G minor for two pianofortes and two violins. Most of the Madrigal and Orchestral Societies' concert on July 26 consisted of winning and combined events in the competitions. In addition, there were played Weber's 'Euryanthe' Overture, a part of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C, a Pianoforte Trio, 'Summer Dream' by J. R. C. Engleheart, and another 'school' composition, 'Sussex Woods' (for small orchestra), by A. M. Spurgin. Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet' completed the programme. F. H. S.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of October, 1869;

The Tonic Sol-fa Association, aided by several pieces of artillery, gave a concert at the Crystal Palace on September 8. Several new effects were tried for the first time in England on this occasion; and the Association has every right to be congratulated on the success of the entertainment; the firing of the cannon, the clinking of the anvils, in the well-known 'Anvil Chorus,' and the grasping of hands in 'Auld lang syne,' producing an effect such as we have never yet witnessed at a Crystal Palace concert, excellent as they are known to be. Every praise is due to the Royal Engineers who arranged the electrical battery which communicated with the guns; and we have no doubt that, with a little more training by the conductors of the Sol-fa Association, many sensational military effects, yet untried, may be successfully carried out. This monster concert has shown us that Britons have resolved not to be longer the slaves of acoustical laws; and so grand an idea once conceived, cannot be better carried out than by an Association which commenced its labours by reforming our musical notation, and will end them by reforming our music.

London Concerts

PROMENADE CONCERTS

The Promenades continue to run a successful course. Large audiences are the rule; the percentage of good performances remains creditably high; the interest of the programmes gives no opportunity to the most captious critic. If there is any disappointment to be recorded it is that the novelties have for the most part so far proved still-born. It is a good thing to be shown that new music is being written, and it is only elementary wisdom to recognise that masterpieces are not brought into the world every Saturday evening. But there have been some dull moments.

The chief exception to this lament was Arthur Bliss's Concerto for two pianofortes, played by Miss Ethel Bartlett and Mr. Rae Robertson at the fourth British composers' evening. It has life because it is original and not obviously derived from anything else. It has character because the thematic material is in harmony with the percussive nature of the solo instrument. It combines rhythmic energy with a true lyrical utterance, not to speak bluntly of tunes in this concise and lively work which wears, though unobtrusively, a genuine English manner. Another pianoforte concerto of a pithy and lively nature was the Concertino of Honegger, played most judiciously by Miss Ada Karen. In this the first movement was an amusing bandying of epigrams, each one bar long, and the last movement was a distillation of the spirit of Jazz. The general impression left by its brief course was one of waggish entertainment. On the other hand, the same composer's symphonic movement 'Rugby,' played a fortnight later (on September 7), was disappointing. The subject is not the public school nor the railway centre (in spite of 'Pacific 231'), but the game. There were some leathery passages for double-basses, but is was a very turbulent kind of football that was represented neither in the realistic nor in the stylized manner, but merely by simple hard-driving.

Realistic treatment is dangerous, as was shown by the American symphonic poem (dignified by the subtitle 'A Joyous Epic for Orchestra'), 'Flivver Ten Million,' by Frederick S. Converse. The idea of putting the motor-car, speed, joy-riding, and the atmosphere of the automobile works of Detroit into music is quite a good one, nor need we be so severe as to take exception to a humorous use of percussion and klaxon horns. But the thing had no style (it called itself—shades of Homer and Milton!—an Epic) and was a pastiche of Strauss and Respighi, especially Strauss.

A promising work was Constant Lambert's 'Music for Orchestra,' good contrapuntal stuff, but not quite free from 'influences.' Similarly, though still less independent, Lennox Berkeley's suite of four numbers earned for its composer a right to further hearings. Stanley Wilson's Pianoforte Concerto, on the other hand, though competent, was out of date before he wrote it: it is no good writing like Stanford slightly modified by Debussy nowadays. Moeran's Rhapsody No. 2 had life in it, though it shows the influence of folk-song and Vaughan Williams. It received a rather stiff performance that did not, however, conceal the beauty of its melodic invention.

William Walton's Sinfonia Concertante (soloist, Mr. Hely-Hutchinson) fully justified the optimistic views held as to this young composer's future.

Novelties claim a measure of critical attention that does not correspond with their importance in a retrospect of the succession of nightly concerts. Works, performances, and occasions that have stood out in the past month are Bax's dark and difficult but undoubtedly distinguished Symphony in E flat minor, Dr. Stanley Marchant's organ playing on a Bach and Handel evening, Miss Myra Hess's annual performance of Beethoven's G major Pianoforte Concerto, a whole concert devoted to Tchaikovsky, which showed that big things are just beyond him while small and moderate things are superbly handled, a curious unearthly and Mozartian song by Haydn, 'The Spirit Song,' sung by Miss Clara Serena, and Mr. Albert Sammons's beautiful performance of Elgar's Violin Concerto. The standard of solo performances, including that of the singers, has been high. Of Sir Henry Wood, careful, enthusiastic, indefatigable, there is nothing to be said that has not often been said before, except perhaps that he will be able to look back on this season with pride in the general all-round improvement of the concerts which owe everything to him. F. H.

THE ENGLISH SINGERS AT THE COLISEUM

Of London's variety houses, the Coliseum has always been the best disposed towards good music. During the week beginning September 16, the programme included the most artistically perfect of all the musical turns we have ever heard there—the English Singers in a liberal selection from the repertory. The peculiar merit of the item lay in the fact that it depended for its success on nothing but fine music finely sung; too often we have heard excellent solo performances in which the bloom was taken off by the (supposed) necessity of giving such turns a distracting amount of lighting and stage effects. We were glad to note that the exquisite art of the English Singers was very much to the taste of the audience. There was a good deal of other musical interest in the programme, but we mention only the capital playing of the orchestra, directed by Mr. Alfred Dove, especially in connection with Anton Dolin's ballet troupe.

CANTERBURY FESTIVAL

It was an agreeable week. Not one of those monstrous orgies of music at which cathedral chapters, city corporations, and county families stuff themselves so full that they feel no more need of music for three years. At Canterbury nothing lasted more than ninety minutes, and some things were briefer. There was time to stretch one's legs and look about one.

Canterbury is a good place, always provided one does not live in the main street. A visitor to the Festival was a young American woman who, after an exhausting holiday on the Continent, had decided on a quiet week in one of those sleepy English Cathedral cities you read of in Trollope and Walpole, before returning to her winter's work in rowdy Manhattan. But she had a room on the main street of Canterbury—and was looking forward to the peace of her far-off home. At the present rate of progress it can only be a matter of a few years before Canterbury main street and all others like it are shaken to pieces by the frantic traffic. Unless, that is, permission is granted to the private citizen to shoot at sight (or otherwise exterminate) all drivers of solid-tyre vehicles, motor-cyclists, and similar enemies of the community.

The street is an inferno of noise. All the more refreshing, then, the secluded Cathedral. There are also byways in Kent, green and undisturbed. (How strange and incredible that sentence will read when quoted in the Musical Times of 1989, under 'Sixty Years Ago'!) The Festival had peculiar advantages. It gave concerts and dramatic performances ('Everyman' and Marlowe's 'Faustus') under the ægis of the Church, without the pretence, found at the Three Choirs Festival, that the concerts were really a kind of service, or, if that was not convincing, that the introduction of good symphonic music into the Church was excused under the cloak of a clerical charity.

At the Three Choirs Festival the performance is preceded by a spoken prayer, as though the music required a kind of apology—even though it begins with the prayerful eloquence, eloquent beyond any spoken prayer, of 'The Messiah,' the 'St. John' Passion, or 'Elijah.' It was singular, at Canterbury, to find music being made so much at home in the august places, to hear the demonic voices of Holst's 'Planets' thundering down the nave, or Schubert's flowers of song in bloom in the Chapter House; but, after all, that is what a mediæval cathedral must have served for—a home for all the honest arts and social activities—before the fierce dualism of sacred and secular came into vogue.

Seeing what Canterbury's generous hospitality was, one feels an ingrate to go on to say that the acoustics more or less nullified the music. Dr. Boult began the Festival with the 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G. If the players had begun on different beats the sound could hardly have been more confused. Canterbury nave is not very high (79-ft.) as Gothic naves go, but it was not meant for modern music.

The chorus and orchestra were placed under the west window, as at Worcester. A big tarpaulin was spread above them, but it did not catch the reverberations. Worcester nave, where the acoustics are, by comparison, excellent, and where no tarpaulin is used, is only 11-ft. less in height. True, the total length of the church is considerably less (394-ft., against Canterbury's 516-ft.), but still not enough to explain the difference in the acoustics. The blur was not, of course, equally serious in all the music. The Grail Scene in 'Parsifal' (the boys' chorus which was sung with entrancing effect somewhere in the extreme east end of the Cathedral) positively gained by the veils of lingering harmonies.

'Everyman' was played by the Norwich Maddermarket Company outside the west end. It was a solemn and telling performance. In the Chapter House we had Schubert's Octet at the first concert—that and nothing else, a perfect after-dinner concert; and then, another evening, Borodin and Dvorák. On the fourth day the choir (an excellent body) sang 'Sleepers, wake!' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' Most delightful of all the musical experiences was the late-evening concert in the cloisters ('Siegfried Idyll,' and pieces by Ethel Smyth, Holst, and Delius). The players, a small handful, were in one corner, with lights; the audience, scattered about the cloisters and the garth, were in the dark. Peace had descended on the city (it was 10 o'clock or so, and the 'charrers' had gone home). After the acoustical confusion in the Cathedral and the hardness of the Chapter House the cloister music sounded perfectly clear and true. The summer evening was balmy. The concert was a discovery; it found a use for cathedral cloisters that no one seems to have thought of before. What do the Three Choirs do with their cloisters? They turn them into cloak-rooms. As a matter of fact, picturesque though these mediæval relics are, one had always had doubts about their usefulness. How cold and draughty they must have been in the old monkish days, especially when placed (as at Canterbury) on the north side of the Cathedral! The idea of cloisters comes, of course, from Mediterranean lands, where the sun is a formidable power, to be evaded. Well, the cloister-builders worked for something they could not have dreamt of—for Adrian Boult to conduct a perfect performance of the 'Siegfried Idyll' to the refreshment of a group of pilgrims worn with the honks and jars of motor-ridden Canterbury.

It is to be hoped that the Festival will go on. After all, when you are in Canterbury Cathedral some imperfection in the definition of the 'Jupiter' Symphony need not trouble you too much; for to right, to left, above, is that which entrances the eye and makes you feel a better man. Ordinarily, at Canterbury you simply visit the Cathedral and then go away. This time one was in and out at all hours, and at all hours it was beautiful, endlessly beautiful, by noon, by evening, by night. They were narrow, unenlightened people who put up that delicate grey masonry; odious in many of their ways; but we cannot help feeling for them an affectionate gratitude. Can as much be expected from the posterity that comes across relics of our picture palaces and gas-works and garages?

R. C.

HASLEMERE FESTIVAL OF CHAMBER MUSIC

At this year's Festival, which took place from August 19 to 31 inclusive, there were again twelve concerts: two devoted to Bach, one to Handel and Bach, three to old English music (including one to Locke and Purcell), one to sacred vocal and instrumental music, one to Spanish and Italian music, one to Italian and French music, one to French music, and two to ancient dances and rhythmic music. As many of the works had been heard at previous Festivals, we shall not discuss them again in this restricted space; nor can we discuss in each case the technical side of the performance. We must confine ourselves to the general statement that Mr. Rudolf Dolmetsch retains his position as virtuoso on the harpsichord and the gamba, and if Mrs. Dolmetsch has not his brilliant technique, she surpasses him in expression and beauty of tone.

Mr. Carl Dolmetsch has developed into a virtuoso on the recorder, on which he is equalled only by Mr. Tomalin, and Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch remains the wizard of the clavichord. A talented lute player has also appeared at these concerts in Mrs. Donington.

There are quite a number of other performers who showed marked talent, but we cannot enumerate them all here. The quality of the performances varied a great deal. While sometimes it attained a high standard, it was now and then greatly lacking in perfection, and as the ability of the executants was beyond question, this was evidently due to lack of preparation, or sometimes also to fatigue from the strain of so great and prolonged a task.

Of the Bach works only the Cantata No. 152 was new at these concerts. In this the important oboe d'amore part was beautifully played by Mr. Léon Goossens. The Jesses Orchestra, composed of strings, recorders, and harpsichord, ably led by Mr. Rudolf Dolmetsch, performed among other works a fine suite compiled from Handel's 'Alchymist,' and Madame Cécile Dolmetsch (Mrs. Ward) sang 'Vò var guerra,' from 'Rinaldo,' with the harpsichord piece 'played by Mr. Hendel,' which was published apart from the opera by Walsh, and is now almost entirely unknown. Mr. Miles Tomalin played charmingly a Sonata in C for recorder, gamba, and harpsichord by the same. First revivals of old English music were: 'An Elegiack Dialogue on the sad losse of his much-esteemed Friend, Mr. William Lawes, &c.,' for three voices, three viols, and harpsichord, a fine and impressive work; two Concertos respectively for two and one recorder, strings, and harpsichord, by Robert Woodcock, which contain much charming music (the Finale of the latter, brilliantly played by Mr. Carl Dolmetsch was encored); and an interesting Sonata for four violins, gamba, violone, and harpsichord, by William Young.

The 'Broken Consort,' for two violins, gamba, and harpsichord, by Matthew Locke, his Harpsichord Suite, and the previously performed Suite for four viols, contain much that is attractive, but they bear no comparison with Purcell's Chaconne in G minor for two violins, gamba, and harpsichord, which is a work of genius. The same composer's humorous terzetto, 'When the cock begins to crow,' pleased so much that it had to be repeated. Two of the most supremely beautiful old English works were Sheryngham's 'Ah, gentil Jhesu,' for four voices and four viols, c. 1520, which in its lofty spirituality anticipates Palestrina, and the noble anthem for five voices and five viols, by Orlando Gibbons, c. 1610, a worthy specimen of the greatest period of English music. Both had to be repeated.

First revivals of Spanish music were: an excellent Pavana for recorders, viols, and lute, and a song with lute by Luis Milan, 1536; a song with lute by D. Pisador, 1552; and a Fantasy for the lute by A. de Mudazza, 1546. Of Italian music: two Airs with very florid and difficult divisions, for two recorders and lute, by Nicola Mattei, c. 1670, and a Suite for violin and harpsichord by the same, with one Corrente 'for the ears' and one Corrente 'for the feet'; and two pleasing songs by Caccini and by A. Falconieri, with lute accompaniment.

First revivals from the French school were: two charming pieces for three recorders, and the 'Quatrième Concert' for harpsichord, violin, and gamba, by Couperin (the delightful Forlane of the latter was encored); the fifth Concert by Rameau for the same combination; a Suite for harpsichord by d'Anglebert, and one for gamba by Demachy, 1685, re-discovered recently by Mr. Dolmetsch; a 15th-century song, 'C'est le jolly moys de May,' from last year's programme, was repeated, this time with ritornelles for a rebec, according to the custom of the time; the very pretty 'Troisième Concert' for two gambas, by Couperin, and an interesting Sonata by Mondonville, c. 1740, for harpsichord and violin, the Giga of which was encored.

Two evenings were devoted to ancient dances, the first being introduced by an orchestral Suite of 17th-century French dance tunes. The second consisted of ancient Spanish folk-tunes and dances, presented in the form of a Masque very effectively arranged from a tale from 'Thousand and One Nights,' by that versatile artist Mrs. Dolmetsch, who had consulted ancient Spanish choreographical works to ensure historical correctness of the dances, designed all the costumes, painted the very effective scenery, and who danced herself the Saraband and Folia. The whole dance-pantomime was very charming, and roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

On three mornings in each of the two weeks of the Festival unofficial performances were given at the hall, where many fine and interesting old works were played. One of these was under the direction of Madame Matton-Painparé, and was particularly noticeable for her charming interpretation of two fine songs by Dufay (with two viols), and a quaint item by de la Barre, accompanied by herself with gamba pizzicato. She also produced on this occasion some remarkably fine Fantasies for viols, by Jenkins, Alexander Agricola, du Caurroy, and Coron.

E. van der Straeten.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER

THE HALLÉ PROSPECTUS

Some of the features of the coming seventy-second season of Hallé concerts may be regarded legitimately as the response to criticism in this and other journals of what has been regarded in the past as the unresponsiveness of the Hallé Society to the claims of composers, living or dead, to recognition in their mature and fully representative work. The choral policy has undergone some concentration, and the gaps between performances leave time for adequate preparation without resort to high-pressure rehearsal in the final period. The 'Faust' music of Berlioz, and 'The Messiah,' are the financial sheet-anchors, set off by the introduction on November 21 of Rachmaninov's 'The Bells' (first heard at Birmingham in 1921, and a year later at Liverpool, under Wood); Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus'; Dvorák's Te Deum, and Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter.' Apart from these choral concerts and a Wagner evening next February, no vocal soloists appear in conjunction with the orchestra. Manchester taste possibly may be peculiar in this respect that its patrons, able to have only purely orchestral evenings on six occasions, prefer on others to have instrumentalists of renown rather than vocalists of similar calibre, associated with the orchestra. This attitude, in an area containing so large a public interested in vocal music, is in marked contrast to the tendency of Hallé's time, as I showed in the 'Seventy Years' Review' appearing in this journal two years since.

Assuming that the programmes as outlined in the prospectus just issued are carried out in their substantial entirety, the coming season presents to the Manchester public the finest all-round combination of unknown or little-known orchestral works alongside the established classics since Harty took charge here.

The works whose absence hitherto had excited most comment — Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony and the later symphonic writing of Mahler and Sibelius—all find a place in the coming scheme. The dates are: Sibelius's fifth Symphony on October 24, fourth Symphony on December 5, and Violin Concerto on October 31; the 'Pastoral' on November 7; Mahler's fourth Symphony on February 27—a fortnight earlier than the introduction under the B.B.C. of the vast No. 8 at Queen's Hall on April 11. These two performances will probably attract attention from a wider circle of musical enthusiasts than any other music to be heard in England during the coming winter.

The 'Sinfonia Sevillana' of Turina was dropped last season, in the week of Mr. Willem Gezink's lamented death, and will now be restored on December 5.

Elgar's second Symphony was a few years since played by Harty at two consecutive Hallé concerts, and will be heard again very gladly on January 23, a like welcome awaiting the 'Cello Concerto, to be played by Cassado on February 13. Suggia in Eugen d'Albert's Concerto (new to Manchester) will appear in the same programme as the Vaughan Williams Symphony on November 7.

Of other symphonic music there will be Nos. 3 and 5 of Beethoven; Nos. 1 and 4 of Schumann; Nos. 1 and 3 of Brahms; Borodin in B minor; César Franck in D minor; and Dvorák's 'New World.' On January 23, Elgar's E flat Symphony will be followed by Strauss's 'Don Juan,' 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and 'Tod und Verklärung.' The principal concertos not already mentioned are Schumann's A minor (Backhaus); Mozart's A major (Orloff); Beethoven's Violin (D'Aranyi); Tchaikovsky's B flat minor (Moiseiwitsch); Brahms's Violin (Szigeti); Brahms's D minor (Schnabel), and Grieg's (Cortot).

The chief miscellaneous orchestral works new to Manchester include the 'Façade' Suite, by William Walton (October 24); 'Scythian' Suite, by Prokofiev (October 31); 'Capriol' Suite, by Peter Warlock (November 7); 'Rio Grande,' by Constant Lambert (December 12); Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite (January 16); Respighi's 'Botticelli Pictures' (January 30); Krenek's 'Potpourri' (January 30); Ravel's 'La Valse' and John Ireland's 'Mai-Dun' (February 13); and on March 20 the Pension Fund Concert will bring to a close the most distinguished series of programmes given at Manchester in post-war years. A public response of similar distinction should result.

The Coming Season

First List

DELIUS FESTIVAL

Sir Thomas Beecham is the conductor and organizer. Six concerts will be given, as follows:

October 12, afternoon, Queen's Hall (in conjunction with the Columbia Graphophone Co.).—'Brigg Fair'; second Dance Rhapsody; 'Sea-Drift'; Act 3 of 'A Village Romeo and Juliet'; 'In a Summer Garden'; first performance of 'A Late Lark,' for voice and orchestra.

October 16, evening, Æolian Hall.—Works for small orchestra; first performance of 'Air and Dance' for strings; 'Cello Sonata, &c.

October 18, evening, Queen's Hall (in conjunction with the B.B.C.).—'Eventyr'; first performance in England of 'Arabesk'; Pianoforte Concerto; 'Appalachia.'

October 23, evening, Æolian Hall.—Unaccompanied part-songs; first Violin Sonata; String Quartet; Songs.

October 24, evening, Queen's Hall (in conjunction with the Royal Philharmonic Society).—'North-Country Sketches'; 'Songs of Sunset'; Violin Concerto; first Dance Rhapsody; first performance in England of the Gerda episode from 'Fennimore and Gerda.'

November 1, evening, Queen's Hall (in conjunction with the B.B.C.).—'A Mass of Life.'

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS IN LONDON

Royal Philharmonic Society.—Eight concerts, as follows: October 24, Sir Thomas Beecham (see above); November 14, Vaclav Talich; November 28, Hermann Scherchen; January 16, Basil Cameron; January 30, Sir Edward Elgar; February 20, Sir Thomas Beecham; March 13, John Barbirolli; April 3, Fritz Busch.

B.B.C. Symphony Concerts.—Twenty-one concerts at Queen's Hall, on Wednesday or Friday evenings, during the twenty-one weeks October 20-December 14 and January 12-April 12. Conductors: Sir Thomas Beecham (ten), Sir Henry Wood (five), Sir Landon Ronald (two), Franz von Hoesslin, Ernest Ansermet, Hermann Scherchen, and Perez Casas (one each). The first three programmes include the 'Sinfonia Domestica,' Delius's 'A Mass of Life' (see Delius Festival, above), and Elgar's second Symphony. New works and other interesting items include Vaughan Williams's 'Flos Campi,' Stravinsky's 'The Song of the Nightingale,' Bartók's Pianoforte Concerto and 'The Amazing Mandarin,' 'Solomon,' Gibson's Overture 'Neil Gow,' Bax's third Symphony (first performance), Elgar's Violin Concerto arranged (and played) by Lionel Tertis as a Viola Concerto, a new work by Peter Warlock, and Mahler's fourth and eighth Symphonies.

London Symphony Orchestra.—Ten Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall on Monday evenings October 14 and 28, November 4 and 18, December 9, January 20, February 10, March 10 and 24, and April 7. Conductors: Albert Coates, Mengelberg, John Barbirolli, Emil Cooper, Abendroth, Weingartner. Fifteen Symphony concerts will be given at the Royal Albert Hall on Sunday afternoons from November 17 to April 13. Conductors: Albert Coates, Stewart Deas, Malcolm Sargent, Reginald Stewart, Bruno Walter, Ethel Leginska, Pedro Morales.

The Hallé Orchestra.—Six concerts under Sir Hamilton Harty at Queen's Hall on Friday evenings November 15 and 29, December 13, January 10 and 24, and February 7.

The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under Furtwängler, will play at the Royal Albert Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 1, and at Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, December 3.

The British Women's Symphony Orchestra.—Four concerts under Dr. Malcolm Sargent at Queen's Hall on September 28, November 25, February 17, and March 31.

The London Concert Orchestra.—Six concerts at Æolian Hall under the general conductorship of Arthur L. Parfrey.

CHAMBER CONCERTS IN LONDON

Five Wednesday evening concerts will be given at Wigmore Hall on October 9 and 23, November 6 and 20, and December 4, under the management of Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Myra Hess, Mr. Ivor James, Mr. Herbert Menges, Miss Isolde Menges, Mr. Herbert Samuel, and Miss Dorothy Silk.

Mr. Gordon Bryan announces a concert at Æolian Hall on October 30, at which the programme will consist of William Walton's Pianoforte Quartet (first performance in London), seven Poems by Li-Po, set for voice and instruments by Constant Lambert, three songs with accompaniment for string quintet, &c., by Patrick Hadley, Pianoforte Sonata by Constant Lambert (first performance), five songs by William Walton, Patrick Hadley's 'Ephemera,' and Prokofiev's Overture on Yiddish Themes for clarinet, string quartet, and pianoforte.

Concerts will be given by the London String Quartet at Æolian Hall on October 5, the Hart House Quartet of Toronto at Wigmore Hall on October 8, the Zimmer String Quartet of Brussels at Wigmore Hall on October 19 (the three programmes each include Debussy's Quartet), the Westminster String Quartet at Wigmore Hall on October 29 (first performance of Szymanowski's Quartet in C). Armstrong Gibbs announces a concert of his compositions at Æolian Hall on October 30, with the first performance of a Lyric Sonata for violin and pianoforte.

Michael Zacharewitsch will play nineteen Violin Concertos by nineteen composers in the course of six recitals at Wigmore and Æolian Halls. First recital October 26, at 8.15.

Lionel Tertis will give viola recitals at Wigmore and Æolian Halls on October 3, January 30, May 1, December 7, March 15, and May 31.

CHORAL CONCERTS IN LONDON AND SUBURBS

Battersea and Wandsworth Musical Union (Mr. F. Wilment Bates).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'A Princess of Kensington.'

Bermondsey Settlement (Dr. J. E. Borland).—Carols and miscellaneous; 'The Gondoliers.'

Bishopsgate Institute Choral Society (Mr. C. Thornton Lofthouse).—'Sleepers, wake'; 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner); Fantasy on Christmas Carols (Vaughan Williams); Dvorák's Stabat Mater.

Central Croydon Musical Society (Mr. H. Leslie-Smith).—'The Golden Legend'; Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin'; 'The Erl-King's Daughter' (Gade); 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner).

Central London Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. David J. Thomas).—Selections from 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'The Mastersingers'; 'Hymn of Praise.'

City of London Choral Union (Dr. Harold Darke).—'A Sea Symphony' (Vaughan Williams); 'In honour of the city' (Dyson).

City Temple Choral Society (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—'Elijah'; Brahms's 'Requiem'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Creation'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; 'Judas Maccabæus'; Bach selection (Good Friday).

Croydon Philharmonic Society (Mr. Alan J. Kirby).—'The Messiah'; Oldroyd's 'Stabat Mater,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' and other modern unaccompanied works; Bach evening, including the 'Coffee Cantata' and the 'Peasant Cantata.'

Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock).—Concert edition of 'Carmen'; 'By the deep, nine' (Rowley); 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

Dulwich Philharmonic Society (Mr. Leslie Regan).—'The Song of Hiawatha'; Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter'; Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea'; 'The Apostles.'

Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Herbert Dawson).—'The Music Makers'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Harrow and Greenhill Choral Society (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'Blest Pair of Sirens'; madrigals, &c.

Mill Hill Musical Society (Mr. Herbert Y. Templeman).—'King Olaf'; 'Hymn to Providence' (Edric Cundell); 'Five Mystical Songs' (Vaughan Williams).

People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies (Mr. Frank Idle).—'Judas Maccabæus'; 'Samson and Delilah'; Ethel Smyth's Mass in D; Hiller's 'Song of Victory'; 'The Messiah.'

Philharmonic Choir, The (Mr. C. Kennedy Scott).—'A Mass of Life' (Delius: see above, the Delius Festival); Mass in B minor; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'The Messiah' (special performance for schools).

Royal Choral Society (Dr. Malcolm Sargent).—'Elijah'; Wagner concert; carols; 'The Messiah' (January 4 and Good Friday); scenes from 'Faust' and other operas; Mass in B minor; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

St. Michael's (Cornhill) Singers (Dr. Harold Darke).—'The Sower' (Darke); 'Prayer' (Frank Bridge); Brahms's 'Requiem'; Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor; 'Beyond these voices' and 'Voces clamantium' (Parry); Mass in B minor; Christmas Oratorio, Parts 1-4.

Wanstead Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Leslie Regan).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; Bliss's 'Pastoral'; 'The Messiah.'

Westminster Choral Society (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—'God so loved the world' (Bach); 'The Seasons'; 'The Song of Hiawatha.'

Tulse Hill: Holy Trinity Choral Society (Mr. Henry F. Hall).—Mass in B minor; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

West Middlesex Musical Society (Mr. C. Stanley Smallman).—Selection from 'Carmen'; 'Elijah.'

Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean'; 'The Martyr of Antioch.'

CONCERTS IN THE PROVINCES

Aberdeen Choral and Orchestral Concerts Association (Mr. Willan Swainson): 'The Kingdom'; Mozart's 'Requiem'; Holst's Hymns from the 'Rig Veda'; (November 15) Madrigals by the Chelsea Singers.

Ayr Choral Union (Mr. Matthew Norton): 'Elijah.'

Barnsley St. Cecilia Society (Dr. J. Frederic Staton): 'Hymn of Praise'; Holst's Two Psalms; miscellaneous.

Bath Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. H. T. Sims): 'Christmas Oratorio,' Parts 1 and 2; 'King Olaf'; madrigals.

Birmingham.—

City of Birmingham Orchestra (Dr. Adrian Boult): Eight Symphony concerts at the Town Hall on Thursday evenings October 10 and 24, November 21, December 12, January 23, February 13, March 6, March 27. The programmes include Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony, Mahler's 'Song of the Earth,' Delius's 'Brigg Fair,' and (to be conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent on October 24) Elgar's first Symphony.

Birmingham Catholic Choir (Mr. Robert Eaton): 'The Dream of Gerontius'; 16th-century alla cappella music, &c.; Verdi's Stabat Mater; Dvorák's Patriotic Hymn.

City of Birmingham Choir (Mr. G. D. Cunningham): 'Elijah'; Franck's 150th Psalm; 'Omar Khayyám.'

Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Union (Mr. Joseph H. Adams): 'The Creation'; 'Hymn of Praise'; 'Aida'; 'The Messiah.'

Billingborough Choral Society (Mr. J. Bernard Jackson): 'The King shall rejoice' (Handel); 'O come, let us sing unto the Lord' (Mendelssohn).

Boston Choral Society (Mr. J. Bernard Jackson): 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure'; 'Elijah.'

Bristol.—

Bristol Choral Society (Mr. S. W. Underwood): 'The Song of Hiawatha'; 'The Messiah'; 'Elijah'; Wagner selections, conducted by Siegfried Wagner.

Bristol Philharmonic Society (Mr. Arnold Barter): 'The Blessed Damozel' (Debussy); 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure'; 'An Apostrophe to the Heavenly Hosts' (Healey Willan); 'The Hymn of Jesus'; 'The Rio Grande' (Constant Lambert); 'The Kingdom.' The orchestral works include Vaughan Williams's 'A London Symphony' and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, with Frank Merrick's Scherzo and Finale.

Broadstairs and St. Peter's Choral Society (Mr. F. E. Fisher): Spohr's 'Last Judgment.'

Burnley Municipal Choir: 'Acis and Galatea'; 'Christmas Oratorio'; 'The Damnation of Faust,' with the Hallé Orchestra, under Sir Hamilton Harty.

Carlisle Choral Society (Dr. F. W. Wadely): Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.'

Coventry Philharmonic Society (Dr. H. W. Rhodes): 'Hiawatha,' Parts 1 and 2; 'The Messiah'; 'St. Paul.'

Derby Choral Union (Sir Henry Coward): 'The Messiah'; 'The Damnation of Faust.'

Devizes Philharmonic Society (Mr. F. V. Weaver): a Stanford concert; 'Elijah.'

Dundee Choral Union (Mr. C. M. Cowe): 'The Messiah'; 'The Golden Legend'; 'The Swan and the Skylark' (Goring Thomas).

Dunfermline Choral Union (Mr. A. Henderson): 'The Messiah'; 'The Seasons'; 'The Banner of St. George'; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

Edinburgh.—
Edinburgh Royal Choral Union (Mr. W. Greenhouse-Allt) : 'The Messiah' ; Scottish concert ; 'Solomon' ; 'St. Matthew' Passion.
Reid Symphony Orchestra (Prof. D. F. Tovey) : Eight concerts on Thursday evenings, October 31, November 14 and 28, December 12, February 6 and 20, March 6 and 20. The orchestral works include Bruckner's 'Romantic' Symphony and Dvorák's third. With a special choir, Bach's Magnificat and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' will be sung.
Faversham Institute Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. J. Keech) : 'Caractacus' ; 'Tom Jones' ; Brahms's 'Requiem.'
Frome Choral Society (Mr. A. M. Porter) : Haydn's 'Spring.'
Glascow Choral and Orchestral Union.—Thirteen Tuesday and fourteen Saturday concerts. The choral works, conducted by Mr. Wilfrid Senior, are Honegger's 'King David,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' 'The Messiah,' and 'The Seasons.' The orchestral conductors are Mr. Albert van Raalte, Mr. Vladimir Golschmann, and Mr. Robert Heger. Several British works will be conducted by their composers.
Grays (Essex) Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. H. Fraser) : 'The Creation' ; 'Hear my prayer' ; 'Les Cloches de Corneville.'
Halifax.—
Halifax Choral Society (Dr. A. C. Tysoe) : 'Everyman' (Walford Davies) ; 'Acis and Galatea' ; 'The Messiah' ; 'The Black Knight.'
Symphony concerts will be given by the Bradford Philharmonic Orchestra under Mr. Keith Douglas on October 24, December 5, January 23, and February 20.
Hanley.—
North Staffs District Choral Society (Mr. John James) : 'Elijah' ; 'The Messiah' ; 'The Damnation of Faust.'
Huddersfield.—
Huddersfield Choral Society (Sir Henry Coward) : Beethoven's Mass in D ; 'The Messiah' ; 'Samson and Delilah.'
Huddersfield Philharmonic Society (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes) : an orchestral concert ; 'The Messiah' ; concert with the Huddersfield Vocal Union.
Concerts will also be given by the Permanent Orchestra, the Glee and Madrigal Society, the Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir.
Kirkcaldy Choral Union (Mr. C. M. Cowe) : 'Judas Maccabæus.'
Leeds.—
Leeds Choral Union : November 19 (Sir Hamilton Harty), 'The Damnation of Faust' ; December 19 (Sir Thomas Beecham), 'The Messiah' ; March 25 (Mr. Julius Harrison), 'The Music Makers' ; Delius's 'Sea-Drift.'
Leeds New Choral Society (Mr. H. Bardgett) : 'Joshua' ; 'Christmas Oratorio' ; 'Oberon.'
Lincoln Musical Society (Dr. G. J. Bennett) : Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' ; Haydn's 'Spring.'
Liverpool Philharmonic Society.—Twelve concerts on Tuesday evenings from October 8 to March 25. Conductors : Sir Henry Wood (four), Sir Thomas Beecham (four), Abendroth, Oskar Fried, Basil Cameron, Malcolm Sargent. The choral works are Bach's 'Now shall the Grace,' 'A Song of Destiny,' Debussy's 'The Blessed Damozel,' Verdi's Te Deum, Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' Rachmaninov's Three Russian Songs, Handel's sixth Chandos Anthem.
Maidstone Choral Union (Mr. F. Wilson Parish) : 'Acis and Galatea' ; 'Elijah.'
Manchester (see also p. 933).—
Hallé concerts, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty. The seventy-second season consists of twenty Thursday evening concerts from October 17 to March 13, an extra 'Messiah' performance on December 20, and a final Pension Fund concert. The choral works are Rachmaninov's 'The Bells,' Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' Kodály's 'Psalmus Hungaricus,' and Dvorák's Te Deum (November 21) ; 'The Messiah' (December 19 and 20) ; 'The Damnation of Faust' (February 20).
Newark Choral Society (Dr. W. A. Hall) : 'Hiawatha,' Parts 1 and 2.
Newport Choral Society (Mr. Arthur E. Sims) : 'Cavalleria Rusticana' ; 'The Revenge' ; Verdi's 'Requiem.'
Northampton Musical Society (Mr. Charles J. King) : 'The Messiah.'
Northwich Philharmonic Society (Mr. J. Patterson Shaw) : 'Phaudrig Crohoore' ; concert edition of 'Faust.'
Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society (Mr. Allen Gill) : 'Hiawatha,' Parts 1 and 2 ; Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' ; 'The Messiah' ; concert by the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Hamilton Harty ; Verdi's 'Requiem' ; Berlioz's Te Deum.
Redditch Festival Choir : 'The Messiah.'
Sheffield Amateur Musical Society (Dr. J. Frederic Staton) : Carols ; Verdi's 'Requiem.'
Stourbridge Concert Society :
'The Wedding of Shon Maclean' ; concert edition of 'Carmen' ; 'Hiawatha,' Parts 1 and 2.
Torquay Philharmonic Society (Mr. Vernon S. Read) : 'Song of Destiny' ; 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner), and part-songs ; 'The Messiah' ; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'
Wareham Choral Society (Mr. Edgar A. Lane) : 'The Messiah' ; 'The Gondoliers.'
Warrington Musical Society (Mr. Frank H. Crossley) : Act 1 of 'Lohengrin' ; concert edition of 'Tom Jones' ; miscellaneous.
Windsor and Eton Choral Society (Rev. B. C. S. Everett) : Bach's Mass in B minor ; 'Lo, round the throne' (H. G. Ley) ; Brahms's 'Requiem.'
York Musical Society (Dr. E. C. Bairstow) : Song recital by Miss Winifred Holloway ; Bach recital by Mr. Harold Samuel, and madrigals ; Bliss's 'Pastoral' ; Armstrong Gibbs's 'La Belle Dame sans merci.'

IRELAND.

Belfast Philharmonic Society (Mr. E. Godfrey Brown) ; 'Hey Nonny No' (Smyth) and part-songs ; 'The Kingdom' ; Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' ; excerpt from 'Tannhäuser' ; 'The Messiah.' Orchestral works : Brahms's second Symphony ; 'The Lark Ascending.'
Dublin Philharmonic Society (Col. Fritz Brase and Mr. Turner Huggard) : Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' ; 'Elijah' ; 'The Golden Legend' ; 'Hymn to St. Patrick' (H. R. White). Orchestral works include Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Brahms's first, and the 'Enigma' Variations.

The annual report and balance sheet of the Sunday Evening Concert Society (Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, N.W.1) shows a flourishing condition of affairs. The Society begins its new season on October 6, at 6.30, when the performers will be Miss Harriet Cohen, Mr. John Goss, and the Stratton Quartet, in works by three of the B's—Bach, Beethoven, and Bax—Schubert, &c.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Joseph Ivimey for the twenty-fifth year, announces concerts at Queen's Hall on December 5, March 20, and May 15. Among the works to be studied are Schumann's third Symphony, Ethel Smyth's 'Two Interlinked French Melodies,' and a new Violin Concerto by Holbrooks.

The Insurance Orchestral Society of London (hon. conductor, Mr. Harold Rawlinson) starts its rehearsals for the season on October 1. There are vacancies in all departments for advanced players. Apply to the hon. secretary, Mr. Thomas Wallace, 61, Threadneedle Street, E.C.2.

ANNIBAL GANTEZ: A MERRY MUSICIAN

By J. A. Westrup

The subject of this article was one of the most curious characters of his time. Born at Marseilles about the end of the 16th century, he held many posts as maître de chapelle in various parts of France, and is thought to have died about 1670. Of his life practically nothing is known beyond the casual autobiographical details which he has left. Nor has he bequeathed to posterity compositions which might enable an over-zealous student to hail him as the greatest unacknowledged master of the 17th century. His fame rests not upon his music but upon a solitary literary effort published at Auxerre, in 1643.

'L'Entretien des Musiciens,' as this remarkable work is called, is by no means unknown to musicians. Though the original edition is extremely rare, a beautiful reprint edited by Thoinan and published by Claudin, in 1878, figures occasionally in the catalogues of second-hand booksellers, and copies can be picked up for a not immoderate sum. But in England I doubt whether the book is familiar to many, so that a short account may prove interesting. The work is made up of fifty-seven letters, preceded by a dedication, a preface, and the usual fulsome ode to the author by an uncritical admirer. The title-page runs as follows:

L'Entretien
des Musiciens
par le Sieur
Gantez,
Prieur de la Magdaleine en Provance,
Chanoine Semiprebandé, Maistre des
Enfans de Chœur & de la Musique, en l'Eglise Insigne & Cathedrale
Sainct Estienne d'Auxerre.

A Auxerre,
Chez Jacques Bouquet
Imprimeur de Monseigneur l'Illustrissime, & Reverendissime
Evesque d'Auxerre,
M. DC. XLIII.

The dedication is to Pierre de Broc, Bishop of Auxerre at the time. The preface, which is entitled 'Advertissement aux Chantres,' begins by an ingenuous apology for any misprints which may occur in the text, 'either through the Author's or the Printer's carelessness,' and goes on to point out the difficulty of getting appointed maître de musique, securing a benefice, and writing a book of this kind, all within the space of three months. Indeed, the reverend author seems to have had some misgivings about the value of his work, as he tells us in the dedication that he has kept back nearly all the copies from circulation so that those who are hostile or hypercritical may not be able to lay their hands on it. This excess of false modesty, if it is true and not mere humbug, may serve to explain the extreme rarity of the original edition at the present day.

With two exceptions there is no means of knowing who were the recipients of the letters which compose the body of the work. No. 6 is addressed to Mlle. de Saint-Géran, whose father was Marshal of France under Henry IV. and Louis XIII. Gantez tells us in Letter 53 that he dedicated to this lady a Mass of his composition, which was performed by the singers of the Sainte Chapelle and Notre Dame (the celebrated Mersenne being in the audience), and for which he received a present of thirty pistols (three hundred francs). No. 44 seems to be the reproduction of a dedicatory letter sent to the Abbé des Roches with another of Gantez's Masses, that known as 'Lætamini.' The other fifty-five letters merely begin with the simple superscription 'Monsieur' and end with the same device, a complimentary sentence which is joined up to what has gone before and leads on gracefully to the formula, 'Monsieur, votre serviteur, A. Gantez.' Whether these letters were addressed to actual persons it is impossible to say.

Gantez tells us comparatively little about himself in the letters. We learn, however, that he had held maîtrises in Marseilles, Aix, Arles, Avignon, Grenoble, Aigues-Mortes, Toulouse, Montauban, Aurillac, La Chatre, Le Havre, and Paris, before finally settling down at Auxerre where he secured a canonry and published 'L'Entretien.' The number of these posts is not surprising. It was the practice of the time for Maîtres de musique to travel—vicarier, it was called—in search of preferment. If they could afford it they would travel on horseback, but many, like Gantez himself on one occasion, were obliged to walk, and even sleep in the open air, for lack of money to fill their purses. Not only was it possible for a competent (or unscrupulous) man to secure a good post in the long run by this method, but also it was considered that the change of experience was beneficial. Chapter records of any Cathedral or collegiate church in the 17th century will provide instances of the continual coming and going of maîtres de musique and the difficulty of getting hold of good men.

In 'L'Entretien des Musiciens,' Gantez offers advice to maîtres de musique who wish to retain their positions or procure new ones. We get a picture of continual conflict. Canons are for ever at war with their maîtres de musique, who, in turn, are unpopular with their singers. The wise maître, it appears, will be prudent in his dealings with the canons, and polite and considerate to his singers. If he wishes to acquire a good reputation he will even be prepared to give charity to singers in reduced circumstances who may happen to be passing through the town. Only he must make sure that they are singers and not cheats. Charity cannot be indiscriminate. Gantez makes this quite clear:

> 'And it would be a good thing, too, to be on your guard against many passers-by, who call themselves musicians and yet are not, which is why you must never give them anything without having heard them sing, so that you may not have the same experience as a certain Bishop to whom a good fellow presented himself and asked him to have pity on a poor singer. The said Lord Bishop, having given him dinner, summoned him afterwards, intending to make him sing, and the rogue replied, "Sir, you should not be angry if I do not sing, since I am such a poor singer that I know nothing at all about it."'

This extract gives a very good idea, even in translation, of Gantez's style. The inevitable piece of advice, the loose construction, the anecdote to point the moral, all these recur over and over again in the letters. Gantez had read widely, though doubtless in a superficial way, and he cannot resist the temptation to produce an analogy from mythology or history where the occasion offers. Most of the famous personages of Greek and Roman history are cited as having made what Gantez considers a memorable remark or having done what he considers a memorable act. Many of the Roman Emperors in particular appear in these pages, nor are the stories always of the kind that would be approved by the strait-laced.

But the tediousness of these lapses into anecdote cannot impair the gaiety of the whole. Gantez was a merry musician, and his merriment peeps out of every page, even when he is making the most absurd hypocritical pretence of being grave and moral and serious. The most attractive part of his work is not that dealing with music, which, though interesting, is not of outstanding value. It is his observations on life in general which entertain most. Never could hypocrisy be more apparent than in his discussion of drink. It is quite evident that his whole life was spent in the companionship of the bottle, yet he takes the severest air at times and would warn all and sundry against excess, saying that to drink well is to drink enough and no more. In Letter 19, however, he lays all his cards on the table :

> ' Since you are so desirous of hearing my news, I will tell you that during the excessive heat of this Summer I forget not to do as good Gardeners do, that is to water their Gardens frequently, and I think the reason why in Summer we have not so much rain as in Winter is that in Summer the Sky, being more thirsty, draws unto itself that which the Winter sends us in too great abundance ; therefore, since the Sky drinks and the Earth drinks and man derives from both, namely, his soul from Heaven and his body from the Earth, why should we not drink ? A Musician is not esteemed if he is not a good drinker. . . . Drinking is the most innocent and charming of all pleasures.'

The justification of drinking is as old as Anacreon, and the rest may be taken as a fair indication of the author's own position and of the general view of his contemporaries. No doubt the precarious and changing life that musicians led encouraged them to seek comfort at the tavern. Gantez continually harps on this theme. In one place he proclaims that though it is said that all musicians are drunkards, yet all drunkards are not musicians —an original defence ! Elsewhere he says that, just as a fish can only be caught with a hook, so the friendship of musicians can only be secured with a glass. Hence hospitality is recommended, so long as it is not too frequent, which would empty the purse and breed contempt. Again he tells us that ' all the difference there is between a Singer and a Garden is that to water a Garden you need water, whereas for a Singer you need wine.'

In face of these declarations we need not attach too much importance to his warnings against the evils of liquor. His condemnation of gluttony is equally insincere and thoroughly light-hearted. What could be more inconsequent than this argument :

> ' Cato says that the belly has no ears ; therefore, since one of the fine qualities of a Musician is to have a good ear, it seems to me that they ought not to love so much that which has none.'

Probably most of his sermonising is to be taken with a grain of salt—his biting remarks about women, his complaint that singers take so little interest in religion, his views on ignorance, and so on. His discursive method takes him along many strange paths, and whether he is urging that Italy is a bad country for musicians or telling us what his grandmother once said about cheese, he maintains the same lively attitude towards his subject.

Even when discussing the theory of music he cannot avoid flippancy. He divides sounds into seven kinds, which he calls ' le Continu, le Resonant, le Discret, le Fini, le Rafleschi, l'Harmonique, et l'Infini.' The first is the sound of the organ, because it continues as long as you have your finger on the key and no longer, the second is of the lute, because it still sounds after it has been plucked. The third is of the voice, because discretion is necessary in singing. So the list goes on, the explanations becoming more fantastic and irrelevant. The discussion of the modes necessitates a pun :

> ' At the present day there are far more Masters who compose à la mode than in accordance with the modes.'

He has, too, his own views about the nature of music :

> ' Now if you wish to know what Music is, I think it is the Art of singing well and composing well, and some would say that it is not science but one of the liberal Arts, yet I believe that in reality Singing is only an Art, but Composition is science, which is why you might say that Music is an Art and a Science at the same time.'

For all his discussion of theory and dreary summary of the teaching of the time, he is far from holding that the authority of theoretical writers should be absolute :

> ' I observe many things which the Theorists forbid which are none the less the best. Wherefore one must not be as scrupulous about keeping to the rules of Music as to the laws of Holy Writ, for since they are but men who have made the said rules, it is also permissible for men to make such additions or diminutions as one may consider more conducive to the suitability and attractiveness of a motet, and I suppose since we have climbed on the shoulders of the Ancients we can see further than they can, for these Gentlemen often tell us things which they would be unable to practise themselves, and Zarlino,* who had such a great reputation, left a fine Theory but no Music. . . .'

Writing to one who proposed to abandon music for philosophy, he praises his desire to study the latter, but claims that to abandon music for that purpose would be pure folly. Indeed, music and the humanities should go hand-in-hand :

> ' I assure you that Music without letters is a body without a soul, for most of our Masters through their ignorance of Latin commit a thousand absurdities in their Motets, either in quantity or by misrepresenting the sense of the words, through lack of intelligence.'

He himself, we learn from another passage, made a slip in quantity in his Mass ' Lætamini,' and drew down on himself the violent disapprobation of all the musicians of Paris, where he was at the time.

* Zarlino (1517-90), the celebrated theorist, did leave some compositions including an ' Orfeo,' a dramatic work performed in 1574. It is, however, his theoretical works which have made him famous.

On another kind of error—mistakes in performance—he has some amusing observations. These, he says, are nearly always accidental. A man cannot be perfect, and a maître de musique need not be too downcast by occasional misfortune. One should be ashamed of shameful things, such as leaving the tavern in an intoxicated condition, but not of things which one cannot help :

> ' If the Canons were to blush every time they make a mistake in intoning, they would end by becoming Cardinals or Cherubim, and again, if Singers were to feel shame when they made a slip the music would drop out of their hands and they would become as dumb as fish.'

Why, then, should the Master of the choir be ashamed or worried ?

Long motets are an abomination to our author, who detests equally fussiness in conducting. A man makes himself a laughing-stock by throwing himself about in a ridiculous way. Far better results are obtained by more restrained methods, and it must not be forgotten that a good maître de musique can do wonders with a bad choir, whereas a bad maître will spoil a good choir. Lastly, a practical word of advice. Treat the choir-boys well. Some men make their lives a continual torment. The prudent maître will act on all occasions with mildness and clemency, and so will escape being ejected from his post through the influence of an infuriated parent.

The names of several musicians of the time appear in the pages of ' L'Entretien,' but few of them are important, and very little of interest is told about them. Mersenne is hailed as an oracle, Hottmann is cited as the greatest lute-player of the day. The others are maîtres de chapelle at Paris, with little title to fame, with the possible exception of Auxcousteaux,* though the names of Formé, Gobert, and others are still remembered. The printers Ballard and Sanlecque are mentioned, and the budding composer is warned not to rush too hastily into print. Once in type his works cannot be changed, and will stand revealed in all their weakness. Gantez claims to have defied Ballard's unjust monopoly, which crippled French music printing, and to have been the first to publish his works with a new printer and in new types, ' as all the kingdom has seen,' says he. Were those works worth publishing ? As much, no doubt, as many others that appeared at the time. Composing was a Master's job, and between that and his choir and the bottle he must have had a busy time.

Gantez is a sympathetic figure. With all his bluff and insincerity and deadly dullness when it came to really serious matters, and superficial tincture of letters and endless quotations and anecdotes and puns, he is well worth reading. One may, with a little imagination, picture the old rascal writing his racy letters in his private room at Auxerre, or conducting his choir, or treating his singers to a drink, or beating a refractory choir-boy, or composing another Mass or one of the drinking songs of which he speaks, with his pen in one hand and the tankard not very far from the other, and his honest nose decorated with a carbuncle or two. A busy life and a merry one. Perhaps the old times were good after all.

* d. 1656. There is a curious error in the article on Auxcousteaux in the third edition of ' Grove,' where the title of Gantez's work is given as ' L 'Entretien des muses.'

Music in Scotland

Aberdeen.—As a result of the introduction of ' talking pictures,' a number of musicians employed in Aberdeen picture-houses have been paid off. At a well-attended meeting of professional musicians, held recently to consider the position, it was decided to form an Aberdeen Professional Orchestra, and to give a series of concerts during the winter, the proceeds to be divided among the members of the orchestra, and cases of distress to be specially dealt with.

Edinburgh.—The prospectus of the Paterson Orchestral concerts for the forthcoming season has been issued. The Scottish Orchestra has again been engaged, with Van Raalte, Golschmann, and Heger as conductors. The concerts, twelve in number, will follow the general lines of those of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union, noticed below.——Arising out of the displacement of cinema orchestras by ' talking pictures,' Councillor Gerald Crawford, an ex-president of the Musicians' Union, is endeavouring to secure the establishment of an Edinburgh Municipal Orchestra.

Glasgow.—The thirty-first season of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union will extend over thirteen weeks, with two concerts each week. The Scottish Orchestra will be conducted in turn by Albert Van Raalte, of the Royal Opera House, The Hague, Vladimir Golschmann, from Paris, and Robert Heger, of the State Opera, Vienna. The sketch programmes are more enterprising than usual, and include the first Symphony of Mahler, McEwen's ' Solway ' Symphony, David Stephen's new ' Sinfonietta,' a set of ' Variations ' for orchestra by Guy Warrack, a Suite from ' Les Noces Imaginaires ' by Gavin Gordon, Ireland's ' Mai-Dun,' Delius's ' Walk to the Paradise Gardens,' Honegger's ' Rugby,' Sibelius's ' Tappiola,' Malipiero's ' Cimarosiana ' and ' Oriente Imaginario,' Stravinsky's ' Feu d'Artifice,' Casella's ' La Jarre,' Reznicek's ' Donna Diana,' Goossens's ' Four Conceits,' Bloch's 'Cello Concerto ' Schelomo ' (soloist, Antoni Sala), Casella's ' Pupazetti,' Eugene Cools's ' Prélude pour la Mort de Tintagiles,' William Wallace's ' Villon,' a ' Perpetuum Mobile ' by Heger, and a Dutch-English programme introducing unfamiliar works by the Dutch composers, Wagenaar, Landre, Rud, Mengelberg, and Dopper. Mr. Wilfrid Senior will again conduct the Glasgow Choral Union, the works chosen for performance in conjunction with the Scottish Orchestra being Honegger's ' King David,' Mendelssohn's ' Hymn of Praise,' Haydn's ' The Seasons,' ' The Messiah,' and (with Van Raalte as conductor) Beethoven's ninth Symphony.——The recently-formed Glasgow Chamber Music Society has taken over from the Glasgow Orpheus Choir the responsibility for the October Chamber Music Week which has been one of the most interesting features of Glasgow musical life for the past ten years. Under the ægis of the Society the Budapest String Quartet will give a series of seven chamber concerts in the M'Lellan Galleries during the week beginning October 7. The programmes contain several modern works new to Glasgow. This is stated to be the Budapest Quartet's first visit to Scotland.——The arrangements of the Glasgow Bach Society include : (1) a chamber concert, with Adila Fachiri and Prof. Tovey as soloists, at which the A minor and E major Violin Concertos, the Chaconne for solo violin, and the Trio Concerto for flute, violin, pianoforte, and strings will be given ; (2) a Christmas performance in Glasgow Cathedral—programme, Church Cantatas Nos. 115, ' Ready be thou, my soul,' No. 122, ' Sing we the Birth,' No. 140, ' Sleepers, wake,' and No. 170, ' Vergnugte Ruh '—soloists, the Edinburgh Singers ; (3) a chamber concert—programme, Concerto (transcribed) in G minor for solo violin (soloist, Margaret Ludwig), Concerto in A for oboe d'amore (soloist, T. C. Greig), Mozart's ' Kleine Nachtmusik,' and Handel's Concerto Grosso in B flat ; and (4) an Easter performance of the ' St. Matthew ' Passion in Glasgow Cathedral, with Steuart Wilson and Keith Falkner as principal soloists.

Mr. Henry Havergal, of Fettes College, Edinburgh, has been re-appointed conductor of the choir, and has taken over the direction of the Society's chamber orchestra in succession to Mr. F. H. Bisset. Miss Margaret Ludwig will again lead the orchestra.

General.—The Covent Garden Opera Company, having taken over the dates of the defunct British National Opera Company, will pay a five weeks' visit to Scotland, commencing September 30, devoting two weeks each to Glasgow and Edinburgh, and one week to Aberdeen. Mr. John Barbirolli will be musical director and conductor, assisted by the veteran Mr. Eugène Goossens, sen. The répertoire to be presented includes 'The Mastersingers,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Turandot' (first performance in Scotland), 'La Bohème,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'The Barber of Seville,' 'Tosca,' 'Falstaff,' 'Faust,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Pagliacci,' and 'Il Trovatore.' An orchestra of fifty is promised.

Sebastian.

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL

The ninth annual Festival at Salzburg was notable for the absence of three men formerly prominently connected with the Festival idea: Richard Strauss, who has kept aloof from the Salzburg events for some time past, and this year again preferred to part from his summer seclusion at Garmisch for only a few occasional appearances at the Munich Mozart Festival; Hugo von Hofmannsthal, literary adviser for the Salzburg scheme, who passed away only a few weeks prior to the opening of the Festival; and Max Reinhardt, whose former and much-debated Salzburg productions had proved a drawing card for the Western visitors, at the same time increasing the deficit of the enterprise by their costly lavishness. With these three prominent men no longer in the Salzburg ranks, the artistic balance of the 1929 Festival was perhaps a bit more slender. Financially, we are assured, the results were better than ever, so much so that the Festival month netted a comparatively large profit for the sponsoring society. Whether this be due to larger attendances or a larger subsidy remains unsaid, but the close observer tends towards the latter assumption. The attendance, while not perhaps smaller than in previous years, was decidedly more 'democratic.' English in its original and in the American variety was less frequently heard this year, but a large contingent of guests from Germany seemingly made up for that. At any rate, the 1929 Festival, according to official enunciations, has helped to ensure the future of the Salzburg Festival Society. So far from again facing the necessity of emitting the annual S.O.S., the Society informs us that the next Festival (the tenth) is assured. In fact, the annual 're-organization' of the Society will be more far-reaching this time, when the Austrian State and the Salzburg provincial governments are to help towards improving the financial welfare of the Society. Reinhardt's return for next year is said to be certain, Schalk and Clemens Krauss are again engaged, and negotiations with Bruno Walter and Furtwängler, it is said, are pending. Optimists dream of bigger things still: of an open-air performance of Verdi's 'Requiem' on a gigantic scale, to take place on the Cathedral Square so far reserved for Reinhardt's annual performances of 'Everyman'; and of Toscanini and his La Scala company.

'DER ROSENKAVALIER'

With Strauss and Reinhardt absent, the chief interest in the scenic portion of the Festival centred more than ever in the offerings of the Vienna Opera troupe, under its new director, Clemens Krauss. The newly-elected director and successor to Franz Schalk presented himself at Salzburg for the first time at the head of his company. The occasion was a performance of 'Der Rosenkavalier.' With the entire cast and chorus and orchestra recruited from Vienna, and with a new (and beautiful) setting made for the forthcoming Viennese revival, it was, in all, a model production, one to rival the memorable performance of 'Fidelio' which was the great feature of Salzburg's 1927 Festival. In musical perfection, scenic sumptuousness, exquisite taste, and vocal splendour, it was a production such as only one opera house in Europe still commands—the Vienna Staatsoper.

There is nothing new to be said about the cast, which was virtually the same as that which Europe's most important opera houses, including Covent Garden, have borrowed from Vienna when an all-star performance of 'Der Rosenkavalier' has been wanted. Suffice it to say that Lotte Lehmann's Princess was never more noble, poetic, and touching; that Richard Mayr's Baron Ochs, so lovable and appealing in all his crudeness, was never more delightfully humorous than here, in Mayr's own native Salzburg. Adele Kern, replacing Elisabeth Schumann, was a Sophie less ladylike and rather more of the sprightly girlish soubrette type, and Vera Schwarz gave an Octavian of vocal richness.

The novel part of the performance lay chiefly in Lothar Wallerstein's stage management, and in Alfred Roller's new settings. Roller it was who created the original and now everywhere accepted setting. Acts 1 and 3 adhered to the traditional, but Act 2 brought a surprise. The big, red-marble hall of Monsieur Faninal for once reflected the personality of this nouveau riche, a personality bent more on costliness than on exquisite taste. The rear wall was, for the first time, of glass and transparent. That afforded ample scope for scenic by-play and amusing episodes; and certain 'backstage' moments, now clearly visible, gained in effect. Above all, the advent of the 'Rosenkavalier' bearing the silver rose thus became an impressive ceremony, all the details of which we were permitted to observe. That was effective and interesting; but the thrilling 'great moment,' when the centre doors used to fling open to reveal the silvery vision at the entrance of the brilliant F sharp major chord, lost its element of surprise. With this new setting, then, a bit of the old effect is sacrificed, but a wealth of new ones gained.

Dr. Wallerstein's stage management added an abundance of new and witty details, and showed a control of the chorus masses that was a delight. Clemens Krauss conducted, and hardly an operatic score is more suited to his style than this. His technical skill, his clarity, are unique. His tempi were often new; the quick passages rather quicker, the slow ones rather broader, than usual. That made for variety and contrast, and gave new significance to many scenes. Above all, Krauss knows the secret of gradation; his slow tempi were calculated to prepare for all the bigger climaxes. The orchestra, with this master at its head, responded admirably.

'DON JUAN' AND 'FIDELIO'

'Don Juan,' the second revival, was not quite so happy. For the first time Salzburg shunned the borrowed scenery of the Vienna Opera, which had not always lent itself readily to the altered Salzburg proportions. Oscar Strnad designed it to suit the peculiarities (and scenic primitiveness) of the Salzburg Festival house. Curtains draped right and left and adjusted to the requirements of each scene—an 'elastic stage,' as it were—made for concentration, but, for instance, hampered action in the banquet scene. Settings and scenery laid less than the usual stress upon the external Spanish colour, and thus emphasised the plot as an intense human tragedy of universal appeal. Franz Schalk conducted with the supreme knowledge of the score that this Mozart authority commands. Richard Mayr's Leporello was a feast of good humour, though less in the sense of the Italian commedia dell' arte than in the vein of Polichinelle from the old Austrian marionette plays. Carl Hammes, a recruit to the Vienna company, was as convincing a Don Juan as may be found on the German-speaking stage to-day. Maria Németh's top notes, as Donna Anna, were always brilliant though not always beautiful, but her passiveness of acting was often alarming.

Koleman Pataky made the best of his slender possibilities as Don Ottavio, the ill-fated tenor puppet; Claire Born was in all a good Elvira; and Victor Madin (well known in London), a droll Masetto. Adele Kern gave a charming Zerlina, but Franz Markhoff, as the Commodore, was utterly insufficient.

'Fidelio' completed the operatic menu; still a fine performance, but not to be compared with the marvellous perfection of yore. Amid a largely altered cast, Lotte Lehmann's Leonore alone survived in all its old beauty and perfection. Her every tone and gesture were poetry and nobleness itself—her great namesake, Lilli, could not have been a more glorious heroine in her greatest days. Josef Manowarda replaced Mayr as Rocco, Ludwig Hoffmann and Wilhelm Rode alternately took the place of Alfred Jerger as Pizzarro, and Louise Helletsgruber could not efface memories of Elisabeth Schumann's admirable Marcelline. Again Schalk conducted, and won ovations, together with the marvellous Philharmonic Orchestra, after the 'Leonore' Overture No. 3, which is here and at Vienna (after Mahler's model) interpolated before the closing scene.

Max Reinhardt contributed—in absentia so to speak—his familiar production of 'Everyman' in Hugo von Hofmannsthal's German adaptation. A few new scenic effects, a trick added here and there, did not suffice to infuse new interest for those who had seen the time-honoured performance of this mystery play on nine consecutive occasions. To the unsophisticated, perhaps, this big-proportioned show is still an impressive affair, and Alexander Moissi's mechanically applied mannerisms a source of surprise and thrills. But the number of new-comers seems decreasing, judging by the visibly smaller 'Everyman' attendance this year.

CONCERTS

A larger portion of the programme was assigned to symphonic music than at the previous Festivals—a wise move, no doubt, since the language of pure music alone is sufficiently 'universal' for the visitors of all nations. With an orchestra so perfect as the Vienna Philharmonic at hand, the large number of symphonic concerts—nine in all—was a welcome part of the Festival schedule. The nine concerts were apportioned to seven conductors, who divided between themselves music of a wide scope. Franz Schalk chose Beethoven and Bruckner; Fritz Busch—Weber, Reger, and Brahms; Dohnányi—Mozart; Bernhard Paumgartner (Salzburg's own conductor)—the Russians; Clemens Krauss embraced the cause of Strauss in its two aspects—Richard the Brilliant and Johann the Charming; Hans Knappertsbusch adhered to no slogan in particular; and Paul Kerby (a British musician) gave an 'extra' concert with an international programme. To hear Straussian waltzes under Krauss was a rare pleasure; seldom will a match be achieved between a conductor and an orchestra equally 'born' for this music. The novelty of Knappertsbusch's programme was Clemens von Franckenstein's 'Dance Suite,' a delightful, well-worked, and splendidly-scored suite of variations on a Russian theme. Three soloists were heard in these concerts: Adele Kern with Johann Strauss numbers; Stefan Askenase as a brilliant performer of Prokofiev's third Pianoforte Concerto; and Madga Tegliafero, a Brazilian pianist from Paris, who came unknown and unheralded, and parted as an established artist of high rank after her excellent playing of the pianoforte part in de Falla's 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain.'

Three events somewhat misleadingly announced as 'chamber concerts' were, in two instances, pure song recitals: the concerts of Ethyl Hayden, an American soprano of vocal finish and notable linguistic gifts, and a recital of Donald Pirnie, an American basso, who created interest for several Scottish ballads. The Budapest String Quartet, with the collaboration of Dohnányi, gave an evening of Mozart's chamber music, playing with more of the proverbial Magyar vigour than true Mozart style. A number of open-air concerts (the annual Mozart Serenades under Bernhard Paumgartner) and several Church concerts lent further variety to the concert programme of the Festival. The latter served to introduce an ecclesiastical pseudo-novelty, the 'Stabat Mater' by Peter Cornelius, an early work from the composer's 'twenties, akin in idiom to his later opera (popular at Vienna, but hardly elsewhere), 'The Barber of Bagdad'—less esoteric, however, more operatic than that opera, and frequently succumbing to the allurements of Italian theatricalism.

Paul Bechert.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

After the protracted summer season at Berlin the autumn season is slow to begin. Concerts that in former years used to take place early in September have now been put off to the second half of the month. The three opera houses have been playing nightly since August, but with one exception nothing has been given that claims special notice.

This one exception was the first performance in the Municipal Opera House of Mark Lothar's opera 'Tyll,' which had been given at several other German centres. Lothar had already made himself known by a number of effective and interesting songs and some chamber music. He is not at all revolutionary in his tendencies, but rather intent on melody in the generally accepted sense of the term, and clean writing and sensible construction. Without being old-fashioned his music is of traditional essence, modern traits being added as a particular spice to the dish. These general characteristics are also to be observed in his first attempt at opera. 'Tyll' is by no means a masterpiece, but nevertheless it is a remarkable proof of talent.

The libretto, written (in rather too close an imitation of mediæval German) by a gifted young German poet, Hugo F. Königsgarten, draws on de Coster's splendid Flemish novel as well as on the old German popular Tyll stories. Though lacking in dramatic interest and concentration, it offers to the musician scenes of lyric intensity, and various picturesque, vivid, and interesting situations. But neither the poet nor the composer has convincingly expressed the human aspects of the complicated character of Tyll, in its mixture of juvenile roguery and humour with sarcasm, bitterness, and contempt of the world. Like Faust, Don Juan, and Don Quixote, Tyll Eulenspiegel is accessible only to an artist of mature and broad sympathy, and it was a rather rash attempt of these young men to choose so dangerous a subject. The music, it could hardly be doubted, will count as one of the unsuccessful attempts to deal with a subject which Richard Strauss seems to have exhausted for our age. In detail, however, Lothar's score contains many episodes of attractive and even fascinating character. The performance, prepared and conducted by Rudolf Denzler, was in many respects excellent, and Vargo's picturesque and humorous decorations contributed largely to the impression it made. The chief singers were Marguerite Perras, Joseph Burgwinkel, and the humorous Kandl. The public seemed well satisfied with the opera, and gave it a hearty welcome.

THE WOLFFHEIM LIBRARY

The sale by auction, at Berlin, of the celebrated musical library of Dr. Werner Wolffheim has been an event of international importance. The Wolffheim Library was perhaps the finest of all private collections. Before the war the Wolffheim mansion at Grunewald, near Berlin, attracted musicologists from all countries, and owing to the liberality and hospitality of its owner, it was much used for scientific research. The spacious building was specially designed for a library of music, the collection occupying by far the greater part of the house. After the war, the expense could no longer be maintained. For some years the collection was in the Berlin State Library, until in 1928 and 1929 it was sold in two sections. The second section, which was sold during the past summer, was of the greater interest, for it contained a vast collection of MS. music, autograph letters, original editions of 16th- and 17th-century vocal music, &c. Altogether there were about half a million works in the library.

A number of the most valuable copies were bought for America. The rarest and most valuable in the whole collection was bought by an American collector for eleven thousand marks. This was a parchment MS. Codex of the 11th century, from the Convent of Reichenau, containing four important Latin Treatises by Hermannus Contractus, Berno, Wilhelm of Hirsau, and Frutolf. Prof. Otto Kinkeldey had been sent to the auction by the New York Public Library; also Yale University, Rochester University, and the Eastman School of Music had sent special representatives with considerable funds. A number of important pieces went to England, but unfortunately detailed information as to the whereabouts of the single items could not be obtained. Ten thousand marks were paid by Messrs. Paul Gottschalk for the famous Petrucci print of 1504, known as the Odhecaton A, one of the rarest and costliest music-prints existing.

The Berlin State Library acquired a considerable number of valuable pieces, like the 'Codex Bakfark-Nauderus,' a manuscript lute-tablature written before 1600, and containing a vast number of original compositions and arrangements for the lute. The Berlin Library also became possessor of Berg & Neiber's precious edition of part-songs, printed at Nuremberg in 1550, of which only one other complete copy is known. A famous and extremely rare Petrucci print of 1515, the liber primus of Mouton's Masses, brought five thousand two hundred marks, whereas Monteverdi's celebrated eighth book of madrigals, the 'Madrigali guerrieri ed amorosi,' was sold rather cheaply for four hundred marks. In the department of French and Italian opera scores of the 17th and 18th centuries the Wolffheim library was practically unrivalled, and French collectors like Prunières and Legouix showed a particular interest in this section.

The catalogue of the Wolffheim library, comprising two big volumes of more than eight hundred and fifty pages, with its detailed descriptions of the single works and its numerous photographic reproductions of the finest pieces, testifies to the importance of the collection. It was compiled and published by the well-known Berlin antiquarian firms of Martin Breslauer and Leo Liepmannssohn, and is a valuable book of reference. Before the auction several attempts were made to preserve the Wolffheim collection in its totality for some German institution. Lack of funds, however, frustrated the plan, though the price demanded was considerably less than what actually came in at the auction.

Hugo Leichtentritt.

ITALY

MILAN

Almost the only event of importance, not to say interest, during the summer months was the inauguration of the new Amphitheatre at Erba, a small town which nestles right at the foot of the Alps, within easy distance either by road or rail of Milan. The new theatre is charmingly situated on a little eminence surrounded by trees, and commanding a wide view of the towns that stretch away into the plains below.

'Alcestis' was the first of the classic productions for which it was designed. Under the direction of the poet Ettore Romagnoli, Italy's foremost classic scholar and translator, with the collaboration of the Dal Verme teacher of rhythmic dancing, Jia Ruskaia, and her pupils, the production assumed the character of illusive unreality that contributed most to its success. There is no question that the greatest responsibility lay with the ballet dancers as opposed to the musicians or the actors, as the dancers had to sustain the movement that created the all-essential atmosphere.

Romagnoli's own 'Mystery of Persephone' had a very favourable reception on every hand. As in 'Alcestis,' the dances were of paramount importance, and the splendid results attained in the previous work were repeated in this.

At Verona there was the usual season in the Arena, with the usual operas. The only difference was that the scenery was scarcely fit for a seaside pierrot troupe. Another detail which tended to destroy the public confidence was the refusal of Gigli to appear, since, it would seem, it had rained in the afternoon. Also one of the maestri refused to conduct 'Marta' for him, on the ground that he took too many liberties with the score, and wished neither to recognise the rights of the dead composer or the living conductor. Without definitely knowing the points at issue, it is of course impossible to make comment either way, since there are in 'Marta' many inanities that are better skipped over. The precedent established at Rome in the Chaliapin-Bavagnoli affair is a two-edged sword, and, frankly speaking, the younger Italian maestri mostly suffer from swelled head. Generally speaking, however, the poor musicianship of Italian divi doesn't enhance the value of their claims.

Almost throughout the country, from the Alps to Sicily, there has been open-air opera. Always the same old operas; the costs are too heavy to put on modern works, and until he becomes a celebrity, the artist here doesn't learn new parts, for the simple reason that the possibility of playing them is nil.

Nearly all of these ventures turned out badly from the financial point of view, as this year the weather did not seem to be steadily fine until the middle of August. This month the Dal Verme season is to include only one at all unusual opera, 'Zaza.' The best singers billed to appear include a Welshman, a Canadian, and an Australian; but since they act unpatriotically, in my opinion at least, in calling themselves by Italian-sounding names, their actual identity need not be revealed. The fact that we are all aware of the prejudice against English-speaking singers should surely be an incentive for those whose talents—for kindness' sake we won't mention money—fit them to sing in the high places to proclaim their nationality.

Twenty-five operas are scheduled to be played at the San Carlo of Naples this year. Of this number two are absolute novelties: 'The Last Lord,' by Alfano, and 'The King's Daughter,' by Rualdi. 'Simon Boccanegia' and 'Oberon' are to be revived, and the remainder is a mixture of standard works, and works that have come out during the last five years but have not as yet been given at Naples.

C. d'If.

NEW YORK

One by one the musical 'stars' succumb to the lure of the radio and the dollars its advertisers offer. Thanks to the B.B.C., British readers can have little idea how thoroughly broadcasting in America has been taken over by the advertising profession, and no one who has not heard the programmes broadcast by our hundreds of stations can conceive how grotesque many of them are. Programme makers and advertisers here are almost unanimous in feeling that no product, from breakfast cereals to wire fences, can be advertised without the aid of music, and inasmuch as 'music' means to them a repertory of perhaps fifty weather-beaten favourites, one can never turn the dial of a receiver without hearing MacDowell's 'Wild Rose,' Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance,' Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker Suite,' and half-a-dozen other pieces of the same sort.

The General Electric Company, to which the enormous expense of broadcasting a symphony orchestra concert seems less than it can to most advertisers, this year sponsored (as the euphemism goes) a series of concerts under Walter Damrosch. A few of the great industrial and radio manufacturing concerns have made use at various times of most of the musical stars, their programmes, of course, usually well trimmed and pre-digested for the theoretical average listener. Against the tide one or two of the most popular musicians have stood out. Kreisler, it is said, abominates the radio and all its works. Stokowski, the leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has until now resisted the general current, but it is announced that the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company has prevailed upon him (for a doubtless not unimportant consideration) to conduct three concerts 'in the interest of' Philco products. It is, of course, really a matter for rejoicing when the very best musicians decide to occupy some of the air time that would otherwise do so much worse than go to waste. But the tactlessness and tastelessness of so much of the incidental commercialism is almost enough to take all the pleasure away. Damrosch, for example, had to cut a selection from 'Walküre' in the middle of its development one evening last season because the time it would have taken to finish it was paid for by another advertiser. The value of the 'good-will' which this latter had bought would seem to have been rather doubtful.

. . . . . .

Henry Hadley, a native born American conductor, announces the formation of a Manhattan Symphony Orchestral Society, with plans for thirty Sunday evening 'popular' programmes during the coming season. Opinions of Mr. Hadley differ. His own idea is that he, along with all native American talent, has been badly treated, and deserved a much higher rank than popular and critical opinion has accorded him. Fortunately, appeals to musical patriotism carry not too much weight here, and it is easy to answer Mr. Hadley: there are numerous American born musicians, with Anglo-Saxon names, who have had a very considerable success—Albert Spalding, Louise Homer, Geraldine Farrar, to mention a few. It appears that Mr. Hadley's programmes will be not only popular but patriotic as well, each containing one American work. Mr. Hadley has, in common with a few other zealots, the curious idea that it is befriending mediocre American composers to play their works in a city which on the whole knows bad music when it hears it, and which will hear just enough good music on each of his programmes to see this native growth for the insignificant imitation that it is. For I do not think it is rashly condemning before the fact to risk the prophecy that if there is any American music which is not insignificant imitation Mr. Hadley will not be likely to play it. On the whole, the Manhattan Symphony Orchestral Society seems hardly destined to fill the place which undoubtedly exists for a second orchestra—a sort of official opposition.

Neither does the Symphonic Ensemble, the conductorless orchestra; but if, at least, is a novel and stimulating experiment, and if its communistic performances sometimes lack distinction they rarely lack vitality. It is more than surprising, and very heartening, that in the home of prima-donna conductors it should have survived an entire season and be preparing already without the box-office assistance of a great name or a magnetic personality, to tempt the fates again. There is no denying that one often misses just the dynamic unity that only a great conductor can give, but it is equally true that one is pleasantly free from the extra-musical sensationalism which permeates most orchestral activities here. At the moment, of course, one is altogether free from the activities themselves, sensational or otherwise—whether 'pleasantly,' or not, the final weeks of the Stadium season have left most of us in no condition to state!

Arthur Mendel.

We frequently receive inquiries concerning musical clubs in London. The 1927 Music Club, started two years ago, seems to be the kind of institution calculated to meet the needs of both amateurs and professionals. The subscription is 15*s.*; and there are fortnightly meetings and musical evenings. The hon. secretary is Miss Christian Hedley, The Hopps, Horley, Surrey.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Lucy Broadwood. At the beginning of this year Lucy E. Broadwood was elected to the office of President of the Folk-Song Society in succession to the late Lord Tennyson. She lived only six months to grace the office and enjoy the honour. By her sudden death at the Canterbury Music Festival, on August 22, the Folk-Song Society loses the invaluable services of one who was active in its foundation, and was for many years its honorary secretary and the editor-in-chief of its journal. Miss Broadwood became secretary in 1902, and resigned the editorship as recently as 1926. Her devotion to the Society, however, did not end with her resignation of the editorship, as she continued to serve on the committee, provided a number of annotations to the 1927 Journal, and contributed in 1928 a charming article on two early examples of the use of sea-shanties in the Mediterranean. Miss Broadwood's interest in folk-song was originally derived from her uncle, the Rev. John Broadwood, rector of a Sussex village, in which as long ago as the 'forties of last century he collected the rural songs which the villagers sang at festive times. She was herself an accomplished pianist, singer, and composer, and by no means limited her musical interests to folk-song. Her inventive gifts found expression in the felicitous pianoforte accompaniments that she wrote for her contributions to 'English Country Songs,' which she edited jointly with Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland. This well-known collection, one of the most generally useful ever made, was published in 1893; it was one of the first hints of the new interest then beginning to be shown in our national folk-music, and it helped to foster the movement. In 1908 Miss Broadwood published a volume of songs collected, edited, and arranged by herself, under the title 'English Traditional Songs and Carols.' Miss Broadwood possessed an immense amount of varied antiquarian learning, including a knowledge of early printed ballads and broad-sheets. She thus combined in herself the two parallel streams of English traditional music—the written and the oral. As an editor she was scrupulously accurate, systematic, and lynx-eyed, with the result that the Journals of the Folk-Song Society are models of erudition and order. F. H.

Frederic E. Weatherly, at Bath, on September 7, within a few days of his eighty-first birthday. He wrote the words of nearly three thousand songs, about half of which were set to music and published. The best of these will long be remembered, e.g., 'Nancy Lee,' 'They all love Jack,' 'Up from Somerset,' and many others. He had a real gift for turning out neat verses embodying simple, homely sentiment, and many of his best songs were, in fact, superior to the music to which they were set. He was no less successful in adapting opera libretti, and was also the author of two works of logic and a number of books for children.

Helen Matilda, Dowager Countess of Radnor, at her residence near Ascot, on September 11, in her eighty-fourth year. She was a gifted musician, and early in life, when she was Lady Folkestone, founded an amateur orchestra which was the means of raising large sums of money for various charitable institutions. The orchestra, which at one time had a membership of a hundred and seventy, gave its last performance at the old St. James's Hall about thirty years ago. In addition to her abilities in this direction the Countess was an excellent pianist and a good singer. A well-known String Suite of Parry's was dedicated to her.

Charles Major Anderson, at Forest Hill, on August 9, aged eighty-one. He was a pupil of Stainer, and held several London church appointments, some of them being honorary. He also did much choir work, and was, we believe, the oldest member of St. Paul's Cathedral Special Choir. He was a man of many gifts and hobbies, being among other things an accomplished landscape painter and book-binder.

Mary Layton, in her eightieth year. She was the first woman to gain the F.R.C.O. diploma (1872). Among other organ posts she held those of Westminster Chapel and Westbourne Park Church. She was a distinguished trainer and conductor of women's choirs, and also an excellent teacher of singing. Her interests were by no means confined to music, however, and she played a prominent part in political and social life, especially in movements that aimed at improving the status of women.

Francois Bouriello, aged sixty-three. He was a native of Algiers, a friend of Saint-Saëns, and a composer, his works including a Suite of 'Studies on the Jungle Book of Kipling.' He met with little popular success, however, and died practically penniless.

William Griffith, at Leicester, on August 21. He had held the post of organist and choirmaster at St. Sepulchre's, Northampton, after filling several similar appointments in Scotland. He was Mus. Bac. Durham, F.R.C.O., and L.Mus.T.C.L.

Meta Seinemeyer, a leading soprano of the Dresden opera, on August 19, aged thirty-four. Her recent success at Covent Garden as Elsa and Seiglinde will be remembered; she had been re-engaged for next year.

Stephen Kerner, on August 26, aged sixty-two. He was for many years musical director of the Royal Hungarian Opera House at Budapest, and was a successful composer of ballets.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Arts in Revolt. By Rutland Boughton	881
The Deeper Quality of Music. By A. E. F. Dickinson	883
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	884
A London Musician looks at Iowa	886
Stages in the History of Opera: III.—Handelian Opera. By Dyneley Hussey	888
Respect for Rhythm. By Maurice Cauchie	890
Serge Diaghilev. By Edwin Evans	892
Worcester Musical Festival. By Herbert Thompson	894
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	896
The Musicians' Bookshelf	897
New Music	900
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	903
Player-Piano Notes	905
Occasional Notes	906
Teachers' Department: The Associated Board Pianoforte Examinations for 1930. By Ernest Fowles; Reviews; Answers to Correspondents	907-911
Church and Organ Music	919
Incorporated Association of Organists: Congress at Hull. By W. A. Roberts	919
Letters to the Editor	922
The Amateurs' Exchange	929
Royal Academy of Music	929
Music in Public Schools	930
Sixty Years Ago	931
London Concerts	931
Canterbury Festival	932
Haslemere Festival of Chamber Music	932
Music in Manchester	933
The Coming Season	934
Annibal Gantez: A Merry Musician. By J. A. Westrup	937
Music in Scotland	939
The Salzburg Festival	940
Musical Notes from Abroad	941
Obituary	943
MUSIC.
'While Shepherds Watched their Flocks by Night.' Anthem for Christmas. By Eric H. Thiman	913
EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS given with this number: 'There's nae luck about the house.' Scottish Air. Arr. with Descant by Geoffrey Shaw.
'The lee shore.' Four-part Song for Men's Voices. By S. Coleridge-Taylor

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every Additional Line	0	0	10
One Inch (Displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

To insure insertion in their proper positions Advts. for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour St., London, W.1, not later than

TUESDAY, October 22, 1929

All applications for Advertisement space should be made to the Sole Advertisement Agents, Roy Hardy, Ltd., 49, Chancery Lane, W.C.2. Telephone: Holborn 2321-2. Rate Card on application.

DURING THE LAST MONTH

Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited

Bach, J. S.—O Praise the Lord (Air from Cantata No. 28). Arranged as an Anthem for S.S.A. by W. Rigby. (No. 529, Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

Francis, G. T.—Choral Improvisation on "Hanover" for Organ. 1s.

—— "Come unto Me." For boys (or Female) voices, or for a single voice. 3d.

—— Pater Noster. 2d.

Greenhill, H.—"Springtime in the forest." Six pieces for pianoforte. 2s. 6d.

James, W.—"O Lord, support us." Anthem. 3d.

Jones, H. W.—Ave Verum. Motet for five voices. (Unaccompanied.) Latin and English words 3d.

Jones, T. Armon.—"Almost persuaded." Recitative and Hymn. 3d.

—— "Sinners' friend." Hymn. (English and Welsh words.) 3d.

Music for Cinema Orchestras—

Elgar, Edward.—"The Wand of Youth" (Music to a child's play), 1st Suite. For Full and Small Orchestras. With two Piano copies in each set.

		Full Orch.	Small Orch.
No. 2.	Serenade	5s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
,, 3.	Minuet (Old Style)	4s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
,, 5.	Fairy Pipers	4s. 0d.	3s. 6d
,, 6.	Slumber Scene	4s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
,, 7.	Fairies and Giants	7s. 6d.	5s. 0d.

Extra Orchestral parts to the above, price 6d. each.

Purcell, Henry.—"The Fairy Queen." An Opera (Choruses only). 2s.

—— Fifteen Songs. Edited and arranged by Arthur Somervell. 4s. For contents, see page 959.

Rutter, J. A. P.—Three sets of Chants for use with the Canticles. 2d.

School Music Review, No. 448, contains the following music in both notations: "River Song." (Unison Song). W. L. Smoldon. 2d.

School Songs.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 318. "Tell me where is Fancy bred."
Cecil Sharman — 2d.

No. 1470. "It comes from the misty ages."
Unison Song. Edward Elgar.— 3d.

Stanford, C. V.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in B flat. A Unison part for men's voices arranged for use with original edition by C. S. Lang. 3d.

Thiman, Eric H.—"While shepherds watched their flocks by night." Anthem for Christmas. (No. 1040, The Musical Times.) 3d.

Tonic Sol-fa Publications:

Handel, G. F.—"Solomon." An Oratorio, Choruses only. 2s.

Tonic Sol-fa Series:

No. 2581. "There is a lady sweet and kind."
Four-part song.
Eric H. Thiman. 3d.

Published for

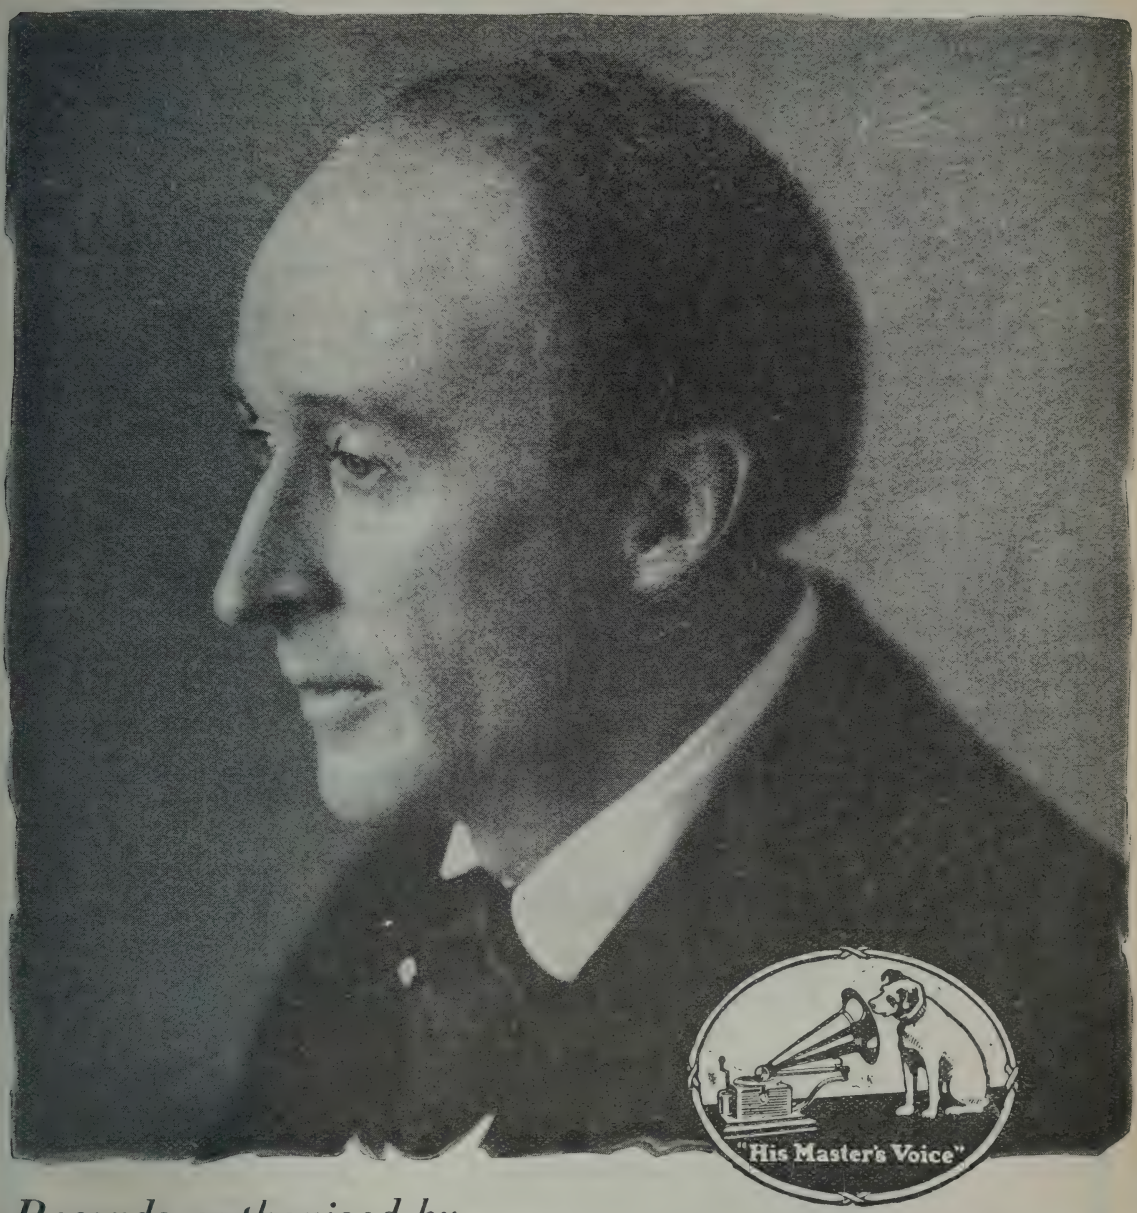
THE H. W. GRAY CO., New York

Archer, J. Stuart.—Scherzetto, for Organ. (No. 478, St. Cecilia Series.) 75 cents (3s.).

Bivona, A. M. H.—Barcarolle, for Organ. (No. 479, St. Cecilia Series.) 75 cents (3s.).

Glynn, F.—Evening Calm, for Organ (No. 481. St. Cecilia Series.) 75 cents (3s.).

Voris, W. R.—Caprice, for Organ (No. 484. St. Cecilia Series.) 75 cents (3s.).



Records authorised by

DELIUS

To The Gramophone Co., Ltd.

Dear Sir,—The records have arrived and I have heard them all several times. They are most satisfactory. Mr. Toye has thoroughly understood the works and he has given a most poetical rendering. All three, "Brigg Fair," Summer Garden" and "On hearing the Cuckoo" are excellent, and I shall be glad to have them sold as authorised by me. I am very grateful to you, and remain, with best thanks.

Yours sincerely,

Frederick Delius

Your dealer will gladly give you particulars of the "Works" of Delius recorded by "His Master's Voice."

EXPERIENCED ALTO WANTED immediately—All Saints', Highgate. Sight-reader essential. Sundays 11 (Choral Eucharist) and 6.30. Friday rehearsal. Salary £20. Apply, P. S. Crawley, "Henham," Wentworth Road, Barnet.

AN ALTO AND DEPUTY TENOR are required immediately by the Tudor Singers. Good reading essential. Applications should be addressed to Cuthbert Bates, 32, Marius Road, S.W.17.

YOUNG SINGERS

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice-production, enunciation, and singing to boys and girls.

By JAMES BATES

To be obtained from:
Messrs. Stainer & Bell, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.

Price One Shilling and Twopence, post free.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

BAND PARTS MAY BE HIRED

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES

Unison and Part Songs. Church and Instrumental music.

FULL CATALOGUE Post Free ON APPLICATION

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS, LTD., 31 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

13

CHORALES

From the

Church Cantatas and Motets

Of

J. S. BACH

THIS Collection of Chorales is made with a view to various purposes. Primarily they may be used as short unaccompanied Motets or Anthems, or as choral items in an Organ Recital, especially in conjunction with Chorale Preludes on the tunes sung. The tunes themselves may serve as alternative settings to well-known hymns for special occasions.

Price, paper cover,
ONE SHILLING

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

Twelve Introits or Short Anthems

—SET TWO—

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	Jacques Arcadelt
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS ...	Philip Armes
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD...	Hugh Blair
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT ...	Thomas Ford
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	Alfred R. Gaul
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY...	Alan Gray
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. Gore Ouseley
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	Palestrina
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	John Stainer
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE ...	Arthur S. Sullivan
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	Christopher Tye
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. Wesley

PRICE ONE SHILLING

EACH INTROIT MAY BE HAD SEPARATELY

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CANTATAS for CHRISTMAS

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS

Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS
With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation
(The Words and Hymns Selected)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS

Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings
Boards, 4*s.*; Cloth, 6*s.*
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each
Parts 1 and 2, 1*s.* 6*d.*; Parts 3 and 4, 1*s.* 6*d.*; Parts 5 and 6, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Tonic Sol-fa, Parts 1 and 2, 8*d.*; Parts 3 and 4, 1*s.*
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12*s.* 6*d.*
Book of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6*s.* 6*d.*

† CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)
A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)
Edited by J. E. WEST English Words by C. AVELING

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH

Price One Shilling and Sixpence

† BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN
(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY
C. ROSSETTI

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE

Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY
H. M. BURNSIDE

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 6*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON

Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Words only, 6*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY
S. J. STONE

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS
Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
E. C. NUNN

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER

Price Three Shillings
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE WORDS BY
S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

YORK SERIES

916.	SURELY HE HATH BORNE	Smith-Palestrina	2d.
922.	BEHOLD AND SEE ...	Smith-Palestrina	2½d.
958.	THY REBUKE HATH BROKEN	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
977.	HOLY, HOLY	Smith-Palestrina	3d.
1000.	JESU, GRANT ME THIS ...	Gibbons-Bairstow	2½d.
1009.	WILL GOD IN VERY DEED?	Chas. L. Naylor	6d.

BANKS & SON, YORK

VESPER
(SAVE US, O LORD, WAKING)

T. E. P. ATTEWELL

CUCKFIELD, SUSSEX

Price One Penny. On Card, Twopence

JUST PUBLISHED

ANTHEM

O LORD, MY GOD

BY

CHARLES A. SALT

F.R.C.O.

PRICE TWOPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use,"—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c.

Popular Church Music by J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS
Anthem—Christians, Awake...	4d.	3d.
Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D ...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Year Book Press Series

*NEW ITEMS NOW READY

NO.	TITLE	COMPOSER	PRICE
319	The Trees in England ...	Charles Wood	U. 3d.
320	To-day	E. T. Chapman	U. 3d.
321	Sleep, my Baby	Charles Wood	U. 3d.
322	The Dandelion	H. G. Ley	U. 3d.
323	Merry, merry Sparrow ...	H. M. Grieveson	2-PT. 3d.
324	A May Song	C. H. Kitson	2-PT. 4d.
325	A Cradle Song	E. T. Chapman	2-PT. 3d.
326	Old Evening Prayer ...	H. M. Grieveson	3-PT. 3d.
327	Barbara Allan	P. Tomblings	S.A.T.B. 6d.
328	Music when soft voices die	G. Leeds	,, 4d.
329	A Shepherd's Roundelay	E. L. Bainton	,, 4d.
330	Hence away, begone ...	Charles Wood	,, 4d.
A60	Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	E. R. Daymond	S.S.A. 4d.
A61	The Way, The Truth, The Life	J. B. Johnson	U. 3d.
A62	Father All-Holy	Charles Wood	S.A.T.B. 4d.
A63	O be joyful in the Lord ...	Charles Wood	,, 4d.
A64	How dazzling fair	Charles Wood	,, 4d.

STANDARD PUBLICATIONS

*Kikirikee. 34 Unison Songs for children ... 3/- postage 4d.
*Kookoorookoo. 26 Unison Songs for children 2/6 postage 2d.
A Little Organ Book. 12 Voluntaries. 6/6, 10/6 postage 6d.
Free Accompaniment of Unison Hymn Singing 7/6 postage 6d.
*Two Hundred Tunes for Sight Singing ... 2/6 postage 3d.

 On approval, post free, from:*

H. F. W. DEANE AND SONS The Year Book Press, Ltd.,
31, Museum Street, LONDON, W.C.1.

TWO NEW WORKS
By ETHEL HOME
Headmistress of Kensington High School

MUSICAL APPRECIATION
Practical Class Lessons
PRICE - TWO SHILLINGS NET
AND TRANSPOSITION
A text-book for beginners
PRICE - - TWO SHILLINGS NET

TEN DESCANTS
Written to National Songs by ARTHUR SOMERVELL
Price, 1/- net; also published separately at 3d. each.

At the mid hour of Night	Flow gently, sweet Afton
Avenging and bright	On Richmond Hill
Dove (The)	Rising of the Lark
Dulce Domum	Silent, O Moyle
Farewell, Manchester	We be three poor Mariners

CHRISTMAS
A Sacred Cantata by ARTHUR SOMERVELL

Vocal Score - Price 2/6 net
Libretto - ,, 7/6 per 100

Copies for inspection will be forwarded to Organists and Choirmasters upon application to the Publishers.

BOOSEY & CO., LIMITED
295, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1

A MUCH APPRECIATED OFFER TO MUSICIANS

GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

IS NOW OBTAINABLE FOR A FIRST PAYMENT OF ONLY 7/6

Hundreds of musicians who realise the great utility of this work are now enrolled as subscribers under out payment-out-of-income system.

NEW (THIRD) EDITION in

5 VOLUMES

handsomely bound in cloth or Half Morocco.

Over 4,000 Pages.

96 full-page illustrations (24 in colour).

MENDELSSOHN
(From one of the many fine illustrations in "Grove.")

A NOTABLE TRIBUTE:

"I had, of course, seen the unanimous praise that the press has given to the new edition, but I was delighted to find how really good it is. You should be thanked by all who value the fine things of life, for placing this most excellent work within their reach."

A Bath Subscriber.

SOME OF THE NEW ARTICLES INDICATING THE RANGE BOTH OF SUBJECT AND CONTRIBUTOR

ANTHEM, by Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.
BACH, by Prof. Sanford Terry, Mus. Doc., Aberdeen University.
BALLET DANCING, by D. L. Murray.
BELLS, by W. W. Starmer.
BRAILLE NOTATION, by Ed. Watson, Secretary, Music Department, National Institute for the Blind.
BYZANTINE MUSIC, by Prof. H. J. W. Tillyard, Birmingham University.
COPYRIGHT, by G. Herbert Thring.
DEBUSSY, by Dr. Ernest Walker.
DEGREES IN MUSIC (American), by Prof. W. R. Spalding, Harvard University.
DVOŘÁK, by Dr. Otakar Šourek, of Prague.
ELGAR, by the Editor.
FRANCK, by Harvey Grace.
HANDEL, by Scott Goddard.
HARMONY, by Dr. George Dyson.
HOLST, by Edwin Evans.
INDIAN MUSIC, by A. H. Fox-Strangways.
MADRIGAL, by Prof. E. J. Dent, of Cambridge University.
MASS (Mediæval), by the Bishop of Truro, D.D., C.R.
ORCHESTRATION, by William Wallace.
ORGAN - PLAYING, by Prof. P. C. Buck, Mus. Doc., London University.
STRAUSS, by A. Kalisch.
STRAVINSKY, by Eric Blom.
SYMPHONY (Modern Developments), by Richard Aldrich, New York.
THOROUGHBASS, by F. T. Arnold.

Exhaustive and thoroughly up-to-date information on every aspect of music and musicians.

To the GLOBE PUBLISHING CO., LTD.,
112, Strand, London, W.C.2
(Use unsealed envelope, ½d. stamp)

Please send me Prospectus of the New Grove's Dictionary of Music, with full particulars of payment-out-of-income, and discount for cash.

Name.....

Address.....

M.T.2 .....

POST THIS COUPON

TO-DAY FOR FREE ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

OXFORD MUSIC

NEW PUBLICATIONS

FOR ORGAN

NOEL PONSONBY. Five Fancies - - 2*s.* 6*d.*

HANDEL, arranged by E. Stanley Roper.
Organ Concerto No. 3 (First Set), in G minor.
First Movement - - - - - - 2*s.*
Third and Fourth Movements - 2*s.*
(Performed at the Promenade Concerts, August 28)

Organ Concerto No. 4 (First Set), in F major.
Third and Fourth Movements - 2*s.*

CHURCH MUSIC

THE SOWER

A HARVEST CANTATA

By HAROLD DARKE

The words selected from Biblical and other sources
By CLAUDE AVELING

Dr. Harold Darke has written a work for which Church musicians have long waited—a festival Cantata for Harvest Thanksgiving services and other occasions. It is a straightforward dignified work, simple, but with fine choral writing, not too much solo work (for soprano, tenor, alto, and baritone), and ending with a hymn for congregation and choir together—the well-known "Lasst uns Erfreuen." The Sower is of the best school of English Church Music; effective in any church: the text suitable both for the special occasion of Harvest and at other times: it will no doubt become a standard work all over the country.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.

Chorus parts (Staff and Sol-fa together), 1*s.*

Words only, 2*d.* net, 1*s.* 9*d.* net per dozen, 10*s.* net per 100

Two Choruses from the above:
Rejoice in the Lord - - - - - - 3*d.*
Praise Him in His noble acts - - - 3*d.*

Edited by C. KENNEDY SCOTT.
Bach's Motet. Sing ye to the Lord - 2*s.*

ALEC ROWLEY. Four Plainsong settings of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis - 1*s.*

ERNEST BULLOCK. Te Deum (composed for the Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of His Majesty The King) - 6*d.*

J. H. ARNOLD. A Simple Mass - - - 9*d.*

ORCHESTRAL AND INSTRUMENTAL

VIVALDI. Edited by Dr. A. Mistowski and André Mangeot. Concerto in G minor, for strings. (Oxford Orchestral Series, 077).
Score, 5*s.* Parts, 10*d.*—1*s.* 6*d.* each.

ARTHUR BENJAMIN. Five Negro Spirituals, arranged for Violin (or Cello) and Pianoforte - - - - - - 3*s.* 6*d.* each.

LEONARDO VINCI. Arranged by W. G. Whittaker. Sonata for Flute (or Violin) and Pianoforte - - - 3*s.* 6*d.*

FOR CHORAL SOCIETIES AND SCHOOLS

THE CLARENDON SONG BOOKS.

This series, to be completed in six books, of which the first is now published, is issued under the joint editorship of Dr. W. G. Whittaker, Herbert Wiseman, and John Wishart. Its aim is to provide within single covers examples of all types of Songs especially suitable for Schools, Institutes, and Social Clubs.

Book I contains Nursery Rhymes, Folk-Songs, Classical and Modern Unison Songs, Rounds and Canons.

The following editions of Book I are now published:—

Pianoforte, 2*s.* 6*d.*: or linen boards, 3*s.*
Melody (Staff), 6*d.*: or linen boards, 8*d.*
Sol-fa, 6*d.*; or linen boards, 8*d.*

Sir ARTHUR SOMERVELL. Four-part Sight Tests

These tests, which are approved by the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, are issued in three books. Book I contains 24 easy pieces without words: Books II and III each contain 12 rather more difficult settings of well-known poems.

1*s.* 3*d.* each book.

A LITTLE SONG BOOK OF THE NATIONS 1*s.* 6*d.*
Words only, 1½*d.*

With a foreword by Lord Hugh Cecil

This book has been published for the League of Nations Union to supply the need for a concise collection of songs from all countries, suitable for massed singing.

SOLO SONGS

Arranged by SIR HAMILTON HARTY
Three Irish Folk-Songs - - - - 3*s.* 6*d.*

W. ARUNDEL ORCHARD.
Three Troubadour Songs - - - 2*s.* each or complete, 3*s.* 6*d.*

HUBERT J. FOSS
Castlepatrick (G. K. Chesterton) - - 2*s.*

ROBIN MILFORD
Four Miniature Songs - - - - - 2*s.* 6*d.*
Two Songs and an Interlude (for pianoforte) from Goldsmith - - - 2*s.* each Old Age (Edmund Waller) - - - - 2*s.*

Edited by W. G. WHITTAKER
The Oxford Series of Bach Arias, selected from the Cantatas. Twenty-two numbers now published - 1*s.* each.

JOHN GOSS

AN ANTHOLOGY OF SONG

FIFTY SONGS FOR 5s.

net, in paper. Cloth boards, 8*s.* 6*d.* net.
Undoubtedly the best and cheapest volume of its kind yet published. Full list of contents on application

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W.1

COMPOSITIONS BY

WALFORD DAVIES

Published by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

(See List in September Issue)

5. MISCELLANEOUS CHURCH MUSIC.

	s.	d.
SHORT REQUIEM IN D	0	8
FOUR HYMNS	0	4
The Spacious Firmament
Lord, it is evening
Join all the glorious names
O God, our help in ages past
THE SPACIOUS FIRMAMENT (from the above)	0	2
MINE EYES HAVE SEEN THE GLORY (American Battle Hymn)	0	2
NOW THE LABOURER'S TASK IS O'ER (Hymn). Demy 8vo	0	2
SONGS FOR CHURCH AND HOME (S.A.T.B.):
Blessed are the pure in heart (Keble)	0	4
God be in my head (from an Old Primer)	0	4
Hark! the glad sound (Dr. Doddridge)	0	4
I believe in God (Creed-Processional)	0	4
A PSALM OF THANKSGIVING (for the King's Recovery)	0	2

6. CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

AS WITH GLADNESS MEN OF OLD	0	3
THE BLESSED BIRTH (George Wither)	0	3
Also arranged for equal voices	0	3
THE HOLLY AND THE IVY (Traditional Carol) Demy 4to	0	3
THREE CAROLS (Men's Voices). Miniature Edition	0	3
SACRED LULLABIES (Complete)	3	0
A Sacred Cradle Song — O Little Town of Bethlehem
A Rocking Hymn — As Joseph was a-walking
The Guest Divine — Infant Joy
The Ship — Prayers
Separate numbers from the above—
A Sacred Cradle Song (Isaac Watts)	0	6
O Little Town of Bethlehem	0	6
Ditto, Vocal parts only. Dual Notation	0	2
A Rocking Hymn	0	6
The Ship	0	6
Infant Joy	0	6

7. SCHOOL MUSIC.

HUMPTY DUMPTY. Cantata. Words selected from "Alice in Wonderland"	2	6
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	1	0
First Chorus from the above. Staff Notation	0	4
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	3
A MERRY HEART and other Songs and Part-Songs, Vocal Score with Pianoforte Accompaniment	2	6
Ditto, Vocal Parts only: Dual Notation	1	0
Separate numbers from the above—
All things bright and beautiful (S.S.A.). Vocal parts, Dual Notation	0	3
Blow, wind, blow (S.S.A.). Vocal parts. Dual Notation	0	3
The Daisies. Song, with Pianoforte Accompaniment	0	6
The Fountain. Two-part Song	0	4
What Became of Them? (or, The Rats). Unison Song. Vocal part	0	2
Ditto, with Pianoforte Accompaniment	0	3
GRACE FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN (Card)	0	2
ALL THINGS BRIGHT AND BEAUTIFUL. Hymn for Children, with accompaniment for strings ad lib.	0	2

8. MUSIC FOR EQUAL VOICES.

THE BLESSED BIRTH (for Christmas or Epiphany)	0	3
GOD BE IN MY HEAD (Card) Ditto	0	2
FOUR SONGS OF INNOCENCE (Complete)	1	0
1. Little Lamb, Who made thee? 3. Infant Joy
2. Cradle Song 4. The Shepherd
Also published separately—
Nos. 1, 2, and 4. Price, 4d. each. No. 3, 3d.
THE CLOUD (S.S.A.)	0	6
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	4
THE SKY IS FULL OF CLOUDS (S.S.A.)	0	6

9. CHAMBER MUSIC.

	s.	d.
SONATA FOR PIANOFORTE AND VIOLIN, in E minor (No. 1)	2	6
SONATA FOR PIANOFORTE AND VIOLIN, in D minor (No. 2)	2	6
PROSPICE (Robert Browning). Quintet for Baritone Voice and Strings (Complete)	3	0
SIX PASTORALS. For Four Voices, Four Strings, and Pianoforte. Score	3	0
String parts. Each	1	6
SOLEMN MELODY. (Composed for the Milton Tercentenary)
Strings and Organ: Full Score	3	0
Strings and Organ: Set of Parts	2	4
Full Orchestra: Full Score	4	6
Full Orchestra: Set of Parts	6	8
Brass: Set of Parts	3	0
Band: Separate Parts (Arr. by J. Ord-Hume) each	0	2
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Violoncello and Pianoforte	2	0
Organ Solo	2	0

10. SONGS.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD. For Tenor Voice, Violin and Harp, or Piano	2	0
HYMN BEFORE ACTION	2	0
A SONG OF INNOCENCE (Blake)	2	0
THE PRAISE OF SISTER DEATH. Duet for Tenor and Bass. (From "The Song of St. Francis")	1	0
THE LOWLANDS O' HOLLAND	2	0
THE FAREWELL	2	0
THE CLOWN'S SONGS IN "TWELFTH NIGHT"	2	0
TWO LOVE SONGS: "O a' the airts," and "Mally" (Burns)	2	0
YE JACOBITES BY NAME	2	0
AN UNCOUTH LOVE SONG (George Wither). With separate Vocal part	2	0
FEAR NO MORE THE HEAT OF THE SUN (Shakespeare). With separate Vocal part	2	0
FOR A' THAT (Burns). With separate Vocal part	2	0
FOUR SONGS: There is a Ladye; Wander-Thirst; A Lift on the Way; The Night Watch	2	0

11. PART SONGS.

ENGLAND'S PLEASANT LAND. Three Part-Songs for S.A.T.B.	1	0
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	8
Separate numbers from the above:
Green Fields of England	0	3
O England, model to thy inward greatness	0	3
FAIR AND FAIR. Op. 40, No. 1	0	4
SING HIS PRAISES. Op. 40, No. 2	0	4
SHE IS NOT FAIR TO OUTWARD VIEW. Op. 40, No. 3	0	4
THE SEVEN VIRGINS (Carol). Op. 40, No. 4	0	4
LOVE IS A TORMENT and LOVE'S TRANQUILLITY. Op. 41, Nos. 1 and 2	0	6
LOVE'S TRANQUILLITY. Op. 41, No. 2	0	4
MAGDALEN AT MICHAEL'S GATE. Op. 41, No. 3	0	4
THESE SWEETER FAR THAN LILIES ARE. S.A.T.B. and Four Soloists. Op. 39	0	6
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	4
THE REPLY OF PATIENCE (Milton)	0	4
WEEP YE NO MORE, SAD FOUNTAINS. (Old Madrigal—modern setting)	0	4
A SONG OF REST (S.A.T.B.)	0	3
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	1½

12. MUSIC FOR MEN'S VOICES.

TWENTY-FIVE SONGS, OLD AND NEW, arranged for Men's Voices	1	3
Separate Numbers from the above—
Arm thee (Mary Coleridge)	0	3
Bay of Biscay and Cloud-capt Towers	0	3
Breathe soft, ye winds	0	2
Three Carols (Miniature Edition)	0	3
THIRTY-EIGHT SONGS FOR CAMP CONCERTS	1	0
DOMINUS ILLUMINATIO MEA. Op. 38. (T.T.B.B.B.)	0	6
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	4
HYMN BEFORE ACTION	0	4
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	0	2
STORM JOY	0	4
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa, with English and Welsh words	0	3
THE STURDY ROCK. (A.T.T.B.B.B.). Composed for the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society	0	4

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

WORKS BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

With Analyses from WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS

Price - Five Shillings

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says: "Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY

THIRD EDITION

Price - Five Shillings

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2*s.* Words only, 12*s.* 6*d.* per 100

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS	2	6
ANTHEM: I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	3
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ...	0	3
SIX HYMN-TUNES AND CAROLS WITH DESCANTS	1	0
THE SNOW LIES WHITE. Song	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Johann Sebastian Bach

HIS WORK AND INFLUENCE ON THE MUSIC OF GERMANY 1685-1750

By

PHILIPP SPITTA

Translated from the German by

CLARA BELL
and
J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND

—

THREE VOLUMES
Price Two Guineas net

—

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Unique Service for the Musical Public

Including Lectures on Music and Demonstrations of New and Classical Music is to be provided in

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPARTMENT

after mid-October, when it has been Re-organized and Enlarged.

You are invited to visit the Department, and to take advantage of the various features of the service provided. If unable to make a visit write outlining your requirements and inquiries.

119, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2. 'Phone: Gerrard 9310 (5 lines).

BEETHOVEN

AND HIS

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY

GEORGE GROVE

Price, cloth, gilt, Nine Shillings net

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

IN TONIC SOL-FA NOTATION

SOLOMON

AN ORATORIO

By G. F. HANDEL

Choruses only

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY

NÄNIE (SCHILLER)

SET TO MUSIC

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

By JOHANNES BRAHMS

ENGLISH VERSION BY LUCIA YOUNG

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTING

BY

ADAM CARSE, F.R.A.M.

A Textbook for Students and Amateurs

I. The Technique of Conducting.

II. The Instruments of the Orchestra.

III. History of Conducting; Vocabulary of Orchestral Terms; Bibliography.

iv + 100 Pages, Cloth.

5/- net.

Augener, Ltd.

18, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

Favourite Operas

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE

BALFE

*The Bohemian Girl - - - - Price 3s.

BIZET

*Carmen - - Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.

DONIZETTI

*The Daughter of the Regiment - Price 3s.

FLOTOW

*Martha - - - - - Price 3s.

GOUNOD

*Faust - - Price 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

PURCELL

King Arthur - - - - Price 2s. 6d.

VERDI

*Il Trovatore - Price 3s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER

Tannhäuser - - - - Price 3s.

WALLACE

Maritana - - - - - Price 3s.

* Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

LIE STREWN THE WHITE FLOCKS

PASTORAL

For Chorus, (Mezzo-Soprano Solo), Solo Flute, Drums, and String Orchestra.

The Poems selected from the Works of Ben Jonson, John Fletcher, Poliziano, Theocritus, and Robert Nichols.

By ARTHUR BLISS

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

PRESS NOTICES:

Observer.—"The new Bliss work has a great deal that is beautiful to listen to, and some interesting modernities for singers and players to compass. The linking-up of poems from different literary periods with instrumental movements is successful, and the whole work hangs properly together. It must be heard again soon."

Manchester Guardian.—"It was worth while missing the second act of 'The Mastersingers' in order to hear Arthur Bliss's new 'Pastoral' produced by the Harold Brooke Choir at the Bishopsgate Institute. The great compliment implied is by no means an exaggeration. Mr. Bliss is not a feverishly productive composer, but when he does bring out a new work nowadays one may be certain to find it interesting and hardly less sure to enjoy it. Last night these high expectations were more than justified, for the 'Pastoral' at once impressed itself on one's mind as the most refreshingly spontaneous and individually conceived musical novelty one has heard for some time. . . The whole text is a little bucolic anthology chosen with exquisite taste and . . . admirably unified by the music. The scoring . . . is like a fastidiously chosen and exactly appropriate binding. . . . It is possible to complain that in the declamatory sense the words are not entirely well set. In the wider poetical sense they could not have been treated more imaginatively or with greater charm and quickly responsive inventiveness. . . . The performance . . . usefully showed that an efficient small choir and a few players for the string parts are quite enough to do justice to this wholly delightful work."

The Times.—"There is a strength, a melodic beauty, and a complete individuality of idiom (if we except an obviously intentional compliment to Sir Edward Elgar, to whom the work is dedicated) which prove that the composer has now definitely found his feet. . . . Though less brilliant superficially than his earlier works, the 'Pastoral' is far more assured, and on that account never misses its effect. The choral writing is, in comparison with most modern works, remarkably straightforward."

Daily Mail.—"Nine or ten years ago Mr. Bliss was one of the young rebels of music. In the 'Pastoral' he is still vivacious, youthful, and unconventional enough—but in a way that will affright no one. The new work is extraordinarily attractive. The reapers sing boisterously, the naiads dreamily; echo discourages the love-lorn shepherd, and in 'The Pigeon Song' a flute adds charming decorations to a girl's amorous ditty. The composer's freshness and inventiveness well match the excellent verses."

Morning Post.—"The choral writing is in the true English tradition, and the musical idiom in general is entirely straightforward . . . The most sincere and musical expression of lyrical personality that I have heard from an English composer for a long time.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

An Abridged
Concert Edition of CARMEN

AN OPERA FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

By GEORGES BIZET

Selected and adapted by W. McNAUGHT

The Libretto from the English Version of the complete Opera by
LUCIA YOUNG

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, price 2s. Book of Words, Price 41s. 8d. per 100.
STRING PARTS, 29s. 6d.
Newly Printed Full Score and Wind Parts on Hire.

The time of performance is about 1 hour 15 minutes. For this edition a new full score has been prepared with cues, so that the orchestra may either be full, or reduced to: Strings, 2 Flutes (each changing to Picc.), 1 Oboe (1st, changing to English Horn), 2 Clarinets, 1 Bassoon (1st); 2 Horns (1st and 2nd), 2 Trumpets (or Cornets), 1 Trombone (2nd); Timpani; Percussion.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTION FOR . . . .
CONCERT PERFORMANCE of FAUST

AN OPERA
WRITTEN BY
JULES BARBIER and MICHEL CURRÉ
ENGLISH WORDS BY HENRY F. CHORLEY
The Music by Ch. GOUNOD
Edited and arranged by JOHN POINTER

This Selection takes about 50 minutes in performance.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 19s. 6d. Wind Parts, 42s. 11d.
Book of Words, 9s. 6d. per 100

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

EYE TRAINING IN MUSIC

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, No. 105)

A course to familiarise children with musical notation and to afford practice in thinking and singing the sounds which the symbols represent. (To be worked in conjunction with "Ear Training" Primer No. 101.)

STEPS I. II. and III.
FOR CHILDREN OF FROM FOUR OR FIVE TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price, 2s. 6d.

MY MUSIC BOOK

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series No. 105a)

The pupil's book to be read with STEP III. of "Eye Training Course."

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

BOOKS 4 and 5

School Marches (easy)

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE

CONTENTS

BOOK 4

Brighton Camp ... ... English Air
James the Second's March "The Dancing Master," 1690
John Brown's Body ... American Marching Song
Lady Frances Nevill's Delight "The Dancing Master," 1690
March ... ... E. Duncan
March ("Alceste") ... ... Gluck
March ("St. Cecilia's Day") ... ... Handel
March ("Idomeneo") ... ... Mozart
Marching Through Georgia ... ... H. C. Work
Old King Cole ... ... Traditional
Playing at Soldiers ... ... Arnold Krug
See, the Conquering Hero ("Judas Maccabæus") ... Handel
Soldier's March ... ... Schumann
The Loud Tattoo ... ... Dibdin
The Soldier-Boys ... ... Myles B. Foster
Tom the Piper ... ... H. A. C.

BOOK 5

Mall Sims ... ... English Air, 16th Century
March ("Riccardo") ... ... Handel
March ... ... Haydn
March ("King Arthur") ... ... Purcell
March ("Notturno") ... ... Spohr
Marching ... ... S. P. Waddington
Minstrels' March ("Tannhäuser") ... ... Wagner
Nursery Rhymes ... ... Traditional
Soldiers' March ("William Tell") ... ... Rossini
The Campbells are Coming ... Scottish Traditional Air
The Lincolnshire Poacher ... ... English Air
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Toreador ("Carmen") ... ... Bizet
When Johnny Comes Marching Home English Air
Ye Sons of Albion ... ... English Folk-Song

Price 1s. 6d. each Book

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST REPRINTED

COMPLETE EDITION of KING ARTHUR

OR

THE BRITISH WORTHY

AN OPERA

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited, and the Pianoforte Accompaniment adapted from the Orchestral Score, by WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS

Price Three Shillings

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

No. 104.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS AND EDUCATIONAL SERIES

A Handbook for Choralists

By HARVEY GRACE

CONTAINING HINTS ON SIGHT-SINGING AND CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION

Thirty-four Studies specially composed by Edward C. Bairstow, Harold Darke, T. F. Dunhill, Julius Harrison, Geoffrey Shaw, and the Author. Six Rounds by Beethoven

WITH A FOREWORD by SIR WALFORD DAVIES

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

Novello's Classical Songs

by VARIOUS COMPOSERS

VOL. 5

CONTENTS

Blacksmith, The	Brahms
Come unto Him	Handel
Erl-King, The	Schubert
Hark! The echoing air	Purcell
If with all your hearts	Mendelssohn
I'll sail upon the Dog-star	Purcell
In the golden morn	Tschaikowsky
King of Thule, The	Berlioz
Knotting Song, The	Purcell
Ladybird	Schumann
Let me wander	Handel
Little Spinner, The	Mozart
Lonely am I now	Weber
Lonely woods	Lully
Or let the merry bells	Handel
Questioning	Salvator Rosa
Serenade, A	Schubert
Shepherd, The	Weber
Shepherds and Maidens	Lotti
Sorrow	Pergolesi
Sweet Echo	Lawes
Sweet Rose and Lily	Handel
Talisman	Schumann
Where the Bee sucks	Sullivan
Willow Song, The	Sullivan

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

PAPER BOARDS - - - - - THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A Selected List of

Secular Cantatas, Ballads, &c. for CHORUS ONLY (S.A.T.B.)

	s.	d.
ARNOTT, A. D. Young Lochinvar (Sol-fa, 8*d.*)	2	6
BANTOCK, G. A Pageant of Human Life (Choral Suite for Mixed, Male, Female, and Children's Voices) (Unaccompanied)	2	6
BETJEMANN, G. R. Song of the Western Men	1	6
BLAIR, H. Trafalgar (Sol-fa, 1*s.*) ...	2	6
BOUGHTON, R. The Invincible Armada	2	6
—— Midnight	3	0
—— The Skeleton in Armour... ...	3	0
BRAHMS, J. A Song of Destiny (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	1	6
—— Songs of Love (Vocal Part only)	1	6
BREWER, A H. A Song of Eden ...	1	6
—— Summer Sports	2	6
BRIDGE, J. F. The Inchcape Rock (Sol-fa, 8*d.*)	1	6
CLIFFE, F. Ode to the North East Wind (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	3	0
COWEN, F. H. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— Ode to the Passions (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
DUNHILL, T. F. Tubal Cain (Sol-fa, 8*d.*)	1	6
ELGAR, E. The Black Knight (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The Banner of St. George (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
FLETCHER, P. E. The Deacon's Masterpiece, or The Wonderful One-Horse Shay (Humorous) (Sol-fa, 1/6)	2	6
GADE, N. W. Spring's Message (Sol-fa, 4*d.*)	1	0
GARDINER, H. B. News from Whydah (Sol-fa, 4*d.*)	1	0
GOETZ, H. Nœnia (Sol-fa, 1*s.*) ...	1	6
GRAY, Alan. The Legend of the Rock-Buoy Bell	1	6
HARRISS, C. A. E. The Sands of Dee	1	6
HATTERSLEY, F. K. How they brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix	2	6
HIGGS, H. M. The Erl-King	1	6
HOLST, G. King Estmere	3	0
—— Ode on a Grecian Urn (Slow Movement from First Choral Symphony	1	6
—— Ode to Death	1	6
ILIFFE, F. Sweet Echo	1	6
LANG, C. S. Lochinvar	2	0
MCCUNN, H. Lord Ullin's Daughter (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	1	6
—— The Wreck of the Hesperus (Sol-fa, 8*d.*)	1	6
MACKENZIE, A. C. The Cotter's Saturday Night (Sol-fa, 1/6)	3	0
—— The New Covenant	2	6
NORTH, S. In the Morning (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	1	6
PARKER, H. W. The Kobolds... ...	1	6
PARRY, C. H. H. Blest Pair of Sirens ("At a Solemn Music") (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	1	6
—— The Chivalry of the Sea (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	1	6
—— The Glories of our Blood and State	1	6
ROOTHAM, C. B. For the Fallen ...	2	6
SACHS, E. King Cups	1	6
—— Water Lilies	1	6
SMITH, A. BRENT-. In Glorious Freedom	1	6
SMITH, A. M. Ode to the North East Wind	1	6
SPEER, W. H. The Jackdaw of Rheims	3	0
—— The Lay of St. Cuthbert... ...	3	0
STANFORD, C. V. The Battle of the Baltic	2	6
—— East to West	2	6
—— The Revenge (Sol-fa, 1*s.*) ...	2	6
STEPHEN, D. The Laird o' Cockpen (Sol-fa, 8*d.*)	1	6
STOCKER, S. Song of the Fates ...	1	6
STOJOWSKI, S. Spring-Time	1	6
SULLIVAN, A. King Arthur (Incidental Music)	2	6
WADDINGTON, S. P. John Gilpin (Sol-fa, 1*s.*)	3	0
WALKER, E. A Hymn to Dionysus ...	1	6
WOODMAN, R. T. Falmouth	1	6

A selection of the above may be had on approval.
Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF

Instruction Books & Studies

FOR USE IN VOCAL TRAINING

			Price Paper Covers	Price Paper Boards
BATES, JAMES.	...	Voice Culture for Children. Complete.	5/6	6/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 1) Instructions ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 2) Exercises ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 3) Appendix, Two-part Studies, with accompaniment	1/–
BORDOGNI.	...	24 Vocal Exercises for Mezzo-Soprano. Edited by A. Randegger	2/6
CONCONE.	...	50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice	2/6
,,	...	25 Lessons. Sequel to the above	2/6
,,	...	15 Vocalises ,, ,, 25 lessons	2/6
,,	...	15 Vocalises for Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano	2/6
,,	...	40 Vocalises for Contralto	2/6
,,	...	40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone	2/6
ELLIS, A. J.	...	Speech in Song	3/–	4/–
GARCIA, G.	...	A Guide to Solo Singing	3/–	4/–
GRACE, H.	...	A Handbook for Choralists. Containing hints on Sight-Singing and Choral Technique and Expression ...	1/6
HENSCHEL, G.	...	Progressive Studies for the Voice, with accompaniment: Part 1. (Sustained Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
		Part 2. (Florid Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
HULBERT, H. H.	...	Breathing for Voice Production	3/–	4/–
,, ,,		Eurhythm: Thought in Action. The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy. Cloth, 7/– ...
,, ,,		Pronunciation for Voice Production. (Part II. of Eurhythm)	1/6
LARKCOM, AGNES J.		The Singer's Art	1/6
MANN, R.	...	A Manual of Singing, for use of Choir Trainers and Schoolmasters	1/6
MARTIN, G. C.	...	The Art of Training Choir Boys	4/6	5/6
,, ,,		,, ,, Exercises only, for the use of boys ...	1/6	2/6
NICHOLLS, M.	...	School Choir Training. For the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing	3/–
PALMER, E. D.	...	Exercises for the Tenor Voice, with Introductory Remarks on its Training and Development	1/6
PANSERON, A.	...	40 Melodic and Progressive Exercises for Soprano or Tenor. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-26	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 27-40	3/–
,, ,,		42 Melodic and Progressive Vocal Exercises for Contralto, Baritone, or Bass. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-29	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 30-42	3/–
,, ,,		50 Vocalises, for Two Voices. Soprano and Mezzo-Soprano or Tenor and Soprano, or Tenor and Baritone. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-30	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 31-50	3/–
RANDEGGER, A.	...	Singing	6/–	7/–
STAINER, J.	...	Choral Society Vocalisation. Instructions and Exercises in Voice Training, to be used at ordinary rehearsals Complete	3/–	4/–
		Or in four parts ... ... each	8d.
,, ,,		The Exercises in the above Primer, adapted and arranged for the use of Choirs and Classes of Female Voices by A. W. Marchant	2/6	3/6
STOCKENHAUSEN, J.		Method of Singing	6/–	7/–
TAYLOR, D. C.	...	Self-help for Singers. A Manual for Self-instruction in Voice-Culture, based on the old Italian method ...	2/6	3/6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

FIFTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited and arranged with
PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT
by ARTHUR SOMERVELL

AN ELEGY UPON THE DEATH OF MR. THOMAS FARMER, B.M.
FLY SWIFT, YE HOURS
I ENVY NOT A MONARCH'S FATE
IN CLORIS ALL SOFT CHARMS AGREE
THE KNOTTING SONG
LOVELY ALBINA
MY HEART, WHENEVER YOU APPEAR
NO WATCH, DEAR CELIA
NOT ALL MY TORMENTS
OH! FAIR CEDARIA
SILVIA, NOW YOUR SCORN GIVE OVER
SOLITUDE
SWEET, BE NO LONGER SAD
SWEET TYRANNESS
TURN THEN THINE EYES

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 63

Eighteen Songs

BY

G. F. HANDEL

CONTENTS

Angels, ever bright and fair ("Theodora")
Art thou troubled ("Rodelinda")
Come, ever-smiling liberty ("Judas Maccabæus")
Come, gladsome Spring ("Xerxes")
Come unto Him ("The Messiah")
Hear thou my weeping ("Rinaldo")
How beautiful are the feet ("The Messiah")
I know that my Redeemer liveth ("The Messiah")
Let me wander not unseen ("L'Allegro")
Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson")
Lord of our being ("Rinaldo")
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ("Joshua")
Or let the merry bells ring round ("L'Allegro")
Rejoice greatly ("The Messiah")
Smiling dawn of happy days, The ("Jephtha")
Sweet rose and lily ("Theodora")
Verdant meadows ("Alcina")
Where'er you walk ("Semele")

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Foreign Organ Music

Messrs. NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, have now issued a

NEW CATALOGUE OF FOREIGN ORGAN MUSIC

This Catalogue contains a selection of the best works of the most prominent foreign composers, with prices in English currency. Copies will be sent post free. Ask for Catalogue No. 1B.

METRONOMES

MAËLZEL METRONOMES—Best Foreign make.

	s.	d.
In Oak, with bell ... ... net	17	6
In Mahogany finish, with bell and nickelled fittings ... ... net	20	0
In Ebony finish, do. do. ... net	20	0
In Walnut, do. do. ... net	20	0

ORGAN DUETS (4 Hands)

	s.	d.
ANDRÉ.—24 Pieces, Op. 35. 2 Books ... each	3	0
BACH.—Fugue on 3 Themes from "The Art of Fugue"	2	0
HESSE.—Fantasia in D minor, Op. 87	2	0
HÖPNER—Prelude and Fugue, Op. 9	2	0
LACHNER.—Introduction and Fugue, Op. 62 ...	1	6
LISZT.—Fantasia and Fugue	5	6
LÖFFLER.—Fantasia, Prayer and Fugue ...	2	0
RUDNICK.—"Reformation" Fantasia on "Ein Fest' Burg"	2	6
SCHNEIDER.—Prelude and Variations, Op. 65 ...	1	6
THIELE.—Concert Piece in C minor	3	6
WOLFRUM.—Choral and Fugue, Op. 4, No. 3 ...	2	0

Miniature Scores

FOR THE

Promenade Concerts

EULENBURG, PHILHARMONIA, and various French Editions in stock

CATALOGUES OF FOREIGN EDITIONS WILL BE SENT FREE ON REQUEST.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

SECOND ALBUM OF NINE

POPULAR SACRED SONGS

Price 2/6 net, complete (by post 2/8)

CONTENTS :

GIVE	Hermann Löhr
TE DEUM	Reginald Redman
LIFT THY HEART	Frances Allitsen
GOD IS OUR REFUGE	Ward-Stephens
LIGHT OF OUR LIFE	Raymond Loughborough
THE LIGHT THAT GUIDES	Jack Thompson
ON ANGELS' WINGS	F. Viviani
LOVE NEVER FAILETH	Ward-Stephens
THE WAY TO HEAVEN	D'Auvergne Barnard

Obtainable at all Music Sellers and the Publishers—

CHAPPELL & CO., Ltd., 50, New Bond St., London, W.1. NEW YORK and SYDNEY

New Transcriptions of Works of J. S. BACH

By WALTER RUMMEL

For Piano Solo — Series 3

No.		NET
4.	"Sturze zu Boden" (Humble thy pride) (126th Cantata)	2/-
5.	"Dich hab ich je und je geliebt" (Thou hath I ever loved) (49th Cantata)...	2/-
6.	"Was frag ich nach der Welt" (O God, Merciful God) (94th Cantata) ...	2/-
7.	"Esurientes implivit bonis" (Magnificat)	2/-

"These series certainly represent a valuable addition to the Bach repertory."—Musical Leader.

"We know of no other transcriptions so free, so effective, and so entirely suited to the instrument."—Musical Opinion.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1

London:—Printed by Novello and Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Tuesday, October 1, 1929.

THE

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (FOUR LINES)

INSTITUTED 1822 INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830

Patrons:

HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

PRESIDENT:—
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL:—
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., D.MUS., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM

BEGINS MONDAY, 4TH NOVEMBER, 1929.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

72 Scholarships and Exhibitions, by competition only. Except where the contrary is stated, both Students and non-Students are eligible.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATIONS.

During the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations. Open to Composers, Conductors, Performers, and Teachers, whether educated at the Academy or not. Last day of entry for the Christmas Examination, 31st October.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' CLASSES AND OPERA CLASS.

For the Training of Conductors and Operatic Singers.

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA.

Conducted by SIR HENRY J. WOOD, D.MUS., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

JUNIOR SCHOOL.

Suitable curriculum for pupils under sixteen years of age.

CONCERTS.

Members of the Public are invited to attend the Students' Practice Concerts, which take place every week during the Term. Particulars of the Public Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Concerts are advertised in the daily Press.

PROSPECTUSES,

Entry Forms, and all other information may be obtained from

A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

THE ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC & THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

ASSOCIATED BOARD:
COLONEL RAYMOND W. FFENNELL, F.R.C.M., Chairman.
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., MUS. DOC., OXON., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., Principal of The R.A.M.
SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., MUS. DOC., OXON. ET CANTAB., D. LITT., HON. R.A.M., PROFESSOR OF MUSIC, UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, Director of The R.C.M.

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., MUS. DOC., OXON., F.R.C.M., Professor of Music, University of London.
H. C. COLLES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.M.
GEORGE DYSON, MUS. DOC., OXON., F.R.C.M.
STEWART MACPHERSON, F.R.A.M.
STANLEY MARCHANT, MUS. DOC., F.R.A.M.
ERNEST READ, F.R.A.M.
H. W. RICHARDS, MUS. DOC., DUNELM., HON. R.A.M.
S. P. WADDINGTON, F.R.C.M.

Secretary: JAMES MUIR.
Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND, WESTERN BRANCH, BURLINGTON GARDENS, LONDON, W.1.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and in the Colonies, in both Theoretical and Practical Music, and in Elocution in Great Britain and Ireland.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC
HARMONY.
PIANOFORTE
ORGAN.
VIOLIN.
VIOLA.
VIOLONCELLO.
DOUBLE BASS.
INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL ENSEMBLES.
HARP.
WIND INSTRUMENTS
PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.
CLASS SINGING.
SINGING.
ELOCUTION.

Local Centre Examinations in Music (Syllabus A). Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March—April and November—December at all Centres. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 9th, or, with extra fee, October 17th, 1929.

"School" Examinations in Music (Syllabus B) held three times a year, viz., March—April, June—July, and October—November. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 2nd, or, with extra fee, October 10th, 1929.

Elocution Examinations will be held in March—April, June—July, and November—December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually Six Exhibitions in Music tenable at The Royal Academy of Music or The Royal College of Music for two or three years. These Exhibitions are limited to Candidates who fulfil certain conditions set forth in Syllabuses A and B.

Syllabuses A and B, Ensemble and Elocution Syllabuses, Forms of Entry, and any further information, may be obtained, post-free, from the Secretary—

JAMES MUIR.

TELEGRAMS:—"ASSOCIA, LONDON."
TELEPHONE:—MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE: 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Tuesday, October 1st, 1929. MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1041

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

NOVEMBER 1, 1929

Deferred Payments Arranged

SPENCER PIANOS

NEARLY 100,000 SOLD!

Dame Nellie Melba, Gertrude Peppercorn, Harry Isaacs, Mathilde Verne, Charlton Keith, Harold Craxton and many other famous Artistes speak enthusiastically of Spencer Pianos, the Instruments of world-wide reputation. Nearly 100,000 models of every description have already been sold, indubitable testimony to their reliability.

Illustrated Catalogue Free

MURDOCHS

The Great Piano House

461/463 OXFORD STREET LONDON, W.1

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF

PIANOS

65, Wigmore Street, LONDON. 12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

SHOW ROOMS:
60, WIGMORE ST., W.1.
Phone——LANGHAM 1418.

ALLISON PIANOS

FACTORIES:
KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.
Phone——NORTH 1660.

Recently supplied at the request of the leading professors, to the

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, - - TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
READING UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC, ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, Etc., Etc.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

A HILL BOW

is within the reach of most players for, unlike a good instrument, it is obtainable at from 1½ to 6 guineas.

Messrs. W. E. HILL & SONS,

of 140, New Bond Street, London, W.1, Violin and Bow Makers to H.M. The King, are the makers of these Bows, which are now being used by the World's greatest players, who realise that a fine bow is as indispensable as a good instrument. - -

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1041—Vol. 71
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage

NOVEMBER 1 1929

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

Royal Choral Society

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

PATRON: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

FIFTY-NINTH SEASON—1929-30

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, at 8 p.m.

WAGNER CONCERT

SCENES FROM

THE VALKYRIE, - TANNHÄUSER,
PARSIFAL, - THE MASTERSINGERS.

MADAME MIRIAM LICETTE
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND
MR. PERCY HEMING

Double Chorus of 850

THE NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At the Organ, Mr. R. ARNOLD GREIR

Conductor - - MR. ALBERT COATES

Stalls, 10*s.* 6*d.*; Arena, 7*s.* 6*d.*; Balcony (Reserved), 5*s.*; Unreserved, 3*s.* 6*d.*; Gallery (Promenade), 2*s.*

THE

Royal College of Organists

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. Examination are:

Fantasia "Valet will ich dir Geben," in B flat, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 2; Augener, p. 863; Peters, Vol. 7, No. 50.)

Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Alan Gray. (Stainer & Bell.)

Allegro con grazia (5-4 time) from Symphony No. 6, Pathétique, Tchaikovsky, arranged by Charles Macpherson. This arrangement only. Martin's arrangements, No. 56. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1930, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1929.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 5, for Associateship by December 12. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in by November 28. No names will be entered after the above dates.

In conjunction with the Incorporated Association of Organists, the Royal College of Organists has arranged a Lecture on "The Choice of Church Music," by Dr. Harold E. Darke, to be given at the Rushworth Hall, Liverpool, on Monday, December 2, at 7.30 p.m. Members of the College are cordially invited to attend. No tickets required.

For the convenience of members, past examination papers have been bound in one volume: Fellowship and Associateship Organ Work, January, 1913, to July, 1927; Paper Work, July, 1924, to July, 1927. Price 4*s.*, to be obtained by members only.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the Revised TESTS set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily, 10 to 5; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7 H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (four lines)

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM

BEGINS MONDAY, 4th NOVEMBER, 1929

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA. Conducted by Sir HENRY J. WOOD, D. Mus. Tuesdays and Fridays, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE. Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' COURSE. For the Training of Conductors.

OPERA COURSE. For the Training of Operatic Singers.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

SCHOLARSHIPS. Seventy-two Scholarships and Exhibitions for all subjects.

L.R.A.M. Entry for Christmas Examination accepted with late fee (5*s.*) up to November 12th.

Prospectuses, Entry Forms, &c., on application:
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE

Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

EASTER TERM

The Easter Term will commence on Monday, January 13th, 1930. Entrance Examination on or about January 8th.

A copy of the Prospectus and all particulars may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
The College possesses a fully equipped College Opera Theatre for an audience of 600.

SCHOLARSHIPS, EXHIBITIONS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES
There are Vocal and Instrumental Ensemble Classes, and Pupils sufficiently advanced in this work are given the opportunity of putting their knowledge into practice at College Concerts.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year, in December, April, and September.

Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830

Patron. HIS MAJESTY THE KING
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D. Mus., Oxon., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION

SEPTEMBER, 1929

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SUBJECT II.—SINGING

As TEACHERS: Mary Aird Watson Abernethy, Dorothy Irene Allen, Agnes Ovens Horne, Lillian Maud Lambert, Gladys Helen Nash, Naomi Ruth Papé, Cecil Ward.

As PERFORMERS: Margaret S. Barrett, Doris Bonsor, James Curr, Miriam Laura Harvey, Mabel Bute Matthews, Frederick Laurence Newnham, Margaret Maud Potts, Jean Trotter.

EXAMINERS: Henry Beauchamp, Madame Larkcom, Marcus Thomson, Mary T. Wilson.

SUBJECT III.—PIANOFORTE

As TEACHERS: Minnie Louise Armstrong, Violet Marie Bailey, Doris Mary Baker, Hilda Unity Baldwin, Jennie Amelia Ballantine, Gladys Ruby Batt, Ethel Elizabeth Bellamy, Constance Billington, Helena Beatrice Boldero, Louie Botson, Ruby Mina Pearl Bourne, Florence May Brereton, Marion Rosalie Ethelwyn Bridgeman, Ethel Burgess, Walter Bussey, Phyllis M. E. Chance, Mary Beatrice Churchouse, Elizabeth Clarke, Mary E. Collins, Lilian Mary Colwell, Marjorie Lillian Cook, Dorothy Kathleen Cookman, Phyllis Mary Corin, Doris Maria Cowling, Beryl Crane, Barbara Cumming, Dorothie Helen Day, Henry Draisey, Gwendolyne Gertrude Driver, John Hamilton Erskine, Margaret Fletcher, Ida Anne Francis, Ruby Freeman, Ruth Fricker, Margery Gill, Sydney Gill, Gwendoline Doris Goodwin, Isobel Hamilton, Isolda Hampton-Smith, Mary Ethel Harnett, Joseph Edward Harper, Walter John Sidney Hopkins, Enid May Hughes, Frank Albert Hunter, Phyllis Kathleen Huntley, Edith Esmé G. James, Alexander Johnson, Florence Minnie Joseph, Dorothy Knibbs, Ida L. Leedham, Peter Lindner, Marjorie Lloyd, Irene Beatrice Losa, Grace Macaulay, Helen Elisabeth MacGregor, Nellie Gertrude Mandale, Jean Atwell Marks, Cyril Montague Marshall, Mary McCarthy, Marjorie Minnion, Lisa Geraldine Montgomery, Janet Murray, Violet Joyce Godfrey Nash, Moya Neill, Mollie Nixon, William Brook Northey, Sadie E. O'Donnell, Douglas Oliver, James William Osborn, Viola Ellaline Pether, Eva Gladys Pitman, Constance A. Price, Beatrice Nellie Radley, Audrey Ratcliffe, Hilda Reynolds-Cooper, Alice Nell Richards, Margaret Gwyneth Richards, Clive Richardson, Albert Ernest Robins, Arthur Rooke, Elsie Irene Russell, Dorothy Maud Salmon, Mary Scoby-Smith, Adeline Elizabeth Scott, Jean Fergusson Shaw, Beryl Shippey, Mildred Dora Shubrook, Katherine Alice Sinclair, Christine Smye, Joan Spencer, Stanley Joseph Stormont, Mary Gwyneth Thomas, George Thompson, Martha Bell Thompson, Hilda Annie Westbrook Thorne, Lily Evalina Tie Ten Quee, Alice Winifred Tuck, Elizabeth Grace Turner, Ellen Tweedy, Phyllis Twigger, Amy Kathleen Vaughan, Kathleen Winifred Wade, Winifred L. Waghorn, Doris Sylvia Walker, Gwendolen Constance Waller, Marjorie Hughes Whatley, Catherine Alwena Williams, Olive M. Williamson, Ethel Marjorie Willis, Doris Lillian Wilson, Mary Wilson, L. Mabel Withers, Marjorie Gertrude Wright, Margaret Wroot.

As PERFORMERS: Florence Ellen Jennings, Alfred Henry Wheatcroft.

EXAMINERS: Victor G. Booth, York Bowen, Edgar Carr, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Thomas B. Knott, Frederick Moore, Charles F. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, Percy Waller.

SUBJECT IV.—PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

Joan Mary Dossor, Norman Edward Feasey, Audrey Ifor-Davies, Cecil Aubrey Noakes, Joy Rickard.

EXAMINERS: Welton Hickin, Dorothy Howell, Montague Phillips, Max Pirani.

SUBJECT VI.—ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS

VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Ena Constance Cocking, Maggie Mitchell Couchman, Eileen Sophia Holmes, William Blyth Major, Geoffrey Parker Smith, Sylvia Paulin.

VIOLONCELLO.—As TEACHER: John Walton.

As PERFORMERS: Joan Bonner, Carmen Roberta Hill.

OBOE.—As PERFORMER: Mary Griselda Keel.

EXAMINERS: Marie Goossens, Marjorie Hayward, James T. Lockyer, James MacDonagh, Elsie Owen, B. Patterson Parker, Boris Pecker, Cedric Sharpe, J. Solomon, Herbert Walenn, Herbert Withers, E. Rowsby Woof.

SUBJECT IX.—AURAL TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING

Cyril Crafton Harris.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Stanley Marchant, D. Mus. Oxon., Ernest Read.

SUBJECT X.—VOICE CULTURE AND CLASS SINGING

Maggie Jane Nicholson Crofts, Gertrude Elizabeth Mowton, Freda Margaret Rowland, Edith Spencer, Arthur William McPherson Standidge.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Stanley Marchant, D. Mus. Oxon., Frederick G. Shinn, D. Mus., Cantab.

SUBJECT XI.—ELOCUTION

As TEACHERS: Alice Astley, E. Doreen Bicheno, Charles Robert Mitchell Brookes, Esther Gertrude Fielder, Isabelle Holman, Joan Innes Irons, Joyce Legender, Ena Maltby Lynn, Constance Margaret Macalaster, William Arnold Riley, Irene Sisling, Frank Smith, Irene D. Soole, Edith Myra Steele, Daisy Jean Symons, Ursula Upton.

As PERFORMERS: Sylvia Rose Adeline Austin, Winifred Edith Chenery, Lucy Mason Dickie, Audrey Mary Hodgson.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton-Bond, Wilton Cole, Cecil Martin, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

The Associated Board

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS* (Syllabus A)

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 12, 1930.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS* (Syllabus B)

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 5, 1930.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

will be held in March-April, June-July, and November-December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

Guildhall School of Music

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

JUBILEE CELEBRATION YEAR, 1930

PRINCIPAL - SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £12 12*s.* and £14 14*s.* Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free. New Students can commence at any time.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.
Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of forty-three senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

THE TEACHING OF TEACHING.—SIX PSYCHOLOGY LECTURES by the PRINCIPAL. Alternate Wednesday evenings at 7. Open to Students and also to NON-STUDENTS.

Also Mr. FREDERICK MOORE alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

PRESIDENT ... ... H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
PRINCIPAL ... ... R. J. FORBES
REGISTRAR ... ... JOHN HOLME

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

HOW DO YOU MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC?

Alfred Cortot
Serge Koussevitzky
Tobias Matthay
Harold Bauer
Myra Hess
Irene Scharrer
Vaclav Talich
Leff Pouishnoff
Katharine Goodson
Stewart Macpherson
Ivor Newton
Adrian Boult
Maurice Cole
Ivan Phillipowsky
Percy Scholes
Lyell Barbour
Rae Robertson

recommend the

MACKINNON METHOD

How would you answer a pupil if he asked you this important question?

Many well-known teachers, though themselves possessors of perfect Musical Memory, are unable, through the very spontaneity of their gift, to analyse the process by which they play by heart.

THE

Mackinnon Method

is simple and practical—a Method by means of which the teacher may develop the memory of pupils of all ages, whether primary, intermediate, or advanced.

A Teacher in Boston, U.S.A., writes:

"In coming across Miss Mackinnon's Musical Memory Course, I have at last found what is so much needed by Teachers—namely, a simple yet systematic scheme whereby students of all grades can memorise music quickly and with certainty."

A Convent Teacher in New Zealand writes:

"I have found your Course of Memory Lessons a great help to me and to my pupils."

A Teacher in England writes:

"I find the Course has not only helped me in my own memorising, but it enables me to cultivate my pupils' memories on correct and lasting lines."

A Teacher in France writes:

"Your knowledge of psychology is amazing."

COMPLETE IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS FOR £3 : 3 : 0

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, 1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3
Without any obligation on my part please send me your free booklet on "MEMORY-TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

.....

S.K.9

The School of English Church Music

President : His Grace The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury

COLLEGE OF ST. NICOLAS, CHISLEHURST

(Ten miles from Charing Cross)

Warden :

Sydney H. Nicholson, M.V.O., M.A., D. Mus., F.R.C.O.

Courses of Lectures on subjects connected with Church Music :

Mondays, 5 p.m. Miss J. M. Forbes Close (Plain-Song).
Tuesdays, 5 p.m. The Chaplain (Musical Requirements of the Prayer Book).
Wednesdays, 9 p.m. Mr. Harvey Grace (Practical Requirements of the Parish Church Organist).
Thursdays, 5 p.m. The Warden (History of Church Music).

Choral Services in College Chapel daily at 7.30 a.m. and 7 p.m. (except Wednesday evenings).

Choir Practices daily at 6 p.m. (except Wednesday).

Sunday Services at St. Sepulchre's, Holborn, 10.30, 11, and 6.

Resident Students (men only) can be received at the College on moderate inclusive terms, and arrangements are made to suit the convenience of those taking a course of general musical training in London, or those engaged in business during the day.

Lectures, Services, and Choir Practices are open to all Students, resident and non-resident, men and women.

For further particulars, scale of fees, &c., apply College of St. Nicolas, Elmstead Lane, Chislehurst, Kent.

Tel. : Ravensbourne 2514. H. L. A. Green, Secretary.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1929

Sir Walford Davies will give Four Lectures on "Melody and Background," on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, November 12, 13, 14, and 15, at 6 p.m.

THE LECTURES ARE FREE TO THE PUBLIC

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS

ALSO SHORT COURSE OF PERSONAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

ALSO SINGING LESSONS

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

41, Avondale Road, S. Croydon. 'Phone : Croydon 2703

And Weekes's Studios, 14, Hanover St., W.1

A WORD TO COMPOSERS

If you are tired of being asked to pay for publication, send a card to a qualified publishers' reviser, who has assisted many composers to place their works with reputable firms, including Boosey, Chappell, Ashdown, Elkin, &c., and whose services are at the disposal of a limited number of composers. Over 70 per cent. successes. Full particulars :

DENIS WRIGHT, Mus. B., 5, Walpole Gardens, London, W.4

THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SESSION 1929-1930

The Session consists of Three Terms : Monday, September 9; Monday, December 2; Monday, March 10.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from :

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,

Athenæum Buildings, Glasgow.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., Mus.Doc. LL.D.
Director ... Granville Bantock, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1928-1929

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

Manchester School of Music

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)

Late Principal (1897-1925) : Albert J. Cross, A.R.A.M.

Director : LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

President for 1929 : G. THALBEN-BALL, F.R.C.O.

Organist, Temple Church.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, are eligible. Register of vacant appointments. All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,

De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

New Address: Grotrian Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1

President ... ... A. NETTLEFOLD
Principal ... ... DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal Subjects. A thorough musical education if desired.

Special Voice-curing Courses for all voice defects, caused by overstrain and incorrect production.

Practice with Accompaniste can be obtained at the School at a moderate fee.

Particulars from Secretary, Miss M. Heath. Welbeck 6846

Mr. WILKINSON URQUHART

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte : Performer, Teacher, and Accompaniment); A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching); F.R.C.O.; Certificate of Merit in Pianoforte, Harmony and Counterpoint, and Aural Training (Highest Award of the Royal Academy of Music); Registered Teacher; Professor of Pianoforte, Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School.

Mr. Urquhart specialises in coaching for the Practical and Paper-work sections of the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas in the above-mentioned subjects. Lessons personally at his London Studio, or by correspondence.

Recent successes : L.R.A.M. (Practical), 14; (Paper-work), 22. A.R.C.M. (Practical), 8; (Paper-work), 12. Successes in L.R.A.M. accompaniment diploma : Practical 4 and Paper-work (by correspondence) 6.

July, 1929, pupil gained the Essex County Music Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal Academy of Music.

September, 1929, pupil gained the "Whitcombe" Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal College of Music.

Address :

40 Cranbrook Rise (Cranbrook Park) Ilford, Essex

(Phone : Valentine 4065).

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

Lyrics Set to Music, Melodies Harmonized, Music Transposed and Copied, Band Parts Written, MSS. Prepared for Publication by a Master Hand, Accompaniments of Distinction Written to Songs.

FOR TERMS WRITE, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS

Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

Northern Corr. College

Principal: ALBERT JOWETT, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COMPLETE COURSE in COMPOSITION

A most notable success was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,

WILLIAM BAINES

who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS

MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.

SPECIALIST TEACHING IN SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION, INTERPRETATION

Diagnosis of Faults and COMPLETE ERADICATION OF FAULTS

PERSONAL TUITION IN

Leeds, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Harrogate

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

Lyrics Set to Music, Accompaniments Written to Songs, &c.

STATE EXAM. OR SUBJECT

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS

"Finger Magic"

HOW THE MASTER MUSICIAN IS MADE.

"I have been reading a little booklet which I have termed 'Finger Magic,' and I would very much like to place this book in the hands of every pianist, violinist, and 'cellist in the Kingdom.

"We all know that the secret of the virtuosi does not consist in the amount of time they expend in instrumental practice—one recently stated that he often does not touch the instrument for a week, and another has affirmed that musicians are positively superstitious about practice. The secret of the success of the great masters must therefore be looked for in another direction than in the capacity for hard grinding practice on orthodox lines, and I have been experimenting with a system which may well prove to be a solution, or at any rate to a large extent.

"The system to which I refer develops the hands not by practice in the ordinary sense, but by a series of exercises, based on sound psychological as well as physiological laws; the almost immediate effect of which is to increase the stretching capacity of the hand, and the descriptive booklet, issued by the Cowling Institute, contains some astonishing letters from musicians which would convince me, even if not backed up by my own experience, that the quickest and easiest way to develop the strength and flexibility of the wrist and fingers so essential to pianists, violinists, and 'cellists is to perform the operation away from the instrument, when the mind can be centred upon that object alone.

"I anticipate that within a measurable period the knowledge contained in this little booklet, and in the lessons given by the Cowling Institute, will form part of the curriculum of every teacher and be a necessary equipment of every violinist, 'cellist, and pianist."—

ERNEST JAY, F.R.C.O.

NOTE.—The booklet referred to above may be obtained free of all cost on application to Secretary, T., Cowling Institute, 71, Albion House, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1. (State if a teacher.)

Do You Know ?

Do You Know how to concentrate when you practise?
Do You Know how to improve your Sight-reading to an unlimited extent?
Do You Know when and why you should correct the phrase-marks in music?
Do You Know how to express through music your feeling and your personality?
Do You Know how to increase the stretch of your hands without straining them?
Do You Know how to gain fluent technique with mental and muscular ease?
Do You Know how, when, and when not to use the damper pedal?
Do You Know how to simplify your methods of Fingering?
Do You Know how to make Scale-Practice interesting and musical?

MUSICAL SECRETS

NINE PAPERS by LILIAS MACKINNON

As a Teacher, Miss Mackinnon is well known, not only for her originality of thought, but for her simplicity of expression. These Papers are the outcome of her personal experience as Performer and Teacher, and they contain practical suggestions of the greatest value, and ones that have never before been available to the public.

The NINE PAPERS are these:

1. The Secret of Concentration
2. The Secret of Sight-reading
3. The Secret of Phrasing
4. The Secret of Interpretation
5. The Secret of Hand-Extension
6. The Secret of Technique
7. The Secret of Pedalling
8. The Secret of Fingering
9. The Secret of Scale-Practice

Nos. 1-5 for all Instrumentalists.
6-9 for Pianists specially.

The price of each Paper is 2s. 6d., plus 2d. for postage (two or more post free); but the Set of NINE, if taken together, may be had at the inclusive fee of £1 : 1s.

A Correspondent writes:
"I have just heard that I have passed the L.R.A.M. I received much help from your nine Papers which I studied with great benefit."—1929.

Fill in Coupon for these unique Pamphlets.

Descriptive list sent (if desired) on receipt of 1d. stamp.

COUPON
(FIX COUPON INSIDE ENVELOPE)

To MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
1, Paultons Square, London, S.W.3

Please send me Papers Nos.....

I enclose.....

Name.....

Address.....

S.K.9. .....

Organ Recitals

By Mr. H. L. BALFOUR

November 11, at Woolwich

November 29, at Christ Church, Westminster

Every Sunday, 5.45 p.m., at Holy Trinity, Sloane Street

Every Tuesday, 4.45 p.m., at Royal Normal College, Norwood

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (2,023rd) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on November 5, and every Tuesday at 1 o'clock.

ST. JAMES'S, MUSWELL HILL, N. — Organ Recital by Mr. H. A. Bate every Saturday at 5.45 p.m. Service of Parry's and Stanford's music, December 11, at 8 p.m.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD

ELECTION OF CHORISTERS

A TRIAL OF VOICES will be held on Wednesday, November 27, to fill vacancies. Choristers are boarded at the School House, and are granted Scholarships from the date of election up to the age of 17½. Forms of application and further information can be obtained from:

THE HEADMASTER, NEW COLLEGE SCHOOL, OXFORD

THE TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION

The Monthly Meeting will be held on Saturday, November 16, 7 p.m., at the King's Weigh House Club, Thomas Street, London, W.1.

LECTURE RECITAL: "Louis Braille and the Musical Education of the Blind (an account of the man and his 'System')," by Edward Watson, Sec., Music Department, National Institute for the Blind.

Admission Free. Full particulars from the Secretary, Mr. T. H. Warner, L.T.S.C., 82, Ashgrove Road, Goodmayes, Essex.

PAPER WORK BY Mus.B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include: 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928); 3 A.R.C.O.; 2 L.R.A.M.; 1 A.R.C.M. (Theory), in September, 1929.

2s. 6d. PER LESSON AND POSTAGE

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co. Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING

12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD. 2s. 6d. post free; Abroad, 3s. Pre-eminent Technique. It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor." M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

SCARBOROUGH
COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

MAY 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 1930

GRAND HALL, THE SPA

Solo, Duet, Quartet, Choral, Orchestral, School Choir, Male, Female, and Mixed-Voice Choir Competitions.

Syllabus, now ready, may be had from:

Mr. F. CROMACK, Sec., Scarborough Townsmen's Association
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON

MUSICAL FESTIVAL

For Essex and East London and Open Competitions.

1930 FESTIVAL—March 28th to April 5th

The Premier Festival; 48th Year

Open Choral (Mixed, Men, and Ladies' Classes).
Open Solo Classes for Solo Singing, Pianoforte Violin, Elocution, and Folk-Dancing.
Over 120 local Classes.
Reduced Rail Fares. Now a Pre-Easter Festival.

ENTRIES CLOSE MARCH 8TH

Syllabus free from E. L. HOLFORD, 41, Nightingale Lane, E.11

ENTERTAINMENTS (Dramatic, Humorous, and Musical selections) for Church Literary Societies and Socials. Poetry Recitals for Private Schools (Poems with original music—descriptive, selections, and prose). Over 300 already given in many parts of the United Kingdom. For moderate terms, address, Mr. Hamilton Reaney, L.G.S.M. (Eloc.), "Kirkville," Bromley Park, Kent. 'Phone: Ravensbourne 3205.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, TUFNELL PARK N.7

THE MESSIAH

will be rendered in the above Church on THURSDAY, NOV. 28, by an augmented Choir, accompanied by trumpet, drums, and organ.

THE LONDON ORATORIO AND CONCERT ASSOCIATION

FOUNDED 1912

THE ASSOCIATION exists for the purpose of bringing Secretaries of CHORAL SOCIETIES, OPERATIC AND MUSICAL SOCIETIES, &c., into direct communication with capable and reliable Artists, without the intervention of an Agent, and is based on the co-operation of its members. Choral Societies engaging a quartet of soloists for any work, can have the advantage of preliminary rehearsal of the principals by the musical director.

Musical Director: Mr. Hubert Bath.

For Prospectus and List of Artists, address Secretary,

26, Guilford Street, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Modern Corr. College

Principal - - ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

MUS. BAC.

Value of a Degree

(1.) Qualifies for a good Church or Cathedral appointment.
(2.) Qualifies a Teacher to be placed on the Graduate Scale in Secondary Schools.
(3.) A great help in building up a COUNTY CONNECTION.

DURHAM If a Student can offer a Foreign Language, only Two other subjects are necessary. For the EXERCISE a String Quartet can be offered.

LONDON Music can be offered as a Subject for Matric.

DUBLIN The whole Series of Examinations can be taken in 12 months.

MATRIC.: Successes - - - 166

Notice to Prospective Students

We should require 10 to 12 PAGES of the Musical Times to publish all the letters of appreciation we have received from successful students. This month we publish A FEW of those received from F.R.C.O. Students. In succeeding months we hope to deal with A.T.C.L., A.Mus.T.C.L., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching), Voice Culture ——and Class Singing, Musical Appreciation, Singing.——

- F.R.C.O. -

F.R.C.O. 4th Attempt.

"This success is entirely due to your splendid Tuition. I have only been under you for THREE MONTHS."

F.R.C.O. "One of a crowd."

"From beginning to end I never felt that I was merely one of a crowd, for the CRITICISM and ADVICE always responded to my particular troubles."

F.R.C.O. 1st Attempt.

"It was my first attempt at F.R.C.O. The whole Course can be well recommended as a RAPID and CERTAIN way to Success."

F.R.C.O. Failed Six Times.

"Before taking up your Guarantee Course I had failed SIX TIMES in succession. Your System of Correspondence Tuition has been a revelation to me."

A.R.C.O. Age 16.
F.R.C.O. Age 18.

"I wish to thank you for the very valuable assistance given to my son. This is his SECOND SUCCESS."

F.R.C.O. ... ... Age 18
A.R.C.O. ... ... ,, 16

NOTE.—The above Student has since passed Matric. and 1st Mus. Bac. under M.C.C. Tuition.

——— ALL OUR SUCCESSES ARE BY CORRESPONDENCE ———

Modern Corr. College Cropwell Bishop, NOTTS.

Blüthner Studios

23, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1

Studios supplied with new Blüthner Pianos have now been opened at the above address. A large room suitable for Lectures, &c., and several smaller rooms are available to teachers of music. For particulars, apply to :

BLÜTHNER & CO., Ltd., 17-23, Wigmore Street, London, W.1

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

Used and highly recommended by—

COVIELLO, ELLINGFORD, FRYER, LAMOND, MEALE, POUISHNOFF, REDDIE, SPENCER-DYKE, WALENN, and many other well-known Professors and Teachers.

Send for full list of testimonials and particulars post free.

"Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Secretary: MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers. Recommended by the Editor of the Musical Times.

IMPROVED MODEL

Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

E. C. M., 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE

The "FLEXA" System of Finger & Hand Development

For Violinists, 'Cellists, Pianists, and other Instrumentalists

A new and concise Course in 12 exercises, complete. Greatly recommended by the musical profession.

A sure means of obtaining that suppleness and ease of execution so necessary to a perfect technique.

Twenty minutes devoted every day to the exercises contained in this Course will be amply rewarded by quickly gained facility and a technique which otherwise would be obtained only after years of strenuous practice.

No apparatus necessary. All movements are perfectly natural movements of the fingers and hands, which can in no way cause any injury.

A few extracts from the many recommendations constantly being received from well-known musicians :

Cyril S. Christopher, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M. :
"No one who adheres faithfully to the instructions given can fail to derive great benefit from the Course."

Alex. Cohen, M.A. (Solo Violinist) :
"I think your exercises fulfil admirably the purpose for which they were designed."

Joseph Lewis (Musical Director, B.B.C., Birmingham) :
"It is undoubtedly excellent, and one cannot help but be struck by the careful grading of the exercises, and the clever way in which they are devised and explained. . . Everyone who carefully uses this System is bound to be repaid by greatly increased flexibility and dexterity. . . I can confidently recommend the System."

Ernest W. Harrison ('Cellist, British National Opera Co., Covent Garden, &c.):
"Hand and finger exercises away from the instrument are undoubtedly valuable, and your System is one of the most concise I have seen, and summarises the most useful exercises in a brief and clear manner."

Miss Zoe M. Wadely, L.R.A.M. (Teacher, Violin and Viola) :
"Your work should be helpful to students and teachers of the violin, &c."

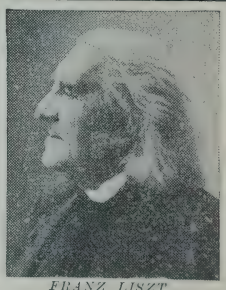
FEE FOR THE COMPLETE "FLEXA" COURSE—ONE GUINEA.

Further particulars may be obtained from :

The Secretary, "Flexa" System, Crane's Studios, Old Square, BIRMINGHAM

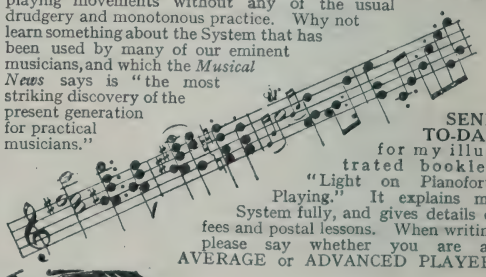
A really Good Pianist

cannot be made by orthodox methods unless a special and rare gift exists already.

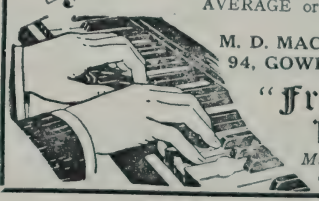


FRANZ LISZT

It has been pointed out with considerable show of reason that the real way to attain mastery over difficult passages is not to go over them until you are sick and tired of them, but to get your arm and hand muscles into the best state possible, a state approaching that exceptional muscular development with which virtuosi are endowed by Nature. Let the "From Brain to Keyboard" System perfect every muscle and nerve in your hands and give you instant control over all playing movements without any of the usual drudgery and monotonous practice. Why not learn something about the System that has been used by many of our eminent musicians, and which the Musical News says is "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."



SEND TO-DAY for my illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." It explains my System fully, and gives details of fees and postal lessons. When writing please say whether you are an AVERAGE or ADVANCED PLAYER.



M. D. MACDONALD SMITH
94, GOWER ST., LONDON, W.C.1

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing

DELIUS and "GROVE"

Over 270 lines of interesting biography, able criticism and appreciation of FREDERICK DELIUS, followed by a list of his principal works, appear in the NEW

GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC

Completely Revised and Up-to-date 5 Vols. Over 4,000 pages 96 full page plates

A first payment of

7s. 6d.

brings the set to YOUR HOME AT ONCE

Post this for FREE PROSPECTUS

To the Globe Publishing Co., Ltd.,
112, Strand, London, W.C.2

(Use unsealed envelope—½d. stamp)

Please send me Prospectus of the New Grove's Dictionary of Music, with full particulars of payment-out-of-income and discount for cash.

Name.....

Address.....

M.T. 22.

"BY CORRESPONDENCE"

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC., LOND., L.R.A.M.

Full preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. B., Mus. D., and Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

"REVISION" COURSES:

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
   For December, 1929, and April, 1930
2. T.C.L. and R.C.O. Diplomas
   For January and April, 1930
3. Mus. B. and Mus. D.
   London and Durham
4. Separate Subjects:
   Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Art of Teaching, Touch and Technique, &c.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES:

These Correspondence Lessons are so devised as to give a complete grip of everything necessary for success in the shortest possible time. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for Degrees and Diplomas in Music.

CONSULTATION LESSONS also in BRISTOL and LONDON

Address: DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, 46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

London Opera Festival

DIRECTOR—ROBERT STUART

SCALA THEATRE, W.1. December 30th, 1929—January 18th, 1930

Monday, December 30th, Wednesday, January 1st, Friday, January 3rd.

ORPHEUS (Monteverde)

Gwyneth Edwards, Denne Parker, Marjorie Parry, Norman Allin, Charles d'If, Dennis Noble, Frank Sale.

At the Harpsichord—Boris Ord.

Conductor—Jack Westrup. Producer—Robert Stuart.

Tuesday, December 31st, Thursday, January 2nd, Saturday, January 4th.

CUPID AND DEATH (Matthew Locke and Christopher Gibbons), followed by DIDO AND ÆNEAS (Henry Purcell)

Gwyneth Edwards, Doris Lemon, Marjorie Parry, Constance Willis, Charles d'If, Henry Wendon.

At the Harpsichord—Boris Ord.

Conductors—Jack Westrup and Leslie Heward. Producer—Dennis Arundell.

Monday, January 6th, Wednesday, January 8th, Friday, January 10th.

JULIUS CÆSAR (Handel)

Gwyneth Edwards, Denne Parker, Sumner Austin, Arthur Fear, Henry Wendon.

At the Harpsichord—Boris Ord.

Conductor—Gervase Hughes. Producer—Norman Marshall.

Tuesday, January 7th, Thursday, January 9th, Saturday, January 11th.

LA FINTA GIARDINIERA (Mozart)

Noel Eadie, Doris Lemon, Marjorie Parry, Edward Leer, William Michael, Henry Wendon.

Conductor—Leslie Heward. Producer—W. Nugent Monck.

Monday, January 13th, Wednesday, January 15th, Friday, January 17th.

ALCESTIS (Gluck)

May Blyth, Sumner Austin, Charles d'If, Frank Sale, Frank Titterton, Henry Wendon.

Conductor—Aylmer Buesst. Producer—Dennis Arundell.

Tuesday, January 14th, Thursday, January 16th, Saturday, January 18th.

DER FREISCHÜTZ (Weber)

Nora Grunebaum, Thea Philips, Tudor Davies, Arthur Fear, Charles d'If, William Michael, Frank Sale.

Conductor—Sir Thomas Beecham, Bart. Producer—Humphrey Procter-Gregg.

Prices of Admission (including tax)—17/-, 15/-, 12/-, 8/6, 7/-, and 5/9 (reserved), 3/6 (unreserved). Advance Booking opens on Monday, December 2, at the Scala Theatre. ('Phone : Museum 6010)

For Members of the Imperial League of Opera Advance Booking opens on Monday, November 4th, at the Offices of the League, 90, Regent Street, W.1 (Tel. : Gerrard 8494), at the following rates—(including tax) 15/6, 13/9, 11/-, 7/9, 6/5, 5/3.

The Festival will be followed by a WEEK OF MATINÉES (January 20 to January 25 inclusive) of HANSEL AND GRETEL (Humperdinck), preceded by CASTLE CREEVEY (Gervase Hughes). The Cast will include Joan Cross, Gwyneth Edwards, Doris Lemon, Constance Willis, Sumner Austin, and William Michael. Conductor—Gervase Hughes.

Prices of Admission (including tax)—15/-, 12/-, 8/6, 7/-, 5/9, 3/6 (reserved), and 2/4 (unreserved), and at 13/9, 11/-, 7/9, 6/5, 5/3, 3/3 (reserved) for members of the Imperial League of Opera. Times and places for Booking as for the London Opera Festival.

ALL OPERAS WILL BE SUNG IN ENGLISH.

Professional Notices

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO

Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.

28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, E.C.2

SHIRLEY, PARK ROAD, CROUCH END, N.8. Tudor 5289

EDWARD REACH

TENOR

GENTLEMAN OF H.M. CHAPELS ROYAL

Tel: Streatham 9287. 12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17

VOICE TRAINING — FIELD-HYDE METHOD

Miss ELSIE DUNIAM - JONES

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., M.R.S.T.

Specialist Coach for diplomas and concert platform. Short courses or single lessons on Interpretation of English, French, and Italian Songs. Vacancy for accompanist pupil.

EDUCATIONAL LECTURE SONG-RECITALS TO SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, MUSICAL CLUBS.

Specimen Titles: Songs, their making and their hidden beauties. Shakespeare Songs—old and new settings.

From a Headmistress: "A very delightful and truly educational evening."

British Music Bulletin: "Miss Duniam-Jones sang with delightful finish and sympathy, and proved herself an entrancing lecturer."

Studio: 17, Cavendish Square, W.1.; and at Barnet, Herts.

Miss MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma)

Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing; coaches for singing examinations; leads and trains choral classes and choirs; also gives lessons on the guitar. Moderate charges for all subjects.

26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627

J. M. MORRIS, Mus. Bac.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), F.T.S.C.

SPECIALISES IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

Harmony and Counterpoint. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper Work. Vocal Physiology and the Art of Teaching Singing for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas.

RECENT DIPLOMA SUCCESSES

Address: 93, ST. MARY STREET, CARDIFF

Miss PITT SOPER, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.

Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).

For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

ELOCUTION AND SINGING

MR. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M.

(Double Diploma Elocution and Singing), A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.

Correspondence Courses: (a) ELOCUTION (b) VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING (c) ASSOCIATED BOARD ELOCUTION EXAMS.

Studios: 5, Park Row, Nottingham; and 14, Hanover Street, W.1

Miss MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON

Lecturer and Adjudicator

Receives pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Prepares candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas as Teacher or Performer. Also gives

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS

to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.

Particulars on application.

Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1 'Phone: Langham 3909

EDGAR CARR, A.R.A.M.

Professor of Pianoforte Playing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Coaches for all examinations and public performances. Consultation lessons given to teachers, and unsuccessful candidates advised.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, W.1.

JOHN F. PORTE

MUSIC CRITIC, AUTHOR, EDITOR.

Rapid Technical Development in PIANOFORTE PLAYING by condensed but systematic study (on the methods of Louis Plaidy and Virgil). Prospectus gratis.

CORRESPONDENCE GUIDANCE IF REQUIRED

Collard & Collard Grand Pianoforte

56, Mayall Road, Herne Hill, S.E.24. Or, West End Studio.

MISS NORAH TOWNEND

(A.R.C.M., PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT) (TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE)

EXPERIENCED PIANIST AND ACCOMPANIST

Apply, 83, Gunnersbury Avenue, Ealing, W.5. 'Phone Chiswick 0384

WILLIAM SANDS

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC, REDDITCH PARISH CHURCH

RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST

For vacant dates, terms, &c., apply to:

99, Plymouth Road, Redditch, Worcs,
or 42, Valley Road, Shortlands, Kent.

ANTONIO BROSA

Has a few vacancies for PUPILS for the VIOLIN, also Chamber Music tuition in London and the provinces. All applications, Antonio Brosa, —— Studio 6, 77, Bedford Gardens, W.8. ——

MR. J. C. BRYDSON, Mus. Bac.

Postal Tuition from 10*s.* 6*d.* for 10 lessons, according to Course.

Successes at R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L., mostly at First Attempt.

Successful Candidate at L.R.A.M. (Sept., 1929) writes: "May I take this opportunity of thanking you for all you have done for me, and to say how much I owe to your excellent teaching. When I return I want to continue lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, and Composition. . . . I am more than pleased with the progress I have made under your tuition."

ADDRESS: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY

W. R. HUNN

MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Joint Author of Form and Teaching Test-Papers)

Specialises in Coaching for Mus.Bac., R.C.O., R.C.M., and R.A.M. Exams. Latest successes: "Mus.Bac." Exercise, Dunelm., 1929.

105, REGENT ROAD, GREAT YARMOUTH

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

"REVISION" COURSES. See page 969.

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, Bryanston Square, W.1.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, Mus.Bac., A.R.M.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 14, St. Stephen's Avenue, Blackpool, N.S.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory) at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L.Mus. T.C.L., (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for R.C.O., R.C.M., R.A.M., &c., Diplomas. Study Aids, 9*d.* Studies in Modulation, 3*s.*

Send for interesting pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY

DR. W. A. BARLOW, F.R.C.O., gives Personal or Postal tuition for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. 1,514, Ashton Old Road, Hr. Openshaw, Manchester.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams. as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

LILIAN COOMBES, F.R.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster, Brixton Independent Church, S.W.9). Tuition in Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint. Preparation for Exams. Large 4-manual organ. "Hughenden," Bush Hill Road, N.21. Telephone: Enfield 0760.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams., 1910-29 ... 352 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams., 1914-29 ... 108 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, MUS.BAC., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., WATERLOO BUILDINGS, PICCADILLY, MANCHESTER.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus.Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work. (38 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony and Counterpoint. (23 Successes.)
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, Kingsway Hall), 57, Tooting Bec Gardens, Streatham, London, S.W.16.
Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.
SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.
RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 A.R.C.M., 1920	1 L.R.A.M., 1919
1 L.R.A.M., 1924	4 A.R.C.O., 1921
1 A.R.C.M., 1928	3 A.R.C.O., 1922
2 F.R.C.O., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., 1923
6 F.R.C.O., 1923	4 A.R.C.O., 1924
5 F.R.C.O., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., 1925
5 F.R.C.O., 1926	7 A.R.C.O., 1926
5 F.R.C.O., 1927	8 A.R.C.O., 1927
5 F.R.C.O., 1928	9 A.R.C.O., 1928
4 F.R.C.O.. 1929	8 A.R.C.O., 1929

During the past few years pupils of Mr. Allan Brown have gained "Lafontaine" (F.R.C.O.), "Turpin," and "Sawyer" Prizes.
"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates," to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

MISS LILLIE M. EARLY, Contralto, is open for engagements for Oratorio, B minor Mass (Bach), "The Dream of Gerontius," "The Messiah," &c. Extensive Concert répertoire also. For terms, apply, 13, Park Avenue, Endcliffe, Sheffield.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 5, Newington, Liverpool.

ARTHUR GREGORY, L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), educated R.A.M. Teaches Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form. Examination candidates prepared. Write, 3, Gladys Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

VOICE-CULTURE.—Bladon Hackett, Professor Vocal Technique. Placing, Breathing (Huskiness-strain eradicated). Innumerable testimonials. Eminent Throat Surgeon writes: "Trains delicate voices with sensitive certainty and most convincing results." 14, Hanover Street, W.1; and (Purley 3460).

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 414 Successes in Mus.D., Mus.B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., and the paper-work requirements for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas in pianoforte playing. For terms, &c., apply to 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus., Oxon., L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. Compositions revised. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus.Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, 1929, Final Mus. Bac. and 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent Successes: 4 Mus. Doc. and 4 Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. Over 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc. University of Toronto: F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 29 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

THE REVISION OF MSS. IS UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in Piano, Singing, Theory. Herbert H. Nelson, "Albury," Canterbury Road, Herne Bay, Kent.

Complete preparation for Teachers of Singing and the Pianoforte by CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A, Performer and Teacher Pianoforte).
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on "Musical Appreciation" to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
All papers up-to-date.
Over 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone Maida Vale 1715.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., M.R.S.T. One Guinea Ten Lessons. Har., C'p't, Fugue, History, Choir-Training, General Musicianship, &c. F.R.C.O. Analysis, January, 1930, 3s. Recent successes: A. Mus. T.C.L., L.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., 1928; F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., 1927, 1928, 1929; also T.C.L. and G.S.M., Pass and Hons. Certifs. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

MR. E. L. M. PRITCHARD, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., A.R.C.M. (Organ Playing), gives correspondence tuition in all theoretical subjects, including Plainchant Accompaniment. Also available for Organ Recitals and Pianoforte Accompanying. Address, Tan Llann, Bath Street, Rhyl, North Wales.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

MATRIC., MUS. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. examinations. Individual postal preparative courses at specially moderate fees. Write for particulars, Geo. H. Skaer, B. Mus., 44a, South Street, Worthing, Sussex.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—FINISHING LESSONS given on replica of R.C.O. organ at National Institute for the Blind, London. Apply, Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., 17, Lanercost Road, London, S.W.2. Candidates should apply early.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—F.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 3/6; 15 Score-reading Tests, 2/6; 24 Basses, or 24 Melodies fully Harmonised, 2/- each set; 12 Complete Test Papers, 3/6; 16 Themes for Extemporisation, fully worked out, 5/-; 24 Sight-Reading Tests, Books 1 and 2, 4/6 each; Brahms's Analysis, 3/6; F. or A. hints, 3/6. A.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 2/6; 27 Vocal Score-reading Tests, 3/6; 24 Hymn Tunes for Transposition, Books, 1, 2, 3, 2/6 each; 24 Accompaniment Tests, Books 1, 2, 5/- each. In MS. Successful Paper Work Coaching. July, 1929, Paper Work Successes, 8. FRCO/L, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Assoc. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Assoc. Board; C.C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. Bac. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and Systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Major Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., 80, Warwick Gardens, London, W.14.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O., Recitalist and Examination Coach. Teacher of Piano, Organ, and Harmony. Studio, 7. Durand Gardens, London, S.W.9.

MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., Registered, Pianoforte, Singing, Theory. Personal or Postal Coaching. General Musical Advice. Bawburg, Norwich.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2.) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3.) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. Bac. successes at Durham, Dublin, and London.
R.C.O. EXAMINER SAYS: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite ability for the examination in view.
347 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
205 F.R.C.O. „ „ „
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1928	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1928
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1929	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1929
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1929	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1929

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

CONDUCTOR available, Orchestral, Choral, Operatic. Also Conducting Classes held. Successes include L.R.A.M. (T.C.). Box No. 17, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

COMPOSER, with ideas of his own, gives Correspondence Lessons in Counterpoint and Harmony. Moderate fee. Trial lesson free. M. T. Goold, Dunkineely.

EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY offered Vocal Student to study Singing, as in Milan, with old well-known Professional. Terms, including board and tuition, £2 10s. weekly. Artiste, c/o Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS (Postal). Profitable profession or side-line taught quickly by Certified Tuner, M.T.A. Instructor to Ministry of Labour. G. W. Bakes, "Hartman House," 15, Jesmond Avenue, Bradford.

LADY PIANIST (A.R.C.M.). — Experienced Accompanist and vocal coach, desires engagements with singers or instrumentalists. In town every day. Box 22, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY (fully-trained G.S.M.) DESIRES ACCOMPANYING WORK to a singer or violinist; can also sing—Mezzo-soprano. Free evenings. Box 19, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST-SECRETARY.—Lady wanted for small Music School, London. Must be good sight-reader and businesslike. Progressive salary. No investment. Write, "Master," c/o 6, Bloomsbury Street, W.C.1.

LADY, residing N.W.3, desires A.R.C.M. Aural Practice, with candidate or student. Address, Miss Smith, 6, Fairfax Mansions, Finchley Road, N.W.3.

MIDDLE-AGED LADY-PIANIST, Retiring from School work at Christmas, seeks post as Companion or Chaperon. Would travel. Knowledge of German acquired abroad. Address, Box 21, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M. desires Violin or Organ lessons in exchange for piano lessons. Baker Street, Regent's Park district. Apply, Pianiste, 16, Penyston Road, Maidenhead.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Liberal Scholarships at the Cathedral School for Boys with good voices. Apply, Rev. G. A. Padfield, Precentor.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL
There is a vacancy for a Lay Vicar-Choral—Alto voice. Stipend, about £160. For particulars apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Subchanter, 9, The Close, Lichfield, Staffs.

EXPERIENCED ALTO WANTED immediately—All Saints', Highgate. Sight-reader essential. Sundays 11 (Choral Eucharist) and 6.30. Friday rehearsal. Salary £20. Apply, P. S. Crawley, "Henham," Wentworth Road, Barnet.

ALTO WANTED.—Friday practice; twice Sunday. £10 p.a. Write, Organist, St. Dunstan's, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

ST. STEPHEN'S, South Dulwich (next door to Sydenham Hill Station).—Tenor. £16. Two Services Sunday, and Friday night practice. Apply "Organist," 80, West Hill, Sydenham, S.E.26.

ST. LAWRENCE JEWRY, E.C., Choral Society: Meeting at the Church, Mondays, 6.30 p.m. Concert and Competition work. WANT A TENOR. Write, Conductor, 83, Kings Avenue, Woodford Green, Essex.

TENOR REQUIRED.—N.W. District. £15 p.a. State age and experience. Box 14, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR.—Fullest experience. Reads any music at sight. Requires post forthwith. Box 17, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR REQUIRED, for St. Matthew, Upper Clapton. Good reader. £20 p.a. Letters to N. C., 25, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

TENOR WANTED for Nonconformist Church in Hampstead. £15 p.a. Rehearsal, Fridays. Reply, Baton, 5, Cholmley Gardens, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

ST. MATTHEW'S, CROYDON
Solo Tenor required. £20. Light duties. Good reader essential. Apply, Organist, 22, Wellesley Road.

S. SEPULCHRE, HOLBORN.—Required at once, young man, preferably ex-Cathedral chorister, to sing Tenor in choir. Must read music easily. Good opportunity for one interested in Church music. Write, F. E. Baker, College of S. Nicolas, Chislehurst, Kent.

TENORS and BASSES for Chorus work in Parish Church Choir. Good reading essential. £15 p.a. Apply, W., 6, Rostrevor Road, Fulham, S.W.6.

BASS-BARITONE VOCALIST, wishing to extend connection, would accept oratorio or other engagements from high-class Choral Societies, in return for expenses only. Highest references for ability and musicianship. Apply, Box 31, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS-BARITONE REQUIRED for Quartette, West-End Church. One Service (Saturday) only. Plainsong. £12. Box 20, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS WANTED (deep voice, if possible).—Church, N.W. £20. Also ALTO. £20. Address, Choir, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE SAVOY AGENCY
SOLO and CHORUS MEN SUPPLIED for Church Services, Weddings, &c., Choral Society Concerts; only experienced men registered, and can be engaged at shortest notice. Apply, G. Hugh Weedon, 102, Park Avenue, South Hornsey, N.8. 'Phone, HOLBORN 6966. Please note new address.

ST. LAWRENCE COLLEGE, RAMSGATE
A resident Organist and Director of Music will be required in January at St. Lawrence College. It will be an advantage if the teaching of Drawing, or some other subject, could be offered as a subsidiary. Commencing salary £250 p.a., resident. Apply, in the first instance, to Dr. J. W. Ivimey, Director of Music, Marlborough College, Wilts.

ST PAUL'S, BALSALL HEATH, BIRMINGHAM. Organist-Choirmaster wanted. Churchman; fine organ. Salary, £50. Apply, stating experience, to the Vicar.

CHRISTCHURCH, GIPSY HILL.—Organist-Choirmaster wanted. Congregational, Evangelical Services. Communicant. Experienced. Qualifications. Apply, in writing, to Vicar.

CITY CHURCH.—St. Stephen, Coleman Street, E.C.2. Organist and Choirmaster required. Churchmanship moderate. Three-manual organ. Salary, £80 p.a. Silence negative. Apply, by letter only, Vicar, F. C. Baker.

S. MARY BOLTONS, S.W.10.—Mr. George Ryan, F.R.C.O. (Turpin prize-winner), has vacancies for organ and paper-work pupils. Assistant-Organist required. Fine modern organ. Write, 15, Glebe Road, Hornsey, N.8.

BURNHAM-ON-SEA, SOMERSET.—Organist and Choirmaster wanted, Lady-Day, 1930. Keen Churchman. Efficient choir trainer, with experience; good with men and boys. Salary, £100 p.a. Apply, giving references and qualifications, to Prebendary Wake, Vicarage.

ORGANIST: Required for Wesleyan Methodist Church, Bayswater, London, W., Organist and Choirmaster. Methodist preferred. Salary, £30 p.a. Applications, with testimonials, to J. H. S., 76, St. Quintin Avenue, W.10.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Willesden Presbyterian Church. Three-manual organ. Apply, with copies of testimonials, stating experience and salary required, to Robt. J. Taylor, 193, Holland Road, Harlesden, N.W.10.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Stoke Newington Presbyterian Church. Apply by letter, stating experience, qualifications, and salary, to F. M. Hatchett, 62, Lordship Park, N.16.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIR-TRAINER. Communicant. For Minehead. Salary, £80 p.a. Possibility of pupils. Send qualifications and testimonials to the Vicar, by Friday, November 8.

ORGANIST CHOIRMASTER WANTED.—Evangelical Churchman. State experience and salary required. Churchwardens, c/o St. Luke's Vicarage, West Kilburn, W.9.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for Loughton Union Church. Apply, stating experience and salary required, to the Choirmaster, P. Stevens, Trapps Hill, Loughton.

FLORENCE HOLLOWAY, A.T.C.L., ORGANIST (recommended by Mr. Herbert Hodge), is free to deputise on Sundays or week-days. 65, Marylands Road, Maida Hill, W.9.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST-CHOIRMISTRESS, L.R.A.M., seeks appointment. Ten years last post. Box 18, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

F. R.C.O. (experienced) seeks post as Organist and Choirmaster. Excellent choir-trainer. Recitalist. Box 15, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

KEEN ORGAN STUDENT (some experience) will give services as assistant in return for practice. N.W. preferred. A. L. G., 46, St. George's Road, Golders Green, N.W.11.

SPECIALIST IN ORGAN TEACHING arranges single lessons, and short revision courses; also an Organ Class on Saturdays, at 3 p.m. Particulars from J. O. S., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.

ORGAN LESSONS AT ST. STEPHEN'S, WALBROOK, E.C.4. GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

F. R.C.O. HOOD FOR SALE.—Good condition. £1. Box 13, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EXCEPTIONALLY FINE HOLT ORGAN.—Two manuals and pedals (radiating and concave)—5 Swell, 4 Great, 2 Pedal, 5 couplers, 2 composition—balance swell pedal, ivory keys and stop-knobs—hydraulic engine—very handsome polished mahogany case, bench, and engine cabinet. First-class condition throughout. £130. Real bargain. T., 26, New Station Road, Fishponds, Bristol.

CHAMBER ORGAN, designed by Bonavia-Hunt. Superb tone. Suit room or small Church, £175. Full particulars from F.R.C.O., Colborne Villa, Ruardean.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS.—One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 45, Grays Inn Road, London, W.C.1.

ORGAN-PEDAL ATTACHMENT for Piano. New. Complete with stool, £7. R., 165, Waterloo Road, Uxbridge.

WANTED, a good, Second-hand, Two-Manual Reed Organ with Pedals, suitable for a small Church. E. Lane, Oakhurst, Dorchester.

ORGAN MUSIC WANTED.—Surplus copies or volumes. Send particulars, condition, prices for cash, to Organist, The Priest's House, Broxbourne, Herts.

BECHSTEIN Overstrung Upright Grand for Sale. Beautiful tone. Condition as new. Only 59 guineas (cheaper than a mediocre instrument). 49, Headstone Lane, Harrow, Mdx.

FOR SALE.—Æolian Duo-Art Reproducing Pianola Piano. Electric model. Cost £200; would accept £125, or near offer. Harvey Proctor, 73, Ladbroke Grove, W.11.

PIANO, fine German, Norman & Beard Pneumatic Pedals; ORGAN, Alexandre, 22 stops, couplers, and holding pedal Bass. Bargains. Must sell. 175, Clapham Road, S.W.9.

GOTHIC HARP WANTED.—Must be in good condition. Box 16, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VIRGIL CLAVIER FOR SALE.—Perfect condition. £5 10*s.*, or offer. Also reading desk. W. L., 90, Fairlands Avenue, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

VIOLA, by Viullaume, FOR SALE.—Large size; very fine, rich tone; suitable for solo or orchestral work; perfect condition. Brown, Marton Moor Road, Nunthorpe, Yorks.

'CELLO OUTFIT, complete.—Violoncello, Bertholini, superior instrument, well marked, best ebony fittings, full, mellow tone. Full size, beautiful condition. Also very expensive bow and waterproof cover. A fine instrument for solo or orchestral playing. Owner going abroad. £16 complete. Box 1187, L. P. E., 112 St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.2.

WANTED.—FULL-SIZE 'CELLO and BOW. Moderate price. Apply, E. F. S., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

COMPLETING SALES ORGANIZATION

One or two men or women of literary taste needed for dignified and congenial representation. Spare or full time; generous remuneration; no outlay. Apply, Box 12, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

KETTERING S.S.U. 21st EISTEDDFOD, March 1, 1930. Open Classes. Syllabus free. Apply, Secretary, 108, Windmill Avenue, Kettering.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF GUITARISTS.—Founded, February, 1929. Particulars from Secretary, 10, Marloes Road, Kensington, W.8.

AUTHORS AND COMPOSERS.—Songs, Lyrics, Piano Solos, and Suites wanted for publication. Send MSS. to The Carlton Publications, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

TO MUSICIANS.—MSS. copied at 1*s.* per page. Neat and accurate work by one who thoroughly understands music. M. L., 90, Underhill Road, Dulwich, S.E.22.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., January, 1930. Important. A New Series (No. 3) of Six Model Essays on "The English Language," with "Hints" on writing the essay. Also Series Nos. 1 and 2, on same book. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* per each Series to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and other examinations. SPECIAL PAPER showing how to obtain success in these important tests. All candidates should secure this paper. Write, enclosing 4*s.* 6*d.*, to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

No. 1.—SET TO MUSIC BY HENRY T. TILTMAN.

Price Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

PIANOS

By Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer, Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

AND OTHER CELEBRATED MAKERS

THE Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

APPLY FOR LISTS:

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-6, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1 'Phone: MUSEUM 0439

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT . . . .
CENTRAL HEATING . . . .
TELEPHONE . . . LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

FULL PARTICULARS FROM

STEINWAY & SONS

THE NEW STEINWAY HALL

1 & 2, GEORGE STREET, CONDUIT STREET, LONDON, W.1

'Phone: Mayfair 6641-5

Music Books for Christmas Presents

MARTIN SHAW 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

UP TO NOW

An entertaining musical autobiography, containing friendly gossip and anecdote concerning many who play an important part in musical and artistic England to-day. Some of the persons who enter into Mr. Shaw's narrative are his brother Geoffrey Shaw, John Ireland, Isadora Duncan, Gordon Craig, R. Vaughan Williams, Augustus John, and John Masefield.

'Mr. Martin Shaw has won a place amongst our contemporary composers, and he has done much in other ways to serve music. . . . But the impression left on the reader of this delightful book, which is full of good stories, is that Mr. Martin Shaw has . . . considered that the greatest art of all is to live à propos. Hence his zest and his sympathy have been alike unfailing, and every page of his book reflects a singularly charming personality.'—Daily Telegraph.

R. R. TERRY 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

A FORGOTTEN PSALTER AND OTHER ESSAYS

'This book gives us the whole Terry—the musical antiquary and scholar, the pioneer practical worker, the mordant controversialist, the humorist and satirist, the warmly human man, and the deeply feeling artist.'—Universe.

MARJORY KENNEDY-FRASER 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

A LIFE OF SONG

A vividly-written and intensely personal autobiography, in which Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser tells of her voyages off the coasts of Scotland in the quest for Hebridean folk-songs, and of her travels and concert-tours all over the world with her remarkably interesting family.

HARVEY GRACE 6*s.* net.

A MUSICIAN AT LARGE

Mr. Harvey Grace (Feste) needs no introduction to readers of the Musical Times. This collection of essays covers a wide variety of subjects, such as 'Humour in Music,' 'Brows, High and Low,' 'A Defence of Opera,' 'Cliché and Commonplace.'

JOHN GOSS AN ANTHOLOGY OF SONG

Fifty Classical Songs for

5*s.*

net, in paper; Cloth Boards, 8*s.* 6*d.* net.

AN IDEAL GIFT FOR ANY SINGER

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, London, W.1

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1929 LATEST MODELS

BABY GRAND	... 100	Gns.
UPRIGHT GRAND	60	Gns.
UPRIGHT PLAYER	100	Gns.

FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Reconditioned Pianos, Grands and Uprights, at greatly reduced prices for cash or hire purchase terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

SELFRIDGE'S

WONDERFUL OFFER OF FINE OLD VIOLINS

We are offering fine old instruments, specially chosen for their excellent tonal qualities and good preservation, on our famous "NO DEPOSIT" payment terms. This wonderful offer must appeal to violinists, both professional and amateur. We give hereunder a list of some of the excellent values offered, and any model is delivered after the first small monthly payment. Why not write for fuller particulars to-day?

VIENNESE VIOLIN—Joura, 1860. The tonal quality of this instrument is most appealing. A very excellent value.
Or by 12 monthly payments of £1:0:3 Cash price 11 Gns.

Fine old SAXON VIOLIN (abt. 1840). Resonant tone and in excellent preservation.
Or by 24 monthly payments of 13/6 Cash price 14 Gns.

Fine old MITTENWALD (Kloz School, 1770. An excellent instrument, specially recommended for the keen critic.
Or by 24 monthly payments of £1:6:11 Cash price 28 Gns.

Violin by J. B. VUILLAUME—Paris, 1849. (With guarantee.) A value that is seldom to be met with.
Or by 36 monthly payments of £1:8:10 Cash price 45 Gns.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENT DEPARTMENT—THIRD FLOOR

Selfridge & Co., Ltd., Oxford Street, London, W.1.

Trinity College of Music

(INSTITUTED 1872)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., P.C., G.C.V.O.

Principal:
E. STANLEY ROPER, M.A., Mus.B.

Controller of Examinations:
EDWARD D'EVRY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

Wednesday, November 6th, at 3 p.m. Lecture-Demonstration by Major J. T. Bavin, on "Pianoforte Class Teaching."

Wednesday, November 13th & 27th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concert.

Wednesday, November 20th, at 3 p.m. Recital by pupils of Mr. Fred J. Gostelow, F.R.C.O.

Wednesday, Dec. 4th, at 3 p.m. Junior School Students' Concert.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

THE ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED

SPRINGTIME in the FOREST

SIX PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE:

THE PIPER OF SPRING
QUEEN MAB SUMMONS HER COURT
SONG OF THE RIVULET
MOONLIGHT DANCE OF THE GNOMES
A FAIRY LULLABY
DREAM OF THE WATER-LILY

By
HAROLD GREENHILL

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK
(Repeatedly featured at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society) PRICE
Ring out with jocund chime ... ... 3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys ... ... 3d.
Welcome, Yule ... ... 3d.
Christmas Day ... ... 3d.
When Christ was born ... ... 3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem ... ... 3d.
THE STAR OF THE EAST. A Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS. A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern) ... ... 1s.
ADAMS, THOMAS
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price, in one volume 9d.
separately, each 3d.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

DERING, RICHARD
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts) ... ... 4d.
GOSS, JOHN
Behold, I bring you good tidings ... ... 3d.
HANDL, JACOB
Behold, thou shalt conceive ... ... 4d.
HOPKINS, E. J.
Let us now go even unto Bethlehem ... ... 3d.
LASSO, ORLANDO DI
Let Zion resound with praise ... ... 4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts) ... ... 4d.
Specimen copies sent free.

Bosworth's Famous Manuscript Paper
Most beautiful writing surface. All rulings. Upright or oblong. SENT FREE—Specimens and Price List.

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd. 8, Heddon Street, Regent Street,
Music Publishers ——— LONDON, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED

No. 33.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET IN G

By BEETHOVEN

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

No. 34.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET

from "Berenice"

By HANDEL

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1, 1929

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1040)

ANTON RUBINSTEIN

(Born November 28, 1829)

BY LEONID SABANEEV

It is a general law of musical history that persons of very great authority during their lifetime are more or less undeservedly forgotten, or at all events underrated, after death, whilst those who are denied recognition so long as they are alive are awarded posthumous fame, sometimes beyond their deserts. In this we see the expression of the principle of compensation and equilibrium, or, more accurately, the application of the law of reaction—ideas and tendencies of one generation become wearisome to its successors, who involuntarily gravitate in other directions.

Anton Rubinstein was one of the most brilliant and typical figures of the 19th century. There was a time when he alone was judged worthy to stand beside Liszt in the world of pianism; these two were usually regarded as representing the supreme effort of pianistic genius. In many respects their destinies were similar. It is true that Rubinstein was not an imposingly romantic figure, and his life, unlike Liszt's, was not adorned with the fantastic halo of a legend. Liszt, an artist in the best sense of the term, with a dazzling career in his youth; Liszt, the lion of all the salons, a mystical mind, brilliantly educated, the conqueror of all hearts, a man of imposing appearance, whose career was a fantastic romance; Liszt, ending his life of eternal, beautiful, and successful pose with the extraordinarily effective gesture of religious consecration—this Liszt was infinitely more impressive, more subtle, more fantastic than Rubinstein, whose aspect is one of reserve and moderation. Rubinstein is a belated classic rather than a romantic, a son born out of due time of the Beethoven period, when music invoked mankind and humanity but had not yet been dissolved in the intoxicating aromas of romanticism. It was not mere chance that brought him into the history of the performer's art as the 'lion of music,' as the finest interpreter of Beethoven; even his features (as many have remarked, not without justification) resembled Beethoven's, and the resemblance may have had a more profound origin, testifying to a similarity in the psychical life of these two geniuses.

But if Rubinstein seems to be rather lean and Spartan in his sobriety, and colourless in comparison with his great co-eval and teacher, Liszt, in other respects they have many features in common. Both are noble classical figures on the artistic horizon. Ardent idealists, artists to the marrow of their bones, they did a great work for art, which they regarded, not as an idle diversion, but as a service to mankind. Both began their careers as child-performers and won early laurels and the enthusiastic applause of the public. They were not aristocrats, but belonged to a refined circle and absorbed all that was best in their surroundings. Supremely sensitive and large-hearted, they are examples of a lofty artistic spirit; it is sufficient to remember Liszt's noble gesture in connection with the raising of funds for the Beethoven memorial, and Rubinstein's sacrifice of nearly the whole of his fortune for the purposes of art. The spirit of envy, unfortunately so widespread in these days, was quite alien to them—they were generous-souled men, whose greatest happiness was to discover and develop the talents and genius of others.

Both, again, after achieving fame as pianists, devoted the second half of their lives to composition. Their path was very difficult, since in both cases the composer was always overshadowed by the performer, and their creative work received but little recognition from their contemporaries, to whom it seemed to be an unimportant addition to the supreme achievements of these pianists of genius.

But here their destinies and significance begin to diverge. Rubinstein, as I have remarked, really belonged to the Beethoven period. This is apparent in every feature—from the severe, somewhat Spartan make-up of his psychology, from the positivism of his convictions, to the conservatism of his musical opinions. Rubinstein was in no way a drawing-room lion nor a hero of romance; he was a man of stern principle, and the positive trend of his ideas, most characteristic of him, was, inter alia, distinctive of Beethoven's middle period. He was by no means a romantic and still less a mystic, but an adherent of culture and civilization in the scientific sense in which the terms were understood by the 19th century. In his ideas he was a convinced conservative, and moreover an active and militant conservative. Liszt, on the other hand, held advanced and radical views on art, and boldly associated himself with the most modern tendencies of the age, often to his own detriment. The consequence was that Liszt, ignored by his contemporaries, was afterwards (almost in our own time) recognised to be a genius very nearly equal to Wagner, whilst Rubinstein, whose æsthetics were connected with the Beethovenian ideas of the beginning of last century, was denied that consolation.

Rubinstein's conservatism, however, was not fortuitous, but was dictated by the actual surroundings of Russian art, to which, in spite of his Westernism, he was entirely attached.

Thanks to his eclecticism, to his neutrality in every sphere, to the fact that he was not too ardent in his convictions, he was fated to come to the ground between the various tendencies, and was never really the leader of any one of them. Of himself he said truly: 'To the Christians I am a Jew, to the Jews a Christian; to the Russians a German, to the Germans a Russian; to the innovators a conservative, to the conservatives an innovator.' All this came about because his rôle in the history of the Russian musical art was one of enlightenment. To him was allotted something unusually essential to Russian music, which, owing to the peculiar history of that music, had not come into it at the proper time. That something was the musical culture of Western Europe, which was to a large extent foreign to Russia, even in the middle of the 19th century. Russian music was born late, it was late in reaching its flowering period and in creating a musical culture; when it arrived, in the era of romanticism, it found one already prepared and spread for it. I have previously pointed out that the Russian romanticism was organically none other than that of the West. There it was a protest, a revolution, the subversion of certain outworn principles which had eaten deeply into the flesh and blood of music but had lasted too long. In Russia there was no possibility of protest or revolution, since no memory remained of the foundations and there was nothing to overthrow. The romantic innovation was to the Russian musician a savoury dish à la mode, obligingly presented to the Russian table by the assiduous and inventive Europeans. In Russia there had been created neither a musical culture nor a solid class of professional musicians, a class which had existed in Europe for more than eight hundred years; there were only individual and exceptionally talented and daring composers, and the impetuosity and disregard of authority characteristic of youth.

Rubinstein, with his reflecting mind and his instinct for culture, was a Westerner by conviction; he saw clearly that Russian music must have a cultural basis, and that for this purpose the professionally-trained musician was indispensable. His gifted and disinterested labours—for which he should be eternally honoured by Russian musicians—were wholly conditioned by this conviction.

But musical culture always implies musical tradition. Rubinstein's reverence for the great works bequeathed by the European masters was such that he could not but be a traditionalist. And as his actual task was the implanting of professionalism and tradition, he was not concerned with innovation, however organized it might be. He felt instinctively that Russian music was not justified in introducing new things until it had undergone the evolutionary stages, even though in a brief and contracted form, which led to the achievements of the music of the past.

In this he was profoundly right, though much that he did had not the desired results, because, as the child of his age and of his own (Russian) culture, he himself was not a finished musician. His insufficient grounding in the culture of Western Europe was manifested in many ways, such as his manner of composition (to which I shall refer later); his vacillation between the different schools; the eclecticism of his opinions; his inconsistency, due not to a lack of conviction but simply to imperfect knowledge and understanding.

It was too late in the day to insert a link of musical classicism in the chain of Russian history, since Russian music had in fact associated itself with romanticism, with a subsequent stage of development. Hence Rubinstein's trend proved to be not conservative—there was nothing to conserve—but reactionary, and he became the enemy of innovation and new aspirations. In this lies his tragedy, and to some extent the tragedy of the whole of Russian music, which also did not contrive to pass through the classical phase in due time; its belated classicism has assumed in our days the form of a feeble caricature.

Rubinstein is of importance to Russian music as the introducer of professional training and education, as the father of all its conservatories, and as a great Russian artist and notable composer. Furthermore, he has a world-wide significance, since his pianism is almost on the same scale as Liszt's, and his compositions, though they have not obtained recognition, reveal an exceptional intensity of creative power, and give him the right to a prominent place amongst the composers contemporary with him.

In comparing him with Liszt as a world phenomenon we observe, first of all, that his culture was considerably inferior. Liszt was one of the most enlightened and widely-read men of his day, a master of literary style, and gifted with exceptional taste. Rubinstein, on the other hand, was born in an out-of-the-way place of a poor Jewish family, had hardly any education other than musical, and arrived at his convictions by his own mental and intellectual efforts; a self-taught man, he delighted like a neophyte in the grandeur of the cultural attainments of the West, and resolved to transplant them to his native soil. There is much that is naïve and touching in this enthusiasm for the West, and it brings to memory the figure of another adept of culture, also a man of genius and as uncultured, or even more so—the figure of Peter the Great. The rôles of both were identical; they brought Western culture to Russia, instinctively feeling the necessity for it, but unable with their insufficiently cultivated minds to grasp all its details. There is much in common between Peter's attempts at innovation, often crude and simple, and Rubinstein's methods of implanting musical professionalism. We are astonished to-day at the curious discrepancy between the fundamental principle—the introduction of culture—and the comparatively uncultured results achieved.

In coming forward as a composer Rubinstein was impelled by the desire to write the music of a professional; he was one of the first in Russia, where previously the only musicians had been serfs (in the 18th century) and aristocrats. He wanted by his work to declare war on the amateurism incarnated in the creations of the 'mighty band.' As a matter of fact, Rubinstein's compositions contain as many typically amateur traits as those of his foes. His extravagant output, his extraordinary fertility—with which a lack of self-criticism had something to do—was due to his original interpretation of professionalism. It was his protest against the protracted methods of the aristocrats and amateurs, who took forty years to write a single symphony, who, like Moussorgsky and Borodin, could never finish a big composition. Rubinstein tried to show by his example how a professional ought to work; he produced six symphonies, some dozens of operas, oratorios, and ballets, and a vast quantity of chamber and orchestral music. The list of his compositions reminds one of the catalogues of the Kapellmeister music turned out by the most fruitful German writers in that genre, with which Rubinstein's manner really has much in common. This striving to create in bulk, to consolidate, as it were, in Russian music the position of professionalism and Westernism, conditions the style of his compositions—a style which I can only compare to that of the feuilletonist, who writes at headlong speed in a fashion peculiar to his craft, sends the results to press without delay, and never turns to them again. Rubinstein did not revise his creations, but wrote them down almost offhand, and his orchestration may serve as a curious example of an abstract attitude to that art; he does not score, but, so to speak, distributes the individual notes amongst the individual instruments as though on the whole it were a matter of indifference who played them. His creative work is hasty and haphazard, and this characteristic carelessness may provide us with the most powerful objection to it and the strongest argument for its composer's lack of profound culture.

The style of this music is neutral. In most cases Rubinstein shows himself to be a successor of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, but his defective sense of style leads him to blend these influences with those of Glinka, the Italian school, Meyerbeer, and even Liszt. In his symphonic and chamber works he is Mendelssohnian without the stereotyped form and feeling for style of the original, but, on the other hand, he often approaches Beethoven in the intensity and dramatic quality of his emotions, e.g., in the fourth Pianoforte Concerto. In opera and music for the stage he is more like Meyerbeer and Glinka. His work is inundated with an abundance of what are called commonplaces. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied that we find in it oases of inspiration, which compel us to bear in mind his rank as a musician, and to admit that, but for the regrettable adoption of the theory of professionalism so curiously interpreted by him, he might certainly have developed into a composer of genius. The oases of great thoughts, and even of grandiose conceptions, are evidence that, if he had not written at journalistic speed, there was no reason why he should not have been the proclaimer of a great musical idea, possibly not of an innovating nature but of the Brahms type. These oases are scattered throughout many of his compositions; we come across them in the opera 'The Demon,' in 'The Tower of Babel,' in the Pianoforte Concertos, and the songs. Like Peter the Great, who wanted by his reforms to make Russia traverse in ten years the whole history of European development, Rubinstein seems to have proposed by means of his compositions to fill in the line of evolution from the strict style of romanticism which was missing from Russian music. Unfortunately, both men were insufficiently cultured to appreciate the impossibility of achieving their aims, and to realise that they were on the wrong path.

Nevertheless—and especially now, when the passions that raged around the name of Rubinstein have subsided and his compositions as a whole are forgotten—in surveying his works one must at times be amazed at the grandiose creative energy which was flung into everything, which wanted to grasp the unattainable, to incorporate in itself the whole of history, and this not for selfish ends, but with the idea of contributing to the culture of Russia. Perhaps this is why he could not concentrate his energy in any one direction, and in that direction achieve results of which his genius was in all probability fully capable. Rubinstein bartered his really colossal and powerful creative talent for trivialities, and frittered it away in so many directions that he ended by creating nothing genuinely great in any of them.

The neglect of his compositions began during his life-time, and his death (in 1894) vastly accelerated the process. By the strange irony of fate, the creations of this remarkable man who devoted his whole life to working for Russian music have somehow not become an organic part of that music; in it he has remained an alien, possibly on account of his origin, but more probably because he failed to divine the general tendency of the age, which in Russia, as elsewhere, dictated the taste for romanticism and nationalism, in spite of the course taken by Rubinstein in the direction of classicism and internationalism. He was tragically right when he said, 'To the Russians I am a German.'

But if he was not fortunate in his compositions, his pianism was beyond doubt. His genius for the pianoforte was not so universal, so subtle and potent from a cultural point of view, as Liszt's, but in the elemental lyrical and dynamic moods its power was unquestionable. Rubinstein founded a school in Russia from which came not a few first-class pianists. His playing was amazing in its vigour and its laconic vehemence. His technique was not beyond reproach, and in a burst of artistic ecstasy he often smeared and played badly, but the value lay in his general line of treatment, and he imparted to his audience an extraordinary feeling of exaltation. I was able to be present at his last historical concerts only, and afterwards, not long before his death, heard him in a private circle, when he was in bad health and nearly blind (he had a disease of the eyelids which prevented him from raising them). He still played with inspiration and insight, and like no one else, the sonatas of Beethoven, the composer to whom he was most akin. It is difficult to say how much that I felt was organic and how much was dictated by a pious attitude to his name and authority, exceptional and unprecedented in the Russian musical world, but these performances left on me an indelible impression, beyond comparison with those of the great virtuosi who came after him.

Unlike other great pianists who were also composers—such as Beethoven, Liszt, and Chopin—Rubinstein did not create a style of his own; nay more, he is old-fashioned in his writing for the pianoforte. It is not easy to decide whether this was due to his general conservatism, or whether it is a further proof that essentially he was not a composer.

But his supreme merit, for which he is entitled to be perpetually remembered, consists in his disinterested efforts on behalf of Russian musical enlightenment. As the creator of the Russian conservatories, he set the Russian musical world going, the nucleus of which was the Imperial Musical Society, also founded by him, and the Conservatory connected with it. Henceforth the history of Russian music may be said to be the history of the Conservatory. There Rubinstein's ideas grew and gathered strength, and though he was unable, much as he desired it, to introduce professionalism into music, this was achieved under his successors. He was thus the originator of Russian musical academism, which, in the persons of Tchaikovsky, Tanéïèv, Arensky, Rachmaninov, and Glazounov, replaced the innovating and romantic nationalism. The contest between the conservative and Western centre created by Rubinstein and the revolutionary and amateur nationalist group was prolonged and obstinate, but by the end of last century it had lost its intensity and we have since witnessed the reconciliation of the former foes. The most prominent representatives of the national romanticism—Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin, and Liadov—joined the Conservatory, thereby giving practical testimony to the soundness and expediency of Rubinstein's work.

Of his innumerable compositions, many of which had a great success during his lifetime, only 'The Demon,' 'The Tower of Babel' (a sacred opera), the pianoforte concertos, and a few songs have remained in the musical repertory. History has consigned his chamber music and his symphonies to the grave. In spite of this, however, it cannot be denied that this forgotten composer has strongly influenced even his musical antagonists, to say nothing of his companions in arms. We find traces of his manner in the works of Tchaikovsky, Tanéïèv, and Arensky, in Cui, and actually in Rimsky-Korsakov. Perhaps the hundredth anniversary of his birth may arouse an interest in his creations, and may help us to discover something of value which escaped the eyes of his contemporaries, blinded by the polemics of the day. I would draw attention to the curious and interesting resemblance between some of Stravinsky's latest compositions and the instrumental manner and style of Rubinstein. Nowadays many undeservedly forgotten and little appreciated names are being rehabilitated, and amongst them a place must be found for this powerful and colossal creative personality; much that he achieved must be scrutinised more calmly and objectively than has hitherto been possible to us.

(Translated by S. W. Pring.)

UGLY TERMINOLOGY

By Alexander Brent-Smith

There is, or should be, a proverb to the effect that when the technician comes in at the door beauty flies out of the window. When, for instance, the layman gives names to surrounding objects he generally invents something picturesque and humorous, but as soon as the technical expert appears, the invention of names becomes harsh and uncouth: even the giving of names is uglified into nomenclature.

There is no branch of learning entirely free in this respect from the evils of technical control. Even the prehistoric ages, formerly presented to us with all the charm of poetry and romance, are stripped of their beauty and simplicity, and are re-clothed in the hideous vesture of expert classification. Once we thought of our first parents under the familiar names Adam and Eve. These names are attractive, but more than that, they present the truth of the origin of man in a poetical form. To-day these same figures have been transformed by experts into Mr. and Mrs. Pithecanthropus erectus. The change may have increased their dignity, but it has certainly reduced their old-world charm.

Again, think how cruelly the most lovely of all subjects, botany, has suffered from technical control. Once upon a time our great-grandfathers, supported by their wives and daughters, strolled through the newly-made garden (in those days they did not build old-world gardens) admiring sweet-williams, love-lies-bleeding, foxgloves, and other simple flowers with suggestive, poetical names. Now that happy method of spending half an hour is no more. After lunch my hostess carries me off to look at the garden. It is a bitterly cold day—April at her unkindest. I long to be sitting by the fire, but her question, 'You would like to see the garden, wouldn't you?' is so obviously an injunction that refusal is impossible. We stop before a vast stretch of brown earth ornamented with beautifully printed metal labels. Of course there are no flowers to be seen, and even if there were they would not be flowers that have attractive names. All flowers have now been edited and cultivated by specialists who crown their infamy by tacking on a Latinisation of their own surnames. A gardener, let us call him Jincksman, experiments with a montbretia producing a really amazing flower. Does he call it Cupid's Hour-glass or something like that? Certainly not; he calls it Montbretia Jincksmaniensis sulphurea et grandiflora (or something equally horrible). Our modern hostess then, stopping before a metal label, seizes our arm and exclaims, 'These are my wonderful Montbretia Jincskmaniensis sulphurea et grandiflora,' and she expects to retain our interest.

Other branches of learning have suffered, no doubt, but none more than music. There is something rather humiliating in the ugly terminology used by musicians, especially when used in the hearing of the unmusical. First we have the ugly method of key reference, so different from the attractive names used by the Greeks in their music. Three thousand years ago, when you had finished playing a little piece on the flute and were asked by Xantippe what it was, you found it pleasant to be able to say, 'Oh! just a little gavotte in the Lydian mode,' or 'Aristides his air in the Phrygian mode.' How much more attractive your compositions appear when thus referred to than when spoken of as something in F sharp minor or in A flat major. Such alphabetical methods simply give opportunities for the unmusical and wags to expose their puerilities by saying, 'Now, let 's hear your Sonata in Z sharp or Q blunt.' And how tiresome such poor jesting is!

But it is not only key references which are ugly; even the names of lovely chords are uncouth and mathematical. When an enthusiastic novice says, 'Oh, I do like that chord; whatever is it called?' it is passing from the sublime to the ridiculous to have to say, 'Oh, that is a dominant major ninth.' Why did not our musical grammarians fit out their musical terminology with apt and pleasing names? For instance, a dominant major thirteenth might be called a Rosabelle; a dominant minor ninth with its sweet sadness might be called a Doloria; a harsh augmented chord might be a Styrax. Then a text-book on musical appreciation, instead of looking like algebra, would be as lovely as a poem of Swinburne.

In regard to the naming of their compositions, there are two types of composer, one choosing fanciful names, the other preferring the cold and unhelpful titles such as fugue and sonata. No doubt there is something rather heroic in writing sonatas with no alluring sub-titles, but from the ordinary man's point of view there is something slightly forbidding and undistinguished in the bald statement 'Sonata in G minor, Op. 22.' Still more unseemly is it from the same point of view that a lovely piece of music should turn out to be merely an Allegretto scherzando from Op. 93. How much more striking and arresting are such names as 'In der Nacht,' 'La cathédrale engloutie'! Though the knowledgable musician prefers the austere type of reference (Op. 21) to the fanciful titles of Schumann, there is something rather valuable in a name which predisposes a listener to an understanding, if not enjoyment, of the music. How valuable to a novel, commercially, is a good title! How difficult, too, to read a poem with an uncouth or uninformative title. Who would expect to find really beautiful and profound lines of poetry in a poem headed, 'To the Spade of a Friend. Composed while we were labouring together in his Pleasure-Ground,' by Wordsworth; or in another poem, 'To a young ass, its mother being tethered near it,' by Coleridge.

There are two composers who have been conspicuously happy in their names—Brahms and Chopin. Both avoided the formality of Mozart and Beethoven, and the rather fanciful titles of Schumann. The former with his generic titles 'Capriccio' and 'Intermezzo' completely dodged the fanciful, yet secured nice-sounding names. The latter is even more successful, because he has provided a series of pleasing titles which stir the imagination without the aid of literary or pictorial help.

On the whole it is safe to say, 'All the world loves a title.'

THE ARTS IN REVOLT

By Rutland Boughton

(Continued from October number, p. 882.)

Michel Angelo was like Botticelli in that he was of the popular party, drew ideas from Dante, and sympathised with Savonarola in his revolt against the decadent Roman Church of the Renaissance; but Michel Angelo seems to have been weak both physically and morally, and took extraordinary pains to hide his opinions. In a grave political crisis, when Florence was besieged by the papal forces, the artist was appointed engineer in charge of the military defences; his nerves could not stand the strain, and he ran away. Later in life he was again at great pains to avoid physical danger. It is not for us to blame him on such scores, but to understand, if possible, how his ideas and circumstances influenced the nature of his work.

He lived at a time when the Catholic Church was being changed from an international and popular organization to a subservient machine of those princes in Western Europe who were intent on dividing up Christendom among themselves, and so needed to popularise the idea of separate nationalities as a desirable reform in the common interest. To what lengths those rulers were prepared to go is evident, not only from the lives of the Borgias, but from the careers of Louis XI. and Henry VIII. It must have seemed to Michel Angelo, as to many another careful man, not merely dangerous, but hopeless and foolish to oppose the current tendency. The conception of Christendom as a federation of Europe under the ægis of the Catholic Church, with guilds of artisans as guarantors of the common freedom, had flamed up in a glory of beauty and hope, but had quickly given way to local autocracies based upon the growing financial power. So it happened that despite Michel Angelo's sympathies with the popular cause, he spent the greater part of his life in the service of anti-popular popes and princelings. His own feelings of revolt were in a state of lifelong repression. The effect of that repression is singularly interesting for our present study.

Botticelli had been brought to a dead end. Michel Angelo, living in a later and even more hopeless time, had before him the alternatives of renunciation of his natural life-work and service of the enemy. He chose the service; but mark the result of the falseness of his position and its influence upon his art.

Like Dante and Botticelli, he started with a complete acceptance of the traditions handed down to him by the sculptors and painters who preceded him. Some of them, like Donatello, cannot be said to have been on the side of the people; yet they tended as artists towards that realism which inevitably leads to an objective presentment of facts, and such statements are generally disapproved by tyrannical powers. So Michel Angelo, living a life of suppressed opinion and accepting an artistic tradition based upon a truthful statement of facts, became, like many another artist of declining Christendom, an allegorist or symbolist. The large and muscular figures of his pictures may have owed something to his sculptural outlook, but, as Mr. Upton Sinclair notes in his 'Mammon-art,' they seem in some ways parallel with Nietszche's gospel of the Superman—also with the old Jewish hopes for a Messiah, and the recurrent faith among oppressed peoples that a great leader shall presently arise to deliver them. However, in Michel Angelo's case the portrayal of superhumanity by no means went hand-in-hand with the expression of increasing divinity, spirituality, and beauty; on the contrary, it was associated with an increasingly lurid force of which the terrible and almost malign Christ-figure in 'The Last Judgment' is the culminating expression.

Starting, then, in the tradition, he seems to have moved from it only in so far as was necessary to express his otherwise unuttered feelings of revolt. There was some 'forcing of the language' of art, as Mr. Gerald Davies so finely expresses it in his monograph; that would appear to have been inevitable when the artist's natural feelings were denied a free utterance in the direct tradition. He dared not paint a picture with a traditional devil arm-in-arm with the recognised head of the Christian Church, but he could subtly express the same thought by placing the mouth of his hell immediately above the high altar. He dared not show that popes and princelings were assuming the functions of imperialists and usurers, but he could take the opportunity of one of their not infrequent exploits as assassins to sculpt a figure of Brutus. Not his the courage of the man of action, but the doubly sharp and bitter tongue of one who is not allowed openly to state his own opinions. The bust of Brutus was conceived according to the tradition. Similarly, though the gentle Christ of the early 'Pieta' grew into the fierce denouncer of 'The Last Judgment,' there was no attempt to revolt against the traditional technique, through the conventions of which only was there any chance for the symbolism to be rightly interpreted by those whom it might concern.

Michel Angelo had a real revolt to express. He dared not state it explicitly. So much the more reason to preserve a sufficiency of the convention which would enforce his meaning in the eyes of those who agreed with him. (Gerald Davies's 'Michel Angelo'; 'Letters of Michel Angelo'; Vasari's 'Lives of the Italian Painters'; W. G. Waters's 'Italian Sculptors'; Ruskin's 'Aratra Pentelici.')

The art of Rabelais was in some ways a grotesque parallel of the art of Michel Angelo. That gargoyle of authorship was on the side of the Protestants in a Roman Catholic country in an age when the Inquisition was not troubled by the pains of human flesh. Rabelais was less nervously constituted than Michel Angelo, but he was quite as prudent. He even pretended to repent his heresies, and received formal absolution for them. His real ideas being suppressed, he wrote allegories; and again the symbolism took giant-forms; Rabelais freely satirised the clerics, but more especially the monks and poorer men—a proceeding quite popular at Renaissance Courts, as might well be understood when we remember the originally popular nature of Christian thought and the popular associations of the Church before that thought was subverted.

But if Rabelais was in secret revolt against the general debasement of life, he followed the literary tradition of his time, even though he, too, 'forced the language,' incorporating into the art of story-telling ribald and obscene details the better to please the ears of his public. Like the 'Don Quixote' of Cervantes, 'Pantagruel' reads as a parody of a traditional art-form as well as a satire of life; none the less it accepts the æsthetic conditions it satirises. (Translation of Rabelais by Urquhart and Motteux; Coleridge's 'Literary Remains'; Hudson's 'France, the Nation and its Development.')

As compared with the nervous cowardice of Michel Angelo and the scarcely less cowardly prudence of Rabelais, the personal character and artistic importance of Sir Thomas More would seem to place him among the chief heroes of Christendom. Once again the great influence of Savonarola is seen in More's admiration for Pico di Mirandola, disciple of the great Florentine leader. The historian of the English people says of More: 'The brightness and freedom of the New Learning seemed incarnate in the young scholar with his gay talk, his winsomeness of manner, his reckless epigrams, his passionate love of music, his omnivorous reading, his paradoxical speculations, his gibes at monks, his schoolboy fervour of liberty. . . . The Florentine scholars penned declamations against tyrants while they covered with their flatteries the tyranny of the house of Medici.' And of More's literary style Green says that the 'Life of Edward the Fifth' is 'the first work in which what we may call modern English prose appears, written with purity and clearness of style and a freedom either from antiquated forms of expression or classical pedantry.'

Of More's general revolt against the tendencies of his day there is no question. Quite early in his career he led Parliament in a refusal of subsidy demanded by Henry VII., and had to withdraw for a time from public life. He declared that the growing power of finance was 'a conspiracy of the rich against the poor.' He opposed the marriage of Henry VIII. to Ann Boleyn, and the breach with Rome as an act of treachery to the international organization of Christianity.

For all his attitude of revolt he faithfully followed the literary tradition of his time, and, although his English was so free as to place him among our finest men of letters, he yet wrote his chief work of revolt, the 'Utopia,' in the Latin of the literary tradition. (Roper's 'Life of More'; Green's 'History of the English People'; More's 'Life of Edward the Fifth'; the 'Utopia,' in Robinson's English translation.)

Besides the artists I have named there were, of course, others who protested against the evils which accompanied the development of Renaissance politics. Fra Lippo Lippi and Holbein were, judging by the evidence adduced by Ruskin and others, no less forceful in their rebellion than Botticelli, though I have not yet been able to study their lives and work sufficiently to include them here. But they are worth mentioning, for they emphasise a fact which cannot be without real importance for the purposes of this study. Lippi was one of Botticelli's masters, and Holbein contemporary with More. After the deaths of the artists already named we have to wait a hundred years before the appearance of other artists whose work can be regarded as true to the subject of this study. The active struggles of the people were brought to an end; all that remained of the real original effort for liberty were its theological shadows. Just as great artists had found it necessary to conceal their ideas in forms of allegory and symbolism, so the ideas of the people themselves were now couched in forms of credal disputation. The artists, having no longer to deal with real things, but with things remote and unclear, tended more and more to accept the position of pleasure-servers for those who could afford to pay them; or, if they themselves were informed by original intellectual faculties and natural virtue, they became more and more scholarly, less and less instant with the need for expression. Shakespeare may be cited as one of the noblest of them, an artist of profound poetic nature smothering his stage-plays with pillows of rhetoric. Dowland, the lutenist, may also be mentioned, inasmuch as the melancholy which had first shown itself definitely in Dante and Botticelli, and was most perfectly expressed in Durer's 'Melancholia,' that pictorial assembly of scientific symbols, brought Dowland's work also to an end. This cloud was not lifted in the arts until the struggle for real liberty once more burst out in life itself.

Of Milton as an artist of revolt it is not necessary to say much. Enough to quote one of his biographers, and recall the nature of his chief work. 'He defended religious liberty against the prelates, civil liberty against the crown, the liberty of the press against the executive, liberty of conscience against the Presbyterians, and domestic liberty against the tyranny of canon law.' He, like Botticelli and Dowland, set his work aside; but not like them, because he was hopeless of better things. Milton temporarily discarded his essential work as poet because he was convinced that a better world could only result from revolt in the sphere of action. When once again the cause of the people had been betrayed, he took for his subject, not the story of King Arthur (the Messiah-like story of the king who should come again to save his people), though it had haunted him during the period previous to Cromwell's Protectorate—not that, but the 'Story of the Fall of Man,' the lost Paradise; and, as has been noticed by many who have read the work, the hero of that Paradise is not the King of Heaven, but the preacher of revolt, the creature who was regarded by all respectable folk as the devil himself.

But if Milton had a song to sing passing the rebelliousness of all such songs before his time, for his technique he chose the most conventional form he could lay hands on, while for his most vehement outpourings on contemporary subjects he chose, not even the popular ballad-form, much less the rebellious technique of the æsthetic revolutionist, but the classic sonnet. (Milton's ' Prose and Poetry ' ; Mark Pattison, Milton in the ' English Men of Letters ' Series.)

John Bunyan's opposition to the ways of the world was as strong as Milton's ; but that opposition also had no faintest reflection in the style of his writing, which was a mixture of the common speech of his day with the language of the English Bible.

With the restoration of royalism in England, the noble protests of Milton and Bunyan were succeeded by the blatant pornography of Wycherley and Aphra Behn. The expression of revolt in terms of art passed to France.

(To be continued.)

CRITICS IN CONGRESS: THE INTERNATIONAL GATHERING AT BUCAREST

By Percy A. Scholes

The Music Critics of the world now have a Federation—in combination, bien entendu, with their humble colleagues the Dramatic and Art Critics.

If you were asked in what city the historic act of union had taken place you would perhaps guess Paris, London, Berlin, or Vienna, and would be surprised to learn that it stands to the credit of far-away Bucarest.

The story of the event is something like this. In 1926 the Paris critics called an international meeting in their city and many warm international friendships there began. Salzburg (in 1928) was the next place of meeting, and the friendships were perceptibly deepened. A body of colleagues known to one another, appreciative of one another's qualities and desirous of regular discussion of common professional problems, had thus come into existence. The logical next step was the definite foundation of an organized Federation with a scheme of annual perambulation of the cities of Europe (perhaps eventually with occasional visits to America also).

One of the most active inspirers and organizers of the whole enterprise had been the well-known music critic of the Paris Figaro (and equally well-known composer—his works are not unheard at Queen's Hall), Stan Golestan. He is a Rumanian born and bred, and perhaps his connections with his native country had something to do with a generous invitation of the Rumanian Government, which amounted to this : ' Let the critics of every country send representatives to a congress in Bucarest ; you can secure them half-fare on all the railways they use until they reach our frontiers, and when they cross these they shall not have a penny to pay either for transport or hotels.' Faithfully the Government carried out its offer, and, under the direction of Mr. Emil D. Fagure, President of the Association of Rumanian Critics and at the same time (I believe) an official of the Foreign Office of the country, the pledge was fully honoured.

The general order of the pilgrimage was as follows : At Paris there were shepherded into special carriages the French, Belgian, and Portuguese critics (no Spaniards—curious !). At Zurich there joined the party a Swiss critic and two British critics who happened to be in Switzerland—Mr. Dunton Green, always a most active member of the Executive Committee of the London Critics' Circle, and myself. At Vienna a two days' halt was made, and here the Austrian, German, Polish, Danish, and Czecho-Slovakian critics were awaiting us, so as to join in the round of official receptions, automobile excursion, and other entertainments which had been planned for us. Then we took flight once more. The party had now reached the dimensions at which it could arrange for collective meals in its own restaurant car and induce the railway authorities to grant it a special two-hours' pause at Budapest for sight-seeing. At the Rumanian frontier it began to feel its importance yet more pleasantly, for here at midnight, marshalled by representatives of the Ministry of Fine Arts and of the various musical and dramatic associations, who had come from still far-away Bucarest to welcome us, we took our places in our own special train of sleeping and restaurant cars. At Sinaia, in the Carpathians, about twelve hours further on the route, we descended to the heartening strains of a military band, heard and replied to brief passages of official oratory, left the station in a fleet of automobiles, and were whirled into the lobby of the great Palace Hotel with the strong feeling that we had become the guests of a country that adequately recognised our high community value.

Now began a fresh round of feasting and of excursions. One of the latter whisked us by winding roads along precipitous edges to a mountain top whence we surveyed a fine stretch of Alpine scenery and drank the famous Rumanian sour milk (which makes you live for ever) from the King's Own Cows. Another took us to the Royal Summer Palace, built in a Walter Scottish style during the closing year of the 19th century by Rumania's first king, Carol, and his queen, Carmen Sylva. The romantic and somewhat painful circumstances of the accession of the present king, Michael I., are sufficiently fresh in the minds of sympathetic newspaper readers. He is now eight years old, and a sturdy, sensible, friendly little fellow, who charmed us all. His mother and his grandmother (the Queen Regent—an English princess, as will be remembered) were with him, and not one of us was left out in the intimate personal conversations that took place.

By what mysterious means does tactful Royalty obtain and retain its abundant information ? After the representatives of the nations alphabetically precedent to Great Britain had enjoyed recognition, Queen Marie approached the senior member of the British delegation with the remark : ' I understand, Mr. Dunton Green, that you speak French with the perfection of a native ; how have you, an Englishman, achieved that ? ' And here it may be remarked that my colleague's complete command of languages, combined with his experience of the sound British code and practice of chairmanship, proved later to be of the utmost value to the Congress.

On this day it was that the other member of the British delegation began to think a little uncharitably of some of his Latin, Teutonic, and Slav colleagues. There was offered us by the Rumanian Association of Music and Dramatic Critics a dinner of thirty or forty courses (speaking from memory). It included ' Mamaligutza cu Okiuri, Ghiveciu Natzional, Frigarui cu Muski, Cartofi Pai, Gogosari, Negru Domeniile Coroanei,' and such-like delicacies. The eating began at 9 p.m. and (with speeches) lasted until near midnight. The individual in question, intimating that the party was to be called at 5.30 next morning to catch the train for the next place of call, prudently crept away and sought slumber. Could he win it ? Not a bit ! His fellow-delegates (and the incident is related as typical of their never-flagging magnificent yet annoying activity), having at last exhausted the resources of their dozen languages in private conversation and public oratory, began to work off the remainder of their energy in dance, and to the strains of a miniature yet loudly-resounding Rumanian band, kept it up until but three hours were left for the remaining programme of saying their prayers, getting into bed, sleeping, rising, bathing, shaving, packing, and catching their train.

The one redeeming feature from the perhaps biassed point of view of the would-be sleeper was the character of the music that rang along the corridors and echoed from the bedroom walls. If you have never yet heard the panpipes played, except as a mere adornment to our traditional open-air dramatic performances, go to Rumania, where there is a virtuoso exponent of this instrument, worthily companioned by fellow virtuosi on cymbalon, bowed instruments, and pianoforte. And what the Rumanian gipsies can do in the way of compulsive rhythm is amazing. Were I the B.B.C. I would invite this little band to Britain and give it a week's tour of the stations ; this would be the end of jazz !

And here let it be added that we had plenty of evidence that the less purely instinctive music of Rumania is also worthy of hearing, for the festival concert in the wonderful hall of the Bucarest Athenæum, with its programme of works of Alessandresco, Andrico Mihalovici, Jora, Golestan, Otesu, and Enesco, pleased everybody in this severely critical audience—and especially those items of it which frankly admitted national influences.

Rumania is a largely Latin country. Its inhabitants are, as is well known, descended from Roman colonists left by an Empire in difficulties to battle for centuries with all sorts of Slav antagonists, yet retaining through all their vicissitudes a large measure of their Latin speech and the Latin sympathies. For the most part their young composers (of whom they have a good many) now go to Paris for their higher education, but they do not let the Conservatoire wipe from their memories the idiom of their own land.

And now, space rapidly running down, less expansive treatment of the real ' business ' of the Congress is suggested. Fortunately, our doings can be quickly told, for a full report of the meetings would interest nobody and the record of decisions reached will be sufficient. The great Federation was formed—duly and regularly. But to settle its details of constitution in a highly excitable assembly of representatives of twelve nations, and with time now running short, was not to be thought of. Hence a special committee was appointed, and it is to meet at Paris and report next year to the Congress at Prague (for in the fight for the honour of next entertaining the delegates Czecho-Slovakia won). In the meantime the committee's proposals are to be submitted to the various national Critics' Associations, who will offer their suggestions. Some of the countries represented at the Congress have as yet no regular Critics' Association, but during the coming twelve months they will form them. The initial expenses are to be met by a levy of one (gold) franc on every member of affiliated Circles. The permanent seat of the Federation is to be Paris. The members of the special Temporary Committee are Messrs. Stan Golestan (Paris), Herman Springer (Berlin), and Dunton Green (London).

These matters settled (and two days' debate went to their settlement), I took upon myself personally to put into the form of a definite resolution some of the ideas of M. Emil Vuillermoz, of Paris, expressed at the earlier stage. In the most urgent terms this famous critic had put before us the dangers that confronted music and drama, and us as their critics, in the present neglect of proper apparatus for bringing under professional critical observation gramophone records, reproducing piano rolls, talking and musical films, radio performances, &c. It was madness, he said, for critics to neglect the performances which were heard by millions, whilst giving high attention to those heard by hundreds, and if this continued he prophesied the extinction of the critical profession. The resolution, which was heartily and unanimously carried, read as follows :

> ' That this Congress calls the most earnest attention of the Associations of Critics in all countries to the great and growing importance of the mechanical and electrical means of reproducing and conveying speech and music, and to the necessity of retaining the criticism of drama and music so reproduced and conveyed in the hands of the qualified and professional dramatic and musical critics—and this in the interests equally of the critical profession, of public taste, and of the arts themselves.'

It was M. Vuillermoz's particular wish, in which everybody supported him, that in putting this resolution forward to the Associations there should be added a few words calling special attention to the danger of allowing the criticism of talking and musical films to drift into the hands of unqualified newspaper writers and even of ' publicity ' men.

There is surely some importance in the fact that this prominent French critic, famous as one of the early protagonists of Debussy and Ravel and as one of the first to appreciate the works of Stravinsky, Schönberg, and Bartók, should now be turning his special attention to the modern movement for the mechanical reproduction of music, and should have become the founder and editor of a journal devoted to its interests.

There, then, are the two definite resolutions of the Congress—to found a Federation of Critics, and to call the attention of critics everywhere to certain big new duties confronting them. Neither of these comes a moment too soon!

In closing, I collect a few odds and ends of observations: (1.) Rumania has a Ministry of Fine Arts, and we haven't. (2.) It has a National Opera House and several National Theatres, and we haven't. (3.) It has a daily paper solely devoted to the arts, and we haven't. (4.) Its Government carries out an official phonographic collection of thousands of folk-tunes, and ours doesn't. (5.) Hungary has radio in its express trains (I listened to Vienna playing waltzes—one pengo for as long as you like; the carriages 'plugged' and headphones brought in as requested). (6.) The Congress has a marvellous honorary interpreter, Madame Peyrebères, of Wiesbaden; she listens to a speech in French, German, or English, without taking a note, and then repeats it in either or both of the other languages, in literal translation without a second's hesitation anywhere and without forgetting a single point; this is the most amazing feat of memory of which I have ever had experience. The League of Nations ought to take this lady over.

THE RARITY OF THE SOPRANO

By H. Travers Adams

Among popular fallacies one of the most general seems to be that the deeper voices among women are the most uncommon.

It is freely recognised that the highest voice is most seldom possessed by men, but it appears to surprise many to learn that the highest is also the rarest among women.

The existence of this fallacy is largely due to the procedure of many of the present-day popular singing masters, so large a number of whom are conductors, pianists, composers, musical theorists, accompanists, coaches, &c. Many of them, though undoubtedly brilliant in their proper sphere, are not fitted to teach that all-important branch of the art of singing called 'voice production.'*

But no singer can be a true artist unless he is as perfect on the physical side as on the spiritual. One must place a proper value on the teaching of artistic rendering, but almost the whole of a teacher's attention must be directed to voice-production and voice-building in the early stages of the study of singing. Even the songs that are then recommended are made use of solely for the sake of voice-production.

But it may be asked: Why should the origin and continued existence of the fallacy alluded to be laid to the charge of the popular singing master? I will attempt to explain by bringing forward the following fact. After (at most) one month's unprejudiced investigation, it would be quite clear to a voice-producer, except in abnormal cases, whether a pupil was soprano or contralto. But this is often not the case where an unqualified teacher is concerned. For I confidently maintain that many a singer who is really a high contralto is, by a certain method of treatment, trained to produce a voice or sound which may become in the case of exceptional organs and under the manipulation of a clever, gifted artist fairly powerful, smooth, and pleasant, and able to pass muster for a time as a soprano.

This voice, however, has not the quality, weight, depth, or volume, which a high contralto should exhibit. I will presently describe the method of treatment alluded to. But this counterfeit voice (if I may so term it), however cleverly manipulated, cannot really be compared to that of the true soprano.

In course of time it invariably deteriorates, particularly on the highest notes, the quality of which gradually becomes harsh, cutting, and wiry, and very much caught in the lowest part of the throat if power is forced beyond a certain degree.*

If such a case, however, come into the hands of a teacher who adopted a proper method of procedure (described later) the true voice would eventually make its appearance, and the change be marked by an accession of sterling beauty, richness, warmth, and sympathy that would be delightful to hear.*

Now it is utterly impossible by any method of treatment to cause a natural soprano to descend into a contralto. A general knowledge of this fact would prevent much suffering. It is therefore above all imperative that the true nature of every voice should be discovered as soon as possible. There is but one infallible method of arriving at this knowledge.

As an introduction to a clearer understanding I draw attention to a fact (which I have already hinted at) that there are at least two kinds of production natural to the human voice which differ fundamentally the one from the other, with respect to quantity: (1.) A voice of small volume and depth (and consequently of weight and power), called 'mezza-voce'; (2.) A voice of full volume and depth (and consequently also weight and power), called 'full' voice. Differences can also be effected in the same voice with respect to quality, i.e., the mezza-voce can be made open, or, on the other hand, closed.† The same is possible in the case of the 'full' voice. I will give full details at the close of this article.

Both these productions, whether of open or closed quality, are legitimate in their proper place, and should be brought into use (excepting the open 'full' voice) from the beginning of practice, helped by the class of songs suitable to each, provided that a greater proportion of practice be first devoted to the mezza-voce.

But the former (full voice) must receive some attention from the start in order that the whole organism may receive a proper foundation. Full-voice practice does not necessarily mean full power of the voice or full expiratory effort. A full, deep sound is on occasions positively required to possess comparatively little solidity, firmness, power, penetration, or forcefulness.

I will expound this fact at the close when I deal with full voice of the quality called 'dark.' Having

* Full information concerning this point will be found in the writer's work, 'The Central Point in Beautiful Voice Production,' p. 4.

* Op. cit., p. 18. † Op. cit., p. 6.

mentioned the existence of the two voices, I can now proceed to explain that the one infallible method of arriving at the true nature of a voice is to endeavour to bring into existence in all students the full voice, i.e., the biggest, deepest, and richest voice that the singer can produce (omitting at first the extremes of compass), and above all to avoid shirking reasonable practice on the lower part of the voice. The fact is that this full voice, which we may define as the 'grand' or great voice, exists in every singer. No first-class vocalist ever claims a high note as legitimately belonging to her compass unless produced without strain in the 'full' voice.* This voice does not always, especially on the low notes, readily make its appearance in young people. But though hidden, it is there, and the honest attempt to produce and develop it should be made at the start of practice on a certain amount of the compass. For one of the evils resulting from entire neglect of 'full' voice practice is that without the development of the richness, depth, and fullness which the latter contributes to the quality of a sound, the light and often exquisitely pleasing mezza-voce will deteriorate, and may even almost die out.

Now the high contralto (the voice most generally possessed among women) possesses in a specially marked degree these two distinct productions. If gifted vocalists are persuaded by their teachers to practise and develop the mezza-voce production alone, they can in many cases reach a passable top C.

But it can never be compared with that of a natural soprano, because it is possible for this voice when perfectly trained and fully developed to take up to D in alt. in bonâ-fide 'full' voice.

In most operas and oratorios many top B's and C's and multitudes of G's and A's must be taken in this 'full' voice only. This is what is expected of a real soprano. The counterfeit soprano cannot approach this standard.

This being so, it is now necessary to supply some simple information with respect to the safest method of bringing into existence and developing the full voice.

I may say at once that it is effected by practice of the full voice of closed quality. First a few remarks to illustrate the meaning of 'closed' and 'open' may make the matter clearer.†

1. The dark or closed voice is a sound characterised by a mellow, round, smooth quality. It is absolutely necessary for the proper artistic rendering of songs of a quiet, sad, serious, tender, dreamy type, which always require a peculiarly legato attack of the sound. Practice principally on the vowel oo (in 'pool') is in early stages imperative in order to gain it to perfection.

The seriousness, &c., in the closed mezza-voce voice is of a lighter and quieter kind than that portrayed by the closed 'full' voice.

2. The open or bright voice is a sound characterised by a bright, clear, hard, ringing, penetrating quality, such being necessary for the artistic rendering of songs of a lively, humorous, bright, or at times boisterous, passionate, or angry nature, which generally demand staccato attack and the use of the vowel ah. The life, brightness, &c., of the mezza-voce open voice is of a lighter description than that of the full voice of open quality.

But when starting to develop the 'full' voice it is in every way far the safest and best plan to use the closed production: for besides its inherent beauty, its practice (on account of its richness, smoothness, roundness, &c., and encouragement of the sinking and expanding of the larynx) is of the greatest possible value in preparing and moulding the vocal mechanism for the proper production of the 'full' open voice. For songs which demand expression of a rather grand but at the same time markedly tender and yearning sentiment, the quality of the voice would be particularly dark, rich, and mellow, and the attack of the sound would be very legato. The all-important fact is that the production of such a sound in the case of a normally healthy pupil exacts comparatively little extra-ordinary effort from the breathing muscles, and places little strain upon the sound-producing mechanism. At first, therefore, I insist upon my pupils using none but these classes of songs.

On the other hand, it cannot be too clearly emphasised that the production of the full voice of open quality, especially in declamation, demands the forcing of a great deal of strength from the breathing muscles and the imposition of a certain amount of strain on the sound-producing mechanism. The practice of so magnificent and glorious a voice as this needs the most careful consideration. It may proceed gradually, and for only short periods of time, with fairly long rests between the practices. Its use is distinctly dangerous in the case of young people.*

* Op. cit., p. 6. † Op. cit., p. 4.

HARMONIC COLOUR: DOES IT WEAR?

By Norman Hay

Pre-occupation with harmonic colour for its own sake, the love of chord-making per se, has not been a characteristic of many of the significant figures in the history of music. It is, I think, well so.

Diaphony itself, so often pointed to as the first rude harmony, was in point of fact the first rude counterpoint. Just as the octave must have been recognised in the earliest times—long before the days of the song-schools of Gregory—even by the most untutored, as the natural difference between the voices of men and women or boys, so those fourths and fifths which became the suspects of a later age were surely the outcome of a natural necessity in melody-making, created by the difference between the 'highs' and 'lows' of either sex—the fourth or fifth being selected as the interval causing the least variation from the tonality of the Cantus Firmus. Indeed, I would suggest, in passing, that the taboo of successive fifths which lasted from the age of counterpoint right down to Brahms (and of which the theorists have given such lame and futile explanations) can be accounted for by the simple fact that art runs in cycles and therefore that the over-ripe meat of one era becomes the poison of the next. Thus the thirds and sixths which were the strong suit of Teutonic sentiment in the classics reached their ad nauseam stage in the hymn and anthem and ballad of Victorian England, to be followed, as republic succeeds monarchy, by Schönbergian frightfulness in Germany, or by a reversion to the principles of diaphony and the modes in the coterie of Vaughan Williams and his like. In plain words, those things which, however contrapuntal their origin, became in time harmonic obsessions, have always suffered a fall.

* Op. cit., p. 4.

It has been said, and truly, that Bach was as a harmonist a hundred years in advance of his time. But Bach's most enduring work in chord-making was the logical outcome of his counterpoint. So, for example, we still hear with affection most of his diminished sevenths, while those of a Barnby anthem are only a painful symptom of the age of valentines and samplers and Jane Austen. Wagner, too, was a contrapuntist at his best. Theorists may speak of his chromatics and his development of the appoggiatura, or write a chapter about the decorated French sixth in the opening of the 'Tristan' Prelude; but in the end it is Wagner's interweaving of parts that constitutes his biggest claim to immortality. And even Wagner is toppling for a fall in the estimate of those of us who have become bored with certain of his spicier harmonic obsessions—things which had a blameless enough contrapuntal parentage.

Discord for its own sake is mere nonsense; nor can it be justified, as Mr. Newman has been trying to do recently, by any 'programme.' Harmonic colouring for its own sake is not mere nonsense; but it is a perilous path for any but a born Delius.

Even Delius, who stands, I think, quite unique in the evolution of musical art as one who has been almost entirely preoccupied with sonorously harmonic sweetness, is racing for immortality under a severe handicap. One at least who heard the first concert of the Delius Festival could not help asking himself: Admitting all his ravishing beauty of harmonic thought, all his supremacy in expressing that thought in dazzling tints of orchestration (and surely he is unrivalled in those two respects), could I swallow large repeated doses of it? Is it not possible to have too much of the aroma of a heavily-laden garden in June? When Delius has any great concern with rhythm (as in 'Brigg Fair' or the 'Dance Rhapsody'), the rhythm, like the melodic figure, seems to emerge as a mere incident of the shifting blocks of harmony. When he becomes definitely rhythmic, under force of circumstances, he is least typically Delius: witness the Fair scene in 'A Village Romeo,' which is not greatly better than or different from the Kermesse scene of 'Faust.' In saying all this, I can still pronounce myself a worshipper at the shrine of the composer of 'Sea Drift'; I merely suggest that the apotheosis of harmony is a dangerous ideal for most men.

The Handelian 6-4 5-3, the mannered chromatics of Wagner, the clichés of the Grieg coterie, the tonic added sixth of Gounod, Cyril Scott, and many others (Delius included), Corelli's chains of sevenths or Scriabin's chains of superimposed fourths, Scott's eternal ninths—what are they all, and hundreds of other clichés, but examples of colour that soon pall save when vitalised by line? In this sense we must accept, whether or no we like them, certain things of, say, Bartók's or Bliss's or Ireland's as the result of a logically conceived movement of parts.

Corot's landscapes, however beautiful the tints and shades, are essentially counterpoint; and therein is their undying glory. And Walford Davies uttered a profound truth when he wrote in 'Grove' that the next great genius, whoever he be, will assuredly be a great master of counterpoint.

STAGES IN THE HISTORY OF OPERA: IV.—MOZART AS A WRITER OF OPERA

By Scott Goddard

If it is maintained that Mozart's operas contain the essence of his creative effort—a thesis that can be strongly supported—then here in England practically nothing can be known of his real genius, which is as much as to say that Mozart is still a minus quantity in our general knowledge of music. It is as though we knew Shakespeare only by the sonnets and the comedies, or Milton by 'Paradise Regained,' or Shelley by 'Queen Mab,' being in ignorance of all the extremely important remainder. For although it requires a fairly long but retentive memory, it does not demand any great powers of mental calculation to account for the performances of Mozart's operas in England since the beginning of this century. Some good ones at Covent Garden, Cambridge's epoch-making 'Magic Flute' (the very adjective serves, true as it is, to show a definite rarity in 1911), Charles T. Smith's remarkable popularising performances of that opera with his L.C.C. schoolboys in the Isle of Dogs and at Whitechapel some ten years later, and this year's production at the R.C.M.—that, roughly, is what we have allowed ourselves.

Mozart, the operatic composer, is something of which we have never had an opportunity of forming any but an exceedingly sketchy and vague idea. Sporadic performances help hardly at all. The works ought to be lived with, should be continually available, and until that is possible there is no chance for English musicians to reach that necessary state of close acquaintanceship, when the music is so present to the mental ear and easily recalled to memory, that it can be used naturally and without effort as a basis for critical appreciation. A few people know the operas well. But the general run of concert-goers cannot trust their memories to help them with Mozart's scores, as they can to find their way through a discussion of Beethoven's symphonies. Mr. Lowes Dickinson can talk with intimate knowledge about the 'Magic Flute' in his broadcast 'Point of View' ('to my mind one of the most religious spirits that ever lived is Mozart'), and use that opera as an example of 'one of the greatest religious experiences.' (I am doing an injustice by taking such minute excerpts; the whole thing may be found in The Listener for October 9). But then his is a case apart. He followed the 'Magic Flute' through Europe, and has not been forced to rely on performances here for his knowledge of that work. Nevertheless, rare as Mr. Lowes Dickinson's case may be among English musical amateurs, the very fact of his having been so inextricably caught in the tide of Mozart's operatic music is in itself a contribution to any inquiry into the hold that music has on minds of a wide intellectual range. It shows us what we are missing. It is also a warrant for closer contact and greater accessibility.

It is not to gird at our famed disability to provide for ourselves, musically, that the foregoing sentences have been put down. That disability is getting a fair enough publicity at the moment, and clearly audiences are as much to blame as impresarios and concert-agents if they do not get what they want—or rather, if they get, and complacently applaud, what they do not want. The purpose of these remarks is rather to start a train of thought which it may be interesting to follow to some possible conclusion, and principally to welcome (whether it be decided that Mozart's operas are or are not the most significant among his works) a production of 'La finta giardiniera' announced for performance at the Scala Theatre on January 7, 9, and 11, 1930. These performances will be under the direction of Mr. Robert Stuart, who has already shown by his work for the Oxford University Opera Club that he is able to compass the difficult feat of making the past live for himself, without which no producer of Mozart's operas can hope to succeed.

Let us examine more nearly the thesis proposed above, that of the significant position of the operas among Mozart's works. It will not be found necessary to belittle any one type of work, as music, in favour of any other type; indeed, that method would at once appear useless for the purposes of serious argument. The line of inquiry will tend to dissociate the purely æsthetic aspect of Mozart's operas, and keep hold on considerations of their importance as expressions of his personality—or better, of his philosophy. For strictly speaking, an opera cannot be the expression of its composer's personality, for the simple reason that in itself it is first and foremost the expression of the personalities of the characters. That is, if the opera is a proper stage-representation, which Mozart's certainly are. The dramatist never really exists for us as a personality, and any attempt to deduce his character from his plays must always be futile. The surprise felt that the Wagner of real life (as we try and see him in his letters, his autobiography, the commendations and condemnations of others) is not the same as the Wagner of the operas, is, in reality, the result of a faulty reasoning. Wagner's operas still exist, Wagner, the man who wrote them never did exist in them as far as the hearer is concerned. What Wagner gives to the hearer—and is it not his greatest title to fame?—is a series of characters which are never Wagner but always themselves. So, too, with Mozart. His superb talent for characterisation enabled him literally to create personalities which still have such an abundant life and still hold our attention with such a grip that their actions, sufferings, emotions, cannot be ignored by us from the moment they start their stage-life up to the time the situation is put an end to. They live for us to such an extent that Mozart, the man who formed them, is forgotten while we watch. From that fact comes their force as dramatic representations, and they are no more an expression of Mozart's personality than 'King Richard the Third' is of Shakespeare's.

Neither do they show very clearly what Mozart thought about life, his philosophy. Only in one case is it possible to reach anything definite here; the 'Magic Flute' could hardly have been written by anyone with his tongue in his cheek. Or let us go warily. It is unlikely that anyone could have pulled off that immense feat without himself feeling deeply about it, but it is not impossible. An astounding master of dramatic personisation might have succeeded, though it is almost unthinkable that he could have done so. For in that work there is a peculiar quality of what can only be called philosophy, which exists through the characters, but also apart from them. And one large fact about this opera seems to justify our taking the risk, and trying to deduce the thought from its result—the finished work. The evidence before us is that Mozart altered the whole trend of the 'Magic Flute' half-way through, transforming it from a preposterous fairy-medley into something which has an intense significance and seriousness. That known, there can be little doubt that in the 'Magic Flute' we have a rare opportunity for seeing one of the most fugitive aspects of a composer whose actual music is always felt to be transparently clear.

The other operas could certainly have been written, as far as the technique of stage and music goes, by any equally able craftsman with a similar gift of melody. Mozart hides behind his own creations, and there is no getting at the man through his works. To know 'Don Juan' or 'Figaro' thoroughly is to become aware of Mozart's impeccable sense of dramatic fitness, his unhesitating aim at the vital spot of a given situation, his expert handling of the orchestra, his skill in using all the arts of vocal embellishment, and yet never losing an ounce of dramatic effectiveness. All of that is easy to realise, and these operas provide one of the finest, as well as earliest and still greatest, examples of perfect operatic workmanship. They give us a quality of enjoyment nothing else does. But as documents to serve for an inquiry into the workings of Mozart's mind they are of no service. Because of their representational character alone they could never be that. There is in them no strange illuminating beam thrown from the composer's mind, as in the 'Magic Flute.'

When we say that anyone could have written these other operas, because not knowing Mozart's reasons for writing them we are at liberty to imagine that anyone else as talented could have done so, we really mean that anyone might have written them. For there is nothing superhuman in the way they were brought into existence. Probably there were a good many equally talented composers at that period. But it is none the less true that Mozart possessed some peculiar quality, of mind rather than brain or heart, that enabled him to take the signal step of creation that others had not felt impelled to take. This added quality of mind which, when combined with certain technical facilities, resulted in the creation of specific works of art, is what one would dearly like to trace to its origin and analyse. That chase has long gone on, and is still in full hue and cry. But an end will never be reached. Less in opera than elsewhere is there likelihood of solving the problem.

And so it seems that we who know little of Mozart's operas are after all in no worse plight as regards knowledge of Mozart the man than are those whose opportunities are greater for hearing the operas. And as to Mozart the philosopher there is only one glimpse in the 'Magic Flute.' Is it, then, possible to uphold the thesis that Mozart's operas contain the essence of his creative effort? If so, the sooner we get into closer touch with the operas the better. If not, then we may be contented with the symphonies, the chamber music, the pianoforte sonatas, that we already know, and do nothing to give the operas a more constant publicity.

To answer that question would entail a full, and of necessity lengthy, inquiry into what constitutes the essence of his creative effort. Such a search would be of great interest, and unlike that other problem we have just mentioned, could probably be brought to some adequate conclusion. Let us take it for granted that this essence can be fixed upon. Mr. W. J. Turner has spoken of the 'infinitely protean.' Well, if it be inconstant it is also all-persuasive and ever-present. It can be felt strongly in the G minor Symphony, a set of movements that no one but Mozart could have written, whoever might have and did not. And it is precisely this purely Mozartean quality of utterance, which, whether we can name its constituent parts or no, we yet can always recognise, that is to be found at its most authoritative in the operas. It manifests itself in 'Don Juan' as tragedy, in 'Die Entführung' as comedy, in 'Figaro' as tragi-comedy, in the 'Magic Flute' as a commentary on life itself. In 'La Finta Giardiniera' it is all lightness and grace, in 'Così fan tutte' all wit and brilliance. Without the operas we should still have a workable knowledge of Mozart's music, and be in possession (if such a phrase is permissible) of enough beauty to last any reasonable being a lifetime of contemplation. But we should have missed most of the greatest moments of music, and above all many of Mozart's highest achievements. Not to know the operas may not be to lose all Mozart, though it very probably may be to miss the most significant music he wrote.

Any discussion of Mozart comes back to one work: the 'Magic Flute.' There surely this vague quality we have called essence can be felt, and if it is to be analysed at all it is from that work that examples can most helpfully be taken. Other pens have praised it, and there the matter can be left as regards this article. If any case is to be made out for a nearer acquaintance with Mozart's operas bringing with it a clearer realisation of his essential qualities than could be obtained from the non-operatic works, the 'Magic Flute' will provide the firmest ground for argument.

Music in the Foreign Press

PARISIANS' PREFERENCES IN OPERA

M. Jacques Rouché, manager of the Paris Opéra, recently asked his subscribers to inform him of their likes and dislikes. Le Ménestrel (September 20) gives the results of this inquiry as set forth by him:

'Wagner's works head the list of preferences. "Boris Godunov" comes next, and the third place is given, curiously, to the stage arrangement of Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust." "Don Giovanni" is fourth, and Reyer's two operas "Sigurd" and "Salammbo" come next—ahead of Gounod's "Faust." Among works by living composers, Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnole" is the most popular, and Rabaud's "Marouf" comes second. But many subscribers have definitely expressed their aversion to modern music. One of them wrote: "I would rather hear 'Faust' a hundred times than hear any modern work a second time." Another struck the true note by saying: "We abonnés are not very keen musicians. We go to the Opéra to seek relaxation and to meet our friends. Therefore, modern music bores us." Special mention should be made of one subscriber who, after having named nine favourites, concluded: "As for a tenth, I hesitate between 'Pagliacci' and 'Don Giovanni.'"'

(It should be remembered that works not yet performed at the Opéra were not to be included in the list, and that many very popular works—such as 'Carmen'—belong to the repertory of the Opéra-Comique; for these two reasons the significance of M. Rouché's interesting experiment is restricted.)

THE FUTURE OF THE RUSSIAN BALLET

Le Ménestrel (September 13) announces that the Russian Ballet will henceforth be under the leadership of Serghei Grigoriev, who for many years had been Diaghilev's stage manager. Walter Nouvel will continue to be the business manager. They, let it be added, are the only two remaining members of Diaghilev's original staff (of 1909).

ITALIAN FOLK-SONGS

The August-September Musica d' Oggi contains interesting examples of Italian folk-songs, collected by Giulio Fara (whose book, 'L' Anima Musicale d' Italia,' is one of the best that deal with Italy's musical lore).

A FRIEND OF THE RUSSIAN 'FIVE'

Muzyka i Revolutsia announces the death, at the age of eighty-six, of Mrs. Alexandra Molas, née Purgold. She and her sister (who became Mrs. Rimsky-Korsakov, and died a few years ago) played an important part in Russia's musical life during the 'seventies and after. A gifted singer and pianist, she took part in countless private performances of operas by Moussorgsky, Borodin, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Cui, given prior to their appearance on the stage. It was she who, with Moussorgsky, played the pianoforte when scenes of 'Boris Godunov' were performed in 1871-72; on these occasions she also sang the parts of Marina, the Hostess, the Tsarevich Feodor, and the Nurse. She became famous as an interpreter of songs.

AN EXPERIMENT IN WIRELESS TRANSMISSION

Musique (September) describes how six instrumentalists playing in Berlin, Vienna, Paris, London, Zurich, and Milan respectively went through a programme of chamber music, forming an ensemble which was broadcast from the central receiving station, Zurich.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

The gold medal of the Royal Philharmonic Society will be presented to Mr. Gustav Holst, at the Society's concert on January 16 (when the ballet music from 'The Perfect Fool' will be in the programme); and to Dr. Vaughan Williams, on March 13, following on the first performance of his new Rhapsody on Sussex Folk-songs.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'The Origin of the Family of Bach Musicians' ('Ursprung der Musicalisch-Bachischen Familie'). Edited, with Pedigree Tables and a facsimile of Bach's manuscript, by Charles Sanford Terry.

[Oxford University Press, 12*s.* 6*d.*]

In 1917 the Neue Bachgesellschaft published a facsimile of the family record compiled by Bach and subsequently annotated by Carl Philipp Emanuel. Dr. Sanford Terry has done well to supplement his already vast labours in the Bach field by issuing this record in facsimile, with a translation, copious notes, several unfamiliar portraits, and seven Pedigree Tables showing the whole of the Bach tree down to the last shoot put forth from a collateral branch a few months ago. The result is a compilation of great historic value, at first sight dry, but on closer inspection richly interesting on the human side. Often the biographical touches are of the kind that bring the subject before us with delightful intimacy. For example, old Veit Bach, Thuringian miller and lutenist, and founder of the family, has been little more than a name to most of us. The few words John Sebastian writes of him make him a very real personage :

> 'He delighted above all things in his lute, which he would actually take with him into the mill and play when it was grinding. A pretty blend the pair of them must have made! But he learnt to keep time, and that apparently is how music began in our family.'

Take again this note added by Carl Philipp Emanuel concerning Gottlieb Friedrich and his son Johann Philipp. The father was Court organist and painter at Meiningen, and, says C. Ph. E., 'his son is associated with him in both offices. His son visited me [at Hamburg] last summer and painted an extremely good likeness of me.' (This portrait is now in the German States Library.)

Hear C. Ph. E. on some notable twins, Ambrosius and Johann Christoph, sons of Christoph :

> 'The twins were so alike that even their wives did not know them apart; they were objects of wonder and interest to all classes. They thought alike, and resembled each other in their music and playing. If one was ill the other sickened also, and the second died soon after the first.'

We see the beginning of the end of the family gift in a note by C. Ph. E. on Johann Ernst (1722-77) :

> '. . . is Hofcapellmeister at Weimar, though no longer in active work. He lives comfortably and quietly at Eisenach as organist, and receives a pension from the Duke. His sons apparently are unmusical.'

One likes to think of this descendant ending his days 'comfortably and quietly' on the spot where his mighty ancestor ran about as a youngster nearly a century before. Probably, however, Ernst was anything but 'quiet' in his youth, for we learn from 'Grove' that he 'briefly attended' the Thomasschule in his fifteenth year, being promptly dismissed for exceeding leave of absence—an offence not unknown to John Sebastian. Ernst was of the Johannes Bach branch, which is seen to have produced a good many non-musicians—a captain of artillery, several merchants, a bookseller, banker, postmaster, engineer, and so forth. Pedigree Table No. 3 gives us the beginning and the end of the Bach family, with Miller Veit at the top, and Annaliese, daughter of Aldred Schwalbe, a chemist, at the bottom. Annaliese was born as recently as last April. Let us hope that she will be a musician—a keyboard player for choice, so that she may benefit from the little book of studies and pieces Bach wrote for Anna Magdalena.

'Modern Russian Composers.' By Leonid Sabaneev.

[Martin Lawrence, 10*s.*]

The author needs no introduction to readers of the Musical Times. In this book, published originally in France two years ago, he deals with practically every Russian composer of importance from Tanéïèv. The articles are critical rather than biographical, and the criticism is throughout of that penetrating yet sympathetic type for which the author is distinguished. No translator's name is given—probably it is Mr. S. W. Pring. At all events, it reads easily and well, though there are a few slips, e.g., on p. 64. '. . . . heroes of this type become anachronism as bad, if not worse, than, &c.' And we wish the numerous unnecessary and irritating inverted commas could have been removed. Thus we have : 'as regards for instance the "subjects" of his musical composition,' 'too many sounds and too few "values,"' 'like every other "philosophy," Medtner's music is for the few,' 'Medtner's music with all its seriousness is "philosophical" and not religious.' Such eccentricities disfigure the page and reduce the value of quotation marks when they are really necessary. This, of course, is a trifling blemish, but it calls for mention. It is a pity, too, that the spelling of names is not in accordance with that now usual in English books and journals. There is much to be said for uniformity in such matters. Everybody knows Rebikov, Rachmaninov, Tanéïèv, Medtner, &c.; and as they are never likely to spell them Ryebikoff, Rakhmaninoff, Tañeyeff, and Metner (however correct these forms may be), it seems a pity to adopt a method that may confuse but will never convert. However, these details do not seriously diminish the pleasure with which one reads this first-rate book. To the student of Russian musical history it is indispensable.

'How to teach Class Singing; and a Course of Outlined Lessons which illustrate the Psychological Principles upon which Successful Tuition is Based.' By Granville Humphreys.

[William Reeves, 5*s.* 6*d.* cloth ; 3*s.* 6*d.* paper.]

This book consists of twenty lessons in teaching a class to sing from both Sol-fa and Staff notation. The lessons are given as they have actually been delivered by the author. In his preface he says they 'are recorded with a fullness of detail which may possibly appear superfluous, but justifiable on the ground that the filling-in of a lesson outline is often the most troublesome part of a teacher's task.' They strike us as being models of their kind—as indeed might be expected from a teacher so practical and experienced as Mr. Humphreys. We are glad to see that from the start he emphasises the importance of sight-singing. It is, as he says,

> '. . . the best foundation for a musical education, singers being peculiarly sensitive to the operation of the laws which govern musical thoughts and expression. Moreover, it is eminently suitable for class teaching; while, more perhaps than any other subject of musical study, its successful prosecution depends on the skill with which it is taught.'

He rightly insists on the use of the teacher's voice rather than the pianoforte:

> 'Singing is best learned from a vocal pattern. The voice of the teacher, though poor in quality, if it be but true in pitch and of fair sustaining power, more effectually stimulates vocal activity than the tones of a pianoforte, be it never so well played. Like produces like; song produces song. . . . The pianoforte indeed serves many a good purpose in the singing class—it can indicate pitch, speed, and force; it is useful for illustration and accompaniment; its distinctive tone-quality, if not persistently in evidence, refreshes the ear. But it can give no suggestion of vocal quality, and little of vocal style. So the teacher is well advised to dispense with its aid as far as possible.'

Commonsense things are said about illustration:

> 'This feature of the lesson is where the imagination of the teacher finds its special opportunity. "Everything is in anything," it has been said, and certainly deep thinking reveals a oneness of spirit in widely divergent aspects of Nature and circumstance. The field of illustration is, therefore, practically unlimited. Generally, no lesson should be considered complete until the æsthetic purpose and meaning of the thing learned has been illustrated either musically or by analogy. But an illustration, though true, may yet be ineffective through lack of one important virtue, which may be expressed by the word Proximity. Proximity may be of Time, Place, or Circumstance, and, whenever possible, an illustration should meet the condition of the class in one or more of these aspects. A musical illustration, for example, is often more telling if taken from some well-known piece, which, as music, may be "cheap" stuff. A popular song of the day will often serve the purpose better than an unfamiliar classical excerpt. One must sometimes stoop to raise.'

Singing with the class is condemned. It may help lame dogs, but it leaves the cause of the lameness uncured:

> 'The singer's self-reliance must be cultivated from the very first lesson. Good singing demands moral as well as musical qualities. Character must be trained along with the voice. The disposition of many children to shirk the trouble and risks of individual effort must receive no countenance from the teacher. A fearless spirit of adventure must be inculcated. "Safety First" principles belong to the street, and, for the time being, may be left there.'

We wish this principle could be more generally recognised in other departments of music teaching, wherein the over-use of the short cut and gilded pill shows that the character-building side of teaching is too often overlooked.

The practical good sense shown in the Introductory Section from which these quotations are taken is exhibited throughout the lessons. We warmly commend this book.

'A Record of the Music and Musicians at Eton College.' By Albert Mellor.

[Spottiswoode, Ballantyne & Co., 5*s*.]

Although this work is mainly for local consumption, it contains much that will interest the general reader. Brief biographical sketches are given of the successive Precentors, and the forty illustrations include portraits of musicians identified with the College (Welldon, Arne, Joah Bates, Elvey, Parry, J. F. Bridge, F. S. Kelly, Butterworth, Lloyd, Henry Ley, &c.), pictures of the College organ of various eras, the College and the Chapel, and (as extremes of the ancient and modern) a page from the 'Eton Manuscript' and a photograph of the electric blowing apparatus of the School Hall organ. Specifications of the various organs are given in full, and there is much interesting matter concerning the instruments. Of the Chapel organ designed by L. G. Hayne (1869-81), we read that the pedal touch was so heavy that 'it was a physical feat to accomplish a creditable performance of the more difficult preludes and fugues of Bach. Dr. Maclean (1872-75) was said to have lamed his left foot for a week owing to an effort to grapple with the pedal organ in a Bach fugue.' Nothing in the record is more interesting and heartening than the comparison the reader is enabled to make between the ante-Parry days, when music was scarcely recognised in the school, and the present time, when (as is shown by programmes of school concerts and particulars of the 'house competitions') it is a regular and popular feature. Mr. Mellor, who, as senior music master, has played his part in this remarkable progress, has produced a book both capitally planned and well written.

'Proceedings of the Musical Association: Fifty-fifth Session, 1928-29.'

[Whitehead & Miller, Leeds: One guinea.]

The subject of these six lectures (condensed reports of which have already appeared in the Musical Times) are 'Wind Bands and Music,' by Major Charles Hoby; 'Some Musical Instruction Books of the 17th Century,' by H. C. Colles; 'The Performance of Music in Spain,' by J. B. Trend; 'Some Problems of Present-day Music,' by H. C. C. Moule; 'Suppositional Hearing,' by Edward J. Chadfield; and 'The Alliance of Singers, Composers, and Conductors,' by Cyril B. Rootham. Set out thus in extenso they make interesting and instructive reading. In the discussions we notice that Dr. Froggatt pulled up Dr. Rootham for his use of the word 'diction' in reference to a singer's delivery of words. As Dr. Froggatt said, this word is not in any musical dictionary, and applies solely to the choice of words, and not to the manner of uttering them. But we think he will protest in vain. We ourselves were for a long time stiffly against this perverted use of the word, but we have now succumbed, for there is no musical term to meet the case. Language being made for man, and not man for language, 'diction' must now join the growing number of words that have to do double duty.

'A Forgotten Psalter, and Other Essays.' By Richard Runciman Terry.

[Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

This is a collection of articles contributed, with one exception, to various periodicals over a good many years, the new essay being that which gives the book its title. The psalter resuscitated by Sir Richard is the Scottish book of which the words appeared in 1564 and the tunes in 1635. The discussion thereof and the examples quoted will make many anticipate with interest the new edition which the author (we believe) now has in hand. The reprinted papers cover a wide field—English and Italian polyphony, The Troubadour, Merbecke, Some Unpublished Tallis, Some Sistine Chapel traditions, Organs and Choirs, Church Music, Sailors' Shanties, Samuel Sebastian Wesley, &c. On all these diverse subjects Sir Richard holds forth in his customary attractive and informing way.

Two further numbers of the 'Musical Pilgrim' series have appeared. One is by Tom. Wotton—'Berlioz: Four Works,' the four being the 'Fantastic' Symphony, the Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini,' 'The Captive,' and the Overture to 'The Corsair.' Readers of the Musical Times are well aware that Mr. Wotton knows more than most people concerning Berlioz, and his knowledge is here readably set forth, backed up by ample music-type illustrations.

In the other, Prof. Sanford Terry completes the studies of Bach's choral works which he has contributed to the series. He deals with the Magnificat, the Lutheran masses, and the six Motets. Of particular interest are his remarks on the Lutheran Masses. He gives several examples of Bach's method of adapting material from the cantatas for use in these works. The little book is a mine of information of all sorts. Dr. Terry's constant reference to Bach's reaction to the words he was engaged in setting is quite justified. As he says, an exposition of this side of Bach 'offers the most stimulating incentive to more technical analysis, and at the same time arrests the interest of the amateur reader.' (Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.* each).

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'A Simple Introduction to the Principles of Tonality.' By Stewart Macpherson. Pp. 60. Joseph Williams, 2*s.* 6*d.*, paper; 3*s.* 6*d.*, boards.

'Tonality and Expression.' By Greville Cooke. Pp. 58. Joseph Williams, 2*s.* 6*d.*, paper; 3*s.* 6*d.*, cloth.

'The Real Rhythm in English Poetry.' By Katharine M. Wilson. Pp. 171. Aberdeen University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'The Style of Palestrina, and Dissonance.' By Knud Jeppesen. With an Introduction by Edward J. Dent. Translated into English by Margaret W. Hamerik. Pp. 272. Oxford University Press.

'Adam Krieger (1634-66).' By Von Helmuth Osthoff. Pp. 107. Leipsic: Breitkopf & Härtel.

'The Acoustics of Orchestral Instruments and of the Organ.' By E. G. Richardson. Pp. 158. Arnold, 10*s.* 6*d.*

'Musical Appreciation: Practical Class Lessons.' By Ethel Home. Pp. 31. Boosey, 2*s.*

'A Door-Keeper of Music.' By J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Pp. 310. John Murray, 10*s.* 6*d.*

New Music

SONGS

There is little music to notice this month, but among the songs are one or two good things. Martin Shaw's 'Two Songs from Shakespeare' are sound, straightforward music, the more acceptable for being unpretentious. 'Come away, death,' in particular, gains from the directness of its treatment. The words are allowed their natural flow, and are not held up for over-emphasis or pointless subtleties. This success in setting the rhythm of the poem as a whole adds much to the effect of the song. 'When that I was and a little tiny boy' is suitably brusque and bustling, but does it really match the end of the poem? Perhaps; though there is more to be said than this. It is a very strange poem. It admirably fits its place in the play; there is a real but curious satisfaction to be had from reading it; but what 's it all mean? Goodness knows.

The same publishers (Cramer) send George Dyson's 'Sea Music,' a duet for soprano and mezzo-soprano or contralto to words by Longfellow. It is a musical and sensitive little work that has been known for some time as a school song, and will reward performance by soloists. T. C. Sterndale-Bennett's 'Will she be waiting up' is an addition to Cramer's list of light songs. You think the song is revoltingly sentimental until you find out that 'she' is a dog. That 's the sort of song it is.

Joseph Williams issues two songs by Greville Cooke—'Eileen Aroon' and 'Yesterday.' The composer writes fluently, and treats his poems with care; but his music is fulsome and commonplace, and despite its luscious pianoforte writing, sounds essentially empty.

Herbert Ferrers has done a good setting of Byron's 'So we'll go no more a-roving,' which is published by Curwen. The poem dictates certain clear lines of treatment, and this setting is not subtle. In fact, its success lies in its note of sincerity and lack of pretension. The poem has its beauty, certainly, but it would be silly to try to treat it as anything but a sentimental beauty.

The Oxford University Press publishes Robin Milford's 'Four Miniature Songs,' and 'Two Songs' by John Henry Collins. These last are the work of a man who died at the age of twenty-four. He was not a trained musician. They show a sensitiveness to atmosphere and a certain freshness which, as the editors remark, might have been lost if the grammatical errors had been corrected. The composer, who in one case sets his own poem, was a painter by profession.

To Dawson Freer's 'Edition of Classical Songs,' published by Joseph Williams, is added Chaminade's 'Golden Memories.' T. A.

PIANOFORTE

The biggest thing this month is Ronald Chamberlain's 'The Four Winds,' an ambitious-looking pianoforte suite published by Curwen. The music, frankly, is disappointing. It is patchy, affected in style, and at times commonplace in the extreme (look at p. 4, the last eight bars). In the last number these weaknesses are less marked, but even here there is little individuality or impulse. York Bowen's Valse in D flat (Joseph Williams) is No. 2 of his 'Suite Mignonne,' published as a separate piece. It has all York Bowen's fluency and graceful flow of melody, and though it makes no claims to be more than light music it is well written and effective. H. E. Randerson's 'An Oxford Quadrangle' (Oxford University Press) begins well, and has some distinction of pianoforte style. Lack of connection between the various sections of the work makes it unsatisfactory as a whole, but it has effective moments and considerable atmosphere.

T. A.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Two famous minuets—Handel's from 'Berenice' and Beethoven's in G—are published by Messrs. Novello in a neat arrangement for pianoforte and string quartet. The compositions are too well known for either praise or description. It may be suggested, however, that their style, so strikingly different, is well worth the attention of the young student. The Beethoven minuet is by no means characteristic of the composer, and must be considered rather as an instance of the gracious way in which he could unbend when he chose to do so. Mr. John Pointer is responsible for the arrangement, which is straightforward and in every way correct.

A Lyric Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Armstrong Gibbs (Curwen) attracts and disappoints in turn. The composer never errs in matters of taste; the melodic material like the harmonic structure has unquestionable distinction, and the personality which emerges from the music is, on the whole, sympathetic and attractive. The disappointment is occasioned not by any error of style, but by the occasional insistence on a design or idea when the interest aroused at first begins to evaporate. And the changes of tempo which occur in every one of the three movements appear to suggest that the composer himself is not unaware of what may be a temperamental failing. But for all that the Sonata makes pleasant reading.

F. B.

UNISON

W. L. Smoldon's 'River Song' rolls pleasantly between familiar banks of harmony. Its shading, and the graceful manipulation of its skips and windings, will agreeably occupy a class with a fair amount of tonal resource (Novello).

MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

A 'new and revised edition' of the children's operetta 'Bo-Peep and Boy Blue,' by Florian Pascal and Clifton Bingham, is issued by Joseph Williams (3*s*.). The lines are sometimes a little stilted, in an old-fashioned style, but there is a good deal to interest and amuse not too young children. There are two Acts and nine characters (four girls and five boys). The chorus work is mostly in two parts, and the finales work up broadly. The Sol-fa vocal score, it should be noted, is issued separately for 9*d*.; the libretto costs 8*d*.

W. R. A.

MIXED-VOICE

A few months ago I hailed one the soundest bits of teaching material produced for years—No. 104 of 'Novello's Music Primers,' entitled, 'A Handbook for Choralists' (1*s*. 6*d*.). That meaty, bovrilised book contained, it will be remembered, studies specially written by various composers. Now appears 'Supplement No. 1: Twenty-four Studies,' 1*s*., in which our old friends T. F. D., E. T. S., G. S., W. M., H. G., J. H., H. W. D., and C. A. G. conspire to arm the keen young singer with all manner of studies designed to develop his technical and expressive powers. There are short pieces for sostenuto, for breadth, for detached style, vigour in rhythm, phrasing, true chording, lightness and delicacy, and all the powers and graces of choralism. An excellent point is that many of the exercises can be sung by different combinations of voices. Thus, in the first seven the alto part is given in the treble stave, and is also notated, on a separate line, for tenors, so that the piece may be sung by S.A.B. or S.T.B. In the first set, a good many of the tests were in short score; now all are in open score, as in ordinary part-songs, to the study of which these exercises will bring marked increase of assurance and subtlety. Sol-fa is given separately, at the end. If I were a conductor, I should not be too proud, whatever my choir's capacity, to run through these exercises, and see whether there might not be something good for the little weaknesses in my flock. And if I were a new starter, with an inexperienced choir, I should press a copy of the book into each willing hand, and invite the choir to join with me in calling down blessings on the heads of T. F. D., E. T. S., G. S. (and 'band as before,' as they say of Nebuchadnezzar's players).

W. R. A.

Dr. Sweeting has arranged for S.A.T.B. the lively ditty of 'The Derby Ram' (from 'English County Songs') quite simply, with sufficient variety of treatment to please choirs that do not care to tackle music with highly independent parts. A solid and resonant body of tone can be used with bold effect (Cramer).

The choruses only of Purcell's 'The Fairy Queen' are handily issued by Novello at 2*s*. There is any amount of good fun and whimsicality in this work, which choirs that do not know it ought to look at. The 'Scene of the Drunken Poet,' for instance, with which this score opens, recalls the humours of Falstaff's punishment in 'The Merry Wives,' and gives scope for lightsome, zestful singing. There are impressive choruses, too, in this capital collection of varied delights.

W. R. A.

CHURCH MUSIC

From the Oxford University Press comes a Harvest Cantata, 'The Sower,' which should find favour with good choirs. The words have been compiled by Claude Aveling and the music is by Harold E. Darke. The choral writing is strong and effective without being difficult, and the admirable solo numbers for tenor, bass, and soprano provide ample scope for intelligent singers. The opening and closing choruses are also issued as single numbers. The first, 'Rejoice in the Lord,' is a jubilant, vigorous movement with a well-contrasted middle section. The final chorus, 'Praise Him in His noble acts,' is based on the hymn 'Ye watchers and ye holy ones.' The use of the tune is at first confined to the accompaniment; later the voices enter imitatively over an interesting pedal point and a brief instrumental passage leads directly into the hymn, in which the congregation joins. It should be noted that chorus parts (Staff and Sol-fa) are published separately.

Under the title 'The Simple Mass' the same publishers issue a short setting of the Holy Communion to easy plainsong melodies. All the melodies are taken from the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society's 'The Ordinary of the Mass,' which states that none are later in date than the 10th century. The tune of the Creed 'is probably at least as early as the 6th century.' There is an excellent organ accompaniment by J. H. Arnold, who also has some helpful things to say in an interesting preface. Another useful plainsong publication, 'Evening Canticles,' comes from the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society (Nashdom Abbey, Burnham, Bucks). Under one cover are eight settings of the Magnificat to simple tones and four settings with solemn mediations, a list of alternative endings, and eight settings of the Nunc Dimittis. Suggestions on the chanting of psalms and canticles are also given.

An air by Bach, 'O praise the Lord,' from Cantata No. 28, 'Gottlob nun geht das Jahr zu Ende,' has been arranged as an anthem for S.S.A. by W. Rigby, the English version by W. G. Rothery. The arrangement is excellent, and in its new form this bright, joyous number should prove widely acceptable. It is issued in Novello's octavo edition of Trios, &c., for female voices.

Two works by Felix White may be recommended to the notice of efficient choirs. 'Wings of Peace,' an anthem for S.A.T.B. with organ, is a musicianly setting of words attributed to Dr. Nicholas Postgate (died 1679). An expressive, tender melody is supported by gently moving lower parts. The tone is nowhere loud and the utmost delicacy of treatment is called for. 'This gospel sang the angels bright,' poem by William Canton, is a carol for S.A.T.B. and organ (ad lib.). Here again, with the same 3-2 signature, is a soprano part accompanied generally by more florid lower voices. The quiet expressive opening of each verse leads in this case, however, into a quicker section (bold, joyous), closing ff with an optional seven-part arrangement of the voices (Stainer & Bell).

Some additional numbers (Nos. 10 to 20) of Bach's Extended Chorales, with English and Welsh translations and arranged and edited by W. G. Whittaker, come from the Oxford University Press. Choirs should welcome these movements from the Cantatas; they provide a welcome change from the ordinary anthem and are mostly quite easy to sing. Those who have not yet made their acquaintance might look at Nos. 10, 11, or 14. No. 10, 'Now I know that Thou art loving,' is the final chorus of Church Cantata No. 105, and is notable for the treatment of the orchestral part. 'The conception,' writes the editor, 'is one of the most remarkable of Bach's innumerable fantasies on chorales.' Schweitzer comments upon the transition in the orchestra, with its unusual changes of time-signatures, from terrified trembling to peace. In No. 11, 'So let me sing God's praises,' 'the instrumental portion interprets the meaning of the verse by a flowing siciliano measure.' No. 14, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' is already known to many through its pianoforte and organ arrangements. It is published in five forms, including one for treble voices in unison. There is no space to comment on the various numbers of the Oxford Series of Bach Arias, arranged and edited by W. G. Whittaker, ten of which are to hand. Reference may be made to No. 7, Soprano Recitative and Aria, 'Life's last moment,' of which Schweitzer says that the poet and musician unite in mystic reverie upon death, and that Bach writes a 'glorified cradle song'; and No. 4, Tenor Aria,' O Treasure of Treasures.' The same writer points out that this number is based on a 'joy motive,' and thinks it overpowering in the energy of its flight.

Two recent additions to Cramer's 'Library of Church Music,' edited by Martin Shaw, may be cordially recommended. C. H. Kitson's setting of the Te Deum in F is a skilfully written, dignified piece of work, effective and not difficult. John Langdon has made excellent use of traditional Hebrew melodies in his setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A flat. The music is soundly written, straightforward, and quite easy.

Sir Walford Davies has edited for the National Council of Music, University of Wales, Beethoven's 'The Heavens declare the Creator's glory' (for voices in unison with organ accompaniment, and with English and Welsh words) and Palestrina's 'O Bone Jesu' (S.A.T.B. unaccompanied, Latin and Welsh words). They are published in one copy, with music in both notations, by Paxton.

G. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

H.M.V.

The Delius Festival is being well backed up by the gramophone. The composer having published his approval of the various recordings of his works now issued, the reviewer has nothing to do beyond giving his opinion of the reproduction. Happily, this side shows a marked improvement. In the past many of us felt that the essential quality of Delius had somehow eluded the gramophone; the dreaminess too often came out as mere fog, and the shifting harmonies became vague and sticky. These defects no longer exist, and the gramophonist may now take up a Delius record with confidence instead of with misgiving. 'In a summer garden,' played by the London Symphony Orchestra and conducted by Geoffrey Toye, is on D1696, and one side of D1697; on the odd side is 'A Song before Sunrise,' played by the New Symphony Orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli.

May Harrison and Arnold Bax are recorded in the first Sonata for violin and pianoforte. Bax is so successful as a gramophone pianist that this should be only the first of a series of records made by him. Many will wish to hear him in some of his own pieces. The Sonata is beautifully played and recorded, and is enjoyable therefore, although it doesn't show us the best side of the composer; only the orchestra does that (C1749-50).

Harold Bauer gives us in the Appassionata Sonata one of the best Beethoven pianoforte records I have so far heard. The tone is better than we expect in a work where power has to be laid on. There is, however, some lack of contrast; more degrees of forte would be welcome. Technically, the playing is above reproach. Rarely does one hear such speed and clarity as that of the Finale. These fine records remind us that the gramophone has not so far done its duty by Beethoven's sonatas. There are treasures among the less hackneyed numbers that would, I am sure, be warmly received (DB1293-94).

Those who still have a liking for Strauss's 'Salome' will welcome the record of the Finale, 'Salome and the head of Jokanaan,' played by the Berlin State Opera Orchestra conducted by Leo Bloch, with Gota Ljungberg as Salome. Many will find its hectic and grisly strains out of date (I do). The performance is all that we should expect from such performers (D1699).

Here is Toscanini again, putting Dukas's 'Sorcerer's Apprentice' through his paces. I use the term advisedly, for pace and power seem to be the outstanding characteristics. I do not find the work particularly interesting, either because of a lack on the conductor's part, or it may be because the bloom of this picturesque scherzo has worn off with the passage of years. But there can be no question as to the excellence of the recording or the brilliance and finish of the playing. So if your concern is mainly with the execution and the reproduction, this is a record you should not miss (D1689).

Keith Falkner is one of our best young basses, but he must watch his words. Many are indistinct and some are unnatural. He sings Korbay's 'Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane' and 'Had a horse' with due dramatic intensity, but he puts himself out of court by such distortions as 'no mattor,' 'Shall he nevor be,' &c. No amount of good vocalism can balance such vagaries as these (B3105).

COLUMBIA

What was said above concerning Delius records applies to that of 'Brigg Fair,' played by Sir Thomas Beecham and His Symphony Orchestra (the use of the possessive in this connection is spreading) (L2294-95).

I have heard more vivid and heart-wringing—more suicidal, so to speak—performances of the 'Pathetic' Symphony than that of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Oscar Fried, but perhaps none more uniformly good, despite a few shaky moments in the ensemble. The March is playful rather than barbarically swaggering, owing no doubt to the hot pace. The recording reaches and maintains a capital level, and as the price is down to 4*s*. 6*d*. the set is really good value (9867-71).

I wish I could get up more interest in the Strauss Waltzes; they seem to me to be all desperately alike and badly 'dated.' Here is 'Tales from the Vienna Woods,' excellently played by the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter (L2334).

The Capet Quartet are heard to advantage in Schumann's A minor Quartet. There is an amount of variety that I missed in their Beethoven recording. The Scherzo is very neatly touched off, but elsewhere in some of the busier passages there is shaky intonation (L2329-31).

There are two violin solo records—widely contrasted. Jelly d'Aranyi plays with fine breadth and classic style a Vitali Chaconne—one of those old string works which, it must be confessed, interest violinists more than ordinary people (9875). Bronislaw Huberman puts any amount of dash and show into a Mazurka by Zarzycki. His loud tone rises to noisiness, but the performance as a whole captures one. The companion piece is No. 3 of Sarasate's Spanish Dances, also well played (L2332).

There are three very good vocal solo records. Heddle Nash is heard in a couple of arias from 'Don Giovanni.' His long phrasing is notable (9880). Harold Williams sings the 'Toreador's Song' and 'O star of eve.' The English version of the former sounds rather trite, and the orchestral accompaniment is scratchy, so that the excellences of the record are centred in Mr. Williams's admirable singing (9873). Norman Allin makes Loewe's 'Edward' a thrilling affair. Some might feel that there is just a wee bit of over-acting; however, it did what few songs manage to do per gramophone—it made my flesh creep. That overrated song, Glinka's 'Midnight Review,' calmed me down again. Mr. Allin is in fine voice in both songs, and his words are unusually clear and significant (9874).

DECCA

This month's parcel shows a falling-off in interest. The orchestral part is limited to John Ansell's Irish Suite, 'Innisfail,' played by the Decca Light Symphony Orchestra under the beat of the composer. The work is a fair sample of its type, well played and recorded. But the inimitable Edward German has made us very hard to please where light music is concerned (M65-66).

There are three military band records. Vaughan Williams's English Folk-Song Suites are drawn on for two of them, played by the Decca Military Band, conducted by Charles Leggett. The third gives us selections from the 'Faust' Ballet Music, the players being the Chenil Military Band and the conductor Julian Clifford. Of the Vaughan Williams movements, 'I'm seventeen come Sunday' and a March on 'Bonny Boy' are on M67; 'Folk-Songs from Somerset' and a Toccata Marziale are on M68. The Ballet Music record is F1520. The Vaughan Williams pieces are, of course, the better music, but I have a feeling that the composer has not made the most of the lively medium. The music is too 'busy' perhaps; or is it that folk-song material does not lend itself to this treatment so well as we thought it did? or that it doesn't wear well? or any other reason why? Anyhow, I like these movements less than I expected to. The Toccata has some rousing moments, however.

There are two vocal records. Norton Collyer has an expressive and musical tenor voice, which ne uses a little over-strenuously in Coates's 'Bird Songs at Eventide.' He sings also 'The Devout Lover,' a song that takes us back to the good old days before women developed a preference for the cave man and his methods. Perhaps the devout lover was a little too abject, and it is as well, therefore, that the song has been shortened by a verse. Mr. Collyer omits the one in which the lover tells us that it is not his in flowing melodies to tell the umpteen (I think a thousand, but anyway a lot)—the umpteen graces that he knows so well (F1522).

Roy Henderson sings finely in Tchaikovsky's 'To the Forest,' but something seems to have gone wrong with the recording of the companion song, the same composer's 'Don Juan's Serenade.' Here the voice becomes metallic and edgy, and the sibilants are over-hissed. It sounds as if Mr. Henderson turned on the sinister tap and the microphone exaggerated it unduly. Of course, the defect may be peculiar to my sample only (M69).

MID-OCTOBER LIST

Probably more discretion is required in the choice of material for military band transcription than for any other medium. Not every string tune by a long chalk can stand transference to the wood-wind, and the brass may easily be fatal to the mood and style of pianoforte and chamber music originals. Wagner's 'Album Leaf,' arranged by Moses-Tobani, and Bach's so-called Air on the G string, arranged by Winterbottom, are cases in point. The new medium is far too solid for the 'Album Leaf'; the splodges of brass especially are quite out of the picture. The Bach is a bit better, but we miss the sensitive feel of the strings. The players are the Chenil Military Band, conducted by Charles Leggett. As Mr. Leggett can hardly have gone through life without hearing the Bach piece in its original form, it is surprising to find his performance almost entirely lacking in the occasional easing of the rhythm that a good string player would give it as a matter of course. His pace is on the quick side, and his style prosaic—business-like is the term that was in my mind while listening (F 1534).

A far more successful transcription is Weber's 'Perpetuum mobile,' arranged by Jaeger for pianoforte duet and strings, played by Herbert Jaeger and his Salon Orchestra, the pianists being Mr. Jaeger himself and E. Kaschubec. (By the way, what a lot the Mendelssohn of such pianoforte solos as the 'Bee's Wedding,' owed to this piece!) On the other side is Saint-Saëns's 'Le Cygne,' played as a 'cello solo by Hans Metzler with rather meagre tone, Mr. Kaschubec providing an almost apologetic pianoforte part (F1535).

Frank Titterton sings Eric Coates's 'Sea Rapture,' and Lane Wilson's arrangement of 'Phyllis has such charming graces.' I like the latter the less; the singer takes this ditty too seriously, and the melodic line is not well defined. Old songs of this type call for clearness and grace rather than emotional warmth (M73).

Dale Smith's performance of Arne's 'Celia's charms' suffers from the same defect, I feel. The lover in these ditties of this period was never very hard hit, despite all his talk about 'sighs' and 'flames.' He usually had at least the tip of his tongue in his cheek, and another Celia round the corner. The companion song is a rattling good thing—Herbert Hughes's arrangement of 'Palatine's daughter.' A bit clearer diction would have made this record a topper. Leslie Howard's accompaniment is a capital feature (M74).

Last month I made acquaintance with the Irish Protestant quasi-folk-song 'The ould Orange flute.' Here it is again, sung this time by Florence Marks, unaccompanied (which is a gain) and with the right racy humour and style. I don't get all her words—perhaps the brogue beats me at times. On the other side she is recorded reciting 'The Harbour,' by Letts, and a very good skit by the late Percy French—'A sailor courted.' These are well done, especially the latter, though again some of the words elude me. This record confirms the view I expressed last month as to the promising field opened up by such unsophisticated treatment of folky material (F1538).

Player-Piano Notes

ÆOLIAN

Audiographic.—A new and exceptionally attractive series for children comes to hand this month in the form of 'Playtime Music.' These rolls are intended to serve as a sort of gateway to the bigger classics. The choice of music is excellent, this batch consisting of Grieg's 'Puck' (D1002); Grainger's 'Shepherds' Hey' (D1008); Tchaikovsky's 'Dance of the Reed Pipes' ('Casse-Noisette') (D1010); MacDowell's 'To a water lily' (D1014); Poldini's 'Dancing Doll' (D1006); and Schytte's 'Forest Elves' (D1004)—all for pianola. Each piece is provided not only with many delightful little pictures, but with a 'programme' as well, which is printed on the roll in large, clear type, a slightly fuller form being given in an accompanying pamphlet. Mr. G. Kirkham Jones is the writer. The reproduction is edited so that the most inexperienced can obtain really good results. The editorial staff, however, will do well to moderate its transports in the matter of rubato; there is rather an overdose in some of the rolls mentioned above. Used by an experienced artist, rubato is effective, but it should be administered cautiously where youngsters are concerned. This, however, is an easily remedied defect, and in all other respects the series is most promising. All the rolls mentioned above have been tried on the younger members of a family, who voted them 'jolly good,' and expressed a desire for more.

Duo-Art Audiographic.—We now have the second and third movements of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony. The playing, by Rudolph Ganz, is first-rate; the simple analysis is easy to follow, and should be of great assistance to the student (D823, D825).

Ernest la Prade is responsible for the introduction and running commentary on an arrangement of Wieniawski's Romance from the Violin Concerto in D minor. Like most string solos, this is not very satisfactory on the pianoforte, although Geneviève Pitot's performance leaves nothing to be desired (D835). There is also Liszt's arrangement of Mendelssohn's 'On wings of song,' with notes by Percy A. Scholes, the excellent pianist being Desider Vecsei (D913).

It is interesting to have Ravel's 'Birds of Sadness,' played by the composer. This is not everyone's music, and its appeal is not immediate, but the piece grows on one, and the actual performance is beautiful. The notes are by Paul le Flem (D929). A successful arrangement of Schubert's 'Death and the Maiden' movement from the String Quartet is played by Carolyn Beebe, with notes by Ernest la Prade (D917).

George Copeland's playing of Debussy's charming 'Moonlight' is good; the notes are by Forbes Milne (D883). On the whole, this is perhaps the most attractive roll of the batch.

Duo-Art.—There are two successful transcriptions—the Prelude to 'The Mastersingers,' arranged by Ernest Hutcheson (7301), and a selection from Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounov' (6972). The Prelude is played (needless to say, extremely well) by William Backhaus. The Moussorgsky lends itself less well to transcription than the Wagner, but makes an interesting roll, and Robert Armbruster does all that is possible so far as performance is concerned. Josef Hofmann gives us the second and third movements of Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 2, No. 3, and maintains his usual high standard (7306). In rhythm and clarity the Scherzo is particularly striking, and the pedalling in the Trio is exemplary.

Themodist.—The only two of interest are a clear, well-cut roll of Elgar's 'Lullaby' (T30445*b*), and an exceptionally good one of Dohnányi's brilliant Capriccio, Op. 23, No. 3. This is most satisfying, and will give great pleasure to the enthusiastic player pianist (T30444*b*).

BLÜTHNER

Animatic.—One of the most attractive rolls in a generally interesting list is 'Valse Impromptu' for four hands, by Pierné. The duettists, whose ensemble is extraordinarily good, are the composer and Marthe Dron. The music is of the light, brilliant type (57114).

The delightful Chopin study generally known as 'The Spring' (Op. 10, No. 8) is good, too, Francis Plante's rapid passage-work being remarkable for its clarity (55765).

Another excellent Chopin roll is that of Godowsky playing the well-known Nocturne in F minor (Op. 55, No. 1). He avoids stressing its somewhat monotonous melancholy, with attractive results (55783).

Grieg's charming little Berceuse (Op. 38, No. 1) is sympathetically treated by Albert Friedenthal (55983).

Roderich Bass's playing of Tchaikovsky's 'Chant sans paroles' is an example of how not to use rubato, although good in other respects (57534).

There is a capital performance of Paderewski's 'Légende' by Oswin Keller. Though on the long side, it is interesting enough to hold the listener's attention throughout (55557).

There are rather violent and uncalled-for changes of time in the roll of Brahms's Impromptu, Op. 117, No. 1. The pianist, Delafosse, starts off at a smart pace, and makes too great a contrast by pulling up heavily later on (55746).

An attractive Suite by Raff is well played by Ernst Heuser (57179), and there is a clear and well-finished performance by Willy Rehberg of Mozart's Concerto in E flat (two rolls, 57023-24).

Last, but by no means least, is Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 81a, in E flat, played by Lamond—a performance whose excellence may be taken for granted (two rolls, 55724-25).

D. G.

Occasional Notes

In our September issue we commented at some length on Mr. James Agate's notice, in the Sunday Times, of Noel Coward's 'Bitter Sweet.' The following letter from Mr. Agate arrived too late for insertion in our October number. He asks us to give it the same publicity as that given to our 'ill-founded attack,' and we accede gladly; hence its appearance among the Occasional Notes instead of in the correspondence columns.

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to your 'Occasional Notes' of September last. The writer starts by paying me a charming compliment in my capacity of dramatic critic, after which he proceeds to a full-dress attack upon me, commencing with the words, 'Let us begin at the beginning.'

He begins by saying, 'Mr. Coward also (we are told) "composed" the tunes.' Obviously the Musical Times's informant can only be that dramatic critic against whose 'hyperbolising' the writer has deemed it time to make a stand. May I ask here what word other than 'composed' the writer of your Notes would suggest? Does he suggest that Mr. Coward plumbed or brick-layed or boiler-scraped his melodies?

The writer then goes on to suggest that I instituted a comparison between Wagner, Mozart, and Mr. Coward. It is true that I instituted a comparison, but not as musicians. My comparison was strictly limited to these composers' capacity to do something else as well as compose. If I say that Schubert and Sousa both suffered from in-growing toe-nail and floating kidney, no comparison between them as composers is established or attempted. The comparison is between them as sufferers. If I say that Shakespeare had need of Burbage to play his chief characters, whereas the late W. S. Penley played his own, the comparison is not between Shakespeare and Penley as dramatists pure and simple, but between them as dramatist-actors. I pointed out that in the world of big music Wagner was his own librettist, but that Mozart was not. Further, I pointed out that in the world of little music Coward, so far as I knew, accomplished something outside the music which nobody else has achieved. Wagner did both jobs, but I noted for the benefit of anybody who might be stupid that 'Die Meistersinger' was 'not strictly an operette,' implying that it was a big thing, whereas Mr. Coward's work was strictly an operette, and therefore a little one. No person with even an elementary sense of logic will suggest that anything that I wrote in my article in the Sunday Times of July 21 hints at any comparison as a composer between Mr. Coward and any of the dozen or so I mentioned. The discussion was purely between Mr. Coward's ability to write his own libretto and the inability or refusal of other composers to do the same thing.

The writer ends by saying: 'We make this comparison for the benefit of Mr. Agate. He is not likely to find a music critic writing about plays and books and turning out nonsense comparable with that written by himself about music. If ever he does, we hope he'll have no mercy.' I should certainly have no mercy on anybody writing about the drama with the same looseness of thought as is displayed by the writer of your 'Occasional Notes.' Is it too much to ask the possessor of a musical mind to have a logical mind, or even an ordinary one? If I say that a magpie and a Hereford cow and a fox-terrier are three objects in Nature which are black and white, I do not institute a comparison between their merits as thieves, milk-givers, and watch-dogs. You will agree that if I say that a horse can draw a load whereas an ostrich can't I am not instituting a comparison between their relative speeds. When I say that Mr. Coward can write his own libretto and that Mozart couldn't I am making no comparison as to their relative merit as musicians, and this in spite of the fact that I am mentioning them in the same breath. In conclusion, I must ask you to give the same publicity to this letter which you gave to your Note-writer's ill-founded attack.—Yours, &c.,

25, Palace Court, W.2. James Agate.

We thought, and still think, that our Occasional Note was quite clear, but as Mr. Agate's perception is evidently far less quick than his temper we must go over some of the ground again. As Mr. Coward's share in the musical part of 'Bitter Sweet' consisted of merely picking out tunes on the pianoforte, the writing down, arranging, and orchestration being done by other hands, we held that he had no right to the title of composer. A composer, we contended, is one who not only conceives musical ideas; he gives them shape and form—in a word, he creates the music from start to finish. Let us put an analogous case—one that should appeal to Mr. Agate as a dramatic critic: imagine a man unable to read or write, and ignorant of grammar, but yet ambitious to shine as a dramatist. He hits on a few conventional ideas for a play, dictates the scenario and dramatis personæ, gives some general idea of the production, and leaves such not unimportant details as the writing of the dialogue and the 'business' to assistants. Mr. Agate would rightly refuse to describe him as a playwright or author. Called on to criticise the first night production of the result, he would probably mention with scornful quotation marks that Mr. So-and-so 'wrote' the play, just as we said that Mr. Coward 'composed' the music of 'Bitter Sweet.' Mr. Agate asks, 'What word other than "composed" meets the case?' It is no part of our job to provide a terminology for musical dabblers such as Mr. Coward; we think the inverted commas are enough, and that normal readers will see our implication if we say that Mozart was a composer and Mr. Coward a 'composer.' If another term is really needed we should say that Mr. Coward concocted the music—though here again another word is wanted to describe a concoction that bears even less relation to music than a 'Heart Salve' novelette does to literature.

Mr. Agate says that he did not institute a comparison between Mozart, Wagner, and Coward as musicians. Then why mention Mozart and Wagner at all? Because, replies Mr. Agate, of their capacity, or otherwise, 'to do something as well as compose.' But if Mr. Agate discusses Mozart, Wagner, and Coward in that connection, he evidently regards Mr. Coward as a composer, in spite of his musical illiteracy; and no less clearly he is instituting a comparison between the three as musicians—not, it is true, as composers alone, but as operatic composers who could write their own libretto (like Wagner and Coward) or could not (like poor limited Mozart). All the talk about floating kidneys, ingrowing toe-nails, cows, fox-terriers, horses, and ostriches cannot alter that fact.

The weakness of Mr. Agate's position is his failure to realise that there can be nothing approaching a parallel between Mozart, Wagner, and Coward. Mr. Coward is a dramatist, and his creative faculties are entirely in that direction. The same may be said of Schikaneder, Hofmannsthal, Barbier, and the rest of the librettists. He is unlike them in that he has rashly attempted to provide his own music. Probably several of the well-known librettists could also have tapped out, with one finger, reminiscent tunes; but they didn't. Realising their limitations, they saw the wisdom of the adage that tells the shoemaker to stick to his last.

Mr. Agate makes great play with logic. We wish his own logical sense were keen enough to enable him to see that the Sunday Times passages to which we took exception, and the whole of the above load of verbal bricks, are based on a fallacy. When he says that Mr. Coward can write his own libretto and that Mozart couldn't, he is saying something that has no point whatever unless it is agreed that Mr. Coward is an operatic composer worth mentioning in the same breath as Mozart. That is the whole point of our complaint. We never suggested that Mr. Agate made a comparison between them as musicians.

Finally, a careful re-reading of the Sunday Times article, of our comments thereon, and of Mr. Agate's letter, leaves us convinced that our 'attack,' so far from being 'ill-founded' was justified down to the last comma (especially the inverted ones), and was if anything on the mild side.

We are glad to see that at three of the six concerts to be given at Queen's Hall by the Hallé Orchestra a liberal amount of Berlioz will be heard. —the Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini' (November 15); the Overture to 'The Corsair' (November 29); and three extracts from 'Romeo and Juliet,' the Royal Hunt and Storm from 'The Trojans,' and the 'Rakoczy March' (December 13). At this last concert, by the way, Constant Lambert will conduct what we believe to be the first concert performance of his 'Rio Grande,' in which a contingent of the Hallé chorus will take part.

It is good news that Sir Thomas Beecham's Imperial League of Opera will start activities next year. Sir Thomas asks for at least fifteen thousand new members during the next few months, and this will give him the total of sixty thousand for which he has been asking. However, even with its present membership, the League is surely the largest musical organization in the world, and certainly the largest enrolled in support of opera—a fact that, on reflection, is a pretty good answer to the half-bricks thrown at the English musical public, including the periodical shower of missiles from Sir Thomas himself. A distinct fillip to the activities of the League should be given by its latest enterprise—the issue of a monthly journal entitled Milo. This will be sent to all members, besides being on sale at 6*d*. Mr. Philip Heseltine is the editor, and among the contributors to the first number are Sir Thomas Beecham, Mr. Cecil Gray, Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, and Mr. H. Proctor Gregg. A list of prospective contributors promises a good literary and musical standard. We wish our new contemporary all success. By the way, we are glad to see that Mr. Cecil Gray in his article 'Opera: A Vindication,' refers to the unconverted in terms both sensible and courteous. He says that it would be idle to deny the existence of > 'a strong and influential body of enlightened opinion which is definitely hostile to opera, particularly among musicians themselves, on the alleged ground that it is an unnatural combination of two arts, and an impure, hybrid, and therefore, at best, a lower form of art than what is called pure or absolute music.'

This is more politic, as well as more just, than labelling the antis as highbrows, or narrow-minded pedants. Our own view has long been that the quickest way of converting that 'strong and influential' hostile element is to enlarge and improve the repertory. It has long been a standing reproach that some of the finest operas are among the most rarely performed, and vice-versâ. Hence we believe that a good augury for the success of the League is the enterprising programme announced for its first season. It will get away from the rut with such comparative novelties as 'The Italian in Algiers,' 'The Bartered Bride,' 'The Snow Maiden,' 'Prince Igor,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and 'A Village Romeo and Juliet.' Given anything like adequate production and performance, this is the kind of fare that will bring into the operatic fold thousands of musicians who have hitherto had good reasons for staying outside.

Among the wealth of interesting concerts announced for the coming season, sight should not be lost of those promised by the New English Music Society, now in its second season. Of its six concerts one will have been given by the time these lines are in print, and the remainder will be on November 19, December 17, February 11, March 4, and March 25, in the concert-room of the Hyde Park Hotel, at 9. The performers will be the London Chamber Orchestra (conducted by Anthony Bernard), Elisabeth Schumann, Alice Ehlers (harpsichord), Francis Poulenc, &c., and the programme will be a richly-diversified scheme that will include old English chamber suites from 16th-, 17th-, and 18th-century manuscripts, concertos and divertimenti of the Italian, French, and German schools (including a manuscript Haydn Concerto for harpsichord and orchestra), songs with orchestra by Scarlatti, Pergolesi, Pepusch, Mahler, Strauss, Villa-Lobos, &c. Among the works to be heard for the first time in London will be an Aubade for pianoforte and orchestra by Poulenc, with the composer at the pianoforte, a Divertimento di Camera by William Walton, an Orchestral Suite by Vaughan Williams, and a Concerto for viola d'amore by Hindemith. The address of the Secretary is 19, Ladbroke Grove, W.11.

'Feste' writes: 'I shall be glad if you will allow me to correct a wrong impression that might have been given by some comments of mine in last month's "Ad Libitum." I mentioned this journal and Musical Opinion as having some years ago discontinued the insertion of advertisements and other announcements referring to certain musical colleges, and I added that as such advertisements still appear in most, if not all, of the remaining musical journals published in this country, Musical Times and Musical Opinion are being penalised for having acted in the interests of the teaching profession. I ought to have taken the opportunity of paying a tribute to the stand made in the same cause by the Music Student under Mr. Scholes's direction, a stand that has been continued by that journal's successors, The Music Teacher, both under the editorship of Mr. W. R. Anderson, and its present editor, Mr. H. S. Gordon. I did not make this clear, because Mr. Scholes's journal needed no conversion, having, on the contrary, led the attack. I confined my mention to the two journals that, as far as I know, were the only ones that took action as a result of representation from the Teachers' Registration Council. I add that the sooner the remaining English musical journals come into line on this important point the better.'

We recently quoted a paragraph from the Musical Courier in which was announced the demise of Musical America. We are glad to hear, however, that the report of the latter journal's decease was much exaggerated. (We use the ancient quip because we know it will be expected in this connection.) Musical America had merely been through a financial crisis, and has been reorganized and given a change of directors, under whom it will revert to the form and style with which its English readers have been familiar for many years. Judging from the numerous letters quoted in a recent issue, the changes meet with wide approbation. We wish our entertaining contemporary good luck.

With the same breath we regretfully say good-bye to The Dominant. Its career was very short, but during its brief innings it had a note of its own, and its literary standard was high. Apparently the fatal defect was its lack of size. In order to stand any chance whatever a musical journal to-day has to cover a field so wide that ample space is a prime necessity.

With the opening of the concert season the stars have begun their usual twinklings, viâ their press agents. Here are a few flashes:

'I believe I am the only prima donna in the world who eats potatoes. I love them sautées.'—Jeritza.

'I would not diet. If I diet, my face sag.'—Tetrazzini.

'I am proud that I am wealthy. If you see me wearing jewels, no matter how many, you can know that they are real. I have never worn a piece of artificial jewellery.'—Tetrazzini.

'I think I have surpassed Liszt, especially in the technique of the left hand.'—Pachmann.

'My voice is as good as ever—as fresh as a young girl's.'—Melba.

'Oh, I have plenty animal. I have fifteen dogs, five cats, and two peacocks, and I had a tiger. I call him "Poossy." '—Tetrazzini.

Apparently Madame Jeritza has entered the ranks of the journalistic profession. We regret to notice, however, a tendency to repeat herself. Thus, in the Derby Daily Telegraph of October 9 appears an article signed by her entitled, 'Life, Laughter, and Grand Opera: the Crocodile that Cured me of Shyness and the Dog that Saved me from Death.' On the same day the Cambria Daily Leader contained an article entitled 'Life and Laughter and Grand Opera: the Cat that stopped a Performance, and the Dog that Saved me from Death.' Except for that little difference in the title the articles are word for word the same. This would not be surprising in these days of syndicated journalism; but we observe that each paper contains a prominent announcement to the effect that 'the article was specially written' for that paper. As for the article itself, it is small beer chronicles of no importance whatever. We do not advise journalists to retaliate by venturing on to the concert platform, but we are sure that many of them would be able to sing quite as well as Madame Jeritza can write.

Jeritza's literary work must have kept her busy that week, for two days before those 'specially written' articles appeared, she had one in the Daily Mail. As she had just arrived in this country for a series of engagements we are not surprised to find her, true to type, beginning in this strain:

> 'ENGLAND! The name has leaped joyfully to the lips of countless children of this great Motherland when they have returned to it after being long away, and it is with like fervour that I exclaim it after my absence of two years. For I love England, and I love the English people.'

That word love, by the way, has a pretty good innings towards the end of the article. Madame 'loves' England, and she 'loves' the English people. Why does she love us? 'I have said that I love the English people because they love music and song. I love them for other things—because, for instance, of their love for animals, sport, and the country life which I, too, love.'

What a game it is!

Trinity College of Music has just made some notable new appointments to its staff. Additions to the solo singing department are Messrs. Maurice Binden and Albert Garcia; Mr. Archy Rosenthal becomes a pianoforte-teaching professor; Mr. John Barbirolli will take charge of the College orchestra, and Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott of the choir. So much of the virtue of a college training lies in its corporate activities that the orchestral and choral appointments are of special importance. Mr. Barbirolli has already distinguished himself as a conductor, and Mr. Kennedy Scott has long been in the very forefront of English choral trainers.

Many of our readers will remember that in 1924 we referred to the remarkable performances of 'The Magic Flute,' and other operas, by a party of elementary schoolboys at Todmorden, trained by Mr. Ronald Cunliffe. Mr. Cunliffe has since come South, and is now teaching music at the Latymer School, Edmonton. The boys of that school will perform 'The Magic Flute' on December 2, 4, and 6. Tickets may be had from Mr. Cunliffe, at the school, at 2*s.* and 1*s.* We had to miss the 1924 performances, Todmorden being out of our beat. Edmonton isn't, so we shall be there.

PRETTY WEDDING AT HOOLE

'. . . The bride has been in the office of the District Manager of Telephones. The hymn was, "How welcome was the call."'

But like a good operator she tried another ring.—Punch.

A correspondent sends us a cutting from a London daily paper containing the announcement that 'three of the forthcoming B.B.C. concerts will be choral, and the National Circus will take part in them.' Our correspondent suggests extracts from 'The Ring' as the most suitable material for this new body of performers.

THE LONDON OPERA FESTIVAL

The Festival of Opera at the Scala Theatre, already announced in previous issues of the Musical Times, will open on December 30 with the first London production of Monteverde's 'Orfeo' (1607), conducted by Mr. Jack Westrup and produced by Mr. Robert Stuart, the organizer of the Festival. On the following evening Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' will be given, preceded by the Locke-Gibbons Masque 'Cupid and Death.' These works will be conducted by Mr. Leslie Heward and Mr. Jack Westrup, and will be produced by Mr. Dennis Arundel. These productions will alternate throughout the week. During the following week performances will be given of Handel's 'Julius Cæsar' and 'La Finta Giardiniera,' a work composed by Mozart at the age of eighteen. Mr. Gervase Hughes will conduct the Handel opera, and will co-operate with Mr. Norman Marshall, a producer whose work in connection with the Festival theatres at Leeds and Cambridge is well known. Mr. Leslie Heward will conduct the first performances in England of 'La Finta Giardiniera' and Mr. Nugent Monck, founder and director of the Maddermarket Theatre, Norwich, will produce. The last week of the Festival will be devoted to performances of Gluck's 'Alcestis,' with Mr. Aylmer Buesst as conductor and Mr. Dennis Arundel as producer, and Weber's 'Der Freischütz.' The latter work will be conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham, and produced by Mr. Procter-Gregg. The Festival will be followed by a week of matinées (beginning January 20) at popular prices, of Humperdinck's 'Hänsel and Gretel,' preceded by 'Castle Creevey,' a short, one-Act operetta which was given with great success by members of the late B.N.O.C. in the provinces during the summer of 1928.

Among the artists appearing are Mesdames May Blyth, Joan Cross, Noel Eadie, Gwyneth Edwards, Norah Gruhn, Doris Lemon, Denne Parker, Marjorie Parry, Thea Phillips, Constance Willis; Messrs. Norman Allin, Sumner Austin, Tudor Davies, Arthur Fear, Charles d'If, Edward Leer, William Michael, Dennis Noble, Frank Sale, Frank Titterton, Harry Wendon.

Mr. Boris Ord will be at the harpsichord for the Monteverde, Purcell, Handel, and Mozart productions.

Considerable time and trouble have been expended in the editing of the earlier operas. 'Orfeo' and 'Cupid and Death' have been newly edited by Mr. Jack Westrup. Mr. Gervase Hughes has produced a new edition of Handel's 'Julius Cæsar' more in keeping with the spirit of the 18th century than the version popular in Germany. Special new translations of 'Julius Cæsar' and 'La Finta Giardiniera' have been made by Mr. Robert Stuart.

As much attention is being paid to the purely dramatic side of the performances as is normally given to the spoken drama, and it is confidently expected that the London Opera Festival will establish a new standard of operatic production in this country. Booking will open on Monday, November 4, for members of the Imperial League of Opera only, who will obtain, on production of their membership cards, a reduction of ten per cent. on the advertised prices. Booking for the general public will open on Monday, December 2. Further particulars may be obtained from The New Scala Theatre, London, W.1.

Attention is called to the fact that there is no official connection between the London Festival of Opera and the Imperial League of Opera, and that no I.L.O. funds are being applied to the purposes of this Festival. (For the price of tickets see p. 970.)

Teachers' Department

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD PIANOFORTE EXAMINATIONS FOR 1930

By Ernest Fowles

(Continued from October number, p. 911)

HIGHER DIVISION.—LIST A

No. 31. Czerny. Study in C, Op. 299, No. 11. (Dotted crotchet 69-76.)—Note that the fingering of the broken thirds is practically always that which would be applied to them in unbroken form. It would therefore be most profitable first to practise them in the latter form, and in hand staccato. This is a modified form of my frequent advice to play decorated harmony in plain form; but in this case, the idea is to promote fluency in a general command of the passages before they are played as written. It is almost unnecessary to add that the study is an excellent test of hand freedom.

No. 32. Handel. Minuet and Variations from Suite 10. Menuetto (Crotchet 80).—The organic nature of this movement must be realised. The molossus-like three sounds of bar 1 come again and again into the picture, and their original rendering is preserved throughout irrespective of the tone-changes. Scan the phrases with care, but make no rhythmic breaks likely to disturb the uniform progression of the whole. Two or three of the graces are annotated, but nothing is said with reference to the shakes in bars 6, 10, &c. We may assume that these shakes should start on the principal sound, if only in deference to the first four melodic sounds at the beginning of the movement.

Var. I. (Crotchet 120.)—A facile commentary upon the theme, moving gracefully in both sections towards the final cadences. That is, in brief, the way in which this variation should be regarded. The tone-markings do not, of course, belong to the original, but they are acceptable, provided that no exaggeration of sentiment spoil the flow of the movement.

Var. II. (Crotchet 138.)—Reversion to a clear melodic outline with an undercurrent bass-part which may often sink to mormorando. The cantabile style manifestly dominates the whole.

Var. III. (Crotchet 152-160.)—In brilliant contrast. It may be played with but small variation of tone. A too great insistence upon the two suggested pianos would destroy the vigour obviously intended by Handel.

No. 33. Glière. 'Album Leaf,' Op. 31, No. 11. (Crotchet 96.)—Music which recalls the style and idiom of Arensky and Liadov rather than that of the Russian modern school. Let the student play the first four bars with the left-hand harmony unbroken. That will give him a lead in his task of outlining melody and harmony in their just proportions. Note the three-bar rhythms in the episode, and how gratefully they contrast with the relative angularity of the first section. Ped. con discrezione is good for the cultured player, but is hardly enough for students of this grade. Yet there is wisdom in the limited counsel, for it is impossible adequately to indicate pedalling in music of this kind. Roughly, the pedalling, say, of bars 1 to 4 is harmonic, whereas in bars 9 to 12 (which contain precisely similar material) it is melodic. In the episode, while the pedalling is also harmonic or melodic, or both, it is also rhythmic, as at the close of the third and sixth bars, where a sudden damping helps the clear scansion of the rhythm.

No. 34. Harold Rutland. 'Rigadoon.' (Crotchet 152.)—A clever piece of diatonicism. Surely a record, even in modern elementary music, of forty-four bars of music without a single chromatic sound! This is a dance of the name of the more moderate type, and presents the rigadoon in an atmosphere of some delicacy. The phrase-marks ought therefore to be accurately observed, together with the staccato signs—which, however, should not be understood in an exaggeratedly shortened sense. The pedal markings are few, and it will perhaps be wise to limit the student to those actually indicated.

HIGHER DIVISION.—LIST B

No. 35. Bertini. Study in A, Op. 100, No. 25. (Crotchet 72.)—The chief and, perhaps, the only problem is that with which the study opens. It is evident that the intention is to outline the tune indicated by the upturned stems, as well as to furnish a quiet accompaniment in the same hand. Therefore, first treat the two things separately. Let the tune alone be played with suitable cantabile and to the accompaniment merely of the left-hand chords. Then let the twelve semiquavers of each bar be practised as though no melody were in question, also with the chordal accompaniment. Thus, the relative significance of each part will become clear and a foundation laid for enabling the right hand to perform its double function.

No. 36. Maurice Greene. 'Allemanda.' (Crotchet 92-100.)—This most enlivening movement brings to mind one of the old English worthies of the time of Bach. It represents the French allemande in a thoroughly English manner—buoyant and vigorous. Thus should it be played. The tone-markings—added by a later hand—may be observed if they fit in with the mood of the player, but not otherwise. My own feeling in the matter is that nothing should be allowed to rob the music of its vigour and of its fine effect of onwardness. This does not exclude personal tone-shadings. On the contrary, it invites them; provided that the atmosphere of the music be not thereby lost. Apart from all these considerations, the movement affords a particularly good opportunity for the practice of the more brilliant forms of agility.

No. 37A. Chopin. Prelude in A, Op. 28, No. 7. (Crotchet 69.)—A piece which, as regards pure keyboard difficulty, looks perfectly innocent and innocuous, but which requires not a little musical experience for its artistic interpretation. Observe its construction in two-bar groups. It is evident that something must be done to counteract such rigidity of rhythmic alignment. The true compensation will be found in the tone employed, and particularly in the variety of treatment accorded to the cadences. Of the latter, there are no less than eight, and no two of them should be alike in tone. This does not mean that violent contrasts are required. The variations must be subtle—and very personal. The key to the whole effect is the climax reached in bar 12. The chord ought not to be hurriedly spread, but played with dignity and power. This short Prelude is a big thing, and must be played with a sense of its bigness.

No. 37B. Chopin. Prelude in C minor, Op. 28, No. 20. (Crotchet 46.)—When one has learnt the art of playing chords with full, firm, and round tone, this Prelude offers as fine practice for further study of the kind as any work in the whole of pianoforte literature. Moreover, it is magical in its harmony, and the combination of the two qualities make it almost indispensable to the pianoforte student. Battles have been fought over the last E of bar 3. Natural it should, of course, be—as in this reprint. Remember that the tone is presumed as diminishing gradually from bar 5 to the end, one slight, very slight, uplift only occurring just towards the end, and then momentarily.

No. 38. Walter Niemann. 'The Mirror Lake,' Op. 95, No. 2. (Crotchet 76.)—The most important feature is probably concerned with the pedalling. It is obvious that purely harmonic pedalling, following in the main the arpeggio lines, is possible throughout. On the other hand, a very clearly outlined melody is present, and it is manifest that any pedalling applied must take this also into account. Consequently, while the pedal may be used harmonically, the ear must be on the alert to damp at every place where it threatens to obscure the clear course of the melody. On the other hand, there are melodic features which demand exclusive pedal attention, such as the minims in the bass-part of bars 10 and 11. The whole movement should be played in softened light, and with climactic points reduced to their lowest intensities. A touch of the mystic predominates, and a help towards the atmosphere will be found in remembering the title, and the picture intended by the composer to be visualised by the player.

HIGHER DIVISION.—LIST C

No. 39. J. S. Bach. Two-part Invention in E. (Quaver 116-126.)—Bach's lesson in the pitch-treatment of the lower mordent. Observe how consistently the lower sound is diatonic. I suspect, however, that some examples in this copy are not as they were in the original. Some have claimed this Invention to prove that the notes of normal mordents may come before the time-position of their main sounds. The answer to this argument is that these are not mordents at all, but merely the frames of mordents denuded of their original significance and adapted to another purpose. The effect of the movement depends in a great measure upon the character given to the demisemiquaver figures, which should be rippling rather than sprightly. Each part should end in an atmosphere of climax.

No. 40. Haydn. Adagio from Sonata in E minor. (Quaver 108.)—A movement which illustrates the effect of sonata form upon the mind of Haydn when he set out to write a short piece of a decorative kind. Here we have the four component parts of that form, a coda even being included. The particular keyboard need is superlative clearness and an entire avoidance of the pedal when its use would militate against such clearness. The movement affords a proof of grasp in pure time-values, and will be of great use in that respect. If possible, the physical or even the mental divisions of the beats should be avoided, the accentuation dealing only with the three beats of each bar. This point is important, for it is unfortunately possible to be perfect in the observance of time-values and yet to have no real understanding of their relation to the larger questions of accent and rhythm.

No. 41. Mendelssohn. 'Venetian Gondola Song,' Op. 30, No. 6. (Dotted crotchet 60-66.)—When cantabile and the need for attention to points of climax are mentioned, all that is needful on the musical side of this piece is said. The chief keyboard difficulty rests with the left-hand part, which must be smoothly played and with no thickening such as would be produced by an excessive use of the pedal. Perhaps the best use of the latter would be for the slight prolongation of the low bass-note, such prolongation being naturally increased in moments of stress, as for instance in bars 12, 13, and other places of the kind. An example of cross-pedalling occurs after the second double-bar, where the pedal follows the syncopated chords in the right-hand part.

No. 42. C. à Becket Williams. 'The Ruined Chateau of Nieppe.' (Crotchet 76-80.)—Perhaps this music has a particular association for its composer, and therein may lie the justification for writing it. Yet it is unfortunate that it should be deliberately wrongly barred from start to finish. The classics did this often (cf. No. 25), but this was merely occasioned by their frequently casual outlook upon notation, and perhaps by their ignorance of the best manner of expressing accentual phenomena. But we, at any rate, have changed all that! The piece conveys the impression of a slow march. Accordingly, care must be taken to avoid shortening the dotted quavers and thereby reducing the movement to 'compound' time. The far more attractive episode calls for a flowing and sensitive rendering. Its actual tempo (in obedience to the direction Più mosso) depends upon the power of the individual student to portray its qualities with freedom.

INTERMEDIATE GRADE.—LIST A

No. 43. Cramer. Study in C, No. 43. (Crotchet 100-112.)—Another world of pianism opens before us in this study. All the best qualities of executive agility are here needed. The finished study should not be represented by struggle or tension, but by freedom and ease in arm, hand, and finger. Cramer is one of the noted band of study-makers whose work rests upon a fundamentally musical basis. His presentation of problems is nearly always through an atmosphere of true art. This fact should be remembered by students who are too often affrighted by difficulties which they allow to absorb their full attention. To feel the presence of the beautiful is in itself an invitation to make the beauty manifest, however great the toil. There is an atmosphere about this study which makes for effort, which stirs the pulse of the worker and enables him to reach the great climax (to which all before bar 27 gives the lead), and then, finally, invites him to rest through the relaxation of tone and speed at the end.

No. 44. Beethoven. Bagatelle in G, Op. 126, No. 1. (Crotchet 88.)—One of the most thoughtful of the master's miniatures. The first sixteen bars contain two appearances of the main thought; but no artifice is needed to make the point clear; Beethoven himself diversifies the thought. Yet the two melodic starting-sounds at the beginning of the thought should in each case (bars 1 and 8) be similarly approached and by means of a personal cantabile. Thus far, the music passes along in regular groups. In the middle section, however, Beethoven shows his powers of extension. He adds three sounds to the close of a four-bar phrase (bars 16 to 20), and proceeds to develop the sounds in a phrase of some extent. Note the chain of shakes. They are played without a break. The final sound of the first is the principal, D; that of the second, the auxiliary, also D. The cadenza need not be hurried, but strict tempo must be taken up at the third beat of the bar. In the final section, outline the tune in the bass at bar 31 and in the top part at bar 35 (third crotchet). Play the coda from bar 39 with distinction. Let the hands talk one to another. Finish in an atmosphere of peace, with a sense of complete fulfilment.

No. 45. Schubert. 'Moment Musical' in F minor, Op. 94, No. 3. (Crotchet 84.)—One of the sweetest instrumental lyrics in the whole of music. Modern associations have robbed it of its true character, and transformed it into a robust dance-tune. This, I am convinced, is far removed from the intention of its composer. Note the ascending significance of the three opening sections—the tenderness of the first, the surprising change of sentiment in the second (bar 11), leading to the climactic thought of the third (bar 19). Note, also, the charm of the alternating major and minor in the concluding section, and touch the major of bar 41 with a sense of its infinite charm. In the last ten bars, slightly outline the upper sounds of the left-hand part, especially where it proceeds from F, through F sharp, to G. The tempo must to a large extent depend upon individual taste, which may, or may not, agree with that given above.

No. 46. Chopin. Mazurka in A minor, Op. 7, No. 2. (Crotchet 116-120.)—Readers of my annotations in past years will remember my injunction to interpret the music of Chopin upon the basis of mood. In this case, the three moods so often apparent in his Mazurkas are strongly marked. Mood 1 absorbs the whole of the first section, Moods 2 and 3 belong to the middle section. The first mood contains a touch of melancholy, not assuaged by hints of climax here and there. The second (at change of key-signature) is Chopin's usual bridge from sadness to brightness, and leads in comparative lightheartedness to the vigour of the third mood (seventeen bars from the end). The latter is just long enough to give colour to the whole. It is not unlike a splash of bright paint on an otherwise sombre canvas.

No. 47. Richard H. Walthew. 'Entry,' from 'The Masqueraders.' (Crotchet 120 or faster.)—The title and associations of this effective piece of writing are sufficiently indicative of its character. Brilliance, tempered by contrast, is the key to interpretation. Notice the division of the main thought into two sections, beginning respectively in bars 12 and 20. The first division is piquant, and the anæpests must be clear-cut and well accented; the second is at first arrestive, but gathers vigour as it proceeds. It is essential to an adequate interpretation that the first and last sections (bars 1-11 and 48 to the end) should be played with exhilaration. A sense of expectancy is in the air. The masqueraders are coming out. Up, and greet them!

INTERMEDIATE GRADE.—LIST B

No. 48. Czerny. Study in B flat, Op. 299, No. 13. (Quaver 126-144.)—This study suggests many useful varieties for keyboard practice. Thus the combined notes of each beat may be played together in chordal form, and at various speeds, for hand staccato practice. This, moreover, is the best way to learn the musical content of the whole. Auxiliary sounds, as in bars 19 and 20, may of course be omitted while working in this manner. When played as written, the study affords capital practice in hand-rotation, as well as in the acquirement of perfect equality of movement. Care should be taken to ensure that the continuity throughout is not allowed to obscure the rhythmic construction. It would be useful to add some phrase-marks showing the construction, and also a few including the three demisemiquavers with the following sound in the left-hand part. The latter would at any rate help the student to understand the need for rhythmic progression towards the following unit, a need which notation of this kind entirely conceals.

No. 49. J. S. Bach. Prelude in F sharp minor, No. 14 of the 'Forty-eight.' (Crotchet 84.)—One of the most invigorating Preludes of the immortal set. Note, in the first place, that the old binary form is employed, with sections of equal length. It would be well to compare this Prelude with some of the two-part inventions, notably that in G minor, in order to observe Bach's method of working in a fugal atmosphere apart from the strict conditions of a formal fugue. Then follow the characteristic subject of this Prelude, the semiquaver phrase with its anacrusis—the starting quaver. Expect to find it in various guises—inverted as in bars 14-15, without its anacrusis as in bar 9, with the anacrusis decorated or amplified as in bar 7. A secondary subject appears in bar 4, and three times later on. This also should be observed. The ornament on the last beat of bar 21 should, correctly speaking, be played as a short shake, ending immediately before the time-position of the dot; but custom has accepted the mordent rendering, and the fingering of the editor shows this also to be his conception of the grace. The major close I cannot away with, but, since the Prelude is played as a single piece, I presume it to be appropriate.

No. 50. Mozart. Last Movement of Sonata in C. (Crotchet 76.)—It is strange, but nevertheless true, that many players of a movement like this emerge from its study with a keyboard experience only of its musical worth. Nothing can excuse laxity of knowledge where form is concerned, particularly when that form is expressed as clearly and succinctly as in this very characteristic example of Mozart's way of regarding the problem of form. Here is an analysis:

Exposition.—Two main keys.

a. Zone of the first subject, bars 1-20; transition from A to B, bars 21-32.

b. Zone of the second subject, bars 33-68. Comprising: first thought, bars 33-47; second thought, bars 47-61; third thought, bars 61-68.

Development.—Various keys.

Extending from bar 69 to 95.

Recapitulation.—One main key.

a. Zone of first subject, bars 96-115; transition from A to B, bars 116-131.

b. Zone of second subject, bars 131-169. Thoughts as before.

Coda

The last two bars.

To have such a plan thoroughly in the mind is an indispensable preparation for the study of the interpretation at the keyboard.

No. 51. Edouard Schütt. 'Solitude,' Op. 97, No. 4. (Dotted crotchet 72.)—The title gives a clue to the intention of the writer. The constant and unbroken quaver movement is a little hard to manage, especially as its tone has to be well controlled and never allowed to get out of hand. The melodic phrases stand out beyond the quasi contrapuntal part formed by the quaver movement, and carries on an interesting undercurrent of tone throughout. The possible sentimentality of the first section is compensated by the effect of the climactic section, which, however, will derive its force less from vigour on the part of the player than from any conviction he may feel with respect to the sincerity of the music. Should reading difficulty attach to the chromatic harmonies, the chords should first be studied apart from the music itself. It is hard to retain interest in music when a large part of the effort to learn it has been absorbed by the problems of notation. To any student of this grade able to read the music with fluency, this piece would offer no problem whatever. That, in other words, is the cost of poor reading power!

No. 52. Frank Bridge. Minuet in B flat minor. (Crotchet 80.)—This interesting version of the old dance-tune will amply repay earnest study. In its modern dress, it yet retains the original spirit of a minuet. After the rhythmic side, the harmonic comes strongly into view. Observation, aural and mental, of the chords will help towards clear ideas upon the development of harmony. To this end, this minuet might well be contrasted with one by a classic master. All the chords should be played in a piquant and personal manner, as though recalling the old keyboard instruments upon which dance-tunes were first played. That is to say, the old atmosphere should be seized and retained in spite of the modern touches abounding throughout. Pedalling must be reticent. Musical pedalling in music like this needs a background of experience. Note the three-part form of the music, and take heed that a slight difference of style is perceptible in the rendering of the middle section. Newness of thought starts in bar 17. This must be reflected in the interpretation.

INTERMEDIATE GRADE.—LIST C

No. 53. Sterndale Bennett. Prelude and Lesson, Op. 33, No. 25. (For both, about crotchet 112.)—One of the musically stimulating fugitive pieces by Bennett, but little known among students of the present day. The chords of the Prelude should be played with clearness and decision, and, in particular, with no casual handling of the semiquaver chords—a frequent vice of pianists in chordal passages of the kind. The Lesson calls for the true Bennett legato with abundance of tone-shadings and with unbroken equality in the passage playing. The pedalling must on no account obscure the clearness of the broken chords, and may, indeed, be reserved for a very slight prolongation of the bass-note at each change of harmony.

No. 54. Rameau. 'Les Tourbillons.' (Crotchet 108-112.)—This supremely satisfying piece requires diligent study. Cast in a form which Rameau loved, it carries on its message from thought to thought with the most perfect coherence of idea. The changes of note-grouping, from normal quavers to triplets or to semiquavers, must be perfectly timed. The tunes demand a full cantabile. The graces are all of the period. The mordents should be biting. The shakes in bars 7 and 15 start on their auxiliaries, that alone being the reason for the preparatory small notes. That in bar 11 also starts upon its auxiliary, and, in view of the nature of the grace, it will be wise to apply the Bach rule, viz., to close the shake immediately before the entry of the low A in the bass, and to turn the following quaver into a semiquaver. The ornament in bar 22 is a mordent with prefix, which makes a grace of four quickly succeeding sounds, the first of which, the G sharp, comes with the A in the left hand, i.e., on the beat. The shakes in bars 45 and 56 are played without closing turns. The long semiquaver passage brings a touch of humour into the music, and, it goes without saying, should be played with a vivid conception of its effect upon the whole.

No. 55. Beethoven. Last movement of Sonata, Op. 14, No. 2. (Dotted quaver 63-69.)—This movement is planned in older rondo form with incidental features almost peculiar to the master. Some facetious commentator once remarked that there was authority for the story that Beethoven intended the music to represent a quarrel between a man and his wife. Unkind people might disprove the legend by pointing out that Beethoven gives the last growl to the man! It is curious how stories of the kind retain their power to amuse, but it is almost tragic when they become identified with the music they desecrate. My advice to all musical people is to put all such suppositions behind them, and to apply their intelligences to the appreciation of music without the 'aid' of ridiculous props. This movement calls for much practice in detail. The proper accentuation of the first subject will prove a difficulty. It must be timed and played exactly as written. The triplet passages present a two-fold problem: (1.) The executive side, especially where it is intensified by the normal semiquavers in the Coda; (2.) the difficulty of preserving a uniform beat in passing from the normal to the triplet semiquavers, and vice-versâ. It would be wise to master the first sixty-four bars thoroughly before proceeding to the last section. The episode furnishes a fine opportunity for some good cantabile work.

No. 56. Gabriel Grovlez. 'Petites Litanies de Jésus.' (Crotchet 63.)—This fanciful little piece deserves the greatest possible consideration. There is a strong devotional side to the music, and the direction naif, tendre, et fervent exactly fits the case. Observe that the music is for the most part played in half-light. One climax only disturbs the course of calm thought. A keen pedal instinct is needed in every bar throughout. The pedalling is mostly harmonic, but there must be no blur in the passage from chord to chord. Take bars 5 and 6 as a first test in managing the pedal. Every harmonic change must be helped by sensitive response on the part of the foot. A slight, very slight, emphasis upon the uppermost part will add greatly to the effect of the melody which, in itself, virtually suggests a quasi vocal atmosphere.

No. 57. Chopin. Waltz in D flat, Op. 70, No. 3. (Crotchet 132.)—One of the lesser known and less satisfying of the waltzes, but full of good material for study. The foremost difficulty is, of course, the two simultaneously moving melodies in the first thought. Some would slightly emphasise the upper, but it is more in keeping with the thought to make both melodies equal in significance. The tempo of this subject should be very moderate, an increase of speed being needed at the contrasted thought starting in bar 17. Similar features attend the interpretation of the Trio. The more melodic sections require an easy tempo to give breadth to the concurrent tunes. The rather commonplace but bright, short episode calls for an increased tempo. Refer to my remarks under No. 46. Similar features, in somewhat modified form, may be observed in this waltz.

(To be concluded.)

'Eye-Training.' By Mabel Chamberlain. [Novello, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

It is a prime merit for a music text-book to contain no waste; another for it to show no haste. This work possesses both merits. I can honestly say I have never read a work with less waste of words than Miss Mabel Chamberlain's 'Eye-Training,' nor one that is wiser in making haste slowly. Every detail necessary for the teacher's guidance and warning is there, yet not a thing that could be spared.

The book is the companion to the same author's 'Ear-Training' (also published by Novello), and is intended to be used concurrently with this. It is based on the syllabus of the L.C.C. suggestions for class-singing and ear-training in schools for children aged five to nine (although Miss Chamberlain starts earlier and covers the ground in a shorter period), and aims to lay sound foundations for the ability to read music and to hear mentally what the eye sees.

The general method adopted is to introduce each new musical fact first through Sol-fa, then through Staff; but here the author gives a word of warning:

> 'Experience suggests the desirability of using one notation only at a lesson. A definite subject for study should be chosen, and all exercises, though varied in type, should bear upon this point. Emphasis on this point is necessary, for aimless teaching in Eye-Training meets with constant retribution.'

The course is divided into three Steps, and its scope and the logical manner of its presentment will best be realised by a brief summary:

> 'Step I. (ages 4-5).—Doh, soh, me in Sol-fa—Addition of bar-lines—Music to which (a) two's can be counted, (b) three's can be counted—Doh, me soh on lines (Staff)—The crotchet—Doh, me, soh in spaces (Staff).
>
> 'Step II. (ages 5-6).—Addition of upper doh (Sol-fa and Staff)—Music to which four's may be counted)—Treble clef and key-signatures—Time-signatures $\frac{2}{4}$, $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{4}{4}$—Lower soh (Sol-fa and Staff)—Counting lines and spaces—Two, three, and four pulse measures—Te (Sol-fa and Staff)—Lower te (Sol-fa and Staff)—Ray and upper ray introduced in same way—The Soh chord.
>
> 'Step III. (ages 6-7).—Two-pulse note (Sol-fa and Staff)—Naming notes of Nursery Rhymes—Addition of fah and lah (upper and lower) as described above—Two-pulse note in three-pulse grouping (Sol-fa and Staff)—Six-pulse measure—Introduction to notation of a Nursery Rhyme—The fah chord—The quaver—The Scale.'
>
> (The order of some items in the above summary has been slightly altered to save space.)

The presentation of each new fact is done in a way which shows the experienced hand. Many teachers make the transition from Sol-fa to Staff at a bound. Here are the stages which lead up to it in this course:

1. Picture of an ordinary three-runged ladder with doh, me, soh written on the different rungs.
2. Removal of side-pieces of ladder, thinning rungs down to lines.
3. Lines produced to form stave, the syllables taking the position of the clef at the left.
4. Memory tests pointed on this three-line 'modulator.'
5. Tune written on these lines, using letter abbreviations of Sol-fa syllables instead of notes.
6. Addition of bar-lines after listening to tune sung.
7. Crotchets (one-pulse notes) substituted for letters.
8. When the notes of the doh chord are thoroughly familiar on lines, the processes are repeated with spaces, and, later still, with doh on second line and second space with enlarged stave.

Here is an instance of making haste slowly!

Unless reading music leads to mental hearing it never fulfils its real object. So from the start children are given music-thinking practice. In the early stages each test is prepared by being sung throughout with pauses on the notes which are presently to be 'thought.' Next, different coloured pointers are brought into play for the same tune. The notes to be sung, perhaps are pointed with the red pointer; those to be thought, with the blue. This minimises the chances of notes being sung instead of thought.

Special chapters are devoted to this subject, also to Music Memory Work, Blackboard Work, Modulator Practice, and Individual Practice—on all of which the author has something important to say. All exercises pointed on Sol-fa or Staff modulator, she urges, should be tuneful and have a definite rhythm, instead of (as sometimes heard) wandering aimlessly along in a way that is neither musical nor commonsensical.

Children like to have their own music books, and in this course, when they reach the proud eminence of Step III., an ideal First Music Reader is put into their hands. Each tiny lesson is founded on a nursery rhyme, while at the end of every one a silhouette drawing gives a satisfactory pictorial climax to the pupils own achievement.

The large-type directions are so simple and clear that a six-year-old child could read them for himself.

The last lesson is an Elves' and Fairies' Concert, in which a number of the songs previously studied are performed. The teacher has the task of performing certain of these badly, so that the chorus may set her right: 'Listen to the way one fairy sang it and see if you can tell me what she did wrong.' . . . (Interval for teacher's impersonation of the offending fairy.) 'Now you sing it through properly.' A tactful way of securing keen listeners!

On the last page, the mouse who should have 'run up the clock' waves a dejected tail. He, it is explained, came to the concert, too, but his voice was so high that it couldn't be heard! We are tempted to wonder whether he came to the concert because there wasn't room for him on his proper page!

The details given of the Pupils' Book as well as the course itself are sufficient to show that the child's own co-operation is encouraged throughout the course, and this is the vital thing in all music study, for it ensures keen music learners and eager music makers. E. M. G. R.

POINTS FROM LECTURES

Sir Dan Godfrey, interviewed at Torquay, asks, 'Why is it that practically the only place in the country which has maintained its prestige and still has its orchestra is Bournemouth? Simply because it has catered for the various classes of musical tastes. I have been called a highbrow, but have always recognised it to be wise to run popular programmes to get the ear of the public.'

'Personally,' continued Sir Dan, 'I do not think the 'talkies' are going to have a lasting detrimental effect upon orchestral concerts. I am inclined to think the mechanical side will tire the public. I know that the 'talkies' have thrown many musicians out of employment, but I don't think the proposal of the Musicians' Society to provide orchestras for all the London boroughs on a basis of fifty-fifty profits or losses will work. Municipalities could not afford to pay the minimum rates of the Society, and it must be remembered that cinema musicians are not always concert-hall musicians. Many of them would be useless in an orchestra. . . . . A municipal orchestra should be considered as part of the equipment of a first-class resort, You cannot replace the municipal orchestra by the military band, which is all right for the purely popular taste. Before the orchestra replaces the military band outside, it must have a suitable place to perform in, with a shell to project the sound. This is a most important matter.'

Part of Prof. A. E. Heath's philosophy at the University College of Swansea is his preference for saying things he ought not to. Speaking of 'The Fun of Learning,' at a rally of adult education students at Hull, he said that in Wales they profess to be very musical, but it is extraordinarily difficult to rouse an audience for an orchestral concert on a wet night. There was an attitude of mind that could not get over the first barrier to learning—the attitude that always asked what the thing was for, as if everything must be a means to something else. 'If someone says modern music is bad—well, listen to it and see if you can get anything from it. If people say it is thoroughly naughty to drink beer, try it, and see if it feels naughty. If anybody says it is shockingly highbrow to read Plato, don't believe it; just read some of the merrier passages of the Dialogues. There are people who think it positively indecent to enjoy a thing for itself alone. What the teacher has to do is to create a sense that there is a value in things for themselves, and to help people to get rid of their pruderies and prejudices, whether they label them "highbrow" or "indecent" or any other name.'

'My Job' (that of a professional musician) was Sir Henry Coward's subject at the Sheffield Rotary Club last month. 'Many people exaggerate the pleasant features of my job,' he said, 'and have a notion that it is all a bed of roses; but, alas, it is not. The amount of persistent labour involved in attaining the consummate skill demanded in the advanced stages of artistry is almost unbelievable. I often say a solo-pianist's life is one of penal servitude, and in other branches when one is successful the tyranny of a reputation is at times almost unbearable, as I know from experience. I would warn everyone who thinks of making a son or daughter a professional singer, first of all to see that the essential—a fairly strong voice of sympathetic quality—is secure, and then there is something to work on. There are more failures in this branch than in any other, because so many aspirants have just good voices, but nothing above the average in power or interpretation. In pre-war days everyone who had an academic qualification and fair teaching ability was sure of a comparatively good income. To-day, the falling-off in pupils is very pronounced. This is due to the general craze for pleasure—motoring, golf, tennis, dancing, and bridge.'

The musical director to the Buxton Corporation, Mr. Horace Fellowes, proposes that concerts for children should be given periodically by the Gardens Orchestra. Speaking of municipal orchestras in general, he told the local Rotary Club that people on the Continent took their music as part of their daily food; it became part and parcel of their lives. At Cologne, where he lived for three years, it was impossible to gain admission to a symphony concert unless one booked a seat weeks in advance. In this country the very word 'symphony' frightened a certain proportion of the community away. 'What is the use of schools of music that turn out numbers of musicians if we can't get the listeners?' asked Mr. Fellowes. 'A public is necessary. Where are we to find it if people are not educated up to good music? That is why I say that the chief function of a municipal orchestra is to create a love of beautiful instrumental music, first in the children and afterwards in their parents and in the public in general.'

Speaking at the York Centre of the British Music Society, Mr. W. H. Kerridge said that the question 'Is England Musical'? must be based on relativity. E.g., whereas England had the finest choral singing, that form of music-making was comparatively rare in France, and was generally limited to women's choirs. In Germany and German Switzerland men's choirs were in the majority. Again, England, though lacking a permanent opera, stood almost alone in such fine activities as competition festivals and children's concerts. J. G.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. Our 'Answers to Correspondents' column closes on the 14th of the month. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

H. P. E.—(1.) 'Orchestration,' Cecil Forsyth (Macmillan). A smaller and less expensive primer that would no doubt meet your needs is Prout's 'Instrumentation' (Novello). (2.) 'Fugue,' by James Higgs (Novello), 'Fugal Analysis,' Prout (Augener). (3.) We should say both A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. (4.) The title 'Professor of Music' means little when adopted by a local musician, no matter how good his qualifications. (We have known chimney sweeps who dubbed themselves 'Professors.') It is best reserved for use by holders of Professorial chairs in academic institutions. (5.) For a beginner in singing we suggest a good teacher (if only for a few lessons) rather than a book. (As you spell 'beginner' with two g's, and show illiteracy in several ways, we suggest that other books and studies need prompt attention before you enter the musical profession. As this comment is made in all kindness, and in your own interests, we hope you'll take it in good part.)

VOCALIST (SOUTHFIELDS).—Your letter is a bit on the incoherent side, but we gather that you won't take our word for it as to Beethoven's never having visited England. You say, 'I can assure you that he lived a part of his time in Brook Street, the same as Handel. He would have been starved to death in Germany, like Schubert and Wagner were, if we English had not protected him, also he used words by the poet Goethe for his songs, but a lot of words he wrote himself; he was a fine poet, but melancholy.' This is as much of your letter as we understand, and it happens to be inaccurate. Beethoven did not come to England, though he considered the project. He stayed in Vienna and did not starve. 'We English' certainly did him a good turn through the Royal Philharmonic Society during the last year or so of his life, but even then he was far from being so hard up as he appeared to be. In fact, he had managed to put by quite a tidy sum.

J. A. G.—(1.) You had better inquire of the publishers as to copyright of the words. (2.) You ask if your Vesper Hymn is 'good enough to attract choirmasters.' It is not a good tune, so our reply is that it is bad enough to attract some choirmasters. Answering your further questions about it, we say that its harmony is certainly not 'good enough'; and it does not show originality. From our experience of Vesper Hymns, however, these defects are not fatal to its chances of publication. All the same, we hope you won't try to publish it. Take a stringent course of harmony lessons instead. (This is frank; but you asked for our opinion, didn't you?)

H. X. A. D.—The A.R.C.O. diploma does not rank as high as those of L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Comparison between the two latter and the F.R.C.O. is unsatisfactory, because much of the ground they cover is different. For an organist who aims at church work the F.R.C.O. is the best possible diploma.

IGNORANCE.—The diploma whose initials you inquire about is of little value, so we prefer not to recommend a course of study for it.

A. L. R. M.—We think you will find any of the following pianoforte solos suit your purpose: Romance in A flat, Arensky; 'L'Absence,' Esipoff; 'Chanson de Matin,' Elgar; 'Pantomime,' Scott-Baker; 'Two Arabesques,' Debussy; 'Reflection,' Fletcher, and 'Valse Lyrique,' Fletcher. You might also overhaul the smaller pieces by Mendelssohn and Schumann (your list indicates that you haven't already done so). All the above may be had from Novello—who, by the way, issue a catalogue of pianoforte music graded in order of difficulty.

S. M.—Yes; we feel sure that the undue stiffness in your hands would be lessened by massage and the rubbing-in of oil. We have never tried the remedy, but have heard it recommended in authoritative quarters; and its use is supported by some gymnasts and athletes. Probably the benefit is due to the rubbing rather than to the oil, so put plenty of work into it.

T. H.—Get 'Hand Gymnastics,' by Ridley Prentice (Novello), and work at the exercises daily. We cannot advise you as to a tutor, because we know nothing of your present attainments; but you would be safe, we think, with 'The Pianoforte,' by Ernst Pauer (Novello). Take up some of the studies recommended at the end of the book.

C. T.—We think your teacher's advice is sound; but don't be satisfied with anything less than the F.R.C.O. diploma in the long run. The L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M. Teachers' Diploma (pianoforte) would be of great value in your case.

L. G. T.—Macpherson's organ arrangement of the 'Allegro con grazia' from Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony: in bar 9, both hands are on the Ch., and continue there until the end of the section.

ARGYLL.—'The Twelve Days of Christmas' is published by Novello, arranged by Frederic Austin (2*s.*); 'I'll sing you one O!' is to be had from Curwen (4*d.*).

J. W. T.—Kitson's 'Counterpoint for Beginners' followed by the same author's 'Applied Counterpoint' (Oxford University Press).

F. R. W.—We should play the Saraband from the Holberg Suite at about crochet=82—the pace marked in the Peters edition.

M. C. and W. G. S.—Answers deferred until next month.

In the School Music Review for October, Norah Bore discusses in a helpful way various methods of overcoming the average pianist's weakness in pitch perception. Just as singers are usually the worst musicians, so pianists generally have the worst ears; and although some excuse (not much, though) may be made for both defects, those defects should be overcome. We are glad to see that Miss Bore advocates the encouragement of playing by ear—a terrible crime in our young days, but now seen to be a useful side-line. Robert Hull continues his studies of 'The Development of Harmony,' Kirkham Jones re-tells the story of the 'Yeomen of the Guard,' Florence Axtens describes some simple technique for pianoforte classes, Egerton Lowe carries on with his 'Two Hundred Questions and Answers for Pianoforte Diploma Candidates,' Raymond Tobin contributes his sixth article on 'Everyday Teaching Problems'; and the usual budget of reviews, musical supplements, notes, and news, make up the balance of a capital number.

While all things were in quiet silence

FULL ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

Wisdom xviii., 14, 15 ; Luke i., 32, 33

Music by H. A. Chambers

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited

- might - - y Word of the Lord . .
- might - y Word of the Lord . . came
mf
f Full Sw.
ff Gt.
Man.
Ped.
dim. molto rall.
down . . from His roy - al Throne.
Sw.
mf Sw.
dim. molto rall.
Gt. or Ch.
Allegro moderato
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
He shall be great, He shall be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the Allegro moderato. ♩= 108
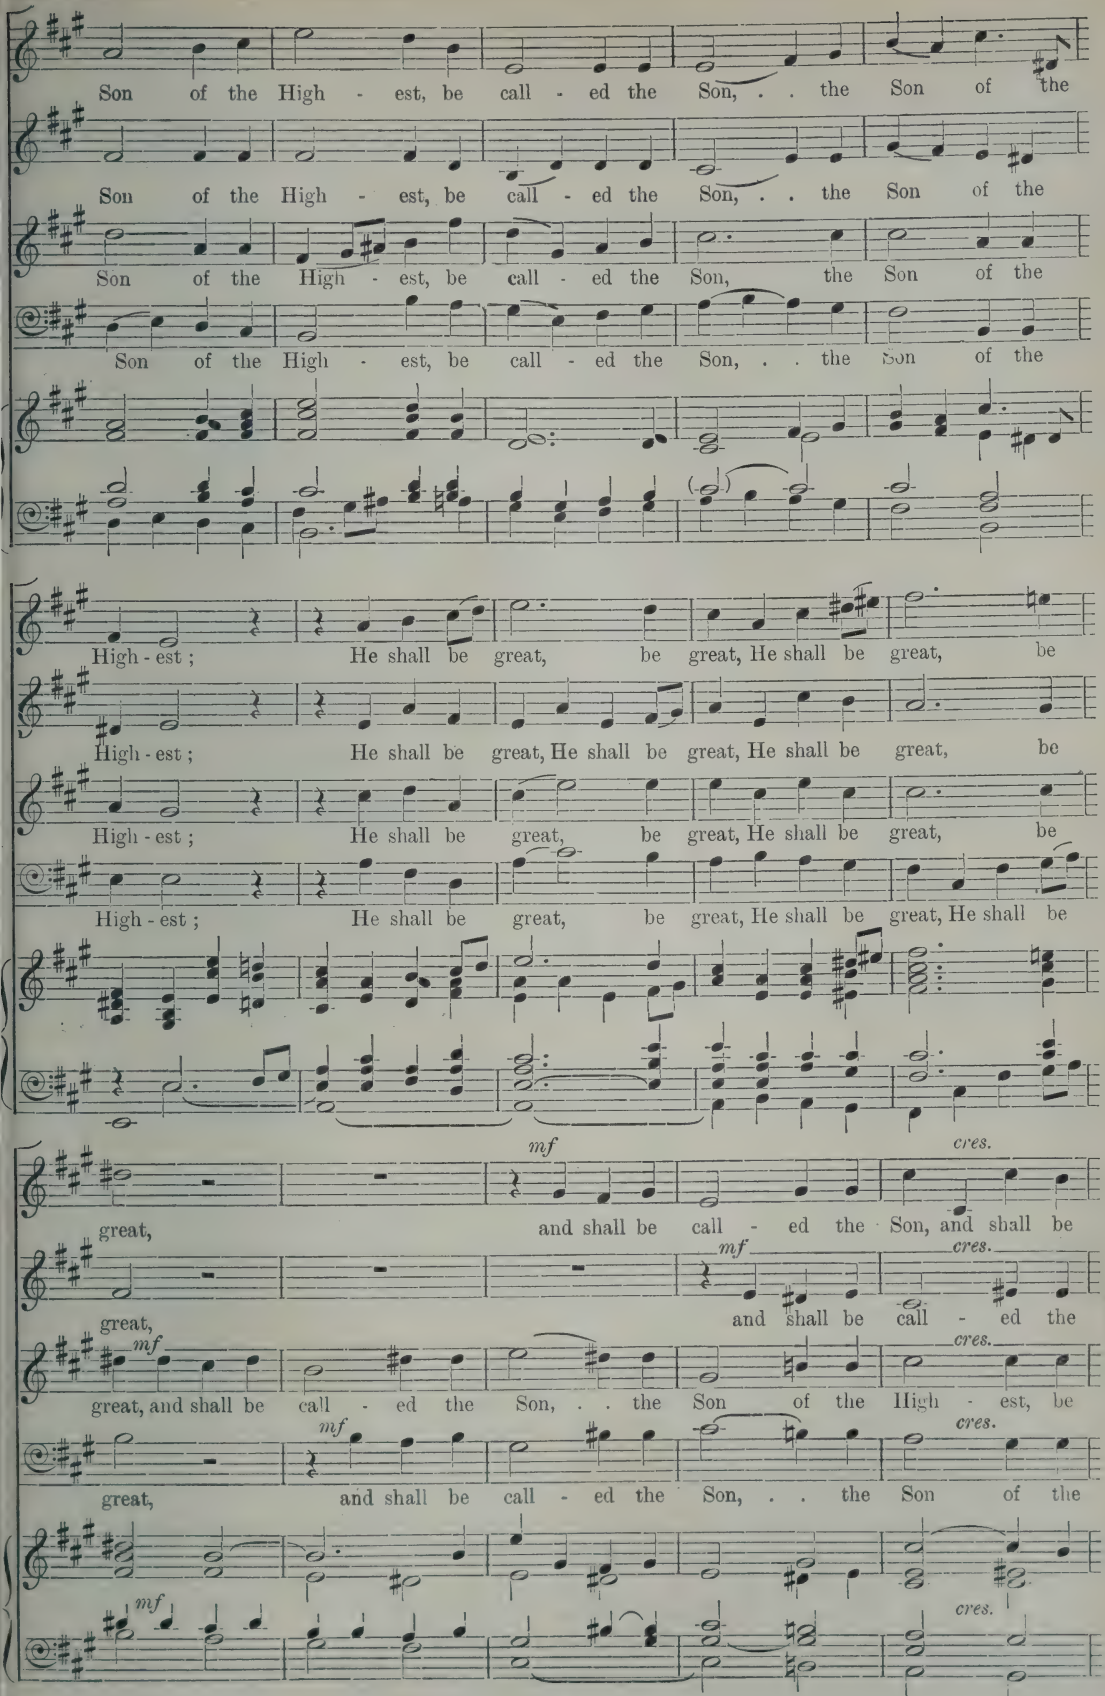
f Gt.



Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, He shall be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, He shall be mf
cres.
great, and shall be call - ed the Son, and shall be mf
cres.
great, and shall be call - ed the
mf
cres.
great, and shall be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the High - est, be mf
cres.
great, and shall be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the mf
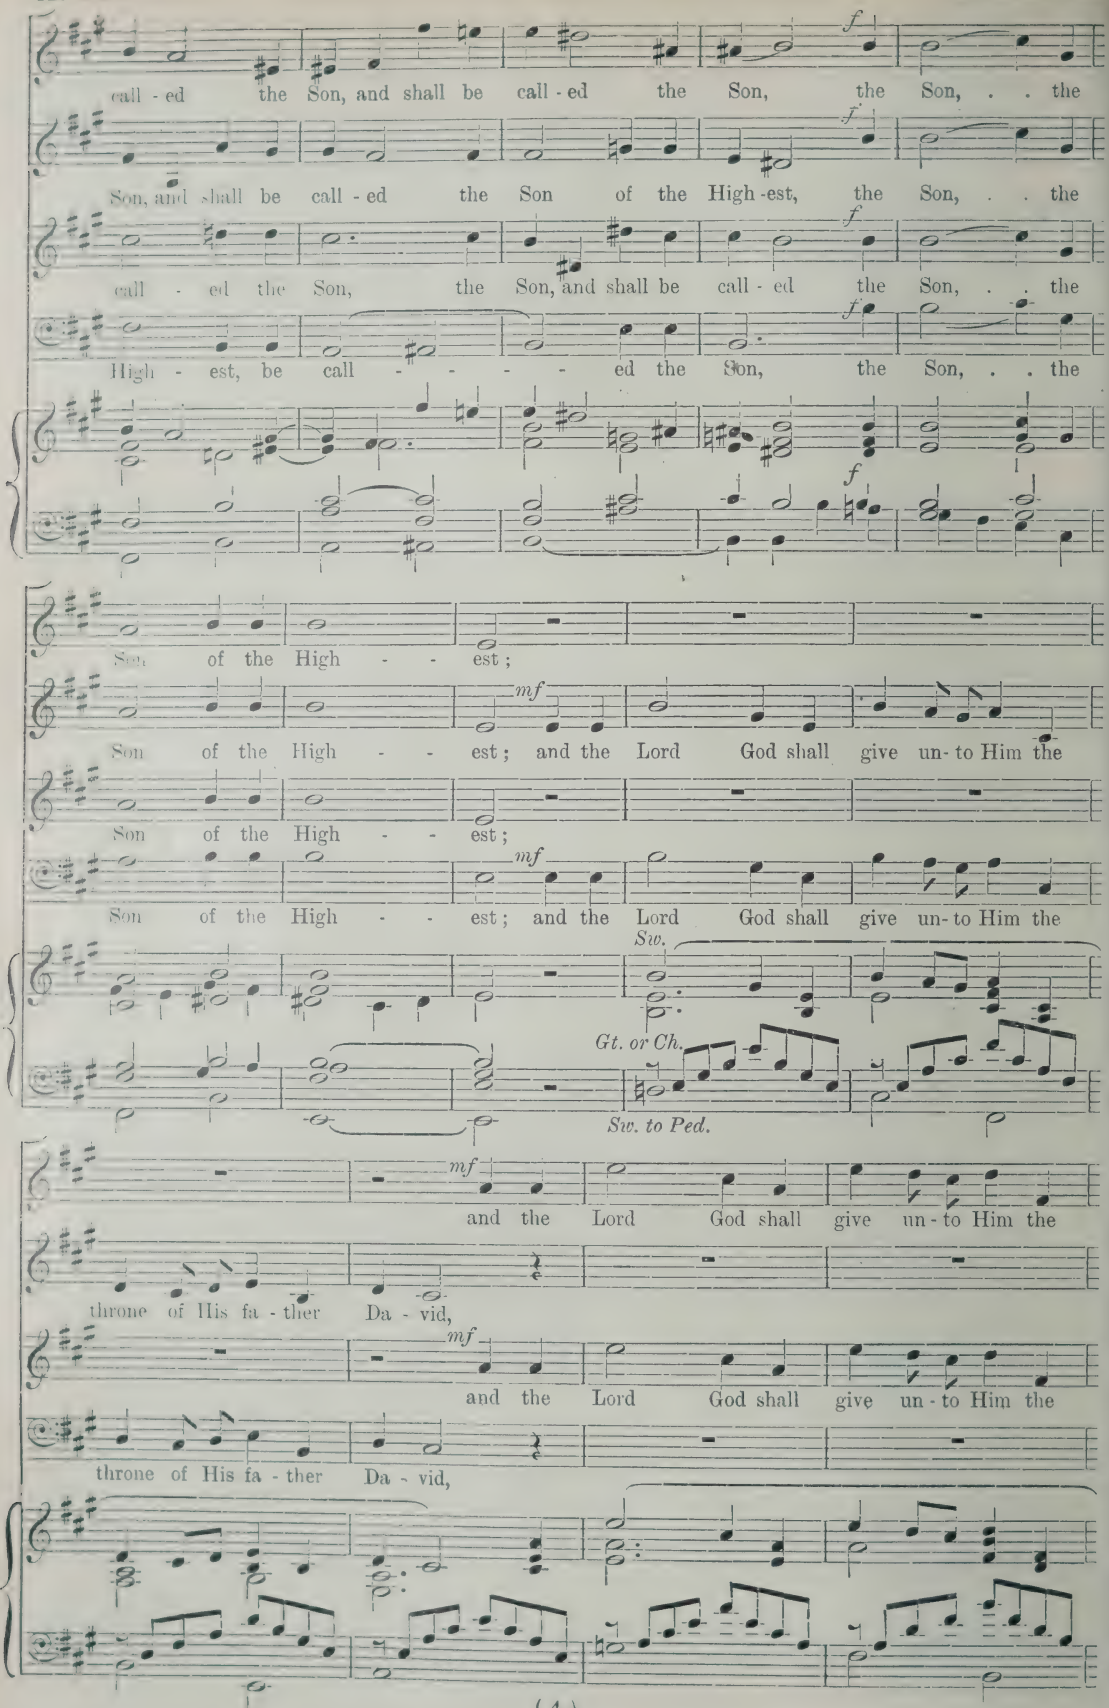
cres.



call - ed the Son, and shall be call - ed the Son, the Son, . . the Son, and shall be call - ed the Son of the High - est, the Son, . . the call - ed the Son, the Son, and shall be call - ed the Son, . . the High - est, be call - - - - ed the Son, the Son, . . the Son of the High - - est;
Son of the High - - est; and the Lord God shall give un - to Him the Son of the High - - est;
Son of the High - - est; and the Lord God shall give un - to Him the Sw.
Gt. or Ch.
Sw. to Ped.
and the Lord God shall give un - to Him the throne of His fa - ther Da - vid,
and the Lord God shall give un - to Him the throne of His fa - ther Da - vid,

f marcato
throne of His fa - ther Da - vid, And He shall
f marcato
And He shall reign o - ver the house of Ja - cob for
f marcato
throne of His fa - ther Da - vid, And He shall f marcato
And He shall reign o - ver the house of Ja - cob for Full Sw.
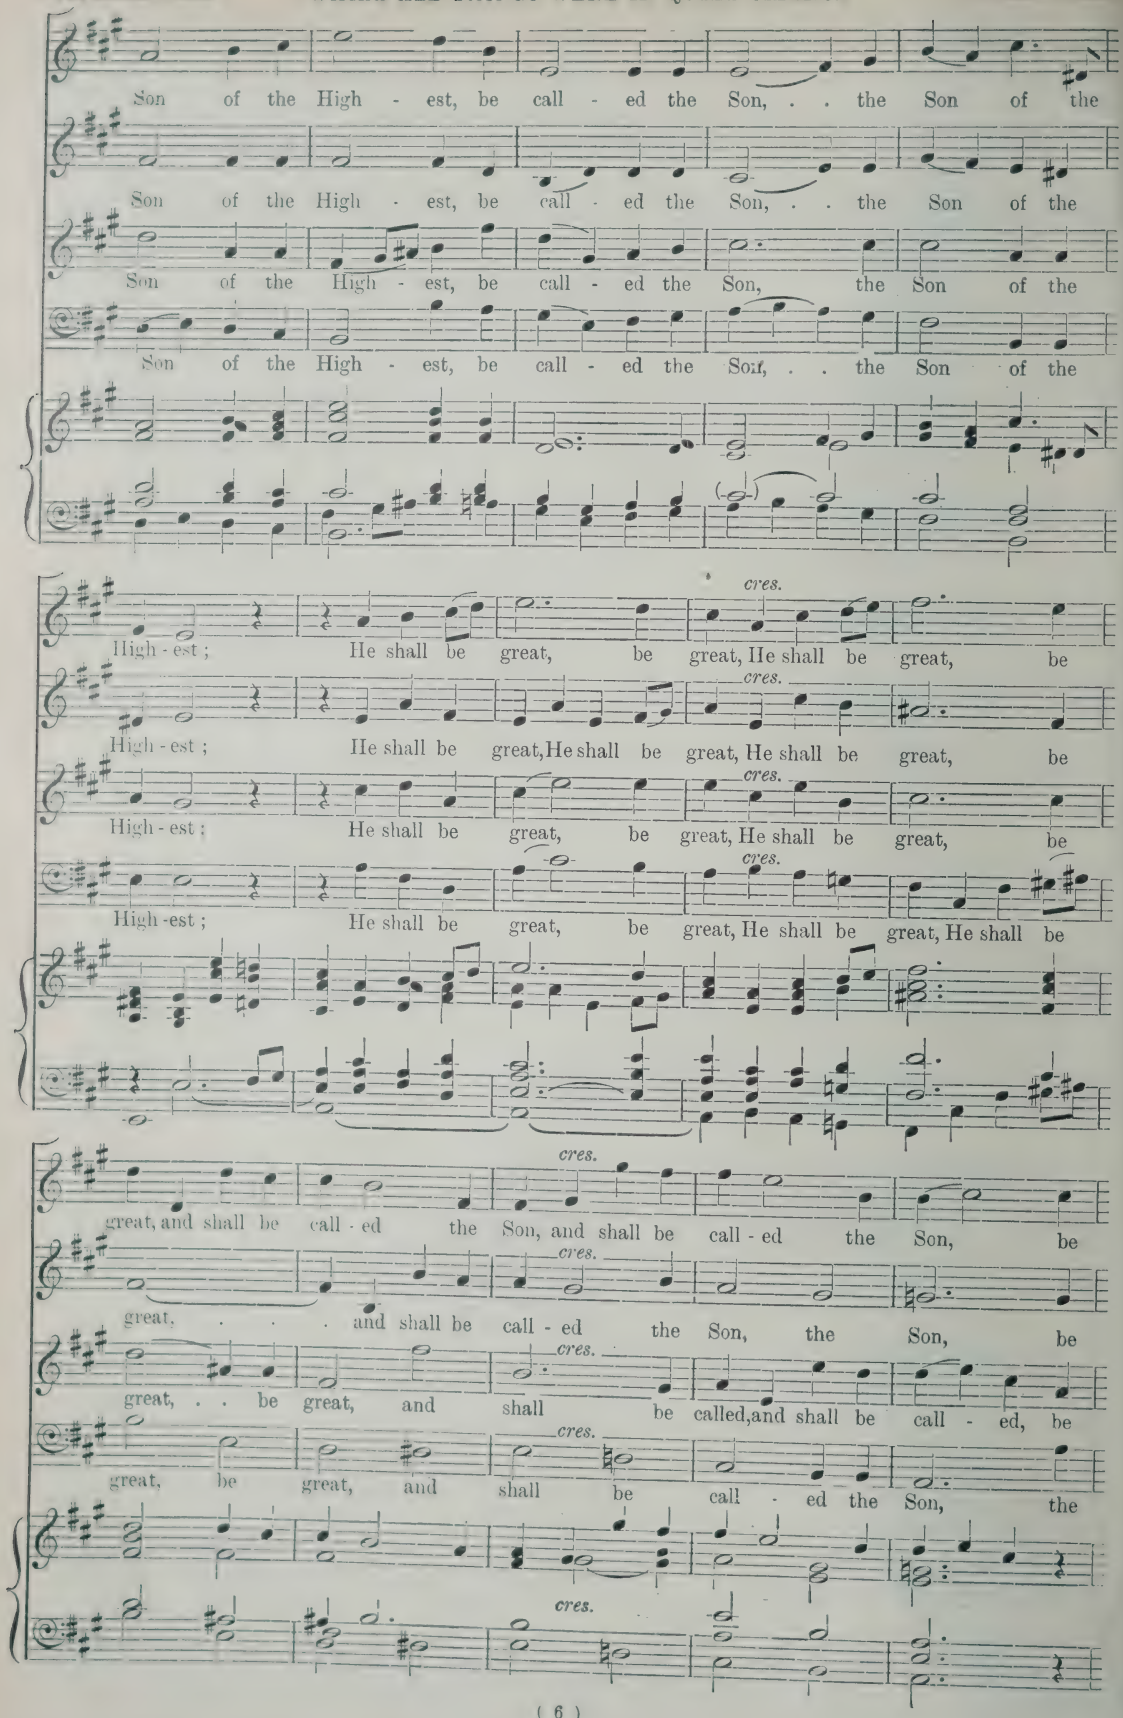
senza Ped.
poco rall.
reign o - ver the house of Ja - cob for ev - er.
poco rall.
ev - er.
poco rall.
reign o - ver the house of Ja - cob for ev - er.
poco rall.
ev - er.
cres.
f Gt.
poco rall.
Ped.
a tempo
f
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
a tempo
f
He shall be great, He shall be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
a tempo
f
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
a tempo
f
He shall be great, be great, and shall be call - ed, be call - ed the
a tempo



Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, the Son of the Son of the High - est, be call - ed the Son, . . the Son of the
cres.
High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, He shall be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, be High - est ; He shall be great, be great, He shall be great, He shall be
cres.
great, and shall be call - ed the Son, and shall be call - ed the Son, be great, . . . and shall be call - ed the Son, the Son, be great, . . be great, and shall be called, and shall be call - ed, be great, be great, and shall be call - ed the Son, the cres.

Largamente
rall.
ff
call - ed the Son of the High - est, . .
And of His King - dom
Largamente. ♩=76
there shall be no . . . end. . . . . .
fff

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The distribution of Diplomas by the President, Prof. E. C. Bairstow, to the successful candidates for Fellowship and Associateship will take place on Saturday, January 18, at 3 p.m. An address will be given by the President, after which Mr. W. H. Goss-Custard, organist of Liverpool Cathedral, will play upon the College organ pieces selected for the July examination, 1930. Members and friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

H. A. HARDING,
Hon. Secretary.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL

Mr. Harry Goss-Custard will give a recital on Saturday, November 2, at 3.15. A special train will be run from Euston at about 11 that morning. Tickets (10s. return) may be had at Euston in advance. For programme and other particulars write to Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons, Ferndale Road, Brixton. (Stamped addressed envelope.)

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The programme at the Musical Service on November 9, at 3, will consist of Byrd's 'Justorum Animæ,' Brahms's 'Requiem,' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen.' The orchestra will be the London Symphony, and the soloists Miss Gladys Currie and Mr. Graham Smart.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL

The special Advent Service will take place on December 3, at 6, when Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung with full orchestral accompaniment. No tickets are required.

Mr. James M. Preston gave the opening recital on the new organ installed by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, in the recently-built Town Hall at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. Preston played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, the Triumphal March from Liszt's 'From Crag to Sea,' Bonnet's Étude de concert, Lemare's Toccata di concerto, &c. The instrument is a four-manual of sixty-six speaking stops (Gt. 14, Sw. 14, Ch. 10, Solo and Orch. 12, and Ped. 14), 44 pistons, and 24 couplers.

At Coventry Cathedral, on October 10, seven hundred choristers from thirty-two churches joined with fine effect in the ninth annual festival of the Coventry Church Choirs Association. The canticles were sung to a setting by Brewer, and the anthems were Gibbons's 'O Lord, increase my faith,' and E. W. Naylor's 'Behold, God is great.' Mr. Harold B. Osmond conducted, and Dr. Harold Rhodes was at the organ.

In conjunction with the Incorporated Association of Organists, the Royal College of Organists has arranged for Dr. Harold Darke to give a Lecture in Rushworth Hall, Liverpool, on December 2, at 7.30. Dr. Darke's subject will be 'The choice of Church Music.' Members of the R.C.O. are cordially invited. No tickets are required.

The choir of Viewfield Baptist Church, Dunfermline, gave its tenth consecutive annual oratorio performance on September 25, when 'Elijah' was sung. Mr. A. B. Sheddon conducted, and the soloists were drawn from the choir. The orchestra consisted of members of the Dunfermline Amateur Orchestral Society.

The choirs of Priory Place and Nether Hall Road Wesleyan Churches, Doncaster, joined forces in a performance of 'The Creation' on September 28. Mr. Rawding conducted, and Mr. J. H. Grayson was at the organ.

Harold Darke's Harvest Cantata, 'The Sower,' was sung at Belfast Cathedral on October 13, the occasion being the harvest festival service.

Mendelssohn's 'Psalm 95' was sung at Holy Trinity Church, Nottingham, on September 29, under the direction of Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson.

Dr. Henry G. Ley will give an organ recital at St. Alban-the-Martyr, Brooke Street, Holborn, on November 20, at 8.

RECITALS

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Marche Héroïque, Lemare; Variations de Concert, Bonnet; Dithyramb, Harwood; Masonic March in E flat, Ellingford; Fantasia on Darwell's 148th, Darke; Suite No. 1, Lyon.

Mr. Charles Stott, Cowdray Hall, Aberdeen—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Overture in G, Mendelssohn; Overture in D minor, Handel.

Dr. Charles F. Waters, St. Mary-le-Bow, E.C.—Rhapsody in C, Heathcote Statham; Rhapsody in D minor, Sowerbutts; Chorale Preludes by Robin Milford, C. Hylton Stewart, C. Charlton Palmer, C. H. Kitson, and F. H. Wood.

Mr. H. A. Bate, Parish Church, St. Mary Church, Devon—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Allegretto in B minor, Guilmant; Prelude on 'London New,' Grace.

Mr. Charles F. Bowes, Wesleyan Church, Newbiggin-by-the-Sea—First movement (Symphony), Holloway; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Finale (Sonata No. 19), Rheinberger.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata in B flat, Arne; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Rhapsody, Heathcote Statham; Andante (Sonata in G minor), Tinel; Postlude in D, Smart.

Mr. Sidney S. Campbell, Chigwell Parish Church—Concert Overture in C minor, Hollins; Chorale, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Cornelius March, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Ernest E. Chasteney, Cromer Parish Church—Processional, Moussorgsky; Fugue, 'St. Anne,' Bach; Toccata, Boëllmann.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, Armitage Hall, National Institute for the Blind—Postlude in D minor, Stanford; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Voluntary in G minor, Stanley; Tuba Tune, Norman Cocker.

Mr. Laurence Hudson, Parish Church, St. Mary Church, Devon—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Allegretto and Presto (Sonata in G), Elgar; Fugue in A minor, Russell.

Mr. Reginald A. Jevons, Stamford Hill Congregational Church, N.—Solemn March in C minor, Mackenzie; Gigue Fugue, and Sonatina, 'God's time is best,' Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Holy Trinity, Llandudno—Fantasia on 'Valet will ich dir geben,' Bach; Five short movements from the 'Water Music,' Handel; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Arthur R. Vickers, Holy Trinity, Llandudno—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Introduction and Fugue in E minor, Rheinberger.

Mr. W. J. Comley, Southwark Cathedral—Overture to 'Tamerlane,' Handel; Canzonetta No. 3, Reger; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Introduction and Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger.

Mr. F. J. C. Dalrymple, Canton Parish Church, Cardiff—Symphony No. 6, Widor; Largo and Allegro (Sonata No. 5), Bach; Presto (Sonata in G), Elgar.

Mr. George Pritchard, St. Ann's, Manchester—Allegro Appassionata (Sonata in C sharp minor), Harwood; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Choral in A minor, Franck; Légende and Scherzetto, Vierne.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. W. Harry Gabb, sub-organist, Exeter Cathedral.

Mr. Reginald Goodall, choirmaster and organist, St. Alban-the-Martyr, Brooke Street, Holborn.

Mr. Frank W. Grove, choirmaster and organist, St. Philip's, Leyton.

Mr. Owen H. Hickman, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary's and All Saints' Parish Church, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

Miss Evelyn Mattinson, choir-trainer and organist, St. Barnabas's, King Square, Goswell Road, E.C.

Mr. Frank B. Porkess, choirmaster and organist, St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Newlands, Glasgow.

Mr. Geoffrey Sandwell, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Lee Park, Blackheath.

Mr. T. H. Whiten, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's, Baybrook, Nottingham.

Mr. W. Harold Wolfender, organist and director of the choir, Parish Church, Tadcaster, Yorks.

Letters to the Editor

BOLSHEVISM AND MUSIC

Sir,—In your October issue Mr. Rutland Boughton says :

> ' The late Dr. Eaglefield Hull came to the conclusion that the music of Stravinsky was in some way the equivalent of the doings of Lenin and Trotsky ; and I am told that Mr. Percy Scholes has also proclaimed the revolutionary nature of Stravinsky. But it is in the West of Europe and associated with the émigré and (presumably anti-Bolshevik) Russian Ballet that Stravinsky's music has its vogue and following. In Soviet Russia the classic and national-romantic schools of music hold the field.'

On reflection, Mr. Boughton will, I feel sure, agree that it is hardly fair for any writer thus to pillory another writer on pure hearsay. If I have ever said anything connecting Stravinsky with the Bolsheviks and Mr. Boughton wishes to oppose me, it would be proper that he should give chapter and verse. But I can assure you, Sir, I haven't.

Further, I feel that it is proper that somebody should defend the reputation of the late Dr. Eaglefield Hull also against the charge of Mr. Boughton.

Am I right in supposing that the following passage from ' Music : Classical, Romantic, and Modern ' (p. 286), is the basis of the charge ?

> ' Next to Schönberg, Stravinsky is the greatest revolutionary in all music. He is the Lenin or the Trotsky of music. Like them he shows a strong tendency to weld and conciliate, now that he has discovered the defects of the extremes of both methods. Though he is the complete Nihilist, this great repudiator of the musical culture of the past is nevertheless himself the creator of new forms, indeed of an altogether new art.'

It is evident that such a passage as that would not justify Mr. Boughton's attributing to its writer, as he appears to do, a belief in a connection between the political revolution in Russia and the musical revolution of Stravinsky. Dr. Hull simply says that, just as Lenin and Trotsky were political revolutionists, so Stravinsky is a musical revolutionist, and that, just as Lenin and Trotsky later somewhat modified their principles, so has Stravinsky modified his. ' Like them ' is his keynote. A comparison of this sort is merely a literary device—rather aptly used in this case, I should say.

Of course, Mr. Boughton may have in mind some other and really relevant passage, in which case I willingly withdraw, but after several careful readings of his article I have the feeling that the word ' revolutionary ' is with him a sort of verbal diminished seventh, a ' Clapham Junction chord,' switching the thought suddenly into new keys or rushing it off in new directions, so that we hardly realise when we have suddenly left music for politics, or politics for music.

Hence, if ever he feels called upon to charge any of us with errors that involve his use of that word, it would be a desirable safeguard for us if he would kindly quote our very words, and do so in sufficient context.

For myself, I own I feel a certain intellectual fear of a man who, speaking of Palestrina, can base a claim to ' impersonal spirit ' on the fact that his name is not that of a man but a city. My own name is the name of four or five villages in the North of England, and Mr. Boughton's of six or seven in the Midlands and South, but I don't see that we can base any fine claims to ' impersonal spirit ' or just appreciation of ' communal values ' on that, either for ourselves or for the ancestors from whom we proudly inherited those noble names.

As for Botticelli, ' whose name was not his own '—what of that ? How does it prove a man to be possessed of ' impersonal spirit ' that he is called by the family nickname, first acquired by his brother, who (a base bourgeois, Mr. Boughton ; a successful broker !) in turn got it because the sign of his shop happened to be a ' little barrel ' hanging over the door ?

It may seem rather unkind to suggest it (though it 's a compliment in a way), but does anyone so poetical as Mr. Boughton make a quite reliable writer when it comes to a matter of historical fact or critical argument ? We must all read Mr. Boughton thoughtfully.—Yours, &c.,

Percy A. Scholes.

Cornaux, Près Chamby,
sur Montreux, Switzerland.

THE AVERAGE LISTENER AND KEY RELATIONSHIP

Sir,—A great amount of space in musical journalism seems to be occupied with the reactions of ' the average concert-goer.' Properly, we must suppose, this question can only be explored as a branch of psychology. Certainly the facts that emerge as to the music-lover's consciousness of key-relationship, or his lack of concern with musical structure, will not help us as critics or analysts. Neither could a composer of symphonic works solve any problems in structure by being reminded that to the ' average listener ' structure is the last consideration, as Mr. Hugh Arthur Scott asserts.

In his article ' The Question of Key-Relationships,' this writer says : ' The vast majority, I am convinced, simply do not pay the slightest attention to this aspect of the work at all. They are perfectly content to enjoy the music from moment to moment as it proceeds, following the composer contentedly into whatsoever keys he chooses to take them ' (italics mine). By hypothesis, then, the composer has chosen, and has not tossed a halfpenny, so that the ' perfect content ' of the hearer may be supposed to be due, in part at any rate, to an underlying logic of key-successions, transitions, and return, divined by the composer if unperceived by the vast majority.

The fact is, we can no more have symphonies without the art of construction than we can have liners or the Forth Bridge. Mr. Scott professes to find the position ' really amusing.' So do I. The first-saloon passenger is a very necessary person (like the concert-goer), but I am not so sure that he is given to uproarious laughter at contemplating the intricacies of the engine-room. He may, of course, never give the propellors a thought, but he is perhaps aware that such things as a well-designed ship are necessary to his comfort and even safety. Not everyone who crosses the Forth Bridge could appreciate the calculations of stresses and strains, the dead-weight, or wind-resistance per square inch. Most of us enjoy the view and the ' sensation.' All we must not do, it seems to me, is to reserve our derision for the expert who does all these things, nor deny the practical use of the science and art of engineering.

I cannot see any 'special pleading' in noting the rather elementary fact that G flat can be an F sharp link to D major, as I take it that equal temperament is an affair of practice and not a mere theory.

As a test of structure, I have just had played to me the Prélude, Choral, and Fugue of César Franck. We had the Prelude in B minor (as written), the Choral through E major to C sharp minor (instead of through E flat to C minor), and so, a semitone higher to the end of the Fugue (in C major!). According to the 'vast majority,' all that was lost was Franck's modulation at the link of the Prelude and Choral. Anyone able to appreciate the 'three-in-one' unity of the whole would know that the structure had been upset for its last two-thirds, not merely 'kinked' in the link-bar between Prelude and Choral.

Let us consider the 'concert-goer' in every way, but we are scarcely willing to learn that if structure is beyond his comprehension, then there is no such thing for the expert or the composer to worry about.—Yours, &c.,

Dover College. RONALD B. HURRY.

OPS. v. TITLES

SIR,—I am not a regular reader of the Musical Times—does this deal a death-blow at any opinion I may express on musical matters?—but a friend showed me the September issue at 10.30 to-night and invited me to 'weep all over the floor.' I declined to do anything of the sort. Instead, I read what 'Feste' had to say, and now I want to know, 'Who is Feste'? I suspect (of course I should not, but I do) that he is the extremely journalistic-looking person whose articles on the Salzburg Musical Festival I read with great pleasure this year (1). *

But no matter who 'Feste' is. The point is that a pull at the musical leg seems to have jarred a gouty foot, like a recent pull at the artistic leg by someone much more famous than a poor, insignificant reporter, a mere provincial, a dealer in second-hand journalese. I am sure 'Feste' would have loved to write like that if it was not so lowering. (And, of course, I am laying myself open to all sorts of retorts by saying this.) However, having incited some person unknown to growl at me in a strange paper—and belonging myself to that awful rising generation of self-assertive, forward fools—I am going on with the battle; it will have to be an offensive war waged in the enemy's territory, unless 'Feste' recognises the existence of such a 'happy-family' paper as the Gramophone (2). But perhaps it would be unfair to Mr. Compton Mackenzie to make use of his paper, unless my Scottish name—and ancestry, I assure you—bring him down plump on my side. I would have made this an open letter to the press if I had known who 'Feste' was, or if I had possessed sufficient distinction to make a mountain of such national importance out of a molehill of such personalities. Still, one must jest with the clown in his own motley. ('Feste' is a clown, isn't he? And he says, 'I shall never begin if I hold my peace.')

I have walked the streets of Carlisle to-night; there was a touch of frost in the air, and cold, clear stars, like the eyes of thought, were wakening instant by instant in the sky. I have thrashed out 'Feste's' arguments in my own mind, and have come to a number of conclusions. They are: (a) 'Feste' is very inconsistent; (b) 'Feste' is very vague and inconclusive; (c) 'Feste,' like all good journalists, cuts his losses; (d) There are one or two points on which, like all bad journalists, I shall have to withdraw; (e) 'Feste' must have been very hard up for some subject on which to base his monthly article (3) (this is not retractation; it 's modesty).

'Feste's' inconsistency is very apparent in his explanation of how easy it is to use numbers or keys. He attempts to veil that inconsistency in mists of vagueness and indecision. In that he reasons soundly. The brooding impressiveness of the Matterhorn is immeasurably increased when its head is lost in the clouds. 'Feste' appears to favour the use of keys, but when two works by the same composer are in the same key he uses a title to distinguish between them, although the opus number would surely be the correct thing from his point of view. Finding that he has been unconsciously admitting the merits of the labelling system, 'Feste' attempts a Shavian twist which does not quite come off, because, instead of advancing an unanswerable argument in favour of numbers, he merely quibbles. The chorus of label-mongers, he explains, will rush in gleefully at this point and cry, 'You are admitting the necessity of the title!' 'Not a bit of it,' says 'Feste.' 'If these few sonatas had not been nicknamed, numbers would have been easy'; we should have made a point of overcoming the very slight difficulty of memorising their numbers.' But why were names ever used at all? (4). Because the musician found the language of the amateur more to his liking than the terms of his own trade.

Furthermore, 'Feste' tries to draw a distinction between titles that have become traditional and a brand new set. Admittedly there is a difference—but why should there be? That is my rebellious view. The ancient and venerated is often deceptive—a dandelion swollen by age into a sunflower. An old oak chest is generally worm-eaten ('Feste' will say a modern chest is immature and generally warps) (5), and Queen Victoria's reign was not as peaceful as we were led to understand at school. A traditional title was once so young that it had no tradition. A small race of titles was born and has grown up in harness; why should their birth-rate decline just because this happens to be the 20th century?

However, to get back to my conclusions. I can only speak from experience as to who calls the Bach work the 'Philadelphians.' I have heard it so called on numerous occasions. The argument about changing the name in fairness to any subsequent better performance hardly applies in a world in which very little is fair. If the name was established there would be no rush to change it. Suppose an Arch-Labeller did not find 'Appassionata' to his liking for Beethoven, Op. 57. He would not seek to have it changed (6). 'Feste' may not like the label 'Television,' which has been attached to that discovery. He does not disclaim it on the score of its being brand new. 'Feste' is well on the mark about the 'Big Three' trio, and I am only sorry he was not equally roused by 'Death and the Man' for Schubert, Op. 163. That is a suggestion with which I am not satisfied; but perhaps 'Feste' admits 'Death and the Maiden,' and felt in fairness bound to let the masculine version alone.

Those are my withdrawals. But look at 'Feste' cutting his losses. No mention of 'The Three Graces' for Beethoven's Symphony No. 4; or of Schubert's 'Zephyr' Sonatina (Op. 137, No. 1); or of the 'Joachim' Concerto for Brahms's Op. 77 (7). Yet I am very pleased with those suggestions—that sounds like conceit, and it is. I do not find Mozart's G minor Symphony melancholy; I do find a bigger suggestion of the folk-song in Grieg's C minor Sonata than in any of the others; and, so far as I am concerned, there is a carnival spirit in Beethoven's Symphony No. 8.

There is no one for whose opinions I have a greater respect than a good critic's—but the critics broke Keats's heart (temporarily?). Critics, however, on the whole are a self-centred, superior kind of people who have so surrounded themselves with masses of information and technicalities that they fail, in eight cases out of ten, to see the point of view of the ordinary person, or to grasp what he appreciates. Surely 'Feste' will grant me this much—that the majority of people just cannot be bothered to listen to good music (8). They think 'Sonny Boy' soup is easier to swallow; and it has become a pose with many people to say, 'I can't listen to chamber music (high-brow stuff, orchestral stuff).' In the same way one can hear people say, 'I can't read Dickens (Scott, Thackeray).'

* The numbers refer to the points in 'Feste's' answer on p. 1019. —EDITOR.

Why should we tolerate those kind of people? (9). Four years ago I would not have walked six yards or paid sixpence to hear a piece of good music well played. Thank Heaven I had an intolerant head master who dinned music into my ears, and a friend who talked gramophone, gramophone, gramophone—and not merely talked but demonstrated.

At least ten people in Carlisle alone with whom I have discussed this question of names v. numbers agree with me that a number conveys absolutely nothing to their minds. 'Feste' refers to a correspondent who finds many of the opus numbers highly significant. The mere mention of Op. 111, he says, suggests the later Beethoven. Then surely the mere mention of K. 200 should suggest the later Mozart! Yet this was an early work. 'Grove' says: 'The opus number has nothing to do with the date of composition. Thus some early works, both of Schubert's and Mendelssohn's, were published (posthumously) with very late numbers. Several mistakes have occurred in the numbering of Beethoven's works in various editions.' So the impression conveyed by numbers—to anyone impressed by them—is likely to be as false as 'Feste' would lead one to suppose some of my suggestions are (10). Black's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' says, 'The opus number shows either the order in which a composition was begun or that of publication.' Does a knowledge of either of these facts help one to appreciate the music better? Before long we shall be making mathematical comparisons between composers. Thus $\frac{\text{Mozart}}{\text{Beethoven}} = \frac{\text{K. 200}}{111}$. Or, by letting Beethoven equal x and his introspective qualities equal y, and taking into account his age and output, someone will demonstrate that he could not possibly have been deaf.

Why won't everyone who likes music try to educate a friend to it? (11). Now comes the rub. From personal experience I contend that names help. We can all remember the names of our friends. Can we remember their telephone numbers? The same thing applies (12). It is only to the musician, or to the expert critic, that opus numbers, or keys, come glibly. The terms of the trade are bound to please the tradesmen best, and they are loth to part from them, even though the sacrifice would be to the good of a people degenerate in musical taste. Already we are half-way to using names for numbers. There are no half-measures about the use of names in any of the other arts, so let us go the whole way towards names. The correspondent who finds significance in numbers says no fancy title could do justice to Beethoven, Op. 111. Yet Walpole does justice to the greatness of a great book with a simple title, 'The Cathedral.' Surely the same can be done in music (13). Numbers only began to come into general use at the time of Mozart, and already they are falling into disuse, for the moderns give names to their creations (14).

It is inconceivable that a system redolent of commercialism can continue, and that, at the same time, music can become more widely and truly appreciated (15). A popular appeal has to be made, either to the senses or to the vanity of the public, before they will appreciate classical music. There is something psychologically repellent about numbers. Is it not better to make that appeal through a harmlessly attractive name rather than by writing down to the public? Would not 'Feste' rather hear Beethoven's 'Three Graces' Symphony than Hiram Caleb's tone-poem, Op. 1, No. 2 ('Big baby, your eyes are just the cutest blue')? (16).

There, I have talked too long (17), and I feel too serious now to be flippant about names and numbers. In the name of heaven what does it matter what we call anything (18) so long as we bring the beauties of thought in sound to a wider and fuller appreciation by a nation willing to learn if properly led (19)?—Yours, &c.,

James Donald Blyth.

Lowther Street,
Carlisle.

['Feste' replies: 'Mr. Blyth has used so many millions of words, that I will try to balance things by using few. For convenience I number the points taken:

(1) I'm not.
(2) I read it from cover to cover.
(3) I wasn't.
(4) Mainly for commercial reasons.
(5) I don't; I judge chests as I do musical works and titles—strictly on their merits.
(6) The title 'Appassionata' was conferred by Beethoven's publisher, and apparently not disapproved of by the composer; the title 'Philadelphians' is conferred by Mr. James Donald Blyth, of Carlisle. 'Appassionata' fits: 'Philadelphians' doesn't.
(7) They were omitted to save space. I disliked them almost as much as the ones I pilloried.
(8) Then why bother them? Let them go without.
(9) Because it takes all sorts to make a world.
(10) Entirely misleading opus numbers are the exception.
(11) I've been doing it pretty well all my life.
(12) Good Heavens!
(13) Walpole's book is about a cathedral; hence its title. Beethoven's Op. 111, is about—what? When Mr. Blyth can tell me, I'll admit his right to give it a label.
(14) Some moderns and some creations. It all depends on the form. We rarely find the moderns giving names to sonatas, symphonies, or chamber works.
(15) Most titles are used for commercial reasons. Mr. Blyth's conception of rigid publishers sticking to 'Ops' because a title would restrict sales, is the richest of all his many unconscious jokes.
(16) I didn't know Beethoven wrote such a symphony. I should prefer it to the tone-poem on general principles, of course, because I like Beethoven better than Caleb.
(17) Cries of 'No, no! Go on!'
(18) If it doesn't matter what we call anything, 'Symphony No. 4' is as good as 'The Three Graces,' besides having the advantage of being the title used by the composer.
(19) Bunkum! If space permitted I could give a yard-long list of works great and small, from Handel's Largo to Beethoven's fifth Symphony, the beauties of which were widely and fully appreciated by generations and millions throughout the civilised world long before the crusade on behalf of titles was started.']

Sir,—In connection with the discussion on 'Ops. v. Titles' going on at present in the Musical Times, I think the following lines from 'The Organ Works of Bach,' by Harvey Grace, would be of interest to your readers. From p. 227: 'A title is a great help to a piece of music, and undoubtedly "St. Anne's Fugue" is far more appealing than "Fugue in E flat."'—Yours, &c.,

Frank Smith.

65, Brisbane Street,
Greenock.

[We sent this letter on to Mr. Harvey Grace, who replies: 'Mr. Smith should have quoted the context. After alluding to the great popularity of the E flat Fugue I go on to say: "The sources of popularity, however, are as curiously mixed as human motives, and it is probable that this Fugue owes much of its vogue to its apparent connection with Croft's hymn-tune ('St. Anne'), as well as to the fact of its having been one of the first of Bach's organ works to become well known in this country." That a title is a great help to a piece of music is indisputable, but the title must be justified. It must have been conferred by the composer, or must have evolved itself as a result of a thematic feature or coincidence (as in the case of this Fugue) or of some personal or historical association (e.g., the Rasoumovsky Quartet). I made no plea for the general tacking on of titles to the classics. On the contrary, I am entirely in agreement with your contributor "Feste" in this matter.']

THE KNELL OF ROMANTICISM

Sir,—At the risk of being accused by Mr. Edwin Evans of wilful-ear-stopping, some of us cannot let pass without a challenge his statement on p. 894 of your October issue that 'the knell of romanticism had been audible to the alert ears of Diaghilev before most people were ready to speed its parting. . . .' Who are 'most people'? I don't know them, and I know no one who does. Mr. Evans is too old a hand to believe—and too wise, I should hope, to pretend to believe—that the 'advanced' coteries, and the clingers round the Russian Ballet's social skirts, ever were very numerous or at all important.

Without necessarily sharing Ernest Newman's opinion (in the Sunday Times of October 6) of Diaghilev's 'malign influence,' many musicians who look with good hope to the future are glad to believe with E. N., that 'the days of quackery and mountebankery are over, at any rate in this country, never, one hopes, to return, either in musical criticism or in musical journalism.'

A pendant to Mr. Evans s panegyric might well be written, showing that Diaghilev's influence was not by any means always good for our art. Some of the performances he put forward in later days, applauded though they were by the tasters of novelty, gave little but offence to musicians trained to seek recognisable and logical beauty. Mr. Evans really cannot, in these saner days, 'get away' with that 'knell of romanticism.' It may be rung, as a solo performance, by composers desperately anxious to get away from other people's paths, and pitifully unable, for the most part, to distinguish between fruitful originality and pointless eccentricity; but Mr. Evans knows as well as you and I do that he will never get the big body of reasonable, keen musicians in this country to join him in community knelling. The exercise has nowadays no more value than that of keeping up the kneller's courage in the significant silence with which this rounding upon romanticism is received.

How absurd to speak of romanticism as if it were dead! If it is, what has taken its place in the affections of intelligent music-lovers? One or two of the young moderns are proving their worth—Walton, Lambert, perhaps Bliss. But what are they among so many palterers with our art? We welcome their work because it has some roots in the past, and justifies its difference by its distinction and purpose. It is going somewhere. Where are the young Frenchmen and Russians, most of them, going, and where go those ill-found, rudderless ships, their British imitators? Ring a knell for them, if you will, Mr. Evans, but do not ask us to take seriously the easy dismissal of romanticism as a thing outmoded. We have had ten years of post-war music, and we know it too well.

The day for pooh-poohing the past has gone. It was a great time while it lasted, and lots of cheeky little boys had fun twisting music's tail; but some of them have grown up, and out of their urchinry; and others we smacked into sense, if not into sensitiveness. It is sad to see Mr. Evans still tolling his melancholy bell, unconscious, apparently, that the corpse is not the one he hoped to see interred, but another—that of the eccentric and futile extremism he still labours to commend to a world far too sensible to accept it.—Yours, &c.,

'Spes.'

IS SINGING SIMPLE?

Sir,—I shall be pleased if I can simplify the statements in my article which have puzzled Mr. Cobill. He asks if it is really suggested that a man can tune a whispered 'Ah.' To express a little differently what is said in my article, I would say that when a man sustains a whispered 'Ah' and finds that the sound of this whisper is the note C (an octave above third space, treble clef), he has obtained a position of resonance which belongs alone to the vowel. I would further suggest that the vowel 'ee' be first whispered. This will often sound the wished-for C, which is an octave above the 'ah' which has been the difficulty.

I am not concerned with the discussion of the theories of Mr. W. S. Drew and others, which Mr. Cobill has introduced extraneously.

When there is doubt about the whisper, it would be better merely to think the vowel and watch the natural movements of the tongue and lips. This is in agreement with Mr. Cobill's statement. One can often think of a note and try to sing it.

When thinking the vowels only, the tongue and lips form naturally and unconsciously the shape appropriate to each vowel. The whispering can also form these shapes. When tuning the vocal cords to the note, the difficulty is to retain the unconscious position of tongue and lips, and yet control the pressure of the breath necessary to the note travelling over the auditorium.

The remainder of Mr. Cobill's letter supports my views. He has written courteously, and I reply in the hope of solving his difficulty.—Yours, &c.,

11, Heather Gardens, William Shakespeare.
Golders Green, N.W.11.

Sir,—I note that a correspondence has begun in your columns on the above subject. So far as I know, the one man who has cleared away the accumulated fog of centuries from the theory and practice of the mechanics of singing is Mr. Ernest G. White, the results of whose lifelong study are embodied in 'The Voice Beautiful' (J. M. Dent and Winthrop Rogers). Practical work according to Mr. White's 'Sinus Tone Production' method and under his guidance is both safety and simplicity itself; the placing of the voice in the appropriate sinuses is reduced by him to a science so intelligible and an act so simple that neither teacher nor pupil need work in the dark. The vocal and medical results of Mr. White's discoveries seem to justify his theories in full.—Yours, &c.,

E. Douglas Tayler
(Supervisor of Musical Education for New Zealand Govt. Schools and Training Colleges).

84, Lower Addiscombe Road,
Croydon, Surrey.

MUSIC AS HANDMAID

Sir,—Mr. Watson quotes me as saying that 'Music is but a willing handmaid to scenic art.' 'Feste' calls this a 'dictum,' and subtly indicates the horror with which it inspires him. Neither Mr. Watson nor 'Feste' (I must regretfully conclude) had read my article with sufficient care. I hardly expect that the casual products of my leisure hours should be regarded as material for profound study, but it might be a good thing if correspondents and contributors would examine the actual text a little more closely before making their comments public. I never made any generalisation to the effect that music was a handmaid to scenic or any other kind of art. My views on the value of pure music are virulent enough to receive even 'Feste's' approval.

My statement referred to the conditions which governed the staging and performance of the English masque and musical plays under the Stuarts. As quoted by Mr. Watson it appears as a generalisation about music as a whole. 'Feste' goes one step further and labels it a 'dictum.' I hope I may not be accused of false modesty if I say that I should never dream of giving public expression to anything so devastatingly final.—Yours, &c.,

J. A. Westrup.

Dulwich College, S.E.21.

['Feste' writes: 'Peccavi! I had read Mr. Westrup's article with due care and appreciation, and deserve all the hard things he says for having forgotten the context of the remark quoted by Mr. Watson.']

SOPRANOS ARE RARE

Sir,—May I beg you as a special favour to publish this letter?

I do not seek to prolong this discussion. I think your decision to close it is wise, taking into consideration certain peculiar circumstances connected with it. But I should regret to feel that any of the more reasonable of your readers should think that I am 'letting them down' in any way.

I am perfectly certain of the truth of the assertion I have made with respect to the scarcity of real sopranos, though so much scepticism has been expressed on the point. Time will prove the truth of what I have written. But in the meantime I am willing to help, in ways other than prolonging the discussion, all who are really interested in the matter.

In my last book, called 'The Central Point in Beautiful Voice Production,' there is contained information with respect to the legitimate use of the lighter productions, but chiefly the fullest information as to the full voice, its significance, the mechanism which must be brought into action, and the method employed to do so. I will send a copy of this book gratis to any of your readers who cares to apply for it. I will also send a booklet dealing with the special point alone.

Finally, to prove the absolute sincerity of my conviction that true sopranos are deplorably scarce, I will ask your permission to make the following offer. I will gladly give £20 to any of those who have written during this discussion for the best three or four real sopranos they may send me within one year from this date. I shall be glad to arrange interviews. If, at the same time, these ladies possess normal health and strength and the necessary artistic ability, I will give them free tuition till they are ready for first-class professional work. By certain help and interest I am able to guarantee (by legal agreement) that they shall be able to obtain first-class positions. I trust that this may be considered a fair offer.—Yours, &c,

4, Albany Mansions, S.W.11. H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

[With this letter, and Mr. Travers Adams's article on p. 986, this subject is dropped.—EDITOR.]

A GERHARDT CRITIC

SIR,—Since it fell to me during a number of years to criticise Elena Gerhardt's concerts in the Musical Times, perhaps some rejoinder is called for from me to Mr. C. W. Orr's frantic outburst against those who—possibly having had longer experience of great singing than he, or a more special knowledge of vocal technique—have felt it their duty on various occasions to mention the shortcomings in this celebrated singer's art, a duty the more clearly indicated since some of the leaders of English criticism have been blind to the defects in their idol.

Mr. Orr is 'annoyed.' It is a common attitude of persons with more enthusiasm than judgment, when they notice that others have not so completely lost their heads at a musical entertainment. Some of us believe that there is a virtue in the critical faculty; naturally those who exercise it expect to be accused of 'malice' when they are not stampeded by the applause of the crowd on the floor of Queen's Hall.

Mr. Orr, who uses such words as 'Lilliputian sharpshooters,' 'verbal acidity,' 'midget critics,' and 'guttersnipery,' will not mind my being equally frank (though I do not propose to emulate his Billingsgate) and saying that the listener who can find in Madame Gerhardt's art a well-rounded perfection has no doubt a kind heart and musical enthusiasm, but is uncultivated, inexperienced, and unperceptive. Let me mention a few home truths. (Madame Gerhardt's admirers have brought these upon her.)

The critical listener who has heard her regularly is slightly oppressed by a kind of machine-made certainty in her performances. We know precisely, after a little, what Madame Gerhardt will do with any song. We know her characteristic mood of noble placidity, and that once outside this mood she has little to say. I have heard her more than once sing Schubert's 'Winterreise' complete. The evening has begun with very real pleasure, due to Madame Gerhardt's admirable German enunciation and the equable flow of her tone in the middle register; it has ended in a climax of irritation due to the singer's monotonous style, which can be put down only to a narrowly limited mind. It would be unkind to point to Madame Gerhardt's utter failure when she leaves her particular ground of Schubert and Brahms—for we do not expect an artist to be universal.

The faults in Madame Gerhardt's technique are surely to be insisted upon, considering that the enthusiasts set her up as a model for all young aspirants. Surely even the ignoramus must have noticed the defects in Madame Gerhardt's breath control. Her audible breath-taking is for me, I confess, an infliction. And the effect of this comes out in her tone. She has no reserves with which to build up a big climax, and her fortissimos in the high part of her voice are shrill and generally of a most unpleasant quality.

Madame Gerhardt is, of course, within her limitations a very fine and distinguished artist. If these limitations must be so bluntly indicated, the fault lies with the fatuous excesses of her admirers.—Yours, &c.,

31, Leigh Street, W.C.1. H. J. KIMBELL.

VOICE PRODUCTION

SIR,—The article in your September issue by Herbert Hilton is very interesting, but it gives nothing away. Does he publish his system? Charles Lunn published his system in 'Philosophy of Voice,' and if I had not studied it I should not have understood Mr. Hilton's sayings. Lunn gave everything away, so that if a student could understand English he might train himself in the art of song if the services of a master of song were not available. I would ask, Has any singing master or singing mistress ever done anything of the kind in this country?—Yours, &c., D. L. C.

Edinburgh.

ARE THEY UNMUSICAL?

SIR,—If asked, 'How should one test a child's musicality after about five or six years' training?' most musicians would answer in effect:

1. By asking the pupil to imitate given sounds with the voice.
2. By testing his knowledge of relative pitch.
3. By testing his recognition of rhythmic patterns.
4. By testing his recognition of nuances and expression.

There are other tests, but the above are the chief ones usually recommended.

In a long experience of teaching music to school children, I find that about ninety per cent. of the musical children would satisfy an examiner in the above tests, but the other ten per cent. are a puzzling proposition. For this reason: After five years' training their sight-singing is poor, they cannot write a simple tune from dictation, rhythm seems to them a mere jumble of notes, and they can name few notes played or sung to them.

They are 'unmusical,' most people will say; but how can this be true when they sing with perfect taste and in perfect tune, when expression and interpretation come naturally to them, when the blend of good technique and real insight and taste brings tears to the eyes of hardened adjudicators?

Year after year I have successes at musical Festivals with pupils such as these. Are they unmusical?—Yours, &c., JANET GORDON.

Danesmoor Road, Manchester.

WHY NOT A MUSICIANS' TRADE UNION?

SIR,—Many of us will be very glad to know that the I.S.M. has at least one member who believes that it should take up the attitude of a trade union. Recently a form was sent round the West of England in an endeavour to revive the Bristol branch, but it was made very clear that it was not a trade union. The doctors and lawyers have the strongest trade unions in the country; why not the musicians? The members like myself who left the I.S.M. in disgust years ago would very quickly return if it meant business.

The weakest scheme possible is the present Registration Council attitude. We pay our guinea and get a receipt, but beyond that nothing is done to help us. We tried to start a registration course for music teachers at Bristol, and for three years the University offered a one-year course at a reasonable rate. It failed because our people can go to London for about four Saturdays and hear eight lectures, when they are accepted on the register. Our local papers, as a result, are full of L.R.A.M.'s teaching for 10*s.* 6*d.* or 12*s.* 6*d.* a term, while the Council makes no effort nor will permit an effort to let the public know the names of those capable of good teaching. Until the I.S.M. and its Registration Council will come into the open and act on our behalf I keep my guinea for other purposes.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT PERCIVAL
(Director, Bristol Operatic School).

10, Abbey View, Bath.

WHAT IS A 'PROFESSIONAL MUSICIAN'

SIR,—Mr. Anderson in his letter on 'A Profession fit for Musicians to live in' quotes Prof. Percy Buck as declaring that 'we are a trade union.' But who are 'we'? That is the whole trouble. The medical profession, which Mr. Anderson instances, is governed by a strict code of professional behaviour, to transgress which may mean being struck off the register of qualified practitioners. Only bandsmen, in music, are in any measure so governed.

The rest of us are made up of composers, executants, teachers, &c., wholly unorganized in any effectual sense. Resolutions passed by the N.U.T. are taken notice of, but who takes the slightest notice of resolutions passed by any specifically musical body?

Further, hundreds of persons teaching music are also teaching other subjects; hundreds have had no special musical training whatsoever. What then is the definition of a professional musician? This seems to be the first point to settle.

One other thing. The 'finely-toned body politic' Mr. Anderson demands will not be found until musicians wake up to the realities of a changing world. A deadly unreality too often broods over educational conferences in which musicians are concerned.

I am entirely in sympathy with Mr. Anderson's aims, but it is no use ignoring the difficulties in the way of their realisation.—Yours, &c.,

ALEC ROBERTSON.

363-367, Oxford Street, W.1.

DALCROZE METHOD

SIR,—My attention has been called to a reply to a correspondent, 'E. B. (Birmingham),' in your issue of September, 1929, p. 832.

The answer implies that it would be possible for the inquirer to teach the Dalcroze Method by the use of Monsieur Dalcroze's teaching books only, and with no practical knowledge of the subject.

I feel it only right to tell you that this is an entirely mistaken view. The Method is essentially a practical one. It would not be possible to acquire the necessary knowledge for teaching purposes without serious work with a trained teacher. How far, of course, such work should go would depend upon the nature of the classes to be taken. Generally speaking, Monsieur Dalcroze does not allow anyone to use his name in connection with his teaching unless they have taken the Teaching Certificate of one of the Dalcroze Training Schools—Geneva, London, New York, Paris. But exceptions are made in the case of the elementary schools. For the use of teachers in the latter, the London School of Dalcroze Eurhythmics organizes all over the country short courses in rhythmic movement, especially designed to give a knowledge of elementary exercises that can be used by the elementary school teacher. In this connection I would call your attention to the enclosed copy of a letter from Monsieur Dalcroze.—Yours, &c.,

PERCY B. INGHAM,
Acting Chairman.

17, Gower Street, W.C.1.

[We add the text of the letter referred to by Mr. Ingham:

'Pupils who have not completed their studies in the Teachers' Training Course (i.e., passed the Certificate or the Diploma examination) have not the right to give lessons in the Dalcroze Method, or to call themselves teachers authorised by Monsieur Jaques-Dalcroze.

'But if they are teachers of gymnastics or of singing they may adapt to their teaching all the exercises which they have learnt in their Dalcroze classes, provided they do not advertise themselves as teachers of the Dalcroze Method, and that they used such exercises simply as an aid to their ordinary lessons.']

WANTED: MORE WIDOR AND REGER

SIR,—Will you allow me to appeal to all organists who have large organs to play the whole of Widor's Symphonies from time to time? Although the fifth is worked to death, one seldom or never hears the others. I would also appeal for Max Reger's glorious Sonatas, which I never see performed at any recitals. Surely when one considers the constant stream of visitors to London at all times of the year one ought to know where to go to hear the music one wants. A South African composer who has been here for many weeks gives the most disappointing accounts of the churches he has visited, and has gone from one to another to hear Max Reger, but, so far, in vain.—Yours, &c.,

A. M. GIFFORD.

25, Grenville Park, S.E.13.

AN INTERESTING COLLECTION OF MUSICIAN'S LETTERS

SIR,—A relative of that famous tenor soloist, Mr. Charles Lockey (who was specially engaged by Mendelssohn to sing the tenor solos in the original performance of 'Elijah'), has given me a bundle of letters, addressed to Mr. Lockey, written by many of the greatest musicians of the period. It is the wish of the donor that the proceeds of their sale shall be devoted to the Braille Centenary Festival Fund.

Your readers might care to know of this unique collection, which includes letters written by Jenny Lind, Sims Reeves, Braham, Balfe, Bishop, Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, Sir George Smart, Costa, Benedict, Hallé, Hatton, Horsley, Elvey, and others, also an envelope addressed to Mr. Lockey signed 'C. D.' (Charles Dickens).

These letters cover what might be called the Mendelssohn-'Elijah' period.

Charles Lockey is the subject of an article in Grove's Dictionary (new edition, p. 225), and is the singer of whom Mendelssohn said: 'A young English tenor sang "If with all your hearts" so beautifully that I was obliged to collect myself to prevent my being overcome and to enable me to beat time steadily.' This refers to the first performance of 'Elijah,' at Birmingham, in 1846, under the composer's direction.

Lockey held appointments in the choirs of Magdalen College, St. George's Chapel, Windsor, St. Paul's Cathedral, and in 1848 he was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. In 1859, at the age of thirty-nine, a throat affection unhappily deprived him of his voice, and he lived till 1901 in retirement at Hastings.

The letters (which include an amusing and characteristic one from Lockey himself to his niece—the lady who has offered the collection for sale) are open to the inspection of anyone who may care to communicate with me at the address given below.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD WATSON
(Organizing Secretary of the Braille Centenary Festival Appeal, 1929).

National Institute for the Blind,
224-6-8, Great Portland Street, W.1.

(Continued on p. 1040.)

Competition Festival Record

BRITISH FEDERATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS: ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING AND CONFERENCE, PERTH, SEPTEMBER 20 TO 23

Six years ago, at Edinburgh, the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals held its first annual general meeting and Conference. This year the Federation paid its first return visit to Scotland; Perth, the home of one of the livest and most idealistic Festivals in the movement, being selected for the annual meeting and Conference.

The number attending was smaller than usual, representatives of English Festivals finding the distance a handicap. But the general opinion at the close was that the event was the happiest, and in some ways the most fruitful, of any yet held.

The delegates were received in the Lesser City Hall on the Friday evening by the Federation President, the Rev. C. J. Beresford (London), and the Chairman of the Scottish Area Council, Mr. David Martin (Perth). A pleasant social evening was spent, the usual varied musical programme being replaced by an exhibition of Scottish country dancing by Perthshire teams of children and grown-ups and an extraordinarily attractive series of action-songs presented by the Glasgow Orpheus Choir Sangspiel.

ANNUAL REPORT

The real business opened on Saturday morning with the annual general meeting, the Rev. C. J. Beresford presiding. The report of the Central Board was presented.

The report stated that there were 209 affiliated Festivals, 528 individual general members, and 12 life members. Sixty-eight thousand marking-sheets had been supplied to Festivals during the year—an imposing total.

The Federation had again taken part in the National Summer Schools of Music Teaching at Oxford and St. Andrews, and in local Holiday Schools at Taunton, Peterborough, and Craigavad (Ulster), and had itself organized with much success an experimental Summer School of Chamber Music at Cambridge.

The Carnegie Orchestral Loan Library was steadily increasing its catalogue and its usefulness to amateur orchestras. The details of the projected National Festival for mixed choirs to be held at Liverpool in July, 1930, under the ægis of the Federation, had now been finally adjusted, and syllabuses were ready for issue.

The accounts of the Federation, despite the automatic decrease in the annual grant from the Carnegie Trustees, showed a slight surplus. A notable feature was the further reduction in the number of grants-in-aid required to be made to rural Festivals, a sterling tribute this to the far-sightedness of the Central Board's financial policy, which has gradually educated many Festivals up to becoming self-supporting without diminishing their loyalty to the central body.

The report and accounts having been adopted, the meeting proceeded to re-elect the hon. treasurer, Mr. T. Driffield Hawkin, and elected Mr. F. H. Bisset to represent the general members on the Central Board in succession to Sir Henry Hadow.

AWARD OF CERTIFICATES

The annual Conference followed, Mr. Plunket Greene leading off with a proposal that it be a recommendation to all Festivals that certificates should not be awarded to competitors on the basis of an arbitrary number of marks, but that such awards should be left to the judges, with special consideration to school choirs. The proposal was accepted by the Conference, after discussion, but we venture the opinion that the Glasgow practice of awarding certificates on the basis of an exchange of views between adjudicators and executive carries the idea a step further, and is preferable.

FUNCTIONING OF AREA COUNCILS

Some discussion followed on the proposed re-organization of Area Councils, but as several of the Councils had not yet reported their views, and there was a marked diversity of opinion among those which had, it was again decided to postpone discussion.

RAILWAY TRAVELLING FACILITIES

Railway travelling facilities were discussed, and it was elicited that definite progress was being made in the direction of securing concessions from the railway companies.

REVISION OF MARKING-SHEETS

After lunch the principal topic of the Conference, that of altering the arithmetical basis of the marking-sheets, was introduced by Mr. Plunket Greene, who proposed the abandonment of the existing system of dividing the standard hundred marks into five 'technical' headings of ten each, plus fifty for 'interpretation and general effect,' and the substitution of a fifty-fifty basis, i.e., fifty for 'proficiency' and fifty for 'interpretation,' with the usual sub-heads for under-scoring. With Irish wit and Scots humour at their brightest in the speeches of Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Hugh S. Roberton, and the support of other experienced judges and teachers such as Mr. George Dodds (Newcastle), Mr. Arthur Collingwood (Aberdeen), Major Bavin (London), and Dr. Keighley (Manchester), the proposal went through with a slickness which, at a Conference from which many of the leading minds in the Festival movement were absent, should not be too readily taken as representing the general state of opinion on the subject.

ADOLESCENT CHOIR SINGING

Sir Arthur Somervell referred to his attack some years ago on adolescent solo singing at competitions, and explained that his objections did not at all apply to singing in choirs. He went on to advocate strongly what he described (erroneously) as a new class of competition for adolescent four- or three-part choirs of boys and girls from sixteen to eighteen years, and referred appreciatively to the work of this kind which had been developing in Scotland in some of the co-ed. schools during the past four years. Further speeches along the same lines were made by Mr. Roberton, Mr. Collingwood, Rev. H. G. Rogers (Carlisle), Rev. C. J. Beresford, Major Bavin, and Mr. Herbert Wiseman (Edinburgh), in the course of which reference was made to the work of adolescent choirs at Festivals at Carlisle, Falkirk, Belfast, and Edinburgh. (None of the speakers referred to the outstanding pioneer work of this kind done at the Northern Counties Festival by Mr. Owen with the girls and lads of Inverness Academy.)

ELOCUTION CLASSES

Miss Rashleigh (Manchester) initiated a very frank and pointed discussion on elocution classes. It is good to see that Festivals are beginning to wake up to the enormities which are being perpetrated by some of the older-fashioned types of elocution adjudicator—and one or two of the newer ones. In the music classes, adjudicators have at least attained to a general sense of direction, but in elocution the paths of too many judges diverge into strange and tangled places. Here is a definite and urgent piece of work for the Associations for the speaking of verse, and it is up to them to tackle it.

FUTURE OF THE FESTIVAL MOVEMENT

The Conference closed with some talk about the 'Future of the Festival Movement.' This was the biggest and most pregnant theme on the agenda, but coming at the tail-end of a crowded time-table, it received scant courtesy and still awaits adequate discussion.

The delegates were entertained to tea by the Scottish Area Council, and listened to several groups of songs sung by Perthshire School Choirs and by the Glasgow Orpheus Junior Choir. Some of the delegates described the latter as the most remarkable children's singing they had ever listened to.

ANNUAL DINNER

In the evening the annual dinner was held in the Station Hotel. The Duchess of Atholl, a Licentiate of the Royal Academy, proposed the principal toast, and a number of members of the Perth Madrigal Society, under Mr. D. T. Yacamini, sang some groups of madrigals very charmingly, the practice of having the banquetters attempt to do their own madrigal-singing as in 'the spacious days' being this year wisely abandoned.

SUNDAY ACTIVITIES

On Sunday morning many of the delegates attended the Presbyterian service arranged for them in the historic St. John's Church, Perth. In the afternoon a drive through some of the beauty-spots of the Perthshire Highlands was an attraction; and in the evening the large City Hall was crowded to its fullest capacity when Mr. Roberton directed, as only he can, an audience of over two thousand people in a Community-singing Festival, based on traditional Scots psalm tunes. A fitting climax, this, to a week-end's doings of which the general verdict was that the whole was greater even than the sum of all its parts. And what a happy thought of the Scottish Area Council to have the Lesser City Hall (where all the meetings were held) laid out and furnished as a comfortable free-and-easy lounge!

On the Monday many of the visitors, reluctant to depart, spent the entire day in making a more intimate acquaintance with the loveliness of the Highland mountains and lochs.

S. B. N.

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL

(FROM OUR MANCHESTER CORRESPONDENT.)

This Festival loses nothing in enterprise or in attractive power for either student or audience. Despite its thirty years' activities, freshness of outlook is shown in its choice of music. Last year the floods of competitive enthusiasm threatened to interfere with its organization; last month the waters subsided slightly in the choral entries, consequent upon industrial and general economic disturbances in the North. But in many directions the judges reported a higher standard in music which never made concessions to possible inexperience, so it would appear that the problem of the 'dud' competitor is solving itself; more certain is it that the best from many other centres of competitive effort flock to this Festival to get a fuller measure of their capacity in good company. The study of the solo and smaller forms of concerted music of the Elizabethans forges ahead powerfully; its audiences, too, are large, attentive, and enthusiastic.

My impression is that the juvenile string-playing is not keeping step, in the matter of improving standard, with that of pianoforte-playing for youngsters of the same age; this may be due to the greater accessibility of pianoforte teachers in many districts, and quite probably to the prevalent inability to spend money to-day on fiddles—a pianoforte in these industrial districts being more a part of furnishing outlay!

It is no good chanting jeremiads over the dearth of really high soprano and tenor voices in the face of over a hundred and eighty-three candidates respectively, for only talented ones could think of even 'having a go' at music of such lofty vocal contour; usually twice as many singers buy Blackpool music for inspection as actually enter. Reflect for a moment, too, on the fact of over two hundred sopranos studying Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Hymn to the Sun,' or a hundred and sixty tenors spending leisure on Puccini's 'None shall sleep to-night,' and a hundred baritones the mighty 'Prometheus' of Wolf.

Never a Festival here passes without bringing to light some unusually beautiful voice—perhaps not a winner just yet, but numerous examples exist of consistent triers at Blackpool who eventually get into the coveted finals. Winifred Price, from a village between Warrington and Manchester, is a case in point, and this year she won the mezzo class and was included in the final six contraltos! Herbert Fish, of Rochdale, is a tenor of whom more will be heard; vocally there is not much music which he could not face; whether the deeper musical qualities are to be found in his nature, time alone can reveal; and thus we might enlarge on revelations in each group of voices. All judges were agreed that in juvenile choral work there were evidences of greater penetration in the matter of interpretative insight than used to be the case, and such things as Gerrard Williams's 'Foreign Craft' are calculated to set a premium on such factors in an adequate preparation.

The probationary adult choral classes for combinations of singers too small numerically to compete in the open classes of the final day were phenomenally large, and their standard quietly but surely advances. Much the same can be said of the choirs of the Free Churches, and this year an increase of interest on the part of the choirs from the Anglican Churches was observable, one of those participating proving to the full the need for, and wisdom of, attendance at competitive Festivals.

On Saturday the entries were of more manageable proportions than a year ago, and during the morning the management had time on its hands. Felix White's 'Sirens' music revealed the soundness of musicianship of the ladies who sang it, but probably little lasting satisfaction had been derived from the study of this distinctly angular and unalluring music. The Wagner Venusberg music and a Kodály gipsy song took them into fresh pastures. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal, 275; Preston St. Cecilia, 274; Blackpool Lyric, 254.

The big male choirs prepared Strauss's 'Battle Song' (much too high in its divided tenor parts for comfort), Boughton's more acceptable new composition 'The Gentle Heart,' and Bantock's 'Fighting Téméraire,' which brought the miners of Felling, in Durham, into the limelight of a sweeping victory at Blackpool with 277 marks, Clydebank following with 268, and Skipton with 262.

The mixed-voice sight-test went to Blackpool Glee and Madrigal, as did also the chief honours in the Challenge Shield for Bach's 'Sanctus,' Elgar's 'Evening Scene,' and Greville Cooke's 'O! to be in England.' Blackpool Glee and Madrigal, 268; Golcar Baptist (near Huddersfield), 258; Bach Choir (Barrow-in-Furness), 257; Huddersfield Vocal Union, 256.

In the probationary mixed-voice group singing Bach, Elgar, and Leslie Heward works: 1. Haltwhistle Vocal Union (Northumberland); 2. Ryecroft Vocal Union (Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancs); 3. Read and Simonstone (near Burnley, Lancs).

MEXBOROUGH.—At the Festival on October 4 and 5 there were four hundred entries and a good mustering of choirs. The first prizes were won by Bramley Ladies' Choir (Mr. G. A. Holgate), Thurscoe Harmonic Male-Voice Choir (Mr. E. A. Smith), and Dronfield in the mixed-voice section (Mr. Hardwick). The only orchestra was that of Balfour's, Sheffield.

PERTH.—The thirty-third Highland Mod, held at Perth on October 1-4, brought in over thirteen hundred entries. The chief aim of the Mod is to spread the knowledge and practice of the Gaelic language, with its literature and its music, and the tests for solo singers and choirs were sung in the Scots mother-tongue. A most interesting series of competitions resulted, and the performances were, on occasions, of a high standard. In the choral classes the successful choirs were Oban Gaelic Choir, Greenock Gaelic Choir, Inverness Gaelic Musical Association, and, in the rural class, Badenoch Gaelic Choir.

WALLASEY.—There were a great number of competitors at this Festival (October 8-12), which has shown a steady and rapid growth since it began ten years ago with an afternoon of contests in a tent. It was remarked, however, that local organizations were still

No. 448. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

O LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM

Composed by HAROLD ANDREWS.

Stainer, John } CAROLS,
Bramley, H. R. } NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
*2. The Manger Throne .. .. .. C. Steggall
*3. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
*4. Come, ye lofty .. .. Elvey
*5. Come, tune your hearts .. .. Ouseley
*6. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
*7. Jesu, hail .. .. J. Stainer
*8. Good Christian men .. .. .. Old German
*9. Sleep, holy Babe .. .. Dykes
*10. Good King Wenceslas .. .. Traditional
*11. When I view the Mother .. .. J. Barnby
*12. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
*13. On the Birthday of the Lord .. .. Dykes
*14. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
*15. Glorious, beauteous .. .. Maria Tiddeman
*16. Waken! Christian Children } 1½d. S.C. Hammerton
*17. A Child this day is born } .. Traditional
*18. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Ouseley
*19. When Christ was born .. A. H. Brown
*20. Christmas Morning Hymn .. .. J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Traditional
22. Jesus in the Manger .. .. .. H. Smart
*23. The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d. .. Old French
24. The Moon shines bright } .. Traditional
*25. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
26. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
*27. Christmas Day .. .. .. J. Stainer
28. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
29. God's dear Son .. .. .. Traditional
*30. See, amid the winter's snow .. .. Goss
31. The Babe of Bethlehem .. .. Traditional
32. In Bethlehem, that noble place .. Ouseley
*33. A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
34. Christmas Song .. .. Dykes
35. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
36. The Story of the Shepherd .. .. J. Barnby
*37. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional
*38. In terrâ pax .. .. Dykes
39. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
*40. From far away .. .. Dykes
*41. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. A. Sullivan
42. The Child Jesus in the Garden .. J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43. What soul-inspiring music .. Har. by J. S.
44. In the country nigh to Bethlehem .. G. Hine
*45. We three Kings of Orient are Har. by J. S.
46. Emmanuel, God with us .. .. H. Gadsby
47. New Prince, new pomp } 1½d. .. C. Steggall
48. A Babe is born } Har. by J. S.
49. Come, let us all sweet Carols sing F. Champneys
50. Let music break on this blest morn J. B. Calkin
51. Carol for New Year's Day .. A. H. Brown
52. The Angel Gabriel .. .. Har. by J. S.
53. The Shepherds amazed .. A. H. Brown
54. Noël! Noël! .. .. .. Har. by J. S.
55. I sing the birth .. .. G. C. Martin
56. Christmas Night .. .. A. H. Brown
57. The Christmas Celebration .. .. E. Prout
58. Arise and hail the Sacred Day A. H. Brown
59. The Holy Well .. .. Har. by J. S.
60. The Angel and the Shepherds E. H. Thorne
61. The Coventry Carol .. .. Har. by J. S.
62. The Morning Star .. .. .. J. F. Bridge
63. The Shepherds went .. .. J. F. Barnett
64. I saw three ships .. .. Har. by J. S.
65. Mountains, bow your heads W. H. Cummings
66. Luther's Carol .. .. .. J. Higgs
67. The Boy's Dream .. .. W. H. Monk
68. Legends of the Infancy .. J. F. Bridge
69. Let Christians all } 1½d. .. Traditional
70. Immortal Babe }

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series ..	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) .. each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. } CAROLS,
Neale, J. M. } Set to Ancient Melodies.

71. Here is joy for every age.
72. Earthly friends will change.
73. Gabriel's message.
74. Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75. Earth to-day rejoices.
76. Good Christian men, rejoice. } 1½d. each.
77. From church to church.
78. In the ending of the year.
79. Royal day that chasest gloom.
80. O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81. Good King Wenceslas.
82. Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment ..	7	6
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY.
Twopence each.

83. O holy star .. .. J. Stainer
84. The shepherds .. .. Eaton Faning
85. Hymn of the angels .. .. G. M. Garrett
*86. The anthem of peace .. .. .. J. Barnby
87. The desert .. .. .. Emma Mundelle
88. Bethlehem .. .. .. Myles B. Foster
89. Daybreak .. .. .. Berthold Tours
90. In the manger .. .. .. J. Barnby
91. The mother and child .. Myles B. Foster
92. Christ is born .. .. .. J. F. Bridge
93. Christmas Day .. .. Battison Haynes
*94. Sweet Christmas Bells .. .. J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95. Now join we all with holy mirth .. J. Stainer
96. Softly the night .. .. J. M. Crament
97. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. J. T. Field
98. Now dies in David's City .. .. J. Swire
99. There dwelt in Old Judea .. .. R. Jackson
100. Good people, give ear .. .. J. Swire
101. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. J. T. Field
102. Ye stars of night .. .. .. J. Swire
103. Ring out, ye bells .. .. J. H. Wallis
104. Two thousand troubled years J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

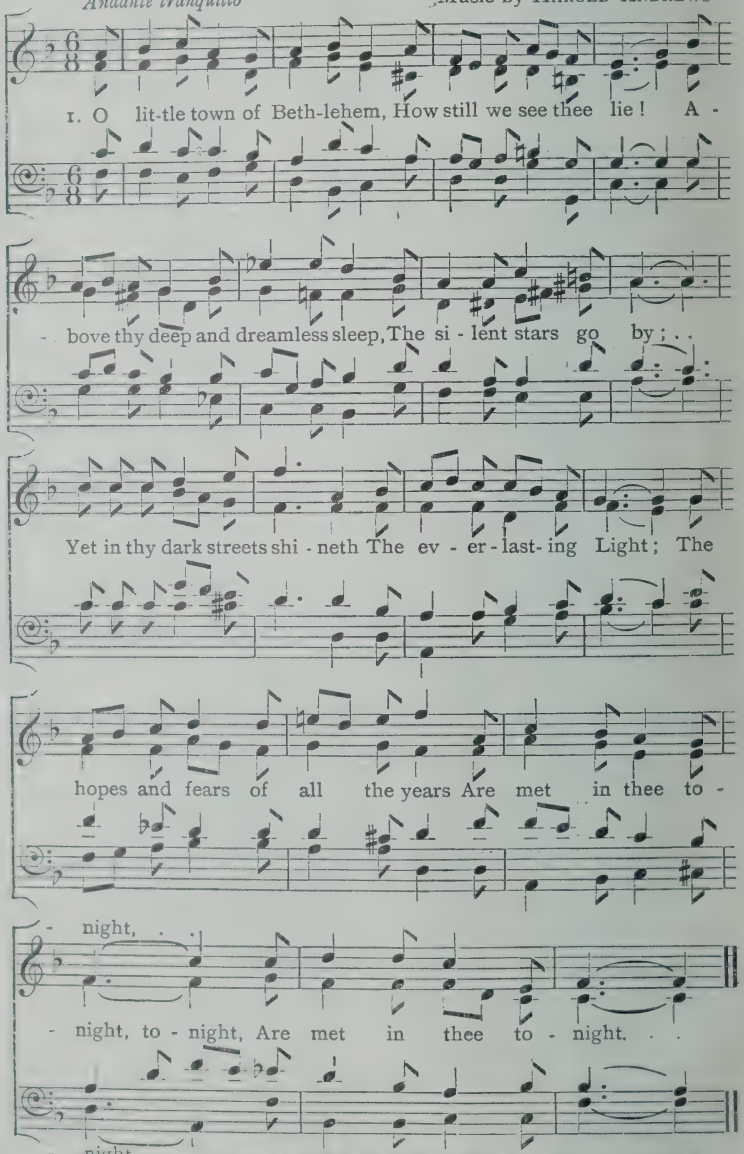
Oct., 1929. MADE IN ENGLAND.

O Little Town of Bethlehem

Words by Bishop P. Brooks

Andante tranquillo

Music by Harold Andrews



1. O lit-tle town of Beth-lehem, How still we see thee lie! A -
- bove thy deep and dreamless sleep, The si - lent stars go by; . .
Yet in thy dark streets shi - neth The ev - er - last- ing Light; The hopes and fears of all the years Are met in thee to -
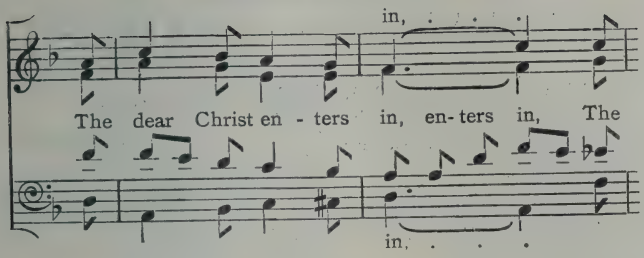
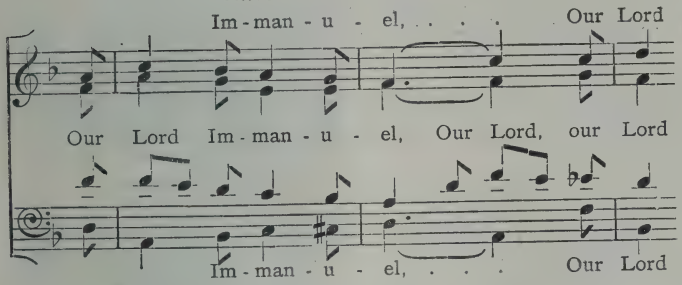
- night, . .
- night, to - night, Are met in thee to - night. . .
- night, . .

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Co., Ltd.

Last line of Verse 3



Last line of Verse 4



2 For Christ is born of Mary;
And gathered all above.
While mortals sleep, the angels keep
Their watch of wondering love.
O morning stars! together
Proclaim the holy birth,
And praises sing to God the King,
And peace to men on earth!

3 How silently, how silently
The wondrous gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of His heaven.
No ear may hear His coming;
But in this world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive Him, still
The dear Christ enters in.

4 O holy Child of Bethlehem!
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin and enter in—
Be born in us to-day!
We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
Oh, come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord Immanuel!

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. {Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship. / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet!} 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CAROLS.
Three-halfpence each.

PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. {O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright.} 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.
Complete, 3s.; each, 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. .. Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS. NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Two-part. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. {I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol.} 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.
Complete, 8d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 2

Fox, G.—CAROLS. For Little Singers. Each.

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. {The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house.} 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone.
180. {Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people.} 2d.
181. {Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old.} 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. {How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord.} 2d.
184. {Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria.} 2d.

Legge, R. H.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS.
Unison. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Each, 2d.

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas.
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 3d

*197 {The Anthem of Peace .. J. Barnby / On Christmas Morn .. A. C. Mackenzie / Across the desert sands .. G. C. Martin / Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep .. .. .. J. Stainer} 3d
(Words only, 4s. per 100.)

 All Carols marked with an asterisk may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
(Sept., 1927.)

No. 450 NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS Price (1½*d.*)

The Star that shines so pure and bright

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Words by IRENE GASS

Music by GEORGE RATHBONE

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited

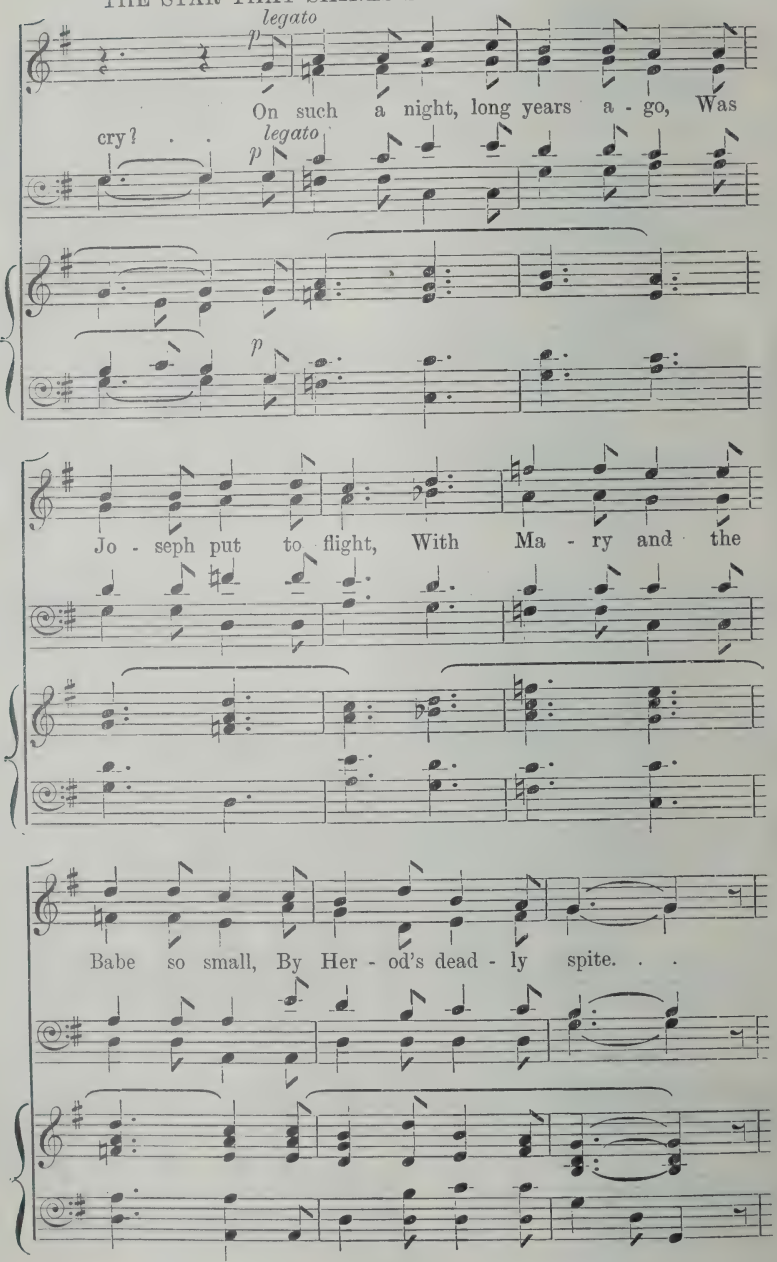
MADE IN ENGLAND



legato
p
On such a night, long years a - go, Was cry? . .
legato
p
p
Jo - seph put to flight, With Ma - ry and the Babe so small, By Her - od's dead - ly spite. . .

p
cres.
Soprano and Alto
f
O wick - ed heart! that drove Him out To
f
Tenor and Bass seek a friend - ly place; . . O cru - el tongues! that legato
p dai - ly scorned His good - ness and His grace. . . Let legato
p
p

me not turn my Lord a-way As Her - od did of yore, But
cres.
stand with lamp all trimm'd and bright To guide Him to my door. . .
cres.
cres.
p
cres.

No. 451. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

PUER NATUS EST NOBIS

Composed by ERIC H. THIMAN.

Stainer, John / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1.	God rest you merry, gentlemen	Traditional
*2.	The Manger Throne	C. Steggall
*3.	A Virgin unspotted	Traditional
*4.	Come, ye lofty	Elvey
*5.	Come, tune your hearts	Ouseley
*6.	The First Nowell	Traditional
*7.	Jesu, hail	J. Stainer
*8.	Good Christian men	Old German
*9	Sleep, holy Babe	Dykes
*10.	Good King Wenceslas	Traditional
*11.	When I view the Mother	J. Barnby
*12.	The seven joys of Mary	Traditional
*13.	On the Birthday of the Lord	Dykes
*14.	What Child is this?	Old English
*15.	Glorious, beauteous	Maria Tiddeman
*16.	Waken! Christian Children	S.C. Hammerton
*17.	A Child this day is born (1½d.)	Traditional
*18.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Ouseley
*19.	When Christ was born	A. H. Brown
*20.	Christmas Morning Hymn	J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Traditional
22.	Jesus in the Manger	H. Smart
*23.	The Holly and the Ivy (1½d.)	Old French
24.	The Moon shines bright (1½d.)	Traditional
*25.	The Virgin and Child	C. Steggall
26.	The Incarnation	Traditional
*27.	Christmas Day	J. Stainer
28.	The Cherry-Tree Carol	Traditional
29.	God's dear Son	Traditional
*30.	See, amid the winter's snow	Goss
31.	The Babe of Bethlehem	Traditional
32.	In Bethlehem, that noble place	Ouseley
*33.	A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	J. Barnby
34.	Christmas Song	Dykes
35.	Jacob's Ladder	Traditional
36.	The Story of the Shepherd	J. Barnby
*37.	The Wassail Song	Traditional
*38.	In terrâ pax	Dykes
39.	Dives and Lazarus	Traditional
*40.	From far away	Dykes
*41.	Carol for Christmas Day	A. Sullivan
42.	The Child Jesus in the Garden	J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43.	What soul-inspiring music	Har. by J. S.
44.	In the country nigh to Bethlehem	G. Hine
*45.	We three Kings of Orient are	Har. by J. S.
46.	Emmanuel, God with us	H. Gadsby
47.	New Prince, new pomp (1½d.)	C. Steggall
48.	A Babe is born (1½d.)	Har. by J. S.
49.	Come, let us all sweet Carols sing	F. Champneys
50.	Let music break on this blest morn	J. B. Calkin
51.	Carol for New Year's Day	A. H. Brown
52.	The Angel Gabriel	Har. by J. S.
53.	The Shepherds amazed	A. H. Brown
54.	Noël! Noël!	Har. by J. S.
55.	I sing the birth	G. C. Martin
56.	Christmas Night	A. H. Brown
57.	The Christmas Celebration	E. Prout
58.	Arise and hail the Sacred Day	A. H. Brown
59.	The Holly Well	Har. by J. S.
60.	The Angel and the Shepherds	E. H. Thorne
61.	The Coventry Carol	Har. by J. S.
62.	The Morning Star	J. F. Bridge
63.	The Shepherds went	J. F. Barnett
64.	I saw three ships	Har. by J. S.
65.	Mountains, bow your heads	W. H. Cummings
66.	Luther's Carol	J. Higgs
67.	The Boy's Dream	W. H. Monk
68.	Legends of the Infancy	J. F. Bridge
69.	Let Christians all (1½d.)	Traditional
70.	Immortal Babe (1½d.)	Traditional

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. / Neale, J. M. } CAROLS, Set to Ancient Melodies.

71.	Here is joy for every age.	1½d. each.
72.	Earthly friends will change.
73.	Gabriel's message.
74.	Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75.	Earth to-day rejoices.
76.	Good Christian men, rejoice.
77.	From church to church.
78.	In the ending of the year.
79.	Royal day that chasest gloom.
80.	O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81.	Good King Wenceslas.
82.	Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY. Twopence each.

83.	O holy star	J. Stainer
84.	The shepherds	Eaton Faning
85.	Hymn of the angels	G. M. Garrett
*86.	The anthem of peace	J. Barnby
87.	The desert	Emma Mundella
88.	Bethlehem	Myles B. Foster
89.	Daybreak	Berthold Tours
90.	In the manger	J. Barnby
91.	The mother and child	Myles B. Foster
92.	Christ is born	J. F. Bridge
93.	Christmas Day	Battison Haynes
*94.	Sweet Christmas Bells	J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95.	Now join we all with holy mirth	J. Stainer
96.	Softly the night	J. M. Crament
97.	Sleep, Holy Babe	J. T. Field
98.	Now dies in David's City	J. Swire
99.	There dwelt in Old Judea	R. Jackson
100.	Good people, give ear	J. Swire
101.	Carol for Christmas Day	J. T. Field
102.	Ye stars of night	J. Swire
103.	Ring out, ye bells	J. H. Wallis
104.	Two thousand troubled years	J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

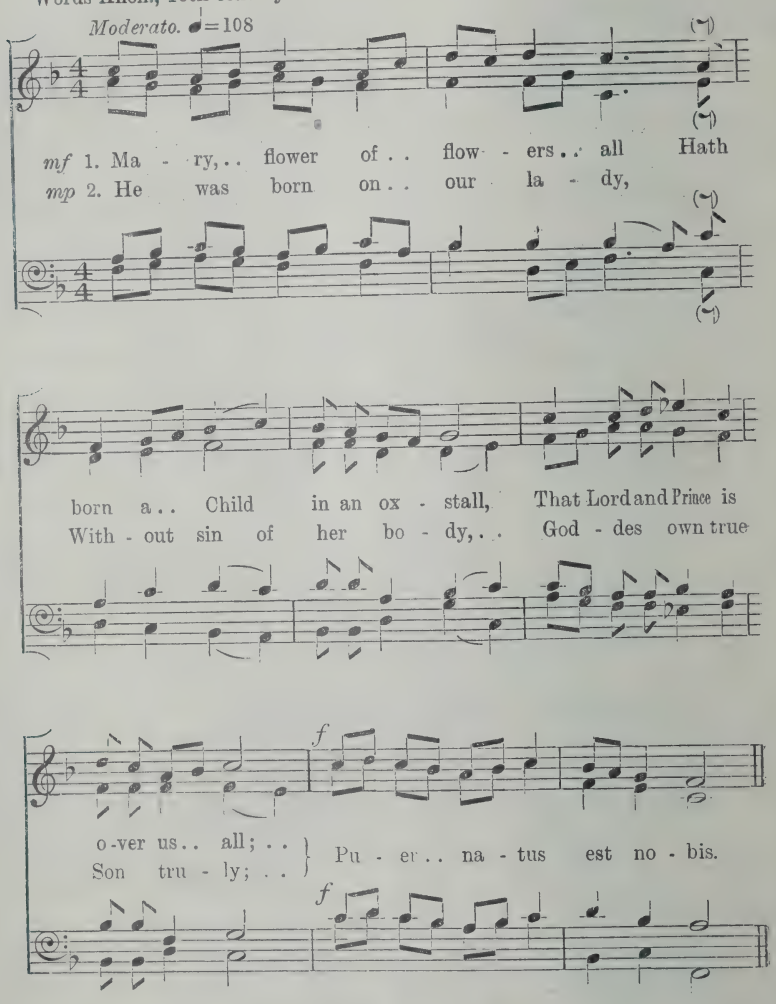
(Oct., 1928) MADE IN ENGLAND.

Puer natus est nobis

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Words Anon., 16th century

Music by Eric H. Thiman



Moderato. ♩=108
mf 1. Ma - ry,.. flower of.. flow - ers.. all Hath mp 2. He was born on.. our la - dy, born a.. Child in an ox - stall, That Lord and Prince is With - out sin of her bo - dy,.. God - des own true
f o-ver us.. all;..
Son tru - ly;..
Pu - er.. na - tus est no - bis.
f

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited

PUER NATUS EST NOBIS

p 3. By an . . ap - ple . . of a tree pp 4. Done was that Child up - on the Rood, f 5. Pray we now to that Heaven - ly King To Bond - men all . . made were we, . . That Child was born to
With His flesh and with His blood, For our help and send us all His dear bless-ing, . . Shrift and hous - el
Last time rall.
f
make us free;
for . . our good;
at our end - ing.
Pu - er . . na - tus est no - bis.
Last time rall.
f

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship. / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet! } 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CAROLS.
Three-halfpence each.
PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright. } 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.
Complete, 3s.; each, 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. .. Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS. NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Two-part. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol. } 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.
Complete, 8d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1

Fox, G.—CAROLS. For Little Singers. Each.

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house. } 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone.
180. Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people. } 2d.
181. Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old. } 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord. } 2d.
184. Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria. } 2d.

Legge, R. H.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS.
Unison. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Each, 2d.

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas.
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 3d

*197. The Anthem of Peace .. J. Barnby
On Christmas Morn A. C. Mackenzie
Across the desert sands .. G. C. Martin
Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep .. .. .. J. Stainer } 3d
(Words only, 4s. per 100.)

* All Carols marked with an asterisk may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(Oct., 1903.)

reluctant to give their support. In the choral contests the chief awards went to Salford Vocal Society in the female-voice class, Sale and District Musical Society in the mixed-voice class, and to Gorton Male-Voice Choir.

Other recent competitions have been those held at Cleckheaton, held under the North-Eastern Co-operative Union on September 28; the eighth annual Festival at Elsecar on September 21; the third Heanor Festival on October 2-5; the eleventh Festival at Leicester on October 11 and 12; the competitions of the Rothwell Co-operative Society on October 9 and 10; the Dawson Festival at Warrington on September 28, October 5 and 14; and the Winsford Festival on September 21.

PIANOLA COMPETITION

A new departure will be made at next year's Wimbledon Festival by the institution of classes for solo playing and song accompaniment on the pianola, and for the composition of pianola solos. There are also classes for ordinary musical composition, the successful works to be performed at the concert of the Wimbledon Symphony Orchestra in March. Particulars may be had from the hon. secretary, 79, Worple Road, London, S.W.19.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Violinist and 'cellist (gentlemen) wanted to practise with pianist. Trios by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Silas, &c. Must be good readers. Large library.—L. S. P., 9, Castlenau Road, W. Kensington, W.

Lady accompanist (classical) wishes to practise with singer, violinist, or 'cellist.—I. S., 111, Dynevor Road, N.16.

'Cellist wishes to join small party for mutual practice in South London.—G. W. CLARK, 80, Ondine Road, S.E.15.

Experienced pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Richmond district.—L. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady accompanist wishes to meet instrumentalists or vocalists for mutual practice. Also keen on duet playing.—J. McC., 31, Avenue Road, Highgate, N.6.

Clarinet and oboe players wanted to join orchestra for charity work. Must be able to rehearse once a week.—DON LAWRIE, 49, Inverness Terrace, W.2.

Clarinet and trombone players wanted for amateur orchestra near Finsbury Park. Good opportunities for those desiring experience. Good library of a hundred pieces.—W. H. B., 19, Heathville Road, N.19.

Young pianist wishes to meet violinist, or another pianist, for mutual practice. N. London district preferable.—S. A., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist and pianist wish to meet 'cellist for weekly trio practice. N.W. district.—L. B. B., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet amateur violinists or 'cellists for mutual practice.—Mrs. FORD, 62, Bassett Road, W.10.

Violinist, 1st or 2nd, wishes to join good string quartet. Richmond or Kingston-on-Thames districts. Weekly, fortnightly, or Sunday practices.—W. D. S., c/o Musical Times.

Two capable amateur 'cellists and four stringed basses wanted to join first-class amateur string orchestra, rehearsing Saturday afternoons in S.W. district. Good music only.—W. PRICE, 225, Burntwood Lane, Wandsworth Common, S.W.17.

Young bass singer wishes to meet pianist (advanced) for practice of good music. N. or W.-End of London.—A. R., 52, Hatherley Road, E.17.

Vocalist wishes to meet gentleman pianist for mutual practice. Would also accompany if desired. Muswell Hill district.—O. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist wishes to meet a really good violinist for practice of concertos, &c. West London.—PIANIST, c/o Musical Times.

The French-Speaking Y.M.C.A. requires two violinists and one viola player to complete orchestra.—15, Upper Bedford Place, Russell Square, W.C.1.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice.—L. ROBERTS, 91, Delafield Road, Charlton, S.E.7.

Violinist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to join good trio or quartet for classical music.—A. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young gentleman pianist wishes to meet another for mutual practice. S.E. London.—B. F., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist and/or 'cellist for mutual practice of sonatas and trios. New Milton or Bournemouth districts.—TRIO, c/o Musical Times.

Amateur instrumentalists required to form chamber orchestra to rehearse classical and modern music. Weekly practices in Holloway district.—CONDUCTOR, 145, de Beauvoir Road, N.1.

'Cellist and viola player wanted to complete string combination. N. London.—CHELVIO, c/o Musical Times.

Amateur players of violin, viola, pianoforte, trumpet, and bass viol wanted for orchestra. Young players preferred.—W. E. VANNER,, 1, Queen Elizabeth Walk, Stoke Newington, N.16.

All instruments wanted to complete amateur orchestra. Rehearsals on Wednesdays, at 8 p.m.—HALL, 43, Sebert Road, Forest Gate.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The half-term expires on Monday, November 4.

The Royal Academy and Royal College have organized, and arrangements have been made for carrying on, a Teachers' Training Course, which has been accepted by the Board of Education as conferring graduate status on students passing the examinations. Such students will be examined on completion of the course by a joint board representing the two institutions, and will be created graduates of the Royal Schools of Music, London.

The Opera Class has in preparation three operas—'Don Giovanni,' 'Samson and Delilah,' and 'Valkyrie.' Arrangements have also been made whereby members of the opera class desirous of studying any particular rôle in any particular opera may have special tuition in the works selected.

Two ex-students of the opera class—Miss Jean Kemp and Mr. Arthur Fear—are now members of the Covent Garden Opera Company, at present on tour in the provinces, and Mr. John Barbirolli, the musical director and chief conductor of the Company, is also an old R.A.M. student.

It was satisfactory to see the exceptional number of R.A.M. students, past and present, included in Sir Henry Wood's orchestra during the season of Promenade concerts at Queen's Hall.

The orchestral concert will take place at Queen's Hall on the afternoon of Tuesday, November 26, when Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' will be given. Rehearsals are now in full swing, and it is hoped to maintain the high standard attained in the performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion. Sir Henry Wood will conduct.

The R.A.M. entries for the Christmas examination will be accepted up to November 12, if accompanied by a late fee of 5*s*.

Miss Joan Coxon was presented with the gold medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians at the Annual Livery Dinner at Stationers' Hall, on October 29.

F.

The following awards have been made: Parepa-Rosa Scholarship (female vocalists) to Edith M. Haslett (Ballymena), Florence E. Denman being highly commended, and Doris J. Sherringham commended; John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship (female vocalists) to Mary Ann Jones (London); George Mence Smith Scholarship (female vocalists) to Mary Ellen Jones (Merthyr Tydfil), Margery R. Davy being commended; Ada Lewis Scholarship (male vocalists) to Cecil H. Cope (Lichfield), David G. Hill being highly commended; Ada Lewis Pianoforte Scholarship to Mary G. Johnstone (Saltash), Alfred Nieman being very highly commended, and Angelique de Reyghere, May V. Dumas, and Phyllis E. Lavers commended; Ada Lewis Violin Scholarship to Beatrix E. Marr (London); Ada Lewis 'Cello Scholarship to Beryl R. M. Burridge (Bournemouth), Florence E. M. Hooton being highly commended; John Stokes Scholarship (baritones) to Arthur G. P. Macdonald (London); John Stokes Open Scholarship (baritones) to George S. Scott (Shenfield); Josephine Troup Scholarship (composition) to Monica Myatt (London) and Constance J. Warren (Birmingham); Elizabeth Stokes Scholarship (pianoforte) to Sarah R. Stein (London), Angelique de Reyghere and Alfred H. Wheatcroft being very highly commended, and Dorothy Corker and Phyllis E. Lavers commended; Elizabeth Stokes Open Scholarship (pianoforte) to Edward John Palmer (Westgate-on-Sea), Joan Boulter, Marion Anson-Dyer, Peggy Male, and Enid M. Stacey being very highly commended, and Kathleen Craig, Allan H. Graham, and Mr. Rene Pougnet commended; Sisselle Wray Scholarship (sopranos) to Janet Hamilton-Smith (Cairo), Bessie Alberta Todd being highly commended, and Mabel Corthorn and Grace M. Gibbons commended; Annie M. Child Scholarship (elocution) to Miss Elwyn A. Edgecombe (S. Africa), Gladys E. Percival being highly commended, and Nancy Dugon and Evelyn M. Judd commended; Bach and Beethoven Scholarship (any instrument or voice) to Constance A. Cox (pianoforte) (London), Lisa E. Simpson and Margaret Good being highly commended, and Margaret Chamberlain commended; Ross Scholarship (wind instruments) to Gwydion Holbrooke (Kentford), John W. F. Alexandra being highly commended, and Wilfred G. Smith, L. Mariana Hopkinson, R. Dyson, J. G. Willoughby, and Mary G. Keel commended; Blumenthal Scholarship (composition) to Mansel Treharne Thomas (Rhondda), Freda Robertson being highly commended, and Marjorie Corker commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Summer time and summer weather in Christmas term put new life into the laziest of us, and the opening weeks have shown no sign of the usual post-vacation unwillingness to take on work again, as the long list of the term's fixtures testifies. Eighteen concerts and recitals, with three Patrons' Fund Rehearsals, besides performances by the operatic and dramatic classes, will surely suffice to keep up spirits and temperature alike through the wintry weeks of this term.

The first Patrons' Fund Rehearsal took place on October 18, and presented executive artists in works of their own choice, namely, Miss Kathleen Murray in Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Scottish' Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra; Miss Mona Leigh in Mozart's G major Violin Concerto; Miss Norah Moore in the Scene 'Roberto tu che adoro,' from Meyerbeer's 'Roberto il diavolo'; and Miss Mabel Ritchie in Herbert Howells's song 'In Green Ways.' The last work was conducted by the composer, Mr. Aylmer Buesst being in charge of the rest of the programme.

One feature of the remaining Patrons' Fund Rehearsals will prove a departure from recent practice. The third rehearsal will be a chamber music concert, designed to give a quartet of artists an opportunity of presenting a programme of standard works, with possibly a new composition by a British composer; this will take place on Friday, December 6, at 11 a.m.

The performance of chamber works written for wind instruments is sufficiently unusual to make the first chamber concert of the term noteworthy. Besides madrigals for five and six voices, and the E flat Violin Sonata of Richard Strauss, the programme included the Horn Trio of Brahms, played by Barbara Pulvermacher (violin), Millicent Silver (pianoforte), and Frederick Walding (horn). The very exacting horn part (so effectively written as to have given rise to the supposition that the composer must have been a horn player) was very boldly tackled by Mr. Walding, and the ensemble of the three players showed musical insight and artistic perception of no common order.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Michaelmas term has started under very encouraging auspices. The numbers of the students are well maintained.

The inaugural address to the students was given by the Principal (Mr. E. Stanley Roper), who, in a kind and homely manner, impressed upon his audience the necessity for taking their work seriously, and reminded them of the many benefits they receive at the College, of which institution they had every reason to be proud.

A well-attended lecture was given by Mr. Hubert Foss on 'The Chamber Music of Delius.' Mr. Percy Scholes also attracted a large number to hear his lecture on 'The Defence of Musical Appreciation.'

Mr. Archy Rosenthal, who has lately joined the teaching staff, gave a very gratifying recital.

Major J. T. Bavin will lecture on 'Pianoforte Class Teaching' on November 6.

The Coleman Prize for the year has been awarded to Eric Nelson Hodges, of Bristol.

The Principal has lately attended local distributions at Greenock, Glasgow, Stoke-on-Trent, Northampton, Southampton, and Winchester.

At Wolverhampton a very successful demonstration concert from the College syllabus was given by Miss C. O'Brien. This was also given at the Lowestoft centre, and at Macclesfield by Miss Maud A. Winter.

At the Birkenhead annual distribution the College was represented by the secretary (Mr. Rodwell).

Scholarships have been awarded as follows: Miss M. Caseau (pianoforte) and Miss Kathleen Jones (singing).

The work of erecting a new organ and renovating the existing ones is now being put in hand.

The death of Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, for many years a Member of the College Corporation, is recorded with much regret.

The newly-formed mixed choir, under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, is proving a most successful class.

MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

The 'Coming-of-Age' Celebrations of the above Association took place on September 12, 13, and 14. The fixtures arranged consisted of an opening reception at Æolian Hall by the Founder, Mr. Stewart Macpherson, and his wife. On this occasion Mr. Geoffrey Shaw gave a most stimulating and interesting address on the life and duties of a teacher. His sound advice was presented in a delightful and racy manner, much appreciated by the large audience. This was followed by a pianoforte recital consisting chiefly of old English and modern French music, kindly given by Mr. Harold Craxton.

The second day's programme consisted of a lecture-recital by Mr. Stewart Macpherson, the subject being 'Carl Philip Emanuel Bach and the Viennese School of Haydn and Mozart.' This was succeeded by the Festival luncheon at Pagani's Restaurant, at which Mr. Ernest Read, chairman of the Association, presided. In the afternoon a motor-coach excursion to Windsor took place, and in the evening a large party of the members attended the Promenade concert.

The proceedings concluded with a Conference on the following morning, when Mr. Frank Eames, secretary of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Mr. H. S. Gordon, editor of the Music Teacher, and others spoke.

The celebrations were entirely successful, and the vitality of the Association was strongly in evidence throughout these three memorable days. W. H.

The Coming Season

SECOND LIST

CHORAL CONCERTS IN LONDON AND SUBURBS

ALEXANDRA CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—'Elijah'; 'Merrie England'; 'Faust'; Mass in B minor.

BACH CHOIR, THE (Dr. Adrian Boult).—Christmas Oratorio; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

BEXHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. George Christian).—'The Death of Minnehaha' and 'Hiawatha's Departure.'

BROMLEY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Fertel).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'The Kingdom.'

CENTRAL LONDON CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. David J. Thomas).—Selections from 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' and 'The Mastersingers'; 'Hymn of Praise' and Part III. of 'The Redemption.'

CHINGFORD CHORAL AND MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. P. G. Hummerstone).—'Merrie England'; choral and ballad concert; 'The Messiah.'

CRYSTAL PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock).—Concert version of 'Carmen'; 'By the deep, nine!' (Alec Rowley); 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

DULWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Leslie Regan).—'Enigma' Variations and part of 'Hiawatha'; 'The Mystic Trumpeter' (Harty) and Pianoforte Concerto by Tchaikovsky; 'The Apostles.'

EALING PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. E. Victor Williams).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Meg Blane' and 'Songs of the Fleet'; 'The Rebel Maid.'

ELTHAM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Cyril V. Jenkin).—'King Olaf'; 'The Seasons.'

INSURANCE MUSICAL FESTIVAL SOCIETY.—(Mr. Frank Idle).—'The Wedding of Shon Maclean'; 'Bonbon' Suite.

NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Herbert Baggs).—'The Music-Makers'; 'The Power of Song' (Bruch).

HAROLD BROOKE CHOIR, THE.—Bliss's 'Pastoral'; 'Acis and Galatea'; second Act of 'Semele'; part-songs by Parry and Elgar.

NEWINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Reginald Saunders).—'The Inchcape Rock' (Bridge); 'Merrie England'; 'Elijah'; 'Hiawatha.'

PENGE CHORAL SOCIETY.—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Hymn of Praise'; 'God, Thou art great' (Spohr); 'The Rebel Maid.'

WEST MIDDLESEX MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Stanley Smallman).—Concert version of 'Carmen'; 'Elijah.'

WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—'God so loved the world' (Bach); 'The Seasons'; 'The Song of Hiawatha'; 'Judas Maccabæus.'

WIMBLEDON (1914) CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman Askew).—'The Song of Hiawatha'; miscellaneous.

WIMBLEDON CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Wilment Bates).—'Tom Jones'; 'Olivet to Calvary.'

CONCERTS IN THE PROVINCES

ALYTH Choral Union: 'The Jolly Beggars' (Smieton).

AYR Choral Union (Mr. Matthew Morton): 'Elijah.'

BANSTEAD Musical Society (Mr. Graham S. Rider): 'Three Choral Hymns' (Vaughan Williams), part of the 'St. Matthew' Passion, and other music for the Leith Hill Festival.

BEDFORD Musical Society (Mr. H. J. Colson): Brahms's 'Requiem'; 'The Pilgrim's Progress' (Bantock); 'Hymn of Praise.'

BEER Choral Union (Mr. Arthur Billingsley): 'A Princess of Kensington'; 'Elijah.'

BIRMINGHAM Festival Choral Society (Dr. Adrian Boult): Mozart's 'Requiem'; 'Sing ye to the Lord'; 'Christ in the Universe' (Walford Davies); 'The Damnation of Faust'; 'The Messiah.'

BRADFORD.—

Bradford Festival Choral Society (Dr. Malcolm Sargent): 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure'; 'Songs of the Fleet'; 'From the Bavarian Highlands'; 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (Schubert); 'The Messiah'; 'The Damnation of Faust.'

Bradford Old Choral Society (Mr. Wilfrid Knight): Bliss's 'Pastoral'; 'Peasant Cantata'; 'The Messiah'; 'Aida.'

Bradford Philharmonic Concerts: Twelve Sunday concerts, six by the Bradford Philharmonic Orchestra under Mr. Keith Douglas, two by the West Riding Chamber Orchestra under Mr. Keith Douglas, one by the Leeds Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Julius Harrison.

Bradford Subscription Concerts: Six concerts, four by the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Hamilton Harty.

Eastbrook Choir (Mr. Oliver Knapton): Concert version of 'Carmen'; 'The Messiah.'

BRISTOL Opera School: 'Oberon' (November 4-9) and an opera by Mozart.

BROADSTAIRS Choral Society (Mr. F. E. Fisher): 'The Last Judgment'; 'The Death of Minnehaha.'

BROMSGROVE Music Club (Mr. R. Burnell): 'From the Bavarian Highlands'; 'The Black Knight.'

BURNLEY Clef Club: Ten meetings, including visits by a group of Hallé players under Mr. A. L. Camden, the 'Old Time Singers,' the Pirani Trio, and the Colne Orpheus Glee Union.

CAMBRIDGE University Musical Society: Six concerts, including Verdi's 'Requiem' under Dr. Rootham, a concert by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood, and a Festival of British Music during May Week (June 9-14).

CARDIFF Musical Society (Mr. Warwick Braithwaite): 'A Sea Symphony'; 'The Music-Makers'; part-songs; 'The Messiah.'

CHESHAM Choral Society (Mr. R. B. Green): Brahms's 'Requiem'; miscellaneous concert.

CHESLYN HAY Madrigal Society (Mr. Arnold S. Hawkins): 'Elijah'; 'King Olaf.'

CREWE Philharmonic Society (Mr. R. A. Taylor): 'Elijah.'

DERBY Co-operative Choral Society (Mr. Frederick J. Stevenson): Concert version of 'Carmen' (arr., Besly); Brahms's 'Requiem.'

DISS Choral Society (Mr. W. H. Aldrich): 'Les Cloches de Corneville'; 'The Messiah.' The Society is about to celebrate its centenary.

DOVER Choral Union (Mr. H. J. Taylor): 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry); 'The Revenge'; selections from 'The Messiah' and other oratorios; 'Carmen.'

GALASHIELS Choral Society (Mr. Robert Barrow): 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Hiawatha's Departure'; 'The Messiah.'

GLASGOW Bach Society: Two chamber concerts; three of the Cantatas; 'St. Matthew' Passion. The choir is conducted by Mr. Henry Havergal, in succession to Mr. F. H. Bisset.

GODSTONE Choral Society (Mr. Cyril V. Jenkin): 'Songs of the Fleet'; 'For the Fallen'; 'The Banner of St. George.'

GUILDFORD.—

Guildford Choral Society (Mr. Claud Powell): 'Wherefore now hath life' (Brahms); part-songs, &c.

Guildford Orchestral Subscription Concerts (Mr. Claud Powell): A recital by Jean Sterling Mackinlay; concert by the string section, including Schönberg's 'Verklärte Nacht'; concert by the 'Mozart Section,' including Beethoven's eighth Symphony and the second 'Brandenburg' Concerto.

HASTINGS.—
Hastings Madrigal Society (Mr. Reginald E. Groves): Concert version of 'Faust'; 'The Messiah'; 'Judas Maccabæus.'
Hastings Philharmonic Society (Mr. Val Marriott): Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony; Haydn's fifth Symphony (in D).

HARTLEPOOLS Symphony Orchestra (Mr. Arthur F. Milner, in succession to Mr. J. F. Chalmers Park): Two concerts—Haydn's fifteenth Symphony (in B flat), Mozart's fourth Violin Concerto (in D), 'Four Northumbrian Folk-tunes' (Milner), &c.; Dunhill's 'Chiddingfold Suite,' Schubert's fifth Symphony, Beethoven's second Pianoforte Concerto, Rowley's 'English Dance Suite,' &c.

HERNE BAY Choral Society (Mr. A. A. Hodgkison): 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; part of 'The Messiah'; part of 'St. Paul'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

HUCKNALL Philharmonic Society (Mr. Henry Dobson): 'Semele.'

HULL Choral Union (Mr. Norman Strafford): 'Spring' and 'Summer,' from 'The Seasons'; 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean'; 'The Messiah'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin'; 'Songs of the Fleet.' This Society now embodies both the old Harmonic Society and the Vocal Society, which Sir Henry Coward conducted until his retirement at the end of last season.

INVERNESS Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. L. J. Owen): Selections from operas; Scottish part-songs; 'Solomon.'

IPSWICH.—
Ipswich Choral Society (Mr. G. C. Gray): 'Caractacus.'
Ipswich Bach Choir (Mr. G. C. Gray): 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.
Ipswich Orchestral Society (Mr. Edgar R. Wilby): 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture; Haydn's fifteenth Symphony; 'Siegfried Idyll,' &c.

JARROW Philharmonic Society (Mr. George Dodds): 'Autumn' and 'Winter,' from 'The Seasons'; 'Songs of the Sea'; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

KIDDERMINSTER Choral Society (Mr. J. Irving Glover): 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (Glover); 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (Handel); Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony; second 'Wand of Youth' Suite; 'Egmont' Overture; 'St. John' Passion.

LANCASTER Choral Society (Mr. J. W. Aldous): 'The Creation'; 'The Messiah.'

LEEDS Symphony Society (Mr. Harold Mason): Three concerts; the programmes include the 'Magic Flute' Overture, Ansell's 'Children's Suite,' Mozart's Symphony in C minor, Elgar's second 'Wand of Youth' Suite, Saint-Saëns's 'Rondo Capriccioso,' Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony, the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, and the 'Unfinished' Symphony.

LEICESTER Philharmonic Society (Sir Henry Wood): 'The Song of Hiawatha'; 'The Messiah'; 'Solomon.'

LINCOLN Musical Society (Dr. G. J. Bennett): Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter'; 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons'; Smyth's Overture to 'The Boatswain's Mate' and 'Two Interlinked French Folk-tunes.'

LIVERPOOL.—
Liverpool Welsh Choral Union (Dr. T. Hopkin Evans): 'Hymn of Praise'; 'Toward the Unknown Region'; 'The Messiah'; 'Caractacus.'
Rodewald Concert Society: Concerts by the London String Quartet, the Catterall String Quartet (four), and the Philharmonic Pianoforte Quartet.
Liverpool Repertory Opera Company (director, Mr. John Tobin): 'Cavalleria Rusticana'; 'Moon Robbers'; 'The Blue Peter'; 'Imogen's Choice'; 'La Bohême'; 'Dido and Æneas'; 'The Shepherd's Lottery'; 'The Birth of the Sun God'; 'Plain Jane.'

MAIDENHEAD Choral Society (Mr. G. Barrington Baker): 'A Dirge for Two Veterans'; 'Songs of the Sea'; Christmas music from 'The Messiah'; Brahms's 'Requiem'; madrigals.

MANCHESTER Municipal Concerts: Ten concerts, with the Hallé Orchestra, under Sir Hamilton Harty. The Hallé Chorus will sing 'Elijah' and 'Acis and Galatea.' A Christmas concert for children will be given on December 20, the other concerts being held on Monday evenings. The Manchester School Children's Choir will take part on March 17.

NANTWICH Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. R. A. Taylor): 'Carmen.'

NEWBURY Choral Society (Mr. B. Ramsey): Madrigals, part-songs, and carols; 'The Creation.'

NEWCASTLE.—
Bach Choir (Dr. W. G. Whittaker): Cantatas Nos. 30, 130, and 170; 'The Hymn of Jesus'; 'Before the paling of the stars' (Dale); three carols by Jane Joseph; new Lyric Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Armstrong Gibbs; new choral work, 'Sir Patrick Spens,' by Herbert Howells; 'Soft, soft wind' (Alfred Wall); madrigals by Tomkins.
Armstrong College Choral and Orchestral Society (Dr. Whittaker): First Act of 'Semele'; 'La Belle Dame sans merci' (Gibbs); Beethoven's seventh Symphony.
Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union (Mr. George Dodds): 'The Damnation of Faust'; 'The Kingdom'; Brahms's 'Requiem'; Bliss's 'Pastoral.'

NORWICH.—
Norwich Philharmonic Society (Dr. Heathcote Statham): Two Symphony concerts; organ recital by Dr. Statham; 'Acis and Galatea'; Wagner programme and 'Till Eulenspiegel.'
Saturday Popular Concerts in St. Andrew's Hall: Eight concerts during the autumn, one with a children's choir, one with the Municipal Chorus ('Songs of the Sea,' 'News from Whydah,' 'Song of Destiny'). At all concerts the Norwich Municipal Orchestra will play under Mr. Maddern Williams.
Norwich Choral Society (Dr. Heathcote Statham): 'Acis and Galatea'; Purcell's Te Deum; Wagner choruses; carols at the Cathedral.

OXFORD.—
Eglesfield Musical Society: 'A Sea Symphony.'
Oxford University Opera Club: 'The Bartered Bride.'

PANTEG Choral Society (Mr. G. P. Evans): 'Elijah.'

PORTSMOUTH North End Choral Society (Mr. Ernest C. Birch): Wagner excerpts and miscellaneous; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

READING Philharmonic Society (Mr. P. R. Scrivener): 'The Challenge of Thor,' 'The Snow,' and 'Spanish Serenade' (Elgar).

ROCHDALE Philharmonic Orchestral and Choral Society (Mr. F. Leach): Fantasia on 'Mignon' and miscellaneous; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'The Messiah.'

ST. ALBAN'S Bach Choir (Mr. W. L. Luttmann): 'Let all mortal flesh' (Bairstow); 'O praise the Lord' (Byrd); 'Lord, Thou hast been our Refuge' (Vaughan Williams); Bach's Magnificat.

ST. AUSTELL Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. Brennard Smith): Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Song of Hiawatha'; 'Songs of the Sea'; Haydn's Passion Music.

SALISBURY Musical Society (Dr. W. G. Alcock): Christmas Oratorio.

SELKIRK Choral Society (Mr. Robert Barrow): 'The Messiah.' (This is the Society's first season.)

SHEFFIELD Musical Union (Sir Henry Coward): 'King Saul'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Song of Hiawatha.'

SOUTHPORT Orchestral Society (Mr. J. E. Matthews): Three concerts, the chief works being Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (Orloff), Dvorák's fourth Symphony; a new Overture, 'Neil Gow,' by Gibson, Brahms's second Symphony, Brahms's Violin Concerto (Melsa), the third 'Leonora' Overture.

STOCKPORT Vocal Union (Dr. Thomas Keighley): 'Aida'; Bach's Magnificat; 'The Messiah'; 'Tales of Hoffmann'; 'Elijah.'

SUNDERLAND Philharmonic Society (Mr. R. T. Jarman): Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Song of Hiawatha'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; Gloria from Schubert's Mass in A flat; Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm; 'Elijah.'

TAMWORTH Choral Society (Mr. H. Rose); Concert version of 'Martha'; selection from 'The Messiah'; 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons.'

TONBRIDGE Choral Society (Mr. Richard H. Kay): 'Bide with us' and 'A Stronghold sure'; Holst's Two Psalms; Franck's Psalm 150.

WALSALL Philharmonic Society (Mr. Ambrose Porter): 'Song of Destiny'; 'Toward the Unknown Region'; 'Now shall the grace'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Acis and Galatea'; 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons.'

YEOVIL Choral Society (Mr. F. G. Risdon): Wagner concert; 'The Last Judgment'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

IRELAND

LONDONDERRY Philharmonic Society (Mr. A. J. Cunningham): 'The Messiah.'

London Concerts

DELIUS FESTIVAL

There was never any doubt as to the interest roused by this series of concerts. The first (Queen's Hall, October 12) opened with a packed audience that was thickly dotted with distinguished musicians; and there was the unmistakable something in the air that marks an 'event.' The programme consisted of 'Brigg Fair,' a poem for voice and orchestra, 'A Late Lark' (first performance), the second Dance Rhapsody, 'Sea Drift,' 'In a Summer Garden,' and a liberal extract from Act 5 of 'A Village Romeo and Juliet.' Sir Thomas Beecham conducted what was described in the programme as 'a specially selected orchestra,' and the playing reached the standard that is hardly likely to be excelled, even in a season that promises us visits from the Berlin Philharmonic and the New York Symphony Orchestras.

The only adverse criticism that suggests itself is in regard to 'Sea Drift.' The London Select Choir proved to be too small a body for a work which, despite its generally subdued character, calls for several unmistakable climaxes; and Sir Thomas Beecham might have kept the orchestra down a trifle more in some of the quieter passages of the solo—beautifully sung by Mr. Dennis Noble. The extracts from 'A Village Romeo and Juliet' made the best of propaganda for the performance of the opera promised by Sir Thomas Beecham for next year. The soloists here were Miss Maunder and Mr. Heddle Nash, the latter singing also in 'A Late Lark.' The composer was present in a wheeled chair in the circle, and the audience gave him a prolonged ovation. It was an affecting climax to a concert that had been on a high emotional plane throughout. H. G.

The second concert was devoted to some of the smaller works of Delius, especially the songs, of which a score were sung at Æolian Hall on Wednesday, October 16, by Miss Olga Haley, Mr. John Goss, and Mr. John Armstrong.

Delius has shown in the small orchestral pieces, also played on this occasion, 'The First Cuckoo,' 'A Song before Sunrise,' 'Summer Night on the River,' that he is, like Brahms, a miniaturist as well as a composer of works of more profound significance in forms of wider sweep. His harmonic mode of thought does not lend itself to the creation of strophic melodies, nor does he use the methods of word-painting. He does, however, distil out the essence of the poem into his pianoforte parts with the voice declaiming in an expressive recitative. The earlier songs, however, are much nearer to the ordinary conception of a song, and some of them ought by now to have gained a wide popularity: 'Le ciel est par-dessus le toit,' written in 1895, is almost a singer's song, while 'Spielmann,' written in 1890, would be effective on any concert platform. Of the more modern and more characteristic songs, 'I-Brasil' has a most magical ending such as only Delius could have conceived. Mr. Howard-Jones at the pianoforte, by judicious discrimination of emphasis between the main harmonic progressions and the decorative passing chords, understood how Delius's involved harmonic writing can be made clear to those unfamiliar with his song idiom.

Miss Beatrice Harrison played the 'Cello Sonata with her accustomed eloquence, but failed to convince us that Delius works very effectively in chamber music. The pianoforte pieces played by Mr. Howard-Jones, though very slight, on the other hand showed perfect balance between form and content. The Dance, written for harpsichord, incidentally is obviously true pianoforte music—not in the least suitable for so unkaleidoscopic an instrument as the harpsichord. The new work for string orchestra—new though written in 1915—revealed Delius in his lighter and less contemplative mood; the Air and Dance is short and jolly, light music of the best kind, the smallest of the four orchestral miniatures he has written. F. H.

The third concert (Queen's Hall, October 18) gave us a good deal that was unfamiliar, including two first performances: 'Cynara,' a setting of a poem by Ernest Dowson for baritone solo and orchestra; 'Arabesk,' a poem by the Dane, Jacobsen, set for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra; and the Orchestral Ballad 'Eventyr,' which had apparently been heard here only once before. There was much in these works, especially in the somewhat forbidding 'Arabesk,' that is not characteristic of the composer as we have learned to know him. Even the Pianoforte Concerto, which was apparently the most popular item of the concert, contains more than one touch of the obvious that comes surprisingly from Delius. The soloists were John Goss and Evlyn Howard-Jones. The London Select Choir was augmented for the occasion by members of the Royal College Choir and the B.B.C. National Chorus, with the result that the choral singing (especially in 'Appalachia,' with which the concert concluded) showed an improvement on that of the first concert. The orchestra was that newly formed by the B.B.C. It has some distinguished leaders, including Mr. Arthur Catterall, and showed itself to be a fine body, fore and aft. The remaining concerts of the Festival occur too late for notice in this number. H. G.

PROMENADE CONCERTS: NOVELTIES

As it happens, all the novelties of any importance given during the last weeks of the Promenade season were of home growth. An optimist could derive some satisfaction from the small as well as the large audiences who attended the concerts of British music every Thursday; it is good to see British music appreciated, but no less good to find that it is not appreciated merely because it is British. There had to be at least one work of acknowledged excellence in the programme to fill the house comfortably.

On September 19 there was no outstanding event and no large crowd. Those who came seemed most interested in Dame Ethel Smyth's 'Three Moods of the Sea' for baritone and orchestra, conducted by the composer, and most sensitively sung by Mr. Herbert Heyner. The defect in these settings of three poems by Arthur Symons is that in the second, 'Before the Squall,' the words are composed twice over. It is as if Dame Ethel Smyth had not found verses enough to fill the big-shaped musical movement they inspired; but since form is not as a rule her strength, it was not disagreeable to see it for once get the better of her material. For the rest, there is much fine, imaginative music in these songs.

The Suite from Lord Berners's Ballet, 'The Triumph of Neptune,' was found to suffer a good deal from its separation from Sacheverell Sitwell's amusing Victorian pantomime scenario. To see the fun of this score one must know what it is so funny about. Its brilliancy remained, though impaired by an indifferent performance; its point was blunted. Bantock, Elgar, and Holbrooke, followed by Edgar Bainton's 'Fantasia Concerto' for pianoforte and orchestra, which was not new to Promenaders, hardly even to those who heard it for the first time, completed the first part of the programme. Mr. Bainton played most sympathetically.

The novelty on September 26 was Victor Hely-Hutchinson's 'Carol Symphony,' a composition on a large scale, and with some thematic organization, yet giving the impression of a suite rather than a symphony. It is music spun agreeably round excellent material whose associations, however, only too readily hold out temptations to fall into mere picturesqueness. Mr. Hutchinson avoids this in the first movement by rather desperately building on the rocky foundation of Bach's embellished chorales, but later he succumbs to influences which do not help him much to withstand the besetting danger. This composer is resourceful, lucid, effective, very respectably conservative and complaisant to a not too sophisticated audience. An English Humperdinck, shall we say? As a personal utterance his work suffered perhaps unduly from its vicinity to Vaughan Williams's infinitely more distinctive 'Concerto Accademico,' the crack work of the evening, in which Miss Jelly d'Aranyi played the solo violin part with something just a shade below her usual form; in other words, very well.

On the following Saturday Arthur Bliss's 'Hymn to Apollo' was heard for the second time in London. He conducted it with skill and authority. There is still something in it that seems reluctant to reveal itself. Perhaps some idea set up in one's mind by the title is at odds with the composer's actual intention; one sees scenic and choreographic displays while feeling sure that the work ought to be perceived simply as a musical design without any other significance than that inherent in form made audible. Whatever gets into the way of complete understanding and enjoyment repeated hearings are almost sure to remove, and what is certain already is that such hearings will be welcome. Vitality of invention and originality of realisation are at once perceived in this work.

The concert on October 3 brought no less than three English novelties. The success of the Viola Concerto by William Walton, the solo part of which was played by no other than Paul Hindemith, might almost be said to have amounted to a sensation, were it not that the music made an impression, not a mere hit. It is one of the most remarkable of recent compositions, British or otherwise, the more so because it does not draw attention to itself by anything but sheer quality. This young composer now seems to go his own way completely unmoved by any dictates but those of his obviously profound musical nature. Under the polished surface of his music there is a passion that saves it from any suspicion of slickness. He indulges in no studied oddity and achieves an exquisite clarity of style by stating quite simply what he has to say. Only an artist who has fundamentally good things to express can afford to disregard both precedent and fashion so utterly. Mr. Walton has the naïve arrogance of genius: let it serve him whenever an influence of any sort comes near him, and he is sure to cut a figure in the whole world of music before long.

The three new pieces by Arnold Bax, Overture, Elegy, and Rondo, dispelled whatever fears one may lately have had of his writing himself into a groove. It may be because he has decided to leave the sonata form alone for a while that he found something as unexpected to say as his strong individuality will let him; at any rate, these pieces have a new freshness added to the old mastery. The orchestration, which has a kind of rich, tawny quality, is not merely applied, but actually part of the musical stuff.

A kind of countryside anthology of five poems by various authors, set for soprano and orchestra by Herbert Howells and called 'In Green Ways,' was not very convincing, in spite of Miss Dorothy Silk's persuasive singing. The music is written with an evident sincerity that lets lovely thoughts emerge ever and again, but the emotion seems to be scattered in the attempt to give it shape. The 'Rhythmic Dance' by Eugène Goossens, originally written for pianola, seems the more mechanical in its orchestral version because here it has no excuse for being so.

Sir Henry Wood resigned the baton to most of these composers, with unequal results, but some of the works he conducted himself with his unvarying devotion to the interests of others.

E. B.

B.B.C. MODERN CHAMBER CONCERT

A new series of the esoteric sessions of contemporary chamber music organized by the British Broadcasting Corporation started at the Arts Theatre Club on October 7. Even the families most intent on getting their annual half-guinea's worth out of the wireless programmes probably shut off their loud-speakers whenever one of these subversive concerts is toward; at any rate, one can easily imagine all this new music oscillating up and down the country disconsolately in search of an unwary British home. But a few people are always glad to catch these more or less experimental performances at the source, and it is much to be hoped that the B.B.C. will never tire of, or let the indignant householder dissuade them from, this little extravagance.

The first programme consisted, on the instrumental side, entirely of works by Paul Hindemith, who appeared himself as violist. He played, with that capital pianist, Miss Emma Lübbecke-Job, the Sonata for viola and pianoforte, Op. 11, No. 4, and the 'Little Sonata' for viola d'amore and pianoforte, Op. 25, No. 2. At the end the two artists were joined by Mr. Frederick Waterhouse in the Trio for viola, heckelphone, and pianoforte. One was at once struck by the curious inconsistency of a composer who claims to write music frankly intended for the public at large as much as for the small confraternity of professional specialists, and who yet turns to instruments one of which is obsolete and the other unacknowledged. The viola d'amore can do a few things the ordinary viola cannot do in the way of chord playing, but the advantage is not so great and its tone not so wonderful as to ensure its revival. As for Heckel's invention, if the saxophone is like a fat, puling baby, the heckelphone is like its lean, querulous maiden aunt, and one hardly knows which is the more insufferable of the two. Mr. Waterhouse plays the instrument as if it were the object of his exclusive devotion, but even he cannot keep us from thinking how much more worthy its noble sister, the oboe, is of an artist's worship.

It is hard to find anything new to say about Hindemith's chamber music, for it goes on showing much the same characteristics it had at the beginning, including a remarkable technical accomplishment. Perhaps I may be allowed to quote what the London critic of the Manchester Guardian, whose initials happen to be identical with my own, said about the composer after a hearing of these three works:

> 'He is all for modern life, for the big city, bustling, matter-of-fact, hard-hearted and clear-headed. In music that drives ahead and ploughs its way through the thick and thin of his thorny invention and over the crazy pavement of his counterpoint, he is nearly always exhilarating. His polyphony may sound as if it were fitted together anyhow, but it is not so, for one listens with a definite pleasure to these clashing combinations, and with a kind of trepidation lest they should go even more wrong than they already are, which proves that in a way they are right. It is in his slow movements that Hindemith's music does go wrong. They affect lyricism, but cannot achieve a moment's oblivion of the actual modern world as the composer in his forced optimism sees it. The obverse he seeks to express is an abyss of pessimism. Hindemith cannot forget himself and sing a tranquil song in the open air, or even of the open air; he looks for peace in the hidden places of the city, and so generally finds himself moping in the slums. His slow music is the music of misery.'

Madame Claire Croiza sang two groups of French songs with her inimitable artistry, and added to the charming intimacy of these concerts by taking us into her confidence about the works she was asked to perform. After Darius Milhaud's acidulated 'Soirées de Pétrograde' her gesture said as plainly as possible: 'There, whether you and I like it or not, I have given you exactly what I think the composer wants. If this song-cycle seems to you too cynical, too unpleasant, too flippant, it is not my fault, and he probably would not have it otherwise.' But Debussy's 'Chansons de Bilitis' and three songs by Roussel she nursed and caressed so lovingly that one could not help submitting, though one hardly knew whether it was more to the music or the interpreter. But one was not prepared to believe that Roussel is quite as important, regarded purely as a musician, as he is exquisite as a man of taste and discretion. E. B.

SOUTH PLACE CONCERTS

The opening of the forty-fourth season of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts on the first Sunday in October saw this famous Society returned from its wanderings in Blackfriars to a new permanent home at Conway Hall, Red Lion Square, W.C.1. The new building has a commodious vestibule and a very good hall—good both for seeing and hearing, and for physical comfort. Towards the building fund three concerts were given as a donation by the Brosa String Quartet during the month of October. At the first, on October 9, there was a large audience to hear this excellent combination, who continue to play with smooth (but not oily) tone, precise (but not mechanical) ensemble, and polished (but not superficial) style. Mr. Solomon also contributed a share to the programme—some deliciously played small pieces of Brahms and Schumann and the pianoforte part in Dvorák's Quintet in A.

A quartet, adapted from a consort of viols, by Matthew Locke, was played for the first time in this arrangement given to it by Peter Warlock. It has four movements of the form of the old-fashioned suite, and shows the characteristically English qualities of dignity and freshness inherited from the Elizabethans, but capable of longer flights without the too inevitable cadences of the older masters. Though transitional in style, it is still worth inclusion as the lighter number in a quartet programme.

At the two subsequent concerts, Mr. Mark Hambourg and Miss Harriet Cohen gave their services. F. H.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

Every season one goes to the concerts of the Royal Choral Society with a greater interest. When the present season began with 'Elijah,' on October 10, there was a new satisfaction in the air, for one had to sacrifice a Thursday evening, which is of no great moment, instead of a Saturday afternoon, which is of value. The choir itself was affected by the change, or by Dr. Malcolm Sargent's lively persuasions, or by both, for its singing was more than ever alert and expressive. This would now take rank as a really good choir if it could remove the coating of cotton-wool from its tone—which would probably involve a too impoverishing comb-out of the membership. As it is, we can be thankful that the largest London choir does its work with intelligence. The cast of principals included three known singers: Miss Stiles-Allen and Mr. Barrington Hooper, both a bit too self-conscious in style, and Mr. Horace Stevens, more austere than ever. His Elijah has a nobility which nobody shall say that the music denies. Miss Gladys Ripley, the contralto, was a newcomer. Her voice is of beautiful quality, its production is finely controlled, and her style has the poise that is rapidly becoming a lost art. M.

BACH CANTATA CLUB

The last ordinary meeting of the Bach Cantata Club at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on October 8 was instructive in a general way rather than distinguished from an artistic point of view, though the style of singing the big motets by a small choir with madrigalian rather than oratorio-like methods was a pleasure as well as an object-lesson. The two Motets sung under Mr. Kennedy Scott's direction were 'Komm, Jesu, komm' and 'Singet dem Herrn.' The way in which anything like attack was avoided in the first of these was admirable, and brought out the tenderness of the music. The remainder of the programme consisted of hymns composed or harmonized by Bach, and organ solos by Mr. G. D. Cunningham, who played three Chorale Preludes and the 'Wedge' Prelude and Fugue with deliberately logical and rather inflexible registration. F. H.

LONDON CONCERT ORCHESTRA

In the preface added to the programme of the London Concert Orchestra, claims were made which the performance did little to substantiate. It is good to know that this organization is based on sound ideas as regards training, and that no player will be allowed to send a deputy. But it will never do to put our whole trust in reforms the value of which can be—and have been—exaggerated. It is obvious that the deputy system has its drawbacks; on the other hand, it is unsafe to dogmatise. In some orchestras there are players who should only be admitted on the strict understanding that they are represented by deputy! The London Concert Orchestra gave us some lively performances at Æolian Hall, but the first concert of a new orchestra can never show the best that is in the players. Some time must pass before the full value of the training is apparent. But the concert (also remarkable for an exceedingly fine reading of a Mozart Concerto by Mr. Albert Sammons) promised nothing but good. F. B.

LIONEL TERTIS

Lionel Tertis is the prince of viola players, and a recital by him is an occasion of exceptional interest, for Tertis is (as far as the present generation is concerned) the first 'that ever burst' into the viola key—as a soloist. Thus we get the certainty of a great performance and the probability of hearing music which we never heard before. On October 3, the programme was all that a reasonable man could wish, and included a very beautiful Sonata by Arnold Bax—the composer played the pianoforte part—music of special interest, like the Fantasia for half a dozen violas by B. J. Dale, and 'arrangements.' The performances were above praise. F. B.

THE HART HOUSE QUARTET

This Quartet, all the way from Toronto, opened its English tour at Wigmore Hall on October 8, playing Bartók's Op. 7, No. 1, Beethoven's Op. 135, and the Debussy. They made the Bartók extraordinarily clear; if they were unable to convert us to its somewhat diffuse structure, the blame must be laid at the door of the composer. I was able to hear only a portion of the Beethoven. Critical opinion differed widely concerning their interpretation of this, so there was probably very little wrong with it. All were agreed, however, as to the players' excellent ensemble and intonation. I heard them subsequently broadcast the Franck and Elgar Quartets, when the same virtues were again evident. They were, however, inclined to drag the slow parts in the Franck, e.g., the Fughetta in the first movement and portions of the Andante. Of their playing of the Elgar, the best testimony is the fact that they made me enjoy the work more than ever before. Their tour should be a great success. G.

WEDNESDAY EVENING CONCERTS

Unheralded by sentimental stories or blatant advertisement, the 'Wednesday Evening Concerts' were established on October 9, when a first concert was given at Wigmore Hall. If the standard of that concert is maintained, this organization will represent all that is best in London music. It is impossible to imagine better performances than those Miss Myra Hess and Miss Isolde Menges gave of Mozart's Trio in E flat, K. 498 (with Mr. Lionel Tertis for the viola part), of Brahms's Horn Trio (with Mr. Aubrey Thinger to play the horn), or of the Franck Quintet, with Owen Pernel (second violin), Lionel Tertis (viola), and Ivor James ('cello). It often happens that musicians have to do something which is not their special vocation: a pianist may have to conduct orchestras or a worshipper of Bach may be asked to play jazz. The opposite happened at the Wednesday evening concerts, and every one seemed to be doing that which he (or she) knew best and loved best. These are chamber music players not by opportunity or expediency, but because the finest music of all attracts them more than any other style. The standard of their playing was consequently the highest possible — here or anywhere.

F. B.

MR. EGON PETRI

Mr. Egon Petri has long been recognised as a pianist of quite exceptional ability. At his recital at Wigmore Hall, on October 11, he proved that he has reached the very front rank of all. That rank is surely due to one capable of giving a performance of Beethoven's 'Hammerklavier' Sonata in B flat (Op. 106) at once so poetical in feeling and so complete in its intellectual grasp of the composer's thought. So few pianists can make this sonata intelligible or even grateful to the ear, that it is commonly regarded as a feat impossible of achievement. But now and again a pianist comes along to vindicate Beethoven and to prove that it is not his ideas or mode of expressing them which are at fault, but only the intellects and technique of those who attempt to interpret them. Busoni could convince us, and so can Mr. Schnabel, though with a less lyrical persuasiveness than Mr. Petri brings to the attack.

After the strenuous mental exercise of accompanying Mr. Petri on his exploration of one of the highest summits in music, the only thing to do was to turn to something entirely brilliant and devoid of the kind of intellectual and emotional content with which Beethoven fills every bar. Mr. Petri chose Liszt's six Paganini Studies, and played them with a virtuosity which easily beat the mere bravura pianists at their own game, and then added something quite beyond the powers of those much-advertised gentlemen—a sense of fun in the exhilaration of performing with apparent ease these almost impossible feats of prestidigitation. Mr. Petri began his recital with the four Ballades of Chopin, which gave him ample opportunity for the display of the poetical side of his temperament. But with a curious impatience he knocked down in turn every one of these delicately constructed edifices, just like a child who has grown tired of the brick tower he has carefully built up.

D. H.

WOLFI

If the sea-serpent provides a good topic for newspaper gossip in the summer, the infant prodigy serves a similar purpose when the musical season begins. The public, however, appears to be as shy of the one as of the other. No doubt there have been sea-serpents, and it is equally certain that Mozart and Liszt were youthful prodigies. But these phenomena are so very rare that scepticism is fully justified. Accordingly, there were many empty seats at the Albert Hall, in spite of the preliminary 'puffs,' when a young Russian boy, Wolfi, made his first appearance,

But Wolfi is clever enough; his tone has not the warmth that Mr. Arthur Catterall's had when he was of the same age, but it is smooth and pleasant. His technique is exceptional in 'bulk' rather than in quality. He can play the most difficult things in existence, as long as they do not demand great finish. He is quite at home in Ernst, though ill at ease in the far simpler music of Bach. All one can say of him is that, a brilliant student at present, he may in time equal the achievements of Kubelik; he may also go much further and reveal a taste and discrimination of which at present there is no trace.

F. B.

SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Madame Jeritza is a woman of genius, not for music (in that art she has many shortcomings), but—much more important in this age—for publicity. To be in the mode one should begin to write of her performance at the Albert Hall on October 13, with a description of her hair, her dress, her gestures, her bouquets—perhaps with a glancing reference to her feuds with rival singers, and her family affairs. But how tiresome a world would be in which everyone was in the fashion! Let us therefore be so eccentric as to discuss this singer as a singer.

She sang arias from several operas, a song or two by Schumann and Franck, and some paltry stuff with English words. She began with a page from Massenet's 'Herodias'—not a good choice, for her French was imperfect and it seemed to hamper her style. We heard extracts from 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' and Korngold's 'Dead City.' All this was curiously unequal singing. Madame Jeritza has a fine voice, excellently well-trained in the production of big, ringing, round high notes. But her breath control is very variable—with shapeless phrasing and slightly false intonation as the frequent result. When her breath had gone before its time the pitch wavered and flattened. This may have been due to nervousness (it was her first Albert Hall concert), but she appeared quite mistress of herself in other ways. Her performance of Schumann's 'Widmung' was in deplorable taste. She simpered; this, the audience liked.

Another operatic singer, Mr. John Brownlee, the Australian baritone, gave a concert at Æolian Hall. This young man has made a name for himself in Paris. He has a good, powerfully resonant voice, but the interest at his concert was less than it would have been if he had shown signs of imagination and musical feeling. As a matter of fact he was, no doubt, hampered by the rigidity of his method. He has learnt how to sing a good, useful mezzo-forte, but not to make fine gradations. The messa di voce is to him an unknown accomplishment. When he attempted to spin his tone on a high note he came rather near disaster once or twice. It is much to be hoped that Mr. Brownlee will learn to refine his substantial natural gifts. He has the advantage of a good platform appearance.

At the same hall we heard a Spanish tenor, Mr. Gil Valeriano, whose performance was certainly out of the way. His tone-quality was a reminder that quite near Spain, separated only by Gibraltar's narrow strait, is Morocco, where the muezzin in the minaret still calls the faithful to prayer. Mr. Valeriano was at least not throaty. He had certainly cultivated his voice, but he had cultivated it in a way that is not ours. Often this bright, forward quality of his was very telling, but one never knew when it was not going to be exaggerated into a nasal fortissimo (he could not grade his tone between mf and ff) which was almost a screech.

Miss Ada Mylchreest also gave a concert at Æolian Hall, including some songs in her native tongue, which is Manx. A little more cultivation, a little more discipline, and she would, one felt, be a highly distinguished singer. Her mezzo-soprano voice had warmth and fullness, and she also was clearly a temperamental person. She did not sing a piece as though it were a lesson, but as though it had a definite meaning for her. Inequality in her scale and something a trifle uncouth (may one say hoydenish?) in her presentation of certain pieces took the edge from one's appreciation. At some moments she was first-rate, at others mediocre—and was evidently quite unaware herself of the fact.

Miss Vyra David, who sang at Wigmore Hall on October 2, showed promise. She is in the stage when a singer mostly thinks of tone—especially in slow songs. Thinking of tone means, nearly always, deformation of words. Miss David had uncommonly full tone, which sometimes she forgot; then she gave us the sense of the words and sang thoroughly well.

A word may be permitted here about the three singers who appeared at the first of the Delius Festival concerts. The two men were remarkably good. Mr. Heddle Nash, a fine technician (this fact is not widely enough recognised), has a fault in the production of his long 'i's.' This diphthong, which is properly 'ah-ee,' he tends to produce as 'eh-ee.' The latter rendering has, I know, apologists; but they are wrong. Mr. Dennis Noble's fault was in his 'eh' words. He often attempted to thicken this vowel (presumably for the sake of weight of tone). Miss Maunder was a promising singer, at present too loose and uncontrolled, and consequently not commanding a real line. At the last of the Promenade concerts a young bass-baritone, Mr. John Morel, interested the listener with a vivacious and resonant performance of the 'Largo' from Rossini's 'Barber.'

Madame Jeanne Dusseau, a Canadian soprano, distinguished herself at Wigmore Hall in an interesting programme containing some Medtner. We suspected her of forcing some of her high notes, but apart from this she sang in a thorough, competent way, and she had taken the trouble to learn her songs well. C.

Concerts in the Suburbs

A Festival of music and drama was held at Battersea Town Hall on October 6-10. It was set on foot by the Public Amenities Committee of the Borough Council, and a leading part was played by Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, musical director to the Borough. On the Sunday evening a Wagner evening was provided under the direction of Mr. Charles Woodhouse. The People's Concert Society co-operated on the Monday, with a choir conducted by Mrs. E. M. Partridge. On the Tuesday, an orchestral concert was given to an audience of school children, and the Holywell Players, in connection with the British Drama League, gave an evening of plays. The Battersea Men's and Women's Institute gave varied entertainments, and the Festival concluded with the film of Capt. Scott's Antarctic expedition. The attendances during the week totalled five thousand.

The first concert of the series organized by the Educational Department of the Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society took place at Tooting on October 5, the programme being provided by the Chelsea Singers and Mr. Reginald Paul. The season's programme includes performances of 'Hiawatha,' 'The Beggar's Opera,' and excerpts from grand opera.

A recital of harpsichord music was given at Harrow on October 10 by Madame Adelaide Lambe, who, in addition to playing solos, accompanied old songs on the harpsichord and joined four string players in Purcell's Suite in C and two Sonatas by Corelli.

Three lecture-concerts will be given at King's College, London, on November 14 ('Handel's Songs,' by Prof. Walter Ford, with illustrations by Mr. Owen Bryngwyn), November 21 ('String Music,' by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, assisted by the Westminster String Quartet), and November 28 ('The Story of Descant,' by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, with the League of Arts Choir). The hour is 5.30, and admission is free.

The eighteenth annual general meeting of the Society of Women Musicians will take place on November 23, at 3 p.m. (members only). Members and guests will take tea at 4.30, after which Mrs. Rosa Newmarch will give her presidential address. Particulars of the Society from the hon. secretary, 74, Grosvenor Street, W.1.

THE COVENT GARDEN OPERA COMPANY

'TURANDOT' AT HALIFAX

The English company formed by the Covent Garden Opera Syndicate to take the place of the British National Opera Company began its provincial tour at Halifax last month. During the week it performed to large houses a variety of works, among which 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Lohengrin,' 'La Bohême,' and 'Turandot' proved especial favourites. Of these, Puccini's last opera calls for special mention, as this was its first performance in English. The translation, by R. H. Elkin, reads well, is reasonably faithful to the notation of the original, and is as good to sing as any English version of an Italian opera can be. Only once did the text give rise to a smile—when the haughty Princess, unveiled by Calaf, retorts in the best transpontine manner, 'Unhand me! How dare you!' But Turandot should rhyme not with 'dot' but with 'oh!'

The production and scenery were the same as that familiar to Covent Garden audiences, and in view of the difficulty of modifying the sets to suit the smaller stage of a provincial theatre, the performance went off remarkably well. It would have been better, perhaps, in the second Act to sacrifice the appearance of a large crowd in the Palace to practical convenience. As it was, those who arrived last on the scene found it difficult to get to their appointed places, and the pageantry was rather spoilt. The lighting was not good, but that was, I believe, due to some difficulty with the plant owing to the water famine.

Among the principals, Miss Odette de Foras far surpassed expectation in the title-part. Her voice was not quite steady, but she got the icy tone into it which is essential to the character, and the volume was adequate except at the big climaxes. Histrionically her performance was quite the best I have seen. The hieratic pose, the relentless cruelty, and above all, the cold menace of the Princess, as she bent over the cowering stranger in the scene of the enigmas, were finely realised.

The part of Calaf, though dramatically without much character, is musically very important, because Puccini has laid upon the tenor the responsibility of capping nearly all the climaxes. Mr. Francis Russell was hardly equal to the task. He sang, moreover, in that queer, hybrid operatic patois which is neither King's nor any other man's English off the stage. It is fortunately becoming rarer, and, one hopes, will soon be heard no more.

Miss Noel Eadie played the part of Lui charmingly, but again the voice was not quite big enough for the part. The three Masks (Messrs. William Michael, Octave Dua, and Parry Jones) were excellent, especially in their ensemble work, but one could not help noticing how that accomplished Italian acted the other two off the stage most of the time—not by obtruding himself, but simply because his movements were always better controlled and more significant. Mr. Arthur Fear, who gave, for so young a man, a remarkably good performance as Hans Sachs on the first evening of the week, sang the part of Timur with a real appreciation of English as a language for song.

The chorus, which plays an important part in the musical scheme of the opera and dramatically occupies something like the position of Chorus in a Greek tragedy, was lively, if not always quite in tune nor always on the beat. The performance was conducted by Mr. Barbirolli. D. H.

'THE DUKE OF MILAN'

The four performances of this opera given at the Grand Theatre, Blackburn, on October 3-5, were made possible by a guarantee fund raised by the Mayor of Blackburn, Mr. J. A. Ormerod. (Other Mayors please copy!) The libretto is an adaptation of 'The Tempest.' The music was composed by Dr. Herman Brearley, and a large, keen, and capable company put up the performance. Prospero was Mr. Joseph Farrington, who is a specialist in the part, for he played it in Nicholas Gatty's 'Tempest.' It is no wonder that so many composers seize on this libretto, for it is as rich in objective suggestions as 'The Ring' itself. It must be great fun writing themes and passages for shipwreck, 'sweet airs that give delight and hurt not' and all the echoing magic of the island, for humans and sub-humans, with some ancient and fish-like music for Caliban; and, of course, the well-known songs. Here Dr. Brearley was in happy vein, his 'Full Fathom Five' being particularly charming. He entered into the Leitmotif game with enthusiasm, and was ingenious in giving his themes external fitness. But what of the internal—of the music that shall not merely clothe Prospero and Ariel and Ferdinand and Miranda, but shall be their incarnation? A stiff task for a genius, superhuman for mere skill and talent and invention. As far as these could take him Dr. Brearley went bravely and well, and his opera did him credit.

C. F. C.

Music in the Provinces

BATH.—Mr. Edward Dunn, the newly-appointed conductor of the Pump Room Orchestra, gave his first concert on October 3 before a crowded audience. Not only the conductor but the orchestra have been newly engaged.

BIRMINGHAM.—The City Orchestra's season opened at the West End Cinema on October 6, when Dr. Boult conducted Brahms's second Symphony. Elgar's 'In the South' was played at the second concert. The first Symphony Concert at the Town Hall occurred on October 10, the programme including Schumann's Symphony in E flat, Bax's 'November Woods,' and Dvorák's Violin Concerto, played by Miss Isolde Menges.

—At the first of the Philharmonic Mid-day Concerts, on October 1, Miss Eda Kersey and Mr. Tom Bromley played the newly-discovered Violin and Pianoforte Sonata by Bach. The third 'Rasoumovsky' Quartet was played at the next of these concerts by the Philharmonic Quartet, led by Mr. Paul Beard.——Mr. Frank Mullings filled the hall for the first 'celebrity' concert.——At Queen's College, on September 30, Mr. Albert Sammons and Mrs. Dora Phillips played three violin and pianoforte sonatas: Beethoven (Op. 30, No. 2), Delius (in C), and Elgar.——Armstrong Gibbs's Quartet in E, Op. 16, No. 3, was played by the Catterall Quartet for the Birmingham Chamber Concert Society.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The programme of the first of the Winter Symphony Concerts, given under Sir Dan Godfrey, on October 10, included Brahms's first Symphony and Joachim's 'Hungarian' Violin Concerto with Mr. Zacharewitsch as soloist.

BRADFORD.—Respighi's 'Concerto Gregoriano' was played by Miss Adela Fachiri at the Bradford Philharmonic Concert given under Mr. Keith Douglas on Sunday, September 29.——Bliss's 'Rout' was performed at the Philharmonic Concert on October 13; Miss Hilda Atkinson not only sang the soprano solo, but played the harp part. The programme included Harrison's 'Prelude Music' for harp and strings, Mozart's thirty-fourth Symphony (in C), Ravel's 'Le Tombeau de Couperin,' and Handel's Overture to 'Siroë.' The players were the West Riding Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Keith Douglas.

BRIGHTON.—Rebecca Clarke's Pianoforte Trio was played at the opening meeting of the Sussex Women Musicians' Club, on October 5.——Madame Melba sang in aid of charity at the Hippodrome on the same evening.

BRISTOL.—'The Flying Dutchman' was performed by the Carl Rosa Opera Company during a week at the Prince's Theatre, October 7-12.——Among the early visitors of the season were Heddle Nash, Jeritza, and Wolfi.——Mr. A. S. Warrell has been appointed conductor of the Royal Orpheus Glee Society on the retirement of Mr. Riseley.

BUXTON.—The works performed under the direction of Mr. Horace Fellowes during the season that has just closed included the first, second, third, fourth, seventh, and eighth Symphonies of Beethoven, three by Mozart, several by Haydn, Tchaikovsky's fifth and sixth, the 'New World,' two by Schubert, Brahms's second, Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique,' the 'Enigma' Variations. The programmes also included Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet and the Septet for trumpet and strings by Saint-Saëns.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Philharmonic Society, now conducted by Mr. Dennis-Jones, Precentor of Trinity, is forming a choral society, the works to be studied being 'The Messiah,' 'The Song of Miriam,' and part-songs.

CLIFTON.—At the Victoria Rooms, on October 10, the London String Quartet played Hindemith's Quartet in F, Op. 10.

COVENTRY.—Over forty members have been enrolled in the new Harold Rhodes Orchestral Society. The orchestra will undertake concerts of its own, and will assist in those of the Philharmonic Society, of which Dr. Rhodes is also the conductor.

DEVIZES.—At the concert given by the Devizes Philharmonic Society, on October 9, Mr. Plunket Greene gave a recital of Stanford's songs and the choir sang 'Phaudrig Crohoore' under the direction of Mr. F. V. Weaver.

HARROGATE.—The last few programmes of the season given by the Municipal Orchestra under Mr. Cameron included Paderewski's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor (played by Mr. Gordon Bryan), Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (Miss Marion Keighley Snowdon), Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony, Brahms's Violin Concerto (Miss Eda Kersey), Dvorák's fourth Symphony and Rachmaninov's D minor Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Dorothy Manley).

LEEDS.—The series of chamber music recitals at the University was re-opened on October 11, when Mr. Mortimer (clarinet), Miss Kathleen Moorhouse ('cello), and Mr. Eric Fogg (pianist) played Trios by Beethoven and Brahms.

LIVERPOOL.—The season was opened by Jeritza and Wolfi on October 3.——At the opening concert of the Philharmonic Society, on October 8, Sir Henry Wood conducted Boyce's Symphony in B flat, 'En Saga,' Liszt's second Pianoforte Concerto (Mr. Robert Casadesus), Saint-Saëns's third Symphony, Fauré's Ballade in F sharp, and the Bach-Elgar Fugue.——The London String Quartet played the second 'Rasoumovsky,' Debussy, and Brahms (Op. 51, No. 1) at the opening Rodewald concert.——Mr. Frank Mullings sang at the first Vickers concert on October 12, after having sung in opera at Manchester in the afternoon.

MANCHESTER.—An opera Festival held during the week of October 7-12 with well-known principals and Mr. Julius Harrison as conductor resulted in a payment of £700 to Manchester and Salford medical charities. A new opera by Mr. Walter Mudie, 'The Flame of Love,' was performed twice.——The Municipal Concert season opened on October 14 with a Wagner programme under Sir Hamilton Harty.——Jeritza and Wolfi included Manchester in their tour on October 5.——Recitals have been given by Mr. Maurice Cole, Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Muriel Robinson, Miss Orrea Pernel, Miss Meryl Myles Mitchell, Mr. Niedzielski, and, with a Brahms programme, Miss Elsa Addams and Mr. Edwin Hirst (singers), Mr. Harry Ellis (pianist).

NEWCASTLE.—A Symphony Concert was given at the Exhibition on September 21, under the direction of Capt. Amers. The works played included Beethoven's seventh Symphony, the 'Cockaigne' Overture, Holst's 'Beni Mora,' and Liszt's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, played by Mr. Vincent Caygill. Capt. Amers gave a concert-lecture on the orchestra to a large audience of school children on October 14.——Berlioz's 'Faust' was given by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union at the Exhibition on October 4.

NORWICH.—The season of municipal concerts under Mr. Maddern Williams opened on October 12 with the 'Egmont' Overture, the 'Boutique Fantasque' Suite, and Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance' as the chief items.——A Purcell evening was given at St. Mary's School Hall on October 10, under the direction of Mr. Cyril Pearce. The St. Mary's Choir and a quartet of soloists gave 'King Arthur,' and the Norwich Chamber Orchestra played Suites from 'The Married Beau' and 'The Virtuous Wife.'

WITNEY.—The Choral Society, which has been inactive for three years, is to be revived with Mr. E. Tarrant as conductor.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—A performance of 'Belshazzar' was given at Snowhill Congregational Church on October 6. Mr. Theodore Grosvenor conducted and Mr. Horace Turner was at the organ. The part of Belshazzar was sung by Mr. Walter Glynne.

YORK.—The annual concert of the Male-Voice Choir took place on October 2, under the direction of Mr. J. L. Slater. Among the chief items were Holst's 'Swansea Town,' Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet,' and two madrigals by Morley.

Music in Scotland

EDINBURGH.—For the fourteenth season of the Reid Symphony Orchestra, founded and directed by Prof. Tovey, eight concerts are announced. Programmes include three Haydn Symphonies, Dvorák's Symphonic Variations, two Rhapsodies, and third Symphony, Bruckner's 'Romantic' Symphony, a pianoforte Concerto by Prof. Tovey, a Violin Concerto by Respighi, McEwen's 'Grey Galloway,' a new Overture 'Comala,' by Ian Whyte, Bach's Latin Magnificat in D, Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and a number of more familiar works. Soloists: Orlov (pianoforte), Adila Fachiri (violin), Marie Thomson (soprano), and Gabriele Joachim (mezzo), a grand-daughter of Joseph Joachim.——At the first of Prof. Tovey's Sunday Concerts in Usher Hall, the Reid Orchestra played Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, and, with Mr. Greenhouse Allt at the organ, Handel's Organ Concerto in A. The second concert took the form of a pianoforte recital by Prof. Tovey. The programme consisted of works by Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, and Brahms.——A lively controversy has arisen in the local press over the selection of 'Jackson in F' for the singing of the Te Deum at the special 'Broadcast' service held in St. Giles's Cathedral to celebrate the Union of the Churches. Prof. Tovey gave battle in a characteristic letter to The Scotsman. The conveners of the Praise Committees of the two uniting Churches, both knowledgeable men, promptly ranged themselves with Prof. Tovey and disclaimed responsibility, since when the outraged Philistines have fulminated daily in the press against the worthy professor.

GLASGOW.—The 'Orpheus' Week of chamber concerts, promoted by the new Glasgow Chamber Music Society, which now shoulders the responsibility formerly borne by the Glasgow Orpheus Choir, comprised seven concerts in the M'Lellan Galleries by the Budapest String Quartet. The programmes included fourteen String Quartets by Dittersdorf, Haydn (two), Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Smetana, Tchaikovsky, Dvorák, Bartók, Hindemith, and Ernest Bloch, a String Trio by Haydn, and excerpts from works by Dittersdorf, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Borodin, Sgambati, Stravinsky, and Gruenberg. The Budapest Quartet made a very favourable impression on this its first visit to Scotland. It was specially successful in the modern works. Audiences grew steadily in numbers and enthusiasm as the week proceeded, but it was unfortunate that the event clashed with the first visit of the Covent Garden Opera Company to Glasgow. The Opera Company opened its season with Puccini's 'Turandot,' not hitherto heard at Glasgow. The other important production of the first week's programme was Verdi's 'Falstaff.' Both were directed by Mr. Barbirolli.——Mr. A. M. Henderson gave an inaugural recital on the Willis organ in the new and lovely War Memorial Chapel at Glasgow University. The University Chapel Choir sang pieces by Palestrina, Gibbons, Henschel, Rachmaninov, and Tchaikovsky. Later in the season recitals are to be given by Marcel Dupré, Dr. Henry Ley, and others.——The Glasgow Orpheus Choir paid its annual 'Autumn Holiday week-end' visit to Ireland, and gave concerts at Dublin and Belfast.——The B.B.C. Glasgow Station Orchestra, under Mr. Herbert A. Carruthers, gave a farewell concert prior to disbandment. An octet is now the full strength of the station band.——The Fellowes String Quartet, the only local chamber music combination which can be described as in being, announces five concerts to be given in Stevenson Hall at the Scottish National Academy of Music. Works by Haydn, Mozart (including the Clarinet Quintet), Beethoven, Brahms, and a living British composer will be played.

GENERAL.—At the first of the 'international celebrity' concerts, given at Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee, and Stirling, the bright particular stars were Madame Jeritza and the new boy prodigy violinist Wolfi (tout court), whose technique is certainly remarkable. Mrs. Marjory Kennedy-Fraser and her sister, Miss Margaret Kennedy, have been on tour in Canada doing Hebridean song recitals, and have been received with remarkable enthusiasm by large audiences at Victoria, Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, and Toronto.,

Music in Wales

CARDIFF AND SOUTH WALES.—The National Orchestra of Wales resumed its free public concerts in the National Museum at the end of September, and its symphony and popular concerts in the City Hall on Thursday and Saturday evenings respectively. Symphonies by Brahms, Glazounov, Tchaikovsky, and César Franck, as well as the accepted classics of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, figure in the programmes, Bach's Concerto for two violins, and smaller items by modern writers, including Elgar, Balfour Gardiner, Holst, Honegger, and Dohnányi.——Swansea Town Council has now decided to support the National Orchestra of Wales on condition of having representation on the governing body. The orchestra visited the town on October 8 and had an enthusiastic audience for its programme, which included 'Siegfried's Journey to the Rhine,' Mozart's fortieth Symphony, and Elgar's Serenade for strings, as well as solo numbers.——On October 6 Sir Thomas Beecham visited Cardiff and conducted an enlarged body consisting of the N.O.W. and Mr. Herbert Ware's orchestra, as part of his propaganda on behalf of the National League of Opera. His programme included fine performances of Mozart's Symphony No. 34, an excerpt from Debussy's 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' and some operatic numbers.——The project of reviving the Cardiff Triennial Festival is being discussed, though the venture is hampered by the lack of a hall large enough for an audience which would ensure financial success.——The National Council of Music, owing to the generosity of the Carnegie Trust Fund, is planning a busy season in the distressed mining areas, including singing classes, lectures, listening clubs for wireless talks and musical performances, study circles, and a series of musical festivals in suitable centres. The draft programme outlined for one at Mountain Ash includes a Cymanfa (a hymn-singing festival) on the Sunday, rehearsals on the Monday, with performances of the 'Hymn of Praise' and 'The Messiah' interspersed with orchestral concerts during the week, a portion of the hall being reserved for those who can pay for their seats, while free admission is provided for unemployed workers and their families.

CARDIFF AND NEWPORT.—Successful chamber music concerts have been given at the High Schools for Girls in these towns. At Cardiff, Haydn's String Quartet

No. 3 (Op. 33) and Quartets by Debussy and Franck were given to a highly appreciative audience by the Hart House Quartet of Toronto. At Newport, the Bangor University College Trio gave Brahms's Trio in C for pianoforte and strings, Phantasie Trio in A minor by John Ireland, a violin sonata by Delius (soloist, Miss Kathleen Washbourne), and several other items, in a programme which was described by its hearers as entrancing.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

The first month of the new operatic season has been distinguished by a remarkable activity in our three opera houses. The State Opera brought out three modern French one-Act operas. Of these the most effective and successful was Jacques Ibert's 'Angélique,' which made a hit at Paris and has been given there more than a hundred times. Angélique is a charming young woman, but possessed of so furious a temper that she makes life a hell for all men who are tempted to win her favour. She thus quickly passes from one lover to another until the Devil himself tries to tame her. But even to his satanic majesty she makes hell rather too hot, so that the Devil is glad to turn her over to her first husband. Ibert's music is fully up to the demands of the capricious, burlesque libretto. The composer knows the modern vocabulary and employs all the technical proceedings of modern music with great skill and excellent judgment, without ever missing his effects. The modern features of his music do not disturb his melodic simplicity and impressiveness. Moreover, there is characteristic colour, variety, humour, parodistic fun, and vivacity in Ibert's music.

Ravel's 'L'Heure Espagnol,' though written more than twenty years ago, has, strange to say, never before been heard at Berlin. Ravel's clever and exceedingly refined music now reaches us rather too late, having in the meantime somewhat lost the charm of novelty. It is not given to Ravel to combine refined art with popular directness of impression, his emotional powers being too insignificant to carry away a mass of listeners not familiar with the intellectual culture, the aristocratic bearing, and fastidious taste of his super-refined but weak music.

MILHAUD'S 'LE PAUVRE MATELOT'

Milhaud's 'Le pauvre matelot' is radically different from Ravel's artistic creed. Jean Cocteau has made use here of an old primitive sailor's ballad. The poor sailor has left his home and his wife and has not been heard of for fifteen years. Everybody considers him dead; only his wife, living in poverty, thinks of him lovingly and waits for his return. One day he really does return as a rich man, carrying with him precious jewels. His wife does not recognise him. In order to test her fidelity, he tries to tempt her with his riches to grant him her favour, telling her that her husband is alive, that he knows where to find him, that she might help the man living in extreme distress with the money which she easily might gain. The woman does not yield to the temptation. At night, however, she steals to the bed of the stranger, kills him with a hammer, and takes his jewels in order to help her husband, not knowing that she has just murdered him. This story is quite impressive as a short ballad, but as an opera it is altogether unsatisfactory, lacking, as it does, contrasts, complication, and climax. The only piece of real action is the stroke with the hammer; all the rest is merely declamatory speech. The exaggerated simplicity and brutal directness exhibited here are foreign to the demands of the theatre, and therefore ineffective. Milhaud's music is likewise primitive. It sometimes expresses the gruesome mood of the poem with surprising effect, employing the simplest means, a sort of eternal melody, not of recitative character, as in Wagner's music, but consisting of real folk-song material. These folk-song melodies, however, are used only in short fragments, continually shifted along. A kind of mechanical motion is thus obtained, something rigid, similar to the pattern of a carpet or wallpaper. The strange effect thus produced is sometimes strong, but is quickly exhausted on account of its monotony. Milhaud shows us the latest phase of ultra-modern music, characterised by the tendency towards singable melody and the return to tonality, somewhat veiled, however, for the ears of less expert listeners by polytonality. Milhaud's music deserves appreciation as an attempt to a kind of new style of popular music. This attempt so far has been only half successful. By instinct the artist feels what is needed, but the proper employment of the new means, the right proportions and colours, have not yet passed beyond the experimental phase. All three French operas were well staged and effectively rendered, Alexander Zemlinsky conducting with exceptional skill.

SOME REVIVALS

'Samson and Delilah' was revived in the Municipal Opera House. Leo Blech is chiefly responsible for the extraordinary impression produced by this music to a dramatically unsatisfactory libretto. Two singers of the first rank were superior exponents of the two chief rôles—Sigrid Onegin and Carl Martin Ochman. Blech also did 'Tannhäuser' at the State Opera with new stage decorations and a new cast, in the Parisian version of 1861. The performance, masterly from a musical point of view, revealed in a brilliant manner the wonderful possibilities of the Berlin opera, which show themselves too rarely and only under specially favourable circumstances. The cast came near to perfection. Maria Müller is an ideal Elisabeth, in appearance as well as in mimetic art and vocal achievement. Lauritz Melchoir is a Tannhäuser of eminent vocal capacities. The choruses have hardly ever been heard at Berlin with equal effect, and made one think of Bayreuth's very best performances. Opinion was divided as to the luxurious extravagance of the Venusberg scene with its sumptuous ballets and its strange symbolic allusions, like the illuminated cross at the close of the Overture.

This extraordinary 'Tannhäuser' found a powerful and dangerous rival in a no less admirable 'Lohengrin' at the Municipal Opera. Furtwängler, so far known to the Berlin public only as a symphonic conductor, is now returning to opera, his first love at the beginning of his career some twenty years ago. Owing to Bruno Walter's sudden departure from Berlin a few months back, it was necessary to find an artist of very first rank in order to replace him, and Furtwängler has already proved on several occasions that he is fully capable of filling the gap. His 'Lohengrin' interpretation is a memorable artistic event, the masterly effort of a very great artist. The combined choral forces of the State opera and the Municipal Opera gave to the very important choral part of the music an impressiveness and a splendour that were astonishing. Emil Prestorius's effective new scenic decorations gave a fitting frame to this impressive revival of the old and much-abused opera.

CONCERTS

Of the numerous important series of symphonic concerts only a few have so far started their scheduled work. Klemperer's first programme with the State Orchestra comprised only two numbers—Bruckner's ninth Symphony and Erdmann's new Pianoforte Concerto. Edward Erdmann has won his reputation as an exponent of ultra-modern music, which he interprets with a rare insight into the essential features of the new style, and with a remarkable and individual pianistic art. As a composer he, of course, manifests the same tendency.

In its thematic material his concerto derives from Schönberg, but it is less severe, pessimistic, and even has a tinge of popularity, not disagreeable to listen to, and full of curious grotesque sound-effects. In its formal aspect, however, it is surprisingly conservative, preserving the classical sonata-form very carefully.

Brilliantly played by the author, and no less brilliantly conducted by Klemperer (the orchestral part bristles with intricate difficulties), it obtained a fair success, though in its second half a dangerous monotony of sound-effect, repetition of similar harmonic, melodic, and orchestral devices, showed manifestly the rather narrow limits of its ideas and their treatment.

The Kolisch Quartet from Vienna, one of the most serious, high-minded, and able advocates of modern art, played Artur Schnabel's third String Quartet for the first time. The composition was finished seven years ago, but had to wait till now for its first performance. It is written in one long movement lasting without intermission about thirty-five minutes, and taxing to the utmost the skill of the players as well as the patience of the listeners. Its complication in rhythm and in polyphony is excessive. Its thematic material, however, is comparatively simple, and there is a constantly increasing contradiction between its feasible and intelligible melody and the fantastic complexity of its treatment. The melodic thread is obscured and the listener is often left in absolute uncertainty as to what is happening. In spite of the composer's evident sincerity and earnestness of artistic purpose, in spite of striking pages of expressive music, the total effect of the ambitious work was unenjoyable, owing principally to a lack in the art of composition, the word being understood in its literal sense as the putting together of single parts.

ENGLISH PERFORMERS

Several English artists have been heard in recitals. William Busch, a young pianist of commendable qualities, confirmed the good impression produced by his debut at Berlin a year ago. His programme also contained a group of English compositions by Moeran, Bax, and Ireland, well-written and effective small pieces, sounding to German ears, however, more French than English in their dependance upon Debussy. Clyde Burrows, a singer who treats his by no means extraordinary vocal means with considerable culture of taste and artistic intelligence, won the favour of his listeners.

Albert Coates has conducted several performances at the State Opera as guest-conductor, including one of 'Boris Godounov.' As, however, the press had not been invited to these performances, the fact may be merely recorded here without further comment.

A CORRECTION

A regrettable misprint in my description of the Wolffheim auction in the October issue of this journal (p. 942) demands correction. The library did not contain a half a million works, but about half a million marks altogether were paid for it at the two sales.

HUGO LEICHTENTRITT.

HOLLAND

Although there was nothing of outstanding interest in the second part of the Scheveningen season, there was a constant supply of interesting works admirably played under the direction of Prof. Abendroth, Ignaz Neumark, and Messrs. Charles Hinterdael and Leo Ruygrok. The two latter are members of the orchestra (Ruygrok being also assistant to van Anrooy during the winter seasons), and appeared as composers conducting their own works. Both have a lyric talent of fluency and effectiveness, and Hinterdael's 'Adagio' for strings and Ruygrok's 'Autumn Moods' for viola solo (finely played by Jean Devert) and orchestra, possess some distinction. Neumark, as usual, has provided several programmes of an unusual and not too heavy character, a typical one including works by Massenet, Alfven, Arensky, and Sibelius. Abendroth has made an excellent impression in his direction of classical works, and an almost equally favourable one in modern music. His chief novelties have been Schubert's second Symphony ('The little D major') and Honegger's 'Pacific,' the latter of which was disappointing only in its lack of sensationalism. One felt that, like Richard Strauss's last operas, it is 'after Mozart,' but a long way after. On the professedly light side we have had the Revellers, whose programmes and performances are alike great attractions here, and Richard Tauber, of whose qualities we had not lacked full information sent in advance by his agents.

The autumn season has now set in vigorously, and the 'Co-Opera-tie,' re-organized since the departure of Albert van Raalte and given the additional title of 'The Netherlands Opera,' has shown its anxiety to live up to this title by producing Charles Grelinger's early opera, 'Op Hoop van Zegen,' based on Heijermans's drama of the same name. It is an attractive work, though not, in its musical expression, either particularly Dutch or quite deep enough to be thoroughly in keeping with the tragic character of the play. With Esther de Boer van Rijk, Holland's leading 'legitimate' actress, as stage manageress, all the little details of pose, action, dress, and mounting that are so often overlooked in opera were admirably complete, while the composer conducted a thoroughly efficient performance of the music.

At Amsterdam the German version of 'The Beggar's Opera,' with Bert Brecht's jazz music, carried still further away from the original by the Dutch adapter Albert Dufresne, has been meeting with great popular success. The critics are unanimous, however, in pointing out that the 'Drie Stuiversopera' (Threepenny Opera), as it is called, has little real connection with the work of Gay and Pepusch, and most of them express a preference for the latter.

Of arrangements that have not yet eventuated but which will make the season an unusually interesting one, there are already to be mentioned the performance in several towns of the Concertstück recently discovered by Juan Manen which, it is claimed, is a work of Beethoven's, and in which the discoverer himself is playing the solo part, the first European performance of Ernest Bloch's 'America,' a performance under Evert Cornelis (whose efforts here on behalf of British music deserve the gratitude of all Britons), of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' and one by the Catholic Choral Society of Rotterdam of Janacek's 'Festive Mass.' A large number of British artists are announced to give recitals and to appear at the Concertgebouw and other concerts, of whom at the time of writing only one has appeared. This is Dorothy Helmrich, who made a distinct success at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and The Hague.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

NEW YORK

Toscanini has returned for his fall season here, and for the moment nothing else matters. After his first concert the critics vied with each other in finding words of praise—they are almost outworn, in his case, and no one thinks of using any sort of qualifying terms. For his first programme he had spared New York the Italian novelties with which he has been rather over-generous in past seasons—quite possibly because, having severed his connection with La Scala, he no longer has to think of home politics. He opened his first programme with Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, continued with Strauss's 'Don Quixote' (to show off the capabilities of the new solo 'cellist of the Philharmonic Symphony), and ended with one of those astonishing tours de force of his which consist in taking a thrice-familiar work, playing it as nearly corresponding to the composer's intention as he can, endowing it with the unique vitality and authority that are his, and thereby creating something of indescribable and almost unprecedented beauty out of material at which his colleagues have been working continuously these many years. In this case he used the seventh Symphony of Beethoven. There are no words to describe such music-making as his, and New York is fortunate in being able to look forward to many weeks of it.

The concert season has started in earnest. Kreisler, Siloti, Bauer, Friedman, the English Singers, Lhevinne, Zimbalist, Elly Ney, the Friends of Music, the Roth String Quartet—all these and scores more were on October's calendar. La Argentina, who was last season's greatest sensation (she gave some sixteen or twenty recitals in a few weeks, all of them more than sold out), returns on October 14. Rhys-Rees Morgan, the Welsh tenor, sang in Carnegie Hall on October 1, the season's opening night. I suppose his audience was in consequence meagre, but he was very well treated by the critics.

In addition to the Philharmonic-Symphony, New York will have this season series of concerts by the Boston Symphony under Kussewitzky, the Philadelphia Orchestra under Stokowski and Gabrilowitsch, and the Conductorless Orchestra, in its second season, and already quite firmly established as a worthy experiment. The Metropolitan Opera will follow its usual course of presenting a standard and not too catholic répertoire with superb material and, under the circumstances, no very outstanding æsthetic success.

Dr. Leichtentritt's article on the Berlin Institute of Music for Foreigners in the September Musical Times was extremely interesting, following by a week or two, as it did, a letter to the New York Times recounting in very different tones the 'Adventures of Innocence Abroad.' Herr Draber visited New York last season, and described to me in glowing terms the unparalleled opportunities for the study of conducting which were to be offered by the Institute. The Times correspondent was delighted with Herr Draber's promises, and actually enrolled in the conducting course, promising to pay the 'reduced' fee of $300.

'I arrived,' he writes, 'in Berlin, June 1, and went directly to Herr Draber's office. I was greeted in excellent English, although I spoke German. The first ritual we observed was my tendering of the full tuition, $300. Herr Draber then informed me that both Herr Furtwängler and Herr Schuricht were contracted to conduct concerts, which would prevent them from opening the course until June 10.' Briefly, only five pupils ever showed up for the course, and after a considerable amount of what we Americans call 'stalling around,' and many rather improbable and undignified excuses, the American became impatient. 'I finally asked for my money. Herr Draber appeared shocked, and murmured something about principle, and ethics, and consultation with the directors' lawyer. . . .' Eventually the money was returned, and the American had lost only a month's time and the price of his passage to Europe and back. He does not hide the fact that he did not enjoy the experience, and he feels, obviously, that the German Institute for Foreigners, in so far as he and his class-mates were concerned, was, from the point of view of German propaganda, an indifferent success. There are, apparently, at least two sides to this adventure.

ARTHUR MENDEL.

TORONTO

This month we have rather more news than is usual at the beginning of the season. It so happened that the Canadian College of Organists not only held its Annual Convention at Toronto during the time the great Canadian National Exhibition was open, but also combined convention activities this year with the National Association of Organists of the United States of America—this co-operation taking place for the first time. The event has led, by the way, to a suggestion that a similar fusion should occur in the near future with the parent body, the Royal College of Organists. If the overwhelming success of the undertaking this year be considered seriously, there is much to be said for the Anglo-Canadian project.

The Organists' Convention was held at the magnificent new Canadian Pacific Railway hotel, the Royal York, the two presidents in office being Mr. Reginald L. McAll, for U.S.A., and Mr. W. H. Hewlett, for Canada. A commendable feature of the programme was the dividing of each event into two halves, one given by an American and one by a Canadian organist. As an act of courtesy to the visiting Americans, the Canadian National Exhibition extended to the delegates the freedom of the Exhibition, and held in their honour a special banquet, at which were present the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Premier of Ontario, and Mayor McBride, of Toronto. Following the banquet, the convention attended one of the C.N.E. chorus concerts, under Dr. H. A. Fricker. A great deal of valuable ground was covered by the convention, and it was felt by delegates from both sides of the line that they had gained a far keener and deeper understanding of problems common to both nations, and in addition a more comprehensive regard for the work being done by each Association and for the art in general.

Two points worthy of note were brought out in two of the leading addresses. Mr. McAll drew serious attention to the fact that in America they were a nation of listeners rather than producers. 'We need,' he said, 'a revival in music-making.' And Dr. Ernest MacMillan, Principal of the Toronto Conservatory, made a suggestion during his illustrated lecture on 'Hymns and Hymn-Singing' that congregational rehearsals should be held by each church weekly. Dr. MacMillan confirmed his point by taking his audience through (1) the 'Old Hundredth' (Geneva Psalter), (2) 'Iste Confessor' (Rouen Church melody), (3) 'O Seigneur' (Psalm 3, from Genevan Psalter), (4) 'Sine Nomine' (R. Vaughan Williams), (5) 'Hast du denn, Jesu' ('Praxis Pietatis Melica,' 1668).

Quite apart from the convention activities, however, music itself was one of the most prominent features of the C.N. Exhibition. The great choir of nearly two thousand voices gave four concerts to over forty thousand people, with the assistance of one of the most magnificent aggregations ever heard here—the Goldman Band of New York. These men, under Mr. Edwin Franko Goldman, are all picked soloists whose tone-quality, backed by a faultless technique, was nothing short of a revelation. The choir is developing upon strict British choral lines, so much so that many of the American organists confessed that nothing of its kind existed in the States.

The regular Exhibition band, vocal, choral, and instrumental competitions were as keenly contested as ever, and were attended by exceedingly large audiences. And, of course, band concerts were provided at the two band-stands daily from 3 to 9 p.m. continuously.

H. C. F.

THE SOURCES OF SOME OLD ENGLISH SONGS

By G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT

I have ventured to put together a few notes on some old songs, being led to do so by a perusal of that excellent collection, 'The Oxford Song Book,' vol. 2. This gives the sources whence the tunes are derived, but I cannot help thinking that a little more light is needed on the origin of some of them.

'My mind to me a kingdom is' (p. 32).—This is the tune printed by Ritson and by D'Urfey, but it has no connection with Byrd's beautiful setting for five voices, found in his 'Psalms, Sonnets, and Songs of Sadness and Piety,' of which the date is 1588, not 1599 as here given.

'The Hunt is up' (p. 48).—The editor says, 'The old spelling is so attractive that in this song it is given unaltered' I think it will be found that when docked of its 'Wardour Strete' spelling, it will reveal itself as a palpable product of the 19th century and not of the 16th century at all. The verses are probably the work of J. Payne Collier, from one of whose MSS. they were first printed. The 'Dictionary of National Biography' says of him, 'None of his statements or quotations can be trusted without verifying, and no volume or document that has passed through his hands . . . can be too carefully scrutinised.' The MS. is, I believe, in the British Museum, but I have not got the reference.

'When that I was a little tiny boy' (p. 51).—This tune has doubtless become 'traditional,' but it was composed by Joseph Vernon, a well-known tenor singer of his day (for whom see 'Grove'), who printed it in 1772 in a collection of his songs entitled, 'The New Songs in the Pantomime of the Witches, the Celebrated Epilogue in the Comedy of Twelfth Night, A Song in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, And two Favorite Ballads sung by J. Vernon at Vaux Hall, Composed by J. Vernon [&c., &c.], London, Printed and sold by John Johnston, near Exeter Change in the Strand [&c., &c.].'

'Fill every glass' (p. 126).—Described as 'Traditional English Air used in "The Beggar's Opera," 1728.' Perhaps I may be allowed to transcribe a note on this song which I contributed to Notes and Queries, January 20, 1917: 'This is to be found in D'Urfey's "Wit and Mirth: or Pills to purge Melancholy," 1719, vol. i., p. 180, where it is called "A drinking Song in Praise of our Three fam'd Generals" (i.e., Marlborough, Eugène, and D'Auverquerque).' The words are first given in French, beginning:

'Que chacun remplisse son verre,
Pour boire à nos trois Généraux.'

This is followed by the verses 'Translated from the French,' beginning:

'Fill ev'ry glass, and recommend 'em,
We'll drink our three Generals' Healths at large.'

The tune is given with the French verses, and is almost certainly French. In 'Zwei Opern-Burlesken aus der Rokokozeit,' Berlin, 1912, the editor, Georgy Calmus, points out (p. 218) that this tune is printed in 'Les Parodies du nouveau Théâtre Italien, 1738, tome quatrième,' among the tunes engraved at the end of the volume, No. 145, as 'Ne quittez pas votre Houlette.'

'Needles and Pins, or I'm Ninety-Five' (p. 133).—Described as a 'North-Country Morris Dance.' This well-known tune was composed by Sir Henry Bishop. It is the Finale of his opera 'The Slave,' set to words beginning:

'Should our praise of Freedom's Isle
But win a sweet consenting smile.'

In the edition of 'The Slave' with pianoforte accompaniment this note appears:

'The Melody of this Finale was originally composed by Mr. Bishop, as a Dance, in the Opera of "John of Paris."'

Turning to the pianoforte edition of that opera we find:

'The Melodramatic Music March and Pastoral Dance in the Comic Opera called "John of Paris," at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, composed by Henry R. Bishop [&c.].'

The tune in question is the 'Pastoral Dance.' No doubt Sir Henry Bishop composed or gave currency to many popular tunes, among them one that may be worth mentioning, as its history seems to have escaped notice, though it has nothing to do with the 'Oxford Song Book.' This is a tune to which the hymn 'Hark, hark, my soul,' used to be sung when I was a boy, and which I am surprised to find has been resuscitated in 'The English Hymnal,' where it is said to be 'probably adapted from a Swiss Melody.' It may very likely be Swiss or French, and it is introduced into the opera 'A Roland for an Oliver,' not as composed by Bishop, but as 'adapted and arranged' by him. It is set to words beginning, 'Sweet soothing Lyre, thy magic pow'r prevailing.' In my copy of the work a former owner has written against this song with indignant pencil, 'Pilgrims of the Night—murdered!'—unaware that what happened was precisely the opposite of what he thought, and that it was the hymn compounder who took a pretty and graceful air from the opera and mashed it up into a perfectly detestable hymn tune.

'Tink-a-Tink' (p. 136).—This is stated to be from Playford's 'Dancing Master.' I suspect this to be an error. It is not in the two editions of the 'Dancing Master' (the eighth and the eighteenth) to which I have access. As a matter of fact, the tune comes from Michael Kelly's 'Blue Beard,' 1798, where it is sung to verses beginning:

'Yes, Beda, thus Beda, when I melancholy grow.'

Kelly in his 'Reminiscences' (pp. 146-147) distinctly says that he wrote all the music for 'Blue Beard' except two selected pieces; and 'I never selected a piece from any composer to which, when I printed it, I did not affix his name.' Unless, then, in any printed edition another composer's name is affixed to this song it is Kelly's own. I possess only a flute edition of 1798; in that no other composer's name is affixed. But, of course, if the tune should really come from any edition of the 'Dancing Master,' Kelly's claim falls.

May I say, in conclusion, that I do not think that 'Playford's Dancing Master' is a sufficient reference as the source of any tune? There were so many editions and the contents of them were so frequently varied that the edition ought always to be specified. In any case the name 'Playford's Dancing Master' should be given only to those early editions which bear Playford's name on the title-page.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Max Darewski, on September 26, aged thirty-four. He was the youngest son of the late Prof. Edouard Darewski, a Polish teacher of singing, and a friend of Paderewski. Born at Manchester, he began his career as a prodigy, composing a waltz at five, conducting a full orchestra in one of his own compositions at eight, and three years later producing a work in celebration of the Trafalgar Centenary. While still in his eleventh year he conducted the massed bands of the Brass Band Festival at the Crystal Palace. As a pianist he had toured Europe extensively; in this country he was heard mainly in variety theatres. Though he frankly took the path of easy popularity, there was never any question as to his unusual musical gifts.

Agnes Lambert (Mrs. Heygate Lambert), at Dolgelly, on September 25, suddenly. A pupil of Stanford, she was a keen and accomplished musician, a delightful accompanist, and a well-known figure in the musical world of London. She will probably be best remembered as a writer of songs which Evangeline Florence sang, the most successful being 'The whispering leaves were half asleep.' A Masque, 'Love and the Dryad,' produced at King's Hall, Covent Garden, and a mystery play, 'Holy Angels,' had a good many performances.

Francis Cunningham Woods, on September 21, aged sixty-seven. He was M.A. and Mus. Bac. of Oxford, and for thirty-three years music master of Highgate School, retiring from that post in 1928 owing to a breakdown in health.

R. E. Miles, on September 13, at Ovingdean, aged seventy-two. For thirty-three years a member of St. Paul's Cathedral Choir, he sang at Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee service in 1897, and at the Coronations of King Edward and King George.

Hugo Kreisler, at Vienna, aged forty-six. Though overshadowed by his more famous brother, Fritz Kreisler, he was a violinist who was highly esteemed at Vienna, his native city.

Hermann Graedener, on September 17, aged eighty-five. A former professor at the Vienna Conservatoire, he was one of the last survivors of the Brahms circle of intimates.

A concert organized by the Countess of Clarendon in aid of the fund for Homeless Babies will take place at the Palladium on Sunday, November 3, at 3 p.m. The performers will include Joan Elwes, Gertrude Peppercorn, Carrie Tubb, Frederick Ranalow, Anton Dolin, and Anna Ludmila, Clapham and Dwyer, the Gresham Singers, &c. Tickets from Miss Adeline Bourne, 6A, Blomfield Road, Maida Vale, W.9; the National Sunday League; and the Palladium.

Letters to the Editor—continued from p. 1022.

B FLAT MINOR OR D FLAT?

SIR,—One of the most famous and popular pianoforte pieces ever composed is Chopin's B flat minor Scherzo, Op. 31. It is known all the world over as the 'Scherzo in B flat minor,' and will always be called so. Yet a well-known music critic and personal friend of mine (now dead) emphatically maintained that its real key is D flat major, and his grounds for this opinion were certainly strong. Although the work opens unmistakably in B flat minor, it soon afterwards goes into D flat major, and remains in that key for a considerable time. Moreover, there is a long middle section commencing in A major, which has no relation to B flat minor. Finally, the elaborate Coda is all in D flat major. The question therefore arises: What constitutes the key of a piece? Is it the beginning or its ending?—Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

22A, Carlton Vale,
Maida Vale, N.W.6.

INFORMATION WANTED

SIR,—I should be much obliged if through the medium of your columns I could trace a setting either original or modern of the 'Ballad of Clarke Saunders.' Presumably this ballad, which appears in the Oxford Book of Ballads, must have been set to music originally, but although I have made considerable efforts to find it I have so far been unsuccessful.—Yours, &c.,

DENNIS S. BICKERSTETH.

School Lane,
Liverpool.

[A number of Letters are held over—EDITOR.]

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Anton Rubinstein. By Leonid Sabaneev	977
Ugly Terminology. By Alexander Brent-Smith	980
The Arts in Revolt (continued). By Rutland Boughton	981
Critics in Congress: The International Gathering at Bucarest. By Percy A. Scholes	984
The Rarity of the Soprano. By H. Travers Adams	986
Harmonic Colour: Does it Wear? By Norman Hay	987
Stages in the History of Opera: IV.—Mozart as a Writer of Opera. By Scott Goddard	988
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	990
The Musicians' Bookshelf	991
New Music	993
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	995
Player-Piano Notes	997
Occasional Notes	998
The London Opera Festival	1001
Teachers' Department: The Associated Board Pianoforte Examinations for 1930 (continued). By Ernest Fowles; Reviews; Points from Lectures; Answers to Correspondents	1002-1008
Church and Organ Music	1016
Royal College of Organists	1016
Letters to the Editor	1017
Competition Festival Record	1023
British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals: Annual General Meeting and Conference at Perth	1023
Blackpool Festival	1024
The Amateurs' Exchange	1025
Royal Academy of Music	1025
Royal College of Music	1026
Trinity College of Music	1026
Music Teachers' Association	1026
The Coming Season	1027
London Concerts	1029
Concerts in the Suburbs	1033
The Covent Garden Opera Company	1033
'The Duke of Milan'	1033
Music in the Provinces	1034
Music in Scotland	1035
Music in Wales	1035
Musical Notes from Abroad	1036
The Sources of Some Old English Songs. By G. E. P. Arkwright	1039
Obituary	1039

MUSIC

'While all things were in quiet silence.' Christmas Anthem. By H. A. CHAMBERS ... 1009

The following EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number: Christmas Carols: 'The Star that shines so pure and bright.' By George Rathbone; 'O Little Town of Bethlehem.' By Harold Andrews; 'Puer Natus est nobis.' By Eric H. Thiman.

DURING THE LAST MONTH

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED

BACH, J. S.—"O yes, just so." In D. For Contralto or Baritone. Air from "Phœbus and Pan." 2s.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—"Song's Eternity." (No. 247, Two-part Songs.) 3d.

——"The Blackbird." (No. 248, Two-part Songs.) 4d.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"While all things were in quiet silence." Christmas Anthem. (No. 1041, The Musical Times.) 3d.

DESCANT CAROL BOOK.—(Book 2.) A Collection of well-known Carols with Descants. 8d.
(For contents, see p. 1043.)

HANDEL, G. F.—Solos from the Secular Works. Set 1. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass. (For contents, see p. 1051.) Each book, 1s. 6d.

KEARNS, R. M.—Wedding Hymn. "O perfect Love." 2d.

LANG, C. S.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat, for men's voices (T.T.B.B.). (No. 105, Services and Anthems for Men's Voices.) 6d.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 447. "I sing the Birth." H. ANDREWS 1½d.
,, 448. "O little town of Bethlehem." H. ANDREWS 1½d.
,, 449. "Who knocks at the door?" G. RATHBONE 1½d.
,, 450. "The star that shines so pure and bright." G. RATHBONE 1½d.
,, 451. "Puer Natus est nobis." E. H. THIMAN 1½d.
,, 452. "God that is our Saviour." E. H. THIMAN 1½d.

The following are arranged with Descants:

,, 454. "O come, all ye faithful." Anon., 18th-Century 2d.
,, 455. "A Day a Day of Glory." Old French Melody 2d.
,, 456. "Come, ye lofty." Old Breton Melody 2d.
,, 457. "God rest you merry, Gentlemen." Traditional 2d.
,, 458. "Hymn for Christmas Day." Goss 2d.
,, 459. "The Incarnation." Traditional 2d.
" 460. "The Seven Joys of Mary." ,, 2d.
,, 461. "We three Kings of Orient are." ,, 2d.

RATHBONE, GEORGE.—"Music." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 1440, Part-Song Book.) 3d.

——"Rejoice and Sing." Christmas Anthem. (No. 1164, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 449, contains the following music in both notations: "He shall feed His flock like a Shepherd" (in G). Air from "The Messiah," Handel. Hymn for Christmas Day, J. Goss (Arranged with Descant). 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

	A.	B.
No. 615 April Song (Unison). W. L. SMOLDON	3d.	—

THALBEN-BALL, G.
A Sette of Carols. 1s.
(For contents, see p. 1044.)

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2580. "Music." Four-part Song for S.A.T.B. GEORGE RATHBONE. 2d.
,, 2582. "Let the bright Seraphim." From Handel's "Samson." 1½d.

PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK

BACH, J. S. (arranged by P. Gordon).—Benediction for Male voices (T.T.B.B.). (No. 1032, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

BAAS, A.—"Fuzzy-Wuzzy." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 371, Modern Series.) 25 cents (1s.).

BODE, A. G. H.—"He maketh wars to cease." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1021, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

CAMILIERI, L.—"Ring the bells." For S.A.T.B. (No. 1043, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

CRONE, R. F.—"Like as the hart." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1014, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

DICKINSON, C.—"Father, give Thy benediction" (S. A. T. B.). (No. 156, Sacred Choruses.) 10 cents (6d.).

GENET, L. M.—"Sea Love." Part-Song (T.T.B.B.). (No. 370, Modern Series.) 15 cents (8d.).

GILBERT, R. S.—"The Lord is rich and merciful." Short Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1029, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

GOLDSWORTHY, W. A.—Te Deum Laudamus in C (S.A.T.B.). (No. 1017, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

JEWELL, L.—Te Deum Laudamus in D (S.A.T.B.). (No. 1040, Church Music Review.) 25 cents (1s.).

MERRILL, W. P.—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace." Short Anthem (unaccompanied.) (No. 1022, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

RICHARDS, G. D.—Benedictus, in F (S.A.T.B.). (No. 1044, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

ROCKWELL, J.—"Charm for Slumber." Part-Song for Women's Voices. (No. 376, Modern Series.) 10 cents (6d.).

——"Thou gazest on the stars." Solo and Women's Chorus. (No. 377, Modern Series.) 10 cents (6d.).

SCARMOLIN, A. L.—"In Bethlehem, the little town." Christmas Anthem. (No. 1018, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

THOMSON, S.—A Christmas Diptych. Soprano Solo and Chorus. (No. 1026, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin." Soprano Solo and Chorus. (No. 1020, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

VORIS, W. R.—"He wants not friends that hath Thy love." (No. 1012, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"Jesus, do roses grow so red." Anthem. (No. 1027, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"Jesus, do roses grow so red." Anthem for Women's Voices. (No. 1025, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"Just as I am." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1037, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"My spirit longs for Thee." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1013, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d.).

——"The Lame Shepherd." Christmas Carol. S.A.T.B. and Tenor Solo. (No. 1019, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

WARREN, E. R.—"Autumn sunset in the Canyon." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 372, Modern Series.) 15 cents (8d.).

——"Hosanna to the living Lord." Anthem. (No. 1028, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

——"Spring Morning in the Hills." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 373, Modern Series.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"Summer Noon on the Desert." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 374, Modern Series.) 12 cents (6d.).

WHITEHEAD, A. E.—"The first Noël." Christmas Anthem. (No. 1023, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

—— (Arranged by).—"The Holly and the Ivy." Christmas Carol for S.A.T.B. (No. 1038, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

WILLIAMS, D. McK.—Benedictus, in E minor. (No. 1024, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

F

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Recitalist, can deputise November. Box 23, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., CH.M., L.R.A.M., seeks appointment. 21 years' experience. Recitalist (pupil of Joseph Bonnet), Voice-Trainer (A.R.C.M. Teacher of Singing). Box 24, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS WITH OCTAVE COUPLER

THIS WONDERFUL INVENTION SUPERSEDES ALL PIANO PEDALS, AND IS A MASTER PATENT

St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 9th April, 1921

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 gns. cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.

London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

Please mention this Paper when writing.

Pianoforte Teachers' Examinations for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Diplomas, &c.

2/6 A GUIDE FOR CANDIDATES. BY A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"A handy brochure—gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."
J. H. Thomas, Esq., L.R.A.M.

AND MANY OTHERS.

96, STREET LANE, LEEDS

HYMNS, CAROLS, CHANTS, ETC.

Neatly duplicated. Prices from 3s. 6d. per 100 copies. Send 1½d. stamp for samples, to

W. H. & L. RIDD, WEST VIEW, WORMS ASH, BROMSGROVE, WORCS.

YOUNG SINGERS

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice-production, enunciation, and singing to boys and girls.

By JAMES BATES

To be obtained from:
Messrs. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.
Price One Shilling and Twopence, post free.

PIANO REPAIRS "WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost)
PERFECT SATISFACTION

WIGMORE HALL AND PIANO GALLERIES, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1

CANTATAS for CHRISTMAS

THE HOLY CHILD
FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
THE MUSIC BY
T. ADAMS
Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

THE NATIVITY
FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS
With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation
(The Words and Hymns Selected)
THE MUSIC BY
T. ADAMS
Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† CHRISTMAS ORATORIO
THE MUSIC BY
J. S. BACH
Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.
Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings
Boards, 4*s.*; Cloth, 6*s.*
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each
Parts 1 and 2, 1*s.* 6*d.*; Parts 3 and 4, 1*s.* 6*d.*;
Parts 5 and 6, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Tonic Sol-fa, Parts 1 and 2, 8*d.*; Parts 3 and 4, 1*s.*
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12*s.* 6*d.*
Book of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6*s.* 6*d.*

† CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY
(CHRISTEN ATZET DIESEN TAG!)
A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)
Edited by J. E. WEST English Words by C. AVELING
THE MUSIC BY
J. S. BACH
Price One Shilling and Sixpence

† BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS
A CHRISTMAS HYMN
(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)
THE WORDS BY
C. ROSSETTI
THE MUSIC BY
B. J. DALE
Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling

THE COMING OF THE KING
CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES
THE WORDS BY
H. M. BURNSIDE
THE MUSIC BY
M. B. FOSTER
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 6*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† CHRISTMAS EVE
FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE MUSIC BY
N. W. GADE
Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence

CHRISTMAS CANTATA
FOR SOLI AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN
THE MUSIC BY
J. HARRISON
Price One Shilling and Sixpence
Words only, 6*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN
THE WORDS BY
S. J. STONE
THE MUSIC BY
H. LESLIE
Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

BETHLEHEM
FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS
Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation
THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
E. C. NUNN
THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER
Price Three Shillings
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM
FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
THE WORDS BY
S. WENSLEY
THE MUSIC BY
J. E. WEST
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling
Words only, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Descant Carol Book

A COLLECTION OF

WELL-KNOWN CAROLS

with Descants

BOOK 1

A Virgin Unspotted
Good Christian men, rejoice
Good King Wenceslas
I saw Three Ships
Shepherds, shake off your drowsy sleep
The First Nowell
What Child is this?
While Shepherds watched

BOOK 2 (Just Published)

O come, all ye faithful
A Day, a Day of Glory
Come, ye lofty
God rest you merry, gentlemen
Hymn for Christmas Day ("See amid")
The Incarnation
The Seven Joys of Mary
We Three Kings of Orient are

Each Book
PRICE EIGHTPENCE
Words only, One penny each; 6/6 per 100

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS

LATEST NUMBERS

421. The Three Wise Men ...Alfred Hollins 1½d.
422. The Holly and the Ivy ...Geoffrey Shaw 1½d.
423. There is no rose ... Gerrard Williams 1½d.
424.*The Christ-Child (Unison) G. Rathbone 2d.
425. All Christian men H. A. Chambers 1½d.
426. I saw three Kings ... G. Rathbone 1½d.
427. O come this day ... ... H. G. Ley 1½d.
428. All hail with joy ... Chastey Hector 1½d.
429. Rosa Mystica ... ... B. J. Dale 4d.
430. Cradle Song ... ... B. J. Dale 4d.
431. O lovely voices ... H. A. Chambers 1½d.
432. The Christ-Child (Four Voices) G. Rathbone 2d.
433. A Lullaby Carol ... ...Geoffrey Shaw 2d.
434. While shepherds watched C. Lee Williams 1½d.
435. The First Nowell (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
436. Good King Wenceslas (with Descant) ,, 2d.
437. Balulalow ... ... Roy Thompson 1½d.
438. Sing we how the Heavenly Star ,, 1½d.
439. His dwelling ... ... G. Rathbone 1½d.
440. O Magi! see the Star o'erhead ,, 1½d.
441. The Seven Joys of Mary C. S. Lang 1½d.
442. A Virgin unspotted (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
443. What Child is this (with Descant) Old English 2d.
444. Good Christian men, rejoice (with Descant) ... ... Old German 2d.
445. I saw three ships come sailing in (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.
446. Shepherds, shake off your drowsy sleep (with Descant) ... Besançon Carol 2d.
447. I sing the Birth ... ... H. Andrews 1½d.
448. O little town of Bethlehem H. Andrews 1½d.
449. Who knocks at the door G. Rathbone 1½d.
450. The Star that shines so pure and bright G. Rathbone 1½d.
451. Puer Natus est Nobis ... E. H. Thiman 1½d.
452. God that is our Saviour E. H. Thiman 1½d.
453. The Son of God is born for all G. T. Francis 1½d.
454. O come, all ye faithful (with Descant) Anon. 2d.
455. A Day, a Day of Glory (with Descant) Old French 2d.
456. Come, ye lofty (with Descant) Old Breton 2d.
457. God rest you merry, Gentlemen (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.
458. Hymn for Christmas Day (with Descant) J. Goss 2d.
459. The Incarnation (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
460. The Seven Joys of Mary (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
461. We Three Kings of Orient are (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c.

Popular Church Music by J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS
Anthem—Christians, Awake...	4d.	3d.
Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D ...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CALEB SIMPER'S

Forty-three Popular Anthems for Christmastide (over 2,000 Editions)

RECENT AND POPULAR TITLES
With Angels sing	New 1926	4d.
Glory shone around	New 1925	4d.
Peace and Goodwill		4d.
A Son is given		4d.
Arise, shine (28th thousand)		4d.
Break forth into joy (132nd thousand)		5d.
We have seen His star (a great favourite)	84th Edn.	4d.
And on earth peace		4d.
GEORGE BELCHER
His Only Begotten Son		4d.
A Saviour which is Christ the Lord		4d.
A Righteous Branch		4d.
ARTHUR BERRIDGE
Brightest and best		4d.
Christmas Morn		4d.
When men came from lands afar		4d.

Over 100 Carols by CALEB SIMPER at 1½d. each. O.N. or Sol-fa.

THREE OUTSTANDING CAROLS

Angels from the realms of glory	...Lee Williams	1½d.
Lowly Shepherds, flocks attending	... G. Belcher	1½d.
Soft and white	A. B. Osmond	1½d.

Incarnatus Est, Christmas Cantata (Rev. J. H. Batten). Not difficult, but of great variety and interest. About 45 minutes. (Words only, 1*d*.) ... 1*s*. 6*d*.

All Anthems also in Sol-fa at 3d. each. Send for a Selection on appro., and full Christmas List.

A. WEEKES & Co., Ltd., 13 & 14, Hanover Street Regent St., London, W.1

Christmas Carols in "YORK SERIES"

301.	CHRISTMAS CAROLS	New and Old	3d.
427.	TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS ...	...C. W. Wilson	2d.
603.	YORK CHRISTMAS ROSE	J. Naylor	1½d.
701.	CHRISTMAS CAROLS	F. Peel	3d.
770.	ANGEL CHOIR, CAROL	...C. W. Wilson	1½d.
789.	COMING OF CHRIST, CAROL ...	...C. W. Wilson	1½d.
796.	CAROL OF THE BELLS	...C. W. Wilson	2d.
847.	CHRISTMAS CAROLS (New and Old)	...2nd Selection	4d.
987.	ON A NIGHT LONG AGO, CAROL	...C. W. Wilson	1½d.
988.	WHEN GOD COMES A VISITING, CAROL	Alec Rowley	1½d.

BANKS & SON, YORK

CHRISTMAS CAROLS by R. Walker Robson

Lo! new-born Jesus ... ... 3*d*.
O'er the meadows ... ... 2*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

ANTHEM

O LORD, MY GOD

BY

CHARLES A. SALT

F.R.C.O.

PRICE TWOPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

A

SETTE OF CAROLS

Words chiefly selected from

16TH-CENTURY ENGLISH CAROLS

CONTENTS:

THERE IS NO ROSE OF SUCH VIRTUE
CHRISTO PAREMUS CANTICAM, EXCELSIS GLORIA
THE RENUNCIATION
JHESU, FILI VIRGINIS
ALLELUIA, ALLELUIA DE VIRGINE MARIA
INTO THIS WORLD NOW IS COME
CHRISTE REDEMPTOR OMNIUM
GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO

Music by G. THALBEN-BALL

Price One Shilling

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Joseph Williams Limited

CHORAL WORKS

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

THE SEVEN BURDENS ... (from "Isaiah")

For Male-Voice Choir (unaccompanied)

COMPLETE, 5*s.* NET. Or, separate Nos. from 9*d.* each.

THE BURDEN OF BABYLON (from "Isaiah")

Preludium and Motet for unaccompanied Chorus and Soli of Mixed Voices, Brass, and Drums.

COMPLETE, 4*s.* NET.

(The Score and Band Parts of the Preludium may be had on hire.)

THREE SEA SONGS ... (Words by H. Newbolt)

For Male Quartet or Chorus (T.T.B.B.).

1. Drake's Drum 2. Admiral Death
3. The Fighting Téméraire

COMPLETE, 2*s.* 6*d.* NET. Or, separately, 9*d.* each.

FIVE CHORAL SONGS AND DANCES

(from Bacchæ of the Euripides. Text by Gilbert Murray)

For three Female Voices.

READY SHORTLY. Further particulars on application.

RUTLAND BOUGHTON

THE QUEEN OF CORNWALL

(Music Drame. Written by Thomas Hardy)

VOCAL SCORE, 12*s.* 6*d.* NET. Chorus Edition, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

(The Orchestral Score and Parts may be had on hire.)

AGINCOURT ... ... (Shakespeare)

Dramatic Scene for Male Voices, Solo, and Chorus.

VOCAL SCORE, 2*s.* NET.

(The Orchestral Score and Parts may be had on hire.)

THE GREAT HALLELUJAH ... (Schubert)

Chorus for Mixed Voices.

PRICE 6*d.* NET.

(The Orchestral Score and Parts may be had on hire.)

THE MOON-MAIDEN ... (from the Japanese)

A Choral Dance for Girls.

VOCAL SCORE, 2*s.* NET.

(The Orchestral Score and Parts may be had on hire.)

SIR EDWARD ELGAR

FROM THE BAVARIAN HIGHLANDS

Six Choral Songs for S.A.T.B.

VOCAL SCORE, COMPLETE, 4*s.* NET. Separate Nos. from 6*d.* each.

(The Orchestral Score and Parts may be had on hire.)

For Latest Choral Works write for Lists 1c and 1e. Post free on application.

Copies of any of the above works will be forwarded for inspection purposes, on receipt of 4d. per copy to cover postage, &c. Such copies to be returned within Twenty-one days.

32, Great Portland Street, London, W.1

Modern Russian Composers

By LEONID SABANEYEFF

THE author, himself a composer of brilliant style, offers æsthetic characterisations of prominent representatives of Russian music, including Skryabin, Stravinski, Rakhmaninoff, Prokofyeff, Myaskovski, Ryebikoff, Feinberg, Krein, Gnessin, and forty others. A delightful and intimate book.

254 pp. Cloth, 10*s.*

MARTIN LAWRENCE, LIMITED,

26, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

A DOOR-KEEPER OF MUSIC

BY J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND

AUTHOR OF

"THE SPELL OF MUSIC," Etc.

The author, who was for 20 years musical critic of The Times, tells of an unconventional childhood and youth, in the course of which he came across many notable and some notorious people ; many eminent figures in the literary and artistic world pass across the pages, from Disraeli and Gladstone to Browning and Samuel Butler, from Ruskin and Leighton to Du Maurier and Whistler, while, as might be expected, there are few distinguished musicians of his time with whom the writer has not been brought into contact, and of whom he has not some amusing story to tell.

ILLUSTRATED - - 10*s.* 6*d.* NET

JOHN MURRAY LONDON

COMPOSITIONS BY——

EATON FANING

Part-Songs

(For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated).

	Tonic Sol-fa	Old Notation
	s. d.	s. d.
*Coronation Song	0 3	0 6
*Daybreak	0 4	0 8
How sweet the Moonlight sleeps (Eight parts)	0 2	0 4
*Liberty	0 4	0 8
Moonlight	0 2	0 3
*Our Island Home	0 2	0 4
*Song of the silent land (with or without accompaniment)	0 3	0 8
*The Crown of Empire...	0 3	0 4
The Fortune-tellers' Song	0 2	0 4
*The Miller's Wooing	0 3	0 8
The Shepherd's Waking	0 2	0 4
*The Song of the Vikings	0 3	0 8
Do. (arr. with pianoforte duet accompaniment). Folio		3 0
*Do. (arr. for T.T.B.B. by T. F. Dunhill) ...		0 8
There is dew for the flow'ret	0 3	0 4
*Vagabonds	0 4	0 8
*We love our Island story	0 2	0 4
When Spring comes laughing	0 3	0 8

School Songs

HARROW SCHOOL SONGS :—	s. d.	s. d.
A gentleman's a-bowling		0 3
Awake		0 3
Ducker		0 3
Here, Sir!		0 3
If time is up		0 3
Left! Right!		0 3
Play up		0 3
Plump a lump		0 3
Stet Fortuna Domus		0 3
The Happy Medium		0 3
The Niner		0 3
Tom		0 3
Boat Song (Unison)	0 1½	0 2
Do. ("Voyaging"). Arranged as a Two-part Song		0 2
Obedient to the Call (Unison) ...		0 2

Part-Songs, &c., for Female Voices

	Tonic Sol-fa	Old Notation
	s. d.	s. d.
*Coronation Song (S.S.A.)	0 2	0 4
Buttercups and Daisies (Children's Cantata) Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100	1 0	2 6
*The Miller's Wooing (arranged for S.S.A.)	0 4	0 6

Songs

Alannah. In D minor, and E flat minor. Baritone or Bass	s. d.	s. d. 2 0
Heart's Blossom. E flat. Baritone ...		2 0
*Obedient to the call. With Chorus. In 3 Keys. Suitable for all voices ...		2 0
*Our Island Home. Baritone and Chorus		2 0
The Singer. E minor. Contralto or Baritone		2 0

Anthems, Services, &c.

Christ is not entered into the Holy places (Ascension)	s. d.	s. d. 0 2
Except the Lord build the House ...		0 6
Let not your heart be troubled ...	0 2	0 4
The Shepherds. Carol		0 2
*When the Lord turned again. Tenor Solo, and Chorus		0 6
Kyrie in C		0 3
Kyrie in F		0 3
*Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C ...	0 4	0 8

Instrumental Music, &c.

Coronation Song (Popular Marches, Book I.) Pianoforte.	s. d. 1 6
La Sirène (Valse Caprice). Pianoforte	2 0
Psyche (Romance). Organ	1 6
Scherzo in D minor. Organ	2 0
Song of the Vikings. Military Band ...	7 6
The Queen's Song	11 6

 Orchestral parts may be obtained*

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A Selected List of Music suitable for use on

ARMISTICE DAY

Memorial Hymns

*Crossing the Bar ... ... J. Barnby 2d.
,, ,, ... C. H. H. Parry 1½d.
*God of our fathers, known of old ... J. B. Dykes 1½d.
,, ,, ,, ,, ...G. C. Martin 1½d.
,, ,, ,, ,, E. W. Naylor 1½d.
Hush! for amid our tears ... H. A. Chambers 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
,, ,, ... C. H. H. Parry 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
Lie still, beloved, lie still ... ... C. H. Lloyd 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)
Sleep on, beloved ... ... J. Stainer 2d.
Sleep thy last sleep ... ... J. Barnby 3d.
Thou art gone to the grave ... J. Barnby 3d.
To mourn our dead we gather here . A. Sullivan 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)
We love God's Acre round the Church
J. V. Roberts 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)

Memorial Anthems

Beloved, it is well ... ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.
Christ will gather in His own ... A. Gray 3d.
*Comes, at times, a stillness ... H. Oakley 3d.
,, ,, ,, H. H. Woodward 4d.
Crossing the Bar (T.T.B.B.)... T. F. Dunhill 3d.
,, ,, (S.A.T.B.)... C. L. Williams 3d.
,, ,, (A.T.T.B.)... ,, ,, 3d.
* ,, ,, (S.A.T.B.)... H. H. Woodward 3d.
Earth does not hold ... E. H. Thiman 3d.
Give rest, O Christ (Kieff Melody)
Ed. by W. Parratt 2d.
,, ,, (T.T.B.B.) ,, ,, 2d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
*God shall wipe away all tears ... J. T. Field 3d.
,, ,, ,, (arranged as a Trio for boys' or female voices) ... J. T. Field 4d.
*He wants not friends that hath Thy love G. Shaw 4d.
*How blest are they ... P. Tschaikowsky 6d.
*Into Thy gracious hands ... ... E. Bullock 3d.
*Radiant morn hath passed away, The
H. H. Woodward 3d.
Rest in the Lord ... ... C. L. Williams 2d.
Righteous souls that take their flight H. Skeats 2d.
Sleep thy last sleep... ... ... W. Carroll 2d.
Sorrow not for those that sleep (Soprano Solo and Two-part Chorus) ... ... H. Blair 4d.
*Souls of the righteous, The ... G. Elvey 3d.
,, ,, ,, (Soprano Solo and Chorus)
M. B. Foster 4d.
,, ,, ,, ... E. V. Hall 2d.
,, ,, ,, (Quartet and Chorus)
H. H. Woodward 4d.
*Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace J. B. Calkin 3d.
,, ,, ,, (A.T.T.B.) ,, 3d.
,, ,, ,, A. D. Culley 3d.
* ,, ,, ,, T. T. Trimnell 3d.
* ,, ,, ,, (S.A.T.T.B.) S. S. Wesley 4d.
* ,, ,, ,, C. L. Williams 3d.
*Worship (Unison, for Massed Voices) G. Shaw 3d.
* ,, (S.A.T.B.) ... ... ,, 4d.
(Words only, 1s. 6d. 100.)

Hymns of Thanksgiving and Peace

Come, Lord, and rule (with optional descant)
E. H. Thiman 2d.
From East and West ... ... J. B. Dykes 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)
God of our fathers, unto Thee A. M. Goodhart 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
Lord of Hosts, Who hast endued us W. Parratt 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)
Lord of our fathers, Thou didst blend
G. C. Martin 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
O God of Glory, King of Kings most high
J. Langran 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
Praise the Lord; to-day we raise... J. Barnby 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
Thanks be to God ... ...G. C. Martin 1½d.
(Words only, 3s. 100.)
To Thee our God we fly ... J. Armistead 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)
,, ,, ... H. W. Davies 1½d.
(Words only, 2s. 100.)

Thanksgiving and Peace Anthems

*All people that on earth do dwell...John E. West 3d.
Give peace in our time, O Lord F. W. Wadely 3d.
*Hymn of Peace (Soprano Solo and Chorus)
W. H. Callcott 3d.
I will extol my God... ... John E. West 4d.
Let us now praise famous men ... A. J. Silver 4d.
,, ,, ,, (T.T.B.B.) ...E. H. Thorne 4d.
,, ,, ,, ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
*Light in darkness (Soprano and Tenor Solos and Chorus) ... ... D. C. Jenkins 4d.
*Lord hath done great things, The John E. West 6d.
Peace lives again ... ...J. F. Bridge 4d.
,, ,, (A.T.B.B.) ... ,, ,, 4d.
*Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem ... E. V. Hall 6d.
*Ten thousand times ten thousand (Soprano Solo and Chorus) ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
,, (Baritone Solo and Chorus) F. Tozer 6d.
We have heard with our ears E. W. Naylor 6d.
*What are these ... ... J. Stainer 4d.

Choral Works

For the fallen. Set to Music for Chorus and Orchestra ... ... C. B. Rootham 2s. 6d.
*Spirit of England, The (Three Poems). Set to Music for Tenor or Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra ... ... Edward Elgar 4s.
Or separately :—
1.*Fourth of August, The ... ... 1s. 6d.
2.*To Women ... ... 1s. 0d.
3.*For the fallen ... ... 1s. 6d.
*With proud thanksgiving (Chorus arr. from above) 8d.

Compositions marked * may be obtained in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

Te Deum Laudamus
PRICE FOURPENCE

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis
PRICE THREEPENCE

Set to Music in the key of B flat for S.A.T.B., the Accompaniment ad lib. by

H. SCOTT-BAKER

The Tenor part is within the compass of the Baritone voice.

SUITABLE FOR ARMISTICE DAY

FORWARD! BE OUR WATCHWORD
Processional Hymn Price Twopence

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

Specimen copy gratis on application, "CLOVELLY," YORK RD., WOKING

Unique Service for the Musical Public IS NOW BEING PROVIDED BY

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.

including lectures on music and demonstrations of new and classical music.
You are invited to visit the Department and to take advantage of the various features of the service provided. If unable to make a visit to the Department write outlining your requirements and inquiries.

119, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2

WORKS BY
ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
With Analyses from WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS
Price - Five Shillings

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.
Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says: "Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY
THIRD EDITION
Price - Five Shillings

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION
A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA
For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation
Price 2*s.* Words only, 12*s.* 6*d.* per 100

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS	2	6
ANTHEM: I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	3
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ...	0	3
SIX HYMN-TUNES AND CAROLS WITH DESCANTS	1	0
THE SNOW LIES WHITE. Song	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Twelve Introits or Short Anthems

—SET TWO—

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	Jacques Arcadelt
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	Philip Armes
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	Hugh Blair
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	Thomas Ford
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	Alfred R. Gaul
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	Alan Gray
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. Gore Ouseley
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	Palestrina
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	John Stainer
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE ...	Arthur S. Sullivan
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	Christopher Tye
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. Wesley

PRICE ONE SHILLING
EACH INTROIT MAY BE HAD SEPARATELY

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

WINTHROP ROGERS' EDITION OF CHORAL MUSIC

FOR FESTIVALS, SCHOOLS, CHOIRS

NEW ISSUES General Editor, JULIUS HARRISON

SERIES I.—Treble Voices, &c.

			O.N.	T.-S.
BAINTON, E. L.	The Shepherd's song (acc.)	2 part A	4d.	4d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C.	On a poet's lips I slept (acc.)	3 part A*	4d.	—
BRAHMS	Sapphic Ode (acc.)	3 part A	3d.	—
	A Little Bird (acc.)	3 part AB	4d.	—
	To an æolian harp (acc.)	3 part A	6d.	6d.
DAVIES, IVOR R.	Swinging (acc.)	2 part C	4d.	—
	The warm rain (acc.)	3 part A	5d.	—
	*Begone! dull care (acc.)	2 part C	4d.	4d.
	*The jolly miller (acc.)	2 part C	4d.	4d.
HARRISON, J.	Willie, prithee go to bed (acc.)	2 part B	4d.	—
	I love the jocund dance (unacc.)	3 part A	4d.	—
	A sunny shaft (acc.)	3 part A	5d.	3d.
HOWELL, D.	If you will come to Corté (unacc.)	3 part A	4d.	4d.
PHILLIP, IVAN	Is the moon tired? (acc.)	2 part C	4d.	4d.
POSTON, E.	Balulalow (acc.)	2 part B	4d.	—
ROWLEY, A.	London Square (acc.)	Unison C	3d.	—
	All in this pleasant evening (acc.)	2 part C	4d.	—
SCARLATTI	The Violet (unacc.)	3 part AB	4d.	—
SHAW, MARTIN	Sea Roads (acc.)	Unison C	3d.	3d.
WAGNER	The song of Venus (acc.)	4 part A	6d.	—
WARLOCK, P.	Lullaby (acc.)	3 part A	5d.	—
WILLIAMS, G.	Robin Hood and Little John (acc.)	3 part B	3d.	—
WINN, C.	*O beautiful, my country (acc.)	Unison C	3d.	3d.
	Song of the Music-makers (acc.)	Unison C	4d.	—

A—Over 16 years. B—Under 16 years. C—Under 14 years.
* First verse, unison; second verse, descant; third verse, canon.

SERIES II.—Mixed Voices

S.A.T.B. unless otherwise indicated

BRAHMS	Come soon (unacc.)		4d.	—
BULLOCK, E.	As I walk'd forth one Summer day (acc. ad lib.)		4d.	—
COOKE, G.	Oh, to be in England (unacc.)		5d.	—
	How can I help England? (unacc.)		4d.	—
	Claribel (unacc.)		4d.	—
	Oh! Hush thee my baby (unacc.)		4d.	—
DAVIES, IVOR	May Dew (acc.)		5d.	3d.
HARRISON, J.	Come o'er the bourn (unacc.)		4d.	—
	Blows the wind to-day (unacc.)	8 part	5d.	—
MOUSSORGSKY	Hi! River, broad and bright (unacc.)		4d.	—

SERIES III.—Male Voices

T.T.B.B. unless otherwise indicated

BAIRSTOW, E. C.	Music, when soft voices die (unacc.)		3d.	—
JACOB, G.	The Miller and the Maid (unacc.)		4d.	3d.
MOZART, W. A.	Serenade—In Moorish Lands (Il Seraglio) (unacc.)		4d.	—
WADELEY, F. W.	O Mistress mine (unacc.)		4d.	4d.
WARLOCK, P.	One more river (acc.)		4d.	—

BY THE DEEP, NINE - - Alec Rowley

A Nautical Fantasy for Mixed Voices. Of moderate difficulty. Time of performance, 25 minutes.

Mixed-Voice Arrangement 2*s.* 6*d.
Male-Voice ,, ... 1*s.* 0*d.

Performed by B.B.C., Birmingham, Belfast, Glasgow; Twynham Musical Society, and others.

FIRST PERFORMANCE of Male-Voice arrangement will be given by Barclay's Bank Musical Society, at Queen's Hall, on December 10th. A specimen copy will be sent on receipt of 6d.

WINTHROP ROGERS, Ltd. : HAWKES & SON (London), Ltd.

8, DENMAN STREET, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W.1

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

No. 104.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS AND EDUCATIONAL SERIES

A Handbook for Choralists

By HARVEY GRACE

CONTAINING HINTS ON SIGHT-SINGING AND CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION

Thirty-four Studies specially composed by Edward C. Bairstow, Harold Darke, T. F. Dunhill, Julius Harrison, Geoffrey Shaw, and the Author. Six Rounds by Beethoven

WITH A FOREWORD by SIR WALFORD DAVIES

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

IN THE PRESS:

ADDITIONAL EXERCISES

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

Novello's Classical Songs

By VARIOUS COMPOSERS

VOL. 5

CONTENTS

Blacksmith, The	Brahms
Come unto Him	Handel
Erl-King, The	Schubert
Hark! The echoing air	Purcell
If with all your hearts	Mendelssohn
I'll sail upon the Dog-star	Purcell
In the golden morn	Tschaikowsky
King of Thule, The	Berlioz
Knotting Song, The	Purcell
Ladybird	Schumann
Let me wander	Handel
Little Spinner, The	Mozart
Lonely am I now	Weber
Lonely woods	Lully
Or let the merry bells	Handel
Questioning	Salvator Rosa
Serenade, A	Schubert
Shepherd, The	Weber
Shepherds and Maidens	Lotti
Sorrow	Pergolesi
Sweet Echo	Lawes
Sweet Rose and Lily	Handel
Talisman	Schumann
Where the Bee sucks	Sullivan
Willow Song, The	Sullivan

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

PAPER BOARDS - - - - - - THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

An Important Choral Work

ANTONIN DVORÁK : 13 MORAVIAN DUETS

Op. 32

New arrangement for Women's Voices with English and German Words

By ERWIN LENDVAI

1. Watch, love	Ich schwimm' dir davon	7. Brooklet and Tears ...	Wasser und Weinen
2. Speed thee, swallow ...	Fliege, Vöglein	8. The Modest Lassie ...	Die Bescheidene
3. An my scythe were whetted sharp and keen ...	Wenn die Sense scharf geschliffen ware	9. Ringlet and Wreathlet ...	Der Ring
		10. Show thy verdure ...	Grüne, du Gras !
4. Ere we part, love, kiss me	Freundlich lass uns scheiden	11. The Captured Bride	Die Gefangene
5. Small cur hamlet ...	Der kleine Acker	12. Consolation	Trost
6. The forsaken lassie ...	Die Taube auf dem Ahorn	13. The Pleading Rose ...	Wilde Rose

Vocal Score Nos. 1- 4, Vol. I. ... ... 4*s.* 0*d.* net
" " " 5- 9, Vol. II. ... ... 4*s.* 0*d.* net
" " " 10-13, Vol. III. ... ... 4*s.* 0*d.* net
Voice Parts S.1, S.2, A.1, A.2, to each number separately, 3*d.* to 4*d.* net each part.

ALFRED LENGNICK & CO., LTD.

14, BERNERS STREET British Assignees of N. Simrock's Editions LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED

Solos from the Secular Works of G. F. HANDEL

Set 1

SOPRANO

AIR	The soft, complaining flute ...	St. Cecilia's Day
RECIT.	Ye verdant plains	Acis and Galatea
AIR	Hush, ye pretty warbling choir ...	" "
RECIT.	O, didst thou know	" "
AIR	As when the dove laments her love	"
AIR	Gentle Morpheus, son of night ...	Alceste
RECIT.	Ah me ! What refuge	Semele
AIR	O Jove ! In pity	"
AIR	Oft, on a plat of rising ground ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Far from all resort of mirth ...	"
AIR	Come, O time	Time and Truth

CONTRALTO

AIR	But hark ! the heavenly sphere ...	Semele
AIR	Hence, Iris, hence away	"
RECIT.	Vain the delights of age	Time and Truth
AIR	On the valleys, dark and cheerless	"
RECIT.	Most cruel decree...	Theodora
AIR	The raptured soul	"
RECIT.	Oh bright example	"
AIR	Bane of virtue	"
AIR	As with rosy steps	"
RECIT.	Hence, vain deluding joys ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Sometimes let gorgeous tragedy	"

TENOR

RECIT.	I know thy virtues	Theodora
AIR	Descend, kind pity	"
AIR	Lovely beauty, close those eyes ...	Time and Truth
AIR	There let Hymen	L'Allegro
AIR	Ye swift minutes...	Alceste
AIR	Where shall I seek	Acis and Galatea
AIR	Sharp Violins proclaim	St. Cecilia's Day

BASS

AIR	Ye fleeting shades	Alceste
RECIT.	If I give thee honour due ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Mirth, admit me of thy crew ...	"
RECIT.	I rage	Acis and Galatea
AIR	O ruddier than the cherry ...	" "
AIR	Cease to beauty to be suing ...	" "
RECIT.	The hand of time	Time and Truth
AIR	Loathsome urns, disclose ...	" "
AIR	From the heart that feels ...	" "
RECIT.	'Tis Dioclesian's natal day ...	Theodora
AIR	Go, my faithful soldier	"
AIR	Wide spread his name	"

EACH BOOK, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

EYE TRAINING IN MUSIC

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, No. 105)

A course to familiarise children with musical notation and to afford practice in thinking and singing the sounds which the symbols represent. (To be worked in conjunction with "Ear Training" Primer No. 101.)

STEPS I. II. and III.
FOR CHILDREN OF FROM FOUR OR FIVE TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price, 2s. 6d.

MY MUSIC BOOK

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series No. 105a)

The pupil's book to be read with STEP III. of "Eye Training Course."

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

BOOKS 4 and 5

School Marches (easy)

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE

CONTENTS

BOOK 4

Brighton Camp ... ... English Air
James the Second's March "The Dancing Master," 1690
John Brown's Body ... American Marching Song
Lady Frances Nevill's Delight "The Dancing Master," 1690
March ... ... E. Duncan
March ("Alceste") ... ... Gluck
March ("St. Cecilia's Day") ... ... Handel
March ("Idomeneo") ... ... Mozart
Marching Through Georgia ... ... H. C. Work
Old King Cole ... ... Traditional
Playing at Soldiers ... ... Arnold Krug
See, the Conquering Hero ("Judas Maccabæus") ... Handel
Soldier's March ... ... Schumann
The Loud Tattoo ... ... Dibdin
The Soldier-Boys ... ... Myles B. Foster
Tom the Piper ... ... H. A. C.

BOOK 5

Mall Sims ... ... English Air, 16th Century
March ("Riccardo") ... ... Handel
March ... ... Haydn
March ("King Arthur") ... ... Purcell
March ("Notturno") ... ... Spohr
Marching ... ... S. P. Waddington
Minstrels' March ("Tannhäuser") ... ... Wagner
Nursery Rhymes ... ... Traditional
Soldiers' March ("William Tell") ... ... Rossini
The Campbells are Coming ... Scottish Traditional Air
The Lincolnshire Poacher ... ... English Air
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Toreador ("Carmen") ... ... Bizet
When Johnny Comes Marching Home English Air
Ye Sons of Albion ... ... English Folk-Song

Price 1s. 6d. each Book

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST REPRINTED

COMPLETE EDITION of KING ARTHUR

OR

THE BRITISH WORTHY

AN OPERA

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited, and the Pianoforte Accompaniment adapted from the Orchestral Score, by WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS

Price Three Shillings

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

An Abridged
Concert Edition of CARMEN

AN OPERA FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

By GEORGES BIZET

Selected and adapted by W. McNAUGHT

The Libretto from the English Version of the complete Opera by
LUCIA YOUNG

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.
Tonic Sol-fa, price 2*s.* Book of Words, Price 41*s.* 8*d.* per 100.
STRING PARTS, 29*s.* 6*d.*
Newly Printed Full Score and Wind Parts on Hire.

The time of performance is about 1 hour 15 minutes. For this edition a new full score has been prepared with cues, so that the orchestra may either be full, or reduced to: Strings, 2 Flutes (each changing to Picc.), 1 Oboe (1st, changing to English Horn), 2 Clarinets, 1 Bassoon (1st); 2 Horns (1st and 2nd), 2 Trumpets (or Cornets), 1 Trombone (2nd); Timpani; Percussion.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTION FOR . . . .
CONCERT PERFORMANCE of FAUST

AN OPERA
WRITTEN BY
JULES BARBIER and MICHEL CURRÉ
ENGLISH WORDS BY HENRY F. CHORLEY
The Music by Ch. GOUNOD
Edited and arranged by JOHN POINTER

This Selection takes about 50 minutes in performance.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS
Tonic Sol-fa, 1*s.* 6*d.* String Parts, 19*s.* 6*d.* Wind Parts, 42*s.* 11*d.*
Book of Words, 9*s.* 6*d.* per 100

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Breitkopf & Härtel

MUSICAL LITERATURE

	s.	d.
BIOGRAPHICAL
BACH-SCHWEITZER. With a Preface by Ch. M. Widor (English translation by Ernest Newman). In two volumes, paper covers	18	0
bound edition (two vols.)	25	0
TEXT-BOOKS ON THE THEORY OF MUSIC
JADASSOHN. Manual of Harmony ...	5	0
— Exercises and Examples for the Studies in Harmony appertaining to the Manual of Harmony	3	0
— Manual of Single, Double, Triple, and Quadruple Counterpoint	3	0
— Exercises and Examples for the Studies in Counterpoint appertaining to the Treatise on Counterpoint	3	0
— A Course of Instruction on Canon and Fugue	4	0
— A Course of Instruction in Instrumentation	5	0
— A Practical Course in Ear Training, or a Guide for acquiring Relative and absolute Pitch	2	0
— Manual of Musical Form	3	0
OLDENBARNEVELT. Art of Breathing	3	0
RICHTER. Manual of Harmony ...	4	0
RIEMANN. Text-book of Simple and Double Counterpoint...	5	0
KARL SCHEIDEMANTEL. Voice Culture	2	0
SHEPARD. How to Modulate. A simple and systematic guide in modulating from any key to any other; and a review of the principles of artistic modulation as applied in general composition	2	0
MUSIC GUIDES
BACH. Some Notes on his Church Cantatas by Ebenezer Prout	1	0
CHRIST-ISELIN. The Mystery of Cremona Varnish	1	0
RÖCKL. What does RICHARD WAGNER relate concerning the origin of his Nibelungen poem and how does he interpret it?	1	0
— What does RICHARD WAGNER relate concerning the origin of his musical composition of the Ring of the Nibelungen?	1	0
WEINGARTNER. On the Performance of Beethoven's Symphonies... ...	5	0
— On Conducting	2	6
WOTTON. A Dictionary of Foreign Musical Terms and Handbook of Orchestral Instruments, paper covers	3	0 bound edition	4	6
THEMATIC CATALOGUE
BEETHOVEN, by GUSTAV NOTTEBOHM (together with BIBLIOTHECA BEETHOVENIANA, by Kastner and Frimmel) (German text)	13	6

British & Continental Music Agencies, Ltd.
Sole and exclusive Agency for the House of BREITKOPF & HÄRTEL, 125 Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C. 2

JUST PUBLISHED

FIFTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited and arranged with
PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT
by ARTHUR SOMERVELL

AN ELEGY UPON THE DEATH OF MR. THOMAS FARMER, B.M.
FLY SWIFT, YE HOURS
I ENVY NOT A MONARCH'S FATE
IN CLORIS ALL SOFT CHARMS AGREE
THE KNOTTING SONG
LOVELY ALBINA
MY HEART, WHENEVER YOU APPEAR
NO WATCH, DEAR CELIA
NOT ALL MY TORMENTS
OH! FAIR CEDARIA
SILVIA, NOW YOUR SCORN GIVE OVER
SOLITUDE
SWEET, BE NO LONGER SAD
SWEET TYRANNESS
TURN THEN THINE EYES

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 63

Eighteen Songs

BY

G. F. HANDEL

CONTENTS

Angels, ever bright and fair ("Theodora")
Art thou troubled ("Rodelinda")
Come, ever-smiling liberty ("Judas Maccabæus")
Come, gladsome Spring ("Xerxes")
Come unto Him ("The Messiah")
Hear thou my weeping ("Rinaldo")
How beautiful are the feet ("The Messiah")
I know that my Redeemer liveth ("The Messiah")
Let me wander not unseen ("L'Allegro")
Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson")
Lord of our being ("Rinaldo")
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ("Joshua")
Or let the merry bells ring round ("L'Allegro")
Rejoice greatly ("The Messiah")
Smiling dawn of happy days, The ("Jephtha")
Sweet rose and lily ("Theodora")
Verdant meadows ("Alcina")
Where'er you walk ("Semele")

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The G. & T.

Music Lending Library

12/6 PER ANNUM

ENTITLES YOU TO BORROW FOR ANY PERIOD AND AS OFTEN AS YOU WISH, THE PICK OF THE WORLD'S MUSIC.

Vocal Scores, Piano Scores, Chamber Music.
Vocal, Piano, Organ and Instrumental Albums.
Vocal, Piano, Organ and Instrumental Solos.
Latest Dance and Musical Comedy Songs and Selections, &c., &c., &c.

Write for Prospectus to:—
(Dept. N.)
34, Percy Street, London, W.1

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

By BASIL HARWOOD

		s.	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB	2	6
2.	COMMUNION IN F (on the Hymn-Tune "Irish")	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE IN D	1	6
4.	PÆAN	2	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSIONTIDE (on the "Old 25th" Psalm Tune)	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT (on the Hymn-Tune "Bedford")	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES IN A AND F	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D, for Organ and Orchestra	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR	3	0
13.	FANTASIA "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY	3	0
15.	IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
16.	WEDDING MARCH	2	0
17.	THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
18.	VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
19.	PROCESSIONAL	2	0
20.	THREE SHORT PIECES	2	0
21.	IN EXITU ISRAEL	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

For your throat

Allenburys
Glycerine & Black Currant PASTILLES
Your Chemist sells them
8D & 1/3 Per Box

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33RD 1,000

Vocal Score, 2*s.* 6*d.* Choruses only, 1*s.* 3*d.*
BAND PARTS MAY BE HIRED

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES

Unison and Part Songs. Church and Instrumental music.

FULL CATALOGUE Post Free ON APPLICATION

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS, LTD., 31 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

KEEP YOUR VOICE AT CONCERT PITCH

Noteworthy singers pay tribute to Evans' Pastilles, as a sure way to soothe the throat and eradicate huskiness.
Besides clearing the voice and enriching the tone, Evans' Pastilles counteract the effect of overstrain by allowing the vocal cords to relax naturally.
Always keep a box of Evans' Pastilles handy, and you have a sure relief from the throat irritations which beset singer and speaker without warning.

COUPON

Fill up this coupon to-day. Send it to us in an unsealed envelope (½d. stamp), and by return we will forward you a free sample packet of Evans' Pastilles. Test them yourself at our expense.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

.....

From chemists everywhere. Made in England to a formula of the Liverpool Throat Hospital.

EVANS SONS, LESCHER & WEBB, LTD., Hanover Street, Liverpool.

EVANS' THROAT Pastilles

Write for Catalogue and Terms to your nearest Agents.

Expressive of every Mood & Fancy!

The perfect interpretation of all music depends upon the possession of a perfect pianoforte.
Only a Chappell, with its 100% true tone and its responsive touch, will enable you to obtain the maximum musical satisfaction.
Let your Piano be a Chappell.

UPRIGHT MODELS from 65 gns.
GRANDS MODELS from 122 gns.

Your old Piano taken in part exchange. Convenient Deferred Terms available.

CHAPPELL
PIANOS

THE CHAPPELL PIANO CO., LTD.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

FARWELL, E.

'ALL YE WHO ARE TO MIRTH INCLINED" ... ... 1½d.

SAWYER, F. J.

"I HEARD THE ANGELS YESTER-NIGHT" ... ... 2d.

(Solo or duet) with accompaniment of Pianoforte (or Harp) and Harmonium ad lib.

SAWYER, F. J.

"SOFTLY FELL THE SHADES OF EVENING" ... ... 2d.

SAWYER, F. J.

'CAROLS for the SEVEN FEASTS of CHRISTMAS," for 2 or 4 voices each 1d.
Complete 4d.

1. For Christmas Day
2. For the Feast of S. Stephen
3. For the Feast of S. John the Evangelist
4. For the Feast of the Holy Innocents
5. For the Feast of the Circumcision
6. For the Feast of the Epiphany
7. For the Feast of the Purification

SAWYER, F. J.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Complete 6d.

1. I heard the Bells of Heaven all Ringing
2. Rocking so slowly
3. Three Wise Kings of the Rhine
4. While Shepherds Watched
5. Good Christians all rejoice
6. God bless you all good Gentlemen

BYRD, W.

"O MAGNUM MYSTERIUM." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

Motet for four voices for Christmas and the Circumcision.

COOPER, Dr. R.

"GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

A short motet for Christmas Day for four equal voices (S.S.S.A.).

WRIGHT, T.

"NESCIENS MATER." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

Motet for four men's voices on the plainsong for Christmas and the Circumcision.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Friday, November 1, 1929.

By Royal Appointment Established 1804

CHALLEN

By Royal Appointment Established 1804

BRITAIN'S LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF GRAND PIANOS

AS SUPPLIED TO THE B.B.C.

PRICES FROM 90 GUINEAS

PRICES FROM 90 GUINEAS

CHALLEN'S PIANOS LTD.

13 & 14, HANOVER ST., REGENT ST., W.1 'Phone MAYFAIR 4218

The School Music Review

No. 449 | OCTOBER, 1929 | Price 3d.

Annual Subscription, Post Free, Four Shillings

(PUBLISHED THE 15TH DAY OF THE MONTH.)

CONTENTS.

THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD ... ... By G. Kirkham Jones
PITCH TRAINING FOR PIANISTS ... ... By Norah Bore
MODEL KEYBOARD TEACHING ... ... By Florence Axtens NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM IN CHANTING

MUSIC

"A CHERRY": Junior Song ... ... H. A. C.
"HE SHALL FEED HIS FLOCK": Unison Song ... ... Handel
From "The Messiah"
"HYMN FOR CHRISTMAS DAY": Carol ... ... J. Goss
Arr. with Descant
"TWILIGHT SHADOWS": Two-Part Song ... Arr. by Alfred Moffat
(Old Alsatian Melody)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

PREFERRED
BY · THE · WORLD'S GREATEST PIANISTS

C. BECHSTEIN PIANO CO. LTD.

ONLY ADDRESS–

BECHSTEIN HOUSE
65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
LONDON, W.1

Telephone:
MAYFAIR 3807.

Telegrams:
BECHSTEIN, WESDO, LONDON

London: Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Friday, November 1st, 1929.

MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1042

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

DECEMBER 1, 1929

Directors: W. BÖSENDORFER C. E. GALLARD

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

BUSONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions".....

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree.".

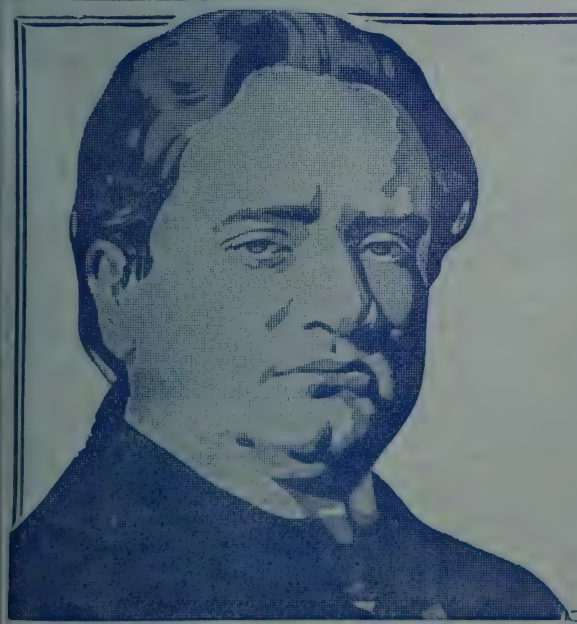
PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful".....

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing".

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1



MARK HAMBOURG'S

Tribute to

ROGERS

PIANOS

"I HAVE known the Rogers Pianos for many years, but your new models are far in advance of previous experience. Their tonal qualities and remarkably responsive touch are a delight to the musician, and I can most thoroughly recommend them to all who require a really musical instrument, and one which will last a lifetime." - - - - - -

You are cordially invited to our new Showrooms.

GEORGE ROGERS AND SONS

68 NEW BOND STREET LONDON, W.1

THE

"HUNDRED BEST"

Short Classics for Pianoforte

Books 1 to 4 Edited by CUTHBERT WHITEMORE

IN SEVEN GRADED BOOKS 2/6 each

Books 5 to 7 Edited by HAROLD SAMUEL

CZERNY

The "Hundred Best" from Czerny

IN FIVE GRADED BOOKS

Books 1, 2, and 3, 2/6 each

Books 4 and 5, 3/6 each

SELECTED, GRADED AND EDITED BY

FREDERICK MOORE, Royal Academy of Music.

MAR ADUK BARTON, Royal College of Music.

WADDINGTON COOKE, Guildhall School of Music.

THEMATIC LIST GIVING FULL PARTICULARS ON APPLICATION

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS, LTD.,

LONDON: 36 Wigmore Street, W.1. — GLASGOW: 152 Buchanan Street — NEW YORK: 114 Fifth Avenue

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 1042—Vol. 71
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage

DECEMBER 1 1929

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

Royal Choral Society

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

PATRON: HIS MAJESTY THE KING

FIFTY-NINTH SEASON—1929-30

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1929, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS MEGAN FOSTER
MR. WALTER GLYNNE
MR. JOHN GOSS

Conductor - - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1930, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - Handel

MISS DORA LABBETTE
MISS OLGA HALEY
MR. WALTER WIDDOP
MR. NORMAN ALLIN

Double Chorus of 850 Voices

THE NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

At the Organ, Mr. R. ARNOLD GREIR

Conductor - - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT

Stalls, 10*s.* 6*d.*; Arena, 7*s.* 6*d.*; Balcony (Reserved), 5*s.*; Unreserved, 3*s.* 6*d.*; Gallery (Promenade), 2*s.*

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (four lines)

Patrons:
HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

President:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal:
JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LENT TERM

BEGINS THURSDAY, 9th JANUARY, 1930

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA. Conducted by Sir HENRY J. WOOD, D. Mus. Tuesdays and Fridays, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE. Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' COURSE. For the Training of Conductors.

OPERA COURSE. For the Training of Operatic Singers.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

SCHOLARSHIPS. Seventy-two Scholarships and Exhibitions for all subjects.

L.R.A.M. Examinations during the Summer, Christmas, and Easter Vacations.

Prospectuses, Entry Forms, &c., on application:
A. ALGER BELL, Secretary.

THE Royal College of Music

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, K.C.V.O., M.A., D.Mus., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

EASTER TERM

The Easter Term will commence on Monday, January 13th, 1930. Entrance Examination on January 8th.

A copy of the Prospectus and all particulars may be obtained on application to the Registrar.

COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION
is provided by Teachers of the highest eminence.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT
Classes are held for pupils under sixteen, whose time is also occupied by their general education.

SPECIAL CLASSES ARE HELD FOR:
Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet.

OPERATIC CLASSES
The College possesses a fully equipped College Opera Theatre for an audience of 600.

SCHOLARSHIPS, EXHIBITIONS
Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are provided from a permanent endowment fund.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES
There are Vocal and Instrumental Ensemble Classes, and Pupils sufficiently advanced in this work are given the opportunity of putting their knowledge into practice at College Concerts.

A.R.C.M.

Examinations for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) are held three times a year, in December, April, and September.
Full particulars obtainable from the Registrar.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

The Associated Board

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS* (Syllabus A)
Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 12, 1930.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS* (Syllabus B)
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 5, 1930.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS
will be held in March-April, June-July, and November-December each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:
THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (2,027th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on December 3, and every Tuesday at 1 o'clock.

THE

Royal College of Organists

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. Examination are:

Fantasia "Valet will ich dir Geben," in B flat, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 2; Augener, p. 863; Peters, Vol. 7, No. 50.)

Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Alan Gray. (Stainer & Bell.)

Allegro con grazia (5-4 time) from Symphony No. 6, Pathétique, Tchaikovsky, arranged by Charles Macpherson. This arrangement only. Martin's arrangements, No. 56. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January 1930, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1929.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 5, for Associateship by December 12. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, proposal forms, duly filled up, must be sent in by November 28. No names will be entered after the above dates.

The Distribution of Diplomas by the President, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, will take place on Saturday, January 18, at 3 o'clock.

The President will deliver an address, after which, Mr. H. Goss Custard, Organist of Liverpool Cathedral, will play pieces selected for the July Examinations, 1930. There will be an informal Conversazione after the Recital.

In conjunction with the Incorporated Association of Organists, the Royal College of Organists has arranged a Lecture on "The Choice of Church Music," by Dr. Harold E. Darke, to be given at the Rushworth Hall, Liverpool, on Monday, December 2, at 7.30 p.m. Members of the College are cordially invited to attend. No tickets required.

For the convenience of members, past examination papers have been bound in one volume: Fellowship and Associateship Organ Work, January, 1913, to July, 1927; Paper Work, July, 1924, to July, 1927. Price 4s., to be obtained by members only.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the Revised TESTS set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily, 10 to 5; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7 H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Guildhall School of Music

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4

JUBILEE CELEBRATION YEAR, 1930

PRINCIPAL - SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £12 12s. and £14 14s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free. New Students can commence at any time.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.
Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of forty-three senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

THE TEACHING OF TEACHING.—SIX PSYCHOLOGY LECTURES by the PRINCIPAL. Alternate Wednesday evenings at 7. Open to Students and also to NON-STUDENTS.

Also Mr. FREDERICK MOORE alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.
For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

ST. JAMES'S, Muswell Hill, N. Organ Recital by Mr. H. A. Bate, Dec. 7, at 5.45 p.m. Service of Stanford's and Parry's music, Dec. 11, at 8 p.m., organist, E. T. Cook, Mus.B.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923

PRESIDENT ... ... H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
PRINCIPAL ... ... R. J. FORBES
REGISTRAR ... ... JOHN HOLME

Students are requested to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Visitor ... SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., MUS.DOC. LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. MUS. (ED.).

SESSION 1928-1929

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
PARADISE STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Manchester School of Music

Founded by J. A. CROSS (1892)
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Director: LEOPOLD H. CROSS, M.A.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, Aural Training, &c.

Students prepared for all Royal Academy and Trinity College Exams.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

FOUNDED 1913

PRESIDENT FOR 1929: G. THALBEN-BALL, F.R.C.O.
Organist, Temple Church.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, are eligible. Register of vacant appointments. All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary,

DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5

THE SCOTTISH
NATIONAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SESSION 1929-1930

The Session consists of Three Terms: Monday, September 9; Monday, December 2; Monday, March 10.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

New Address: GROTRIAN HALL STUDIOS, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

PRESIDENT ... ... A. NETTLEFOLD
PRINCIPAL ... ... DAVID GODELL

Instruction in all Vocal Subjects. A thorough musical education if desired.

Special Voice-curing Courses for all voice defects, caused by overstrain and incorrect production.

Practice with Accompaniste can be obtained at the School at a moderate fee.

Particulars from Secretary, Miss M. HEATH. Welbeck 6846

The School of English Church Music

President : His Grace The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury

COLLEGE OF ST. NICOLAS, CHISLEHURST

(Ten miles from Charing Cross)

Warden :

Sydney H. Nicholson, M.V.O., M.A., D. Mus., F.R.C.O.

Courses of Lectures on subjects connected with Church Music :

Mondays, 5 p.m. Miss J. M. Forbes Close (Plain-Song).
Tuesdays, 5 p.m. The Chaplain (Musical Requirements of the Prayer Book).
Wednesdays, 9 p.m. Mr. Harvey Grace (Practical Requirements of the Parish Church Organist).
Thursdays, 5 p.m. The Warden (History of Church Music).

Choral Services in College Chapel daily at 7.30 a.m. and 7 p.m. (except Wednesday evenings).

Choir Practices daily at 6 p.m. (except Wednesday).

Sunday Services at St. Sepulchre's, Holborn, 10.30, 11, and 6.

Resident Students (men only) can be received at the College on moderate inclusive terms, and arrangements are made to suit the convenience of those taking a course of general musical training in London, or those engaged in business during the day.

Lectures, Services, and Choir Practices are open to all Students, resident and non-resident, men and women.

For further particulars, scale of fees, &c., apply College of St. Nicolas, Elmstead Lane, Chislehurst, Kent.

Tel. : Ravensbourne 2514. H. L. A. Green, Secretary.

LONDON MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER

President : H.H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA
Chairman :
Dr. R. Walker Robson, F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
Vice-Chairman : Dr. W. J. Phillips, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

QUARTER-CENTENARY FESTIVAL

MARCH-APRIL, 1930

Choral, Vocal, Piano, Strings, Organ, Elocution, Theory, Composition, Country Dancing Competitions, &c.

Special Classes for Parents of Junior Candidates.

Prizes include the Daily News £100 Scholarship, Two valuable Trinity College of Music Exhibitions, many Bursaries, Gold Medals, Cups, Shields, and numerous other prizes.

In response to applications from teachers resident more than twenty-five miles from London, where no Competition Festival already exists, the Committee are prepared to hold Local Preliminary Competitions, if sufficient entries.

Syllabus from the Hon. Secretary :

Mr. T. LESTER JONES, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11

Principal: G. F. O'Riordan, B.Sc.(Eng.), M.I.Mech.E., M.I.A.E.
Head of Music Department :
W. Herbert Hickox, Mus.D., F.R.C.O., F.G.S.M.

Classes in Theory of Music, Harmony and Counterpoint.
University Courses for Degrees and Higher Examinations in Music, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M., Associated Board of the R.A.M. and R.C.M.
Class and Private Lessons in Musical Appreciation and Aural Training, Solo and Sight Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, and Double-Bass.
Orchestra and Choral Class.
Lessons on Concert Organ (reconstructed and modernised).
Preparation for R.C.O. Examinations.
Special Classes for Teachers (recognized by the London County Council).
Next Term begins January 13, 1930.

Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

SCARBOROUGH
COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

MAY 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 1930

GRAND HALL, THE SPA

Solo, Duet, Quartet, Choral, Orchestral, School Choir, Male, Female, and Mixed-Voice Choir Competitions.

Syllabus, now ready, may be had from :

Mr. F. CROMACK, Sec., Scarborough Townsmen's Association
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough

TO STUDENTS IN MUSIC

TUITION by Correspondence for London and Durham Matriculation, Oxford Responsions and Cambridge Previous.

For Terms address :

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A., Hons. Oxford and Lond., 14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

CHELTENHAM SPA

OPEN COMPETITIVE

MUSICAL FESTIVAL

And Folk-Dancing

MAY 7, 8, 9, AND 10, 1930

Syllabus (post free 1d.) from

HON. SEC., TOWN HALL BUREAU, CHELTENHAM SPA

OR FROM PRINCIPAL MUSIC DEALERS

ESTABLISHED SINGING MASTER, seeking wider opportunities, can condense time table to undertake ADDITIONAL WORK.

QUALIFICATIONS, &c.—Soloist, A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), L.R.A.M. (V.C. and Class Singing), Registered T.R.C. (German, French, and Italian phonetics; experienced correspondence coach; ex-pupil Plunket Greene, Gaetano Loria, and Thomas Meux, R.A.M.).

POSSIBLE DISTRICTS.—London, East Midlands, South Yorks or Manchester or Birmingham areas.

SUGGESTIONS.—Purchase of connection, visiting engagement; any suitable form of assistance or co-operation.

Fuller particulars according to requirements, mutual confidence, BM/BWH London, W.C.1.

HASTINGS MUSICAL FESTIVAL (Competitive)

March 27 to April 2, 1930

CONDUCTORS CHORAL SOCIETIES, send for Syllabus. Gratis. Entries close Feb. 10.

40, Havelock Road. Hastings.

Lady Isham, John Lockey } Hon. Secs.

MUSIC REPAIRED and Re-covered.—Book up to 24 pages, 3*d.*; Services, Masses, &c., 6*d.* Strongly and well done. Large or small quantities. Collins, 22, Calthorpe Street, London, W.C.1.

QUEEN'S HALL
Sole Lessees—Chappell & Co., Ltd.

B.B.C. SYMPHONY CONCERTS

B.B.C. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Principal Violin—ARTHUR CATTERALL

Friday, Dec. 6, at 8
Conductor ... ... FRANZ VON HOESSLIN
STILES-ALLEN

Wednesday, Dec. 11, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
"OMAR KHAYYAM" ... Granville Bantock
OLGA HALEY, PARRY JONES, DENNIS NOBLE
THE NATIONAL CHORUS

Tickets: 12*s.*, 8*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.* 9*d.*, 3*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.* 4*d.* At Agents, Chappell's, Queen's Hall, and The British Broadcasting Corp., Savoy Hill, W.C.2.

QUEEN'S HALL

B.B.C. SYMPHONY CONCERTS

(Second Series of 13 Concerts)

Friday, Jan. 17, at 8
Conductor ... ... SIR LANDON RONALD SZIGETI

Wednesday, Jan. 22, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
BENNO MOISEIWITSCH LAURI KENNEDY

Friday, Jan. 31, at 8
Conductor ... ... ERNEST ANSERMET
BERNARD SHORE

Wednesday, Feb. 5, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
VICTOR HELY-HUTCHINSON

Friday, Feb. 14, at 8
Conductor ... ... SIR HENRY J. WOOD
BÉLA BARTÓK

Friday, Feb. 21, at 8
Conductor ... ... HERMANN SCHERCHEN
WALTER FREY

Friday, Feb. 28, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
"SOLOMON" ... ... Handel
DORA LABBETTE TUDOR DAVIES
STILES-ALLEN KEITH FALKNER
THE NATIONAL CHORUS

Friday, March 7, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt
ARTHUR CATTERALL LAURI KENNEDY

Friday, March 14, at 8
Conductor ... ... SIR HENRY J. WOOD
MARIA OLCZEWSKA

Friday, March 21, at 8
Conductors { SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., K.C.V.O.
SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
LIONEL TERTIS

Friday, March 28, at 8
Conductor ... ... PEREZ CASAS
A SPANISH PROGRAMME

Friday, April 4, at 8
Conductor ... SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bt.
WANDA LANDOWSKA

Friday, April 11, at 8
Conductor ... ... SIR HENRY J. WOOD
SYMPHONY No. 8 ... ... Mahler
ELSIE SUDDABY MAY BLYTH
IRENE MORDEN MURIEL BRUNSKILL
CLARA SERENA WALTER WIDDOP
HAROLD WILLIAMS ROBERT EASTON
THE NATIONAL CHORUS

B.B.C. SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Subscription Tickets for the Thirteen Concerts: £5 5*s.*, £4 5*s.*, £3 5*s.* Single Tickets, 12*s.*, 8*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.* 9*d.*, 3*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.* 4*d.* At Agents, Chappell's, Queen's Hall, and The British Broadcasting Corp., Savoy Hill, W.C.2.

The London Oratorio and Concert Association

FOUNDED 1912

THE ASSOCIATION exists for the purpose of bringing Secretaries of CHORAL SOCIETIES, OPERATIC and MUSICAL SOCIETIES, &c., into direct communication with capable and reliable Artists, without the intervention of an Agent, and is based on the co-operation of its members. Choral Societies engaging a quartet of soloists for any work, can have the advantage of preliminary rehearsal of the principals by the musical director.

Musical Director:
Mr. HUBERT BATH

For Prospectus and List of Artists, address Secretary:
26, GUILFORD STREET, RUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

ALEXANDRA PALACE, Wood Green, N.22

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, at 8 p.m.

Re-opening of the Grand Organ

BY THE
RIGHT HON. THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON
Accompanied by the Sheriffs.

Organ Recital - Mr. G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.
Vocalist - Miss ALICE LILLEY

Seats, 5*s.* 9*d.*, 3*s.* 6*d.* (numbered and reserved), obtainable from the Box Office, Alexandra Palace. Telephone, Tudor 5000. Unreserved, 2*s.* 4*d.* and 1*s.* 6*d.*, Promenade, 1*s.*, obtainable at doors on the night only.

SUNDAY Afternoon RECITALS at 3

Dec. 8 & 15 Recitalist, Mr. REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.
Dec. 22 ,, Dr. G. F. BROCKLESS, F.R.C.O., A.R.A.M.
Dec. 29 ,, Mr. WM. PARKYN

Admission Sixpence

ST. PETER'S CHURCH, EATON SQUARE, S.W.1

Saturday, Dec. 28, at 3 p.m. Christmas Organ Recital by Mr. C. H. Trevor.

Sunday, Dec. 29, at 6.30 p.m. Carols.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD"

SIGHT-READING LESSONS

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS
ALSO SHORT COURSE OF PERSONAL LESSONS

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

Music: "Goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint. Cannot fail to be of service."

ALSO SINGING LESSONS

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON. 'Phone: Croydon 2703
And WEEKES'S STUDIOS, 14, HANOVER ST., W.1

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

FOR TERMS WRITE, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS
Glenholme, Hessle High Road, Hull, Yorks.

Modern Corr. College

Principal - - ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

MUS. BAC.

Value of a Degree

(1.) Qualifies for a good Church or Cathedral appointment.
(2.) Qualifies a Teacher to be placed on the Graduate Scale in Secondary Schools.
(3.) A great help in building up a COUNTY CONNECTION.

DURHAM If a Student can offer a Foreign Language, only Two other subjects are necessary. For the EXERCISE a String Quartet can be offered.

LONDON Music can be offered as a Subject for Matric.

DUBLIN The whole Series of Examinations can be taken in 12 months.

MATRIC. :

Successes - - 166

Notice to Prospective Students

We should require 10 to 12 PAGES of the Musical Times to publish all the letters of appreciation we have received from successful students. This month we publish A FEW of those received from successful Students at L.R.A.M. —— A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte Teaching). ——

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. (Piano Teaching)

L.R.A.M.—"I have been successful in both my papers. I obtained 81%, whilst at the previous Examination—under other tuition—I only reached 66%."

L.R.A.M.—"The lessons which I received from you in Phrasing, Fingering, Touch, Pedalling, Teaching, Notes on 'Method in Study' and corrections to paper, were excellent and thorough in every detail."

L.R.A.M.—"I received great help in Musical Form, Art of Teaching, Phrasing, Fingering, and Questions on Touch. Every correction is written out distinctly and clearly so that anyone can understand. A really fine system, and I recommend it to anyone desirous of obtaining the L.R.A.M."

A.R.C.M.—"I obtained 123 marks out of the 136 allotted for this portion of the Examination, and the credit must go to your Course of Preparation lessons."

A.R.C.M.—"I passed all my Paper Work last week at the A.R.C.M. without any trouble, thanks to your coaching."

A.R.C.M.—"I succeeded in passing in all branches of the Paper Work, viz.: Course of Instruction, Ornaments, Terms, &c. I wish to testify to the value of your Course, to the care and thoroughness of the preparation, and the care shown in the marking of the papers."

A.T.C.L.—"I gained the following marks:

ART OF TEACHING ...	94
RUDIMENTS	89

A.T.C.L.—"I have gained the Diploma (A.T.C.L.), obtaining 93 marks Art of Teaching."

F.T.C.L.—July, 1928. Two Students of the M.C.C. gained F.T.C.L.

——— ALL OUR SUCCESSES ARE BY CORRESPONDENCE ———

Modern Corr. College

Cropwell Bishop, NOTTS.

Northern Corr. College

Principal: ALBERT JOWETT. Mus. Bac., Oxon.

COMPLETE COURSE in COMPOSITION

A most notable success was the celebrated Composer and Pianist,

WILLIAM BAINES

who was entirely trained by Mr. JOWETT

COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS

MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Trinity College, &c.

SPECIALIST TEACHING IN SINGING, VOICE-PRODUCTION, INTERPRETATION

Diagnosis of Faults and COMPLETE ERADICATION OF FAULTS

PERSONAL TUITION IN

Leeds, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Harrogate

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED

Lyrics Set to Music, Accompaniments Written to Songs, &c.

STATE EXAM. OR SUBJECT

HEATHFIELD, MOORLAND DRIVE, HARROGATE ROAD, LEEDS

MUSIC and MODERN EDUCATION

NEW YEAR VACATION COURSE

JANUARY 6TH to 10TH 1930

AIM. This course is designed to assist Teachers of Music to survey modern developments in Music and Education and to apply these to their individual problems.

NORAH H. BORE,

B.A., L.R.A.M.,

will give a series of lectures making a Scientific Approach to the Problems of the Music Teacher. Musical Material—Musical Reactions — Musical Types — Musical Laws — Musical Experience.

MABEL CARNELL,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

has planned a course correlating modern trends in Genera Education with the newer developments in Music Teaching. Music and Modern Education—Music and the Child—Music and the Adolescent—Music and the Adult—Educational Experiments.

Introductory Lecture, January 4, at 3 p.m.
Invitation Ticket will be sent on application.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS WRITE TO:

MISS MABEL CARNELL,
The Studio, 2, Hall Road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.8.

"Finger Magic"

HOW THE MASTER MUSICIAN IS MADE.

"I have been reading a little booklet which I have termed 'Finger Magic,' and I would very much like to place this book in the hands of every pianist, violinist, and 'cellist in the Kingdom.

"We all know that the secret of the virtuosi does not consist in the amount of time they expend in instrumental practice—one recently stated that he often does not touch the instrument for a week, and another has affirmed that musicians are positively superstitious about practice. The secret of the success of the great masters must therefore be looked for in another direction than in the capacity for hard grinding practice on orthodox lines, and I have been experimenting with a system which may well prove to be a solution, or at any rate to a large extent.

"The system to which I refer develops the hands not by practice in the ordinary sense, but by a series of exercises, based on sound psychological as well as physiological laws; the almost immediate effect of which is to increase the stretching capacity of the hand, and the descriptive booklet, issued by the Cowling Institute, contains some astonishing letters from musicians which would convince me, even if not backed up by my own experience, that the quickest and easiest way to develop the strength and flexibility of the wrist and fingers so essential to pianists, violinists, and 'cellists is to perform the operation away from the instrument, when the mind can be centred upon that object alone.

"I anticipate that within a measurable period the knowledge contained in this little booklet, and in the lessons given by the Cowling Institute, will form part of the curriculum of every teacher and be a necessary equipment of every violinist, 'cellist, and pianist."—

ERNEST JAY, F.R.C.O.

NOTE.—The booklet referred to above may be obtained free of all cost on application to Secretary, T., Cowling Institute, 71, Albion House, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1. (State if a teacher.)

Mr. WILKINSON URQUHART

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte: Performer, Teacher, and Accompaniment); A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching); F.R.C.O.; Certificate of Merit in Pianoforte, Harmony and Counterpoint, and Aural Training (Highest Award of the Royal Academy of Music); Registered Teacher; Professor of Pianoforte, Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School.

MR. URQUHART specialises in coaching for the Practical and Paper-work sections of the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. diplomas in the above-mentioned subjects. Lessons personally at his London Studio, or by correspondence.

Recent successes: L.R.A.M. (Practical), 14; (Paper-work), 22. A.R.C.M. (Practical), 8; (Paper-work), 12. Successes in L.R.A.M. accompaniment diploma: Practical 4 and Paper-work (by correspondence) 6.

July, 1929, pupil gained the Essex County Music Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal Academy of Music.

September, 1929, pupil gained the "Whitcombe" Scholarship, tenable for three years at the Royal College of Music.

Address:

40 Cranbrook Rise (Cranbrook Park) Ilford, Essex

(Phone: VALENTINE 4065).

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1,100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

SUCCESSES (with those for January, 1928) include: 3 F.R.C.O. (1 for Jan., 1928); 3 A.R.C.O.; 2 L.R.A.M.; 1 A.R.C.M. (Theory), in September, 1929.

2S. 6D. PER LESSON AND POSTAGE

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co. Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

To COMPOSERS, ORGANISTS, CHOIRMASTERS.

Your Hymn Tunes, Chants., Anthems, &c, neatly Duplicated in black ink. Prices from 3s. 6d. per 100 copies.

Send MSS. and 1½*d.* stamp for estimate and samples.

NOTE NEW ADDRESS:

W. H. & L. RIDD Plovers Barrows, Grime's Hill, WYTHALL, BIRMINGHAM

"BY CORRESPONDENCE"

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

MUS. DOC. LOND., L.R.A.M.

Full preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. B., Mus. D., and Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

SPECIAL COURSES:

1. Trinity College and R.C.O. Diplomas
   January, 1930. "Short Revision"
2. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M
   Full Preparation for April and September, 1930
3. Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.
   London and Durham
4. Separate Subjects:
   Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Art of Teaching, Touch and Technique, &c.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES:

These Correspondence Lessons are so devised as to give a complete grip of everything necessary for success in the shortest possible time. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for Degrees and Diplomas in Music.

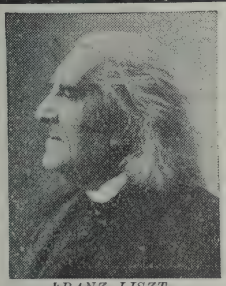
CONSULTATION LESSONS also in BRISTOL and LONDON

Address: D. NORMAN SPRANKLING, 46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL

TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

A really Good Pianist

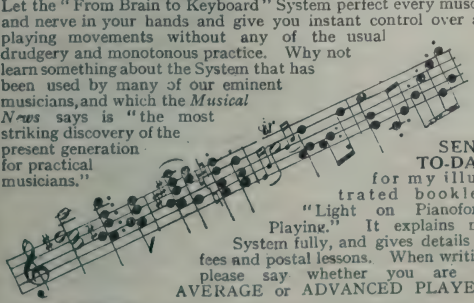
cannot be made by orthodox methods unless a special and rare gift exists already.



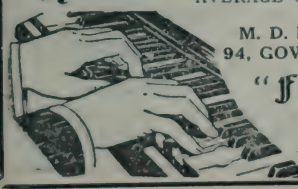
FRANZ LISZT

It has been pointed out with considerable show of reason that the real way to attain mastery over difficult passages is not to go over them until you are sick and tired of them, but to get your arm and hand muscles into the best state possible, a state approaching that exceptional muscular development with which virtuosi are endowed by Nature.

Let the "From Brain to Keyboard" System perfect every muscle and nerve in your hands and give you instant control over all playing movements without any of the usual drudgery and monotonous practice. Why not learn something about the System that has been used by many of our eminent musicians, and which the Musical News says is "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."



SEND TO-DAY for my illustrated booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing." It explains my System fully, and gives details of fees and postal lessons. When writing please say whether you are an AVERAGE or ADVANCED PLAYER.



M. D. MACDONALD SMITH
94, GOWER ST., LONDON, W.C.1

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing

The "FLEXA" System of Finger & Hand Development

For Violinists, 'Cellists, Pianists, and other Instrumentalists

A new and concise Course in 12 exercises, complete. Greatly recommended by the musical profession.

A sure means of obtaining that suppleness and ease of execution so necessary to a perfect technique.

Twenty minutes devoted every day to the exercises contained in this Course will be amply rewarded by quickly gained facility and a technique which otherwise would be obtained only after years of strenuous practice.

No apparatus necessary. All movements are perfectly natural movements of the fingers and hands, which can in no way cause any injury.

A few extracts from the many recommendations constantly being received from well-known musicians:

Cyril S. Christopher, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.:
"No one who adheres faithfully to the instructions given can fail to derive great benefit from the Course."

Alex. Cohen, M.A. (Solo Violinist):
"I think your exercises fulfil admirably the purpose for which they were designed."

Joseph Lewis (Musical Director, B.B.C., Birmingham):
"It is undoubtedly excellent, and one cannot help but be struck by the careful grading of the exercises, and the clever way in which they are devised and explained. . . Everyone who carefully uses this System is bound to be repaid by greatly increased flexibility and dexterity. . . I can confidently recommend the System."

Ernest W. Harrison ('Cellist, British National Opera Co., Covent Garden, &c.):
"Hand and finger exercises away from the instrument are undoubtedly valuable, and your System is one of the most concise I have seen, and summarises the most useful exercises in a brief and clear manner."

Miss Zoe M. Wadely, L.R.A.M. (Teacher, Violin and Viola):
"Your work should be helpful to students and teachers of the violin, &c."

Fee for the complete "Flexa" Course: 6s. deposit and 2/6 weekly for 6 weeks.

Further particulars may be obtained from:

The Secretary, "Flexa" System, Crane's Studios, Old Square, BIRMINGHAM

Blüthner Studios

23, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1

Studios supplied with new Blüthner Pianos have now been opened at the above address. A large room suitable for Lectures, &c., and several smaller rooms are available to teachers of music. For particulars, apply to :

BLÜTHNER & CO., Ltd., 17-23, Wigmore Street, London, W.1

THE TECHNIQUER

A BOON TO ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.

Recent Testimonial from Miss Gertrude Azulay, Prof. of Pianoforte, T.C., London :—"After using 'The Techniquer' for pupils with defective stretch for some years, I am convinced that the apparatus is definitely remedial, and its effect generally beneficial to the hands."—Gertrude Azulay, November 11, 1929.

Send for full list of testimonials and particulars post free.

"Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

"SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810)

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS

A simple and very effective appliance for giving strength and flexibility to the fingers. Recommended by the Editor of the Musical Times.

IMPROVED MODEL

Price 2*s.* 6*d.*; postage and packing, 3*d.*

E. C. M., 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT . . . .
CENTRAL HEATING . . . .
TELEPHONE . . . LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

FULL PARTICULARS FROM

STEINWAY & SONS

THE NEW STEINWAY HALL

1 & 2, GEORGE STREET, CONDUIT STREET, LONDON, W.1

'Phone: Mayfair 6641-5

PIANOS

By Bechstein, Bord, Schiedmayer, Chappell, Rogers, Gors, & Kallmann

AND OTHER CELEBRATED MAKERS

THE Profession most cordially invited to inspect our large and varied stock of New and Second-hand Pianos. Cash, Hire, or Hire-purchase. Pianos taken in exchange.

APPLY FOR LISTS :

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-6, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1 'Phone : Museum 0439

PIANO REPAIRS

"WIGMORE HALL FINISH"

denotes a standard not obtainable elsewhere.

THE MOST HIGHLY SKILLED WORKMANSHIP
THE FINEST MATERIALS (regardless of cost)
PERFECT SATISFACTION

Wigmore Hall and Piano Galleries, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1

Libretto for Disposal

Siamese setting; unusual story. In three Acts, with optional Prologue and Epilogue. Suitable for arrangement as a Music-Drama.

Will Composers, willing to consider, please write :
Miss E. TREGENNA, 5, Walpole Gardens, London, W.4

Professional Notices

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO

Lecture-Recitals of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Professor of Voice-Production and Singing.
Pupils prepared for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Scholarships and Festivals.

28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

Lessons given at above address or West-End Studio, Cricklewood Conservatoire of Music, N.W.2; and Highbury Conservatoire, N.5, &c. Primrose 3869

JOSEPH CONGDON

TENOR

9, Carshalton Place Terrace, Carshalton.

Tel: Wallington 2826.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, E.C.2

SHIRLEY, PARK ROAD, CROUCH END, N.8. Tudor 5289.

EDWARD REACH

TENOR

GENTLEMAN OF H.M. CHAPELS ROYAL

Tel: Streatham 9287. 12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17

FRANK POULTON

BASS-BARITONE. L.R.A.M. (SINGING-PERFORMER)

Available for Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow, Mdx. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536

VOICE TRAINING — FIELD-HYDE METHOD

MISS ELSIE DUNIAM-JONES

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., M.R.S.T.

Specialist Coach for diplomas and concert platform. Short courses or single lessons on Interpretation of English, French, and Italian Songs. Vacancy for accompanist pupil.

EDUCATIONAL LECTURE SONG-RECITALS TO SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, MUSICAL CLUBS.

Specimen Titles: Songs, their making and their hidden beauties. Shakespeare Songs—old and new settings.

From a Headmistress: "A very delightful and truly educational evening."

British Music Bulletin: "Miss Duniam-Jones sang with delightful finish and sympathy, and proved herself an entrancing lecturer."

Studio: 17, Cavendish Square, W.1.; and at Barnet, Herts.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma)

Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing; coaches for singing examinations; leads and trains choral classes and choirs; also gives lessons on the guitar. Moderate charges for all subjects.

26, Onslow Square, S.W.7. Tel.: Kensington 3627

J. M. MORRIS, MUS. BAC.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), F.T.S.C.

SPECIALISES IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

Harmony and Counterpoint. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper Work. Vocal Physiology and the Art of Teaching Singing for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas.

RECENT DIPLOMA SUCCESSES

Address: 93, ST. MARY STREET, CARDIFF

MISS PITT SOPER, F.R.A.M.

Professor of Singing, Royal Academy of Music, London.

Prepares Candidates for L.R.A.M and A.R.C.M. Examinations (Teachers and Performers).

For particulars, apply Wigmore Hall Studios.

ELOCUTION AND SINGING

MR. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M.

(Double Diploma Elocution and Singing), A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.

Correspondence Courses: (a) ELOCUTION (b) VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING (c) ASSOCIATED BOARD ELOCUTION EXAMS.

Studios: 5, Park Row, Nottingham; and 14, Hanover Street, W.1

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON

Lecturer and Adjudicator

Receives pupils for Voice Production and Singing. Prepares candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas as Teacher or Performer. Also gives

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS

to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.

Particulars on application.

Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1 'Phone: Langham 3909

EDGAR CARR, A.R.A.M.

Professor of Pianoforte Playing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Coaches for all examinations and public performances. Consultation lessons given to teachers, and unsuccessful candidates advised.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, W.1.

MISS LILIAN THOMAS, A.R.C.M.

Pianoforte, Harmony, Aural Training. Specialist Coach A.R.C.M. Teachers' Diploma. Studio: Hanover Street, W.1. Communications: 2, Travers Road, Holloway, N.7.

JOHN F. PORTE

MUSIC CRITIC, AUTHOR, EDITOR.

Rapid Technical Development in PIANOFORTE PLAYING by condensed but systematic study (on the methods of Louis Plaidy and Virgil). Prospectus gratis.

CORRESPONDENCE GUIDANCE IF REQUIRED

Collard & Collard Grand Pianoforte

56, Mayall Road, Herne Hill, S.E.24. Or, West End Studio.

MISS NORAH TOWNEND

(A.R.C.M., PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT) (TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE)

EXPERIENCED PIANIST AND ACCOMPANIST

Apply, 83, Gunnersbury Avenue, Ealing, W.5. 'Phone Chiswick 0384

WILLIAM SANDS

ORGANIST AND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSIC, REDDITCH PARISH CHURCH

RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST

For vacant dates, terms, &c., apply to:

99, Plymouth Road, Redditch, Worcs, or 42, Valley Road, Shortlands, Kent.

MR. J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. BAC.

Postal Tuition from 10*s.* 6*d.* for 10 lessons, according to Course.

Successes at R.A.M., R.C.M., R.C.O., and T.C.L., mostly at First Attempt.

Successful Candidate at L.R.A.M. (Sept., 1929) writes: "May I take this opportunity of thanking you for all you have done for me, and to say how much I owe to your excellent teaching. When I return I want to continue lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, and Composition. . . . I am more than pleased with the progress I have made under your tuition."

ADDRESS: "BALCARY," KEGWORTH, NR. DERBY.

W. R. HUNN

MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(Joint Author of Form and Teaching Test-Papers)

Specialises in Coaching for Mus.Bac., R.C.O., R.C.M., and R.A.M. Exams. Latest successes: "Mus.Bac." Exercise, Dunelm., 1929.

105, REGENT ROAD, GREAT YARMOUTH

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES. See page 1063

TO COMPOSERS

NICHOLAS GATTY

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

is prepared to undertake the revision and arrangement of MSS., and to advise on any matter concerning composition and orchestration.

For terms, &c., apply, 12, Upper George Street, Bryanston Square, W.1.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG, MUS.BAC., A.R.M.C.M., L.MUS. T.C.L. Correspondence Lessons in all subjects. Preparation for diplomas. 14, St. Stephen's Avenue, Blackpool, N.S.

NORMAN ASKEW, F.R.C.O., Recitalist, Exam. Coach. Recent A.R.C.O. pupil awarded Lafontaine Prize. Lessons on three-manual electric organ. Address, Southfield Central Hall, S.W.19.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory) at 14, Hanover Street, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L.Mus. T.C.L., (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for R.C.O., R.C.M., R.A.M., &c., Diplomas. Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY

DR. W. A. BARLOW, F.R.C.O., gives Personal or Postal tuition for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. 1,514, Ashton Old Road, Openshaw, Manchester.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams. as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams., 1910-29 ... 352 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams., 1914-29 ... 108 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., WATERLOO BUILDINGS, PICCADILLY, MANCHESTER.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus.Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work. (38 Successes.)
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony and Counterpoint. (23 Successes.)
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Organist and Musical Director, Kingsway Hall), 57, Tooting Bec Gardens, Streatham, London, S.W.16.
Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. ORGAN EXAMINATIONS.
SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. inst. Also large four-manual organ. Pieces registered and phrased.
RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 A.R.C.M., 1920	1 L.R.A.M., 1919
1 L.R.A.M., 1924	4 A.R.C.O., 1921
1 A.R.C.M., 1928	3 A.R.C.O., 1922
2 F.R.C.O., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., 1923
6 F.R.C.O., 1923	4 A.R.C.O., 1924
5 F.R.C.O., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., 1925
5 F.R.C.O., 1926	7 A.R.C.O., 1926
5 F.R.C.O., 1927	8 A.R.C.O., 1927
5 F R.C.O., 1928	9 A.R.C.O., 1928
4 F.R.C.O.. 1929	8 A.R.C.O., 1929

During the past few years pupils of Mr. Allan Brown have gained "Lafontaine" (F.R.C.O.), "Turpin," and "Sawyer" Prizes.
"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates," to be obtained from the Publishers, Reid Bros., 26, Eastcastle Street, Oxford Circus, W.1. 2/8 post free.

LILIAN COOMBES, F.R.C.O. (Organist and Choirmaster, Brixton Independent Church, S.W.9). Tuition in Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint. Preparation for Exams. Large 4-manual organ. "Hughenden," Bush Hill Road, N.21. Telephone: Enfield 0760.

MISS LILLIE M. EARLY, Contralto, is open for engagements for Oratorio, B minor Mass (Bach), "The Dream of Gerontius," "The Messiah," &c. Extensive Concert répertoire also. For terms, apply, 13, Park Avenue, Endcliffe, Sheffield.

FREDERICK GREEN, Mus. B., F.R.C.O., &c. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Prep. for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. 5, Newington, Liverpool.

ARTHUR GREGORY, L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), educated R.A.M. Teaches Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form. Examination candidates prepared. Write, 3, Gladys Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 414 Successes in Mus.D., Mus.B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., and the paper-work requirements for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas in pianoforte playing. For terms, &c., apply to 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus., Oxon., L.R.A.M., Adjudicator and Organ Recitalist, instructs Candidates personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. Compositions revised. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex. 'Phone, Hove 2004

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, 1929, Final Mus. Bac. and 1st Mus. Bac. passes. Other recent Successes: 4 Mus. Doc. and 4 Mus. Bac. Exs. after prelim. course in composition. Over 200 successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc. University of Toronto: F.R.C.O., F.A.G.O., &c.. Sirsa House Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Specialist in Pianoforte Playing, Touch, Technique, and Interpretation. Thirty years' experience in preparing for examinations. More than 1,000 of Dr. Middleton's pupils have gained Degrees and Diplomas. Address: Weekes' Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 29 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

THE REVISION OF MSS. IS UNDERTAKEN by musical critic and song composer. Lessons in Piano, Singing, Theory. Herbert H. Nelson, "Albury," Canterbury Road, Herne Bay, Kent.

Complete preparation for Teachers of Singing and the Pianoforte by CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M. (Class A, Performer and Teacher Pianoforte).
Prof. Singing, G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on "Musical Appreciation" to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering." 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers." 6d.
All papers up-to-date.
Over 1,000 Successes for Degrees and Diplomas.
21, Boundary Road N.W.8. 'Phone Maida Vale 1715.

POSTAL TUITION by F.R.C.O, F.T.C.L., M.R.S.T. One Guinea Ten Lessons. Har., C'p't, Fugue, History, Choir-Training, General Musicianship, &c. F.R.C.O. Analysis, January, 1930, 3s. Recent successes: A. Mus. T.C.L., L.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., 1928; F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., 1927, 1928, 1929; also T.C.L. and G.S.M., Pass and Hons. Certifs. Address: BM/JRMB, London, W.C.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2.) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3.) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. Bac. successes at Durham, Dublin, and London.
R.C.O. EXAMINER SAYS: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite ability for the examination in view.
347 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
205 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921	8 A.R.C.O., July. 1921
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922
8 F.R.C.O., Jan. 1923	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1926	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1926
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1927	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1927
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1927	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1927
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1928	12 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1928
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1928	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1928
5 F.R.C.O. Jan., 1929	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1929
5 F.R.C O., July, 1929	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1929

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MR. E. L. M. PRITCHARD, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon., A.R.C.M. (Organ Playing), gives correspondence tuition in all theoretical subjects, including Plainchant Accompaniment. Also available for Organ Recitals and Pianoforte Accompanying. Address, Tan Llann, Bath Street, Rhyl, North Wales.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4. Chiswick 3267.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—FINISHING LESSONS given on replica of R.C.O. organ at National Institute for the Blind, London. Apply, Mr. H. V. Spanner, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., 17, Lanercost Road, London, S.W.2. Candidates should apply early.

DR. A. E. TAYLOR. PUPIL GAINED STILLIE Bursary for Cpt.; Gold Medal for Cpt., Assoc. Board; Gold Medal for Har., Assoc. Board; C.C. Scholarship; A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., Mus. Bac. Compositions revised and accompaniments written. Portland Place, Lancaster.

TO COMPOSERS.—Complete and Systematic course, by correspondence, in Military Band Instrumentation. Write, Major Charles Hoby, M.B.E., Mus. Doc., Oxon., 80, Warwick Gardens, London, W.14.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O., Recitalist and Examination Coach. Teacher of Piano, Organ, and Harmony. Studio, 7, Durand Gardens, London, S.W.9.

CONDUCTOR available, Orchestral, Choral, Operatic. Also Conducting Classes held. Successes include L.R.A.M. (T.C.). Box No. 17, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SPECIALIST IN ORGAN TEACHING arranges single lessons, and short revision courses; also an Organ Class on Saturdays, at 3 p.m. Particulars from J. O. S., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour (pupils, 9*d.*). Hydraulic-blown, two-manual and pedal organ, at the Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, S.W.6. Tel: Putney 4208.
ORGAN LESSONS AT ST. STEPHEN'S, WALBROOK, E.C.4.
GEORGE METZLER, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

LADY (fully-trained G.S.M.) DESIRES ACCOMPANYING WORK to a singer or violinist; can also sing—Mezzo-soprano. Free evenings. Box 27, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY (L.R.A.M.) requires part-time work in or near London after Christmas. Teacher of Pianoforte and Violin; good sight-reader and experienced accompanist. Excellent testimonials. Apply, Vincent, 189a, High Street, Ramsgate.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR.—There will be vacancies after Christmas for Leading Boys. Candidates must have very good voices and be good readers of music, and should be between 10 and 12 years old. Board, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Apply to the Organist, A. P. Porter, Esq., The Close, Lichfield, Staffs.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL SCHOOL.—Free Scholarship of £90, and others of £60 and £45 per annum to Boys with good voices. Apply, Rev. G. A. Padfield, Precentor.

SOPRANO (Gold Medallist), and Bass-Baritone (City Church), with wide experience, require engagements for Oratorios, Recitals, Concerts, &c. Duets to suit all occasions if desired. Soprano would accept permanent Church appointment. H. M., 12, Hargrave Park, N.19.

ALTO (Solo), and TENOR (Chorus), required. £25 and £16. Important London Church. Box 26, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ALTO Required, Parish Church, Stoke Newington. £20. Two Sunday services, Friday practice. Four weeks vacation. Norman Collie, 52, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N.16.

EXPERIENCED ALTO WANTED immediately—All Saints', Highgate. Sight-reader essential. Sundays, 11 (Choral Eucharist) and 6.30. Friday rehearsal. Salary £20. Apply, P. S. Crawley, "Henham," Wentworth Road, Barnet.

TENOR SOLOIST required for St. Matthew's, Croydon. £20. Organist, 22, Wellesley Road, Croydon.

TENOR REQUIRED for Argyle Square, Kings Cross, New Jerusalem Church. Friday rehearsals; Sunday Services, 11 and 6.30. £15 p.a. Three weeks holiday. Letters to Mr. T. Burl, 5, Leicester Road, N.2.

TENOR and BARITONE, used to singing together, require post in London. Nonconformist Church Choir. East preferred. Full details to Box 25, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS-BARITONE VOCALIST, wishing to extend connection, would accept oratorio or other engagements from high-class Choral Societies, in return for expenses only. Highest references for ability and musicianship. Apply, Box 31, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS required for St. Martin's, Ludgate Hill.—Friday and twice Sunday. Interesting music. £15. Apply to Organist at the Church.

THE LONDON SELECT CHOIR has a few vacancies in each part. Amateurs only. Apply, D. R. Smart, 91, Park Avenue South, Crouch End, N.8.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL
Assistant Organist required after Christmas. Apply at once with copies of testimonials, to the Organist of Peterborough Cathedral, The Precincts, Peterborough.

DERBY CATHEDRAL.—Organist and Choirmaster wanted. Stipend £250. Apply, Canon Ham, Cathedral Vicarage.

HEAVITREE PARISH CHURCH, EXETER.—ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER Wanted. Fine organ. Commencing salary £60. Opening for teaching.—Apply, with testimonials, to the Vicar, Rev. K. A. Lake.

ST. CLEMENT DANES, STRAND.—Organist and Choirmaster required. Apply to the Rector.

FLORENCE HOLLOWAY, A.T.C.L., ORGANIST (recommended by Mr. Herbert Hodge), is free to deputise on Sundays or week-days. 65, Marylands Road, Maida Hill, W.9.

ORGAN DEPUTISING.—Organist of considerable Cathedral and Parish Church experience (own car), will deputise any ANGLICAN service. Usual fee and expenses. D. Kirkland, 'Leigham Lodge,' Streatham. 'Phone: 0539.

PUPIL-ASSISTANT Wanted immediately.—Tuition and practice on new three-manual electric organ. Small premium, excellent opportunity. Apply, N. Askew, F.R.C.O., Southfields Central Hall, S.W.19.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS (Postal). Profitable profession or side-line taught quickly by Certified Tuner, M.T.A. Instructor to Ministry of Labour. G. W. Bakes, "Hartman House," 15, Jesmond Avenue, Bradford.

AMERICAN ORGAN for Sale. — Solid Walnut, good condition. Apply, Campbell, 97, St. Kilda Road, London, W.13.

CHAMBER ORGAN, designed by Bonavia-Hunt. Superb tone. Suit room or small Church, £175. Full particulars from F.R.C.O., Colborne Villa, Ruardean.

FRENCH ORGAN.—Burr Walnut Case. 6 rows; 20 Stops. Percussion action; splendid tone. Write, "Leith," 1, Stamford Brook Avenue, Hammersmith.

NEW ORGANS, of the best description, 2 and 3 manuals. Entire stock to be sold at bargain prices. £400 to £2,000. Organ advisers note. Dalladay, Organ Works, Manor Rd., Hastings.

ORGAN.—Pre-War, for Sale (Norman & Beard). 3 Manuals, 19 Speaking Stops, 9 Couplers, 12 accessories, Oak casing, Kinetic blower, and electric motor; suitable for small Church. £1,200. W. Van Sommer, Cuffnells, Weybridge.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS.—One, Two, and Three Manuals. Bargains. From £15. Best Makers. Stagg, 45, Grays Inn Road, London, W.C.1.

KEMMLER PIANO FOR SALE.—Upright Grand. A strong serviceable instrument for choral work. In good condition. £30, or near offer. Write or call, K. M. D., 185, Camden Road, N.W.1.

PEDAL ATTACHMENT for PIANO.—Norman & Beard's (straight concave), solid walnut stool, good condition. £5. Organist, 19, Gourock Road, Eltham, S.E.9.

VIRGIL CLAVIER for Sale. — Good condition. £4 or offer. Toye, 32, Ventnor Villas, Hove.

FOR SALE.—VIOLA, £4, or near offer. Apply, 19, Parklands Road. S.W.16.

FOR SALE. — Bargain. Organist's and Pianist's Stock; ret. organist. Dictionaries, Voluntaries, Masters Works. &c. Appt., Sunday convenient, Read, 593, Wandsworth Road, S.W.8.

AUTHORS AND COMPOSERS.—SONGS, Lyrics, Piano Solos and Suites wanted for publication. Send MSS to The Carlton Publications, 151, Nevill Road, London, N.16.

AURAL TESTS.—L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and other examinations. SPECIAL PAPER showing how to obtain success in these important tests. All candidates should secure this paper. Write, enclosing 4*s.* 6*d.*, to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., January, 1930. Important. A New Series (No. 3) of Six Model Essays on "The English Language," with "Hints" on writing the essay. Also Series Nos. 1 and 2, on same book. Enclose 4*s.* 6*d.* per each Series to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

'CHRIST OUR LIGHT,' and 'The Christmas Love.' Price, 1*d.* each (Novello). Bright and melodious Carols, by the late Cecilia Havergal (Mrs. F. B. Grant).

Music Books for Christmas Presents

THE OXFORD BOOK OF CAROLS

Edited by Percy Dearmer, R. Vaughan Williams, and Martin Shaw

Undoubtedly the most authoritative collection of carols yet published, this volume contains over 200 examples, including all the famous old carols as well as many which have been specially written or transcribed for the book. Prospectus on application.

Music Edition, 6s. net; Complete Words Edition, 4s. 6d. net; Small Words Edition, paper, 1s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

Six Carols from the above are issued as Christmas Cards, printed on hand-made paper, with a coloured design. 6d. each.

JOHN GOSS An Anthology of Song

Fifty Classical Songs for

5s.

net, in paper; Cloth Boards, 8s. 6d. net.

A delightful gift which every singer will value

HERBERT HOWELLS Lambert's Clavichord

Twelve charming pieces for clavichord, but equally suitable for piano, cast in the form of the old Elizabethan "Fancies," but modern in idiom. Each is written for a friend of the composer, the titles being: "Lambert's Fireside," "Fellowes's Delight," "Hughes's Ballet," "Wortham's Grounde," "Sargent's Fantastic Sprite," "Foss's Dump," "My Lord Sandwich's Dreame," "Samuel's Air," "De la Mare's Pavane," "Sir Hugh's Galliard," "H.H., His Fancy," "Sir Richard's Toye."

Cheap Edition, now published, 5s.

MARTIN SHAW Up to Now

An entertaining musical autobiography, full of good stories and friendly gossip concerning many who play an important part in musical and artistic London to-day.

7s. 6d. net.

MARJORY KENNEDY-FRASER A Life of Song

"The book is full of meat. . . It is the sort of thing to refresh any jaded professional worker, and delight the amateur, who will feel very closely drawn, as he reads, to this wonderful woman, a born enthusiast, an inseeing musician, and a great lover of her fellow-creatures."—The Gramophone.

7s. 6d. net.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, London, W.1

CRAMER

MAGNIFICENT 1929 LATEST MODELS

BABY GRAND ... 100 Gns.
UPRIGHT GRAND 60 Gns.
UPRIGHT PLAYER 100 Gns.

FULL SCALE
LATEST DEVICES

Reconditioned Pianos, Grands and Uprights, at greatly reduced prices for cash or hire purchase terms.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., Ltd.,
139 NEW BOND ST., W.1.
46 MOORGATE, E.C.2.
128/130 KENSINGTON HIGH STREET, W.8.

PIANO PEDALS WITH OCTAVE COUPLER

THIS WONDERFUL INVENTION SUPERSEDES ALL PIANO PEDALS, AND IS A MASTER PATENT

St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 9th April, 1921

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 gns. cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.

London Address: 34, Spencer Hill, Wimbledon, S.W.19

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME

Please mention this Paper when writing.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33RD 1,000

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

BAND PARTS MAY BE HIRED

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS SERIES

Unison and Part Songs. Church and Instrumental music.

FULL CATALOGUE Post Free ON APPLICATION

H. F. W. DEANE & SONS

THE YEAR BOOK PRESS, LTD., 31 MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

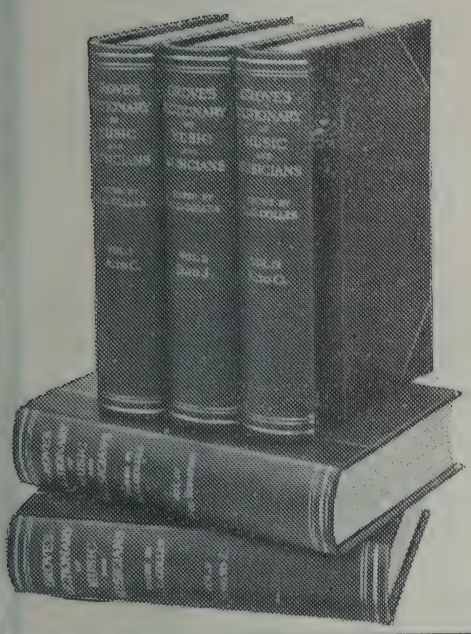
"I ought to have bought it years ago for my boy who has just taken his degree. Instead of that, we have wasted hours running to and fro from the Free Library to look up references."—

A subscriber who recently saw the Edition in our showroom.



GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC

NEW (THIRD) EDITION | Handsomely bound in Cloth or Half-Morocco

Completely Revised and Up-to-date 5 Vols. Over 4,000 pages 96 full page plates

A first payment of 7s. 6d. brings the set to YOUR HOME AT ONCE

Post this for FREE PROSPECTUS

To the Globe Publishing Co., Ltd.,
112, Strand, London, W.C.

(Use unsealed envelope—½d. stamp)

Please send me Prospectus of the New Grove's Dictionary of Music, with full particulars of payment-out-of-income and discount for cash.

Name.....

Address.....

M.T. 37.

By Direction of the Executrix of S. W. Pidgen (dec.).

NORTH WALES MUSIC COMPANY

143, HIGH STREET, BANGOR

(Established 50 years ago) lately carried on by Mr. S. W. Pidgen

For Sale by Private Treaty . . as a Going Concern . .

The Stock to be taken over at a valuation.

The premises occupy an excellent site in the Main Street of the City of Bangor. The Tenure is Leasehold—29 years unexpired. Ground Rent, £7 p.a. The accommodation comprises on the—Ground Floor.—Double-fronted Shop, Stock Room.

Basement.—Large Store, Coals.
First Floor.—Drawing Room, Kitchen.
Second Floor.—3 Bedrooms, W.C.
Attic.—1 Bedroom, with Bath.
Good Yard and Garden at rear of premises.

For all further particulars, apply to

Messrs. Wm. DEW & SON and R. ARTHUR JONES
Sole Agents, BANGOR, CONWAY, and COLWYN BAY.

"PRECES & RESPONSES"

EDITED BY FREDERIC H. BURSTALL, F.R.C.O.
Organist, Liverpool Cathedral, 1881-1915

TENTH EDITION NOW READY—PRICE 4D.
from the publishers,

RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, Ltd., 11-17, Islington, LIVERPOOL

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING

12,000 WORDS. ILLUSTRATED METHOD.
2s. 6d. post free; Abroad, 3s. Pre-eminent Technique.
It will thoroughly prepare you for the position of "Conductor."
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

NEW MUSIC

The Portuguese, English, and American journals and magazines make frequent reference to the pianoforte works of Mr. Carlos Eugenio Ferreira—barrister-at-law and Portuguese pianist and composer, established in Nova Gôa (Portuguese India). His music is not on the whole really difficult to play, and his effects are generally obtained by quite simple technical means. It is unnecessary to speak of "L'Arrivée" (Tango) and "Ave Maria" (Melodia Religiosa). They have made their way into every home where there is a pianoforte.

The transformation of Indian music into one-step, tango, waltz serenades, ballads, melodies, fox trots, &c., has been effected by Mr. Ferreira in the following typical examples: Dolente (mando), Goanish dance, with variations, Op. 1; Sobre o Mandovy, waltz, Op. 2; Canto de Rucminim, waltz, Op. 3; Echos de India, melody, Op. 4; Sous les palmiers, waltz, Op. 5; Serenata Indiana (mando), with variations, Op. 6 (printed in London); Les Charmes de Gôa, waltz, Op. 7; Les Ballets du Colcan, modern one-step and tango, characteristic dances (sur des motifs et chansons Indiennes), Opp. 8 and 9; "Ave Maria" (Melodia Religiosa), Op. 10; Rapsodia Ibero (Indiana, sobre cancoes e dancas, hespanholas, portuguesas e goanesas), Op. 11; Custoba's song, Op. 12. These compositions demonstrate that while Mr. Ferreira is infused with an intense love of his native soil, his music reveals also a pure Orientalism and a deep tenderness. His work is neither deliberately modern nor studiedly archaic; it is simply, in its most individual manifestations, unlike any other music. It is an artistic axiom that the surest way in which a musical performer can grip his audience is for him to enjoy what he himself is doing. Mr. Ferreira is not only a gifted composer, but a fine pianoforte player, able to communicate his own emotions to his listeners.

The Rapsodia, Ibero, Indiana, his most recent composition, is a valuable contribution to pianoforte music. Its sixteen pages comprise a suite of dances and songs—three of Spain, three of Portugal, and three of Oriental India.

The music may be obtained of all music-sellers.

Messrs. Arthur Viegas, Nova Gôa, Portuguese India, will, on request, furnish full information concerning the above publications.

To Piano Teachers

38,000 COPIES of ERNEST AUSTIN'S "PLAYTIME PIECES"

for Young Musicians have been sold. Still, there may be some Teachers who are not aware of their excellent merit. . . The Publisher will be pleased to send on request a specimen copy of Book 1 to any Teacher forwarding professional card and 3*d.* to cover postage.

"Playtime Pieces," Books 1, 2, 3, 4, 2s. net each are published with English and Continental fingering, and all requests should state which form is desired.

APPRECIATION

By Col. SIR FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E.

Mr. Ernest Austin is a man of exquisite sensitiveness of feeling and of the finest capacity for enjoyment. He loves life and he loves children. And through music he tells children of the joys life can be made to hold and he helps them to express the delights they may feel. No finer medium for this purpose exists. And if through his music, English children will have been led to a finer enjoyment of life, Mr. Austin will have deserved well of his country.

FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND.

J. H. LARWAY, 2, Percy Street, London, W.1

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN

By BASIL HARWOOD

		s.	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB	2	6
2.	COMMUNION IN F (on the Hymn-Tune "Irish")	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE IN D	1	6
4.	PÆAN	2	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSION-TIDE (on the "Old 25th" Psalm Tune)	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT (on the Hymn-Tune "Bedford")	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES IN A AND F	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D, for Organ and Orchestra	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR	3	0
13.	FANTASIA "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY	3	0
15.	IN AN OLD ABBEY	2	0
16.	WEDDING MARCH	2	0
17.	THREE PRELUDES ON ANGLICAN CHANTS	2	0
18.	VOLUNTARY IN D FLAT	2	0
19.	PROCESSIONAL	2	0
20.	THREE SHORT PIECES	2	0
21.	IN EXITU ISRAEL	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

A

SETTE OF CAROLS

Words chiefly selected from

16TH-CENTURY ENGLISH CAROLS

CONTENTS:

THERE IS NO ROSE OF SUCH VIRTUE
CHRISTO PAREMUS CANTICAM, EXCELSIS GLORIA
THE RENUNCIATION
JHESU, FILI VIRGINIS
ALLELUIA, ALLELUIA DE VIRGINE MARIA
INTO THIS WORLD NOW IS COME
CHRISTE REDEMPTOR OMNIUM
GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO

Music by G. THALBEN-BALL

Price One Shilling

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Christmas Music

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

Four Books, 4½d. each net. Each containing a selection of Ten Popular Carols.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS AND GLEES

PEACEFUL GLADSOME CHRISTMAS	Tenney	2*d.*
BEHOLD I BRING	Goss	2*d.*
CHRISTMAS ANTHEM	Tenney	2*d.*
HAIL, HEAVENLY STAR	Challinor	2*d.*
HOSANNA	Cooke	2*d.*
HARK, ON THE MIDNIGHT AIR	Bottomley	2*d.*
TO THE HUMBLE SHEPHERDS	Bottomley	2*d.*

ORGAN MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS USE

		NET
TWO CHRISTMAS PIECES	David Clegg	2*s.*
MINUET DE NOEL	Frederick Lacy	2*s.*
ADESTE FIDELES (Variations)	Arthur Meale	2*s.*
ADESTE FIDELES	C. E. Melville	2*s.*
CHRISTMAS EVE	E. H. Smith	1*s.* 6*d.*

ASK FOR CATALOGUE OF ORGAN MUSIC AND ANTHEMS, Post free.

LONDON, W.C.2:

BEAL STUTTARD & Co., Ltd.

29, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET.

WALKER ORGANS

One of our instruments under construction for next year

NINTH CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST, LONDON

Great Organ

		ft.
1.	Double Open Diapason	16
2.	Open Diapason, No. 1	8
3.	Open Diapason, No. 2	8
4.	Open Diapason, No. 3	8
5.	Wald Flöte ...	8
6.	Echo Diapason ...	8
7.	Octave	4
8.	Harmonic Flute ...	4
9.	Twelfth	2⅔
10.	Fifteenth	2
11.	Mixture 3 ranks
12.	Tromba	8

Swell Organ

		ft.
1.	Lieblich Bourdon ...	16
2.	Open Diapason ...	8
3.	Stopped Diapason ...	8
4.	Echo Gamba ...	8
5.	Voix Celeste T.C.	8
6.	Principal	4
7.	Square Flute ...	4
8.	Fifteenth	2
9.	Mixture 3 ranks
10.	Contra Fagotto ...	16
11.	Trumpet	8
12.	Oboe	8
13.	Vox Humana ...	8
14.	Clarion	4
	Tremulant

Couplers

1. Choir to Pedal
2. Great to Pedal
3. Swell to Pedal
4. Swell to Great
5. Swell to Choir
6. Choir to Great
7. Swell Octave
8. Swell Sub-Octave
9. Swell Unison Off
10. Choir Octave
11. Choir Sub-Octave
12. Choir Unison Off
13. Great Pistons and Pedal Combinations coupled
14. Double Touch Cancellor

Choir Organ
(all enclosed)

		ft.
1.	Contra Gamba ...	16
2.	Violin Diapason ...	8
3.	Viol D'Orchestre ...	8
4.	Lieblich Gedact ...	8
5.	Dulciana	8
6.	Vox Angelica T.C.	8
7.	Lieblich Flöte ...	4
8.	Nazard	2⅔
9.	Piccolo	2
10.	Tierce	1⅗
11	Septieme	1⅐
12.	Clarinet	8
13.	Orchestral Oboe ...	8
	Tremulant
14.	Tuba	8

Pedal Organ

		ft.
1.	Double Open Diapason or Contra Violone (prepared for)	32
2.	Acoustic Bass ...	32
3.	Open Diapason, wood	16
4.	Open Diapason, metal	16
5.	Bourdon	16
6.	Echo Bourdon ...	16
7.	Gamba	16
8.	Octave	8
9.	Flute	8
10.	Octave Flute ...	4
11.	Trombone	16
12.	Fagotto	16
13.	Trumpet	8

Accessories

Five Thumb Pistons to Great
Six Thumb Pistons to Swell
Five Thumb Pistons to Choir
Five Toe Pedals to Pedal
Six Toe Pedals to Swell (duplicating)
Reversible Thumb Piston for Great to Pedal
Reversible Toe Pedal for Great to Pedal
Reversible Toe Pedal for Swell to Great
Reversible Toe Pedal for Choir to Great Balanced Swell Pedals

Compass:
Manuals CC to C, 61 notes
Pedals, CCC to G, 32 notes
Electro-Pneumatic Action
Walker Stop-Keys, double-touch cancelling and adjustable combinations
Detached Console
Discus Electric Blower (7 h.p. Pressures 4½″ to 16″)

J. W. WALKER & SONS, LTD.

FRANCIS WORKS, SOUTHFIELD ROAD, LONDON, W.4.

Now Ready: Leaflet Q. (Humberstone Parish Church Organ.)
Leaflet U. (R.C.M. Concert Hall Organ.) Post Free.

Trinity College of Music

(INSTITUTED 1872)

President:
THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY,
K.P., P.C., G.C.V.O.
Principal:
E. STANLEY ROPER, M.A., Mus.B.
Controller of Examinations:
EDWARD D'EVRY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

Wednesday, December 4th, at 5 p.m. Junior Students' Concert.

Saturday, December 7th, at 3 p.m. Invitation Choral and Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W.1. Conductors: C. Kennedy Scott and John Barbirolli.

Friday, December 6th, at 5 p.m. Students' Organ Recital at St. Margaret's, Westminster, by kind permission of the Rector.

Saturday, December 7th. Last day of entry for the January, 1930, Diploma Examinations and for the next Open Competition for Scholarships.

Wednesday, December 11th, at 3 p.m. Invitation Chamber Music and Choir Concert at Grotrian Hall, Wigmore Street, W.1.

January 13th. Lent Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

THE ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED

SPRINGTIME in the FOREST

SIX PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE:

THE PIPER OF SPRING
QUEEN MAB SUMMONS HER COURT
SONG OF THE RIVULET
MOONLIGHT DANCE OF THE GNOMES
A FAIRY LULLABY
DREAM OF THE WATER-LILY

By

HAROLD GREENHILL

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK
(Repeatedly featured at the Albert Hall by the Royal Choral Society)

	PRICE
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule	3d.
Christmas Day	3d.
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
THE STAR OF THE EAST. A Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus (S.A.T.B.)	9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS. A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s.
ADAMS, THOMAS
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price, in one volume	9d.
separately, each	3d.

ALBERT W. KETÈLBEY'S PATRIOTIC ODE

MEN OF ENGLAND

Words by THOMAS CAMPBELL (1777-1844)
FOR CHORUS (S.A.T.B.) 6d. NET.
TONIC SOL-FA ... ... 4d. NET.
With Organ, Pianoforte, or Orchestral Accompaniment. (Orchestral Parts may be hired)

This work received enthusiastic receptions when featured at the Kingsway Hall (and broadcast) on several recent occasions.

A specimen copy will be forwarded to any professional musician who is interested.

Columbia Record No. 9865 (Choir and Orchestra)

Bosworth's Famous Manuscript Paper

Most beautiful writing surface. All rulings. Upright or oblong. SENT FREE—Specimens and Price List.

BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd. 8, Heddon Street, Regent Street,
Music Publishers ——— LONDON, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED

No. 33.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET IN G

By BEETHOVEN

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

No. 34.—ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

MINUET

from "Berenice"

By HANDEL

ARRANGED BY JOHN POINTER

Price Two Shillings. Separate String Parts, 4*d.* each

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1, 1929

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1136)

THE PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY AND CHURCH MUSIC

In the Sunday Times of October 20 appeared an article entitled 'Copyright Laws: Position of Church entertainments. Warning against infringements.' We quote the main points therefrom:

'The English churches have recently had to face an important point respecting the use of copyright songs at entertainments held on their premises. In the past, almost unrestricted use has been made of copyright works in this way without permission or any acknowledgment. The Performing Right Society has, however, now brought the matter to an issue, and Diocesan Conferences, the Federal Council of the Free Churches, the English Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, and the Wesleyans have had to take account of the situation. . . . The Wesleyan Conference . . . has now decided to advise the Wesleyan Circuit to secure licences from the Society. . . . Church authorities are now warning their members of the legal position, and pointing out that the owner of the copyright is entitled to his rights. If, therefore, churches desire to avoid legal trouble they should secure a licence. In churches where they do not wish to take a licence, it is suggested that they should set up a notice warning performers at entertainments to secure consent in writing from those holding the copyright before contributing their items to the programme.'

Since the above appeared, correspondence received by Messrs. Novello seems to indicate the existence of misunderstanding in regard to performing rights. It seems clear, too, that the Wesleyan Conference has been led to believe that the Performing Right Society controls practically all copyright songs and other music. Messrs. Novello therefore desire to state clearly and comprehensively their position in the matter.

As the chief object of the publication of music is to ensure performance, it does not seem reasonable to tax the performer for doing the very thing the publisher wants him to do. Messrs. Novello, therefore, do not belong to the Performing Right Society. This does not mean that they do not retain performing rights in connection with the works they publish. They retain such rights, but they exercise them in a purely defensive manner. In other words, they use them only for the purpose of controlling (or even preventing) performances from borrowed, second-hand, or hired copies.

On the other hand, the purchaser of new copies of a work published by Messrs. Novello, whether obtained direct from them or through a dealer, may perform that work in public free of further charge as often as he pleases. In fact, the more frequent the performance the better. Anyone borrowing those copies from him in order to give a performance is on an entirely different footing.

There are only two exceptions to this rule: (1.) Works which Messrs. Novello publish on commission for the owner, and which do not, therefore, belong to them; (2.) All broadcast performances.

It is important that performers of Church music should understand that, although the Performing Right Society controls a large number of works, there is a very considerable amount of English Church music which is entirely free from its jurisdiction. This is due to the fact that many important publishers of such music remain outside the Society, realising that, as a tax on performance would fall in many cases on Church choirs, choral societies, and other organizations and performers who usually work without fee or reward, it would discourage enterprise in the very quarters where encouragement is most needed.

We understand, however, that the Performing Right Society waives its claim to a fee in connection with a performance that occurs in the course of a recognised religious service.

On the whole, Church Committees and others who are naturally disposed to regard the warning by the Performing Right Society referred to in the Sunday Times article as a kind of ultimatum, will be well advised to give the matter careful consideration before deciding whether they will take out a General Licence from that Society or whether they prefer to adopt the alternative course suggested by the Wesleyan Conference.

AFTER-THOUGHTS ON DELIUS

BY HUBERT J. FOSS

'Courteous and kind, hear what we do not do'—the opening of Charles Williams's 'Myth of Shakespeare' will courteously serve us here. For happily there is no need to seize the random opportunity of the Delius Festival to write a critical and biographical account of Frederick Delius. That was well done by Mr. Philip Heseltine in 1923, to whom all later commentators have been indebted for their facts, and even for some of their ideas. Particularly after the meed of deserved, if sometimes fulsome, praise that has been recklessly offered, alike by those who know their subject and those who do not, to a great composer during the recent Festival, any discussion of Delius's ultimate position in musical history would be inappropriate. That very subject, indeed, recoils from analytical treatment, for while on the one hand it resembles prophecy too closely for safe judgment, on the other it calls forth from many a conviction so strong that reasoning can act but as a weakly buttress for belief.

So, as the concerts of the Festival have been recounted elsewhere in this journal, I have to offer an excuse for writing about Delius; which is that outside the multitudinous words earned, now and before, by this great man's hours of continuous musical thought, stand a small number still unspoken, to voice a random aspect or two that, for lack of room, for obscurity or simplicity of character, perhaps even because of a too frequent similarity of critical approach, have even now escaped notice.

For example, interest has been much drawn to the importance and excellence—even necessity—of a Delius Festival. But a finer avenue of approach to the composer's mind can surely be found in the consideration of the causes of his neglect before the Festival and the other efforts of its promoters removed that cause of reproach. What is there in this music which has kept it a close secret even from the musicians, has denied it the public success of, say, Elgar or Vaughan Williams or Holst, has gained its composer less of recognition and honours in his native country than many workaday musicians of a minimum of talent? Factors of outside assistance have, it is true, not all been propitious; the composer's long residence abroad may have lost him something of present public appeal—but not more than Percy Grainger's. For many years printed scores of a large number of the works have been available, and the music itself with its frequent use of the chorus makes no greater demands on the English performing society than, say, the 'Planets' or 'A Sea Symphony.' Finally, the immediate appeal of the music is sensuous and beautiful, its subjects mainly romantic, its technique of far less novelty or obscurity than that of 'Petrouchka' or 'Psalmus Hungaricus.'

It is the musical or mental reasons we seek. Four of them at once appear as stars trailing, perhaps, lesser lights of practicality; all of them (as human characteristics always must) join together into one planetary mass. Let me enumerate them before discussing them severally. The first is the different cast of Delius's mind from that of the world around him. The second is the peculiar character of its simplicity. The third is the inability of this mind to submit to measurement by the academic foot-rule. The fourth is its preoccupation with beautiful human expression as something more important to it than strength, or pattern, or idealism, or religion, or anything else that can be found in the work of other great masters.

Mere verbiage as this epitome may seem, it will begin to have meaning when one considers the first reason of 'difference.' There was given to us in this Festival a mind which, for all its obvious influences and its passage across thirty years of music, remains complete and individual, unlike other musical minds, recognisable at a glance, clearly original. In Delius, music took a new turn in the road, which led that one voyager on a long if narrow trail. His followers have not gone so far, nor can they turn aside or back. It is a path that leads others nowhere, for that way music will never—cannot ever—go further. It is the path of instinct, of one man's nature, unplanned by theory, not to be developed by thought or argument or experience into a highway. The most ardent lover of Delius will confess that if by nature you do not like this music, nothing will persuade you to it. But nearly every human ear takes an immediate liking to it. That is the essence of its purely popular appeal, an appeal which has so far had too little chance from the musicians to show how inevitably it can hold the public. For this music never convinces by mere threats of external strength; it appeals; in giving, it receives.

By this time I have postulated an instinctive quality in Delius's music which could only with a wrench be considered as separate from a natural simplicity. This simplicity needs no proof, though it seems to need explanation. For there are certain set meanings for musical simplicity, one relating it to mere notes, another to texture, or development, or general insouciance. Delius has none of them; he has simplicity of mind without conventional simplicity of musical utterance. There is an almost definable unit of his musical utterance, but in economy of sound it cannot compare with the same unit of, say, Mozart's mind.

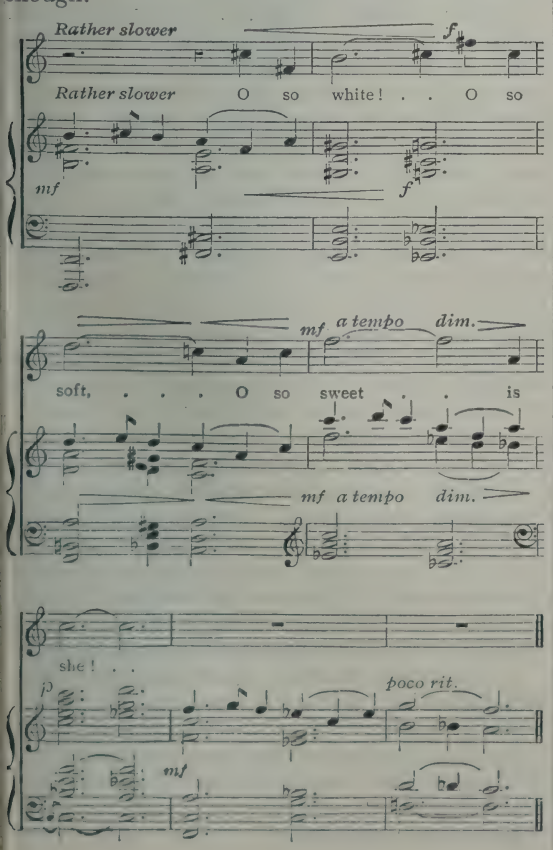
In this connection nothing could be more apt than the quotation by Miss Viola Meynell, in the Biography of her mother, of Alice Meynell's essay on the transition from 17th- to 18th-century letters. She writes:

> 'The 18th century, admired for its measure, moderation, and good sense, should be considered rather an age of extravagance, because in it imagination, which needs no exaggeration, failed. When it saw no clouds and stars it kindled artificial fires. The extravagance of Crashaw is a far more lawful thing than the extravagance of Addison, whom some critics believe to have committed none. Pope, and poets less great than he, were all for what they called "a rage"—a poetic "noble rage." Of sheer extremes it is not in the 17th-century conceits that we should seek examples, but in this 18th-century rage. The 18th century invented the art of raving. It was resolved to be behind no century in passion, to show the way, to fire the nations. Addison taught himself, as his hero taught the battle, "where to rage." Dr. Johnson must have created his phrase "the madded land," in order to prove that he, too, the poet of reason, could lodge the fury in his breast.'

Coming from one so richly conscious of words, so fully charged with meanings, and yet so simple in herself, this view has especial significance. Mrs. Meynell has probed through the diction and the style to the mind and the desires. She has discovered the matter despite the manner. So we, perceiving the thought through the notes, can see that the chord of the ninth need be no more complicated as a means of musical expression than the triad or the turn; that the mind which rests by natural desire on a full-sounding chord is not thereby denied the superiority of simplicity over a mind which ranged happily only over the three fundamental chords of the major scale, with an occasional seventh kept in reserve for poignancy.

Simply posed, it is a question of which simplicity we choose—ours, as listeners, or his, as composer. If ours, then we are asking impossibilities of any composer; if his, then we are rightly trying to learn from the composer his conception of life, expressed in what to us as music lovers is the most complete and beautiful form of art.

But, if this reasoning is right, there is practical proof both of Delius's simplicity and also of its instinctive inability to conform to book-made ideals. We need not go to 'O Zarathustra,' in 'The Mass of Life': the song, 'So white, so soft, so sweet is she,' with its closing bars, is enough.



The unity of tonal conception here is sufficient to prove a direct simplicity of thought that no mere agglomeration of harmonizing notes could obscure. If this is not simplicity recognisable by all, it is beyond mistake Delius's simplicity; if we do not accept it, we must at least allow it the preference of mental superiority over ourselves, and accept its challenge to us to find both an elusive definition and an example of a more clear and simple result.

The same fundamental simplicity of thought appears in the philosophical side of Delius's mind. To give an example of it would be to quote in extenso from all the longer works. Yet the very soul of this poet of Nature has sometimes eluded critics who have seen nothing but complication of thought in his individuality, and only obscurity in his richness.

A similar conventional taint has marred some critics' judgment of Delius's musical texture. This music is not at all what we were taught at the colleges to think 'good' music. The conception is not primarily melodic, nor the texture contrapuntal. Though without conscious atonality, yet the formal system is not built upon contrast of keys or even of subjects. The development is strange in method, the harmony essential and not merely additional to the main thought. In fact, by every rule the music is poor save that any application of the rule makes it fade away before the eyes like the Cheshire Cat.

That Delius's musical thought is harmonic in basis has retarded his appreciation more than anything else, though on the face of it there is no apparent reason why the harmonic unit is less proper (or less simple) than the melodic. His melody often derives from his harmony—clothes it with a tune, as it were; sometimes a secondary subject grows out of a figure of an inner part into a prominent melodic utterance of great length and unflagging beauty. This is particularly noticeable in the string concertos, where the solo part is as often harmonic as it is melodic, moving about now with snatches of tune, now with accompanying figuration, now with a phrase of harmonic intention or of mere emphasis.

His methods of development are no less his own; they are of a piece with the poetic side of his mind. A whole piece like 'Brigg Fair' presents a whole picture; its musical shape is determined by its poetic content and not by the demands of musical pattern. The development of the subject-matter is rhapsodic; it is the enlargement of a mood rather than the conscious working out of a musical theme. Regarded in the light of conventional 'sonata form,' Delius's formal works (the concertos and sonatas) seem to have no backbone; the text-book forgotten, their structure is acceptable because it is logical in both the poetic and the musical senses.

Our fourth point helps us here. Along with beauty of conception goes a desire for sheer beauty of sound. Undeniably this desire for immediate effect sometimes mars the shape of the whole, but the immediate effect is often so beautiful that nothing could compensate its loss. Delius seems to lack any moral conscience with regard to technique, a quality refreshing in a country where skilful writing so often passes for good music. His orchestration, exquisite as it is, makes heavy demands on the conductor and players, as a recent performance of the 'Cello Concerto showed us. There are solo passages in the Double Concerto, for example, which are inaudible ; but the music is not really less beautiful for that. Just as he is no theorist in harmony, so Delius is no technician. The professionalism of the composer is put aside ; the human expression of a beautiful mind remains. It is sufficient indeed.

* * * * * *

The question of Delius's nationality is often discussed, and we are told that his music bears a cosmopolitan stamp. That is true enough, but the interest of this cosmopolitanism lies not in its absence of national influences but in the number of national impressions it bears. The most obvious influence of his musical life was Grieg, chief among nationalist composers ; not only in the formal works (where it is not all for good), but almost everywhere one feels that Northern guidance. Yet even in the later works there is strong evidence of German education, in the lay-out of the music no less than its length. Alongside stands the English characteristic of song, evident not only in Delius's frequent use of the human voice but in the vocal quality of his themes and phrases, his liking for the pentatonic scale, his continued reminiscence of folk-song. Finally, there is more than a little of France in his music, as any comparison with Debussy will show.

The result suggests four coloured strands which, woven together, make up an individual texture, with a pattern all its own.

. . . . . .

The comparison between Delius and Tennyson has been made before ; it is close, with an odd divergence in the objects of the religious reverence which each mind felt so strongly. I mention it here because a quotation from Mrs. Meynell again illuminates the problem :

> 'Tennyson [one might well substitute Delius] is a subject for our alternatives of feeling as is hardly another poet. He sheds the luminous suns of dreams upon men and women who would do well with footlights . . . speeds his carpet knight upon a carpet of authentic wild flowers. . . . The style and the manner run side by side. . . . There should be no danger for the more judicious reader lest impatience at the peculiar Tennyson trick should involve the great Tennyson style in a sweep of protest. There is never a passage of manner but a great passage of style rebukes our dislike and recalls our heart.'

Oh, that our musical critics wrote as well and truly as that !

. . . . . .

It is sometimes the side-view of the object that shows it best. If these random and added considerations on Delius's work give no more than a new basis for further study and investigation, they will have served their purpose.

THE ARTS IN REVOLT
III.

By Rutland Boughton

(Continued from November number, p. 984)

The attack upon the communal conception of mediæval Christianity culminated in the kingship of Louis XIV. During his reign came the turn of a tide which subsequently advanced in two great waves, having their crests in the French Revolution of 1789 and the pressure of to-day. Each wave had its due expression in the arts. The first wave soaked into the plays of Molière, the writings of Voltaire and Rousseau following in natural order. A number of artists in other parts of Christendom were affected by the same current, highest expressional climax being reached in the works of Goya, Blake, and Beethoven, the French themselves finding fullest expression, not in art, but in action.

Molière developed his art in the provinces. Early lack of success in the capital threw him back upon the less sophisticated stage of the people. When, later on, royal favour was extended to the comedist, his mental outlook had already been fixed, and he proceeded to scarify the silly people he met, including those of the Court. As it all took place under the protection of the king there was the less heroism in it. Perhaps the most heroic thing Molière ever did was when in 'Le Misanthrope' he satirised himself. For the rest it was the pedantry of fashionable artists, the meanness of money-grubbers, the absurdities of the bourgeois, and, most bitter of all, the exposure of the religious in 'Le Tartufe.'

> 'Since 1627 there had existed in France a religious society called the Society of the Holy Sacrament. It was not a sect, properly so-called, but an association of men and women who, on the basis of the Roman Church, worked for moral purity and strict observation of religious ordinances — a kind of mission which was founded originally with the best intentions, and counted many persons of high repute among its members, but which had gradually become a scourge to its fellow-creatures by insolent interference in other people's affairs, by espionage and delation, till it terrified the weak-minded and all who had reason for concealment. And as with all similar so-called "holy" societies, this community had become a safe harbour for a number of rascals of the worst description, to whom religious hypocrisy and eager condemnation of others were the most comfortable cloak for their own vices and knaveries. It was against this mischievous party, which was recruited from all classes of society, that Molière directed the satire in his "Tartufe."' (Mantzius, 'Molière and his Time,' being vol. 4 of a 'History of Theatrical Art.')

Because of this play, even the protection of Louis was scarcely enough. The enmity of the Church pursued Molière to the very last. He was refused such consolation as Catholics give to the dying; refused also the right to be buried in consecrated ground. So if to us the element of revolt in the art of Molière seem small, it is clear that in his own time it seemed considerable.

Molière's revolt affected his style more vitally than in the case of any artist thus far considered by us—most emphatically in turning him away from traditional verse to the simple prose of current speech.

The position of Molière in the public mind of England has been to some extent confused by the fact that he first reached us in the translations and perversions of Restoration dramatists. As Meredith pointed out in his 'Essay on Comedy,' such translations supplied 'a noble entertainment spoilt to suit the wretched taste of a villainous age. . . . Comedy justly treated, as you find it in Molière whom we so clownishly mishandled, the comedy of Molière throws no infamous reflections upon life. It is deeply conceived in the first place, and therefore cannot be impure.'

The natural sympathy between tyrannical government and the bastard classicism of Renaissance art has been exposed in many flaming paragraphs by Ruskin. The same subject is treated more cautiously, with direct reference to the Court of Louis XIV., in W. H. Hudson's 'France, the Nation and its Development':

> 'It is at least suggestive that as the consolidation of the principles of classicism into a dogmatic creed was coincident with the firm establishment of absolute monarchy, so the rise of disruptive forces in literature synchronised with the beginnings of its decline. Classicism and the aristocratic spirit meanwhile triumphed in the art of the Grand Siècle even more completely than in its literature, and more than literature that art was characterised not only by the superficial elegance and the uniformity which were the notes of current taste, but also by the concomitant coldness and pomposity.'

But let it be clear that what Hudson referred to as 'disruptive tendencies' bore no likeness to the disruptive tendencies of modern art in our days, for the former were truly described by Meredith as a reversion to directness and simplicity. The disruption of classicism came of the need the world had for an art which was something more than an external decoration, which was really capable of vital expression.

The late Lord Morley in his study of Voltaire dealt emphatically with the prejudices which have prevented English folk from deriving greater benefit from the work of the French author. Despite many petty weaknesses Voltaire was one of the nobler rebels of our civilization:

> 'To Voltaire reason and humanity were but a single word, and love of truth and passion for justice but a single emotion. None of the famous men who have fought that they themselves might think freely and speak truly have ever seen more clearly that the fundamental aim of the contest was that others might live happily. . . . The book-writer takes good advantage of his opportunity to assure men, expressly or by implication, that he is their true king, and that the sacred bard is a mightier man than his hero. Voltaire knew better. Though himself perhaps the most puissant man of letters that ever lived, he rated literature as it ought to be rated, below action.'

And so we get a glimpse of the manner in which the art of revolt in 18th-century France was leading into the sphere of action.

Voltaire's revolt, real as it was, did not affect his style. Whereas Molière had reacted to the tongue of the common people, Voltaire preserved the tradition of the so-called 'grand age,' which, as Morley said, 'distinguished him from the school of famous men who were called Voltaireans, and of whom the special mark was that they had absolutely broken with the whole past of French history and literature.' Such men as these are the real disruptors, for while they have nothing to say of such importance that they are obliged to develop existing art-forms, as Voltaire did, or react to simpler forms as Molière did, they are fain to publish their presence by an absolute break with the past; and so we are aware of them, even though they have nothing to say.

Molière's revolt had been chiefly because of the follies of little men who imagined their age a 'grand age.' Voltaire's revolt found expression almost entirely because of the cruelties and superstitions of the churches. With Rousseau the revolt spread to a wider sphere, and it was the governments of the world which were attacked. So in point of intention as well as time we pass from a revolt in terms of literature to actual conditions of revolution. Indeed, had it not been for the intensity of Rousseau's political emotions, it would seem as if he might never have been a man of letters. Time after time in youth and early manhood he was given up for a dunce.

Are Rousseau's writings, then, the more revolutionary in their style? Only in the sense that they were more emotional and vehement.

'It was Rousseau who first in our modern time sounded a new trumpet note for one more of the great battles of humanity. . . . He alone had the gift of the golden mouth. It was in Rousseau that polite Europe first hearkened to strange voices and faint reverberation from out the vague and cavernous shadow in which the common people move. . . . The race owes something to one who helped to state the problem, writing up in letters of flame at the brutal feast of kings and the rich that civilization is as yet only a mockery, and did furthermore inspire a generation of men and women with the stern resolve that they would rather perish than live on in a world where such things can be.' (Morley, 'Rousseau'; Rousseau, 'Les Confessions'; 'Emile' and 'Le Contrat Social' in English translation, Everyman edition.)

During the period between the accession of Louis XIV. and the French Revolution there were in England a certain number of writers and at least one considerable artist whose works were affected by the social conditions and mental atmosphere of the time. Hogarth's pictures run parallel with Molière's plays in their humorous exposure of evil and their reaction to a popular idiom.

Swift's 'Tale of a Tub' and the later books of 'Gulliver's Travels' are instinct with revolt against religious, social, and political wrong. The same may be said of some of the verse of Burns and the earlier poetry of Wordsworth. Later in point of time, but still affected by the same spirit, are the poetry of Shelley and the best of Byron. Indeed, better than all Byron's verse was his speech in the House of Lords on behalf of the machine-wrecking weavers; while of Shelley Prof. Murray has already been quoted to the effect that though his works are full of intellectual rebellion, the traditional forms of verse are 'preserved and made more exquisite.'

However, there were three artists who, more even than the French writers, summed up the spirit of that revolutionary period.

Goya was born of working people in a village of Spain in 1746. He received the sort of education such a lad would receive; but he became the greatest artist of his country and time, favoured at Court and idolised by the people. What is even more singular, from beginning to end of his career he made it his first business to serve the people by means of his art.

He ran many risks. Prof. Rothenstein in his monograph upon the artist remarks that 'indifference to injustice which allows young painters to lead such calm and dignified lives in England was absent from Goya's anarchical nature,' and one day it seems that 'he was found lying in the street with a knife sticking in his back'; and, 'being again annoyed with rumours of some action to be taken by the Inquisitors, he determined with characteristic energy to go to Rome.'

At Rome he saw a good deal of David, 'whose revolutionary ideas must have strengthened his own convictions'; even there a considerable proportion of his paintings dealt with working-class life.

He returned to Spain, where he naturally made enemies; but Goya, 'for all the subtlety of his mind, never stooped to match his character with those of the aristocrats in whose company he now found himself . . . he caused his pencil, which was as sharp as his sword, to be as much respected, and he had the townspeople of Madrid at his back.'

He was made Pintor de camera del Rey, but none the less did not fail on that account to pillory the character of the Queen. More courageous still was his anti-clerical position, shown, for example, in such a picture as the one in our own National Gallery, where a priest is seen pouring oil into the devil's lamp.

An amusing side of the artist's character arose when he was painting the portrait of the great Duke of Wellington, and being annoyed by ducal comment, drove the sitter from the studio at the point of the sword.

Most important of all Goya's work, from the point of view of our present study, were his etchings—the 'Caprichos,' the 'Disparates,' and the 'Desastres de la Guerra.' These works were like to have cost him dear; but as Louis XIV. saved Molière from the anger of the Inquisition, so Charles IV. saved Goya. Of these pieces Rothenstein says, 'Goya's hatred of the Church, which to his mind acted in direct contradiction to the Gospel of its founders, and condoned, if not encouraged, the cruelty and injustice of those in power, suggested some of the bitterest pages of the "Caprichos."'

As for the influence of his revolt upon his technique, 'though he was gifted with the power of creating works of traditional finish' he was 'willing to sacrifice precisely those qualities which are looked for and admired in most painters.' The vitality of the man was so eager to express all of life with full courage that it seemed of less importance to give perfect finish than to get it all done. When he was painted by another artist he took the picture away after two sittings, lest the painter should spoil it by niggling efforts for perfection.

But there is a very significant point in this matter of Goya's technique. Though he was comparatively careless for the finish of his paintings, which were generally commissioned by wealthy patrons, when he came to his etchings a very different attitude prevailed. Let us recall the fact that Botticelli and Holbein had had recourse to wood-cuts for their more definitely revolutionary ideas, the better to reach the wider circles of the people. It seems not unlikely that Goya had recourse to etching for the same reasons; and for their perfection nothing of toil was stinted.

In those etchings there is much that is obscure; but the obscurity did not arise in an affected or inevitable modernity. It arose in the fact that, for all his courage, there were certain extreme things which it seemed necessary to state, and at the same time to disguise.

Blamire Young, in his book 'The Proverbs of Goya,' gives a detailed and on the whole a convincing interpretation of the symbolism of the etchings. It is such as places the artist with Dante, Michel Angelo, and others who, for political reasons, thought well to hide the full measure of their revolt.

Another such was our own Blake. His political opinions were those of Thomas Paine and William Godwin. Blake helped the former to elude arrest and escape to France. A trial for high treason which Blake suffered later on may have had little to do with his opinions; but it is significant that among his missing works was one on the French Revolution. However, there are enough intelligible fragments in the other works to prove his political and æsthetic philosophy.

In the preface to the poem called 'Milton,' Blake shows how well aware he was of the connection between evil conditions of life and the encouragement of affected art—such art as Palladian architecture, classic painting, rhetorical literature, and Italian opera:

> 'The stolen and perverted writings of Homer and Ovid, of Plato and Cicero, which all men ought to contemn, are set up by artifice against the sublime of the Bible. . . . Shakespeare and Milton were both curbed by the general malady. . . . Set your foreheads against the ignorant hirelings! For we have hirelings in the camp, the Court, and the university who would, if they could, for ever depress mental and prolong corporeal war.'

As an apposite instance of that last statement we may cite Goya's etchings on War, which were duly suppressed by those whose interest it was to 'prolong corporeal war,' while the mere fact that so many artists of revolt have found it necessary to disguise their ideas is proof enough of the dangerous power of those who regularly 'depress mental war.'

The form of Blake's books offers further examples of concealment by symbolisation. Indeed, their form is often so obscure that here, if anywhere, the futurist may adduce precedent and example for the creation of a style severed from the traditions of the past.

Artists and poets who preceded Blake had used the popular legends of the Jews and Greeks, the Celts and Teutons, whenever their work needed symbolic shape. Blake created legendary figures of his own, with the consequence that his 'prophetic' writings are unread, and, except in fragments, unintelligible, or just dull and boring.

It would seem as if, like Rousseau, Blake's feelings of indignation against wrong were stronger than his reasoning faculty; but whereas Rousseau developed a style capable of conveying his thoughts in the light of his fiery feelings, the intensity of Blake's emotions was such that they cast a light too strong for the thoughts they were intended to illumine.

Three years ago I was in a Russian village looking over a monastery which had been converted into a home for children. On the clock-tower outside was an uncovered electric bulb. The young engineer in charge of the plant was very proud of his job. 'See,' he said, 'the monks were here for centuries and kept the people in darkness; we have been here only a few years, but we have given them light.' The light by the clock-face was so strong that I could only read the time with difficulty.

Blake's emotions seem to have had a similar effect upon the message of his prophetic books. Had his medium been that of music, wherein the intellectual appeal is not restricted by the symbols of language or the natural world, Blake would have been in a better case. Wherein he failed, Beethoven succeeded.

In a journal devoted to music it is not necessary to labour the facts of Beethoven's social and political tendencies. Enough to remind readers of a few details such as the contempt of the 'brain-proprietor' for the 'land-proprietor,' his indifference to Royalties when in company of Goethe he met them, his downright rudeness to Prince Lobkowitz; and more to the point than all such petty indications, the business of the 'Eroica' dedication given to the revolutionary Napoleon but denied to the Emperor, and the nature of the poem chosen for the ninth Symphony.

The effect of Beethoven's revolutionary tendencies upon his style has yet to be properly investigated. Here I can only refer in general terms to four æsthetic signs of the inner revolt: his increasing use of tunes instead of mere phrase-themes, the unexpected development of his free-fantasia sections, his increasing struggles to win a natural polyphony, and his additions to the dissonantal elements of his art.

Beethoven accepted the tradition right enough; but he was at once moved to modify it in what is sometimes believed to be a 'progressive' direction. Progress is a cant word in this regard. Progress towards what? Unless there is a goal, how can we speak of progress? Those who regard the increasing dissonances from Haydn to Stravinsky as an example of 'progress' without defining the final objective have clearly never given any real thought to the matter.

In three of the four details I have mentioned Beethoven was definitely reactionary—feeling his way back to the principles which governed the art of Bach; and those principles, as has been recognised by all who have seriously studied the question, derived not at all from the conditions of Bach's own day, but from the conditions governing the arts in the Middle Ages.

Beethoven's use of clear-cut tunes instead of the fragmentary themes of his immediate predecessors was a reaction similar to the use of simpler English by Bunyan, simpler French by Molière. Beethoven's refusal to accept the palladian outlines of sonata form, and his will to develop the music according to its quality and his own need for expression, were essentially Gothic reactions. So also, and even more obviously, were his struggles towards polyphony.

There remains only Beethoven's increasing use of dissonance.

A superficial consideration might regard that as a reaction also, for the music of Bach contains much more dissonance than the music of Beethoven; but Bach's dissonances were details which he allowed; Beethoven's were structural features of his work. The increase of dissonance in Beethoven as compared with Haydn and Mozart was indeed a step on the path which ended (a dead-end) with Debussy and Scriabin. Comparatively small men as these last two were, they were generally able to govern their dissonances. In the activities of Stravinsky and his kind the dissonances are ungoverned.

In so far as Beethoven was in the direct line of those who deliberately increased the dissonances of music, and regarded them, not as details to be woven in, but as essential limbs of the structure—in so far I think we must admit that here, for the first time in the work of all the artists we have considered, there is a certain revolt against the æsthetic tradition as well as a revolt against the evils of life itself.

(To be continued.)

ROLAND MANUEL

By Paul Landormy

Born in Paris on March 22, 1891, Roland Manuel first studied music at Liège, where his family lived from 1897 to 1905. The violin was his instrument. We may say, however, that it was not until 1905, on the occasion of a performance of 'Pelléas' in Paris, that he became seriously interested in music. Shortly afterwards, he decided to take up composition. He studied harmony under Droeghmans, a pupil of Lenepveu, and counterpoint under Albert Roussel at the Schola Cantorum. He made the acquaintance of Erik Satie, who introduced him to Ravel.

Meanwhile he continued his studies at the Schola, though he quickly tired of the teaching given by Sérieyx. On the other hand, he became attached to Vincent d'Indy, whose ideas, nevertheless, he uncompromisingly opposed.

Following the sage counsel of Roussel, he left the Schola and took lessons in fugue and composition from Ravel.

In 1913 he entered upon his military service, and produced his first published work, 'Farizade au sourire de rose,' a collection of songs.

From 1914 to 1918 he fought at the Dardanelles, and the Chemin des Dames, Flanders. It was at the Chemin des Dames that he finished the 'Harem de Vice-Roi,' a symphonic poem which has since been played at the Pasdeloup Concerts.

After six years with the colours, Roland was glad to return to his music—though, as we see, this had not been altogether neglected.

His works comprise: 'Deux Rondels de Péronnelle'; 'Isabelle et Pantalon,' an opéra-bouffe, words by Max Jacob; 'Délie, objet de plus haulte vertu,' on ten-line stanzas by Maurice Scève; 'Tempo di ballo,' for orchestra; 'Tournoi singulier,' for the Swedish Ballets; 'Trois Romances' of P. S. Toulet, for soprano and orchestra; the 'Diable amoureux,' an opéra-comique in four Acts, words by Roger Allard, after Cazotte (this has not yet been scored); and the 'Ecran des Damoiselles,' a ballet in two tableaux with words by Drésa (this was quite recently given at the Opéra).

Such, in short, is an account of the artistic life of Roland Manuel. I add that in this young artist the critic is, perhaps, as greatly in evidence as the musician.

Manuel is, in fact, one of our most subtle and intelligent critics, one of those who discern most clearly the details of their impressions and the causes of so many divers effects.

His musical records and his books are not simply models of analysis; they are also models of style—an elaborate style, with countless secret twists and turns, abounding in perpetual surprises and swift allusions, both literary and musical.

In asserting that his style is elaborate I do not wish to imply that it is laboured, or smacking of effort. All I mean is that it presupposes a mind perpetually at work, one that is far from being satisfied either with the first idea that enters it or with the first word that offers itself.

It is a style full of allusions, one that calls forth a whole world of unexpressed thoughts—thoughts scarce apparent and which we divine unconsciously.

It may be that Manuel is a critic before being a creator; at all events, both his intellect and his taste play so definite a part in his work that the rôle of instinct is no longer recognised there. Our instinct—genius, if you prefer—leads us more than we imagine; even our minds are controlled by it. Here the only difference to be observed between individuals is that the intelligent man almost always knows where he is going, whereas the purely instinctive man is carried he knows not where.

As a matter of fact, Manuel shows an altogether remarkable intuition for the end to be attained, as well as for the right means of attaining it.

Voltaire would have had greater cause than ever for wonderment, had he known Manuel. He once remarked with reference to Grétry, 'You are a musician, monsieur, and yet you are intelligent!'

We have passed that stage, at all events!

. . . . . .

Where does Manuel stand, as a musician, amongst his contemporaries?

In a way he is related to the 'Six.' He is their friend and comrade, and is on the best of terms with them all.

And yet he is apart from them, if we consider only his music. It is more subtle and compact, not easy of approach; its art is more self-contained, showing a certain reticence. In particular, it keeps aloof from those exhibitions of violence which the 'Six' have never evaded—have even systematically sought.

Intellectually, Manuel is allied to Gabriel Fauré and Maurice Ravel, but not to Stravinsky.

He takes no risks; everything is matter for calculation. His effects are not the result of chance; he avoids making them too emphatic. A certain discretion and an unerring style are amongst his most striking characteristics.

There is nothing romantic about him—nothing resembling Milhaud, for instance. Rather might he be compared with Auric, though here again there are wide divergences. He has not so many angles as Auric has. His music is infinitely more flowing. He is capable of a degree of tenderness unknown to Auric, about whose music there is always a somewhat acid flavour. Manuel, too, is far more scrupulous about form than is Auric.

He is a true classic.

. . . . . .

'There are two kinds of musicians,' he once said to me, 'those who tell of the inner life and those who tell of outer things. I belong to the latter.'

He does not tell of his inner self. He makes not the slightest pretention to lay bare before us the story of his soul.

He tells us of outer things. His music invariably has an object apart from himself.

Moreover, this object is but a pretext—a pretext for the fine interpretation of musical forms, for pure music.

Never does he imagine that music is an imitative art, that its importance and worth depend upon its exact resemblance to a model. Music which did no more than describe exactly would be worthless—mere ear-deception which would have no more æsthetic value than eye-deception has in painting.

The free play of musical forms—such is Manuel's field of action. Free play, for his links with the object are but occasional, and in itself this play must retain its full importance. It is a play of form in which the artist's mental state is not manifested, except indirectly, and which, for that reason, may be called 'objective.'

Still, without reverting to the discussions involved in the use of this term, we see that this play is bound to indicate the personality of the player, and that he expresses it in his own way, just as we reveal more secrets regarding ourselves in the peculiarities of our handwriting than we either think or wish to do.

We critics are curious and indiscreet. We try to find out what we are not clearly told, and we seem to catch a glimpse, in the music of Roland Manuel—even though it is anything but self-revealing—of a great curiosity, first and foremost. He, too, is curious regarding all fine and rare sensations, taking pleasure in every discovery, curious regarding ideas, their conjunctions and their oppositions, their contrasts and their affinities, curious regarding the thoughts of others and the words or different artistic languages that interpret them, curious regarding beauty in all its aspects and especially the musical forms which will crystallise something of the never-ceasing flow of his mind.

Mind, thought—these are words which we continually have to use when speaking of Manuel, for indeed they express that which is most emphatic in this genuine artist who never permits what Plato called the inferior elements of the soul to raise their voice within him.

This may easily be discovered by listening to certain of his works.

I should like more especially to say a few words about one of them, perhaps his finest work up to the present: 'Isabelle et Pantalon.'

. . . . . .

The first merit of the music of 'Isabelle et Pantalon' is that it is ideally suited to its object; it is amusing and comical; it evokes laughter.

That which it releases within us is not coarse physical joy; it is a more delicate and essentially intelligent joy. There is a form of joy whose roots lie deep in the body. But the joy I mean has its source and origin in thought, and this it is which we call wit or humour.

There is no humour apart from a certain application of the judgment, and it demands attention from those who would apprehend its effects.

Humourless joy may be communicated by a contagious movement of the organism where thought can have no place whatsoever.

Roland Manuel possesses humour of the best, the finest, and most delicate quality. His art is essentially a skilled and applied art. Nevertheless it succeeds. And this success implies a gift worth more than all the science and technical skill in the world.

The play of our author consists principally in blending all tones and styles, the result being that we are continually surprised at the unforeseen sequence of a deceptive beginning. Nothing that we expected ever happens.

And yet there is no trace of confusion. This apparent disorder is controlled by a secret reasonableness. A slender thread may be a solid bond: the incongruous holds together. The tottering castle does not crumble to the ground. In spite of the fact that it leans, the tower of Pisa is well and truly built.

Roland Manuel is a bold and excellent architect. When he lets himself go, he goes far. His harmony, more particularly, gives one the most perilous shocks, which he is able to convert into the most delightful titillations. This is not the deliberate polytonality of a Milhaud laid down as a principle upon the ruins of the former tonality. Rather is it a way of extracting the ultimate consequences from the old tonal regime—a method which is equivalent sometimes to destroying it, or almost destroying it.

I remember the delightful performances given at the Trianon-Lyrique in 1922, first conducted by André Caplet and afterwards by Louis Masson. We experienced the feeling that a very pleasing tradition was being revived—that of the old opéra-comique, of Monsigny, of Grétry, of Boïeldieu, of Gounod (I am thinking of 'Philémon et Baucis' and of the 'Médecin malgré lui')—a tradition so stupidly repudiated by our own musicians after 1880.

In 'Isabelle et Pantalon' Manuel has expressed himself perfectly. Here we may find all that he is, all that he is capable of being, all that perfect happiness given by rightful decision and by a dainty sensitiveness.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

Music in the Foreign Press

KAROL SZYMANOWSKY

In the September Rassegna Musicale, Guido Pannain writes:

'Szymanowsky's music is an orgy of sounds and colours; it coruscates and blazes. He must have learned his craft from a wizard. In spirit he is a romantic, but a romantic permeated with impressionism, and endowed with the thick-set frame of a gladiator. His melody is tense, his polyphony robust after the fashion of Wagner's. In our time he stands out as an altogether exceptional figure.'

KODÁLY

In the September-October Revue Musicale, Ch. A. de Thot devotes a very readable essay to Kodály, praising the original, straightforward, workmanlike character of his music, and appositely describing a number of its idiosyncrasies.

DIAGHILEV

In the Courrier Musical (October 1), Jean Chantavoine writes:

'Diaghilev was the incarnation of the monarchic civilization of Russia, which always sought to find its balance half-way between the lavishness of Asiatic luxury and the refinement of 18th-century French taste—between Samarkand and Versailles. When Imperial Russia collapsed, he ceased being the representative of a race, and became a cosmopolitan pure and simple, impatiently and irresolutely seeking an art formula which would replace the one which Russia could no longer supply. In lieu of the heavy opulence in which the influence of centuries of refinement and luxury made itself felt, he started giving us, year after year, extemporised spectacles which originated, no longer in Russia, but in the Montparnasse studios. Would he, in the long run, have found his way towards a new stage of evolution? It is impossible to reply to this question.'

In the October Musica d'Oggi, Alfredo Casella writes:

'I doubt whether Diaghilev's work can be continued, but no matter; it is better, perhaps, that the Russian Ballets should die than that they should continue to decline as they had done during the past twelve years. But the name of Diaghilev will remain immortal.'

EASTERN FOLK-TUNES

In the August-September Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft, Peter Panoff describes the phonograms of folk-tunes collected in the Viatka and Perm districts (North-East Russia) by the late Dr. Robert Pélissier in 1911-12.

THE PRINTING OF MOZART'S ARRANGEMENT OF 'THE MESSIAH'

In the October issue of the same periodical, Reinhold Bernhardt gives the history of Mozart's work on Handel's 'The Messiah,' and declares that the time has come for a critical revision of current editions of the score as rearranged by Mozart.

The Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft is now no longer printed in German characters but in Roman.

A FINNISH COMPOSER

In the Courrier Musical (October 15—November 1), Prof. Arkadius Presse devotes a critical and biographical essay to Toïvo Kuula (1883-1918), whom he describes as the first composer to have written music which really suggests the aspects and atmosphere of Finland. Kuula's output consists chiefly of vocal and chamber music, and comprises about twenty-five songs, a violin sonata, a pianoforte trio, and a few choral works. The writer has high praise for it.

THE NATIVE MUSIC OF CATALONIA

In the same periodical (November 1), J. Canteloube writes on Catalonian folk-music, calling special attention to the 'Coblas,' the small local bands of which he gives a description provided by the conductor of one of them. Among the instruments used are two kinds of oboes (named 'prime' and 'tenor' respectively in French Catalonia, 'tiple' and 'tenora' in Spanish Catalonia). They are very powerful, supple, and expressive. Déodat de Sévérac introduced them in the setting of his 'Héliogabale' (1911). Another (nowadays used in Spanish Catalonia only) is the 'flaviol,' 'a kind of fife, which the player uses with one hand, the other hand being used to beat a small drum.' The Spanish 'Coblas' consist of twelve players, the French of six. The results they achieve are described as most attractive.

THE BELGIAN 'SYNTHETISTS'

In the Revue Musicale Belge (October 5) appears the news that the 'synthetist' composers (described as spiritual descendants of Paul Gilson) are coming to the front in Belgium and elsewhere. An opera by Gaston Brenta and a ballet by Maurice Schoemaker will be given at the Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie; a Symphony by Marcel Poot and a work by René Bernier at the Concerts Populaires; a 'Gil Blas' by Jules Strens at the Concerts du Conservatoire; and symphonic sketches by Francis de Bourguignon at Paris.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'A Door-keeper of Music.' By J. A. Fuller-Maitland.

[John Murray, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

The writer who held the post of chief music critic to The Times for twenty-two years might claim to be Jove rather than Janus; but here the more modest title suits a modest book.

It was Mr. Fuller-Maitland who fixed the excellent tradition that now gives a special tone to the music columns of The Times: bland imperturbability, a tinge of regret when things are so bad, a contemplative calm in the face of things that are good, an avoidance of the journalistic touch as if it were something unclean, an unforced effect of authority, and, of course, scholarship. Our door-keeper saw to it that he guarded a goodly portal, and he looks back upon his years of service with dignified composure. In writing his story he does not ask us to be impressed by the importance of his revelations. It is as though he had yielded to the fashion for publishing reminiscences in case there might be a few points of interest to be discovered in his own—not that he would suggest any such thing, of course.

Fuller-Maitland made his entry into musical affairs at the very dawn of the British revolution, for when he went to Cambridge Stanford had just taken charge of the C.U.M.S., and one of the most important musical centres in England began to be alive to Brahms and Wagner and Bach. Thirty-six years later, when the present chronicle ends, Beecham was giving his Delius concerts; opera, in the same period, had advanced from Patti to Salomé. During twenty-nine of these momentous years Fuller-Maitland sat closely at watch, taking note of every stage in the gradual change, scrutinising every successive wave in the advancing tide, assisting at the birth of every new reputation, analysing every new ideal.

When at length he sums up his experiences in a book, what a store of fact and philosophy it will reveal to us! We look, and find a good deal less than we expect. The book is a store of amiable, leisurely jottings about this and that, composedly placed on end. There is hardly any treatment of principle, little connecting up of history, no suggestion of a lifetime's vivid experience re-lived. One gets the impression that the writer never had a vivid experience. Perhaps that made him all the better as a critic; but, rightly or wrongly, one feels a trifle disappointed by the low temperature of the book and the writer's preoccupation with small rather than with big talk.

The moderns are treated in a few incidental paragraphs—tolerant, almost appreciative, but meagre. The writer's attitude is sketched in passing:

> 'I feel able to form a hope that the paintings of "post-impressionists," "cubists," and the rest, like the music of Stravinsky, Schönberg, and their English followers, may some day be appreciated by intelligences that are not bewildered by them. For, taking a long view of the arts, nothing is more certain than that they have always been accused of making for ugliness; but the truth is that beauty, instead of being drowned in ugliness, is always enlarging its borders, so that what seems at first hideous and quite unintelligible becomes first acceptable, then warmly appreciated, then ultimately called trite and old-fashioned.'

Thus for an instant the door-keeper opens the peep-hole of his inner sanctum. But he quickly shuts it, and proceeds with two pages of anecdotes. Elsewhere we get another peep; he finds Debussy mystifying, but yields to his fascination:

> 'Speaking for myself, it was only after what now seems a disgracefully long time that I was able to perceive the exquisite adaptation of means to ends, the perfection of Debussy's pianoforte writing, and the enormous value of his reticences.'

And so with 'Pelléas.' The modern English composer is dismissed with a selection of the works that are 'undoubtedly great'—Vaughan Williams's 'Mass,' 'London' Symphony, and 'Pastoral' Symphony; Holst's 'The Perfect Fool,' 'The Planets,' and 'The Hymn of Jesus.' Half-a-dozen lines; and then, later:

> 'Out of the welter that began to prevail when the 20th century was young, there seemed occasionally to be thrown up some obscure shapes in which the promise of future symmetry might be discovered; but the task of expounding them in intelligible language was one I felt I must leave to younger men.'

Many a tired critic will read this with sympathy; even the youngest of us would like to pass the job on to younger ones, and so ad infinitum.

A couple of pages sum up the requisite qualities of a critic-journalist, and the troubles that he has to meet—among them the husbands of popular contraltos and the mothers of prodigies. 'One gets to wish that the prodigies, like ideal domestic servants, could all be orphans or foundlings.' Mr. Fuller-Maitland upholds anonymous criticism, believing that it fosters a sense of responsibility in the critic. 'Nearly all the most irresponsible utterances of what used to be called the new criticism appeared over initials that were well known,' and 'anonymity restrains one from giving voice to the personal prejudices one cannot but possess, and obliges one to take into account the convictions of the great mass of older people than oneself.'

This last phrase is surely strange doctrine for a critic. One is puzzled to know how far Mr. Fuller-Maitland means us to take it. If he secretly disagreed with the mass of older people who denied any fault in, say, Paderewski's playing or the Minuet of Beethoven's eighth Symphony, would he publish the opinion of the many rather than his own? One can hardly believe it. It must have been over a very restricted area that he applied this principle of subservience; yet here it is given out in unguarded simplicity as if it were fundamental to public criticism, which it surely is not, either in Mr. Fuller-Maitland's or in that of any other critic whose work has been of value.

The slender chronicle of events that fills the bulk of the volume is gracefully written and reveals a kindly observer. Many sidelights are thrown on the work and ways of well-known people, including the author himself, who had other and more intimate contacts with the world of music than those of a journalist and an editor of 'Grove.' In view of the present Bach Cantata enterprise of the B.B.C. it is interesting to learn that he and Arthur Coleridge got together a little circle for the study and private performance of the cantatas, week by week, and kept it going for the necessary three or four years. In the course of his many productive researches into the past, Mr. Fuller-Maitland came across a manuscript of the Agincourt Song in the Pepys library at Magdalene. The finding of it was a fluke, and there is a good story attached.

If would be easy to quote from these pages wholesale, for the book is admirable as a collection of wayside jottings. One can enjoy reading it, even with the feeling that the author might well have overcome his diffidence and taken us further below the surface, not only of the affairs he witnessed, but of his own self. M.

'Manuel de Falla.' By Roland-Manuel.

[Editions 'Cahiers d'Art,' Paris.]

This is a short, unassuming, pithy book—the very kind of book which de Falla (whose feeling is, we are told, that the ideal of the true artist should be to retire from sight) would approve of.

I do not mean, of course, that M. Roland-Manuel's contribution tends to screen the composer from sight. On the contrary, every line in it is very much to the point. It begins with a description of the modern Renaissance in Spain, started by the admirable, unlucky Pedrell, continued with Albeniz, helped in its progress by the influence of Debussy's music, 'without which Pedrell's dreams would not have materialised,' and becoming an accomplished fact with Manuel de Falla.

The composer's biography is well told. We learn that the first decisive impulse came to him when he heard music by Grieg and Beethoven. He was then seventeen. Later he studied Wagner's scores eagerly, composing meanwhile 'Zarzuelas' for a living. He then became a pupil of Pedrell, of whose teaching he never ceased to speak with enthusiasm and gratitude. In 1905 he won a prize for pianoforte playing, and another with his opera 'La Vida Breve.' But the opera was neither performed nor published, and the prize for pianoforte playing resulted simply in creating a demand for lessons from him.

It was then that Debussy's music began to influence not so much his technique as his attitude. Another influence also played a great part in his formation—that of a little-known book by Louis Lucas, 'L'Acoustique Nouvelle,' which he found by mere chance and studied diligently. He is fond of repeating, we are told, that without this 'providential book his music would not have become what it is.'

There is no need to consider here the biography from 1907 (date of de Falla's arrival at Paris), for the main facts it comprises are better known. To summarise M. Roland-Manuel's assessments of de Falla's works might be interesting, but is certainly not easy. He is an enthusiastic admirer of de Falla's music, but expresses his enthusiasm in sober, judicial terms. He is an adept in the art of definition, in which he often proves epigrammatic, and always accurate—even when he achieves his ends by suggestion rather than by hard-and-fast statement. And he certainly succeeds in inspiring his readers with a keen desire to know and to enjoy the works he refers to. His main conclusion is :

> 'De Falla's career shows the extraordinary (indeed unique at the present time) spectacle of an art which never refines upon its discoveries, (even the most cherished), purifies itself slowly by dint of unflinching sacrifices, and rises from the national to the spiritual without brushing sensual delectation aside. His æsthetics seem to verge upon asceticism, but are akin to mysticism. He rose to mastery by following a path that closely resembles the 'way to Perfection' of the Castillan mystics. He is instinct with their intellectual realism, their spiritual alacrity ; like them he is impervious to the call of the age, intent on simplification, preoccupied solely with the essential, eager for action—action which breaks away from contemplation in the same way as a ripe fruit drops from the tree.' M.-D. C.

'The Physiological Mechanics of Piano Technique.' By Otto Ortmann.

[Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, 21*s*.]

The mind which consciously analyses is rare in the artist, to whom the dissection of his art is abhorrent. In this respect the pianist is no exception. Of two famous attempts to analyse the principles of pianoforte technique, Breithaupt's 'Die Natürliche Klaviertechnik' made no impression in this country, and Matthay's 'Act of Touch' had a hard struggle. Ortmann's treatment differs from these two classics chiefly in that he adopts recording devices. The same methods used originally in 'Motion Study' in connection with the efficiency of workers in factories are here used to study the motions of pianoforte playing, and the book is profusely illustrated with records obtained by attaching to the moving part of the pianist's hand or arm a tiny electric lamp or a lever system. Numerous interesting photographic records are obtained of all the well-known standard movements made in pianoforte playing. The research technique is not such as would satisfy the scientist, and the pianist would do well on the whole to ignore the semi-scientific parts of the book, attending only to those parts where, as a result of physiological arguments, practical advice can be given. The discussion of rotary touch beginning on p. 182 is an example, and as the book has a good subject-index, advice on all the main problems of technique can readily be found.

Although at the end of the book a comprehensive bibliography is given, there are no references in the text to similar results given previously by other authors. For example, Matthay has frequently emphasised the fact that the external motion does not give an indication of the particular muscular actions and inactions involved when the motion is correctly performed. Again, in his 'Relaxation Studies' he has clearly explained that in slow practice the actual motions should be made quickly. The practice is slow only because a pause is made between each note to prepare for the playing of the next note. Macdonald Smith in his booklet 'From Brain to Keyboard' (Boston, 1917) has dealt with the substitution in modern pianoforte technique of a rapid lateral shift of the forearm, for the difficult motion involving the turning-under of the thumb. The omission of both of these books from the Bibliography is significant.

Ortmann shows that statements on 'relaxation' sometimes give directions which it would be physiologically impossible to fulfil. Is not this because our vocabulary for the description of muscular sensations, the 'feel' of the correctly made motion, is notoriously insufficient for the description of complex motions?

The book is of value chiefly for the practical advice given upon the main problems of technique. The least satisfactory features are the descriptions of the experiments, which appear to underestimate the difficulties involved in a scientific treatment of the subject. W. H. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'The Teaching of Interpretation in Song.' By Dawson Freer. Pp. 93. Winthrop Rogers, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'How long does it Play?' A Guide for Conductors. Compiled by T. C. York, with a Note by Hubert J. Foss. Pp. 44. Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'Stepping Stones to Music.' By Florence E. Orange. Pp. 55. Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'An Outline of Musical History.' By Thos. J. Hewitt and Ralph Hill. Two vols. Hogarth Press, 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

'Round Carlisle Cross.' Old Stories re-told. By James Walker Brown. Pp. 158. Carlisle: Charles Thurnam, 2*s.* 6*d.*

New Music

SONGS

This month's songs are an unusually good lot. The general standard is high, and there are one or two outstanding things. 'A Poet's Hymn,' by George Dyson, published by Cramer, is a fine setting, broad but sensitive, of some words by George Herbert. Like all that poet's work this needs utter sincerity in performance, or it will sound stilted and unreal, but Dr. Dyson has found fitting music for the poem, and it will be the fault of the performers if the setting does not secure its full effect. The song, I see, is also published by Arnold in school-song form, and it would be the very thing for senior classes of a good standard. Cramer's also publish 'The Washer of the Ford,' by Granville Bantock. The poem has nothing to do with motor cars, but is one of Fiona MacLeod's elaborate and stagey incantations. Bantock has written effective declamatory music. If one can take this sort of poem seriously the song will have its effect; if not, it is best left alone, for it is a serious piece of work, and therefore apt to seem ludicrous except to those who think it fine.

Augener publishes Eric Thiman's 'Sleeping,' a setting of 'Weep you no more, sad fountains.' The song has a languid richness of sound, and the interest throughout is harmonic rather than melodic. In style it is very reminiscent of Quilter, who no doubt was at one time the composer's model, as he was that of many others of us. Dr. Thiman uses the style with skill, and admirers of his previous work will not be disappointed with this.

Paterson's Publications issue a song of unusual quality in Marmaduke Barton's 'The Adventure.' The words, by Susan L. Mitchell, have a tone of sincerity and austerity which is amplified by the music. The whole work has personality, and also power, because the authors have expressed themselves in a way that is formally satisfying and without self-conscious striving for effect. It is a noteworthy song, and one is glad to welcome the work of one who has long been known, though not perhaps to the great general public (the blind led by the blind), as a fine musician. Not up to the same level are Hubert Brown's two songs, 'Violets' and 'The Pine Wood,' issued in one cover by the same publisher. Even here, though, where the style is frankly a popular one, there is a skill of handling that does not often mark this kind of song.

'To an old Cottage' is a bad name for a song; it suggests grey homes in the West and roses round the door. Arnold Smith's new work, published by Cramer, is certainly not in that class. The poem seems a difficult one to handle, and not very suitable for setting; it says much for the composer that his work shows such restraint and musicianship.

Curwen publishes Roy Thompson's sprightly arrangement of the traditional 'As I was going up Pippin Hill'—an excellent encore song, over in about a minute, and sure of effect. Novello sends Bach's 'O yes, just so,' an arrangement by John E. West, with English words by J. Michael Diack. If there are still baritones who don't sing this song, this edition may be helpful. Bach is rapidly becoming a writer of popular songs.

The Oxford University Press issues Godfrey Sampson's 'She walks in beauty.' This is a thoughtful setting, though the 5-4 rhythm does not achieve the freedom it might, owing to a tendency to repeat the same rhythm for several bars; this has the effect of cutting up phrases that are really much longer than they are apt to sound. Special care in performance is needed. The song is perhaps not fully successful; but if composers wish to attempt lyrics of this sort, which have their own perfect music already, they must be content to fail. Below the seldom-attained point of success there is room for plenty of sincere and skilful work. Gordon Slater's 'The Seekers' is a march-like setting of Masefield's words. The composer is not afraid to write as he feels, even if the music sounds at times like that of somebody else. This is surely the right attitude, and it is feeble to be put off a sincere song by similarities that leap to the eye (as Brahms said) 'of any fool.'

Chester publishes some songs and duets of E. d'Arba, which are uncommon and attractive. The duets for soprano and tenor are in the form of dances—Pavana, Minuetto, and Bergamasco—and are issued together under the title 'Dainty Rogues in Porcelain.' The dance forms are adapted with considerable skill to the needs of the words, and the whole effect is interesting. The two songs, also unusual and well worth notice, are 'Clover' and 'Of yore there dwelt two kingly ones.' T. A.

PIANOFORTE

The Oxford University Press has made available in an ordinary moderately-priced edition Herbert Howells's 'Lambert's Clavichord,' which was issued some months ago in a limited edition. The title, which has not made itself clear to all, records the fact that Howells's fancy was captivated by a clavichord belonging to one of his friends. He wrote a set of short pieces in old forms, dedicating them to his friends, and they are issued under the name of the instrument they were written for, like some other good music. Some of the pieces are 'Fellowes' Delight,' 'Samuel's Air,' 'Sir Hugh's Galliard,' 'De La Mare's Pavane'; and there are twelve numbers in the suite, which forms a delightful, whimsical, and very companionable whole. To some the work has seemed precious and rather silly, but this attitude is entirely mistaken. Even if old forms are used, the music is thoroughly modern in spirit, the little movements are written with unfailing skill and charm, and the work as a whole has a strong personality. It is a particularly happy example of the composer, who has achieved a remarkable success in blending the intimacy and spirit of the virginal book forms with the idiom of to-day, and making the resulting style expressive of himself.

The same press sends a big work of Alan Bush, 'Relinquishment,' Op. 11. Here is a piece of music of frank difficulty, technical and musical. I do not pretend to understand it fully, but I think I know what the composer is driving at, and the work clearly has something definite behind it. Some of the pianoforte writing seems unnecessarily elaborate, and not to make for clear expression of the underlying thought; but it is possible that increased familiarity will remove this difficulty. For the moment the impression remains of something to be worked at; a serious, austere piece of music that will reveal more of itself as one knows it better.

'Bach's Birthday' is a set of four 'fugal sketches' by George Dyson, published by the Oxford University Press. Such a work might easily be dull and pedantic, but this is the reverse. One sees how humorous as well as expressive the fugal form can be in the hands of a writer whose cleverness is at the service of his musicianship.

David de Lloyd's 'A Dance Measure' (Rowlands) is carefully-written, tuneful stuff, perhaps more elaborate in lay-out than its material justifies. Still, there is much that is thoughtful and sensitive.

'Haldon Hills,' by Greville Cooke (Joseph Williams), like other works we have seen of this composer, is fluent and 'colourful' music (it deserves that epithet). Preceding the piece is a poem over the composer's initials:

> 'The sun goes down by Haldon Hills
> In mists of gold and grey;
> And sweetly yet a linnet trills
> Along a rosen ray.'

Comparable with its meretricious alliterative effects ('rosen ray') are the strings of ninths that appear on p. 4. The music abandons itself to these worn-out harmonic clichés, and so is on the feeble side. T. A.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Modern Italian composers are devoting a good deal of attention to chamber music, and it is interesting to see the new growth develop into a more or less national type. Adriano Lualdi's 'Sonata in Sol Maggiore' for pianoforte and violin, for instance (A. & G. Carisch, Milan), owes nothing to foreign models, and if here and there the touch betrays some slight uncertainty, that is part of the price one must be prepared to pay for originality. In Alceo Toni's Sonatinas (A. & G. Carisch) for string quartet the experimental nature of the work, however, becomes somewhat obvious, and one begins to wonder whether the price may not be too high. Some happy touches of colour are hardly sufficient recompense for the loss of clear and logical thought. F. B.

VIOLA

We owe much to Mr. Lionel Tertis, whose playing has been an inspiration to others, whose arrangements have enlarged the limited repertory of the viola. And now Mr. Tertis has done violists the greatest service by arranging Elgar's 'Cello Concerto for their instrument. It is, of course, impossible to form a final opinion of the arrangement from the score. Only an orchestral performance can show how the delicate problems of tone-relations have been solved. But apart from this, everything points to a successful issue. On the one hand the tender melancholy which prevails in the composition appears eminently suited to an instrument the timbre of which is most appealing when the music is of a reflective, introspective character.

On the other hand, Mr. Tertis's work has been exceptionally thorough—as witness the lowering of the C string from C to B flat to obtain certain desirable effects in the Adagio. It is the work of one who has a perfect understanding not only of the technique of the instrument but of its genius for tone-colour and effects. Incidentally Mr. Tertis, aware of the objections some people may raise against special tuning, provides an alternative arrangement which does away with the necessity of altering the pitch of the string.

There is then every reason to hope that the new garb will reveal the nobility of Elgar's Concerto not less excellently than the old, in which case it will be the first great viola concerto in existence, for even 'Harold in Italy' is more a symphony with viola solos than a concerto. May it prove the founder of a prolific and valiant line! F. B.

SCHOOLS AND METHODS

The Hullah Brown-Spencer Dyke Violin Method (Joseph Williams) has much to commend it. It is evidently the work of players who have given much thought to the subject and taken pains to explain, as clearly and as briefly as is consistent with lucidity, every point which arises. Such a method presupposes, however, that no teacher is at hand to give the student a practical demonstration, and new and ingenious devices have been evolved such as 'The First-Finger-Foundation Tetrachordal System' to make the method foolproof. Whether the object has been achieved or not only the test of actual practice can show. Any student of good will and average intelligence should find the method a safe and reliable guide, but of course the only certain way to learn—and the quickest—is to engage the services of an experienced instructor.

J. T. Bavin's 'The String Class Instructor' (Oxford University Press) is designed to meet the requirements of schools and villages where men and women are found ready to take part in orchestral practice yet lack elementary knowledge of instrumental technique. For my own part I confess that I have not much faith in these experiments. Just as if we wish to learn well a foreign language some knowledge of its grammar is essential, so in the study of orchestral music a certain degree of technical proficiency would seem at least desirable. We must give sympathy to the efforts that are being made to turn listeners into performers and bring music within reach of the remotest village. But string players are handicapped in this, that without some preliminary practice, the intonation is generally inaccurate at first, and as long as the intonation is questionable any future step will be more difficult than it need be. But if we are agreed that a little music is better than none, then the present method, concise and direct, will be found of great help to performers and instructors.

Adam Carse has gone a long way to make Brahms's Hungarian Dance No. 6 accessible to a school orchestra (Augener). The task was one of peculiar difficulty, for, however simplified, this composition remains far from easy for the average school musician. A passage like :

would be a trifle if the pace were moderate ; but in a vivace and piano it will provide a hard nut for young fiddlers of little experience. It would be far easier if the two semiquavers were slurred. This of course presumes a fairly low standard—but I cannot imagine players of some ability accepting an obvious arrangement which does not rise above the first position. F. B.

UNISON

For the 'Oxford Choral Songs' Dr. Whittaker has arranged a bluff sea-song by Shield, an earlier distinguished Tynesider. 'The Heaving of the Lead' has a good bold tune, with a little point to negotiate, in the dotted quaver-semiquaver group, to one word. With a little imagination, and a gently billowing tone, it can be made into a splendid little piece. One of Dr. Whittaker's simpler essays is 'Blaweary,' a pretty, tiny cradle-song, for the tenderest singing. Hylton Stewart has edited Boyce's 'O turn away mine eyes,' a strongly simple unison anthem. Gordon Slater (I presume this is the clever flautist) sets Milton's 'Haste thee, nymph.' This, 'fast and gay,' has some semiquavers, and is well aerated. Words are highly important, obviously. With the right lilt and spring, this will go down excellently. Colin Taylor comes up too rarely. 'The Windjammers' Race' (words by Eleanor Farjeon—gaily inconsequential) is very sturdy, and sprightly, too. Its runs of quavers, each to a different syllable, employ tongue and lips and teeth for less than one busy minute. With dim. and cres. to work at also, this is a happy little task that I should like to hear tackled by a bright choir. Desmond MacMahon, who writes well in the School Music Review about class singing, sets 'The Chough and Crow' (entitled 'The Outlaw's Song') with a nice touch of imagination. At Allegro con moto this is a song needing, and repaying, a good deal of practice, notably in the matter of modulations and tone-colour. 'When daffodils begin to peer' is one of the less frequently set Shakespeare whimsies. Its wilful way with words is neatly, if rather mildly, translated into music by Percy Judd. The tune is a wee bit trite, which the words are not. (You may remember that Shakespeare has 'The lark that tirra lirra chants . . . summer songs for me and my aunts.' This is sheer impudence!) Victor Hely-Hutchinson, known by some biggish works which have been broadcast, all of them attractive, does a small song well—'The Old Soldier' (de la Mare). It is martial, but not too obvious in its line of march. Much can be done with this clearly painted picture. Harry Brook has three songs—'My Garden' (poem by that still neglected artist, T. E. Brown), 'Modryb Marya' ('Aunt Mary'), words by Stephen Hawker, of the West Country, and 'Night' (Blake). The Brown setting is that of 'A garden is a lovesome thing.' The composer seeks simplicity, and spaces his words fully. I like the music, which nearly (but, I feel, not quite) gets at the heart of the poem—a dangerous piece to set. The song is worth looking at. It needs very fine shading, and firm yet easy upholding. 'Aunt Mary' (English words only) is described as 'A Christmas Chant.' It is a little monotonous. I should have had one verse in a different key. The tune is on the trite side, too ; a pleasant, but not very fresh, song. 'Night' has a good many equal notes, tending to square stressing. This is a neat song, simple and quiet (Oxford University Press).

Bainton's 'Little Trotty Wagtail' nattily hits off the fancies of Clare's words. Sung with the right smile and sense of gravely twinkling fun, it would go off to applause (Leonard, Gould, & Bolttler). W. R. A.

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

'Forty Welsh Traditional Tunes' are edited and (some of them) arranged for two voices and pianoforte by Prof. David de Lloyd. The volume (4*s.*) forms the sixth part of the 'Transactions' of the Cardiganshire Antiquarian Society. Not all are fine tunes ; it is noted that 'no attempt has been made at a selection' ; but tunes such as those in Nos. 18, 37, 25, and several others are well worth keeping in mind. The words are only in Welsh, and so are the notes, by Mr. D. Cledlyn Davies. Teachers in the Principality should get hold of the book (Rowland).

The same publisher issues 'Wandering Winds,' for S.S.A.A., unaccompanied. This is a rather showy piece, of the kind that some choirs still like, with bouche fermée and a touch of ad captandum. In the words of the sage, 'If you like this sort of thing, this is the sort of thing you will like' (Rowland).

'Peach Blossom' is an operetta for children by Mansell Ramsey, adapted by Lilian F. Ramsey from Hans Andersen's 'Nightingale' (3*s.*). Five leading characters appear, and the nightingale sings 'off.' The costumes are declared to be 'very effective, notwithstanding their simplicity.' The music is singable, tuneful, and written by one who understands the likes and ways of children. 'The Lady of Shalott' has been set by Armstrong Gibbs for mezzo-soprano solo, with chorus of S.C. (2*s*.). The solos can be sung by the chorus in unison if no soloist is available. Here is something that will agreeably try the artistic perception of a not necessarily large female-voice choir, and a good pianist. The music, dated 1916, is not very difficult; the composer has worked cleverly with the limited vocal means. He knows how to balance his interest, and is fruitful in key-resource. This is well worth the attention of choirs that have good brains and well-controlled, amply-coloured tone. Margaret Crichton sets 'O mistress mine' for S.C. The word-music is bound to go, I suppose, but it is a pity. The tune is cheery, the parts pleasantly opposed and united. As a straightforward setting, in which atmosphere is not much looked for, this is good, lively stuff. Paul Edmonds is tuneful but very square in his setting of a song about fairies, 'At Dawn' (Rose Fyleman). One tires of the 'ta-te ta-te ta-te taa' rhythm for seven bars on end, in each of the three verses (Curwen).

Dr. Whittaker has edited five sets of 'Rounds and Canons by Beethoven,' with English texts by Prof. A. G. Latham (each set 3*d*., or complete, 1*s*.). Most of these are friendly quips. Here is the canon for Maelzel, the tune of which we meet in the eighth Symphony, the 'Es muss sein' Canon, connected with the Quartet Op. 135, the exciting 'Fire!' Canon, a novel Scale-Canon, and a fine six-parter to finish (the others being in two to four parts). There is no better quick, short practice than round-singing. These twenty-eight examples contain some clever bits of work, and several very lively tunes besides (Oxford University Press).

The school version of Bach's 'Peasant's Cantata,' arranged by Messrs. Diack and H. Edgar Baker, is sent. It costs 6*d*. Most of the chorus work is in two parts; one chorus is in three. The Staff edition costs 3*s*., the Sol-fa, 1*s*. 6*d*.; choruses, Staff, 1*s*., and orchestral parts, 1*s*. The Cantata is a happy little work for a breaking-up concert (Paterson).

Some old songs have been arranged for two equal voices—'The Miller of the Dee,' 'Here's a health,' and 'When Johnny comes marching home.' Ernest Newton did the first, Edgar Moy the last two. The work is neatly done, the invitations to imitation having been duly noted and accepted, and the parts being occasionally crossed (Leonard, Gould, & Bolttler).

W. R. A.

MALE VOICES

Hugh Roberton has arranged an old air, 'Highland Love Song,' for T.T.B.B., a quiet, tender, hymn-tune-like song, and composed two other pieces, 'All in the April evening' and 'Where the violets blow,' the one a meditation on the Crucifixion and the other a thought about a dead maiden. The music is easy-going, and familiar in cast and cadence. It will be enjoyed by choirs that like to find the accents of past days still echoing mildly from the hills of home, and to lend their voices in arousing them yet again. Maurice Jacobson, in the humorous 'Bear's Song' (words by Judge Parry, from 'Katawampus'), decrees a waltz rhythm, 'with an exaggerated "Viennese lilt,"' and varies the humming device by directing the singers to interrupt it with an aspirate. In six pages he contrives to ordain also a portion in quick polka style, so there is plenty to keep the stepping lively. The fun seems, on paper, good enough to be quite worth attempting, if your choir needs a shaking up, or fancies itself in a touch of folly. Mr. Jacobson has arranged Sir R. R. Terry's 'Beware' for T.T.B.B. ('I know a maiden fair to see'). This goes at the lively pace of crotchet 120, four quavers in a bar, so the injunction is not likely to be overlooked. Sir Richard confides, in a footnote, that the middle section was originally a parody—'of what, or whom, is (after twenty-six years) of no consequence. The solos should therefore be mildly burlesqued, and the chorus parts sung in the style of an earnest provincial choral society practising an oratorio composed by the local organist—"Much ado about nothing," in fact.' The note of satire in music is not too common, and invective is almost unknown. There are chances for the cynical. This example can be made a bright item if the singers don't, in their efforts to burlesque, skit their serious selves (Curwen).

Two male-voice arrangements of Henry Lawes's 'Angler's Song' have been made by Dr. Whittaker, one for T.T.B.B. and the other for A.T.T. (or BAR.) B. The words, by Izaak Walton, are well known. In the second verse there is some likeable descanting. This is a very straightforward song, in minuet style, that choirs will certainly enjoy (Oxford University Press).

MIXED-VOICE

The Lawes 'Angler's Song' is also arranged by Dr. Whittaker for S.A.T.B., and makes a pleasant simple test for a choir that has altos able to make the low G tell in a f chord. The only other item (curious that this month and last should have been so bare of S.A.T.B. works) is Michael Mullinar's arrangement of 'The Meeting of the Waters.' This is soundly done, with appreciation of the part-writing which gives high pleasure to singers (Oxford University Press).

W. R. A.

CHURCH MUSIC

Some new Christmas issues from Novello should be noted by choirmasters. Separate copies are to hand of eight well-known carols with descants, comprising Book 2 of 'The Descant Carol Book.' The carols are: 'Come, ye lofty' (a vigorous Old Breton melody, harmonized by G. C. Martin, and with a bright, flowing descant); 'God rest you merry, gentlemen'; 'O come, all ye faithful'; 'A day, a day of glory' (a charming Old French melody arranged by Edmund Sedding); Goss's 'Hymn for Christmas Day' ('See amid the winter snow'); 'The Incarnation' ('The great God of Heaven is come down to earth'); 'The Seven Joys of Mary'; 'We three kings of Orient are.' Those who are acquainted with the first 'Descant Carol Book' will welcome the issue of this decidedly attractive collection.

From the same house comes 'A Sette of Carols,' words chiefly selected from 16th-century English carols, music by G. Thalben-Ball. Choirmasters are advised to examine this interesting work. The treatment is fresh and the writing musicianly and effective. There are seven carols, which may be sung either separately or as a complete 'Sette' with or without accompaniment. Their titles are: 'There is no rose of such virtue' (for single voice with brief refrain for chorus); 'When Christ was born of Mary free' (a vigorous setting with broad extended treatment of 'In excelsis gloria'); 'The Renunciation' (quiet and expressive); 'Jhesu Fili Virginis' (for single voice with pianissimo refrain for chorus); 'Alleluia, Alleluia, De Virgine Maria' (the four phrases of each verse sung respectively by S.A.T.B., solo bass, T.T.B.B., and full choir); 'Into this world now is come' (vigorous setting with broad refrain); and lastly, a jubilant and extended setting of 'Gloria in excelsis Deo.'

It remains to be noted that the same publishers issue under one cover Handel's air from 'The Messiah'—'He shall feed His flock like a Shepherd' (transposed into the key of G), and Goss's 'Hymn for Christmas Day,' arranged with descant.

Three carols from Curwen's deserve attention. 'Cradle Song of the Infant Jesus,' by Richard R. Terry, is a pleasing setting in the Dorian Mode of an old carol. It is for S.A.T.B. unaccompanied. Another example of the Dorian Mode by the same composer which will appeal to many—'Richard de Castre's Prayer to Jesus' (Carol, 1430 A.D.)—has been arranged for men's voices (unaccompanied) by Maurice Jacobson. H. V. F. Somerset's carol 'Wake thou, my soul,' is a bright, attractive setting of words by F. H. Brabant. It is for S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for organ (or strings). The same publishers send also 'Chants for the Canticles used at Morning Prayer,' by J. Edgar Humphreys. The chants, which are for the Venite, Benedicite, Benedictus, and Jubilate Deo, are well written and off the beaten track. From the S.P.C.K. comes a tuneful setting by Martin Shaw of Cecil Spring-Rice's 'I vow to thee, my country.' It is for unison singing.

'Six Full Anthems for Five Voices,' by Dr. Maurice Greene, are issued under one cover by the Faith Press. These short works—in six of the Ecclesiastical modes—have been transcribed from MSS. in the Bodleian Library and edited by Walter Slater. They are for S.S.A.T.B., mainly contrapuntal in style, but of no great difficulty. Choirs with the necessary resources will find these anthems—each running to about three pages—well worth examination. G. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

H.M.V.

The concert season is starting in earnest, at home as well as in the concert hall, as is evident from this month's output. So many records of all kinds have come along that I must be content with brief mention of the outstanding ones only—especially as I am warned by the Editor that space in this issue is at a premium. Of the H.M.V. parcel I give top place to the records of Brahms's Double Concerto in A minor, Op. 102, played by Thibaud and Casals, with the Casals Orchestra (Barcelona) conducted by Cortot. It would be hard to find any serious fault with this, either in the playing or recording. The former may be taken for granted; in the latter an unusually high standard is reached, clarity, colour, and balance being alike praiseworthy. It was a happy idea to bring together in an unusual way three players who are so often associated solely as players, and thus to enable us to make acquaintance with Cortot as conductor. He is known in this country exclusively as a pianist, and we are apt to forget that he distinguished himself as a conductor many years ago. For a time he was assistant conductor at Bayreuth, working with Mottl and Richter, and subsequently he has done much distinguished work, both operatic and orchestral, at Paris. Perhaps we may have the pleasure of sitting under him in London one day. This by the way. I recommend these Brahms records very strongly. (But I hope the Carlisle labeller who has given us so much amusement, and who dubbed the Schubert Trio in which these three artists appear as 'The Big Three Trio,' will not put his foot in farther by calling this the 'Big Three Concerto'!) (DB1311-14).

Hardly less good are the records of Bach's B minor Suite for flute and strings played by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Stock. There is some rigidity at times, and I do not see eye to eye with the conductor in some details of pace. But all in all, this enjoyable work receives its due. The name of the flautist is not given on the record. It ought to have been. He plays with delightful finish, and there is an absence of the occasional signs of difficulty in the breathing department that are apt to take the gilt off so many performances of this work. Heaps of fuss is made of solo singers who have not a quarter of this player's musicianship, sense of rhythm, and style. Some day, when rewards are distributed as they ought to be, we shall see concert audiences giving solo singers the cold shoulder (or even 'the bird') and handing gifts to the far superior artists who make up the orchestra (D1673-74).

Here is another first-rate bit of playing and recording—Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings, played by the Barbirolli Chamber Orchestra. There are few, if any, finer works for string orchestra than this. Has it been recorded before? If so, the record has not come my way. However, it was worth while waiting for such a performance and reproduction as this. The life, splendour, and colour of this work are such that I am more than ever astonished that anybody should express doubts as to the greatness of Elgar. The other day, for example, we had a London critic calmly placing Delius in the first rank and Elgar in the second rank with Strauss and (hold your breath) Puccini! I say nothing here about Delius's right to the first rank, but I do most emphatically contend that if there is a living composer who has earned the distinction it is Elgar (C1694-95).

Mozart's 'Prague' Symphony has a first-rate performance by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Kleiber. This delightful work should be heard more frequently in our concert rooms (C1686-88).

Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, in C minor, played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, with the composer at the keyboard, disappoints me. To begin with, I do not think the recording is anywhere near the standard we ought to expect to-day. The effect is far from clear, especially on the first side of the opening record. The music strikes me as having dated a good deal. The mood is too consistently that of elegant depression—a kind of hump which people rather enjoy having. I can get up but little interest in it except during the final Allegro Scherzando. On the whole, it will probably confirm most of us in our preference for Rachmaninov as a composer of pianoforte solos rather than of large-scale works (DB1333-37).

Of the vocal records my choice goes to that of Melchior and Schorr, with the Berlin State Opera Orchestra conducted by Blech, in a substantial extract from 'Götterdämmerung,' where we have not only fine singing but admirable orchestral playing and reproduction (D1700).

COLUMBIA

There ought to be a good many customers for the records of Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, played by Bronislaw Huberman and the Berlin State Orchestra, with Steinberg conducting. It is easily one of Tchaikovsky's most attractive works, and there can be nothing but praise for Huberman's playing. I have only one small quarrel with the records, and that is on the ground of power. In the Canzonetta one has the effect of all the performers withdrawing to a distance, and coming up to the 'mike' again for the Finale. In other words, the soft tone is got (or appears to be got) by a dodge rather than by actual soft playing. The result is a lack of intensity in the quiet tone, and the contrast between the Canzonetta and the Finale is of the wrong kind. In other words, it suggests two different sets of players and conditions. This would not occur in a concert-hall performance, and we ought not to be content with it in a gramophone record. Except for this defect (which will perhaps worry most gramophonists less than it does me) the batch is admirable (L2335-38).

The Scherzo from Harty's 'Irish' Symphony, played by the Hallé Orchestra conducted by the composer, makes a lively side of 9891. Its companion piece is the 'Londonderry Air' in Harty's arrangement for strings. Personal taste enters largely into one's liking for transcriptions, so I will not dogmatise. I will only say that to my ears it sounds overloaded, both harmonically and in texture.

There are a good many signs of a Mendelssohn revival, so it is good to find the Scotch Symphony recorded. The players are the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Weingartner. The music might sparkle a good deal more than it does; and on the whole the playing is too much on the quiet side. A little more variety in power would have made an enormous difference; as it is we have long stretches in which it rarely rises above a mezzo-piano. Mendelssohn's orchestral music has less intrinsic interest than that of most of the great composers. Being, as a rule, neither deeply emotional nor intellectual it depends in an unusual degree on a performance that will make so much of its lightness and neatness that we shall not be concerned by the lack of more substantial qualities. That is why I think this recording just falls short (9887-90).

The best light orchestral record is that of the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra, conducted by Sir Dan Godfrey, in German's Three Dances from 'Henry VIII.' (5577). A little less brass in the Torch Dance would enable us to hear the first violins better than we do. Otherwise nothing better can be desired. How good these dances are! I heard them as a boy when they first took the town by storm at the Lyceum; I've run up against them constantly ever since; and yet I was able to sit back and enjoy them again on this record. How much of the light music written to-day will wear as well?

The pick of the vocal records is undoubtedly that of the Finale from Act 2 of the 'Rose Cavalier,' with Richard Mayr and Anni Andrassi singing and Bruno Walter conducting. All the honours go to Mayr, with his rich voice and fruity humour (L2340).

DECCA

The policy shown by this company is a curious mixture of the conventional and the enterprising. For example, I turned over this month's output with increasing doubt as to whether I should be able to find anything suitable for review in this column. After laying aside in despair a huge stack of dance and similar records—excellent in their way, no doubt, but of little interest to most of my readers—I discovered a real plum (or rather a little collection of plums) in the shape of three of Handel's Grand Concertos—No. 2 in F major, No. 3 in E minor, and No. 6 in G minor—played by the Decca String Orchestra, conducted by Ernest Ansermet, with Leslie Heward at the harpsichord. (The label mentions that the harpsichord is a Broadwood, dated 1790.) Let me say at once that this batch of records is of unusual interest. We know far too little of this side of Handel. Of his great stock of instrumental works the general public (and even musicians) know little beyond a few movements of the organ concertos and such popular arrangements as those from the 'Water Music.' If these three Concertos are to be taken as a sample of the rest, there are some real discoveries waiting to be made. It is true that we are never allowed to forget for very long Handel's rather slap-dash methods. There is a touch of the magnificent in the disregard for appearances shown in his readiness to repeat himself, and to indulge in bits of padding that lesser men would fight shy of committing to paper. We have another example of his naïve and disarming casualness in his fugues. Not many will stand close inspection as fugues. They are apt to be sketchy, and in many cases an attempt to reduce them to open score would land the transcriber into difficulties. But there can be no question about their stimulating and attractive quality as music. Of the three Concertos recorded here, I prefer that in E minor, which has a really noble first movement and a particularly engaging Polonaise; but all the movements are enjoyable, and the performances strike me as being entirely worthy. On the whole, I should like to hear a bit more of the harpsichord. Still, as these works are not harpsichord concertos, but concertos in which the harpsichord is supposed to do little more than play a continuo, the effect is pretty much like it was in the composer's day. As the Concerto records sometimes overlap, I give detailed particulars. The F major Concerto is on T 112 and 113; the E minor is on 114 and one side of 115; and the G minor is on the remaining side of 115, and on 118 and 119, the first, second, and fifth movements of this work being on 118 and the final Musette on both sides of 119.

Player-Piano Notes

BLÜTHNER

Animatic.—Here is an interesting batch, starting off with Prelude and Fugue No. 12 from Book 2 of the 'Forty-eight.' Felix Wernow brings out to the full the beauty of the Prelude, but his over-use of the sustaining pedal interferes with clearness. The same fault has to be found in his playing of the Fugue, where it is, of course, more serious owing to the greater complication of the texture. Why use the pedal at all, or more than very sparingly, in music of this kind? (58309).

The Bach Chaconne, arranged as a study for the left hand by Brahms (Studies for Pianoforte, No. 5), calls for remarkable virtuosity on the part of the performer—in this case Paul Wittgenstein. So ingenious is the arrangement and so skilful the playing that one has constantly to remind oneself that only one hand is engaged (58790).

Franz Wagner enhances the appeal of the simple little Andante from Beethoven's Sonatina in G minor (Op. 49, No. 1). The Rondo is quite delightful (58366-67).

There is a Chopin Study, Op. 10, No. 3, played sympathetically by Francis Plante. He does not exaggerate the rubato, and obtains good contrast in the middle section (55762).

There are two réchauffé Chopin pieces on one roll—the G flat Study, Op. 25, No. 9 (where the rhythm is altered by Nicolas Papp), and the D flat Valse, Op. 64, No. 1, arranged by Rosenthal. There seems to be no particular point about either of these 'arrangements'—the added notes in the Valse (the right hand plays in double thirds) increase the difficulty but not the attraction. If excellence in performance were the only necessary quality, Nicolas Papp's playing of these two disarrangements take first place this month. (I am told they are jokes; if so, they are of the kind which should be kept for private consumption.) (59022).

A first-rate performance of Emil Sauer's not very interesting 'Voix des Oiseaux' Concert Study is given by Paul Schramm (55610).

There is a light and airy trifle by Schutt—a Valse Mignonne, delightfully played by Klinger (59234), and a graceful and attractive Minuet from Suk's Suite, Op. 21, which is well served at the hands of Friedmann (50815).

Ordinary.—If there is a player-pianist in need of a few minutes' exhilaration, let him try the four-handed arrangement of the Scherzo from Beethoven's ninth Symphony. This is a successful arrangement, and very well cut (52796).

There is also the Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, by Bach—a work of doubtful authenticity, by the way—which is very clear and runs along fluently (53259).

Franck's well-known song 'Panis Angelicus' is not good material for the keyboard, and suffers rather badly in Michelot's transcription (59066).

AMPICO

Here we have Frank Sheridan giving a good performance of Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, No. 1 (three rolls). In 'Morning Mood' the tone-colour is well varied, but a little more flexibility in the rhythm would have been welcome (70133F). In the 'Death of Ase' there is a surprisingly wide range of tone-gradation that makes up in some degree for the lack of sustaining power (70143F). 'Anitra's Dance' sounds a little too stately at the start. On the same roll is 'In the Hall of the Mountain King.' The crescendo and accelerando here are very well managed and reproduced (70153H).

Most attractive is Ibert's 'The Little White Donkey,' inimitably played by Moiseiwitsch (70161G).

There is a fine performance by Orloff of Chopin's Fantaisie Impromptu in C sharp minor. The sustaining pedal is very well managed, and the reproduction of accent and phrasing is especially good and clear (70243H).

Mischa Levitzki is heard in Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso in E minor. Though his playing in the Andante is rather wooden the rest is brilliant. The clearness is a notable virtue (70263H).

ÆOLIAN

Audiographic.—A transcription of the 'Enigma' Variations has long been enjoyed by pianoforte duettists, and most of the music comes off surprisingly well on the keyboard. Player-pianists will be glad to find this masterpiece placed at their disposal also. Losses there are, of course. 'Dorabella' is less dainty, and 'Nimrod' less noble than usual, and there might well have been more power variety. Inevitably the quick variations come out best on the whole. There are five rolls, and all have fine moments. The composer provides notes on the music, and tells us about its inception (D885, D887, D889, D891, D893).

Wollenhaupt is almost forgotten to-day. His Valse Etude 'The Brook' is sufficiently dated to explain our forgetfulness; but it is agreeable music and, above all (like most of the light pianoforte works of its time), is capitally written for the instrument. Constance Mering plays it with the right fluency (7124).

Ossip Gabrilowitsch gives an excellent performance of Schumann's B minor Novelette—all the better for being free from the over-elastic rhythm that sometimes spoils his playing (7284).

Tchaikovsky's 'Humoreske' in G, Op. 10, No. 2, is one of the best of his smaller pianoforte pieces. Josef Hofmann's performance of it makes a delightful roll (7115).

There are also two rolls of extracts from Act 1 of 'Lohengrin,' played by the reliable Ralph Leopold. On 7179 are the Prelude and Elsa's Dream; 7194 contains Elsa's promise to Lohengrin, the King's Prayer, the Quintet, Elsa's Song of Joy, and the Finale.

Themodist.—We hear too little of Henselt nowadays. When will somebody revive his Twelve Characteristic Studies, for example? Meanwhile, here is his pleasant little Nocturne in E flat, well cut, and all too short (T30447*a*).

A tuneful trifle is the 'Bagatelle Italienne,' Op. 22, No. 2, of César Cui (miscalled 'Cue' on the label). This is very easy to make effective, thanks to the judicious editing (T30449*a*).

D. G.

The Harold Brooke Choir will be heard at Æolian Hall on December 19, at 8, in a capital programme of Holst (Fugal Concerto), Parry (songs and part-songs), Bliss ('Pastoral') and Handel (selection from 'Acis and Galatea'). The soloists will be Isabel I'Anson, Henry Wendon, Stuart Robertson, Robert Murchie, and Léon Goossens.

Wireless Notes

By 'AURIBUS'

I am a recruit to listening. Therefore, says the Editor, my views are worth putting before readers of the Musical Times. Perhaps he expects that a fresh mind will produce a fresh set of grumbles, and that no easy acceptance of the second best, born of long endurance, will dull the edge of my discernment. If so, I will try not to disappoint him. It is rather late to join in the game of potting at the broadcast programmes and their performance, but the B.B.C. is a large target, and no doubt there are places where a fresh hit can be scored, and, of course, one can still go on plugging at the old ones.

I say I will try, but I start with a bad handicap. I am tremendously prejudiced in favour of the B.B.C. No citizen can avoid its influence by merely not being a listener. It is discussed daily in the family, in the office, in the press, and everywhere else, and nobody can fail to observe that the B.B.C. comes through all this publicity with an ever-growing fund of credit for its steadfast work. The musician, of course, has every reason to be thankful for the generous treatment he gets—as compared with what he had a right to expect. The non-musical but otherwise intelligent person is well served—witness the recent series of 'Points of View,' the many broadcasts by public men, the expert critical and informative talks on all sorts of subjects. And the profanum vulgus is amply provided for in both its epithets. I seem to remember that it used to clamour in the more ubiquitous newspapers for the total exclusion of everything that required more than a sheep's intellect to enjoy. The response of the B.B.C. has been splendid. It has ignored the bleating and has steadily increased the supply of decent mental entertainment, until the general level of the programmes is worthy of a responsible and national affair, and is better, I am told, than that provided by any other nation. This steady excelsior work with its head to the storm is a fine action on the part of the B.B.C., and far outweighs all the mistakes it may make in daily practice. Under cover of this declaration I may go ahead and say as much as I choose about the mistakes, if I happen to notice any, without coming under the charge of bias.

For my entry into the field you have to blame our old friend 'Ariel,' who has found so many uses for his pen that he has decided to abandon his articles in this journal and to use his receiver henceforth entirely for his own amusement. We will not grudge him his liberty, but will picture him lying in a cowslip's bell absorbed in Clapham and Dwyer (whom, by the way, I had not heard before November 6, such is my innocence). I view the prospect of succeeding him dubiously, being poorly cut out for so spritely a part. I have just spent an evening with my files of the Musical Times reading every word that 'Ariel' has written on the subject of wireless, including those that he wrote, oddly enough, under the name of that arch-grouser Caliban. It has been very good reading—a summary of five years of wireless history as viewed in passing by a musician who, with all his hatred of the shoddy, was broad in his sympathies and never disposed to shut off music from the rest of life. He, of course, is an admirer of the B.B.C. on general grounds, while not hesitating to speak his mind on the subject of its mistakes. When these are reckoned up in 'Ariel's' account they come to very little beside the substantial amount that goes to the B.B.C.'s credit side. Here are some examples:

Mistakes in programme-making, especially the haphazard mixture of good and bad without a time-table to help the listener who wants to catch the one and dodge the other.

Badly-timed programmes, leading to the sacrifice—often in mid-stream—of a decent piece of music in favour of something of a lower grade that has just become due.

Great expenditure of time, care, and money on long works that are not worth it. (One of these occasions still haunts me, for I had to spend the whole evening at Covent Garden; and I am not referring to 'Kitesh,' which was worth it.)

The unsatisfactory transmission of organ tone from churches; especially the bass. (A matter that waits upon technical progress. According to the statement of an expert the fault lies with receivers more than with transmitters.)

The use of the words 'organ music' to describe both real organ music and the noises made at cinema theatres by large mechanical one-man bands. (This, I fear, still goes on—both the noise and the appellation.)

Careless or ignorant annotation in the Radio Times. (This was in very early days. Nowadays, judging from the samples under my hand, the musical annotation is well-informed.)

The poverty of broadcast humour. (I must wait and see.)

The 'Foundations of Music' item is too brief.

The lowering of the musical standard of the programmes during the summer. (This policy may already have been abandoned. Next summer Adrian Boult will be in charge, I believe.)

The broadcasting by small hotel bands of orchestral music for which their combination of instruments is inadequate.

A certain faked 'Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue,' by Bach. (I am on the look-out for it.)

Whispering baritones. (Where are they now?)

Bad singers. (Pity the poor B.B.C.!)

Singers who wobble. (Do not pity the B.B.C.; cry shame on it.)

The list may appear long, but it is light. What it amounts to is the normal discount of human frailty upon the success of the most tremendous and elaborate scheme of entertainment ever devised. To weigh it against the scheme itself would be like setting off petty cash against capital. Nevertheless a recurring series of minor faults is apt to become a recurring series of major irritations, and the writer of a running commentary is bound to give constant attention to them. In doing so he must inevitably give them a good deal of his space, for while you are mentioning a grievance it is as well to be thoroughly explicit about it. These explanations are necessary in case any reader of the Musical Times, while daily rejoicing in the feast of good things given to him by the B.B.C., should consider that 'Wireless Notes,' past and future, are unduly occupied with censure.

A large part of 'Ariel's' censure was directed against, not the B.B.C., but the greater number of its critics—the vast flock of bleaters aforementioned, who, if they had their own way, would more or less banish from the programmes everything designed to penetrate a pair of ears into a brain behind them. One remembers with pain the avidity with which 'a certain section of the press' opened its columns to the clamour, called it a 'national grievance,' and added its own voice to the general hubbub. The answer of the B.B.C., as has already been pointed out, was to turn on the artistic and intellectual tap still more fully. How far the programmes have been strengthened in the last few years may be learnt from a comparison of the two following tables, in which the London programmes are analysed by percentages. The first was given in the Observer of December 13, 1925, and was quoted by 'Ariel' in the Musical Times of January, 1926. The second is from p. 56 of the B.B.C. Year Book for 1930, and is a simplified version of the figures there shown :

1925

Popular Music :
Orchestral	27
Opera, &c.	16
Classical Music	9
Dance Music	26
Talks	16.25
News	5
Religion	0.75

1929

Music :
Serious	16.8
Light	23.6
Variety	5.0
Dance Bands	9.2
Gramophone Records	9.7
Drama	1.7
Talks, Education, Readings	16.9
Children's Hour	5.0
News	5.0
Religion	5.0
Appeals and Special Transmissions	1.5

The classification in both cases is obscure, but one can make a just comparison between the 'classical music' of 1925 and the 'serious music' of 1929, and between the 'dance music' of 1925 and the 'dance bands' of 1929, and see that, roughly speaking, the saxophone has yielded its supremacy to the opus. Talked matter has increased, and there is the addition of drama, which can be set down on the intellectual side, for side by side with its humours I seem to remember hearing of a series of 'world's best plays' or something of the kind. A good deal, too, of the item 'Gramophone Records' consists of decent music. In general, one can say that the bleaters are getting less of what they bleated for and more of what they bleated against. If the rate of improvement is maintained for a few more years they will really have something to bleat about.

Indeed, one might say that the B.B.C. has gone as far as it need in the proportion of its solid and satisfying matter to the remainder. With thirty or forty per cent. of the programme worth listening to, and proper care given to the outlay of one's listening time, one can lead a rich existence in front of the loud-speaker. Here, for instance, are the fruits—the best ones—of my own listening-in to 5XX and 5GB for a week from November 3 to 9 :

Sunday—
Vaughan Williams's 'Concerto Accademico.'
A Cantata by Bach.
Ireland's second Trio.
Songs by Reger and Wolf.
Schubert's Trio in B flat.

Monday—
Desmond MacCarthy on Meredith.
M. Stéphan teaching an Englishman how to pronounce French.
Hans Eisler's Pianoforte Sonata.
Alban Berg's Pianoforte Sonata.
Schönberg's 'The Book of the Hanging Gardens.'
Lowes Dickinson on the 'Five Points of View' and Goethe.
'Carnival.'

Tuesday—
A Bach organ recital by Mr. Cook.

Wednesday—
Marjorie Barber on 'Legends of Heroes.'
Various works for four 'cellos.
Clapham and Dwyer.
Mr. Ashbee on the 'Devastated Areas of England.'

Thursday—
Bach's Violin Concerto in E.
Honegger's 'L'impératrice aux rochers.'
Some good singing by Henry Wendon.
Organ playing by Dr. Rhodes.
The Russian cabaret.

Friday—
A Violin Sonata by Bach.
A Violin Sonata by Fauré.
Ernest Newman on Schönberg and Strauss.
The Rev. M. R. Ridley on 'Poetry and the Ordinary Reader' (this was excellent).
George Parker singing songs by Max Reger.
A talk with the author of 'Journey's End.'

Saturday—
Nil.

During the week—
About an hour of English keyboard music from Byrd to Purcell.

All this was sandwiched in among other occupations. If I had been given the opportunity I would have heard as well :

Bruckner's fourth Symphony.
Brahms's 'A Song of Destiny.'
'Till Eulenspiegel.'
'Cranford.'
Ethel Smyth's 'Two Interlinked Melodies.'
Jelly and Adila in the Bach D minor Concerto.
Elgar's second Symphony.
Schumann's fourth Symphony.
Ramsay Macdonald.

And now if anybody calls me a fan I plead guilty. But, for one who is lucky enough to include music among the boons of existence, what a list it is ! It occurred, moreover, during a week that included none of the big goods of broadcasting such as Schneider Trophies, Shakespeare, Budget speeches, Great Plays, Grand Operas, sales of Old Masters, or Bernard Shaw ; not even a football match. A few years hence I may look back upon this youthful enthusiasm with an indulgent smile. But at present I feel that as long as I can switch on such a catalogue as this, the jazz bands can have their 9.2 and more.

It used to be complained that, by giving the Bach Cantatas at 5.45 p.m. the B.B.C. was withholding them from the listeners most likely to be interested in them, namely, Church musicians. The answer was to the effect that people who wanted Bach Cantatas after tea would be unwilling to have them before tea—an odd notion that could not be maintained for ever. On November 10 the change occurred, and 'Sleepers, wake!' was given at three o'clock to what one hopes was an already wakeful world. There is no need to add an iota to the general praise of this work, but I cannot keep back my opinion that it is a corker—a concentrated half-hour of wonder that lays you flat. The performance was a good one, the Wireless Chorus being thoroughly up to the mark, and Miss Elsie Suddaby and Mr. Keith Falkner as usual both knowing their jobs. The only fault occurred in the second verse of the Chorale—the famous violin melody plus tenor chorale that Busoni arranged and used to play as a pianoforte solo. The pace was too fast and too rigid. By the way, the Radio Times annotator was not quite correct when, in discussing Nicolai's tune, he said that Bach 'used it as the basis of one of his finest chorale preludes.' All that Bach wrote was a three-part organ transcription of the movement to which reference has just been made, giving the violin melody to the right hand, the chorale melody to the left hand, and the bass to the pedals. There is no chorale prelude on the tune apart from this transcription of a vocal and orchestral version from the Cantata.

The 'Sinfonia Domestica' came back on October 25 like a ghost from the past, and a hairy one, too. It is not pleasant to be reminded of the mistakes we committed twenty years ago, of the raw condition of our taste when first we began to deliver our lofty judgments to an unenlightened world, of our lost capacity for seeing a swan in every well-advertised goose. When we were very young we Straussians were so much under the spell of 'Till Eulenspiegel,' 'Ein Heldenleben,' and the rest that we (I speak for myself) discovered page after page in this work that deserved a nod of approval or a word of praise. The more unlovely parts, we surmised, had a deeper reason for existence than was apparent on the surface. As for the sprawling, formless form of it all—well, that was a necessary characteristic of artistic matter that, owing to the certain special qualities and connections, did not—er—naturally lend itself to any of the more obvious—er—forms. I would like to get hold of that young man and shake him up a bit; but time has by now more or less shaken him down, and he has long since thrown off the habit of judging a work on the merits of the author's other works. Strauss's genius, it is said, began to go downhill with the 'Domestica.' It didn't; it crashed with one fell swoop. The work is rotten. The themes—most of them—are feeble, with a kind of bragging display of power about them that soon becomes exasperating. The cacophonies that in 1906 betokened a daring mind are now just emptily ugly; take for instance the first entry of the trumpet, which bursts into an E major chord with a dominant-tonic cadence in C major, a beat ahead of the harmony. The effect is merely nasty. It is only one of a number of similar and obviously calculated effects that cut across the notions of contemporary ears without conveying anything beyond the intention to do so. There are passages that make a brave show of fine effect in the making. But as often as not they weaken and wilt, or are suddenly interrupted by an inexpressive leading theme brought in for reasons of programme; and the themes that play the chief part have so little music in them that their constant occurrences are merely interruptions. One of the nicest bits is the lullaby in G minor, but it is no more than a vignette, like the vignettes in 'Falstaff,' which would be a magnificent work without them; whereas in the 'Domestica' one has to offer the vignettes as an excuse for the rest. As for the picture of family life—one simply does not recognise it. No doubt there are families in which existence is so full of internal angles and so bare of the atmosphere of homeliness, but one is glad to think they are not normal and one resents having this kind of family portrayed under the general title of 'Sinfonia Domestica' as if it were broadly typical of humanity.

In a way the 'Sinfonia Domestica' is the most typically Straussian of all Strauss's works, the one which exhibits his style most clearly because the products of his style are at their worst. The case is not complicated by merit. Unhindered by the distractions of beauty or any other good points, one can contemplate the raw material of the Strauss factory and see what an odd mixture it is of strength and weakness, of high thinking and mindlessness.

'Carnival,' my first large-scale broadcast play, seemed to me a masterpiece of broadcasting, and others, I see, have so hailed it. What gave it a special interest was the part that music played in the technique of the production. A number of gramophone records (one guesses) were in use, each representing some leit motif in the emotions of the drama. Some were brought in first as actual physical occurrences in the drama, and both then and afterwards they served to localise the scenes without any verbal explanation; in other cases, such as Liszt's 'Liebestraum' and 'Linden Lea,' they were brought in as emotional backgrounds. As the drama proceeded and the records of music and other characteristic sounds were faded in and out, with their associations and memories and emotional side-lights playing upon the dialogue and action, the whole apparatus became one of extraordinarily vivid effect in intensifying the life of the play. Here is a whole wealth of resources that seems to belong to radio drama alone. In the theatre it is, of course, an old device for strains of music from the orchestra to be brought in at critical moments. Patrons of the old Adelphi drama will tell us that nothing remains to be discovered in that line. But in the theatre this has always seemed to be a painted-on effect, probably because one is a spectator and cannot get rid of the knowledge that the source of the music is geographically different from the scene of the action. The players in the orchestra or the singers behind the scenes are so obviously fellow-spectators engaged in adding their contribution from the outside. In radio drama the invisibility of the whole of the proceedings blends all the sounds, of whatever kind, into a far more satisfying unity. Besides, in radio drama the changes of scene are immeasurably more numerous and more rapid, and the auxiliary sounds, musical and otherwise, are invaluable as a guide and prompter. They not only help to bring a new scene to the imagination, but they actually announce the change. It was instructive to observe, in 'Carnival,' how effectively the sounds and meanings of music played this stage-manager's part in the show.

The contemporary chamber music heard on November 4 was comparatively free from atmospherics, although the principal composer was Schönberg and the others were two of his pupils. In Hans Eisler's Pianoforte Sonata the mercurial adventurings in the twelve-note scale were light-spirited, original, and inoffensive. It is seldom that modern harmonists carry on for such a length of time with so little recourse to harsh expressions. The ingenious small talk held the attention captive. Alban Berg's Pianoforte Sonata was less detached from emotional existence. Here and there one heard echoes of the passionate rhapsodies of the 19th century, and many a hint of yearnings expressed in language that wouldn't yearn. Schönberg's fifteen songs, heard after a long interval, were as puzzling as ever. The question is not what the music is or says or means, but why the composer chose to cast it in such a mould. I had to listen with no other clue to the verbal part than the first lines of the poems as quoted in the Radio Times, but I cannot believe that they called for such an intense, hushed, awe-struck, thoughts-that-lie-too-deep-for-words tone of voice in the musical setting. We seemed to be spending our time on the verge of suicide or the end of the world, listening in suspense while throttled words were wrung from a sibylline voice to the accompaniment of apparently idle successions of notes and chords. I give up Schönberg, weakly if you like, to people who can more easily get his wave-length.

There is no room at present for more than a remark about two new publications that have brightened the wireless world. Both the B.B.C. Year Book for 1930 (2*s*.) and 'Vox,' Mr. Compton Mackenzie's critical review of Broadcast matters (6*d*. weekly), give first-class value for money.

Occasional Notes

A correspondent sends us the following, concerning a topic that we believe is in many people's minds just now—the choice of music for Armistice Day concerts and celebrations:

> 'The ineptitude of programmes of music deemed suitable for Armistice Day observance seems to call for some outspoken comment. So many features of that Day of Remembrance have been placed once and for all on so lofty a plane of idealism as to make it worth while endeavouring to find an approach to the same spirit of ideality in the drafting of schemes for that occasion. Does Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture meet the needs of such a day? Obviously not, for the emotion arising from a purely personal loss such as produced this Overture cannot satisfy the greater world-embracing emotions which the thoughts associated with this day demand. Berlioz's "Messe des Morts" does, I submit, meet such needs just as certainly as Strauss's "Tod und Verklärung" fails to do, or Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic." The "Requiem" of Brahms or the "Alto Rhapsody" possess the necessary qualities, just as his "Triumphlied" does not. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony seems to me to have almost ideal perfection as memorial music in the big sense, and both Elgar's Symphonies, not to mention the choral works "Go, song of mine" and "For the Fallen," embody most of the qualities that at once provide consolation and spiritual uplift. One finds it rather hard to make the mental adjustment that would regard Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture as music appropriate to such a day. Any persons who heard Beecham play César Franck's D minor during the war would, one imagines, be inclined to admit that work as an expression ideally associated with such an act of remembrance.
>
> 'Might it not be worth while to try to arrive at the greatest common measure of agreement upon such ideally appropriate music by inviting conductors, composers, chorus-masters, and critics to contribute ideas to the common stock? When we come to the matter of songs, we find a striking disparity between the solemnity of emotion peculiar to the day and the type of song sometimes heard. Perhaps our singers would contribute their views in a similar endeavour to "sing sorrow up into immortal spheres."'

Our correspondent was, no doubt, referring to the programme of the Armistice concert given at Manchester by the Hallé Orchestra, when the programme consisted of Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, the 'Unfinished' Symphony, 'Death and Transfiguration,' Purcell's Trumpet Voluntary, Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody,' the '1812' Overture, and the songs, Glinka's 'Midnight Review,' Koenemann's 'When the king went forth to war,' and German's 'The Yeomen of England.' Little can be urged against this programme on musical grounds, but we think most readers will agree that it is capable of considerable improvement in the matter of fitness. Last year we published some correspondence concerning the choice of hymns at the Cenotaph Service. A letter in a recent issue of The Times indicates that there is need for reconsideration of Armistice music as a whole. We give The Times letter below:

> 'After hearing a trivial serenade by Pinsuti played at the Cenotaph by the Massed Bands of the Guards and broadcast everywhere, I ask why such music is chosen for such an occasion. Gounod, Sullivan, Tchaikovsky, and a composer described as the "Rev. Cecil" (sic) are the other composers. Is there no noble music for these sacred moments? If we must go abroad, why not Bach or Beethoven, instead of to second-rate writers? Better would be to go to Handel and Purcell and Parry and Elgar. Millions of hearers throughout the world must protest, as I do, against the ignominious and unpatriotic choice of music for this service. It was as bad last year.'—DR. C. W. SALEEBY, 13, Greville Place, N.W.6.

Would it not be possible for a few of our musical readers to lay their heads together soon and draft some practical suggestions in good time for next year's celebrations?

Prof. Sanford Terry is responding to invitations from America to lecture on Bach, and will go across early in the New Year to fulfil engagements at New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Bethlehem, Boston, and other centres, and probably in Canada as well. The formation of a branch of the Bach Cantata Club in New York and the Bach recitals given there by Harold Samuel are only two indications of the growth of the Bach cult in America; Prof. Terry's visit should give it further impetus.

We understand, by the by, that Prof. Terry will shortly resign his Chair of History at Aberdeen University, after filling the post for thirty-two years.

The use of music as an aid to propaganda has sometimes led to queer results, but not often do we hear of a concert on the lines of one that took place at Cheltenham recently. Most of the items performed were by the concert-giver, and were written with the object of 'awakening sympathy with the cause of animals.' (We quote from a newspaper report.) Admission was free, and the local Food Reform Association gave the event 'moral support.' We read that, 'in order to get a true perspective of this picture-music, the audience had to assimilate the programme and the annotations accompanying each item, and they were then able to appreciate the composer's interpretative genius in putting to music the plea of the bunnies, the stags, and the foxes, and all creatures great and small.'

If this curious concert did anything to harden public opinion against blood sports and cruelty of any kind, it will have the blessing of most musicians. But why not draw on the large number of already available compositions concerning animals, 'great and small,' winding up with the famous example in which one of the 'small' beasts gets its own back (and somebody else's back in the process)—'The Song of the Flea'?

Many of our London readers have first-hand acquaintance with the St. Cecilia Festival, a biennial concert given at Queen's Hall by about six hundred singers drawn from London girls' clubs. Founded in 1908 by the late Dr. McNaught, it is now well established as a public demonstration of the excellent work done by the teachers in the various clubs; it is carefully prepared for by sectional rehearsals; and only good music is sung. As to how it is sung a few words from notices in the London press may be quoted: 'The effect of this body of fine, fresh, clear voices, with every word intelligible, was to me overwhelming' (P. A. Scholes, in the Observer); 'One would have hardly thought it possible for a choir drawn from London girls' clubs to have acquired so great precision in word and tone' (Daily Telegraph); 'The choir's expression and sense of rhythm were little short of marvellous' (Daily News); 'Surprising delicacy and charm . . . a great demonstration of the interest that good music brings into the lives of these singers' (Daily Mail). We quote the above from a large number of similar tributes in order that readers may see that the St. Cecilia Festival is worthy of support on purely musical grounds, and one that should somehow be kept going. So far it has managed to avoid insolvency, but the committee feels that it cannot continue unless a reserve fund is formed in order to meet the organization expenses that occur prior to each Festival. With a view to forming such a fund, a concert has been arranged to take place on December 2 at 8.30 p.m., at the Palace Hotel (99, Lancaster Gate, W.2), the performers being Miss Winifred Holloway, Miss Isolde Menges, Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Harold Samuel, all of whom are generously giving their services. Tickets, price 10*s.* 6*d.* and 7*s.* 6*d.* (including tax), may be had from Mr. R. S. Elkin, 20, Kingly Street, W.1. Even in the present season of numerous and attractive concerts, this one will be well worth attending on its merits, and doubly so for the fact that its success will ensure the continuance of a valuable musical work in connection with London girls' clubs.

The management of the Ostend Kursaal has organized a musical competition, open to all European composers. Two first prizes of 20,000 francs and two second prizes of 10,000 francs are offered for (a) a work in the style of a Liszt Rhapsody and (b) a short expressive piece in the style of the Intermezzo from 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' the 'Valse Triste' of Sibelius, &c. Only unpublished works, and works that have never been publicly performed, or awarded a prize in a competition, should be submitted. MSS. should be received by the Artistic Secretary of the Kursaal not later than April 10, 1930. Copies of the regulations for the competition may be obtained from Mr. Léon Lescrauwaet, at the Kursaal, Ostend.

We are glad to hear that Arthur Bliss's short choral work 'Pastoral,' which on its recent production by the Harold Brooke Choir was so favourably noticed in the press, is down for performance during the present season at a good number of important choral centres—Bradford (Old Choral Society), Leeds (Philharmonic), York (Musical Society), Newcastle (Choral Union), &c. On November 6 it was performed by the Harold Brooke Choir at the London Museum; on December 19 the same choir will perform it at Æolian Hall. Among forthcoming performances in the London district is that of the Wanstead Choral Society on December 5. The work is also to be given in New York at the Schola Cantorum.

We had in the past made reference to the admirable work being done by the London Junior Orchestra, which we note now bears the sub-title of 'Post-Public and Secondary School Orchestral Club.' The general public will have an opportunity of sampling the work of this body on January 9 at Westminster Central Hall at 8 p.m., when a hundred young players, under their regular conductor, Mr. Ernest Read, will play the rarely-heard fifth Symphony of Schubert, and Elgar's 'Wand of Youth' Suite, and will join Miss Marjorie Hayward in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and Mr. Harold Craxton in Mozart's A major Pianoforte Concerto. This announcement is rather a long way ahead, but we shall jog our readers' memories in the January number. As an example of the missionary work the Club is doing we add that on November 15 it gave a concert at the Gilbert Bartholomew Memorial Club, an institution founded for the workers in Bryant & May's factory.

We have received a letter in defence of the London College of Music and various other examining bodies about which there has been a good deal of correspondence in our columns, the writer being a well-known musician, who is, we believe, an examiner of the L.C.M. Feeling that it would be in the interests of all concerned if we obtained an authoritative pronouncement, we sent the letter on to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. We hope readers will carefully study both the letter and Mr. Eames's answer, if only to save us labour. We are tired of answering inquiries as to the value of certain diplomas, and of explaining the difference between the various examining bodies. Readers living in provincial centres will do useful service by inducing the editors of local papers to reprint the correspondence.

A correspondent send us a cutting of a letter that appeared lately in the Daily Express:

'SIR,—Ten years ago, at the age of forty-two, I started to learn to play the organ. I had not the slightest knowledge of music, and to-day am proud of my position at one of the leading London cinemas.—Yours, &c.'

Our correspondent adds, 'Surely this confirms our worst suspicions?'

The following appeared in the programme book of a recent music competition festival:

Hagen's call for the Vassals.
Hoi ho! hoi ho! ho! ho!
Ye Gibich vassals, come to my call!
Need is here! Danger! Danger!
Hoi-ho! ho-ho! Piu vivo!

The old question as to who is England's greatest composer has been revived recently. An authoritative pronouncement appears in the October P.R. Gazette in the course of the following publisher's announcement:

ARTHUR W. KETÈLBEY'S
(Britain's Greatest Living Composer)
New and Beautiful Inspiration,
'The Sacred Hour.'

We sympathise with Mr. Ketèlbey in being thus raised to a pinnacle which he himself, we are sure, would be very far from claiming.

STAGES IN THE HISTORY OF OPERA: V.—GLUCK'S THEORY AND PRACTICE

By DYNELEY HUSSEY

Gluck was born in 1714, and reached maturity at the moment when the apotheosis of the classical Italian opera—that is to say, of the Italian operatic singer—was complete. The aria, which Handel had made the vehicle of so much fine dramatic expression, was inflated to bursting-point by the capacious lungs of successive singers, whose rivalry led them on to ever higher flights of extravagant vocal technique. So long as they supplied material for these exhibitions, composers might let dramatic propriety go hang. There comes a moment, however, when a balloon reaches its 'ceiling' and can go no higher. This moment arrived in the middle of the 18th century and, although for a while the breeze of popular favour wafted the operatic balloon with its load of vain prime donne and even vainer castrati, it was evident to intelligent minds that the absurd gas-bag must soon burst.

The small event, which may conveniently be named as the new starting point—though it was no more the cause of what followed than the murder at Serajevo caused the war—occurred at the Haymarket Theatre in London on January 7, 1746. On that evening, Gluck's opera 'La Caduta dei Giganti' fell flat, and the young composer, after reviving an earlier work with no more success, retired to Vienna to think things over. Handel, it may be remarked, expressed his contempt for Gluck's music on this occasion, and averred that he knew 'no more counterpoint than his cook.'

His failure in London, followed by a visit to Paris, where he heard the stately operas of Rameau, led Gluck to reconsider his own capacities. For several years he did continue to compose music to librettos by Metastasio, but between 1755 and 1761 he remained, apparently, almost inactive in Vienna. Had he been no more than an ordinary talent, nothing further would have been heard of him. At most, his name would have been decently interred in one brief paragraph of Burney's 'History.' But Gluck was of a pugnacious and determined character. If he could not succeed in one way, he would try another. In 1762 he showed in the production of 'Orfeo ed Eurydice' that the period of silence had not been idly spent. For here was an Italian opera written in an entirely new manner, derived, in so far as it owed anything to musical as distinct from philosophical influences, from the French operatic style. French fashions, it will be remembered, were much copied in all departments of art and social life in the Austrian capital at this time. In 'Orfeo' the drama was no longer the pretext for a vocal concert; it was the prime consideration, to which the music and even the singers were subordinated.

It is an interesting coincidence that the subject of this revolutionary work was the same as that of the first successful attempt at opera made a century and a half before. Gluck was the first composer to revert to the æsthetic theories of Monteverdi. He did not put these theories into words until five years later, when he prefaced the score of 'Alceste' with a declaration of his artistic faith, which differs in no essential point from the manifestos of the Florentine innovators nor, except in brevity and clearness, from the subsequent effusions of Richard Wagner.

There is a common denominator between these reforming composers other than their adherence to similar artistic principles. None of the three succeeded in composing masterpieces in the accepted manner of their time, as did Handel, Haydn, and Brahms. Only one of them, Wagner, was a great musician in the sense in which we apply the term to Bach or Mozart or Beethoven. Monteverdi's madrigals, full as they are of interesting experiments which give them an historical importance, cannot be set beside the works of the great polyphonists, Palestrina, Marenzio, or our own William Byrd. According to M. Henri Prunières, even his operas are inferior in musical (though not in dramatic) quality, to those of his forgotten follower, Luigi Rossi. Gluck in his turn had not half the musical talent of Hasse, beside whose airs his melodies sound clumsy and wanting in subtlety. As we have noted, his failure in conventional opera made him face the fact that his genius must find an outlet in some new direction, just as Wagner's inability to outshine Meyerbeer in anything except vulgarity turned his thoughts after the production of 'Rienzi' towards the 'music-drama.'

In the famous preface to 'Alceste,' Gluck states that he sought to banish from music all the offences against good taste and good sense, and to reduce it to its 'true function' of supporting the drama without interrupting the action or disfiguring it with superfluous ornaments. It is natural that this declaration, coming from a composer whose works won great popularity and respect, should have taken an important place in accounts of the historical development of opera. But the ideas contained in it were derived, as Mr. Newman has shown in his study of Gluck, from the theories which had been gaining ground for some years among speculative minds. Most of Gluck's ideas seem to have been taken from a treatise by Algarotti, which was published between the production of 'Orfeo' and that of 'Alceste.' After contending that reform must begin with the libretto, since good dramatic music cannot be written to stupid words, Algarotti lays down that current abuses must be abolished and 'the helm again given into the hands of the poet, from whom it has wrongly been taken.'

If, however, Gluck's theories were not original, he had at least the originality to attempt to put them into practice, and, to judge from the heated controversy aroused by his innovations, they must have startled all who were not conversant with the latest æsthetic doctrines. Dr. Burney found Vienna divided into two parties, and his account is worth quoting at some length, as the view of an intel ligent contemporary observer:

> 'Metastasio and Hasse [he says] may be said to be at the head of one of the principal sects; Calzabigi and Gluck of another. The first, regarding all innovations as quackery, adhere to the ancient (i.e., the existing) form of musical drama. . . . The second party depends more upon theatrical effects, propriety of character, simplicity of diction, and of musical execution than on, what they style, flowery descriptions, superfluous similes, sententious and cold morality. . . . .
>
> 'When the voice was more respected than the servile herd of imitative instruments, and at a time when a different degree and better-judged kind of study rendered it perhaps more worthy of attention than at present, the airs of Signor Hasse, particularly those of the pathetic kind, were such as charmed every hearer, and fixed the reputations of the first singers in Europe. . . .
>
> 'The Chevalier Gluck is simplifying music; and . . . tries all he can to keep his music chaste and sober. His three operas of "Orfeo," "Alceste," and "Paride" are proofs of this, as they contain few difficulties of execution, though many of expression.'

Although the worthy Doctor disclaims any intention 'to take sides or to determine which of these parties is right,' it is easy to see that his sympathies lay with the older school. The interest of his criticism rests not in its rightness or wrongness, but in the sure way he hits upon the difference between the two styles. He saw that the essential revolution, which was in progress, consisted in the dethronement of the voice from its supreme place in music.

One of the most important features of Gluck's practice was his substitution of accompanied recitative for recitativo secco, with the object of diminishing as far as possible the difference in musical quality between the airs and the dramatic dialogue. From this it is but a step to the continuous melodic declamation of Wagner, though it is a step which could not be taken until the symphonic technique of composition had been developed by Haydn and Beethoven. As I pointed out in a previous article in this series, Handel had already done something towards increasing the importance of the orchestral accompaniment relative to the voice. This use of the 'servile herd of imitative instruments' was, indeed, one of the signs of the end of Italian domination in music and of the enthronement in its place of Germany with its tradition of instrumental music. Gluck has been claimed by the French almost as if he were a native of Paris, but he was in this respect true to his own nationality.

It was not, indeed, until ten years after the production of 'Orfeo' that Gluck settled in Paris and composed to French texts. Here his two 'Iphigénies,' 'Armide' and the revised version of 'Alceste,' which we are to hear at the Scala Theatre next month, aroused an even more furious controversy than had divided the Viennese. He was accused, like Wagner a century later, of making his singers shriek and of being incapable of writing melody. 'Armide' was written more or less as an answer to these criticisms, and to prove that he could express tender as well as tragic sentiments. In a comparison of the new opera with 'Alceste,' Gluck himself says, 'The two operas are so different that you will hardly believe them to be by the same composer. I have tried to be painter and poet rather than musician, and I confess that I should like to finish my career with this opera. In "Armide" there is a delicate quality which is wanting in "Alceste," for I have discovered a method of making the characters express themselves in such a manner that you will recognise at once, from the style of the expression, whether it is Armide or one of her followers who is speaking.'

This is rather a large order, and it must be admitted that Gluck's powers of characterisation did not run to so particular a definition of the personalities on the stage. Indeed, one's chief impression of 'Armide' is that the passionate music is completely at variance with the stilted language of the libretto, written by Quinault for Lulli a century before. Gluck was, in truth, too much of a musician to remember his theories in the heat of composition, and we may be grateful for the inconsistencies which gave us so much beautiful music.

In 'Alceste,' which is of especial interest at the moment, there is ample proof of Gluck's dramatic powers. The libretto does not do much to help him, since Calzabigi made a sorry mess of the Euripidean tragedy. The melodies are, perhaps, weak. Even in the famous 'Divinités du Styx' one feels that, beautiful and dramatic as the individual phrases are, the whole is disjointed and short-breathed. The beauty of the opera rests in the masterly simplicity with which the dramatic situations are handled. Even after a century and a half the third scene of the first Act, which is the finest example of Gluck's genius in this direction, has lost none of its power to move us. For there is a grandeur and nobility in this music which gives it a beauty as enduring as that of the simple outlines on an Attic vase.

Teachers' Department

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD PIANOFORTE EXAMINATIONS FOR 1930

By Ernest Fowles

(Concluded from November number, p. 1006)

ADVANCED GRADE.—LIST A

No. 58. Czerny. Study in G minor, Op. 740, No. 14. (Crotchet 116-126.)—This evergreen study in broken chordal forms is of great usefulness. The pity is that the right hand is alone disciplined. Even in these days of harmonic opportunity it is common to meet players able to manage a study of this kind, but totally ignorant of the application of harmony to the keyboard. Every chord-position should be played, crotchet by crotchet, in unbroken form. If properly and systematically listened to, the experiment ought to help towards a concept of chords and their combinations. It would be well to insist upon this being continued until the harmony is aurally, visually, and tactually realised. To put it on the lowest ground, the process will render performance of the study infinitely easier to the player. The fingering throughout is appropriate, and no difficulty in this respect should arise if the fingering of the individual chord-positions is thoroughly understood.

No. 59. Haydn. First movement of Sonata in E flat. (Crotchet 116.)—In No. 50 was given an analysis of a movement by Mozart. This is an opportunity to examine one by Haydn, and to compare the one with the other. Look at the exposition of No. 50. In the main, the phrases are 'regular' and the effect as a whole is square. In this movement, rhythmic freedom is the rule. The first subject, with its three phrases, is a characteristic opening. Again, the transition passage of No. 50 is formed by four-bar groups. Here, a passage of great rhythmic unity (bars 12 to 24) carries the music onward to the second subject. Like the Mozart movement, the zone of the latter contains three thoughts, and it will be profitable to compare these in their respective settings on the simple ground of rhythmic formation. The extent of the development portion is compensated by its interest, both in material and in rhythm. But the most astonishing feature in this (for the period) highly developed movement is the length and interest of the Coda (last twenty-eight bars). It is well to be reminded of the fact that Haydn comes down in history as the most advanced thinker of the classic age in the terms of rhythm. The rendering requires all the delicate insight and clear-cut expression of Mozart, great reticence in pedalling, and a very particular attention to the decorative side of the music in respect of tone-marks and shadings.

No. 60. Schumann. Intermezzo, 'Faschingsschwank,' Op. 26. (Crotchet 84 or faster.)—A movement particularly distinctive of the composer. The student should first master the harmony unbrokenly, but he must observe the auxiliary sounds mingled with the harmony in nearly every bar throughout—the A natural in bar 1, the G natural in bar 2, and so forth. From these not a little experience in the use and purpose of such sounds will be gained. The music is a masterly treatment of the single idea presented in bars 1 to 4. It is a romance to be played with fervour and with unbounded energy. Therefore the phlegmatic or emotionally unresponsive should avoid it—at any rate for an examination! It will be noticed that every phrase or section contains a point of vigorous climax. It is upon the treatment of these climaxes, in their varying degrees of intensity, that the ultimate effect depends. Schumann gives an occasional clue in this direction. His poco meno f in bar 9 is a case in point. It is noteworthy, however, that he never indicates a fortissimo, a fact which shows that he leaves the zone of greatest stress to the imagination of the player. The editor has given the simplest possible pedalling, and it will perhaps be as well to follow his suggestions in a movement which, in reality, demands pedalling of considerable insight.

No. 61. Brahms. Waltz in E, Op. 39, No. 2. (Crotchet 108.)—An art dance-form of the purest type. The construction seems to belie the accentuation usual in the waltz (cf. No. 22). But however strongly the triple accentuation may make an appeal, it must not be stressed. The uniform metrical arrangement of the figuration will carry on the movement with but little accentual assistance from the player. Observe that the scheme of the whole is a duetto between the hands, the inner part moving in charming rivalry with the upper. In one case only is it necessary to give a fuller significance to the inner part, viz., in bars 13 to 17. The movement of these chords passing in gradual tone-descent from the climax in bar 14 is a masterstroke in a masterly setting.

No. 62. Colin Taylor. 'Boats,' from 'The Crescent Moon.' (Dotted crotchet 46.)—This very pleasant piece lends itself to sentimental treatment—at any rate so far as the first and last sections are concerned. The tendency, if manifest, must be countered by a thoroughly rhythmic rendering of the parts in question, in which rubato should be only sparingly employed. The unexpected nature of many chords will provide room for thought—when thought of the kind is applied! The figurations of the middle section are all harmonically interesting, and should first be studied from that point of view. The pppp direction is slightly optimistic, and reminiscent of Tchaikovsky, who in one noted passage ventured upon ppppp! (Query: How could one express the quadrupled superlative in Italian, to say nothing of our own language?) Naturally, extremities in language defeat their ends. Something, at least, is due to the imagination of the player, and a player without imagination will make but little of this music.

ADVANCED GRADE.—LIST B

No. 63. Clementi. Study in A, No. 9. (Crotchet 108-116.)—The combined scale and arpeggio study is always valuable, because it disciplines the alternate hand-positions respectively employed. Players whose hands and arms are imperfectly trained in habits of muscular resilience quickly discover the fact when they venture upon passages such as these. The direction ma non troppo indicates a warning against excessive speed—and its corollary, a probable misapplication of natural muscular laws. The student should apply this direction in the most elastic manner. Let him not attempt a speed which will prevent him from making use of these same natural muscular laws with the freedom suggested, and made possible, by Nature.

No. 64. Daquin. 'Le Coucou.' (Crotchet 126.)—Very little of the work of this French contemporary of Bach has come down to us. We are very distinctly the losers. Doubtless Daquin had sat at the feet of Couperin, and had learnt from him the possibilities of keyboard music. The hand is the hand of Daquin, but the style and atmosphere are strongly suggestive of the older and greater master. The movement is a rondo of the older type, with three appearances of the main thought and, of course, two episodes, a form beloved by the older French masters. Although vivace has been added by an editor, the word must be held to apply less to actual speed than to style. The latter must be vivacious, and anticipatory of the cuckoo-calls which punctuate the rhythmic movement with delightful frequency. The graces start in every case in the accentual position. Thus, the first note of the grace in bar 11 is played with the first note of the left-hand group, the notes following each other as quickly as the skill of the player will allow. A change of finger on the third note (or on the first) will facilitate the execution. The shake in bar 22 may be reduced to its lowest form, viz., four notes in all, or similar to the ornament of bar 11. In fact, a Bach interpretation may quite well be given to this shake. (Vide No. 54.)

No. 65. Beethoven. Last movement of Sonata in C minor, Op. 13. (Minim 100.)—It is interesting to compare the plan of No. 64 with that of this movement, which illustrates the development of the rondo after it had been influenced by sonata form. The following analysis should also be compared with the plan of sonata form given in No. 50:

First subject, bars 1-17.
Transition to second subject, bars 18-25.
Zone of second subject, bars 25-51: First thought, bars 25-33; second thought, bars 33-43; third thought, bars 43-51.
First subject, second appearance, bars 61-78.
Central episode, characteristic of the modern rondo, bars 78-120.
First subject, third appearance, bars 120-128.
Transition to second subject, effected by an extension of the first subject, bars 128-134.
Zone of second subject, bars 134-170: First thought, bars 134-143; second thought, bars 143-153; third thought, bars 153-170.
First subject, fourth appearance, bars 171-182.
Coda, bar 182 to the end.

The usual tendency to start the movement too quickly and to modify the tempo when the normal quavers turn to triplets must be repressed. The first subject suggests a touch of daintiness, and excessive speed throws it altogether outside the picture. In all respects the note-clearness required by late 18th-century music is equally needful here; and this, of course, includes the duty of restrained and careful pedalling.

No. 66. Schumann. 'Ende vom Lied,' Op. 12, No. 8. (Crotchet 126.)—A particularly attractive phase of Schumann's work, ending with a Coda of great mystic charm. Good chordal grasp is a need throughout; of the heavier type in the first section, of the lighter in the episode. In the latter part (minim 88-92), great care must be taken with the phrase-markings. In every case the two-note slur indicates a true trochee, and must be treated accordingly. In particular, notice those in imitation at bars 14, &c., of the episode. Splendid practice in free hand-work will be found here. The Coda should be played amorosamente—very tenderly, and with a memory of the composer's personality to help the interpretation. Each chord-change is a surprise and a joy. Note the theme with its uplifting octave, which trickles through the harmony as a kind of swan song for the group of pieces within this opus.

No. 67. Hugo Anson. 'Pavan.' (Crotchet 72.)—The direction con maestà is much more readily understood in connection with this pavan than delicato. Perhaps the latter word refers to delicacy of conception, and not expressly to the keyboard interpretation of that conception. For it seems to me that not a little of the original nobility of the pavan is recovered in this interesting example. Note the treatment of the predominant tune, firstly, as a lower melody suggestive of the 'cello or of a tenor voice; secondly, in sonorous form with a low and strong bass of support. Note, further, the climax attained in the course of the episode, and the poignancy of its effect. It was a happy thought to make the cadence in bars 18 and 19 characteristic of the piece. Its second occurrence brings about a virtual ending-place to the episode, and incidentally is the reason for the link-passage (bars 32-39), which, to fulfil its purpose in the movement, must be played exactly as directed.

ADVANCED GRADE.—LIST C

No. 68. Moscheles. Study in F minor, Op. 70, No. 24. (Crotchet 96.)—Good practice in a form of passage met with in much post-classic and modern music. The writing is very diversified, no two bars being precisely alike; and this may be regarded as the standard of its value. The precautionary comodo will probably be found welcome. All I have hitherto said upon the subject of agility (cf. Nos. 43 and 63) should be recalled in connection with this study, which demands some brilliance of style conjoined with perfect freedom of manipulation.

No. 69. Handel. Air with Variations. (Theme, crotchet 60.)—Here is the famous theme afterwards treated by Brahms in an equally famous manner. Here we see the variation form, already, it is true, with a long history behind it, but still tied down to the conventions which dominated all instrumental music of the first half of the 18th century. The fact does not belittle the music of that time. Addison, Steele, Swift, and the rest of the worthies of those days are not bedimmed by the great glories of 19th-century literature. So if we know the work of Brahms in connection with this theme, we shall take the greater joy and reap the greater benefit from listening to that of Handel. The Air should be presented strictly—just as it is written. Var. 1 (crotchet 88) is a flowing commentary upon the harmony of the theme. Var. II. (ditto) combines the original harmony with a roughened outline of the air. A marked cantabile is therefore necessary throughout. Var. III. (dotted crotchet 120) presents a totally new figuration, and Var. IV. (dotted crotchet 116) is to Var. III. as Var. II. to Var. I. Var. V. (crotchet 126) brings in the 'toccata' element of the period, and forms a fitting close to the set.

No. 70. Chopin. Polonaise in C minor, Op. 40, No. 2. (Crotchet 80.)—Like his waltzes and mazurkas, Chopin's polonaises admit of much variety in tempo. This must always be the case with a composer whose moods are changeable, unexpected and occasionally even capricious. Moreover, it is well to remember that the real polonaise, from which Chopin drew his inspiration, was in reality a dance of very moderate movement. I have often referred to a knowledge of form as essential to the player. This piece is an object-lesson to that effect. Both sections (the Polonaise and the Trio) are in themselves examples of three-part form, and, in each case, a change in temperamental expression coincides with the close of one part and the beginning of another. Observe the changes in this respect at the intersection of bars 34-35, 55-56, 86-87, and 98-99. A reference to the following details will be helpful. Bars 9-11: Outline the melody. Bars 15 and 16: The same. Bars 37-41: A slight accelerando follows the crescendo. Bar 42: Recover the tempo. Bars 74-78: The interlude-passage should be played strictly and with an effect of distance. Bars 87-93: A quiet left-hand part with cantabile in the upper melody. Bars 93-97: Make a climactic point here with a pronounced declension lasting until the return in bar 99. Bars 117-120: Do not fail to bring out the new motive in the uppermost part.

No. 71. Tchaikovsky. 'Barcarolle,' Op. 37A, No. 6. (Crotchet 108-112.)—Tchaikovsky was not always so happy in his pianoforte music as he is in this well-known piece. Grazioso exactly describes the style of the whole. The melodic part must be played with infinite light and shade, and with a sense of the unity of each phrase, composed though it be of isolated rhythmic sections. The sections in the phrase bars 6 to 12, for instance, must so be treated that the continuity of the phrase itself is unimpaired. This is largely a matter of tone-management, but not entirely; the mental grasp of the phrase-unit is a prior need. Rubato is a virtual necessity throughout the piece, but it must be used with wisdom and not allowed, as is so often the case with this piece, to turn what are really beautiful phrases into sentimental platitudes. The poco più mosso must be regarded as a preparation for the new thought at the change of time-signature. This thought requires vigour, and if played at a moderate tempo, may even contain a semblance of dignity. The main difficulty of the movement is to manage the interluding phrases, the first of which will be found in the bar next to the Tempo I. at the return. These phrases should blend in tone with that of the original melody which they accompany. On no account should they be played echo-wise, a sure path to the sentimental—in this connection at least. The Coda may be invested with considerable charm. The month of June is Tchaikovsky's inspiration, and it is not hard to perceive the application of the quietly falling harmonies and gradual evanescence of the music.

No. 72. Leo Livens. 'Dance of the Insects.' (Crotchet 96.)—General daintiness of rendering is, of course, called for by the nature as well as by the title of the piece, which, moreover, provides some quite excellent practice in quickly-recurring repeated notes. There seem to be two schools of thought in the treatment of the latter. Some suggest that change of finger is always desirable, and, as a reason, refer somewhat unconvincingly to what they call finger-flexibility. Others declare that, except in very rapid repetitions in which possible blocking of the key mechanism is concerned, the problem is one for the hand rather than for the fingers; that, since it is possible to make octave repetitions at a comparatively high speed, it should be logical to do the same with single notes and with the same technique. In this place, however, the player has no alternative; the fingering must be taken as indicated, for the nature of the passages makes this virtually indispensable. In music so delicately conceived it is important to avoid climactic points of too great intensity. The fortes of the middle section must be regarded as merely forming a contrast to the first and last sections, which contain the leading motive of the whole.

POINTS FROM LECTURES

The lecture world suddenly bursts into activity with the change back of the summer-time clock. The pressure on this column is so great this month that many a good 'point' must go unmarked.

However, not every lecturer invites notice. One excellent musician ranged over the development of church music by showing as a mere introduction how ancient civilizations practised the art of music: Egyptians, Greeks, Hebrews, Assyrians, Babylonians, Arabians, Indians, and Chinese. The speakers who followed all referred to the fine musicianship of the lecturer; they were impressed by the man, but what of the subject? In contrast to this encyclopædic and over-conscientious preparation, Dr. W. G. Whittaker at Liverpool University lectured on an English composer whose works (and even name) seemed to be lost, viz., William Young. Such a vivid account of this man and his music was given that the audience clearly had their interest aroused. Both these lectures were historical. Which would you rather have?

Frederick Delius was the topical subject taken by Mr. Hubert J. Foss at Trinity College of Music. The music of Delius, he said, was not quite like what the colleges taught their pupils to regard as good music, for the conception was not primarily melodic nor the texture contrapuntal. By every rule the music was poor—but the rules were not applicable to Delius. It was probable, however, that the harmonic basis of Delius's thought had retarded appreciation of him. His methods of development were no less his own; they were of a piece with the poetic side of his mind. It was sometimes said that the music of Delius bore a cosmopolitan stamp. That was true in a sense, but in addition to the German and French influences to be traced in his works, there were marked English characteristics. The latter were to be noticed in his frequent use of the human voice, the vocal quality of his themes and phrases, and his recurring reminiscences of folk-song.

It takes a Lord Mayor to tackle the dictum of a University Professor of Music—doubtless in chaff, as the remark was received with laughter. Sir Hugh Allen had advised the Associated Board winners of certificates at Norwich 'not to go to bed until they had written some music out of their own head.' Of the pianist who had illustrated, Sir Hugh thought 'she could write out in this room every note of what she had played.' Lord Mayor Gowen said, 'I very much question whether Sir Hugh Allen, when he heard the Chopin polonaise—if he has never heard it before—would be able when he goes back to London to write half a bar of it.'

The state of music in Wales before 1815 (that being the year of the birth of John Ambrose Lloyd) gave Mr. J. Charles McLean an opportunity of making a historical sketch leading to the present time. Where does Wales stand to-day, he asked, compared with the other nations of the world? Wales was a small nation with little or no advantages. Norway was a small nation, but had produced a Grieg; Finland claimed Sibelius; Poland had Chopin and Paderewski; and Yugoslavia her Béla Bartók; but Wales had not yet found her Schubert, Grieg, or Sibelius. One answer was that Wales had only been at it seriously for about eighty years, whilst Italy, France, Germany, and England had produced classical masterpieces three and four hundred years before Wales had made a start.

Dr. A. W. Pollitt told the Music Teachers' Association at Liverpool that he knew a school where the students were assembled once or twice a year, and were obliged to listen to a couple of string quartets. That was for musical appreciation. But he had never heard of any converts to music as the result of such a method; he had heard of many young people being antagonised. String quartets were not for the tyro; they appealed only to the cultured few, and he could imagine nothing more boring than young people being obliged to listen to a string quartet.

In the course of some hints to conductors in a Belfast class for conductors, Mr. John Vine said there was an idea that interpretation was mere expressiveness, but that was not so. Real interpretation included everything: rhythm, shape, tone, diction, expressiveness, and the underlying mood of the whole. In perfect interpretation these factors must be in perfect relationship. The test of expressiveness was that it should be just enough—a little less than enough made the singing insipid, while too much turned it into a caricature. The team spirit in choirs must be cultivated, and to get this they must abolish selfishness, littleness, and jealousy.

Mr. J. B. McElligott, speaking at the Oxford Summer School of the Society of St. Gregory, treated of plainsong as music and as worship. It throws all the emphasis on the singer. Mr. Ernest Newman remarked lately that in modern song the pianist is an equal collaborator with the singer, and yet the former is described in programmes as being 'at the pianoforte.' It would be more just, added the lecturer, in some recitals of modern songs to put on the programme, 'Pianoforte solo, Mr. George Reeves; at the Larynx, Madame So-and-So.' In plainsong the whole of the song—melody, atmosphere, ornament, contrast, and illustration—is put into the voice part. Choirs who are going to sing plainsong must think more in terms of the singer than of the organist. The choirmaster must be more and more a master of singing.

Seeing and hearing were topics on which Mr. E. Stanley Roper founded a little homily at a Trinity College distribution at Northampton. Many people see without noticing and hear without listening. 'Under seeing without hearing comes: when you play the wrong note even though you know its name; when you give the wrong value to the notes; when you leave out the rests—remember, rests let in the light and air—and when you use the wrong fingers. Under hearing without listening comes: when you begin badly; when you do not keep your hands together; when you alter the pace of the piece; when you use the loud pedal too much; when you spread a chord which ought not to be spread; when a singer sings out of tune; when a violinist plays out of tune; and when you make a row instead of music.'

Hints to choir conductors and choirmasters were given in profusion at a Dundee lecture by Dr. C. H. Moody. An example may be given. In dealing with pianissimo passages, he never attempted articulation until he got the exact shade of soft singing he wanted. When the pitch was causing trouble at sectional rehearsals, he would emphasise that they should deal with pitch and that alone. If tone was not good or articulation not clear, they should deal with tone or deal with articulation.

'Municipalities and Music' was a subject about which Dr. Adrian Boult had some useful things to say to a large audience at Cheltenham. If it was to be a place where people came in swarms for the day and consumed a good deal of liquid refreshment, let them get a jazz band and be done with it. If they wanted to attract distinguished visitors, as they had been doing for the past hundred years, then they should get a good orchestra. A start on a small scale would not cause any grave financial problem, and an orchestra at Cheltenham would be a great adornment, adding much to the beautiful things they had to look at, by having something beautiful to listen to.

Dr. Sydney Nicholson, speaking at Bury St. Edmunds, where St. Mary's Church was completely filled, remarked: 'It is said all over the place that people cannot bear to go to church because of the choir's singing. It is not the choir's singing, but the way it is done which is wrong.' He begged those who undertook the responsibility to approach church music with reverence, and determination that they will not only do all they can, but that the small choirs will never attempt over-elaborate music.

Love and religion, in the view of Mr. C. H. Phillips (speaking at the Hull Y.W.C.A.), are the two greatest emotional sources of song. The Elizabethan songs, apart from religious songs, were of two kinds: those of the 'fa-la-la' type, produced by pure exuberance, and the love-songs. The words were often very intricate, and the Elizabethans were past-masters of the art of seizing the atmosphere of a song and setting it to a difficult tune. These songs had a peculiar aroma about them, like cigars. They could soothe away care, but they were not in the least 'thrilling.'

J. G.

POWDER AND SHOT

(See also 'Letters to the Editor.')

DO YOU KNOW ?—

That in 1928 the London College of Music examined 5,883 candidates for diplomas, of whom 3,272 passed ?

That altogether upwards of 850,000 candidates have been examined in the forty-two years of the College's life ?

That it has seventy-three examiners, and eight hundred and fourteen local centres ?

AND WOULD YOU BELIEVE ?—

That its prize distributions are presided over by town councillors, mayors, knights, and viscounts ?

That the current Report says, 'The College may, indeed, be well called the Musical Examining Institution of the British Empire' ?

That 'the mandoline would appear to have passed out of favour, so far as examinations are concerned' ?

That 'the College diplomas are recognised all the world over, not only as an artistic test by those who follow music for the pleasure it gives, and for art's sake, but also by those whose objective it is to possess a diploma which shall serve as a standard teaching qualification' ?

Yet that the L.C.M. is NOT RECOGNISED by the Teachers' Registration Council ?

That the following newspapers have printed lists of successful candidates: the Daily Telegraph, the Morning Post, and the Manchester Guardian ?

That the Music Student has published photographs of children under fifteen who have obtained professional diplomas of the L.C.M. ?

And that, in this year of grace 1929, some musicians STILL ask why they should join the I.S.M. ?

Among the articles in the November School Music Review we were specially interested in Mr. Percy Scholes's account of a visit to a secondary school in Bucharest, where he witnessed a demonstration of a new system of training that is intended to form the basis of the musical work in schools throughout Rumania. The method is extraordinarily well devised for the cultivation of alertness and resource, but the extent to which it depends on the extemporaneous power and musicianship of the teacher is, we think, against its successful use in centres where there is no specialist available. (The method cannot be described in a few words, so we must refer the reader to the article.) No doubt methods of the kind are used in English schools; in fact, we met with something similar in the work of a few keen Church choirmasters many years ago. Anyway, some features from the Bucharest system could (and, we think, should) be taken up by skilful teachers in this country.

Other features in this number are articles on Christmas music, by G. Kirkham Jones; an account by Desmond MacMahon of the visit of an English school choir to Germany; a practical recipe for 'Home-Made Marionettes,' by F. Alice Marzials; a biographical article by Edward Watson on John Stanley, the gifted blind organist-composer whose music is still to be heard at recitals; &c. The 'Everyday Teaching Problem' discussed this month by J. Raymond Tobin is the linking-up of Sol-fa and Staff notations. There are the usual features and music supplements.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. Our 'Answers to Correspondents' column closes on the 14th of the month. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Pianoforte Queries from Hull (no name given).—(1.) We cannot say whether Tausig and other great pianists of the past could play two or three more octaves to the second than present-day star pianists. Can anybody say? And if they could, does it matter? (2.) Certainly you ought to be able to acquire the ability to read two widely dispersed passages at sight. It is merely a matter of practice. Organists often have to read at sight from three (and sometimes four) staves; and there are plenty of musicians who can condense a fair-sized full score at the pianoforte right away. Your teacher's recommendation to play the hands separately has reference rather to learning the piece than to reading it at sight. Sight-reading is best acquired by the use of music well within your technical grasp, beginning with a slow pace and going right ahead, no matter what slips occur. If you stop to make corrections you are not reading at sight, but merely advertising your blunders. (3.) We have looked at this question all round, but still cannot understand it. (4.) You ask, 'What is it that makes the fingers sort of get mixed up after they have been repeating a sequence or trill for a long period for a considerable number of times?' Simply technical deficiency and lack of muscular freedom. (5.) Rapid repetition of notes is a matter of agility rather than strength. (6.) You are too greatly worried over the question of speed. The quickest playing (even in pieces where speed is the prime factor) is not always the best. Clean, rhythmical playing at a moderate pace often sounds quicker than quick playing in which those virtues are not present. Don't bother so much about metronome marks, which are usually not the composer's, and in any case are no more than general indications. Note.—We are glad to help you, but we must ask you to write any future questions more clearly, and not on odd fragments of paper, and to keep all the references to a question together. We got quite giddy chasing your postscripts, afterthoughts, N.B.'s, asterisks, and footnotes, from scrap to scrap; and as your question arrived on one of our busy days we were not pleased with you.

S. S. S.—(1.) For the first movement of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto a good pace would be ♩=85-90. (2.) You will probably find what you want in 'Practical Guide to Phrasing,' by Riemann and Fuchs (Schirmer). (3.) 'The Art of Accompaniment,' by Welton Hickin (Novello). (4.) We are unable to compare the standard of playing in the L.R.A.M. accompaniment with that of the L.R.A.M. pianoforte-teaching examination.

B. C. W.—You say you have to teach a mixed village choir to read at sight a four-part exercise at a competition to be held in about ten weeks' time. Staff notation only will be allowed, and your choir consists mostly of farm lads and girls who do not know their notes. Were we placed in your position our first inclination would be to write to the secretary of the Festival and point out the unfairness of limiting the test to Staff notation. You will probably find that most of your singers have a fair grounding in Tonic Sol-fa left over from their school days. With diligence you may in ten weeks develop this in such a way that they will be able to read quite respectably at the competition if the use of Tonic Sol-fa be allowed. We believe the Festival committee would see the reasonableness of allowing either notation. If they do not, we should be disposed to give the Festival a miss. However, that would, no doubt, be wrong of us. Assuming that after all we decided to enter, we should ascertain just how much Tonic Sol-fa reading ability the choir possesses, and on it base as much of the Staff notation as we could manage in the available time. In order to do this you must, of course, have a grounding of Tonic Sol-fa yourself. We do not think you will find any four-part graded exercises for S.A.T.B. sufficiently easy for your purpose. It might be worth your while, however, to send for a copy of a 'Handbook for Choralists,' by Harvey Grace (Novello, 1*s.* 6*d.*), in which you will find not only a good many hints on sight-singing, but a number of graded studies in both notations. If you decide that a fair number of these studies are within the powers of your choir you will be able to do much by letting them read the easier examples alternately in Tonic Sol-fa and Staff notation, giving such tips as occur to you during the process. But, we repeat, begin by writing to the secretary of the Festival a tactful protest against the taboo of Tonic Sol-fa.

J. D. R. W.—(1.) You will be quite safe in printing in your collection of pipe arrangements any of the songs you mention that are obviously folk-songs or long since out of copyright, such as 'Caller Herrin,' 'Flowers of the Forest,' &c. Concerning the rest (for example, a tune you mention as coming from some ukulele tutor), it would be safer to write to the publishers of the book or collection, inquiring as to any possible restriction. You ask also, 'If a tune is printed in 6-8 would it be wrong for me to make and print an arrangement in 4-4 time?' We should say yes, decidedly. This would not be arranging a tune, but disarranging it very considerably. (2.) There is nothing complicated in the process of copyrighting. The rights of the book will remain your property until you assign them to somebody else. (3.) In regard to the sample you send of your method of variation, we should decidedly object to your changing the time of the tune from 3-4 to 4-4. This kind of thing is quite legitimate when it occurs in one of a set of variations, but it is indefensible when you publish your version of the tune as a separate number. We fail to see why the fact of its being arranged for pipes should call for changes so drastic. There is very little left of the original by the time you have finished with it.

TEACHER.—When we said in a recent answer that the A.R.C.O. diploma does not rank as high as the L.R.A.M. or the A.R.C.M., we had no desire to belittle the R.C.O. diploma. Still less do we wish readers to imagine that the diploma is of little value to them. It is of considerable value in several ways, but most of all in that it sets a candidate to work systematically in the acquiring of a good deal of practical knowledge that he would not trouble about in the ordinary way. Nevertheless, nobody pretends that it can be regarded as anything more than a kind of half-way house to the Fellowship diploma. We know many excellent musicians who never proceeded from Associateship to Fellowship, but the fact remains that (as we say below in our answer to 'F. C.') the A.R.C.O. diploma, though an excellent all-round qualification, is not sufficiently exacting on the technical side of performance to enable it to rank with the Fellowship, or with such diplomas as the A.R.C.M. and the L.R.A.M. You say that 'the R.C.O., as a chartered institution, should surely be on the same footing as the R.A.M. and R.C.M., and its examinations of equal value.' Equal value for what? The L.R.A.M. diploma for pianoforte-playing is no test of the holder's ability to fulfil the duties of a church organist and choirmaster, and similarly the F.R.C.O. diploma has little weight when the subject is (say) the teaching or playing of the violin. There is a good deal of loose thinking on this subject, and many of the general public, and even a good many musicians, seem to imagine that so long as a man has a set of initials after his name he is qualified to teach any and every subject. If teachers would confine themselves in general to the subject for which they hold proper qualifications, the status of degrees and diplomas and of the profession generally would be improved.

V. C. P.—(1.) Study the full scores of the Beethoven symphonies in their order; take the three best-known symphonies of Mozart—the 'Jupiter, G minor, and E flat, and a few of the best of the Haydn symphonies such as the 'London' or the 'Military.' You ask, 'Can anything be learned from Haydn, or is he as threadbare as many musicians would have us believe?' A great deal can be learned from Haydn, and for one musician who regards him as threadbare you will find many who regard him as evergreen. (2.) If you wish to make acquaintance with Brahms's pianoforte works we suggest, as a pleasant start, the Intermezzi and the Waltzes. (3.) Your left hand, you say, is considerably weaker than your right; what shall you do? Make a daily use of the exercises in Ridley Prentice's 'Hand Gymnastics' (Novello). If you have never worked at Bach's Two- and Three-Part Inventions begin now. You will find in them some splendid work for your left hand. Take also from the 'Forty-eight' such Preludes as Nos. 2, 10, and 15 from the first book, and Nos. 6, 21, and 23 from Book 2. Concentrate also on such of the Fugues as present special difficulties for the left hand, e.g., No. 5, in Book 1, where the demisemiquaver figure is very useful. Paterson's have just issued in five graded books the 'Hundred Best' in Czerny. Included are some first-rate studies in which the bulk of the work is given to the left hand. Try Book 2 for a start.

GLISSANDO (Carlisle).—Ascending glissando in L.H. or descending in R.H., marked to be played with third finger, should be played with the nail presented to the keys. The elbow must be well raised to allow of the necessary tilting of the hand. Such passages can be played more easily by the thumb. D'Albert, in his edition of Liszt's Rhapsodies, substitutes thumb for the composer's third-finger indications in the descending R.H. passages of the tenth Rhapsody. Glissando over

(Continued on p. 1109)

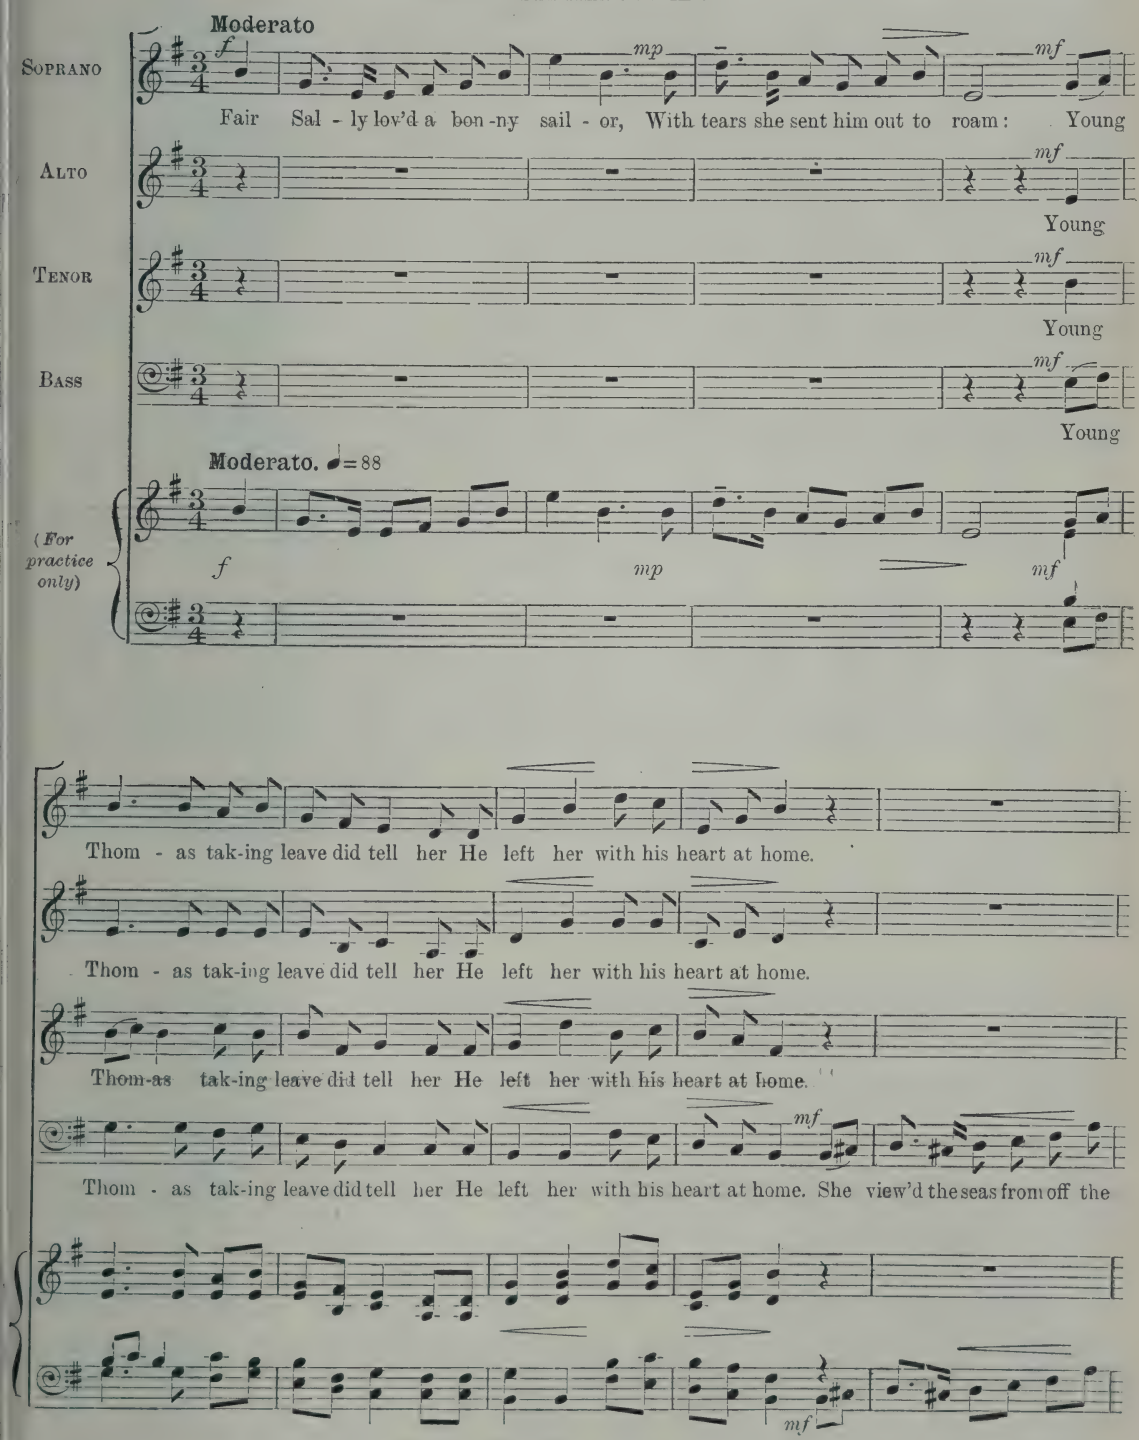
Fair Sally

FOUR-PART SONG

Words Anon. Music by Alec Rowley

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Moderato
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
Fair Sal - ly lov'd a bon - ny sail - or, With tears she sent him out to roam: Young Young
Young
Young
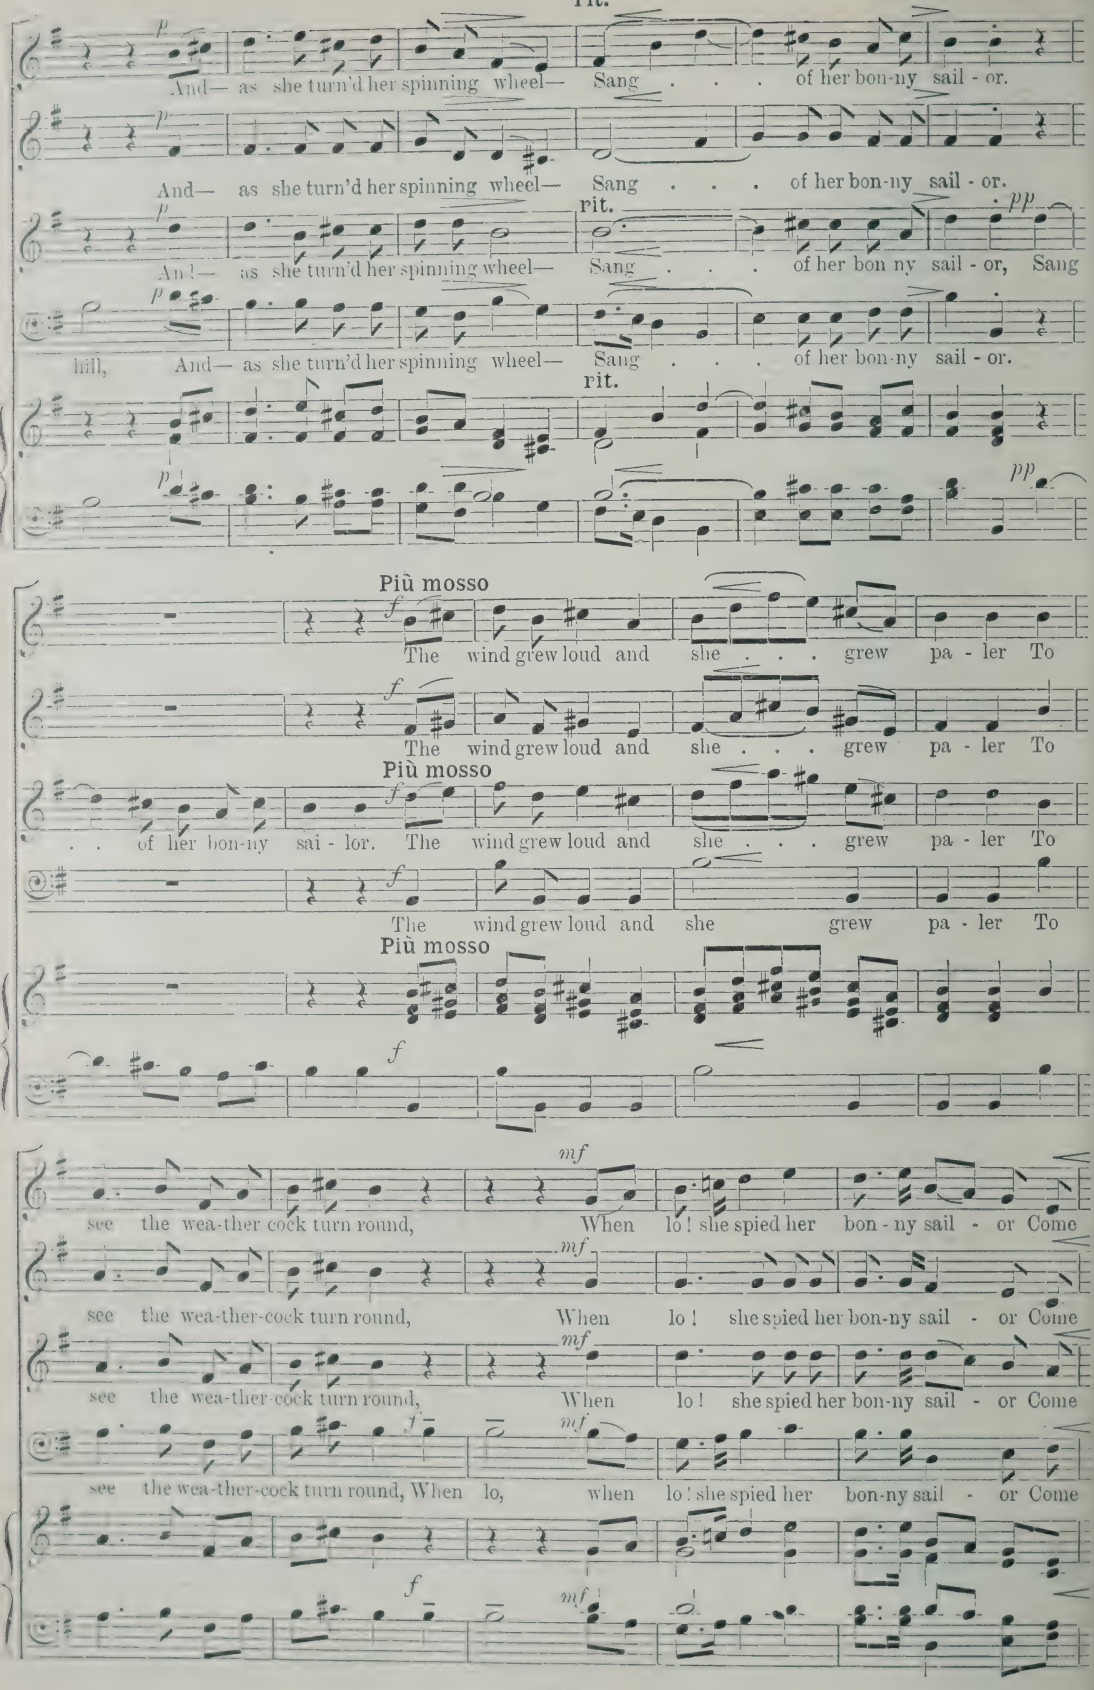
Moderato. ♩= 88
(For practice only)
Thom - as tak-ing leave did tell her He left her with his heart at home.
Thom - as tak-ing leave did tell her He left her with his heart at home.
Thom-as tak-ing leave did tell her He left her with his heart at home.
Thom - as tak-ing leave did tell her He left her with his heart at home. She view'd the seas from off the

Copyright, 1929, by Novello and Company, Limited



rit.
And— as she turn'd her spinning wheel— Sang . . . of her bon-ny sail - or.
And— as she turn'd her spinning wheel— Sang . . . of her bon-ny sail - or.
rit.
An!— as she turn'd her spinning wheel— Sang . . . of her bon ny sail - or, Sang hill, And— as she turn'd her spinning wheel— Sang . . . of her bon-ny sail - or.
rit.
Più mosso
The wind grew loud and she . . . grew pa - ler To
The wind grew loud and she . . . grew pa - ler To Più mosso
. . of her bon-ny sai - lor. The wind grew loud and she . . . grew pa - ler To
The wind grew loud and she grew pa - ler To Più mosso
see the wea-ther cock turn round, When lo! she spied her bon - ny sail - or Come see the wea-ther-cock turn round, When lo! she spied her bon-ny sail - or Come see the wea-ther-cock turn round, When lo! she spied her bon-ny sail - or Come see the wea-ther-cock turn round, When lo, when lo! she spied her bon-ny sail - or Come whist-ling o'er the fal-low ground : Fair Sal - ly met him whist-ling o'er the fal-low ground : Fair Sal - - ly . .

whist-ling o'er the fal-low ground : With nimble haste she leap'd the style, Fair Sal - - ly . .
whist-ling o'er the fal low ground : Fair Sal - - ly . .
with a smile, And hugg'd . . . . . her bon-ny sail - or. . . "This met him, And hugg'd . . . . . her bon ny sail - or. . .
met him, And hugg'd, and hugg'd her bon ny sail - or. . .
met him, And hugg'd, and . . . hugg'd her bon-ny sail - or. . .
Tempo 1mo.
espress.
thimble thou did'st give to Sal - ly, When-e'er I see, I think on you. Then why should Tom stand
"Then why should Tom stand
"Then why should Tom stand
"Then why should Tom stand shil - ly shal - ly When yon - der steep le's in our view?"

Now
shil - ly shal - ly When yon - der steep-le's in our view?"
Now
shil - ly shal - ly When yon - der steep-le's in our view?"
Now
shil - ly shal - ly When yon - der steep-le's in our view?" Tom nev - er to oc - ca-sion blind,
Now
took her in the com ing mind, And went . . . . to church with Sal - ly, took her in the com ing mind, And went to church with Sal - ly, took her in the com-ing mind, And went to church with Sal - ly, And . . went to church with took her in the com-ing mind, And went . . to church with Sal - ly,
meno mosso
And . . went to church with Sal - - - - - - - - ly. . .
And . . went to church with Sal - - - - - - - - ly. . .
meno mosso
Sal - ly, And . . went to church with Sal - - - - - - - - ly. . .
And . went to church with Sal - - - - - - - - ly. . .
meno mosso

(Continued from p. 1104.)

black keys can easily be a painful business. We suggest the outer side of the thumb in ascending R.H. and descending L.H., and the inner side descending R.H. and ascending L.H., i.e., with the nail presented to the player throughout and a well-raised elbow when using the inner side. The playing of double-note glissando is difficult, and much preparatory work is essential. For some time practice should be toneless, the hand gliding up and down with only a slight depression of the keys, and the mind concentrated on (1) control of the arm, so that the required weight for each note shall be evenly distributed, (2) the preservation of a uniform speed throughout the passage, (3) a rigid adherence to the fixed position of the two playing fingers, which must be firmly held without interfering with the slight, gradual lateral adjustments at the wrist which will be found necessary. The subject is discussed in some detail—more fully than is possible here—in 'Modern Piano-teaching,' by William Townsend (Bosworth). We advise you to get the book and persevere with the preliminary work suggested by the author.

G. G.

W. G. S.—We suggest for Harmony (Mus. Bac.) Kitson's 'The Evolution of Harmony' and Buck's 'Unfigured Harmony' (Oxford University Press). For Counterpoint use Kitson's 'The Art of Counterpoint' and 'Applied Strict Counterpoint' (Oxford University Press) and Bridge's 'Double Counterpoint and Canon' (Novello). For Fugue—'Fugue,' by James Higgs (Novello), 'Studies in Fugue,' by C. H. Kitson (Oxford University Press), and Prout's 'Fugal Analysis' (Augener). You should also get Stanford's 'Musical Composition' (Stainer & Bell), 'Modern Musical Composition,' by Frederick Corder (Curwen), Prout's 'Musical Form' and 'Applied Forms' (Augener), Corder's 'The Orchestra and how to write for it' (Curwen), and Parry's 'Summary of Musical History' (Novello) and 'The Art of Music' (Kegan Paul). Much time should be given to the study of good models, not neglecting the work of contemporary composers. Study the methods of Bach in his Cantatas (Novello), and examine some of the many examples now available of the works—sacred and secular—of Byrd and other writers of the polyphonic period. Make yourself acquainted with as much music as possible of all schools down to the present day. Study orchestral works—classical and modern—from miniature scores, and take every opportunity of hearing them performed. Many articles in 'Grove' should prove helpful to you.

G. G.

A. G. G.—To help along your organ-manual technique at the pianoforte take the short preludes and pieces of Bach, followed by the Two-Part Inventions. (You will, of course, be diligent with scales and arpeggios.) We think your other needs will be best met by Alcock's 'The Organ' (Novello).

TOBIN.—You enclose a cutting from a parish magazine in which the organist and choirmaster announces himself as L.Mus.I.C.M. We are not quite sure what this distinction means, but we know it is not among the diplomas that are recognised as being of value. You say you have remonstrated with this L.Mus.I.C.M., and that his reply is, 'Let everyone mind his own business. I spend my own money how I like and where I like. I have the I.C.M. syllabus with fifteen hundred names of subscribing members, and the College advertises in the best Church paper (the Church Times) weekly.' You add that he is also hunting for a diploma in another very doubtful quarter. There is really nothing much to be said to a musician of this kind. He puts his case frankly. He is out for sets of initials that cost the minimum of labour, and so long as the public are unaware of the differences in value between various groups of capital letters, he and his like will go on doing it. Probably all those fifteen hundred subscribing members would say pretty much the same thing if you asked them. The fact of the Church Times advertising the I.C.M. is merely one more indication of the need for strong action on the part of such representative bodies as the I.S.M. and the T.R.C.

EARNEST STUDENT.—For harmony (A.R.C.O.), use Kitson's 'Elementary Harmony' and 'Additional Exercises' and Buck's 'Unfigured Harmony' (Oxford University Press). For counterpoint—'First Lessons in Counterpoint,' by T. Keighley (Bayley & Ferguson) and Kitson's 'Applied Counterpoint' (Oxford University Press). Keighley's book carries you as far as A.R.C.O. requirements, and the author's five books of 'Graded Counterpoint Exercises,' intended for use in conjunction with the text-book, should prove particularly helpful in your case. For other requirements the following may be recommended: Parry's 'Summary of Musical History' (Novello) and 'The Art of Music' (Kegan Paul); 'Church Choir Training,' by H. W. Richards (Joseph Williams), and 'The Art of Training Choir Boys,' by G. C. Martin (Novello); Prout's 'Musical Form' and 'Applied Forms' (Augener); 'Examination Aural Tests,' by F. G. Shinn (Augener). Your harmony and counterpoint must not be mere mechanical paper work. Use your pianoforte freely, and train yourself from the start to hear mentally everything you write.

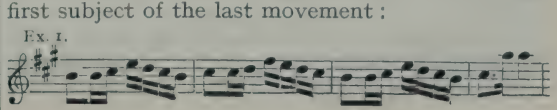
G. G.

M. C. (Worcester).—For the paper-work section of the A.R.C.M. (Public Singing) examination use Stewart Macpherson's 'Rudiments of Music' and its companion 'Questions and Exercises upon the Rudiments of Music' (Joseph Williams), and Kitson's 'Elementary Harmony' and 'Additional Exercises' (Oxford University Press). Follow the study of each chapter of Rudiments by working the corresponding questions and exercises. In your harmony work spend plenty of time at the keyboard, familiarising yourself, by frequent playing, with the many model progressions scattered throughout the book. Practise writing from dictation both melodic and harmonic progressions. Work beyond the bare requirements of the syllabus. For the aural tests get 'Examination Aural Tests,' by Frederick G. Shinn (Augener) and 'Aural Tests for Diploma Examinations,' by Basil C. Allchin and Ernest Read (Associated Board of the R.A.M. and the R.C.M.).

G. G.

J. J. T.—The only justification for calling Beethoven's seventh Symphony 'The Irish'—and the justification is very slight indeed—is that the first subject of the last movement:

Ex. 1.



is very similar to the following, which occurs in Beethoven's setting of the Irish song 'Nora Creina':

Ex. 2.

There is some doubt as to which was written first, but Sir George Grove was probably correct in holding that the greater strength of the phrase in the symphony suggests that it was the later of the two. We agree with you that the use of the label 'Irish' is to be deprecated, because it suggests to uninformed hearers an Irish quality or significance that the work does not possess.

L. W. N.—The three chants you send contain one or two errors; for example, the consecutive octaves in the treble and bass in bars 4 and 5 of No. 1; otherwise they are quite respectably written. But they seem to us to say nothing new—as might be expected in a double chant written to-day. But why do you inflict them on your choir and congregation? (The word 'inflict' is yours, not ours, the only difference being that we mean it and you don't.) Go ahead with your efforts at composition, but do not imagine that because you have managed to turn out a decent hymn-tune or chant you are justified in publishing it, or in having it sung at your church.

M. I. D.—We doubt very much whether you will be able to obtain the diploma without the help of a teacher. You say you find it impossible for financial reasons to pay for lessons, but as you tell us that you have about forty pupils, we think you should somehow manage to squeeze out fees for a few lessons for yourself. If, however, you are determined (or obliged) to continue working unaided, you had better obtain the syllabus for the next examination, and work assiduously at it. Even then it would be well for you to arrange for at least one consultation lesson with an expert before you decide to submit yourself for examination.

R. G. H.—(1.) The question is vague, which no examination question ought ever to be. We take it to mean that you should study the work in such a way as to enable you to discuss it in relation to other works of the composer and to his period. This will involve the questions of style, idiom, technique, &c. (2.) We doubt if you will find a book on the structure, analysis, and criticism of melodies. This is the kind of information you should absorb naturally in the course of your other studies. Besides, melodic structure can be seen, if not at a glance, at all events with a little trouble; and if you can see it, surely you can proceed to analyse it.

J. H. J.—(1.) Certainly you are not too young to have your voice trained. Nearly five years have passed since it broke, and as you are already singing you may as well sing under proper guidance. (2.) We cannot suggest some 'popular melodious songs' for your use, as we know nothing of your voice and capabilities.

AMBITIOUS.—Here is another vocalist anxious to obtain engagements. To whom should you apply for an audition? you ask. Try a few concert agents. (You will find all their addresses on the front page of the Saturday issue of the Daily Telegraph), or, better still, go to a first-rate teacher of singing and pay him a fee for his candid opinion on your chances as a public performer. Unless you are really very good, do not enter the profession. Continue to sing as an amateur, picking up an occasional modest engagement as often as possible.

R. S.—Your hymn-tune is not bad for a first attempt, but it is not a good tune. The melody is never very strong, and it fades out entirely in the last line, suggesting rather a feeble tenor part than a good treble. We do not think it is 'worth while to have a few copies printed,' so we do not go on to suggest how much they would cost. Your harmony is tolerably correct and good, but the tune says nothing that has not already been said many times before.

N. F. M.—We doubt if there are any opera companies needing soprano singers. The supply is probably greater than the demand. Your best course is to write to the Carl Rosa or other touring company, and ask if it will be possible for them to give you an audition. But first you should obtain a good deal of experience in amateur operatic societies. There must surely be several in or near your large town.

MALE ALTO.—In 'Slumber, beloved,' from the Christmas Oratorio, you may well cut some of the da capo. Thus, after the second section you may omit the opening symphony in part, or even entirely. At bar 17, on the minim F natural, go to the minim F, thirty-two bars later, and continue to the end. The closing symphony may also be omitted.

P. D.—(1.) The G sharp minor Fugue in Book 1 of the 'Forty-eight' calls for expressive playing, and this, we think, will include both the qualities which you seem to regard as opposites, i.e., breadth and quiet sensitiveness. There is no 'correct' way in playing fugues; there are some that even lend themselves to entirely opposite methods, and to great diversity of pace and power.

E. E. D.—For your lecture on 'Great Hymns of the Christian Church' consult the historical preface to the last edition of 'A. & M.' and Julian's 'History of Hymnology.' If these are out of your reach, obtain Prof. James Moffatt's 'Handbook to the Church Hymnary' (Oxford University Press, 7*s.* 6*d.*), which is a mine of information of all kinds conveniently set forth.

F. W.—(1.) You do not say whether you propose to study with a teacher or not. If so, leave the choice of text-books to him. If not, write to us again. (2.) See paragraph on p. 1111 concerning library facilities.

F. C.—Yes; as an addendum to our reply last month concerning the relative standard of A.R.C.O. and L.R.A.M., we agree that the former requires the higher standard of musicianship, but that the latter demands more brilliance in playing technique.

R. K. A.—We do not know of any articles that have appeared in England concerning Krenek's opera 'Jonny spielt auf.' We have an idea that we saw one in an American journal, but we have forgotten which.

J. C. AITKEN.—Apparently there is no book specially devoted to a historical account of English organ music. You will have to dig out your information from a variety of sources.

HIBERNICUS.—The idea of a gramophone lending library has been tried, but we understand it was found to be unworkable, for reasons that will be evident on reflection.

A. M. B. H.—Messrs. Novello publish several albums of Brahms's songs with English words, which we think will meet with your needs.

D. B.—Decidedly the diploma for L.R.A.M. is the higher of the two.

In our last issue, 'Amateur' inquired as to the whereabouts of a lending library of text-books. Mr. Cyril J. Mitchell kindly writes to suggest that 'Amateur' should communicate with the Librarian, the Central Library for Students, Galen Place, Bury Street, W.C.1; or (better still) if there is a branch of the County Library in his neighbourhood, to ask if the local librarian can obtain such text-books as he requires.

A correspondent has tried in vain to obtain the examination papers of the Cambridge Mus. Bac. of the years previous to 1926; can someone tell him where he is likely to get what he wants? Any replies will be sent on to the inquirer.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The distribution of Diplomas by the President, Prof. E. C. Bairstow, to the successful candidates for Fellowship and Associateship will take place on Saturday, January 18, at 3 p.m. An address will be given by the President, after which Mr. Harry Goss-Custard, organist of Liverpool Cathedral, will play upon the College organ the following pieces selected for the July examination, 1930:

FELLOWSHIP

Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Op. 57 Stanford
(Stainer & Bell.)

Slow movement from Quintet, for pianoforte and strings, in E flat ... ... Schumann
Organ arrangements, edited by Martin, No. 1. (Novello.)

Sonata in G major, No. 6, last movement only, Allegro ... ... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Book 5, p. 159; Augener, p. 606, Peters, Vol. 1.)

ASSOCIATESHIP

Choral Improvisation, 'By the Waters of Babylon,' Op. 65, No. 12 ... Karg-Elert
(Carl Simon.)

Choral Prelude, 'In dir ist Freude' ... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Book 15, p. 45; Augener, p. 971, Peters, Vol. 5, No. 34.)

Members and friends are cordially invited. No tickets required. H. A. HARDING
(Hon. Secretary).

Eleven hundred choristers took part in a Hymn Festival at Belfast Cathedral on October 29, the conductor being Mr. Hubert Middleton, organist of Ely Cathedral, with Capt. C. J. Brennan at the organ.

ALEXANDRA PALACE ORGAN

This famous old Willis instrument, now re-built and modernised by Messrs. Henry Willis, will be re-opened on Saturday, December 7, at 8 p.m. Mr. G. D. Cunningham will give a recital; and the Lord Mayor will preside, supported by a number of distinguished musicians. On the following Sunday afternoons (8th and 15th), at 3, recitals will be given by Mr. Reginald Goss-Custard. It is hoped that sufficient support will be forthcoming to enable the authorities to revive the Sunday afternoon recitals that were a popular feature before the war.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY SPECIAL CHOIR

On December 9, at 8 p.m., the Westminster Abbey Special Choir, with the Abbey Choir, will sing Bach's Magnificat, Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, and Motets by Weelkes and Charles Wood, &c. Admission is by ticket, which may be had on application to the Secretary, Song School, The Cloisters, Westminster Abbey. (Enclose a stamped addressed envelope.)

SCHOOL OF ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC

The second Annual General Meeting will be held at St. Sepulchre's Church, Holborn Viaduct, on December 10, at 5 p.m. There will also be a special service at 8 p.m., at which the president, the Archbishop of Canterbury, will preach, and the choir will be formed of members of affiliated choirs.

The Derby Organists' Association has passed a resolution protesting against the action of the Derby Daily Express in sending a critic on a series of visits to churches in the town, and publishing in connection therewith articles headed, 'What is wrong with Derby's Places of Worship?' We agree with the protest on every ground put forward by the Association, and we add a further point as to the injustice and desirability of such articles. Choirmasters to-day are working under great difficulties. Without a complete inside knowledge of the difficulties peculiar to each of the churches visited, no critic can write fairly. It might well happen that the worst service, and therefore the one that called forth the most adverse criticism, is to be heard at a church where the organist is doing hard work under handicaps known only to himself. There is much in the Church music of to-day that calls for improvement (though on the whole things are decidedly better than they were fifty years ago), but the way to reform is not by means of articles in the daily press based on an isolated visit, and written without knowledge of local conditions.

The flourishing town of High Wycombe, having recently installed an organ in its Town Hall, has now done what some much larger places similarly endowed fail to do: it has appointed a Borough Organist. The first holder of the post is Mr. Harold Helman, who came from Retford in the summer to take up the position of organist and choirmaster at the Parish Church. We are interested in this item of news, because it reminds us that, when visiting Blackburn a few weeks ago and seeing the magnificent King George Hall, and trying the splendid Rushworth & Dreaper organ therein, we were astonished to learn that there was no borough organist, and no regular service of recitals. The population of Blackburn is 126,000; that of High Wycombe, 25,000. One doesn't expect to find Buckinghamshire showing Lancashire the way in matters of this sort.

At St. Mary's Church, Bury St. Edmunds, on October 19, seven hundred singers, drawn from about thirty churches in the diocese, combined in a Festival service. The Canticles were sung to plainsong, and the anthem was Bach's 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' and Thiman's 'O Strength and Stay.' Dr. Sydney Nicholson conducted, and gave an address on Church music. The organist was Mr. E. P. Hallam.

A presentation has been made to Dr. Hubert W. Hunt, organist of Bristol Cathedral, as a token of esteem on his having received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from the Archbishop of Canterbury. The gift took the form of a cheque and the robes of the degree, and represented contributions from the Cathedral organizations, musical societies, schools, Freemasons, and other local bodies. Warm tributes to the work of Dr. Hunt were paid at the presentation ceremony by the Lord Mayor of Bristol, the Sheriff, Sir Ernest Cook, and others. In his reply Dr. Hunt mentioned that, although he had been organist at the Cathedral since the early 'eighties,' he had never once been absent through illness.

A happy example of co-operation is given by the service held at Portsmouth Cathedral on October 23, when the choirs of Portsmouth and Guildford Cathedrals combined in a performance of practically the whole of the programme that was sung at Westminster Abbey on July 8 by a large force drawn from various collegiate and cathedral choirs. An exception was the anthem, 'Lord, let me know mine end,' by Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, organist of Guildford Cathedral. Mr. Hugh Burry conducted, and Mr. Reginald Pease played organ solos. The service was announced to be repeated by the two choirs at Guildford Cathedral on November 13.

A recital of organ and choral music by Parry and Stanford will be given at St. James's Church, Muswell Hill, on December 11, at 8 p.m. The programme will include two of Parry's 'Songs of Farewell,' Stanford's Magnificat in C, and his anthems 'And I saw another angel' and 'Glorious and powerful God,' &c. Weekly recitals (Saturdays at 5.45 p.m.) on the three-manual Harrison organ are given by Mr. H. A. Bate, the organist of the church, from whom a booklet of programmes may be had.

At Christ Church, Woking, on October 24, eleven choirs from parish churches in the district joined forces in a festival service, with Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts at the organ and Mr. H. Scott-Baker conducting. The Canticles were sung to Walmisley in D minor, and the anthem was Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.' Mr. Sowerbutts opened the proceedings with a recital, and at the close was sung a Te Deum composed for the occasion by Mr. Scott-Baker.

Mr. H. V. Spanner will give his usual half-yearly recital of pieces in the current R.C.O. syllabus at the National Institute for the Blind, 224, Gt. Portland Street, on December 4, at 3 o'clock. Admission is free. As the organ is a replica of that at the R.C.O., the recital should be of special value to candidates for the forthcoming examinations.

The Newcastle Bach Choir sang three Bach Cantatas (Nos. 130, 170, and 30) at King's Hall on November 2, preceding them with Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus.' Miss Helen Anderton was the soloist, and Dr. W. G. Whittaker conducted. The Yorkshire Post describes the performances as ranking with the finest ever given by the Choir.

At Ripon Cathedral on November 9 six hundred singers from thirty-three churches in the diocese joined in a Festival service. The canticles were sung to Stanford in C and the anthems were Bach's 'God, my King' and Alcock's 'When the Lord turned again the Captivity of Sion.' Dr. C. H. Moody conducted.

Evidence of the keen interest in choralism was shown in the fact that well over three hundred choirmasters have attended at each of Dr. C. H. Moody's two lectures at Dundee on choir-training and conducting, given under the auspices of the Dundee and District Musical Competitions' Association.

Messrs. Norman Beard & Hill & Sons, have rebuilt the fine old organ at St. Laurence Jewry, and the re-opening took place on November 8, Dr. Stanley Marchant being the player. The regular Tuesday mid-day recitals (1.0), have now been resumed. We hope to say something further about the organ soon.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung at the Wesleyan Methodist Church, Chester-le-Street, on November 3, the occasion being the annual Choir Festival. Mr. J. P. Stephenson was organist, Mr. A. Kellett pianist, Mr. R. Young orchestral leader, and Mr. R. Peacock conductor.

The second annual Festival of choirs in the Rural Deanery of Lyndhurst affiliated to the School of English Church Music took place at Lyndhurst Parish Church in October, three hundred singers from ten churches being present. Dr. Sydney Nicholson conducted, and gave an address.

Mr. B. Vine Westbrook has retired from the post of organist and choirmaster of St. George's Church, Perry Hill, Catford, after thirty-five years' service. The occasion was marked by the presentation of a gold watch and a cheque to Mr. Westbrook and a Pyrrex dish to his wife.

Messrs. Hunter & Son have erected a new organ in the Presbyterian Church, Upper Richmond Road, Putney—a two-manual of twenty-one speaking stops. The opening recital will be given on December 12, at 8 p.m., by Mr. C. H. Trevor.

Messrs. Brindley & Co. have installed a new organ in Sutton-cum-Lound Parish Church. The opening recital was given by Mr. Harold Helman, whose programme included the Allegro, Intermezzo, and Finale from Widor's sixth Symphony.

The Leicester Bach Choir, conducted by Dr. Gordon Slater, gave a Bach recital at the Cathedral on October 27, the programme including the eight-part 'Sing ye to the Lord,' and 'The Spirit also helpeth us.' A string orchestra played several Cantata Sinfonias.

At Johannesburg Cathedral a new organ has just been dedicated. It was built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, and erected by Messrs. Cooper, Gill & Tomkins. It is a three-manual (choir and solo combined) of fifty-one stops.

An organ screen and seat, erected at St. Anne's Church, Birkenhead, as a memorial to the late organist, Mr. J. Millward Hughes, was dedicated by the Bishop of Chester on October 27. Prominent features are statuettes of St. Cecilia and a surpliced choir-boy.

The 'Creation' was sung at Station Road Primitive Methodist Church, Barnoldswick, on October 20, conducted by Mr. J. W. Harrison, Mr. George Bullock playing the organ.

A new organ, built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, has just been installed in Woolton Road Presbyterian Church, Liverpool—a two-manual of fifteen stops and fourteen pistons.

The annual carol recital at Southwark Cathedral will take place on Saturday, December 28, at 3 p.m. Admission is free, without ticket.

Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung with orchestral accompaniment at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday, December 3, at 6 p.m. No tickets required.

Carols will be sung at St. Mary Aldermary on December 2 and 9 at 6 o'clock. The Rev. Dr. G. R. Woodward will give a short talk.

'The Archbishop of York tapping the foundation stone with the Bishop of Barking.'—Caption in Daily Paper.

This is of course preferable to the Archbishop of York tapping the Bishop of Barking with the foundation stone.—Punch.

THINGS WHICH MIGHT HAVE BEEN EXPRESSED MORE COURTEOUSLY

'The Vicar returns home after a month's holiday. We look forward to seeing him much improved in every way.'—Punch.

RECITALS

Mr. Alan Burr, Cromer Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Solemn March on 'Southwell,' C. C. Palmer; Epilogue on the 'Old Hundredth,' Farrar.

Mr. Vernon Butcher, Holy Trinity, Broadstairs—Two Trios, Reger; Three Pedal Studies, Karg-Elert; Rhapsody in C, Heathcote Statham.

Mr. A. C. Edwards, Holy Trinity, Aberystwyth—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Intermezzo in D flat, Hollins; Carillon in E flat, Goodhart; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi; Two Hymn-Tune Studies, Palmer; Finale (Sonata), Reubke.

Mr. G. F. Guyll, St. George's, Belfast—A Handel programme: Concertos in A, F, and C minor.

Dr. Herbert Hickox, St. George's, Ramsgate—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Trio, Bach; Sonata No. 11, Rheinberger; Allegro in G, Dupuis.

Dr. Harold Rhodes, St. Matthew's, Northampton—Allegro (Sonata in G), Elgar; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Guilmant; Chorale Prelude, Parry.

Mr. W. Hardwick, Farnworth Congregational Church—Overture to 'Athalia,' Handel; Evening Song, Bairstow; Rhapsodie No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry.

Mr. Clifford Roberts, St. John's, Hove—Triumphal March and Prelude ('Sigurd Jorsalfar'), Grieg; Entrata, Canzona, and Finale quasi ritorna (Partita in E), Karg-Elert. (Grieg songs and violin solos by Mr. W. E. Diplock and Miss Eileen Plante.)

Mr. Leonard Foster, St. Clement, near Eastcheap, E.C.—Pastorale, Franck; Allegro maestoso (Sonata in G), Elgar; Prelude in B minor, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Sonata No. 1 and Finale (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger.

Mr. A. M. Henderson, University of Glasgow—Symphony No. 4, Widor; Sarabande Grave, Couperin; Sinfonia from 'God's time is the best,' Bach; Finale-Andante, with Variations, Handel; Four Chorale Preludes, by Bach, Brahms, John E. West, and Karg-Elert.

Mr. Leon Forrester, Trentham Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fugue (Sonata), Reubke; Chorale Prelude, 'Narenza,' Macpherson; 'The South Wind,' Rowley; Pastorale, Hollins.

Mr. W. E. Cave, St. Ann's, Manchester—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Concerto in D minor, Stanley; Sonata in A minor, Borowski.

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Mary-le-Bow—Fugue on B A C H, Schumann; Adagio and Allegro, Galuppi; Tempo di Rigaudon, Tranquillamente ed espressivo, Andante con Moto, and Allegro festivo e brillante, Karg-Elert.

Dr. Bernard Jackson, Boston Parish Church—Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger; Air (French Suite, No. 4), Bach; Allegro marziale, Bridge.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Preludes on 'Eventide,' 'Martyrdom,' and 'St. Cross,' Parry; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Introduction and Variations on 'Hanover,' Lemare.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ernest Barnes, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, East Sheen.

Mr. J. C. Clarke, organist and director of the choir, St. John's, Mentone, Riviera.

Mr. Willis Grant, choirmaster and organist, All Souls', Bolton.

Mr. George A. Hardcastle, choirmaster and organist, Parish Church, Morecambe.

Mr. W. John Maybray, choirmaster and organist, All Saints', East Sheen.

Mr. D. L. Southcombe, choirmaster and organist, Union Church, Westminster Road, W.7.

Mr. Alexander W. Stark, choirmaster and organist, St. Saviour's Parish Church, Hampstead, N.W.3.

Mr. Bernard Wiltshire, choirmaster and organist, St. Luke's, Victoria Docks.

Letters to the Editor

THE I.S.M. AND PROPRIETARY COLLEGES

SIR,—Mr. W. R. Anderson's letter re the above will do good, but it generalises too much. Can he define 'Bogus College'? Many people confuse this with 'Proprietary College.' It is high time this confusion was cleared up. The principal musical conservatoriums in the world are 'proprietary,' and it is proprietary institutions which have led the way in democratic musical education, of which musical examinations are a part. They, like all other institutions, start as private bodies, secure a measure of recognition through incorporation, and perhaps go further and get a Royal Charter. Trinity College, London, was, I think, the first of these, and the Royal College of Organists another; the London College of Music (Incorporated) is another.

There are others doing splendid work in London—work which the Royal Academy and Royal College, with their high fees, could not touch. Of these three the London College of Music, established for forty-two years, has the largest number of candidates to its credit. Its requirements, the list of test-pieces, &c., and its list of examiners comprising thirty-two University graduates in music and five with F.R.C.O. or L.R.A.M. diplomas, and these for Great Britain only, are a sufficient guarantee of its high standard. As one having an intimate knowledge both as teacher, local secretary, or examiner in connection with the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the L.C.M., I know what I am writing about. Personally speaking, I should like to see for all colleges:

(1.) An age limit for diploma holders;

(2.) The abolition of gowns and hoods except for University degrees.

As one having also an intimate knowledge of what the organization of a profession means, I would point out that:

(1.) Parliament will not recognise any self-constituted body or bodies as being entitled to speak for the whole of the profession and professional institutions unless they have been consulted and have consented to be so represented;

(2.) All vested interests will be recognised.

We have only to follow the history of the organization of other professions to know that the musical profession will have to go on similar lines.—Yours, &c.,

'MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O., L.MUS.T.C.L.'

[We sent the above letter to Mr. Frank Eames, the general secretary of the I.S.M., whose reply is below.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—I have to thank you for giving me an opportunity of replying to your correspondent, 'Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., L.Mus.T.C.L.' His arguments cover a wide ground, but, with the exception of one mis-statement of fact, only those which are concerned with the principle involved need attention, for if the principle is a right principle, then details are only of subsidiary interest, and do not, and cannot, affect the main question at issue. (In defining the principle I will use the term 'proprietary examining body,' which is accurate, in preference to 'bogus college,' which is colloquial and sometimes inaccurate.)

The principle may be briefly stated as follows:

A profession is distinguished from other occupations by reason of its public responsibilities—therefore the profession can recognise and support only the public activities of those institutions having a like responsibility. Institutions or companies registered under the Companies Acts as of limited or of unlimited liability, whose profits are distributed by way of dividend, bonus, or otherwise by way of profit to the shareholders or members, have no public responsibilities, and their public activities therefore cannot be recognised by the profession.

Your correspondent would seem to accept this principle, judging from his brief summary of institutions which have (he states) secured a measure of recognition through incorporation. He mentions 'Trinity College, London, and the College of Organists,' and then he adds, 'The London College of Music, Incorporated, is another.' But the London College of Music is most decidedly not another. It is registered at Somerset House as an unlimited liability company. It is not incorporated by licence of the Board of Trade with permission to omit the word 'Limited' from its title, but is registered under the same conditions as any other commercial trading company of limited or of unlimited liability. That registration gives it the status of a proprietary college and not of a professional institution.

Having corrected that mis-statement of fact, I add that what follows does not refer to any particular proprietary examining body; the arguments are related to principles alone, and therefore I do not propose to refer to your correspondent's statements as to the academic distinction of certain examiners, &c., because these are details which do not concern the main question.

He states, 'Parliament will not recognise any self-constituted body or bodies as being entitled to speak for the whole of the profession and professional institutions unless they have been consulted and have consented to be so represented.' I agree; but commercial trading companies are not professional institutions, and if and when the profession through this representative body should appeal to Parliament to remedy this grave professional abuse, it will have the active support of every professional institution in the country. That is already assured.

He states that 'all vested interests will be recognised.' If by this he means that, should Parliament, in its wisdom, decide to give legislative sanction to this widely-accepted professional principle, the status quo ante will be recognised, and those commercial trading companies which have a supposed vested interest will be allowed to continue their activities, then he is living in a fool's paradise. Governments are sometimes foolish; they are rarely mad.

In conclusion I would say this. I have an intimate knowledge of professional conditions in all parts of the country, and it is not a matter of opinion, but of fact, that the activities of the proprietary examining bodies have definitely lowered the general status of the professional musician, and, therefore, his professional remuneration. Of even greater importance are (1) the shameless exploitation of the artisan and working classes, the very strata of population which it is the first duty of any Government or profession to protect, and (2) the unabashed prostitution of professional ideals, ideals which must form the basis of any advance in professional conditions.

The remedy is with the profession, for, as a body corporate, it is the only body which can deal with this question. It has a duty to the public; it has a duty to its own members. These responsible duties are becoming increasingly recognised, but the larger our membership the quicker and more effectively shall we be able to deal with this cancerous growth which is sucking the life-blood and sapping the vitality of the professional body-politic.—Yours, &c.,

19, Berners Street, W.1.

FRANK EAMES.
(General Secretary, I.S.M.)

WHAT IS A PROFESSIONAL MUSICIAN?

SIR,—My friend Mr. Alec Robertson is, I have no doubt, like me in this: he dislikes equally being called a pessimist and an optimist. We musicians have to be realists to-day, if never before. The profession consists, as he says, of a surprisingly large number of elements—teachers of all sorts, conductors, critics, executants; and therein we see the need for flexibility of method and organization, a flexibility which it seems to me the revitalised I.S.M. has excellently sought, and, so far as a short time can show, found. In passing, may I assure Mr. Percival, of Bath, that the I.S.M. does not carry the T.R.C. in its pocket, or vice-versâ? I do not know where he can have got the completely wrong notion that the one controls the other. However, doubtless the secretary of one or other of these bodies will be writing to you to reassure Mr. Percival, who, as one who takes the trouble to think before he acts, will then be warmly welcomed back to the reconstructed fold.

WHY NOT A TRADE UNION?

No one imagines that the I.S.M. can act like, say, the Union of Railwaymen; but it is emphatically a body united for defence and construction, and I see no reason why it should not think of itself as a trade union. We all want better hours, better pay, and better holidays and pensions; then we can give better service. Surely it is the essence of trade unionism to work together for the betterment not only of one's own conditions but for the furtherance of one's good influence (through the particular trade or art one plies) upon the world. No sensible person thinks, because the words 'trade union' are used, that we intend to push our own interests selfishly, against those of other people. That is merely the inevitable bad side of the unions, which will only be exorcised as mankind gets a fuller conception of the purpose for which we are all in this world.

BACK UP THE I.S.M.

What Mr. Percival and my friend Robertson and I and all musicians can do to put the profession where it ought to be, in public esteem and private efficacy, is to join the I.S.M., or, if already a member, to make themselves acquainted with the manifold activities of this very live organization, in which I personally now feel more confidence than at any other time in my whole professional life I have felt in any organization. Of course, the way is long; who expects salvation in a hurry? Maybe it will not even come in our time. Our job, as I see it, is to put each his and her shoulder to the wheel. The cart is so big that there is room for everybody to shove. In some directions it will take a dickens of a lot of moving; nobody knows that better than I, who have been sweating at it for twenty years, and am willing to go on for twenty more.

GET TOGETHER AND WORK!

Whilst I edited the Music Teacher I had uncommonly good opportunities of finding out things both about the genuine and the bogus professional man, and those years, with three times as long in general practice, convinced me that there was a great and stirring work to be done if the profession would ever awake to it. There are, believe me, no insuperable obstacles to setting most professional men in the way of better conditions of life and work; but it means hard labour for all of us, and years of effort, because we begin so late, with all kinds of handicaps. I believe, however, that even in ten years we shall make surprising and joyful progress. Only fools under-estimate the difficulties. Wise men see them, plan for them, and, united, fight them. I already scent great doings; the absurdly neglected grievances of genuine teachers and performers (most urgent of all, the teachers) shall not await alleviation much longer; of that I am certain. It is not a bit of good standing about and groaning; the first necessity is for us all to get together and work; and if we cannot bring ourselves to join in one body politic, then the several societies must so far come together as to enable us to assure the high powers that any deputation that stands before them really represents the great bulk of the profession that teaches and performs and writes about music.

ROOM FOR ALL IN THE I.S.M.

Our societies' differences are surely not so great as those of religious sects; there is no reason in the world why the I.S.M. should not find a place for every type and degree of professional man and woman. It is now doing that, and if those at present outside it would only inform themselves fully of its plans and determinations there would be few, I am persuaded, who would feel able to stand away from its efforts for the betterment of all. If the personal note may be allowed, I would add that I speak purely as a private member who for long considered it necessary and wise to join no professional society, because for some years it happened to be my journalistic business (as I saw it) to criticise them all. Nowadays I happen to be independent of teaching and organ-playing, and so I am likely to make but slight demands on the I.S.M.'s labours for my professional benefit. But in pre-war days, when I had to rely on such work for my living, I should have been extremely thankful for the kind and measure of help that the I.S.M. is now year by year increasingly able to offer young musicians; and if I were beginning afresh I should, I hope, have the sense to join it straight away.

EVEN JOURNALISTS

Even the journalist may hope for good from its efforts. There may come a time, for instance, when the musical journalist's trade union will be able effectively to protest against a daily paper's appointing as its music critic a man who is not in any real sense a musician. That sort of thing is so natural to some of our thunderers that I do not expect them readily to be convinced that it is nonsensical; still, this is one of the little jobs that the I.S.M. may like some day to tackle when it has set the professional house in order in matters that concern much more important persons than music critics. (The curse of the untrained critic, of course, is not merely his taking the job of a trained man; he damages the public mind, and that gives infinitely more anxiety to musicians, who care for that mind.)

I joined the I.S.M. because it seemed to me that its aims were so clearly those which I had always cherished; and it has reconstituted itself so ably and cheerfully that it surely deserves the support of every musician, whatever his line of work. Do not let us allow any cynicism to spoil our work for and with it. There are always a few people who ask, 'What 's the use?' in a dismal way about any strong, hard effort against evil. We have no room for cynics (not that I imagine Robertson to be one; I know his brisk and admirable activities too well).

A PROFESSIONAL DEFINED

He asks what is the position of the man who teaches other subjects. I cannot now occupy much space in defining this, as the Council of the I.S.M. has done; but it may be said that the definition of a professional musician is one of practice, not of attainment. No one, however eminent, can be a member unless he is a practising musician, either solely occupied in that work or primarily engaged as a musician. A music master in a school, for example, counting as such on the staff, sometimes teaches other subjects for short periods; the Council has defined the limit of time which that non-musical work shall occupy, in order that the teacher may be rightly reckoned primarily a music teacher, and so be eligible for membership. He must, in a word, be a specialist in music, and only incidentally, and for short periods, a teacher of other subjects.

In passing, may I emphasise the point that not every worker in music is admitted to membership? Applicants have to give full particulars of their training, attainments, and position. There are Associate (Student) members, as well as those in full practice; so no earnest and properly equipped worker, however young in experience, need hesitate to apply; but the I.S.M. is not a rag-bag society in which ill-equipped or incompetent people can shelter. The time may come when the profession will be able to demand from anyone who wishes to enter it a flexible but high standard of preparation and skill. The T.R.C. does that, of course, but no one is bound to join it, and it will take time before authorities engaging teachers will get into the habit of asking, as a necessary preliminary, if they are registered. The I.S.M. does not accept people who are not judged to be reasonably qualified musicians; but it does not demand a standardised musical education from its applicants. Lots of men who have never taken a diploma are the equals in teaching power of those who can sport half the alphabet; and gown and hood are no criterion of a man's working ability and influence for good in his profession. However, all these things must be, and daily are being, settled by the general body of members of a great professional society, through their elected Council.

THE DEMOCRATIC SPIRIT

At the first I.S.M. meeting I attended I was struck by the spirit in which the members of the Council spoke; they all recognised that the Society exists for its members, not the members for it; and in its laws and decrees it must be guided by the best wisdom of the majority, as expressed through their elected representatives. I know no other democratic and satisfactory way of getting at the mind of a profession. I am sure that the secretary of the I.S.M. will welcome the inquiries of musicians who really want to do the best for their fellows and themselves. 'Test it and try it before you buy it' is as sound here as it is in business.

I am glad to have Mr. Robertson's backing in my plea that musicians shall, as he puts it, 'wake up to the realities of a changing world.' The first pinch that should have awakened us was given years ago, before the war, and many pinches (some extremely unpleasant—not least the pinch of poverty) are being applied now. If we are, as Mr. Robertson insists, 'wholly unorganized in any effectual sense,' is it not high time to awake out of slumber? And what better method is there of coming to active life than of joining a society that is advancing by leaps and bounds?

WHAT DO I GET?

Those who cannily (and quite rightly) ask, 'What am I going to get for my money?' will find on p. 27 of the current Music Journal (the joint organ of the I.S.M. and the B.M.S.) an earnest—a little note that will cheer many; it announces that on October 12 the I.S.M. Council agreed to establish an insuran[illegible] scheme for the benefit of members, that its details [illegible] been agreed, and that it will come into operation [illegible] ary 1, 1930. That is a sample of real progress; [illegible] there are plenty of other good things to come, I believe. That the I.S.M.'s policy is being widely approved, let the list of new members in this same issue of the Journal attest. I counted up to a hundred and thirty odd, and then lost count. How many societies, of any kind, can show such mounting progress? These people are not all paying their guineas for mere piety's sake either; they are too good business folk for that. They know that it is going to be worth their while. So do I, but thousands don't yet realise that. 'Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party,' and the advanced aid post is at 19, Berners Street, W.1.

The musician has had the patience of Job (or of the ass) in the past; if he will now add a fighting courage, and a determination to get together with his fellows, he can with certainty predict a better time for his successors than he has had; and that, perhaps, is sufficient justification—and reward—for the struggles of any human life.—Yours, &c., W. R. ANDERSON.

London.

REGISTERED TEACHERS

SIR,—Most of us can understand the good intent which lies behind the desire to acquaint the general public with the fact that there are responsible and irresponsible music teachers; but does not the idea of registration according to the dictums of a particular body carry the germ of academic sterility? In the medical profession we find a dogmatically organized body controlling the life and work of medical men. This certainly helps to protect the public from quacks, but it also hampers Truth. In consequence, we find a certain able physician struck off the list of registered doctors because he was public-spirited enough to say that many children's lives were wasted by unnecessary operations for adenoids. We have a man like

Sir Herbert Barker unregistered. Similarly, I myself, as a teacher, would quickly find myself outside the possibilities of registration because I would have a prospectus printed saying that the usual academic teaching of pianoforte-playing is stupid and useless; and this would be made worse by my stating that I consider it nonsense to insist that a pianoforte teacher should bother himself with paper work. His business is to teach playing, and the student should study theory and harmony with another teacher. I can imagine the Registration Council telling me that I am incompetent or a quack because I teach playing and ignore theory and harmony; my contention that playing is one thing and theory of music another would be sternly denounced, even if I admit that the student should learn both subjects, but from separate teachers.

Further, there is the likelihood that the Registration Council would indicate possession of certain diplomas as indications of a qualified teacher. A few of us have the opinion that rigid teachers' diplomas do not necessarily indicate first-rate teachers—that teaching being as much an art as a science, no diploma can indicate a great teacher. Diplomas are religiously granted for certain standards of proficiency. Except in the case of one unfortunate unrecognised college, nothing is said of the commercial business of conducting examinations; but the bold, bad outside teacher can imagine that if a self-constituted registration council insists upon its recognised teachers holding diplomas, there will be a nice commercial benefit for the institutions issuing such diplomas, however honourable the latter may be.

A teacher will get along by his or her results, and deal with exactly the type of pupil for whom he or she is best suited. Some teachers teach nothing and charge low fees. Others do little more than cram pupils for examinations. A few teach the arts of playing or singing and waste no time over examinations, thus saving the pupil money and losing opportunity for the cheap self-advertisement of '—— exam. succ[illegible]'—to which might well be added, 'and the stud[illegible]ne the better for them.'—Yours, &c.,

'HERETIC.'

SIR,—You are usually very fair, and I am hoping you will publish in your next issue this letter from one who is forced to look from the other side of the fence and take the crumbs that fall by the wayside. Few are in the front row as examiners engaged in all-around-the-world trips annually at high fees. (Who pays?) This outcry has, I am told, been in existence for about forty years. Many of the opposition have passed beyond, and meanwhile the colleges referred to entrench stronger than ever. And why not? They suit the pocket and can never be shot out of existence, any more than Woolworth's or Eastman's; forgive the comparison, but it matters little. We have no more recognition.

How ludicrous for Mr. Anderson to talk of dynamite and Scotland Yard! The four hundred members per month to the I.S.M. at one guinea per head looks as if there were a large bid for fees going on, and I am inclined to think there is another money-making concern coming into existence. How lovely to throw stones! No, Mr. Anderson, we cannot organize; the Church cannot afford to pay us properly, and we are bound to teach for a fee that suits the pocket of the pupil, or starve.

Perhaps Mr. Anderson can tell us what he will do with the thousands his scheme would put out of action; and, furthermore, when the time comes—if ever it does—what the thousands are going to say and do when their livelihood is threatened. This perhaps he has overlooked. I am inclined to think the opposition looks on quietly in pity, many of whom are highly-gifted and qualified men and women, well known to the musical profession. Who is Mr. Anderson?—Yours, &c.,

'REGISTERED TEACHER (T.R.C.).'

[Mr. Anderson is a well-known musician and journalist; a Mus. Bac. and L.R.A.M.; and a former editor of The Music Teacher.—EDITOR.]

TUNERS SHOW THE WAY

SIR,—No doubt your readers will be interested to learn that the Pianoforte Tuners' Association issues registration certificates to tuners. These certificates remain the property of the Association, and must be renewed each year. It is hoped that by this means we may protect the public and profession itself from bogus and fraudulent tuners. Therefore, we trust that your readers will support the registered tuner as a means to further this method of assuring a reasonable standard of efficiency among tuners.—Yours, &c.,

23, Soho Square, W.1. A. W. STOKES.
(Hon. Gen. Secretary.)

'OPS. v. TITLES'; AND PROFESSIONALS AND AMATEURS

SIR,—I am a 'professional' musician and hold no brief for the amateur, but I think there is another view of the question than that put foward by 'General Practitioner' in your September issue.

After more than thirty years' experience, both in this country and abroad, I must say that I should place greater faith in the judgment of certain gifted and capable amateurs personally known to me than in that of a good many holders of musical degrees and diplomas whom I have known in this country.

Think of the brilliant Russian trio of amateur composers, Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin, and Cui. Who would not rather be such an 'amateur' as one of these than a 'professional' of the type most common here?

In the case of nine-tenths of our 'professionals' the leading ambition in early life is to secure certain 'letters after the name' which will enable their possessors to begin to 'take in' pupils, either privately or in a school. Life for these people eventually becomes a daily grind of lesson-giving, leaving them no time for personal cultivation or practice of music. Therefore we frequently find that in a neighbourhood honeycombed by 'professional' teachers of music the best actual performers are amateurs, who are often people of means and leisure enough to have time and opportunity to cultivate their musical talents.

I am only one out of many musicians who hold that a very important object of musical training to-day should be largely to increase the numbers of capable and intellectual musical amateurs and to restrict 'professionalism' to those who are really unusually gifted. One can't help viewing with dismay the numbers of inefficient 'professional' teachers of music, chiefly women, who teach for a pittance and, by cheapening the market, make things more difficult for the accomplished teachers.

Then, again, there is no wonder that 'the intolerance of some amateurs for professional opinion' is increasing when the general level of professional attainment in this country is so indifferent. No musician, however eminent, is entitled to pose as a musical pope, delivering his judgments as it were ex cathedra, and sternly repressing any contrary opinion. In literature, the leading dramatist of our age, Mr. Bernard Shaw, often voices opinions on the platform and in the press that are totally disagreed with by some of the profoundest admirers of his plays. And you, Sir, have yourself been known not to see eye to eye with Mr. Ernest Newman upon any and every occasion. What a dull old world this would be if no one were ever permitted to disagree with 'professional opinion'!

Let us take a very common kind of amateur musical criticism—that of the man in the pew who freely pulls to pieces the rendering of the music at his church. Is there not a general lament among the clergy that it is extremely difficult to secure the services of a really good choirmaster? Yet in the earlier stages of any young church musician's career, organ-playing is made the chief feature of his training, and is the principal subject of the musical examinations for which he enters. In actual life, the church musician finds out that the vast majority of clergy and laity attach infinitely more importance to the quality of the singing of the choir than to the quality of the organ-playing. When our musical amateur goes to church and hears either bad singing or bad playing, or both, and knows that the man in charge is a 'professional,' is there any wonder that there follows on his part 'an arrogant dismissal of the trained man's hardly-gained competence'?

One knows only too well that it is very easy, especially in the provinces, for a 'professional' musician to become narrow and groovy. Your leisured and well-to-do amateur can, and often does, go for spells abroad, sometimes chiefly with the object of hearing some unfamiliar kind of music. Personally, I always thank my lucky stars that I lived for some years in a foreign city where each winter season I heard a good deal of French, Italian, and German opera. The experience is something to think of during one's present existence in a large, grey, almost entirely commercial and supremely inartistic Scottish seaport. Opera may not be the ideal art-form for everybody, but it is thoroughly enjoyed by a great many British people, and is the leading form of musical recreation on the Continent. At any rate it is not a negligible thing, but I have happened upon quite a number of professional musicians in Great Britain who have never seen opera and know very little or nothing about it. A Musical Competition Festival may have its thrills, yet one would hardly compare it in general interest to a good performance of 'Tristan and Isolde,' of 'Carmen,' or even of 'William Tell.'

'It is difficult enough,' says 'General Practitioner,' 'for a professional man to make a living to-day, without having to bear . . . impudent criticism by those who know little or nothing about music.' Well, one has never gathered that it was easy for anyone except a 'star' to make a living by music! Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Wagner, and Franck did not find it easy, at all events. And they one and all had to put up with quite a lot of 'impudent criticism,' but we do not find that they were at all daunted or crushed by it. If the great gods were not immune from 'impudent criticism,' what can lesser folk expect? Most of us, I fancy, if we are honest with ourselves, will admit that a full dose of criticism, even if it reached the pitch of 'impudence,' has done us good.—Yours, &c.,

FREDERICK KITCHENER.

[Mr. Kitchener's argument is weakened by its being based on a comparison of the best type of amateur with one of the poorer types of professional. Of course we should all like to be amateurs of Rimsky-Korsakovian stature rather than what we are—mere ordinary professionals with a hard job to make two reluctant ends meet! But what has this to do with the subjects under discussion, the chief of which are the right of the unqualified amateur to dictate to the qualified professional, and the fancy labelling of classical works in the interests of lazy dabblers?—EDITOR.]

OPS. v. TITLES

SIR,—I have read with interest the various opinions expressed in your paper on this subject, and was struck by a remark by 'Feste' in your October issue that somebody considered the middle section of one of Chopin's Nocturnes to suggest 'an old man walking through a graveyard at midnight.' On looking through the Nocturnes, it is quite obvious that the only possible one to which he refers is Op. 15, No. 1; Op. 15, No. 2; Op. 32, No. 2; Op. 37, No. 2; Op. 48, No. 1; Op. 48, No. 2; Op. 55, No. 1; Op. 62, No. 2; or perhaps one of the others. I should, of course, have mentioned Op. 37, No. 1, but, as every child knows, the middle section of this piece represents monks in the garden of their religious establishment—an idea that has been so much more aptly and beautifully expressed by a so much more gifted composer in our own day.

As this happy example given by 'Feste' has borne so much fruit, I would suggest that the protagonists of titles should submit to a simple test to be run on the lines of the competitions that are a feature of our wider circulating dailies. Let them, in effect, publish a list of 'approved titles' for standard works with no clue as to the parcel to which the label is to be tied, and let the Great British Public (Musicians' Section) submit their lists of appropriate 'Ops.' against the said labels. If desired, a key-list of the works dealt with may be published—say a hundred works in all—and all we have is the ridiculously easy task of putting the apt title to the ambiguous Op. After all, if they are going to write titles to our music they certainly ought to write, as it were, in double counterpoint.—Yours, &c.,

P. J. R. KING.

79, Grantchester Meadows,
Cambridge.

A CORRECTION FROM WITNEY

SIR,—The following notice appeared in the Musical Times for November:

'WITNEY.—The Choral Society, which has been inactive for three years, is to be revived "with Mr. E. Tarrant as conductor."'

It ought to read, 'with Mr. F. Wade as conductor.' Mr. E. Tarrant is the president only.

Might I be allowed to add that the Witney Orchestral Society has also been revived, after a lapse of many years, under the same conductor?—Yours, &c.,

F. WADE.

50, Marston Street,
Oxford.

'DICTION'

SIR,—With reference to your reviewer's note on the discussion at the Musical Association's meeting regarding the correct use of the word: when doctors differ who is to decide?

However, curiosity prompted me to look up 'diction' in my old Chambers's Dictionary, and I found it to mean: 'Manner of speaking or expression; choice of words; style' (italics mine). Dr. Findlater, the editor, in 1885, apparently did not then consider Dr. Rootham's use incorrect, whatever may be its proper meaning now.—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE DIXON.
(Lieut.-Colonel.)

St. Bees,
Cumberland.

SIR,—Your reviewer thinks that 'diction' has come to stay. Possibly; but it seems a pity that musicians should needlessly lay themselves open to a charge of illiteracy. The best substitute, in my opinion, would be 'speech in song,' which exactly expresses what is required, and is the title of the best book on the subject that has come under my notice. But if a single word is essential, what is wrong with 'enunciation'? The 'New English Dictionary' (Murray) defines it as 'the uttering or pronouncing of articulate sounds; manner of utterance.'—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions,
Twickenham.

BACH'S DESCENDANTS

SIR,—Since the publication of my 'Origin of the Family of Bach-Musicians' I have made discoveries which afford a more definite answer than has hitherto been forthcoming to the question: Are there any surviving descendants of Joh. Seb. Bach? By his two wives Bach had, in all, twenty children, seventeen grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren. The issue of his first marriage presents no difficulty—it did not survive the second generation. Of the thirteen children of his second marriage only two had issue: Elisabetha Juliane Friederica Altnikol, whose line ended with the death of her only great-grandchild on July 8, 1818, and Johann Christoph Friedrich Bach, who died at Bückeburg on January 26, 1795. With the latter's descendants alone the problem of Bach's surviving issue is concerned. To display the table in full is unnecessary; its salient points are revealed in the following diagram:

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH,
d. July 28, 1750;
m. Anna Magdalena Wilcken.
Elisabeth Juliane Friederica,
d. August 24, 1781;
m. Johann Christoph Altnikol.
Issue extinct on July 8, 1818.
Anna Philippina Friederica,
d. August 23, 1804;
m. Artillery-Lieut. Wilhelm Ernst Cotson, Bückeburg.
Issue extinct before October 20, 1852.
Wilhelm Friedrich Ernst,
d. December 25, 1845;
m. (1) Charlotte Philippine Elerdt;
(2) Wilhelmine Susanne Albrecht.
Wilhelmine,
m. Ludwig Albrecht Hermann Ritter, Eberswalde.
Augusta,
d. February 12, 1858, at Eberswalde.
2 children (no issue).
Christine Luisa,
d. October 1, 1852, without issue.
2 sons and 3 daughters dead without issue by October 20, 1852.
Johann Christoph Friedrich,
d. January 26, 1795;
m. Lucia Elisabetha Münchausen.

The last of Bach's descendants to bear his name was his great-granddaughter Augusta, who died at Eberswalde, the home of her married sister Wilhelmine Ritter, on February 12, 1858, and was buried four days later (February 16) in the Sophienkirchhof, Berlin, where her mother was still residing. Her aunt, Christine Luisa, had predeceased her on October 1, 1852, at Bückeburg, the last survivor (as appears from official documents recorded at Bückeburg, October 20 and November 23 and 25, 1852) of her father, Johann Christoph Friedrich Bach's children. From these documents we learn, moreover, that on October 20, 1852, Augusta Bach and her sister Wilhelmine were the only survivors of their grandfather, Johann Christoph Friedrich Bach, seeing that the issue of their aunt, Anna Philippina Colson, was already extinct in Bückeburg. Thus, after October 20, 1852, the only direct descendants of Joh. Seb. Bach were his two great-granddaughters, Augusta Bach and Wilhelmine Ritter. Augusta died unmarried on February 12, 1858. Wilhelmine meanwhile had become the wife of Ludwig Albrecht Hermann Ritter, Kreisrichter (district judge) at Eberswalde, a town some thirty miles north-east of Berlin. In their issue (if any) alone Bach's blood still flows. So far the Berlin registers reveal no information.—Yours, &c.,

C. SANFORD TERRY

CHOPIN'S PRELUDE No. 20: E FLAT OR E NATURAL?

SIR,—In reference to the above, the following words are to be found on p. 1003 of the November Musical Times: 'Battles have been fought over the last E of bar 3. Natural it should, of course, be—as in this reprint.'

As a quite humble amateur I suggest that the question of E flat versus E natural can hardly be settled, one way or the other, in conjunction with the words 'of course.' That this is the case is surely proved by the fact that battles have been fought on the question, and that ninety-nine per cent. of the copies published have the E as E natural. Questions of errors in musical printing—in this case the question of an error of omission—do not arise without good reason.

If the original MS. is not available, then the question can only be approached from the point of view of musical probability, or musical logic.

Bar 1 is in C minor, bar 2 modulates, bar 3 is obviously 'de-modulating'; and on the third beat one surely feels that the return to something which is familiar from recent experience is just about to take place. Yet suddenly—like a bolt from the blue—comes the chord of C major, giving a sense of musical bewilderment.

If, on the other hand, the chord is that of C minor, then one feels that a return to a familiar stepping-off point has been reached, and that from this point the second modulating step is to be taken—this time the vital one into G major, forming the climax peak of line 1. From here, perfectly logically, a return is made to C minor, for the long melodic descent. Thus the G major peak comes from C minor, and returns to C minor, forming a perfectly symmetrical (not a-skew, as it would be with C major on one side and C minor on the other) hinge between lines 1 and 2.

I should much like to know how, when, and where the battle was finally won.—Yours, &c.,

Gilvan, Oreston, Plymouth. HERBERT W. FISHER.

THE ARTS IN REVOLT

SIR,—Mr. Percy Scholes is right enough in objecting to be quoted on hearsay. I am sorry that I so casually and unnecessarily introduced his name. However much Mr. Scholes might admire Stravinsky I ought to have guessed that he would find little admirable in the doings of Lenin.

But Mr. Scholes seems to be wrong in every other detail of his argument.

The fact that his name and mine happen to be also the names of English villages has nothing to do with the deliberate renunciation of their own names by certain artists. That renunciation was a significant and not uncommon thing during one period in the development of Christian art—the period which followed the great mediæval age of communal and anonymous creativeness. It is hard to believe that Mr. Scholes is unable to appreciate what it meant of impersonal spirit when the personality of Giovanni Pierluigi Sante was hidden behind the name of the town, Palestrina; when the personality of Alessandro Filipepi was hidden behind the name of Botticello, the goldsmith to whom the great painter was apprenticed.

I made no attack upon the memory of the late Dr. Eaglefield Hull, who was my friend, and for whose efforts in the cause of music in Britain many of us are deeply grateful. But I cannot without protest allow Mr. Scholes to put a weak and accommodating gloss upon Dr. Hull's published words. A consideration of the ideas expressed by those words belongs to the fifth and last section of my article.—Yours, &c.,

Kilcote, Glos. RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

THE KNELL OF ROMANTICISM

Sir,—Your correspondence columns do not as a rule attract me, my preference being given to those which are remunerated, but there are those who tell me, Heaven knows why, that 'Spes' should not be allowed to spring eternally without retort. The opportunities are not lacking.

To begin with, he speaks of the work of certain young composers as having roots in the past, whilst others, apparently, have been pooh-poohing the past. I am not aware of any music that is not rooted in the past, or of any composers who pooh-pooh it. But I would point out that some music is all root, whilst some shoots forth branches. I would further point out that, incredible as it may seem, the past lasted a considerable time, during which it underwent many changes. People like 'Spes' are free to construe it as consisting of that with which they became acquainted during their impressionable years, but young composers are equally free to turn to its other aspects, or even to its essential mutability. It is a notorious fact that the recent study of the less familiar past has been almost entirely the work of musicians regarded as 'modern.'

I much doubt the authenticity of what appears, superficially, to be advance excerpts from a forthcoming volume: 'Walton and Lambert, or It 's Never Too Late To Mend.' The author of that work would not have fallen into the error of confusing romance and romanticism, the one a poetically emotional quality, the other the exploitation of the emotions. The former we must assume to be a cardinal and eternally operative factor in the art impulse, since it is the chief of the attributes which prompt a man to become an artist when he might be a stockbroker. The latter is a temporary but recurrent phenomenon which invades an art, runs its course—the stages of which are familiar from copious precedent—and returns when the conditions under which it arose are reproduced. Briefly, it is an 'ism, and as such short-lived. If 'Spes' cannot discern that affinities with romanticism play a relatively insignificant part in Walton's 'Sinfonia' or Lambert's 'Sonata,' I am afraid he has ill-chosen his pseudonym, for he is hopeless.

I would advise him not to take too much notice of such Swafferisms as 'mountebankery.' Some months ago a contributor to your columns commented upon the same critic having described as 'ninnies' those who did not see eye to eye with him in the matter of opera. 'Mountebankery' is merely another bloom from the same luxuriant vegetation.

Finally, is it not a little inconsistent to speak of the malign influence of Diaghilev whilst singling out for special praise two young composers, one of whom was indebted to him for his first opportunity, whilst the other owed him one of the earliest, if not the earliest, London performance of his first orchestral work? I could wish that more of our foreign visitors exercised the same malign influence among us.—Yours, &c.,

Edwin Evans.

CHOPIN'S BIRTHDAY

Sir,—I should be glad if any reader of the Musical Times could inform me definitely as to the date of Chopin's birth. By perusing several authorities I get the following:

1. Grove's 'Dictionary of Music'—'born February 22, 1810.'
2. 'Dictionary of Music,' Dr. Dunstan—'born March 1, 1809.'
3. Bonavia-Hunt—'born 1810.'
4. 'Musical Art Forms,' Holmes and Karn—'born 1809.'
5. 'Summary of the History and Development of Mediæval and Modern European Music,' by C. Hubert Parry—'born 1809.'

—Yours, &c., Edward J. Haworth.

'Melrose Bank,'
52, Duke Street, Southport.

JERITZA AND GERHARDT

Sir,—There are at least two things in your November issue that are heartening reading to those of us who for years have been struggling for a genuinely critical standard in the appraisement of singers. First, there is C.'s admirable discussion of Jeritza—which was on the side of indulgence, I think, for I found her production uneven and her upper notes tight and hard and blatant—and the still more admirable exposure of the Gerhardt-infallibility legend by Mr. H. J. Kimbell. As he most properly says, those who propagate this legend are simply showing that they do not know what the art of singing means in its higher reaches.

I have more than once drawn attention, and I have recently done so again in my article on singing in the first number of Milo, to the quite terrible exhibition she gave us years ago when she was a far better singer than she is now, in a Mozart aria. The infallible touchstone that this composer always is of fine vocalisation, line-drawing in vocal tone, style, and phrasing, gave the most conspicuous and complete demonstration of her deficiencies in those departments, and very wisely she has never tried (here, at any rate) conclusions with Mozart again. Equally bad was her showing on the same occasion in Elizabeth's prayer from 'Tannhäuser,' the spirit of which escaped her utterly. I have always commented on her stertorous breathing, aggressively audible in the remotest parts of a hall as large as the Queen's.—Yours, &c.,

Kaikhosru Sorabji.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens,
N.W.1.

[This discussion is closed.—Editor.]

NOT MR. PRING

Sir,—The reviewer of Prof. Sabaneev's 'Modern Russian Composers' assumes that the translation is mine, but that is not the case. I have not seen the book, but imagine it to be an English edition of a volume bearing the same title, which was translated in America by Mr. Judah A. Joffe and issued by International Publishers, Inc., New York, in 1927. At all events, the rather unusual spelling of the Russian names in the publishers' advertisement is identical with that adopted in the American edition, a copy of which Prof. Sabaneev kindly sent me.

With regard to the vexed question of transliteration, I quite agree that there is need for uniformity, and would welcome an authoritative pronouncement. In the Musical Times of November and December, 1917, Mr. Montagu-Nathan and I propounded a scheme which we considered, and still consider, logical, but you, Sir, and most other editors compel me to disregard it in favour of the existing hybrid, partly French, partly German system—if system it can be called—in the use of which every man seems to be a law unto himself.—Yours, &c.,

S. W. Pring.

287, Onslow Drive,
Glasgow, E.1.

'FILL EVERY GLASS'

Sir,—I read with interest Mr. Arkwright's notes on 'The Sources of Some Old English Songs' in your November issue. I think there can be no doubt that the tune known as 'Fill every glass' is French. May I refer Mr. Arkwright to my article on 'French Tunes in "The Beggar's Opera" and "Polly"' in the Musical Times for April, 1928, p. 321? I there showed that the original title of the tune seems to have been 'N'oubliez pas votre houlette, Lisette.' It is printed in two of Ballard's collections—'La clef des chansonniers' and 'Les menuets chantants,' both of which are earlier than the volume of parodies cited by Calmus. That the tune was popular in France is evident from the numerous manuscript copies which exist. It is still popular as the melody of more than one noël.—Yours, &c.,

J. A. Westrup.

'HENN' NOT 'HENRY'

SIR,—May I ask you to correct a slight misprint in your kind review of some songs published by us on p. 993 of your issue for November.

'Two Songs by John Henry Collings' should read Two Songs by John Henn Collins.'—Yours, &c.,

Amen House, Warwick Square, E.C.4.

HUBERT J. FOSS.
(Musical Editor, Oxford University Press.)

[We regret that a number of letters received after November 15 were unavoidably crowded out.—EDITOR.]

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young lady vocalist wishes to meet lady accompanist for mutual practice.—Miss E. MENDES, 41, Cavendish Road, Brondesbury, N.W.6.

Viola player wanted to replace retiring member of string quartet. Occasional pianoforte quintets. Fortnightly practices.—A. R. BARHAM, 63, Cranston Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Pianist (young gentleman) wishes to meet another or a violinist or 'cellist for duet practice. Brighton district.—BM/TNDS, London, W.C.1.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and/or 'cellist for practice of sonatas and/or trios. Within fifteen miles radius of Nuneaton.—M., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist or 'cellist for practice of good music—Beethoven Sonatas, Franck, &c. —L. ARNOLD, 131, Station Road, Finchley, N.3.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist and 'cellist for classical trio practice.—H. J. TYLER, 4, Ray Walk, Leigh-on-Sea, Essex.

First or second tenor wishes to join male-voice quartet. Experienced. N. London.—F. K. H., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet pianist for practice of classical music.—F. C., 10, Browning Avenue, Southend-on-Sea.

Baritone (young) wishes to join other singers in the study of madrigals and other Tudor music. Excellent reader, fair experience, and has access to large Tudor music library.—BM/HNOT, London, W.C.1.

Violinist and viola player wanted to complete trio and quartet. Meet in S.E. London.—L. G. PACKHAM, 6, Ruskin Avenue, Welling, Kent.

Experienced pianist wishes to meet good violinist and 'cellist for practice of trios, concertos, sonatas, &c.—TRIO, c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (male) wishes to meet string players for mutual practice. Sidcup or Eltham districts.—C. W. T., 7, Birchwood Avenue, Sidcup.

Some thirty Mozart autographs were lately sold at an auction at Berlin, representing the rest of the once incomparable Mozart collection of the publisher André, at Offenbach, who more than a century ago bought hundreds of Mozart's autographs from the master's widow. The most precious document now offered was the diary of twenty-nine pages into which Mozart wrote the titles, dates, and principal themes of all his compositions from 1784 to 1791. This unique manuscript could not be sold, however, at the minimum price of 36,000 marks that was demanded. The highest price paid was 16,000 marks for the Violin Sonata in G major. An Aria from the 'Entführung' brought 10,000 marks, the Quintet with glass-harmonica 6,400, the first sketch of Cherubino's 'Cavatina' from 'Figaro,' 2,800, Mozart's copies in score of Bach Fugues, 3,200 marks.

The concert version of 'Carmen' will be performed by the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on December 7, at 7.30. There will also be orchestral items and songs by the soloists.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS: NOTES BY THE GENERAL SECRETARY

INSURANCE

The Council has established an insurance scheme for members, which will come into operation on January 1, 1930. Under the scheme members will be able to effect all kinds of insurances—life, endowment, pensions, sick pay, &c., and obtain a members' rebate on premiums which will be a valuable benefit of membership. The scheme is so framed that, in addition to giving members very tangible benefits, every insurance effected by members will also benefit the Society's Benevolent Fund, or other professional charities. Members will receive full details of the scheme in due course.

MUSIC MISTRESSES' SECTION

The first annual meeting will be held in London on Saturday, January 11, 1930, when the officers and Committee will be elected. Meanwhile the Interim Committee is collecting information with regard to the deductions made by school governors from the fees paid by students for private music lessons in schools. The percentage of deduction varies, from a reasonable to an unreasonable amount. When the information has been obtained and collated, the Committee will advise the Society's Council what is a reasonable percentage deduction, in order that the Council may pass a resolution which will be an instruction to all members for future guidance.

SOLO-PERFORMERS

The Council has established a Solo-Performers' Section for the purpose of promoting the special interests of solo-performers. The Interim Committee (Mr. John Adams, Mr. John Coates, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Léon Goossens, Miss Marjorie Hayward, Mr. William Murdoch, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Harold Samuel, Mr. Cedric Sharpe, Mr. Archibald Winter, Mr. Frederick Woodhouse) proposes to convene a meeting of eligible members at the Great Central Hotel, London, on Sunday, December 1, 1929, at 3.30 p.m. The advantages to be obtained by this form of organization will be apparent to all having experience of the special difficulties and problems which surround the professional practice of solo-performers. Invitations will be issued in due course, and the Committee will be pleased to receive applications for admission to the meeting from those eligible for membership.

COMPOSERS

The Executive has appointed Mr. Theodore Holland (Chairman), Mr. C. Armstrong Gibbs, Mr. Frederick Austin, Mr. Harry Farjeon, Dr. John B. McEwen, Mr. Richard H. Walthew, Dr. Vaughan Williams, to form a 'Composers' Committee' for the express purpose of considering scales of performing right fees payable for the broadcasting of original compositions by native composers, and other matters.

At its first meeting the Committee decided to co-optate Mr. Fraser-Simson.

Competition Festival Record

KEIGHLEY.—The thirty-second 'Summerscales' Festival was held on October 26 - November 2, important choral competitions being held on the opening and closing Saturdays. The chief mixed-voice class brought in only five choirs as compared with twelve last year, but the quality of the singing was of the highest, and the competition very close, the winners, Nelson Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. T. Hartley) being only one mark ahead of York Old Priory (Mr. J. H. Forster). Out of nine female-voice choirs that entered in the chief class Bramley Choir took the first place and Temple Street Choir, Keighley, the second. Colne Orpheus Glee Union (Mr. L. Greenwood) was again first in the chief male-voice class, and Nelson Arion Glee Union (Mr. H. Spencer) second.

NOTTINGHAM.—The twenty-seventh Festival, held on October 23-26, proved as popular as ever. Each of the main divisions of the syllabus—pianoforte playing, string playing, juvenile solo and chorus singing, and adult solo and chorus singing—resulted in a number of interesting competitions, the children's day being particularly successful in every way. In the chief choral competitions held on the last day the head places were taken by Miss Melhuish's ladies' choir from Cleethorpes, Rye Hill and District Male-Voice Choir (Mr. J. Bentall), and Maybank Choral Society (Mr. A. Dutton), the last-named being one mark ahead of Nottingham Philharmonic Society (Mr. W. Turner).

WORKINGTON.—This Festival, held for the sixth time on November 4-6, serves a wide district in which there are many lonely hamlets amid thinly-populated country; here, it is said, the practice of music, in many cases born entirely of the Festival, is growing in an encouraging way. Not only choral singing but folk-dancing is cultivated in out-of-the-way places. A team of children from Eskdale, for instance, carried off two prizes in the folk-dance contests that were held on the first day. Winning choirs in the village choral competitions were Flimby Wesleyan in the mixed-voice section and Dean Choral Class in the female-voice and male-voice sections. Keswick and District Male-Voice Choir (Mr. H. W. Brown) were first in the chief contest, Ireland and Askam the winning Girls' Friendly Society, and Workington Orpheus the winning children's choir. The cup for the best solo singer was retained by Mr. J. W. Barnes, of Workington (tenor).

Other recent competitions have included the ECCLESHILL Children's Festival; that at INDIAN QUEENS, in Cornwall; JERSEY EISTEDDFOD; the MILNSBRIDGE Choral Competition; SKIPTON Festival; that of WADEBRIDGE; and, in London, the KENSINGTON, SOUTHERN AREA and NORTH LONDON Festivals.

NATIONAL MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

Particulars concerning this important event have now been issued. The date is July 5, 1930; the place, the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool; the pieces, Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' Parry's 'There is an old belief,' an own-choice piece, and a sight-test, all unaccompanied. The competition will be open only to choirs who have taken first place in the principle mixed-voice class of an affiliated Festival held between January 1, 1926, and December 31, 1929. Entries close on December 31. It is to be hoped that a competition of this kind will become an annual event, held, turn and turn about, in the North, South, Midlands, and Scotland. The bringing together thus of the country's choral pick would give a great impetus to the Festival movement, and through that to music generally.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The R.A.M. Club, a very flourishing institution with a magazine of its own, held one of its social and musical meetings on Monday evening, October 21, when the Budapest String Quartet—Messrs. Hauser, Roismann, Ipolyi and Son—were the guests of honour. They played two most interesting quartets, one by Ernest Bloch, and the other Dvorák in F major, Op. 96, No. 2. The guests were received by the President of the Club, Lady Cooper, and the Duke's Hall was full to overflowing.

At the students' chamber concert on November 4, Miss Margaret Good gave a remarkably finished performance of the Beethoven Thirty-two Variations in C minor. She has won the Challenge Cup for the best soloist on any instrument at the London Festival for two years in succession, and is a first-rate pianist technically and interpretatively. Mr. Gilbert Vinter is a bassoon student, and is to be commended for writing for his own instrument. Assisted by Mr. R. O. Edwards at the pianoforte, he played his 'Rêverie' in excellent style. The work shows imagination. A student from Birmingham, Miss Constance J. Warren was represented in this well put together programme by a String Quartet in B minor, of which the first movement was played. It shows promise, although the young composer is still groping her way.

The 'Review Week,' which is now such a feature of each term, will begin on Monday, December 2, and end on Saturday, December 7. The programme speaks for itself.

Monday, December 2.
10 a.m. Lecture by Wesley Roberts, A.R.A.M.—'Central Points in Pianoforte Study.'
12 noon. Lecture (in French) by Professor Louis Bourgeois, O.I.—'Les différents caractères de la Chanson populaire française.'
(Accompanist: Douglas Hawkridge.)
3 p.m. Chamber Concert.

Tuesday, December 3.
10 a.m. Lecture by Phillip Cathie, F.R.A.M.—'The Violin—some Hints to Students.'
12 noon. Lecture by Sir Richard Paget, Bart.—'The Origin and Relationship of Speech and Song.'
2 p.m. Orchestral Rehearsal.

Wednesday, December 4.
10 a.m. Lecture by John Booth, Hon. R.A.M.—'Singing—Self-help, Some Aids to Study and Success.'
12 noon. Lecture by Prof. R. Gleadowe, M.A.—'Taste.'
8 p.m. Fortnightly Concert.

Thursday, December 5.
10 a.m. A Short Talk by Miss Katie Thomas, F.R.A.M., about 'The Appreciation and Interpretation of Poetic Literature.'
12 noon. Lecture by George C. Cathcart, M.A., M.D.—'The Art of Breathing in Relation to Voice Production.'

Friday, December 6.
10 a.m. Lecture by Norman O'Neill, Hon. R.A.M.—'Music to Stage Plays.' (Illustrations by Henry Ainley.)
12 noon. Lecture by Professor C. Lloyd Morgan, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S.—'Music and Mind.'
2 p.m. Orchestral Rehearsal.

Saturday, December 7.
10 a.m. A Concert of Elizabethan Music with introductory remarks by the Principal.
12 noon. Lecture by Dan McKenzie, M.D., F.R.C.S.E.—'Music and other Noises.'
8 p.m. Students' Dance.—Reception by Mrs. Ernest Read.

Miss Jean Kemp, who made such a success at her first appearance with the Covent Garden Opera Company at Glasgow in the part of Mimi in 'La Bohême,' will sing Eva in 'The Mastersingers' when the company visits Liverpool.

The last day for receiving entries, fees, and certificates of birth for the Baume (Manx) Scholarship, founded in 1904, is Monday, December 16. This scholarship will be competed for on or about Wednesday, January 8, 1930, and will be awarded for promise in any branch of music by candidates between the ages of fourteen and twenty-two years.

Dramatic performances will be given at the Duke's Rehearsal Theatre on Thursday and Friday, December 12 and 13, at 8 p.m., under the direction of Mr. A. Acton Bond, Hon. R.A.M. The programme will be: 'Puss and Brutes,' by T. E. Ellis (a crook pantomime in five scenes); and 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' (Act 3, Scene 1).

The Sainton-Dolby Prize (sopranos) has been awarded to Gwendolen Embley (Blackburn), May Turtle and Janet Hamilton-Smith being very highly commended, and Irene Morden, Grace Reynolds, Mary Durham, and Bessie Alberta Todd commended; and the R.A.M. Club Prize (trio) to Frederick Grinke (violin), Catherine Rignold ('cello), and Jacqueline Townshend (pianoforte). Margot Macgibbon, Beryl Burridge, and Frederick Jackson being very highly commended. F.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

At the orchestral concerts given by the first and second orchestras, the most conspicuous items were Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto for pianoforte, played by Alec Templeton, Dvorák's 'Cello Concerto, played by Olive Richards, Franck's Symphony, and a Double Concerto for two pianofortes and orchestra, by Arthur Bliss, a former student of the College. This work justified its inclusion in the programme by the diverse opinions it evoked, opinions varying from admiration for its brilliance and the novelty of its form to consternation that in a Concerto for two pianofortes the solo instruments could take so subordinate a share.

The numerous mid-day and evening recitals of the past month presented many characteristics of more than passing interest. Two of the mid-day recitals were chamber-music concerts in miniature; at one of these the Bronkhurst Trio (Marie Wilson, Edward Robinson and Henry Bronkhurst) delighted a numerous audience with Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C major, and at the other Pierre Tas and Leonard Isaacs were equally successful in the Brahms Violin Sonata in G major. The evening recital by three young players under the name of the Sylvan Trio brought into notice many uncommon works for wind instruments; besides pianoforte, flute and hautboy solos, a charming little Pastoral Trio by Alec Rowley and two very intriguing movements by Eugène Goossens were played with great delicacy and finish.

In the programme of the second Patrons' Fund rehearsal of the term on November 15 both composers and artists were represented. The former were Alan Bush (Symphonic Impression for orchestra) and Gerald Finzi (Prelude to a Requiem); the artists were John Mott in a scene from Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' and Jacqueline Townshend in Medtner's Pianoforte Concerto. The orchestra was the New Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Adrian Boult, except, in the case of Mr. Bush's work, which was conducted by the composer.

During the last week of the month the Opera Theatre has been occupied with a performance by the Opera Class of extracts from 'Lohengrin' and the 'Flying Dutchman' and a repetition of Miss Spencer's ingenious ballet 'A Good Solution,' framed in music selected from Handel's harpsichord works, and two performances of the comedy 'Berkeley Square,' by the Dramatic Class.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

With much regret the death of Mr. W. H. Phelps is recorded. Mr. Phelps had been connected with the College for ten years as a teacher of the violin, and his kindly presence and genial smile will be much missed.

The Controller of Examinations, Mr. d'Evry, has returned from an extended tour in South Africa. Further particulars in regard to his visit will be recorded in the next issue.

Major Bavin's lecture on 'Pianoforte Class Teaching' attracted a large audience, in addition to scholars and pupils.

The pupils of Mr. F. J. Gostelow gave a recital of their prowess and met with a most cordial reception.

Miss Dorothy Callender, lately the Bambridge Scholar, also gave an evening recital, and acquitted herself admirably.

An interesting performance was that given by Margaret Caseau and Hugh Brandon (Brisbane Scholar), the items consisting of duets for two pianofortes. They were ably assisted by Lucy Bonner (vocalist).

Valuable prizes have been given by the Principal, the Controller, Mr. Gostelow, and Mr. J. A. Hammond for the students. Particulars will be announced in due course.

The Principal attended distributions at Portsmouth, where a programme of music was performed by scholars from the College, and also at Frome, where Miss O'Brien demonstrated selections from the Pianoforte Examination syllabuses. Dr. Oldroyd represented the College at the annual gathering of the Colchester Centre, where Miss Maud A. Winter delighted the large audience with a pianoforte recital of pieces taken from the syllabus.

The Controller of Examinations, Mr. d'Evry, has had a busy time since his return, and has visited the following centres in connection with their distributions: Brighton, Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, Newcastle, Sunderland, Shields, and Luton. At the Frome and Birmingham centres he was assisted by Miss C. O'Brien with excerpts from the pianoforte syllabus, and her very fine playing of the items excited much applause. There is no doubt that demonstrations of this nature are of the highest value to teachers as well as students.

The College as a school having recognised teachers of the University of London supplied the orchestral music at the installation of the new Chancellor.

The Overseas Examiners for 1930 have been appointed as follows: South Africa, Prof. Granville Bantock and Dr. D. Vaughan Thomas; Queensland, Victoria, and Tasmania, Mr. Charles Schilsky; India and Near East, Mr. C. H. Adolph Mann; New Zealand (North Island), Dr. J. E. Borland; New Zealand (South Island) and Canada, Dr. C. Edgar Ford; West Indies and South America, Mr. C. Egerton Lowe; West Australia and Bombay, Mr. Anderson Tyrer; Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, Mr. Ronald Chamberlain; China, Ceylon, and New South Wales, Mr. Albert Mallinson; Australia and New Zealand (elocution), Mr. Alexander Watson.

At the Queen's Hall concert on December 7 the programme will include the following items: Overture, 'Hansel and Gretel,' Humperdinck; Concerto in D minor for pianoforte and orchestra, Mozart; Prelude to a 'Song of Songs,' Bantock; 'Song before Sunrise,' Delius; 'Cortège des Noces' from 'Coq d'or,' Rimsky-Korsakov; and other orchestral music; Christmas hymns (J. S. Bach); Motets (Palestrina and Arcadelt); and carols (Bax and Warlock).

The usual concert for chamber and choir music will be held at Grotrian Hall on December 11.

London Concerts

DELIUS FESTIVAL

THE PHILHARMONIC CONCERT

The first Philharmonic concert of the season was a part of the Delius Festival, and, if it is not impertinent, one would wish to congratulate the directors of the Philharmonic Society on having made their independence and their ambitions a second, and the success of the Delius Festival a first consideration. Much can be gained by co-operation, while independence leads often enough to the whittling down of available resources. Let us hope the lesson will not be forgotten. We must avoid, if possible, in everybody's interest, a repetition of the situation created by the Schubert centenary, when where'er you walked you heard the 'Unfinished' and the C major Symphonies. The public is not attracted by repetitions of familiar works.

The programme (conducted, of course, by Sir Thomas Beecham) consisted largely of Delius's vocal music—not the least interesting, and not the most obviously successful, of his compositions. The problem, as most people see it, is one of style, and there seems to be a consensus of opinion amongst responsible people that his style is not easily adapted to the purposes of the vocalist. This may be so, but I venture to suggest that the time has not yet come for the expression of any definite opinion on the subject. The listener is at the mercy of the interpreter, and it will be some time before singers are familiar with the peculiarities of Delius's style. Miss Olga Haley, Mr. John Goss, and Mr. Herbert Heyner already showed in their readings a great advance upon any other interpreter, and the success of Mr. Henderson at a latter concert in a very difficult part with which he had long been intimate encourages the belief that in a year or two our opinion of Delius's vocal music will be different from what it is to-day.

The closing scenes of an opera never heard here, 'Fennimore and Gerda,' was, perhaps, the most important vocal item, and left in us all a keen desire to hear the whole. A 'Dance Rhapsody' and the very picturesque 'North Country Sketches' completed the orchestral programme, and the faultless playing of Mr. Albert Sammons revealed once more the gracious beauty of the Violin Concerto. F. B.

SECOND CHAMBER CONCERT

Two of the six concerts of the Delius Festival were devoted to his chamber music. The second, which took place at Æolian Hall on October 23, brought a welcome performance of the String Quartet, which is certainly a better work of chamber music than either of the sonatas which are far better known. The pianoforte offers a fatal temptation to Delius to move in block harmony and leave the string instrument to float vaguely in a diffuse melisma on the surface—as in the first Violin Sonata, played by Mr. Arthur Catterall and Mr. Evlyn Howard-Jones. The string quartet insists on something more contrapuntal, which results in an awakening from the characteristic Delian dream into something really lively and more vigorous. His vocal music stands half-way between the medium which does not suit him and the medium which does—the orchestra. The unaccompanied choral music, such as the two fragments 'to be sung of a summer night on the water' and 'On Craig Dhu,' with its magical ending, offered opportunities which the London Select Choir did not miss of producing by good chording the kind of atmospheric effect which Delius obtains by the spacing of his chords in his orchestral works. The songs for solo voice (Miss Dora Labbette was the singer) were curiously varied; they were taken from every period of the composer's productive life, and showed development as none other of his work shows. The early ones like 'The Nightingale' are 'best-sellers' (except that they have not sold very extensively); in the later ones the melodic line has become more involved (not always to its improvement), while the accompaniments which were sometimes positively commonplace in the earlier songs have become subtly expressive and altogether stronger. F. H.

THE 'MASS OF LIFE'

The performance of 'A Mass of Life,' which concluded the Delius Festival, will be remembered as one of those rare occasions when nothing disturbs for a moment the even flow of a first-class rendering of first-class music. With good cause critics have protested against the standard of orchestral playing in London (inferior to the Manchester standard), and of choral singing (much inferior to the standard of Lancashire, Yorkshire, or Wales). But Sir Thomas Beecham had assembled for the Delius Festival an orchestra not inferior to any British orchestra I have heard and a chorus which surpassed anything the North can bring forth. This was the greatest surprise of the evening, and it would be difficult to praise too highly Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, who trained the singers and secured from them a reading and an interpretation technically impeccable.

Delius is no more scrupulous in writing for a choir than Beethoven. The score bristles with difficulties. Yet on this occasion difficulties had not only been mastered; they had disappeared. An average listener unacquainted with the score might easily have come to the conclusion that there were none.

Not less admirable was the performance of the soloists—Miss Miriam Licette, Miss Astra Desmond, Messrs. Tudor Davies and Roy Henderson. They are all known as able and experienced artists, but nothing that they have done in the past would lead us to expect the perfect measure, the insight, they revealed in the subtleties of Delius's art and style. The chief burden fell to Mr. Roy Henderson, and to him is due in consequence the greatest praise. But in less responsible parts the others also sang as if they had been taught and inspired by a prophet. F. B.

PHILHARMONIC CHOIR

The Philharmonic Choir added to the laurels which it had already won by its performance of the 'Mass of Life' a fortnight earlier by an equally fine performance of the B minor Mass at Queen's Hall on November 12. Mr. Kennedy Scott applies his madrigalian technique to Bach whenever possible, and produces thereby a lighter, less massive effect than we are accustomed to expect in Bach and Handel. The earlier fugal choruses of the Mass were all treated in this way with delightful results. It seemed for a moment at the beginning of the 'Sanctus' that he was going to use the same methods for a chorus where weight is certainly needed, but the tempo, it turned out, was not too fast, and the product of weight and movement gave to it an overwhelming momentum. The accompaniments were another excellent feature of the performance, a harpsichord being used for the continuo in solos and duets, the organ in the choruses. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk (who gave up Laudamus Te to Miss Mary Morris), Mr. Bruce Flegg, and Mr. Keith Falkner. F. H.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

The Royal Choral singers were heard in a Wagner programme on November 14—the Grail scene from 'Parsifal' and Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers.' The scheme did not give the choir the best of chances. The long-drawn-out phrases in unison and octaves in the 'Parsifal' extract merely tried them severely without interesting the ear overmuch. Let it go to their credit that they came through this test of unanimity and intonation with honours, there being only one slight loss of pitch, and that at the very end. 'The Mastersingers' gave them a better opening, and we had fine sonorous singing, especially in the chorale. The Apprentice choruses were less successful. But we had to wait far too long for this part of the programme. There had been previously an overdose of solo work—Miss Licette and Mr. Boland in a copious helping from Act 1 of 'The Valkyries.' Add to this the solo parts in the 'Mastersingers' extract (Miss Licette and Messrs. Boland and Heming), the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and the Fire Music, and it will be seen that the choir (which surely ought to be the thing in a choral concert) was a mere extra, with little chance to get well warmed up and into its stride. If the Society wants to give a concert of extracts—a good thing to do occasionally—here is a suggestion. Handel is now being 'discovered' and 'revivified.' Let the R.C.S. go back from Wagner to Handel and give us a string of choral plums from the operas and the less hackneyed of the oratorios, mixed with a few solo 'winners,' one of the more brilliant movements from the organ concertos, a group of orchestral pieces of the 'Water Music' type, and a resounding version for organ and orchestra of a couple of marches. This kind of programme would draw a crowd and show off the choir. Their singing is far too good to be wasted, as it was at the Wagner concert. In fact, the most telling bit of choralism in the whole evening was the National Anthem at the beginning, in the fine Elgar version. Mr. Coates conducted. G.

THE ST. MICHAEL'S FESTIVAL

The autumn Festival at St. Michael's, Cornhill, the ninth of its kind given by Dr. Harold Darke and his St. Michael's Singers, was designed on comprehensive lines. Bach, of course, there had to be, and so the last concert was devoted to the B minor Mass. English choral music there had to be, and so there was a programme of unaccompanied music from Byrd to Vaughan Williams, while on the first night, which was Armistice night, there was a special appropriateness in giving Brahms's 'Requiem.' So ample a programme was purchased at the cost of orchestral accompaniments in all but the last concert. Organ, pianoforte, and drums were employed as substitute, with, it must be confessed, unsatisfactory effect. There is no objection in principle to the combined use of instruments which should complement each other's deficiencies, but in practice a good deal seems to depend on the proportions in which organ and pianoforte are mixed, and on the acoustics of the building in which they are played. If the main burden of accompaniment is given to the pianoforte, and the organ allowed to 'fill in' with occasional extra support for the larger masses of choral tone, the result seems to be better than allowing the organ to be the main accompaniment, with, as it were, a few occasional pecks from the percussive instrument. However it may be, St. Michael's Church has smooth stone walls which give a very hard resonance, and the tone of organ and pianoforte never blended.

The St. Michael's Singers are an enthusiastic and hard-working body of singers who get the essentials right in music of several different styles. The first two numbers of Brahms's 'Requiem' were taken much too slowly, but the performance improved as it went on, and a certain roughness both in tone and phrasing became less noticeable. The bleak accompaniment gave no cover to unpolished detail, of which a certain amount was inevitable in so big a scheme. As a matter of fact, rather too much was attempted, for the second programme lasted more than two hours even with some excisions. Actually, most periods of English choral music, Handel excepted, were represented on the two middle evenings, of which the second was devoted to Parry. Byrd's Magnificat (from the 'Great' Service) presents difficulties to choirs trained on Bach. The St. Michael's Singers got nearer to its smooth, flexible style this time than when they essayed it a year or two ago. After Byrd came Purcell ('Jehovah quam multi') and S. Wesley ('In Exitu Israel'). Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor was very well done—the modern equivalent of Byrd being (quite naturally) more readily intelligible to modern singers. Furthermore, the work is essentially a Protestant Mass, and Protestant singers in a Protestant building get straight at its essence without any special effort of imagination. The work had obviously been carefully prepared, and the balance was good and the solo quartet competent. Hence a good performance from every point of view.

Three short new works were given on the same evening. Walford Davies's 'Christ in the Universe,' which had been sung at a Three Choirs Festival, but never previously in London, halts between the old style of cantata-writing and the newer pungencies. The music is not vivid enough for such flaming words, which ought not really to be set at all. Similarly, Dr. Darke's setting of a grim lyric of Sir Walter Raleigh, 'Even such is Time,' was a negation of its text. It would be difficult to find any music crisp enough for the incisive, epigrammatic poem; nothing savouring of Christianity, however modern, will do for it. Dr. Darke's other motet, however, 'O Gladsome Light,' was a much better fit.

The Festival ended with a performance of the Mass in B minor with orchestral accompaniment at St. Margaret's, Westminster.

Beside the evening concerts four organ recitals were given at mid-day on four days of the week by Dr. Darke, Dr. W. G. Alcock, Dr. Ernest Bullock, and Mr. Edgar Cook. At the Wednesday concert Miss Beatrice Harrison provided instrumental variety by playing a Handel Sonata for 'cello with organ accompaniment.

F. H.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

At the first of the Royal Philharmonic Society's concerts, which was part of the Delius Festival, attention was naturally enough concentrated upon the music rather than on the quality of the performance. The second concert, which was given on November 14, made it clear that the Society's orchestra is now about as good as can be. The Society has, in fact, for some little while worked to create a permanent orchestra of the best available players, and got rid of the 'deputy system' long before this much-advertised step was taken by other organizations. The second programme was not, on the face of it, a very attractive one. Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, Liszt's Concerto in A major, Kodály's 'Háry János' Suite, and the 'Symphonie Pathétique' are apparently not works to draw people from their firesides to Queen's Hall on a cold and foggy night. Yet the result was quite one of the best concerts of the many I have heard in this prolific season.

Herr Eugen Szenkár, of the Cologne Opera, who conducted in place of M. Talich, showed a fine sense of rhythm and of phrasing. It may be that he is not a great conductor, in the sense that he can give full value to the more profound masterpieces. This programme did not give one the opportunity to form an opinion on that. But he is certainly a very good conductor, who can obtain from a strange orchestra after only two rehearsals such a beautiful performance of Mendelssohn's Overture, such a finished one of Kodály's amusing Suite, and such a vivid one of the Symphony. The average performances of Tchaikovsky, and especially of this Symphony, have rather blinded the public to the good qualities of his music. His passion needs the rotund style, and the contrasts must be stressed, otherwise nothing but the morbid self-pity is apparent. As to Liszt's Concerto, I cannot pretend to share the admiration of the author of the programme-note—by the way, these notes, like the playing, have been vastly improved—for this shallow, flashy music, but it was impossible not to enjoy Mr. Egon Petri's splendid performance of it.

D. H.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The performance of Brahms's 'Requiem' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen' is an annual event at Armistice-tide at Southwark Cathedral. Mr. Edgar Cook added Byrd's Motet 'Justorum Animæ' at the first of this year's special musical services on November 9. This was well sung, and sounded as it was meant to sound in a Gothic building. The essence of the 'Requiem' was given us, although in mere points of detail—a lack of contrast in the tempi and a lack of power in the alto part—there were defects. Miss Gladys Currie sang the soprano solo better than most sopranos, managing to reconcile the claim of difficult phrasing with a serene expression. Mr. Leyland White was the bass soloist.

F. H.

B.B.C. SYMPHONY CONCERTS

As the B.B.C. symphony concerts at Queen's Hall are primarily intended for the wireless listener, they ought to be judged sometimes from the armchair. As my colleague 'Auribus' was unable to take the programme of November 8 over the air this notice is written by a deputy. Sir Landon Ronald conducted a programme that turned out to be a little less interesting than it promised to be. We had a good curtain-raiser in the 'Oberon' Overture—is there a safer opening card than Weber?—followed by Bach's D minor Concerto for two violins, in which the soloists, d'Aranyi and Fachiri, rather let us down. Perhaps we have come to expect too much from them in this work; perhaps they have played it too often; anyway, there was a good deal lacking in the ensemble; and the orchestral playing also showed signs of looseness. The Haydn Symphony—No. 9 of the Salomon set—was decidedly on the stolid side. The best playing came in Elgar's second Symphony, despite a tendency to underline some passages that some listeners hold to be already sufficiently rhetorical. The brass were given rather too much rope for wireless purposes; hence some blasting.

G.

MR. GORDON BRYAN'S CONCERT

Three young British composers made up practically the whole programme, on October 30, of one of those modern chamber concerts which Mr. Gordon Bryan is in the habit—at least one hopes it has become a habit—of giving during the winter season. They were Mr. Patrick Hadley, Mr. William Walton, and Mr. Constant Lambert. The three of them would be enough, even if we had no others, to dispel any fears one may have had for the continuance of the British school, which looked for a time like coming to an end with the generation of significant composers who have now reached maturity. We are now assured of a succession, and, what is more, of a succession that is not content with merely living on its heritage. It frankly represents a post-war England which, whatever we may regret of the past, we all recognise to be England still. Those who have gradually lived into it and had to adjust themselves to it will, if they are wise, gladly accept as they are the young artists who were born into it, provided that they represent it worthily as these three composers do.

Patrick Hadley, who was born in 1899, is old enough to have one foot in the earlier period. He retains something of that conscious Englishry that would before the war have made British composers scorn an artistic League of Nations. His music still has the insularity that was deliberately cultivated by musicians who felt, and for the moment rightly, that their main task was to redeem a birthright too long undervalued. He has a little of that national defiance which proclaims to young Paris and to old Leipsic that the Cotswolds or the Norfolk Broads are good enough for the Englishman. But he does not adopt the dialects of these or any other districts; he is simply more at home in England than anywhere else, and uses his own language so naturally that he has no need of deliberate 'folkiness.' English words—Byron, Hardy, Keats, and so on—he sets with ease and well. The songs heard at the Gordon Bryan concert, variously accompanied by string quartet, pianoforte quartet, or chamber orchestra, all showed imagination and deftness of handling as well as a certain aptitude for following a poet into his mood without sacrifice of personality. The longest song, Keats's 'Ephemera,' was perhaps the least memorable; one knows that it made an impression, yet finds that impression almost gone a fortnight later. Most poetical, curiously enough, was the prose extract from Thomas Hardy's 'Woodlanders.' Hardy, by sheer intensity of feeling, makes an unforgettable passage of apparently commonplace words; Mr. Hadley succeeds in reinforcing its appeal by letting emotion take musical shape quite simply. 'The Chase' (William Rowley) has gaiety and 'Lullaby' (Richard Rowlands) tenderness; both are fastidiously written.

Walton and Lambert have both had their chances abroad—the former at the International Festivals and the latter with a production by the Russian Ballet. They address European audiences without the least embarrassment, but they remain characteristically English in using the idiom that comes most readily to them and leaving others to understand or not, as they may. An unmistakable ease and lucidity of manner comes of this almost nonchalant unconcern with an audience.

William Walton especially has shown a remarkable purity and elegance of style in his recent work. He was, however, not well represented in Mr. Bryan's programme, though it was interesting to hear what sort of music he wrote at the age of sixteen or so. One is, perhaps, too anxious to escape the reproach of wisdom after the event, and therefore too shy of discovering unusual promise in the Pianoforte Quartet which London managed to leave unheard for ten years; but it did strike one as just as respectable a piece of work as might have been written by any British composer of talent and some scholastic attainment. The Quartet gained a Carnegie prize, which fact may, perhaps, serve to indicate its nature. Would Walton gain one now? Two early songs, 'Tritons' (William Drummond) and 'The Winds' (Swinburne) left one with a far clearer sense of the composer's precocious certainty of touch.

Constant Lambert's Seven Poems by Li-Po, set for voice, string quintet, flute, oboe, and clarinet, are exceedingly pretty miniatures kept in the most delicate water-colour tints and never encumbered by any pretence to read a meaning into this tenuous Chinese poetry that is not there. The new Sonata for pianoforte, on the other hand, is studiedly displeasing. The first and last movements seem to be written in support of the fashionable notion that the pianoforte is a percussion instrument or none at all. Mr. Bryan no doubt played as directed, but even the composer, surely, could not complain that he did not hit hard enough. Disagreeable as one thought much of it, one certainly wants to hear this Sonata again, if only because the slow movement, a Nocturne with distant jazz echoes, struck one as unusually interesting, indeed almost haunting. The fact that Mr. Lambert can, with apparently equal conviction, write two such utterly dissimilar works argues not only an exceptional versatility; it also seems to show that a certain amount of cold calculation is at work in him. Some æsthetic theorising, some purely intellectual preoccupation with style, one gathers, precedes his labours, and whether his inspiration is urged or hindered thereby it cannot be quite spontaneous. Walton, on the other hand, seems just to possess style as a natural attribute to his invention. This comparison is not intended to be invidious, but prompted by interest in both composers; we need creative musicians of all sorts of persuasions, and these two are so often mentioned in the same breath that it is worth while trying to establish the difference between them.

A large team of highly competent performers, whose qualities cannot be discussed in detail, included, apart from Mr. Bryan, Miss Odette de Foras (soprano), Messrs. William Primrose and Pierre Tas (violins), James Lockyer (viola), John Gabalfa ('cello), Claude Hobday (double-bass), Joseph Slater and Anthony Pott (flutes), Léon Goossens (oboe), and Ralph Clarke (clarinet). Mr. Lambert conducted very efficiently wherever there was need.

E. B.

THE HALLÉ ORCHESTRA

The first concert of the Hallé Orchestra's London series at Queen's Hall on November 15 was inspiring to hear. The orchestra is a remarkably perfect instrument, the result clearly of intensive work and sincere application. Berlioz's Overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini,' which opened the evening, was given with spirit and yet with a dignity that might be expected from a Berlioz scholar like Sir Hamilton Harty. The Franck Symphony was excellently played, but the conductor might have served his players better by allowing them more rein. Unintentionally the tempi were troubled and the onward pace held up to make way for a 'personal' reading of what is already a thoroughly temperamental score. The Brahms B flat Pianoforte Concerto went more easily, and was finely played by Mr. Backhaus.

S. G.

THE WEDNESDAY EVENING CONCERTS

The third of the Wednesday evening concerts of chamber music at Wigmore Hall, organized by Miss Myra Hess, Mr. Harold Samuel and others, sadly disappointed expectation. There was an interesting programme of music seldom heard in the concert hall—two duet Sonatas by Mozart (in D major) and Brahms (in F minor) and vocal Quartets by Schumann and Brahms. The Sonatas were played by Miss Hess and Mr. Samuel, who gave a rumbustious performance of Mozart and in Brahms seemed to be more concerned as to who could make the greater noise than to play the notes accurately and together. The slow movement of the latter work was charming enough, but, like the rest, it sounds much better in the more familiar version as a pianoforte quintet. Schumann's 'Spanische Liederspiel,' sung by four soloists (two of them good ones) who did not make a quartet, went very ill, especially as the accompaniment was hard and unrhythmical. Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' Waltzes (Op. 52) made some amends for a disappointing evening. The performance was far from good, but the singers made some attempt to enter into the spirit of the work, and the sheer quality of Brahms's music did the rest.

D. H.

THE MUSIC SOCIETY

M. André Mangeot has re-formed his International String Quartet. The part played by the new combination at their first appearance at the Music Society's opening meeting of its tenth season on October 22 was small, being confined to playing the accompaniments for a string arrangement of Vivaldi's familiar Concerto in D for keyboard, and taking part in a garrulous work of Chausson's called a 'concert.' The most important event was the playing of Hindemith's second Sonata from his Op. 11 by Mr. Frederick Holding and Miss Kathleen Long; the most delightful, Miss Long's playing of a Sonata in C minor by Haydn. It was good to hear Mr. Holding's excellent fiddling again. Hindemith's Sonata is a work of character, but it is early and not typical of his more recent abrupt and pithy manner. These concerts in the comfortable cellar at Westminster are always attractive, interesting, and usually well performed; no wonder the Music Society flourishes. F. H.

CHALIAPIN

Chaliapin sang at the Albert Hall on October 27. His mannerisms as a concert singer were always rather distracting, and he is now exaggerating to a deplorable degree. His audiences spoil him, and he evidently is out of touch with cultivated opinion. It was almost incredible what liberties he took with certain songs. Rubinstein's 'Persian Love-Song,' which he has been known to sing with marvellous beauty and overwhelming effect, he twisted out of shape, like a barbarous boy. He amused himself in and out of season by producing that curious high pianissimo head-tone of his, which is nearly falsetto but not quite. Its production is no more than a trick, though it can be effective at the right moment. Chaliapin on this afternoon experimented with it just as though he had been alone in his studio.

So much for complaints. The great man is still incomparable, the most remarkable artist our generation knows, a man of genius whom it is pettifogging to criticise, though he does things that would simply end another's career. There is genius in his finger-tips, there is above all genius in that voice—such a lovely instrument in point of sheer tone (a viola-like tone) that it is astonishing to hear of anyone who can resist it—quite apart from the versatility of Chaliapin's use of it. Chaliapin makes every other singer seem narrow in range and conventional. Another good singer may suggest Corneille's regularity and propriety; Chaliapin is Shakespearian. He can sing a drawing-room ballad and make us think of broken-hearted Romeo. He can play the fool—and touch the spring of pathetic humanity's folly. He ennobles cheap things; what he does not always do is to sympathise with fine things in quite their own way. He lacks respect for the postlude to 'The Two Grenadiers.' But who else has ever given us the spirit of that piece, the fire and weariness, the craziness and the heroism, like him? C.

GIESEKING

At his recital at Grotrian Hall, given under the auspices of the Pianoforte Society on October 26, Mr. Walter Gieseking produced a new Sonata by M. Castelnuovo-Tedesco. Like so much of the music written by Italians who have abandoned the traditional melodic style of their race in search of new paths, this sounded empty and purposeless in spite of the pianist's brilliant performance. There was, however, much else to enjoy at this recital, for Mr. Gieseking is one of the finest executants of the day, and whether he plays Bach or Beethoven, Rachmaninov or Debussy, it is always a pleasure to listen. He is not one of the intellectual pianists who extract the last ounce of meaning from a late Beethoven Sonata, and whose very gifts carry with them the limitation of inability to play less profound music so well. He is a true pianist, getting all his effects by technical means and not by force of personality or taking thought. At the same time he is not a mere virtuoso, and his fine sense of rhythm alone saves his performances from the reproach of emptiness. D. H.

ARMSTRONG GIBBS

We have few composers who could submit to a one-man programme as gracefully as Mr. Armstrong Gibbs did at Æolian Hall on October 30. The stronger ones would be too personal, the weaker ones too transparent, in the long run. Mr. Gibbs's music calls for no hard listening, not even in the sustained movements of his third String Quartet and recent Violin Sonata. But it never falls below a very good level of textual interest or fails to engage the analytical ear; while for pure enjoyment there is the spring air that blows through it, the fresh scents, the youthful, manly thought. The songs 'sing' well, not only the well-known ones but those whose merits are less obvious. In the Sonata the foundation ideas were not quite to scale, but the writing style was always good. A set of Preludes for pianoforte were the best display of strength. Mr. Gibbs had admirable interpreters in Miss Ursula Greville, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Maurice Jacobsen, and Miss Sybil Eaton as violin soloist and quartet leader. M.

DONALD TOVEY

At his first recital (Wigmore Hall, November 2), Prof. Tovey expounded Beethoven, for it was exposition rather than interpretation of the Sonatas in C sharp minor and A flat, and it was a demonstration of the resources of composition in the thirty-three Diabelli Variations. Must we take this work as seriously as Prof. Tovey and some others of our best critics would persuade us? It is true that there is a side-glance at the ninth Symphony at the end, and it shows immense musical thought, but is not the spirit behind it that of a giant laughingly rejoicing in his strength—'See what I can do with this ridiculous tune!' We were shown by Prof. Tovey with wonderful clarity what Beethoven did with the ridiculous tune, and this seemed legitimate treatment for a set of variations. But similar methods applied to sonatas were less felicitous. We know our 'Moonlight,' and do not particularly need it to be dissected in our presence, and we miss the general feeling of brooding tenderness in the late A flat Sonata if our attention is directed pointedly to the mechanism of the phrasing. There is undoubtedly a place for this kind of study of Beethoven, and Prof. Tovey is uniquely qualified to direct it; indeed we are grateful for the illumination he shed on these typical products of Beethoven's mind, and yet——. F. H.

RACHMANINOV

M. Sabaneev in his new book on Russian composers relates Rachmaninov to the Western tradition in Russia which followed Tchaikovsky and to-day includes Medtner and Tcherepnin. We are to hear Rachmaninov's latest Concerto at the next L.S.O. concert (unless that fickle and timid body changes its mind, as it has so frequently this season). At his recital at the Albert Hall on Sunday, November 3, we had only a couple of his little Preludes (not the C sharp minor, however), which show his pleasant lyrical talent as a composer. M. Sabaneev rightly places him among the minor composers, and no less rightly among the very greatest pianists. There was no trace of ostentation or of effort ad captandum, but, especially in Chopin's B flat minor Sonata, there was a dramatic execution of a dramatically conceived interpretation—the crashing return of the march theme in the slow movement was but the most striking example of this very individual and sincere reading of a hackneyed work. A Mozart Sonata, on the other hand, was all light and rippling, like the surface of limpid water. Everything he played was completely musical, and bore the mark of his own distinction. F. H.

SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Opera singers are rarely at home on the concert platform. Most of them need to be in the grip of stirring events to do their best. To sing at ease they must be in a state of excitement. Some, however, are adaptable, among them Madame Lotte Lehmann and Madame Elisabeth Schumann, both of whom have appeared at Queen's Hall recently. Madame Lehmann's singing of Brahms and Schubert had much in common with her performances of Desdemona. The scrupulous phrasing that made unforgettable the strains of 'Quando narrarir' and 'Dio, ti giocondi' in 'Otello' was turned to the same affecting purpose. At the end of Strauss's 'Traum durch die Dämmerung,' the floating legato was perfectly beautiful. Madame Lehmann has the art of flicking consonants without cutting into the line of tone; she manages to pass from vowel to vowel without sprawling. Then her mental attitude is unaffected, so that even in such melancholy music as Schumann's 'Frauenliebe und Leben' she was not tempted to sentimentalise. An occasional unsteadiness of tone seemed accidental, and did little to detract from the general effect of the recital.

Madame Schumann has a smaller voice and a smaller power of contrast. But in some ways she was the more vital singer. In small songs in particular her techniques and winning ways were captivating. Nature did not fit her for taxing physical problems. The delicious Zerlina was out of touch with Schubert's passion. Her English was, for a foreigner, exceptionally good.

Miss Sophie Wyss, a light soprano, sang at Grotrian Hall. Her programme included charming old songs by William Croft and John Eccles. There was assurance in Miss Wyss's singing. Her tone was flexible, expressive, and—except for pinched high notes in the quick songs—even throughout its range. Miss Wyss's vowels were good, but the weight of tone was too evenly distributed on big and little words to make her enunciation really pointed. More volume was wanted to make a really stirring effect at the big moments.

Miss Tessa Richardson (Wigmore Hall) had the merit of singing some out-of-the-way Bach Arias. There were technical flaws in the course of the long and taxing Cantata, 'Geist und Seele wird verwirret,' but the charming 'O Jesulein süss' was sung with a freely flowing tone and deliciously patterned words. In the Cantata there was tidy enunciation in the recitatives, but stiffness crept in, and the lower register was inflexible. Bach, after all, responds as well as any composer to a swinging, sensuous tone. If his vocal music is regarded as dry by the man in the street, dry singers are to blame. Miss Richardson's performance was not without angularity.

Madame de Konshena sang Russian music at Wigmore Hall. Her performance was odd, but not commonplace. She sang with vivid emotional colouring. She would be half-querulous in recitative and go in for really barbarous tone at the least hint of emotion. Her singing was subject to surprising explosions, and to violent contrasts. Yet she knew the art of singing on the breath, and in easy mood her tone was round and smooth. In a song of Moussorgsky's from 'The Fair of Sorochintsi,' Madame de Konshena's flexibility was astonishing.

Miss Sybil Crawley (Grotrian Hall) sang effectively in a small way. Her tone was, within its limitations, well produced, especially in light French songs.

Miss Esther Coleman began her recital at Wigmore Hall with the Aria 'The eyes of my beloved,' from Handel's 'Teseo.' Here she was below her true level. She was short of breath, and the phrasing was laboured. Miss Coleman then sang some songs by Delius, and the lifting of the voice into a more appropriate position at once altered the character of the tone. The line was firmer, the quality always agreeable. Miss Coleman should guard against thickening the lesser vowels.

Madame Maragliano-Mori (Grotrian Hall) has a gift for building programmes, and a gift, too, for presenting her songs in the best possible light. The programme was arranged to show the development of the Italian song through the centuries. It included a Pastorale by Veracini, and did not disdain Tosti. The singer began with a spoken introduction. Her speech prepared us for the naturalness of her singing. She really sang as she spoke. She is a person of slight build, but this did not handicap her. She straightway found the resonating point where the notes could tell most freely and vividly. At the slightest touch she could set them pulsating and ringing. There was imagination in her singing. Big tone was not to be expected; it was not wanted in such a programme. The singer revelled in finely pointed pianissimos. These were properly supported. Her technical fault was a tendency to close her mouth in ending her phrases, so that occasionally they wavered—yet not to the point of actual loss of control.

So many singers depend for their effects entirely upon interpretation that it was a pleasant change to hear a baritone who was of another way of thinking. Mr. Donald Pirnie, at Æolian Hall, on October 24, decided to appeal to his audience by beauty of tone, and he succeeded. Not once during his recital did he sing a note that jarred; indeed, he was so anxious to avoid shrillness that he more often than not choked back his notes that were perfectly safe and covered by the breath. Now and again a high note was allowed really to come through in a moment of excitement. If the singer had more often indulged in such it would have been a more thrilling evening. Mr. Pirnie, in his search for pegs on which to hang his tone, had not found anything remarkably interesting in the way of songs, but Spanish songs by Obradors and Alvarez were jolly. Mr. Pirnie would have added to our pleasure if he had thought a little more about phrasing without forgetting any of his tone-making.

The programme rather than the singing was the main interest of Miss Phyllis Taylor's concert on October 25 at Grotrian Hall. It contained songs by Vaughan Williams, Delius, Jack Westrup, and Constant Lambert. The singer accompanied herself. She proved herself a good musician, but she lacked adequate vocal technique. 'The Oak-tree Bough,' by Dr. Bairstow, a song in the quasi-recitative style, was one of the most effective; songs which needed more tone were not so telling.

Miss Eileen Bingham (Wigmore Hall, October 25) had an unusually pure voice, very flexible, but with practically no variety of tone-colour. What was lacking in feeling was made up for by lively rhythm and mechanical excellence. Two of Schubert's songs, 'Ach, um deine feuchten Schwingen,' and 'Der Musensohn,' responded to the treatment. 'La chanson du Tambouriner' was also suited to this dispassionate singing. 'The Cockle Gatherer,' from 'Songs of the Hebrides,' sung in Gaelic, was one of the most successful songs of the evening. Miss Joan Singleton accompanied exceptionally well; she is in the front rank of her art.

H. J. K.

Music in the Suburbs

Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Allen Gill) opened the season with 'Elijah' at the Northern Polytechnic Hall. At the Crystal Palace the Dulwich Philharmonic Society (Mr. Leslie Regan) opened with the 'Enigma' Variations and the whole of the 'Song of Hiawatha.' 'Judas Maccabæus' was given by the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies (Mr. Frank Idle) on November 2. 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was performed by the Well Hall Co-operative Society (Mr. L. H. Gaskin) in October, and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean' by the Woolwich Co-operative Choral Society (Mr. T. G. Eastop).

St. Michael's Bach Society, Croydon, sang the Cantata 'O Light Everlasting' and the motet 'Praise the Lord' under Dr. George Oldroyd; the orchestra played the Suite in D.

On October 30 Catford Choral Society gave a concert version of the 'The Bailiff's Daughter,' an opera by their conductor, Mr. A. M. Gifford. The chief part was sung by Mrs. Gifford, who also sang a group of songs by Harry Greenwood, accompanied by the composer.

The Northern Symphony Orchestra (Mr. Harry King) opened its twenty-fifth season at Alison Hall, Harringay, with Tchaikovsky's 'Italian' Caprice and two movements from Beethoven's second Symphony. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi played the Brahms's Concerto at the Bromley orchestral concert, under Mr. W. H. Reed, on October 29.

A series of children's concerts at Wimbledon Theatre, organized by Mr. Robert Mayer, began on Saturday morning, November 2, when Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducted a Concerto Grosso, with Mr. Leon Goossens as oboist, Mozart's Serenade in G, and Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite.

The Coming Season

THIRD LIST

LONDON AND SUBURBS

BARCLAY'S BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Herbert W. Pierce and Mr. D. Marblacy Jones).—Concerts at Queen's Hall on December 10 and March 19: Alec Rowley's 'By the Deep, Nine!'; Bach's 'O walk the Heavenly way'; Leslie Woodgate's 'Hymn to the Virgin' and 'The White Island'; Wallace's 'The Outlaw'; Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Antar' Symphony.

CATFORD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. M. Gifford).—'Joshua'; 'Jephtha'; 'Theodora'; Scotch concert; Irish concert.

GRAFTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. William C. Anscombe).—'Elijah' (November 18); 'King Olaf'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

IBIS MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—Pergolesi's Stabat Mater; Rathbone's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.'

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'Rienzi'; Verdi's 'Requiem'; Woodman's 'Now sleeps the crimson petal'; Julius Harrison's 'The Blessed Damozel.'

POLYTECHNIC CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea'; 'Cavalleria Rusticana.'

STROLLING PLAYERS AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Joseph Ivimey).—(December 5) Ronald's 'Adonais,' Schumann's third Symphony; (March 20) works by Ethel Smyth, the 'New World' Symphony; (May 15) Elgar's 'In the South,' new Violin Concerto by Holbrooke.

CONCERTS IN THE PROVINCES

ARUNDEL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman Demuth).—'Phaudrig Crohoore'; Choral Hymns from the 'Rig Veda'; Delius's 'On Craig Dhu'; Bantock's Incidental Music to 'Judith'; Holbrooke's Pianoforte Concerto 'The Story of Gwyn ap Nudd.'

COALBROOKDALE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Elijah.'

FAREHAM PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Capt. Eugene Spinney).—Parts 1 and 3 of 'Hiawatha.'

LEEDS PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Dr. E. C. Bairstow).—(November 27) Bliss's 'Pastoral'; Armstrong Gibbs's 'La Belle Dame sans merci'; Brahms's 'Alto Rhapsody'; 'The Messiah'; Mass in B minor.

LICHFIELD MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ambrose Porter).—Concert version of 'Carmen.'

MANCHESTER VOCAL SOCIETY (Mr. Harold Dawber).—Concerts in November, January, and April: Brahms's Gypsy Songs; Vaughan Williams's Five English Folk-songs; Stanford's Elizabethan Pastorals; Bantock's 'The Arethusa'; &c.

TAUNTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Herbert Knott).—'The Creation'; Brahms's 'Requiem.'

WALL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ambrose Porter).—Gray's Elegy (Collier).

WHITTLESEY CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Hayward Scott).—'The Banner of St. George.'

IRELAND

SLIGO MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Mark Franklin).—'Acis and Galatea' (November 20); Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night.'

Music in the Provinces

BANBURY.—The Banbury and District Musical Society opened its season on October 15 with a concert by the Brosa Quartet. A recital by Solomon was the programme for the second meeting.

BATH.—A Festival was held on October 22-26 to celebrate the fact that Beau Nash founded the Pump Room Orchestra in 1704. On the first day the newly-decorated room was re-opened with a quartet concert; Dame Ethel Smyth unveiled a tablet to Sheridan's wife, who, as Elizabeth Linley (a sister of Thomas Linley), was a noted Bath singer, and opened an exhibition of old documents and instruments associated with music at Bath; the new director of the orchestra, Mr. Edward Dunn, conducted a concert of music that might have been characteristic of the early Pump Room programmes. Concerts and dance meetings of various kinds followed during the week, largely illustrative of the contrast between ancient and modern.

BLETCHLEY.—St. Martin's Choir and Orchestra, numbering sixty performers, gave a concert on October 31 under Mr. Victor Jones, the chief choral work being Marenzio's madrigal, 'Lady, see on every side.'

BOLTON.—The chief events of the early part of the season were a concert by the Amateur Orchestral Society under Mr. T. Booth, the performance of 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Mozart's G minor Symphony by the Philharmonic Society under Mr. Charles Risegari, the first 'Prom' at the Albert Hall under Mr. T. Marsh, and Gounod's 'Faust' by the Choral Union under Mr. Booth.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Bruckner's seventh Symphony was given under Sir Dan Godfrey at a Pavilion Symphony Concert, and Beethoven's Triple Concerto played by the Pirani Trio. At the next concert Pouishnov played d'Erlanger's Concerto Symphonique and the programme further included the 'Enigma' Variations and Beethoven's seventh Symphony.

BRISTOL.—The Bristol Choral Society opened its season with 'The Song of Hiawatha' under Mr. S. W. Underwood on November 9.——The twenty-ninth season of the Philharmonic Society was opened on November 2 with a programme that included Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony, Debussy's 'The Blessed Damozel,' in which the soprano part was sung by Miss Dorothy Silk, and Healey Willan's 'An Apostrophe to the Heavenly Hosts.' Mr. Arnold Barter conducted.——'Oberon' was given by the Bristol Operatic School on November 4 with Miss Katherine Gotch Robinson and Mr. Leslie Edwards as Rezia and Huon, and Mr. Robert Percival conducting.

BURNLEY.—'Acis and Galatea' was performed by the Municipal Choir and Orchestra on October 27, the soloists being Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. Parry Jones, and Mr. Stuart Robertson. The three principals also sang the final scene from 'Faust.' Other choral items were Bantock's 'A Love Song' for female voices and 'The Fighting Temeraire' for male voices.

BURTON.—The Hallé Orchestra, under Sir Hamilton Harty, played the 'Pathetic' Symphony at the Town Hall on October 29.

BRADFORD.—The first Subscription Concert was a pianoforte recital by Backhaus. At the second, the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty, played Beethoven's first Symphony, Brahms's second, and Tchaikovsky's fourth.——At the Philharmonic Concert on November 10, Mr. Keith Douglas conducted Delius's first Dance Rhapsody, Miss Olga Haley sang 'In a Seraglio Garden,' and Miss Ida Bellerby played both Schumann's Concerto and Franck's Symphonic Variations.——On November 10 Bliss's 'Pastoral' was performed, for the first time in the North, by the Bradford Old Choral Society under Mr. Wilfred Knight.

BRIGHTON.—The newly-constituted municipal orchestra of twenty-seven players under Mr. Jan Hurst gave its first concert on October 16, when the principal works were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony with Frank Merrick's additions, and Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto played by Mr. Arthur Rubinstein. 'Don Juan' and the 'Pathetic' Symphony were played with an augmented orchestra on October 23. Subsequent programmes included the 'New World' and 'Italian' Symphonies. Mr. Lionel Tertis was the soloist at the concert on November 6. He played the Fantasia for viola and orchestra by W. H. Reed. Until the end of March there will be symphony concerts on Wednesday evenings (except Christmas Day) and concerts of an almost equal standard on Friday evenings. ——The Symphonic Players, a band of amateurs and assisting professionals, opened their season on November 2 with Franck's Symphony and Brahms's Violin Concerto played by Miss Isolde Menges. Mr. Herbert Menges conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Central Hall Choir sang madrigals under Mr. T. A. Charge on November 9, and virginal music was played on the pianoforte by Mr. George Plant.——The City Choir gave 'Elijah' for the first time on November 6, Mr. G. D. Cunningham conducting, and deficiencies in the orchestra being filled by Mr. T. W. North at the organ. The contralto, Madame Winwood-Russell, being indisposed, 'O rest in the Lord' was sung by the soprano, Miss Hilda Blake. Mr. Horace Stevens was the Elijah and Mr. Osmund Davis the tenor.——The Choral and Orchestral Union performed 'The Creation' under Mr. Joseph Adams on November 9.——Elgar's A flat Symphony was played by the City Orchestra under Dr. Sargent on October 24. The programme included the Allegretto from the 'Hymn of Praise.' Arensky's Pianoforte Concerto was played by Miss Joyce Rollitt at the concert directed by Dr. Boult on October 27. Mr. Stanley Chapple was the guest-conductor on November 3, with Franck's Symphony and Schumann's Concerto as the principal works. The 'Enigma' Variations were played on November 10 under Dr. Boult.——The London Symphony Orchestra came to the Town Hall on October 25 to play Goedicke's orchestration of Bach's 'Passacaglia,' Liadov's 'Eight Russian Folk-Songs' and well-known works under the direction of Mr. Albert Coates.——Mr. Robert L. Stuart lectured on Monteverdi's 'Orfeo' to the Birmingham Opera Club on October 28.——Madame Suggia and Mr. Egon Petri shared the first Max Mossel concert.——Among other concerts in a busy period was that of the British Trio (Messrs. John Wills, Paul Beard, and Clyde Twelvetrees). They played the Schubert B flat Trio.——The Covent Garden Opera Company was at the Prince of Wales Theatre from November 11 to 16.

CANTERBURY.—At the first of the Winter Concerts the Hart House Quartet played Wolf's Italian Serenade, and Miss Irene Scharrer played pianoforte arrangements of three of Bach's Chorale Preludes.

CAMBRIDGE.—The London Symphony Orchestra, in the course of its tour, arrived here on October 30 and played, under the direction of Mr. Albert Coates, Bach's Passacaglia in C minor, Liadov's Suite of Russian Folk-Songs, and an otherwise familiar programme.

CHELTENHAM.—The Orchestral Subscription Concerts opened their third season on November 4. The City of Birmingham orchestra under Dr. Adrian Boult gave excellent performances of the 'Pathetic' Symphony, 'Brigg Fair,' and 'Till Eulenspiegel.'——The London Symphony Orchestra under Albert Coates came on October 24, with Cherkassky as pianist. A fine performance of 'Don Juan' marked the occasion.——An accession of members has resulted from the efforts of Miss Amy James, the secretary of the Musical Guild. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw gave the first lecture on 'The lesser-known Chorale Preludes of Bach,' and the second lecture was given by Mr. Heller Nicholls on Tchaikovsky and other Russian composers.

CHESTER.—The sixteenth season of chamber concerts opened on October 16 with a recital of old English music by the Chelsea Singers.

COVENTRY.—Under the direction of Mr. John C. Potter the concert version of Carmen' was performed on November 7 by the Coventry Choral Society, the title part being taken by Miss Enid Cruikshank.

DERBY.—At the first concert of the Municipal and County Chamber Concert Committee the London String Players, under Mr. Herbert Menges, gave an interesting programme that included Bach's fifth Brandenburg Concerto, Tchaikovsky's Serenade, Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Mozart's 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' and César Cui's Suite for flute, violin and pianoforte.

EASTBOURNE.—The winter season started on November 1, when the Municipal Orchestra returned to duty from their visit to Newcastle. They played Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Brahms's Violin Concerto, played by Miss Sonia Moldavsky, and Maurice Besly's 'The Barge Afloat.'

FALMOUTH.—The Falmouth Opera Singers, whose record includes 'Orfeo,' 'King Arthur,' 'Il Seraglio,' and 'Prince Ferelon,' gave a performance of Handel's 'Samson,' a work which has probably never been dramatised before. The producers were the Misses M. and E. Radford. Miss Edith Blight conducted, and the chief part was taken by Mr. Geoffrey Dunn.

GLOUCESTER.—Wolf's Italian Serenade and Frank Bridge's 'Two Idylls' were played for the Gloucester Chamber Music Society on October 18, by the Brosa Quartet. Madame Suggia and Mr. Egon Petri played at the first Mossel Concert.

GUILDFORD.—The twenty-second series of subscription concerts under the direction of Mr. Claud Powell opened with a recital by Jean Stirling Mackinlay.

HALIFAX.—Among the works sung by the Madrigal Society under Mr. Harry Shepley were the Sanctus from the B minor Mass, 'The Bells of Berghou' by Sibelius, Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes,' and Elgar's 'Evening Scene.'——The Halifax Orchestral Society, under Mr. J. Nichol Bates, played Haydn's Symphony No. 99.——The Bradford Orchestra paid a visit under Mr. Keith Douglas on October 24, with a programme that included a Pianoforte Concerto by Delius (played by Mr. Edgar Knight) and Stravinsky's Suite from 'Pulcinella.'

HASTINGS.—The Municipal Orchestra, under Mr. Basil Cameron, started its winter season on October 26. Two concerts will be given daily, except on Tuesdays, until the middle of May.

HUDDERSFIELD.—Beethoven's Mass in D was performed on November 8 by the Huddersfield Choral Society, under Sir Henry Coward, the soloists being Miss Isobel Baillie, Miss Ethel Barker, Mr. Trefor Jones, and Mr. Keith Falkner.——At the annual concert of the Holme Valley Choir the programme included a work entitled 'The Starveling Conrad' by Von Hausseger, Delius's 'Wanderer's Song,' Bax's 'Now is the Time of Christymass,' and two part-songs by Bantock entitled 'Lament of the Frontier Guard' and 'Song of the Bowmen of Shu.' Mr. Irving Silverwood conducted, and the singing of the choir was said to be of the finest quality throughout. —— Mendelssohn's 'Scotch Symphony was played under Mr. Fletcher Sykes during the first concert of the Philharmonic Society.——Bartók's first Quartet was played by the Budapest Quartet at a meeting of the Music Club; at the following meeting the Chelsea Singers gave a recital.

HULL.—The Harmonic and Vocal Societies have now been amalgamated under the title of 'Hull Choral Union,' the conductor being Mr. Norman Strafford. The first programme, on November 7, consisted of 'The Seasons' and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'

HITCHIN.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was performed by the Hitchin Symphonic Society on November 5. A presentation was made to the conductor, Mrs. Walter Carling, in recognition of her twenty-five years' work with the Society.

IPSWICH.—The Ipswich Bach Choir opened its season on October 24 with 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure.'—— The second of the Municipal concerts was a recital by the Pirani Trio.——The Budapest Quartet played to the Chamber Music Society on October 19.

LANCASTER.—A new choral society has been formed under the direction of Mr. J. W. Aldous, the first work in the repertory being 'The Creation.' The proceeds were destined for the Lancaster Lads' Club.——Handel's 'Joshua' was given by the Leeds New Choral Society on November 6 at the Town Hall. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Lee, Miss Mary Dale, Mr. Ernest Platts, and Mr. Joseph Green.——Sir Thomas Beecham conducted the Leeds Symphony Orchestra on November 9. The programme included the Entr'acte from 'A Village Romeo and Juliet' and the Suite 'The Gods go a-begging.'——The Saturday orchestral concerts opened on October 26, when Mr. Julius Harrison conducted Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Bach's Double Concerto in C, which was played by Miss Ethel Bartlett and Mr. Rae Robertson. ——The Covent Garden Opera Company were at Leeds during the first week in November.

LEICESTER.—Leicester Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, played Elgar's second Symphony on October 17 at the de Montfort Hall.——The London Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Albert Coates paid a visit to the same hall on the following evening.

LIVERPOOL.—The Philharmonic Society concert on October 22 was conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham, under whom the orchestra gave brilliant performances of 'Brigg Fair' and 'Ein Heldenleben.' At the next concert, on November 5, the conductor was Herr Abendroth. His performance of Bruckner's fourth Symphony greatly interested the Liverpool audience and was the occasion for an admirable article signed 'N. C.' in the Manchester Guardian.——The Liverpool Bach Choir performed the Mass in G minor by Vaughan Williams on October 24, and a selection from Bach's organ works was played on two pianofortes.

MANCHESTER.—The chief events at the Hallé Concerts are dealt with by our Manchester correspondent on this page.——The works played at the recent Municipal Concerts have included Beethoven's eighth Symphony, 'Tod und Verklärung' and the 'Unfinished' Symphony.——At the Brand Lane Concert on November 2 Sir Landon Ronald conducted a Wagner programme.——The six-hundredth mid-day concert occurred on October 29. Mr. Arthur Catterall played Mozart's A major Violin Concerto with a small orchestra from the Royal Manchester College of Music under Mr. Forbes.——At the first of the Bowden chamber concerts on November 9 Miss Jelly d'Aranyi and Miss Adila Fachiri played Spohr's unaccompanied Duo and Milhaud's Duo for two violins and pianoforte.——Students of the Royal Manchester College of Music gave a series of performances of Verdi's 'Falstaff.'

NEWCASTLE.—On November 2 the Newcastle Bach Choir, conducted by Dr. Whittaker, gave Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus' and the Bach Cantatas Nos. 130 and 30. The various solo arias were sung by Miss Grace Scott, Miss Helen Anderton, Mr. Tom Danskin, Mr. Jack Chicken, and Mr. E. J. Potts.——Franck's Symphony was played under Captain Amers at the Exhibition Symphony Concert on October 20. Three days before this a concert had been given by the London Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Albert Coates. Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor was in both programmes.

NORWICH.—Among the visiting artists at the Municipal Concerts were Miss Irene Scharrer, Mr. Eric Greene (tenor), Mr. Albert Sammons, and Miss Nellie Pallisser (soprano). Miss Anne Liddell (contralto) and Mr. Walter Widdop sang at the orchestral concert on October 26, when Mr. Maddern Williams conducted Beethoven's fifth Symphony.

PAINSWICK.—Goossens's Fantasy Quartet was played by the Brosa Quartet at the opening meeting of the Painswick Music Club.

PLYMOUTH.—At the Madrigal Society's concert on October 30 Dr. Harold Lake conducted the first performance of his part-song, 'A Lament for Flodden.'

ROCHDALE.—Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor, Op. 131, was played by the Budapest Quartet at the Rochdale chamber concert on October 22.

SHEFFIELD.—The New Sheffield Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert on October 20 under Mr. Sydney Phasey, the chief work in the programme being the 'Unfinished' Symphony. Beethoven's fifth Symphony and German's Welsh Rhapsody were given at the Society's second concert.

STOCKPORT.—The Vocal Union gave a concert performance of 'Aida' on October 24. Dr. Keighley conducted, and the principal parts were taken by Miss Olive Sturgess, Miss Gladys Palmer, Mr. Francis Russell, and Mr. Hamilton Harris.

SUNDERLAND.—On October 30 the concert version of 'Carmen' was performed by the vocal union under the direction Mr. C. A. Vincent Jones. Miss Constance Willis sang the part of Carmen.

TORQUAY.—The London String Quartet played Ravel's Quartet at the Pavilion.

TRURO.—On November 4 the Cornwall Symphony Orchestra, strengthened by players from London and from the Royal Marines, gave a popular programme under Dr. Charles Rivers. The same programme had been played on the previous day at Camborne.

WAKEFIELD.—The first of five concerts arranged by the London Music Society was given on October 23, when Mr. Keith Douglas and his small orchestra played Beethoven's first Symphony and Ravel's 'Le Tombeau de Couperin.'

WALSALL.—The work chosen for performance by the Gervase Elwes Choir on October 31 was 'Tannhäuser.'

MANCHESTER

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

Up to the moment of writing, the Hallé concerts have yielded the following works unknown to its audiences: Handel's eleventh Concerto Grosso in B flat, Wm. Walton's 'Facade,' Prokoviev's 'Scythian Suite,' Peter Warlock's 'Capriol Suite,' Vaughan William's 'Pastoral' Symphony, Sibelius's fifth Symphony (in E flat), and Sibelius's Violin Concerto (Arthur Catterall). Of these the last three stand forth as possessing character and enduring beauty, and emphasise the lamentably restricted nature of Manchester's outlook on the world of modern symphonic music, that only after ten or fifteen years lapse of time do we get the opportunity of acquaintance.

I well remember Sibelius's visit to Liverpool on or about 1905 to conduct his first Symphony, Richter about the same period having done No. 2 at Manchester. Again, in 1912, I heard the A minor at Birmingham Festival (due for performance here very shortly). At the time named we were at the height of the Strauss-mania and probably under that influence few were able to take the real measure of Sibelius. Probably it would be true to say that only Britishers can in the fullest sense gather all that Elgar's music really means, in the sense that the world of ideas from which his music flows can only be appreciated by those to whom Cotswold sights and sounds carry their full content. So we may conceive that Western civilization cannot appreciate all the natural elements in the art of Sibelius and the emotions which it arouses in his own people. Any conductor too, who tackles the works of Sibelius, especially where his orchestra is well-grounded in the Germanic symphonic tradition, needs to be uncommonly self-reliant, for they do not 'play themselves,' like Mahler's E flat, for instance, and it is immensely difficult, even by the hardest study, to achieve the gradual blend of all the groups and parts and eventual homogeneity of the thematic material of a Sibelius symphony.

The fact may not be immediately recognizable, but he does retain the old standard forms, though the frequent appearance of recitative-like passages and other episodical matter often obscures; he dispenses with all rhetorical appeals, relying solely on the unadorned simplicity of utterance somewhat akin to the oratory of an Abraham Lincoln or John Bright. and this speech reaches us through the medium of instrumentation that grips by its unconventionality no less than by its almost uncouth directness. The vigour and freshness of this utterance as we first hear it in a somewhat magnificent group of notes, gradually acquiring deeper significance as his individual manner of development proceeds, make one conscious of the angularity of its emotional power. Its inspiration comes to you tinged with a certain remoteness and the fascination of a spiritual solitude. The Finnish temperament would appear to be one of considerable gravity and restraint, and with it Sibelius is able in the closing movement to achieve a breadth and dignity in climax by means of an almost imperceptible growth of sonority, and its cumulative power in the section marked Nobile produced an extraordinary sensation.

Anyone who possesses the faculty of being fired by really original music will find in Sibelius greater satisfaction than in almost any other music written in Europe in the last thirty years. Karl Flodin believed him to have written generations ahead of his time. I believe his growth in public esteem will be not dissimilar from that of Brahms, and were Harty to devote his energies to Sibelius as he has to what I have termed the four gospels according to Brahms, there would arise a comparable recognition of his genius and power, for if we believe art to be the expression of the souls of great minds, then we, too, must keep an open one for their message, whatever be the form in which it is delivered to us.

Mr. Arthur Catterall's part in probably the most unconventional violin concerto ever penned was a tribute alike to his discernment as to real values in music and to a mind which held mere virtuosity in subservience to the message of the composer.

I should think more hard thinking and listening was done by the Hallé audiences on the three successive Thursdays, October 24, 31, and November 7 in these Sibelius and Vaughan Williams works than in most seasons put together; they were large ones, too, and the conductor and committee could be in no doubt as to the wisdom of the enterprise of trying this stuff on their audience. Once they 'funked' this trial; probably they are now sorry they had not more faith in its powers of appreciation!

Music in Wales

CARDIFF AND SOUTH WALES.—The University College weekly concerts started with the beginning of the new session in October. At Aberystwyth the programmes have included the Largo from 'Berenice,' in memory of Hubert Pearce (a young and gifted student violinist and teacher), Mozart's Horn Concerto (soloist, Dr. A. B. Thomas), violin and pianoforte sonatas by the classic masters, Brahms's String Sextet in B major (Op. 18), and Mozart's Quintet in G minor.——On October 17, Miss Joan Elwes gave a vocal recital. ——On November 5 and 6 Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' was given by the College Dramatic Club and the Music Department, the parts, for the most part, being sustained by students and members of the staff. The chorus trainer was Mr. W. R. Allen, Mr. Chas. Clements took charge of the 'Cembalo,' and Prof. de Lloyd conducted. The 'Witches' Chorus' is said to have been specially enjoyable.——On November 7 Sir Walford Davies visited Swansea College and gave a lecture-recital on 'Form,' chiefly in relation to the sonata, with illustrations on the pianoforte, and Miss Decima Morgan gave illustrations of form in Welsh folk-song.——On October 28 Mr. J. Chas. McLean gave a lecture to the Cardiff Cymmrodorion Society, reviewing the state of music in Wales prior to 1815, the work of John Ambrose Lloyd (1815-74), and the present-day position.——The National Orchestra of Wales has resumed its autumn and winter activities by means of free concerts in the Museum and subscription concerts in the City Hall and Park Hall. Wagner excerpts, 'Don Juan,' the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music and Brahms's second Symphony are some of the items in a wide range of selections, as well as a concert of representative British compositions which included Vaughan Williams's Five Mystical Songs, the 'Enigma' Variations, and Cyril Jenkin's 'Magic Cauldron.'——On November 11, the London Symphony Orchestra visited Cardiff and gave a concert in the Empire Theatre under the command of Albert Coates; among the items were Tchaikovsky's first Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, played by Cherkassky, 'Don Juan,' and a ballet suite by Glazounov.——On November 13, the Barry Dock Wesleyan Church Choir gave a performance of 'The Messiah,' conducted by Mr. George Crofts.——A fine performance of 'Elijah' was given at Merthyr by the Merthyr Choral and Orchestral Society on October 24 under Mr. W. J. Watkins.——The National Council of Music is busily putting into operation various schemes of music study in different parts of the country, more especially in the distressed areas, and arrangements for the proposed Mountain Ash Festival at Easter are proceeding vigorously.——At Abergwili, early in October, the Bishop of St. David's arranged a two days' conference of clergy, organists, and choirmasters on Church music under the auspices of the Council of Music. Sir Walford Davies gave a series of lectures on team work in church, for choir and congregation and choir and organ respectively, and on ideals in Church music. The renderings of Marbeck's Creed and of the Responses, Psalms, and Canticles were specially studied, as well as the relation of speech and song in Church music.——At the High Schools for Girls at Cardiff and Newport chamber-music recitals have been given during the past month, Miss Harriet Cohen being responsible for a pianoforte recital at the first-named school, while at Newport a violin and pianoforte recital was given by Miss Evelyn Cook and Mr. Chas. Clements, the chief items being Mozart's Sonata in B flat and Brahms's Sonata in D minor (Op. 108), Mr. Clements also contributing a pianoforte arrangement by Myra Hess of Bach's 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring.'

Music in Ireland

BALLYMENA.—It is proposed to form a choir and orchestra under the title of Ballymena Philharmonic Society. The town that supports so flourishing an institution as the Ballymena 'Feis' should, it is considered, be able to maintain a permanent body of performing musicians.

BELFAST.—The season of the Philharmonic Society's concerts opened on October 18 under Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. The choir sang Cornelius's 'Throne of mercy, star of goodness' and Ethel Smyth's 'Hey nonny no,' and the principal orchestral works were Glazounov's Violin Concerto in A minor, played by Melsa, Brahms's second Symphony, and the Handel-Elgar Overture. ——Sir Henry Wood conducted a broadcast Wagner concert on November 1.——Mendelssohn's sixth Organ Sonata was one of the items in a popular concert given by the Corporation at Ulster Hall.——Chaliapin sang for the first time at Belfast on November 4.

DUBLIN.—The Philharmonic Society opened its third season at the Theatre Royal on October 26. Mr. Turner Huggard conducted the choir in Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' and Col. Brase the orchestra in Mozart's Serenade for wind instruments and Grieg's Concerto, played by Mr. Victor Love.—— The Philharmonic Orchestra played for the Royal Dublin Society on November 4 under Col. Brase. Weber's Clarinet Concerto in E flat was played by Mr. Sauerzweig, who had been the oboist during the performance of the 'Unfinished' Symphony.—— Chaliapin sang at the Theatre Royal on November 2.

MUSIC IN SCOTLAND

We regret that we are unable to include our usual notes on Music in Scotland in this issue. They will be resumed next month.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

BALLETS BY MILHAUD

The activity of the three Berlin opera houses is considerable as regards the production of new works and the revival of operas not heard for a long time. Two ballets by Darius Milhaud, given for the first time at the State Opera, met with little success.

'The Creation' treats the sublime mystery of the world's beginning, the coming into existence of the first man and the first woman. For the musical expression of this solemn pantomime the composer finds nothing more adequate than the profane and vulgar sounds of jazz, with its limping rhythms, its sentimental saxophone, and its inevitable recollections of the dance-bar. The tediousness of the so-called action is beyond description.

'Salad' is the title of the second ballet. It is a rather stupid burlesque of circus-life, forcing the poor ballet-dancers to enter into rivalry with the acrobats, the eccentric clowns of the circus, and the variety artists. What little artistic possibilities may be extracted from grotesque music of parody has already been shown in a rather exhaustive manner by Stravinsky, and his many imitators, to whom Milhaud also belongs, have a better chance of doing things worse than their master instead of surpassing him. Milhaud's music is more varied and lively in 'Salad' than in 'The Creation,' but this does not save the barren piece.

After these two ballets, Umberto Giordano's new opera 'The King' was a real relief. It deals with a fairy-tale dramatised with great skill by Giovacchino Forzano, regisseur of the Milan La Scala, and perhaps the most gifted and experienced librettist of our age. Giordano's music surprises the listener by the flow of its melody, its excellent treatment of the voices, which might justly have been expected of this talented Italian composer, but still more by the delicious refinement of its style, by the modern touches added profusely and with good taste. The excellent performance was conducted with great authority by Leo Blech. The success of the opera has been very considerable, and there can hardly be a doubt that it will be given in most German opera houses.

'HANS HEILING'

Marschner's opera 'Hans Heiling,' not heard at Berlin for many years and recently revived at the State Opera, carried off a surprising success. Written a century ago, 'Hans Heiling' must certainly be counted among the dozen or so of German operas between 1800-50 that deserve the epithet of masterpiece. With the exception of a few rather old-fashioned and colourless scenes, Marschner's arch-romantic music shows an astonishing vigour and freshness. It is nearly on a level with Weber's best work, superior to Meyerbeer, and holds its own even in the dangerous neighbourhood of Wagner's earlier operas. It is very instructive to observe how much Wagner, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Nicolai, Lortzing, Cornelius, and Goetz profited from Marschner's genial 'Hans Heiling.' Friedrich Schorr was especially impressive in his powerful rendering of the demoniac, sombre Heiling.

NEW WORKS

A number of new compositions demand attention. Under the auspices of the International Society for Contemporary Music the Pro Arte Quartet from Brussels gave most finished performances of four new works. Jerzy Fitelberg, a young Polish composer, does homage in his second String Quartet to all the modern fads of the day, combining the so-called motoric, unsentimental, and inexpressive music with jazz, excessive linear counterpoint, and atonality. There is much talent and ability in his music, but at the same time æsthetic confusion and lack of individuality. Vittorio Rieti, a successful young Italian composer, is totally different in his Quartet in F. He gives us popular, melodious, simple music, like Haydn translated into Italian, with a handful of sharp modern spice. The result is a not very genuine simplicity and a sometimes disagreeably sweet flavour. Milhaud's seventh String Quartet has also more of this cloying flavour than is agreeable. This is pleasing, sweet, small, and pretty music, but rather too much so, written with a very skilful use of polytonality.

Bartók's fourth Quartet shows the strongest imaginable contrast to Milhaud's semi-popular music. There is nothing sweet and pleasing in it. The familiar bitterness and almost cruel harshness of Bartók's music also distinguish the new work, but happily they are somewhat softened, at least in the middle movements. There is a sort of scherzo, written entirely in pizzicato, of masterly structure and fascinating, strange sound-effect. The slow movement sounds like an oriental psalmody, in monologue and dialogue, accompanied by long-held, strange clusters of sounds as a background. Bartók tends more and more towards making the formerly exceptional proceedings the rule, and vice-versâ. The normal manner of expression by means of stringed instruments, the singing tone, is almost entirely absent from this quartet, and pizzicato, martellato, flageolet, the pulling and beating of the string are constantly used—certainly not a healthy practice, or one to be recommended for imitation. Just for this reason, however, it will certainly be imitated.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

The numerous series of symphony concerts have all been started. Bruckner is the prime favourite among the German symphonic writers at present, and hardly a week passes by without a Bruckner Symphony being played somewhere. Thus Furtwängler's first Philharmonic concert opened with a magnificent performance of the tragic and monumental eighth Symphony. The third Symphony was heard twice, being conducted by Dr. Ernst Kunwald with the Berlin Symphony Orchestra and by Dr. Heinz Unger at a concert of the Society of the Friends of Music. The fifth Symphony was heard under Erich Kleiber at the first symphony concert of the State Opera, and the ninth Symphony has been given by Otto Klemperer. This glorious rise of Bruckner, everywhere in Germany, is very remarkable, considering that this master's symphonic art is not at all relished in other countries.

VISITORS

A number of English artists have given concerts. The Brosa Quartet renewed the favourable impression of their appearance here last season. Their fine ensemble and their noble style are duly appreciated here. The programme contained van Dieren's third Quartet. This composer, who, if I am rightly informed, enjoys the special esteem of English musicians, is hardly known at all in Germany. All the more I regret that I was unable to attend the performance of just this van Dieren Quartet, owing to other important duties.

Rachel Neill Fraser and Héloise Russell-Fergusson gave us a very interesting and authentic interpretation of Old Scotch songs and ballads and Gaelic songs from the Kennedy-Fraser collection. The recital was not distinguished by the display of considerable vocal art, but it had the full charm of old folk-lore, genuinely reproduced. Charles Proctor, a young English pianist, is not yet sufficiently master of his art and of himself to stand successfully the severe test of a public recital at Berlin. He has developed his technical skill, but is lacking in self-control. HUGO LEICHTENTRITT.

HOLLAND

We have during the last few weeks had more opportunities than usual of getting to know the music of Ernest Bloch, and to Amsterdam has fallen the honour (or otherwise, according to some reckonings) of giving the first performance in Europe of his 'America, an epic Rhapsody,' which was directed by the composer himself, and of comparing it with his early Symphony in C sharp minor, conducted by Mengelberg. The comparison gives rise to many similar thoughts to those which arise as one hears works of other, and one ventures to say greater, composers. In the earlier work there is lyrical feeling, an inspiration of a pure and unaffected character that one fails to re-discover in the later work. At the same time the work of maturity has a strength of character as well as of technique that is lacking from the earlier one.

The weakness of 'America' is its too conscious striving to achieve something as big in externals as its subject, to give the American people something worthy of themselves. One finds it difficult to imagine that they will ever consider the setting of Walt Whitman's poem with which it concludes as their national hymn, though it may achieve somewhat the same position as Parry's 'Jerusalem,' of which it is decidedly suggestive. As for the earlier portions of the work, they are based on the Mahlerian method of working up insignificant melodies to a big involved climax which, in a number of cases, though not in all, is very effective.

In the combination of popular 'nigger' and other tunes (including the 'Old Hundredth') he gets some striking melodic and orchestral effects, though, personally, I must confess a preference in this style of work for Dvorák's 'From the New World' Symphony. The Rhapsody had a great popular success, and Dutchmen and American visitors and residents vied with each other in their cheers and calls for the composer.

A more pleasant, though less striking, impression was caused by 'Baal Shem,' three 'chassidic' sketches for violin and pianoforte which were played by Mr. Ernest Whitfield at a very successful first recital here, assisted by Mr. Theo van der Pas, an extremely capable pianist-accompanist. The Utrecht Municipal Orchestra under Evert Cornelis has recently produced, probably for the first time here, a 'Symfonia à 8' and a Concerto for viola and orchestra by Carl Stamitz, the son of the more famous Johann, and a contemporary of Haydn and Mozart. The Symphony probably dates from the time when the composer was a violinist in the Mannheim Orchestra, the Concerto from a later period when he was viola and viol d'amore soloist at Paris. Both are agreeable, well-written, and occasionally emotional music of a type that contrasts pleasantly with most of what we hear to-day, though it can scarcely be said they are of great importance. The solo part of the concerto was well played by Mr. Jan van Leeuwen.

Rosa Spier and her 'ensemble,' consisting of herself, with flautist, violinist, violist, and 'cellist, have just returned from a highly successful tour in middle Europe and given a couple of concerts in their own city of The Hague. They introduced a new quintet by Leo Smit, a young Dutch composer, which is of unquestioned cleverness and has a number of extremely picturesque touches. Like many other modern works, however, it created a greater impression by reason of its technique than by any emotional or even sentimental characteristics.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

MILAN

At a concert by the Scala Orchestra, Willy Ferrero was the great attraction. His last appearance here was when, as a child of eleven, he conducted through a programme from memory. He probably learnt it in the same way by ear, so that in any case a score would not have been of much service to him. Now, however, having attained maturity, he still adheres to the principle, and his performance on this occasion was that of a competent musician.

The most interesting news is provided by the recitalists. In a young Hungarian pianist, Edward Kilényi, we were most agreeably surprised. In every branch of his art he shows remarkable powers—amazing technique, exuberance, delicacy, strength, musicianship—all of the highest order.

Leo Donini was a violinist entirely pleasing in style, but of occasional uncertainty of pitch. He was best where big tone was required, such as in the Veracini 'Largo' and the Bach Aria.

At the Teatro del Popolo, the Friday evening concerts were inaugurated with the Poltronieri String Quartet, and Alberto D'Erasmo, pianist. The former party will be remembered by their visit to London some time ago. They are the leading group of their kind in Milan, and warm favourites, so that the concert was very well attended. The 'Trillo del Diavolo' of Tartini, 'Souvenir of Moscow' (Wieniawsky), were a background for a new Sonata by Amfitheatrof, and 'Poema de una Sanlugueña' by Turina. Both authors were successful. The Sonata takes a form more akin to a fantasy than to a strict sonata. Its one 'tempo' is full of life and vigour, finely coloured, and very sonorous. The Turina piece is based on a number of Iberian folk-tunes and dances which develop to the point of losing trace of their origin; the 'Cancion del Lumar' was perhaps the most interesting of the various movements, which, as the title suggests, lazes along smoothly into the 'Alucinaciones,' whatever that means, where the suite finishes if memory does not betray me. The Finale is not quite so happy as what went before leads one to expect. It seemed to lack design.

AUTUMN OPERA AT THE DAL VERME

The opera this year at the Dal Verme showed a distinct improvement over previous occasions. The staging was more artistic, costumes and scenery were new, and the chorus efficient. So was the orchestra. Not all of the singers, however, passed muster. There were several new-comers, of whom the best were Laurie Power, a South Australian tenor, and Mostyn Thomas, whose name alone suffices to say from whence he comes. Power's opera was 'La Bohême,' in which he sang Rodolfo. His voice is of an exceptionally good quality, well schooled and of ample compass. There was room for improvement in his Italian, which was a little too closed, and nervousness seemed to trouble him a bit, but that notwithstanding, he was one of the successes of the season, and will undoubtedly do very well if the future fulfils the promise of the present. Mostyn Thomas is already well along the road, and his development seems complete. The voice is baritone of a light timbre, roomy and free, and resonant. On the interpretative side he was good, and, owing to his ability to open his mouth, sings excellent Italian. His Tonio in 'I Pagliacci' was highly appreciated even by the local people. It does seem a pity, however, that both these British singers choose to use Italian names.

LA SCALA

There is very little news of the Scala yet. It is known that the opening work is to be Spontini's 'La Vestale,' for December 7, but the management of the theatre is very chary of giving information away before the rosters are up. There will not be a substitute for Toscanini. The policy that will be followed in the future is to engage a number of conductors, each with a series of set works, whose responsibility will end when they lay their baton down. Of course, the usual substitute maestri will be on the spot, but no one man will be given universal command. The lateness of the opening date this year is a good thing for the concert people, and accounts for the unusual number of symphony concerts this season. Milan, it must be remembered, is none too catholic in her musical tastes, so this delay may prove a blessing. We are hoping for much from the Scala organization now that the orchestra and the chorus have been made permanent.

C. D'I.

NEW YORK

Few audiences have ever listened to the sort of lecture Stokowski gave his listeners on the occasion of the first visit of the Philadelphia Orchestra a few days ago. Stokowski has always played a great many modern works, and for this programme had chosen Schönberg's Variations on the 'B A C H' theme. When he had finished there was no very great enthusiasm on either side, but there were a few unmistakable hisses. Stokowski thereupon addressed his audience (a habit he has) to this effect. The audience was within its rights in hissing, but he and his orchestra were certainly within their rights in playing what they wished, and as long as he remained at their head they would continue to play a considerable amount of the music of contemporary composers. He suggested that, inasmuch as the demand for tickets to the Philadelphia Orchestra's concerts always far exceeded the supply, it was only a reasonable request for him to make when he asked those who did not care to hear the music he proposed to play to step aside and leave the tickets for those who did.

Unfortunately, his suggestion will doubtless prove to have fallen on barren soil. New York concert-goers need something much more serious than a little cacophony to dim their worship of the handsomest conductor to be seen here.

Toscanini is back, too. A review of his programmes would reveal almost nothing of what he has given us, for to be quite honest he gathers in a very unpromising and miscellaneous collection. But his capacity for making neglected values clear and for revitalising ageing works is an unceasing miracle.

Aaron Copland, a leading figure among the younger American composers, gives annually an extremely interesting course of lectures on the tendencies of modern music. The topics for this year's series, for example, include: opera—'Wozzeck,' 'Cardillac,' 'Jonny spielt auf,' 'Œdipus'; chamber-opera—'L'histoire d'un soldat,' 'El Retablo,' 'Minute-Operas'; oratorio—'King David,' Mahler's eighth Symphony, Roussel's Psalm; chamber-music—Bloch, Schmitt, Webern; and so forth.

Ernest Fowles arrived recently for an American tour which is to take him as far west as Arizona, California, and Oregon. (I wrote recently that Hoogstraten conducts at 'Seattle, Oregon'; this was an error, of course—Seattle is in Washington. It is at Portland, Oregon, that Hoogstraten conducts.)

The first concert of the Conductorless Orchestra showed a tremendous improvement in tonal refinement and balance over last year. Even so, I feel that one is constantly making allowances for things which one would not so easily excuse with a conductor in sight. There are recurring rhythmic uncertainties, there are faults in balance which no competent conductor would tolerate. And these things are inherent in the 'conductorless' idea. The acoustics of our concert halls are not planned so that every member of the orchestra can hear the others; the chamber-music analogy is fallacious. Nevertheless, the orchestra gave Zimbalist an extremely sympathetic accompaniment in the Beethoven Violin Concerto, and it brought forward a new work by Carl Ruggles, 'Portals,' for strings, which excited enough interest to be repeated.

The month brought us numerous recitalists: Kreisler, Bauer, Amy Evans and Fraser Gange, Friedman, the English Singers, Zimbalist, Elly Ney, Lhevinne, Pattison, the Roth String Quartet. Dupré gave a recital on the Wanamaker organ early in the month.

But for organ recitals, New York hardly needs to resort to importations. Lynnwood Farnam, originally of Canada, but now resident in New York, gives a series of recitals every year, open to the public without charge. This is among the season's most important musical offerings. Last year he played the entire organ works of Bach during the season. This year he is devoting himself to earlier composers—Purcell, Gibbons, Byrd, Josquin, Gabrieli, Buxtehude, and lesser-known men—an extraordinary series. I am not a judge of organ playing, but I have never heard any which seemed to me so clear, simple, unaffected, rhythmically definite as his.

ARTHUR MENDEL.

PARIS

Beginning at about the middle of October, the musical season has by now reached full swing. The start was given by the Lamoureux and Pasdeloup Concerts, followed by the Colonne, the Poulet Concerts, and the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris. The major part of their activity consisted of refreshing our impressions of past masters, chiefly Beethoven, Wagner, Berlioz, Franck, Chabrier, Albéric Magnard, while among the senior generation of living composers Richard Strauss received increasing attention. The experiment of an all-Russian programme has again been attempted this year by one or two of the aforesaid organizations with presumably satisfactory results, owing to the great number of concert-goers among the large Russian émigré population of our city.

At the Colonne, M. Gaubert, the conductor of the Concerts du Conservatoire, was invited to present his 'Chants de la Mer.' These are three short symphonic tableaux inspired by the ballads of Paul Fort. They depict, in a clear and delicately picturesque language, the emotions that were suggested to the composer by the sea with its ever-varying moods. At a subsequent sitting a young Russian composer, M. Van Dyck, figured on the programme with a symphonic prelude intended to render homage to the memory of the two heroic airmen, Nungesser and Coli, who disappeared on their flight across the Atlantic. The item won sympathy with the public though falling short of the powerful exigencies of the subject. M. A. Wolff, at the head of the Lamoureux group, presented 'Obsessions,' by M. H. Tomasi, who has chosen as a source of inspiration the various phases of a Corsican vendetta with its wild imprecations and a final funeral dance. M. Tomasi is certainly gifted musically, and for what music they contain 'Obsessions' is a meritorious work. But again the unbridled flights of passion, the wild movements of hatred and of revenge which characterise vendetta proceedings, have found no adequate expression in his efforts. Evidently the choosing of a subject in accordance with temperament and with the means of realising it is a difficulty on which many a composer, and not only the lesser ones, find no guiding light. On another programme we heard 'Hérakles at Delphes,' a dramatic cantata composed by M. R. Loucheur, winner of the Prix de Rome, on a poem composed by M. R. Puaux. M. Loucheur, a diligent student, has intelligently assimilated all that one can and perhaps should learn on the school benches. Of original personality we can as yet detect no trace, though the subject offered to him by M. Puaux abounded in dramatic effects.

The Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, now permanently under the direction of Pierre Monteux, has achieved wonders since last year in improving the cohesion, the power, and the general quality of its performances. Confining our comments to the new items brought forward by this orchestra, we should note the 'Interlude Dramatique' by Piero Coppola, who, true to the title of his work, has given us a piece of forcible dramatic music with vigorous ideas, clear development, and well-equilibrated scoring. The performance was perfect. Gustav Holst was repeatedly called on the platform after the execution of 'Egdon Heath,' a novelty for the Parisians. The English composer's success was due chiefly to the sincerity and the adequateness of the language he uses to present musically the sad poetry of the Dorchester landscape. Sir Henry Wood was the guest-conductor at a subsequent concert, the programme of which comprised, among other current items, Sir Henry's Suite from works by Purcell and Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony, which was unknown to the great majority of the public. The Purcell-Wood Suite, with its delicate scoring and authoritative direction, won immediate applause. The Symphony, which probably is the most considerable item of English music we have ever heard here, produced on the mass of the auditors a rather confused impression. Their patience had just been taxed to the utmost by a fifty-two minutes of Beethoven Concerto brilliantly played by Mischa Elman. Sir Henry Wood gave a most convincing interpretation of the Symphony, and musical circles are unanimous in praising its essential qualities, its well-established developments, its power —coupled with the poetry and the mystical, even religious, charm that discreetly permeate the opening Lento and the final Andante sostenuto. It is the wish of many that this important work should be given another chance with the Parisian public, it being understood that it shall not figure at the tail of a long and exhausting programme. PETRO J. PETRIDIS.

VIENNA

THE STAATSOPER

I have previously stated in these columns that no other musical institution at Vienna is closer to the heart of the city's populace than the State Opera. The Austrian, conglomerate of many nations, has the Latin uppermost in him, and the theatre attracts him more strongly than any other art form, and no genre of the theatre more than that of opera, in which his innate love of music is satisfied simultaneously with the native desire for action and masquerade, as well as the Austrian's inherent predilection for hero-worship. Furthermore, while the increased vogue and importance of broadcasting is a substitute for symphonic and chamber concerts, the craving for opera in its entirety cannot be satisfied except by hearing and seeing it. The Austrian, then, is jealous for his opera, and from conservatism a bit hostile toward any newcomer who takes a hand in it.

The reception of Clemens Krauss as director of the Vienna Staatsoper seemed, therefore, doubtful at first. When Furtwängler refused and Krauss accepted the post, the press was divided and opinions rather more against than for the new man. To say that Krauss not only overcame all latent prejudices but after a short spell of office has completely won Vienna—press and public—is therefore saying much, nay, everything, for the 'new man,' Krauss, came with many promises, but evidently also with the energy to materialise them. He announced 'Der Rosenkavalier' and 'Die Meistersinger' in new, re-studied, and re-staged productions, and gave them at the appointed date. That impressed Vienna, after previous experiences with long-delayed premières. Krauss promised novelties, and the premières of de Falla's 'Amor brujo' as well as Berg's 'Wozzeck' are in full process of rehearsing. More far-reaching reforms are under way, and Krauss has decidedly clear and definite ideas about them. He seems the man to bring about at last the new Golden Age of the Vienna Staatsoper.

For the moment, the complete realisation of Krauss's ideas is hampered by existing contracts with the personnel, and Krauss's job is far from easy. Schalk, his predecessor, is still in the house for twenty performances, and a disgruntled ex-director is not a pleasant collaborator at best. Richard Strauss is engaged as star-conductor for twenty nights, and Furtwängler also, with a contract for ten performances—three guest-conductors, each with his own ideas and privileges, demand from the director an amount of work, diplomacy, and organization of no mean order. The company which Krauss found on his arrival, moreover, is incomplete, and a large number of the great artists possess contracts which call for a limited number of performances only. Krauss's own definite ideas of an 'ensemble theatre' will, therefore, only be realised by a process of slow and organic reform.

The results which Krauss has so far achieved are notable. A new and unwonted zeal for rehearsal work is evident, and its results splendid. 'Der Rosenkavalier' was heard with the same production as at Salzburg and with the same cast. On the stage of the Vienna Opera, with its improved and more up-to-date scenic resources and its justly famous acoustics, the production seemed even more beautiful and perfect than at Salzburg. 'Die Meistersinger,' in the new setting provided by Dr. Wallerstein (stage director) and Ludwig Sievert (stage designer), and under Krauss's baton, showed entirely new aspects. For the first time, perhaps, we heard Wagner's work as the 'comedy opera' that it is. Pathos and portentousness were neglected in favour of the comedy element and of orchestral clarity. The rich contrapuntal texture of the score seemed more transparent than before, and quite new at times, when Krauss emphasised certain heretofore unnoticed 'middle voices.' With so lucid a conception of the score, Krauss is the ideal conductor for the soloists—discreet, plastic, and ever heedful of the singer and the vocal line.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

The first foreign guest-conductor to appear at Vienna this season was Stanley Chapple. The young British conductor brought an attractive programme: Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for stringed orchestra, Constant Lambert's 'Music for Orchestra' (not free from Stravinskian influences, but interesting and well received), Beethoven's Triple Concerto (splendidly played by the Budapest Trio), and Brahms's first Symphony. It was in the Brahms, perhaps, that Mr. Chapple gave his finest. The last movement, given with sweeping grandeur, evoked instantaneous and enthusiastic applause.

Another British conductor, Mr. Paul Kerby, has the gift of compiling interesting, unique programmes. His concert—the first one in a series given in support of and for the benefit of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra—occurred on All Saints' Day, a usually 'music-less' date. 'Music for the Memory of the Dead' was the appropriate watchword of the programme: Ravel's 'Pavane for a Dead Infanta,' Reed's 'Elegy for the Memory of a Dead Musician,' Elgar's Prelude to 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique.' Mr. Kerby, who had previously been heard in Festival concerts at Salzburg and with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, gave evidence of notable gifts as a conductor and of an experience and routine that are constantly growing. At the same concert, Miss Molly MacGarvey, a young English singer resident at Vienna, made her professional debut with a performance of Mahler's 'Kindertotenlieder,' which was notable for beauty of voice and artistic assurance even for a more experienced artist. PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

ADA CROSSLEY, the famous contralto, on October 17. The daughter of an Australian farmer, she was born in 1874 at Farraville, South Gippsland, Victoria. At first she aspired to be a pianist, but a singing teacher at Melbourne, Madame Fanny Simonsen, discovered that she had a voice, and trained her for two years. In 1890 she sang the contralto part in a performance of 'Elijah' by the Melbourne Philharmonic Society, the soprano being Madame Patey. Four years later she came to Europe, studying under Santley in England and Mathilde Marchesi in France. Her career was never in doubt, and for a generation, from her first appearance at Queen's Hall in 1895, she was the leading contralto of the English concert and festival world. She sang frequently to Queen Victoria, and she toured triumphantly in South Africa and Australasia. In 1905 she married Mr. Francis Muecke, a London throat specialist, by whose advice she retired from public singing in 1919.

ALBERT BLAKER, at the age of seventy-nine. For fifty-one one years he carried on a business for the sale of musical instruments, first at Whitfield Street (London) and for the last fourteen years at Store Street. He was the first maker of the portable harmonium, and he was well-known as a reed maker. His house was a great meeting-place for dance-band musicians.

MRS. THOMAS F. DUNHILL, who died at Merano, Italy, on October 23, after a long illness. She was a daughter of Mr. Edward Arnold, the well-known publisher, and a grand-daughter of Dr. Arnold of Rugby, and on her mother's side she was a niece of Mary Wakefield. She married the composer in 1914.

W. G. Ross, F.R.C.O., director of broadcasting at Johannesburg, aged forty-eight. He was born at Edinburgh, studied under Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. W. G. Alcock, Friedheim, and Coleridge-Taylor. For some years he was on the staff of Messrs. Novello, for whom he arranged a good deal of music for small orchestra. He also published compositions under his own name and that of 'Eric Webster.' He went to South Africa after the war, an invalid. There he pursued various occupations until he succeeded Theo Wendt at the Johannesburg Station.

H. M. Higgs, at the age of seventy-four. For the last twenty-two years of his life he acted as chief musical editor to Messrs. Chappell & Co., having previously been connected with Messrs. Metzler. He was a composer of organ music and small orchestral pieces. His father was Marcellus Higgs, a well-known organist and composer.

John Crapps, F.R.C.O., at the age of eighty-three. He was a well-known Sussex musician, having long been associated with musical enterprises at Brighton. He was organist to the Kuhe festivals of fifty years ago, and was for a time conductor of the Brighton Corporation Band.

Willibald Richter, the well-known pianist, at the age of sixty-nine. He was a pupil of Liszt, came to England in 1881, and became head pianoforte teacher at Uppington School. He founded a school of music at Leicester, and carried it on for thirty years.

Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College, Cambridge, on November 19. A notice will appear in our next issue.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Performing Right Society and Church Music	1073
After-thoughts on Delius. By Hubert J. Foss	1073
The Arts in Revolt.—III. By Rutland Boughton (continued) ...	1076
Roland Manuel. By Paul Landormy...	1080
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1082
The Musician's Bookshelf	1083
New Music	1085
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1089
Player-Piano Notes	1091
Wireless Notes. By 'Auribus'	1092
Occasional Notes	1095
Stages in the History of Opera: V.—Gluck's Theory and Practice. By Dyneley Hussey	1097
Teachers' Department: The Associated Board Pianoforte Examinations for 1930 (concluded). By Ernest Fowles; Points from Lectures; Powder and Shot; Answers to Correspondents	1099-1103
Church and Organ Music...	1111
Royal College of Organists	1111
Letters to the Editor	1113
The Amateurs' Exchange	1120
Competition Festival Record	1120
Royal Academy of Music	1121
Royal College of Music	1121
Trinity College of Music	1122
London Concerts	1122
Music in the Suburbs	1127
The Coming Season	1128
Music in the Provinces	1128
Manchester	1130
Music in Wales	1131
Music in Ireland	1131
Musical Notes from Abroad	1132
Obituary	1135
'Fair Sally.' Four-part Song. By Alec Rowley	1105

The following EXTRA SUPPLEMENT is given with this number:
'Good Morrow.' A simple Carol. By Edward Elgar.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every Additional Line ...	0	0	10
One Inch (Displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

To insure insertion in their proper positions Advts. for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour St., London, W.1, not later than

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 18, 1929

DURING THE LAST MONTH

Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited

BACH, J. S.—"My God, when Thou shalt call." Chorale from "Let songs of rejoicing." (No. 257, Short Anthems.) 2d.

BAINTON, EDGAR L.—"Astrophel." Part-Song for equal voices. (No. 250, Two-Part Songs.) 4d.

COUNTRY DANCE BOOK.—New Series, No. 1. Containing the Airs and Descriptions of Thirty Country Dances from "The Dancing Master." Selected and Edited by Douglas and Helen Kennedy. 3s. 6d.

COUNTRY DANCE TUNES.—New Series, No. 1. For use with above. Pianoforte Arrangements by Arnold Foster. 3s. 6d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra. Arrangement for Viola (Lionel Tertis) with pianoforte accompaniment. 9s.

——"Good Morrow." Christmas Carol. (No. 1442, Part-Song Book.) 4d.

HENNIKER, LEONARD.—Procession for the Organ. (No. 122, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 2s.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 453. "The Son of God is born for all." G. T. Francis 1½d.

ROWLEY, ALEC.—"Fair Sally." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. (No. 1042, The Musical Times.) 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 450, contains the following music in both notations: "Winter." (Two-part Song.) George Rathbone. "A Day, a Day of Glory." Old French Melody arranged with Descant. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
Book 240.	Twenty-Six Classical Songs by Various Composers	2s.	—
,, ,,	Twenty-Six Classical Songs by Various Composers (Vocal part only)	8d.	—
Book 241.	Twenty-Five Classical Songs by Various Composers	2s.	—
	Vocal part only...	8d.	—

SIX SETS OF CHANTS for the Te Deum Laudamus from New Cathedral Psalter Chants, No. 81, by Various Composers. (No. 1155, Parish Choir Book.) 2d.

——From New Cathedral Psalter Chants, No. 82, by Various Composers. (No. 1156, Parish Choir Book.) 2d.

——From New Cathedral Psalter Chants, No. 83, by Various Composers. (No. 1157, Parish Choir Book.) 2d.

TWELVE SHORT INTRODUCTORY VOLUNTARIES for the Organ, by Various Composers. (No. 123, Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series.) 1s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2583. "While Shepherds watched their flocks by night." Christmas Anthem. Eric H. Thiman. 2d.

,, 2584. "Turtle Soup." Humorous Part-Song for S.A.T.B. N. F. Byng Johnson. 2d.

,, 2585. "The Traction Engine." Arranged for S.A.T.B. Stanley Marchant. 2d.

,, 2590. "Rejoice and sing." Christmas Anthem. George Rathbone. 3d.

WEATHERDON, H. B.—"Elégie Héroïque," for the Organ. 2s.

Published for

THE H. W. GRAY CO., New York

BLEECKER, J. W.—Two Christmas Carols. "Little Jesus, baby," and "Christmas Star." (No. 1035, Church Music Review.) 10 cents (6d).

AN ALBUM OF RECORDS for your friends this Christmas

Here is a brief list of works recorded in Album form by "His Master's Voice." Your local dealer will be glad to play over these to you, and also to give you particulars of others.

THE TWILIGHT OF THE GODS (Wagner)

Cast includes Austral, Fear, Ljungberg, Widdop, etc. The London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Coates and Collingwood. Berlin State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Blech and Muck. Album Series No. 76 (two albums), sixteen records, £5 : 4 : 0. Records separately 6/6 each.

THE VALKYRIE (Wagner)

Cast includes Austral, Ljungberg, Leider, Schorr and Widdop. London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Albert Coates. Berlin State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Leo Blech. Album Series No. 47, fourteen records, £4 : 11 : 0.

SYMPHONY No. 7 (Beethoven)

Played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski. Album Series No. 79, five records, £1 : 12 : 6. Records separately 6/6 each.

"ARCHDUKE" TRIO (Beethoven)

Played by Cortot, Thibaud and Casals. Album Series No. 78, five records, £2 : 2 : 6. Records separately 8/6 each.

"KREUTZER" SONATA (Beethoven)
For Pianoforte and Violin

Played by Cortot and Thibaud. Album Series No. 86, four records, £1 : 14 : 0. Records separately 8/6 each.

HAYDN'S "CLOCK" SYMPHONY

Played by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, conducted by Toscanini. Album Series No. 82, four records, £1 : 6 : 0. Records separately 6/6 each.

RACHMANINOFF'S CONCERTO No. 2

Played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski. Pianoforte by Rachmaninoff. Album Series No. 84, five records, £2 : 2 : 6. Records separately 8/6 each.

AIDA (Verdi)

Cast includes Giannini, Inghilleri, Massini, Nessi, Pertile, Cattaneo, Manfrini. Orchestra and Chorus of La Scala, Milan, conducted by Carlo Sabajno. Album Series No. 77 (two albums)), nineteen records, £6 : 3 : 6. Records separately 6/6 each.

MASS IN B MINOR (Bach)

Soloists, Schumann, Margaret Balfour, Schorr and Widdop. The Philharmonic Choir accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Albert Coates. Album Series No. 87 (two albums), seventeen records, £3 : 16 : 6. Records separately 4/6 each.

"His Master's Voice"

The Gramophone Company, Ltd., London, W.1.

DURING THE LAST MONTH (continued)

BRUNE, A.—"The shadows of the evening." Anthem for Alto Solo, and Chorus. (No. 1033, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

EMERY, D. R.—"Thou art my God." For S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B. (No. 1045, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"The Fairy Frolic." Trio for S.S.A. (No. 383, Modern Series.) 12 cents (6d.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"A Little Dutch Garden." Song for medium voice. 50 cents (2s.).

McAMIS, H.—"Dreams." For the Organ. No. 495, St. Cecilia Series.) 75 cents (3s.).

PEERY, R. R.—"Lead me, O Lord." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1047, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d).

SCARMOLIN, A. L.—"At one with Thee." Sacred Song for medium voice. 50 cents (2s.).

TIMMINGS, W. T.—"In the eve it will be light." Sacred Song for high voice. 50 cents (2s.).

VIRTUE, C. C.—"I will lift up mine eyes." Anthem for S.A.T.B. with soprano solo. (No. 1042, Church Music Review.) 15 cents (8d.).

VORIS, W. R.—"He who would valiant be." Anthem for S.A.T.B. (No. 1030, Church Music Review.) 12 cents (6d.).

——"I see His blood upon the rose." Sacred Song for high voice. 50 cents (2s.).

——"I've a Kingdom." Song for high voice. 50 cents (2s.).

——"The Daily Lesson." Sacred Song for high voice. 50 cents (2s.).

——"The Pilgrim." Sacred Song for medium voice. 50 cents (2s.).

WENTZELL, W.—"Lambkins." Sacred Song for medium voice. 50 cents (2s.).

WILLIAMS, D. McK.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A flat. (No. 1048, Church Music Review.) 20 cents (10d.).

ST. LUKE'S PARISH CHURCH, The Avenue, Richmond, Surrey.—Bass, Tenor, and Alto wanted after Christmas. Not elaborate music. Friday practice and Sunday mornings only, £10 each a year; or Sundays, morning and evening, £15. Write, Choirmaster.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (honorary) required.—South London Church. Use of Organ. Box 29, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TRENT COLLEGE, DERBYSHIRE. — Music Scholarship of £35 p.a., increasable to £70 p.a., in certain cases, will be offered in March. Usual Scholarship Examination for the award of up to six Scholarships, also Exhibitions, held in June. These are additional to reductions for sons of Clergy and Officers. For particulars apply Headmaster.

SECRETARY-MUSIC-TEACHER. — Good Accompanist and Sight-reader requires berth. Address, Box 28, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

R.C.O. EXAMS.—F.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 3/6; 15 Score-reading Tests, 2/6; 24 Basses, or 24 Melodies fully Harmonised, 2/- each set; 12 Complete Test Papers, 3/6; 16 Themes for Extemporisation, fully worked out, 5/-; 24 Sight-Reading Tests, Books 1 and 2, 4/6 each; Brahms's Analysis, 3/6; F. or A. hints, 3/6. A.R.C.O.: 150 Ear Tests, 2/6; 27 Vocal Score-reading Tests, 3/6; 24 Hymn Tunes for Transposition, Books, 1, 2, 3, 2/6 each; 24 Accompaniment Tests, Books 1, 2, 5/- each. In MS. Successful Paper Work Coaching. July, 1929, Paper Work Successes, 8. FRCO/L, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE

British Broadcasting Corporation

Announce that vacancies will shortly occur in

The WIRELESS SINGERS for A SOPRANO AND A TENOR

Essential qualifications are, in addition to the possession of a suitable voice, sound musicianship and very high ability in sight-reading of all kinds. The work demands the whole time of applicants, who should be under 30 years of age, and should be prepared, if particulars supplied by them are satisfactory, to give an audition in London.

Further particulars can be obtained on written application to the Chorus Master:

THE BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION, 2, SAVOY HILL, W.C.2.

GROTRIAN HALL, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

LILY WEST, F.R.A.M.

Will speak on "THE MYSTERY OF RHYTHM"

Sunday, December 8, at 3

Piano Solos by Beethoven and Chopin.

Invitations will be sent on receipt of stamped envelope to 32, Wigmore Street, W.1

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

No. 1.—SET TO MUSIC BY HENRY T. TILTMAN.

Price Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CHORAL FANTASIAS

Arranged by F. A. CHALLINOR

YORK 811.	MARITANA	Wallace	1*s.*
,, 823.	FAUST	Gounod	10*d.*
,, 857.	BOHEMIAN GIRL ...	... Balfe	1*s.*
,, 872.	TANNHAUSER ...	Wagner	9*d.*

BANKS & SON, YORK

JUST PUBLISHED

Hymn-Anthem for Epiphanytide

"HAIL! GLADDENING LIGHT"

By F. C. J. SWANTON, A.R.C.O.

Price 2d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY. Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

CONCERTO

(VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA)

by

EDWARD ELGAR

Arrangement for VIOLA by Lionel Tertis, with Pianoforte Accompaniment

PRICE NINE SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

For your throat

Allenburys

Glycerine & Black Currant PASTILLES

Your Chemist sells them

8D & 1/3 Per Box

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c.

Popular Church Music by J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS
Anthem—Christians, Awake...	4d.	3d.
Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D ...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

WORKS BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

With Analyses from WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS

Price - Five Shillings

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."—Musical Times.

Dr. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says: "Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY

THIRD EDITION

Price - Five Shillings

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

THE SOLITUDES OF THE PASSION

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus, with Hymns for Choir and Congregation

Price 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100

"A useful addition to the store of choral works for use in Lent and Passiontide is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well selected. The music is devotional and very singable."—Musical Times.

	s.	d.
MINUET AND TRIO FOR ORGAN	2	0
PEDAL AND MANUAL SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS	2	6
ANTHEM: I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.)	0	3
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ...	0	3
SIX HYMN-TUNES AND CAROLS WITH DESCANTS	1	0
THE SNOW LIES WHITE. Song	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Twelve Introits or Short Anthems

—SET TWO—

No.
1.	GIVE EAR UNTO MY PRAYER	Jacques Arcadelt
2.	WE WAIT FOR THY LOVING-KINDNESS	Philip Armes
3.	THE SACRIFICES OF GOD	Hugh Blair
4.	ALMIGHTY GOD, WHO HAST ME BROUGHT	Thomas Ford
5.	SET YOUR AFFECTIONS	Alfred R. Gaul
6.	O GOD, WHOSE NATURE AND PROPERTY	Alan Gray
7.	REND YOUR HEART	F. A. Gore Ouseley
8.	COME, LET US WORSHIP	Palestrina
9.	BEHOLD, GOD IS MY HELPER	John Stainer
10.	I WILL LAY ME DOWN IN PEACE ...	Arthur S. Sullivan
11.	O GOD OF BETHEL	Christopher Tye
12.	BLESSED ARE THEY	S. S. Wesley

PRICE ONE SHILLING

EACH INTROIT MAY BE HAD SEPARATELY

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS

JUST PUBLISHED

H. A. CHAMBERS
WHILE ALL THINGS
Price Threepence.

GEORGE RATHBONE
REJOICE AND SING
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

J. JOB.
ON THIS THE CHRISTMAS MORN
CAROL-ANTHEM
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. S. LANG.
REMEMBER, O THOU MAN
CAROL-ANTHEM.
Unison Voices (Chorus ad lib.) and Organ.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

GEORGE RATHBONE
HOW BEAUTIFUL UPON THE MOUNTAINS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ERIC H. THIMAN
WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SELECTED LIST

A. ADAM
O HOLY NIGHT
ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO AND CHORUS
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS
ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS
THOU ART MY SON
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK
BREAK FORTH INTO JOY
Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW
OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN
Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY
GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST
Price Threepence: Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE
IN THAT DAY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT
BEHOLD, I BRING YOU GOOD TIDINGS
Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT
IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

P. E. FLETCHER
NOW ONCE AGAIN
CAROL-ANTHEM.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, Female Voices, Fourpence.

P. E. FLETCHER
RING OUT, WILD BELLS
FESTIVAL CAROL
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, S.S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, S.A., Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

M. B. FOSTER
CHRIST'S INCARNATION
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD
NAZARETH
ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS
SING, O HEAVENS
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. W. JONES
THERE WERE SHEPHERDS
Price Fourpence.

C. H. LLOYD
REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT
O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER
SING, O HEAVENS
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE RATHBONE
AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY
Price Fourpence: Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

G. SHAW
HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.
Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.
Ditto, S.S.C., Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. V. STANFORD
WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED
Price Fourpence.

B. STEANE
LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO BETHLEHEM
Price Threepence: Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE
SING, O HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence

A. S. SULLIVAN
SING, O HEAVENS
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST
A SONG OF JOY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON
WITH ALL THY HOSTS
Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

The Descant Carol Book

A COLLECTION OF

WELL-KNOWN CAROLS

with Descants

BOOK 1

A Virgin Unspotted
Good Christian men, rejoice
Good King Wenceslas
I saw Three Ships
Shepherds, shake off your drowsy sleep
The First Nowell
What Child is this?
While Shepherds watched

BOOK 2 (Just Published)

O come, all ye faithful
A Day, a Day of Glory
Come, ye lofty
God rest you merry, gentlemen
Hymn for Christmas Day ("See amid")
The Incarnation
The Seven Joys of Mary
We Three Kings of Orient are

Each Book
PRICE EIGHTPENCE
Words only, One penny each; 6/6 per 100

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS

LATEST NUMBERS

421. The Three Wise Men ...Alfred Hollins 1½d.
422. The Holly and the Ivy ...Geoffrey Shaw 1½d.
423. There is no rose ... Gerrard Williams 1½d.
424.*The Christ-Child (Unison) G. Rathbone 2d.
425. All Christian men H. A. Chambers 1½d.
426. I saw three Kings ... G. Rathbone 1½d.
427. O come this day ... ... H. G. Ley 1½d.
428. All hail with joy ... Chastey Hector 1½d.
429. Rosa Mystica ... ... B. J. Dale 4d.
430. Cradle Song ... ... B. J. Dale 4d.
431. O lovely voices ... H. A. Chambers 1½d.
432. The Christ-Child (Four Voices) G. Rathbone 2d.
433. A Lullaby Carol ... ...Geoffrey Shaw 2d.
434. While shepherds watched C. Lee Williams 1½d.
435. The First Nowell (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
436. Good King Wenceslas (with Descant) ,, 2d.
437. Balulalow ... ... Roy Thompson 1½d.
438. Sing we how the Heavenly Star ,, 1½d.
439. His dwelling ... ... G. Rathbone 1½d.
440. O Magi! see the Star o'erhead ,, 1½d.
441. The Seven Joys of Mary C. S. Lang 1½d.
442. A Virgin unspotted (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
443. What Child is this (with Descant) Old English 2d.
444. Good Christian men, rejoice (with Descant) ... ... Old German 2d.
445. I saw three ships come sailing in (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.
446. Shepherds, shake off your drowsy sleep (with Descant) ... Besançon Carol 2d.
447. I sing the Birth ... ... H. Andrews 1½d.
448. O little town of Bethlehem H. Andrews 1½d.
449. Who knocks at the door G. Rathbone 1½d.
450. The Star that shines so pure and bright G. Rathbone 1½d.
451. Puer Natus est Nobis ... E. H. Thiman 1½d.
452. God that is our Saviour E. H. Thiman 1½d.
453. The Son of God is born for all G. T. Francis 1½d.
454. O come, all ye faithful (with Descant) Anon. 2d.
455. A Day, a Day of Glory (with Descant) Old French 2d.
456. Come, ye lofty (with Descant) Old Breton 2d.
457. God rest you merry, Gentlemen (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.
458. Hymn for Christmas Day (with Descant) J. Goss 2d.
459. The Incarnation (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
460. The Seven Joys of Mary (with Descant) Traditional 2d.
461. We Three Kings of Orient are (with Descant) ... ... Traditional 2d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A SELECTED LIST OF

Novello's Publications in Cloth Bindings suitable for

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS TO MUSICIANS

Musical Literature

		s.	d.
COWARD, HENRY	Choral Technique and Interpretation ... net	7	6
DOLMETSCH, ARNOLD	The Interpretation of Music of the 17th and 18th Centuries ... ... net	15	0
GRACE, HARVEY	The Organ Works of Bach ... ... net	9	0
GRACE, HARVEY	The Organ Works of Rheinberger ... ... net	5	0
GROVE, GEORGE	Beethoven and his nine Symphonies ... net	9	0
HANSLICK, E.	The Beautiful in Music. A contribution to the revised Aesthetics	6	0
NIECKS, FREDERICK ...	Chopin as a Man and Musician. 2 Volumes net	25	0
NIECKS, FREDERICK ...	Programme music in the last four centuries net	16	0
SPITTA, PHILLIP	Johann Sebastian Bach. His work and influence on the music of Germany. 1685-1750. 3 Vols. net	42	0
STAINER, JOHN	Music of the Bible, with an account of the development of modern musical instruments from ancient types ... ... net	7	6
THAYER, A. W.	The life of Beethoven. 3 Volumes ... ... net	105	0
VAN DEN BORREN, C.	The Sources of Keyboard Music in England net	10	6

Organ Music

		s.	d.
ALBUMS OF SELECTED PIECES	In 9 Volumes ... ... each	7	6
BACH, J. S.	Orgelbüchlein (Little Organ Book). Edited by IVOR ATKINS	10	6
BACH, J. S.	The Organ Works. Edited by J. F. BRIDGE and J. HIGGS. In 3 Volumes ... ... each	15	0
BEST, W. T.	Arrangements from the scores of the Great Masters. In 5 Volumes ... ... each	36	0
BEST, W. T.	Six Concert pieces	12	0
HANDEL, G. F.	Six Concertos	11	6
HOLLINS, A.	Original Compositions	15	0
LEMARE, E. H.	The Recital Series of Original Compositions. 8 Volumes ... ... each	11	6
MENDELSSOHN ...	Six Grand Sonatas and 3 Preludes and Fugues ...	11	6
RHEINBERGER, J.	Original Compositions. In 2 Volumes ... each	13	0
SMART, H.	Organ Works. In 2 Volumes ... ... each	16	0
TWENTY SHORT & EASY PIECES	In 7 Sets ... ... each	6	0
VILLAGE ORGANIST, THE	In 8 Volumes ... ... each	9	0
WOLSTENHOLME, W.	Original Compositions	15	0

Pianoforte Music

		s.	d.
BACH, J. S.	Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues. Complete ...	12	6
BEETHOVEN	Sonatas. Complete. 8vo edition	11	6
MENDELSSOHN ...	Lieder ohne Worte. Complete. 8vo edition ...	7	0
MENDELSSOHN ...	Lieder ohne Worte. Klindworth edition	11	6
MOZART	Sonatas. Complete. 8vo edition	7	6

Vocal Albums

		s.	d.
BENNETT, W. S.	Twelve Songs	4	0
ELLIOTT, J. W.	National Nursery Songs and Rhymes ... net	7	6
ENGLISH FOLK-SONGS	Collected and arr. with Pianoforte accompaniment by CECIL J. SHARP. In 2 Volumes ... each	13	6
MOORE, THOMAS	Irish Melodies	6	0
RANDEGGER, A.	Six Sacred Songs. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass. Sets 1 and 2 bound together. For each Voice	9	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

A Handbook for Choralists

(No. 104—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS) By HARVEY GRACE

Containing Hints on Sight-Singing and Choral Technique and Expression.

Thirty-four Studies specially composed by EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, HAROLD DARKE, T. F. DUNHILL, JULIUS HARRISON, GEOFFREY SHAW, and the Author. Six Rounds by Beethoven.
With a Foreword by SIR WALFORD DAVIES.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

Twenty-four Studies in Sight-Singing and Interpretation for Mixed Voices

(No. 106—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS)

By WALFORD DAVIES, THOMAS F. DUNHILL, C. ARMSTRONG GIBBS, HARVEY GRACE, JULIUS HARRISON, W. McNAUGHT, GEOFFREY SHAW, and E. T. SWEETING.

Being Supplement No. 1 to "A HANDBOOK FOR CHORALISTS"

PRICE ONE SHILLING

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

RECENTLY PUBLISHED

Novello's Classical Songs

By VARIOUS COMPOSERS

VOL. 5

CONTENTS

Blacksmith, The	Brahms
Come unto Him...	Handel
Erl-King, The	Schubert
Hark! The echoing air ...	Purcell
If with all your hearts... ...	Mendelssohn
I'll sail upon the Dog-star ...	Purcell
In the golden morn	Tschaikowsky
King of Thule, The	Berlioz
Knotting Song, The	Purcell
Ladybird	Schumann
Let me wander	Handel
Little Spinner, The	Mozart
Lonely am I now	Weber
Lonely woods	Lully
Or let the merry bells	Handel
Questioning	Salvator Rosa
Serenade, A	Schubert
Shepherd, The	Weber
Shepherds and Maidens	Lotti
Sorrow	Pergolesi
Sweet Echo	Lawes
Sweet Rose and Lily	Handel
Talisman	Schumann
Where the Bee sucks	Sullivan
Willow Song, The	Sullivan

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

PAPER BOARDS - - - - - - THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

Solos from the Secular Works of G. F. HANDEL

Set 1

SOPRANO

AIR	The soft, complaining flute ...	St. Cecilia's Day
RECIT.	Ye verdant plains	Acis and Galatea
AIR	Hush, ye pretty warbling choir ...	„ „
RECIT.	O, didst thou know	„ „
AIR	As when the dove laments her love	„ „
AIR	Gentle Morpheus, son of night ...	Alceste
RECIT.	Ah me! What refuge	Semele
AIR	O Jove! In pity	„
AIR	Oft, on a plat of rising ground ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Far from all resort of mirth ...	„
AIR	Come, O time	Time and Truth

TENOR

RECIT.	I know thy virtues	Theodora
AIR	Descend, kind pity	„
AIR	Lovely beauty, close those eyes ...	Time and Truth
AIR	There let Hymen	L'Allegro
AIR	Ye swift minutes...	Alceste
AIR	Where shall I seek	Acis and Galatea
AIR	Sharp Violins proclaim	St. Cecilia's Day

CONTRALTO

AIR	But hark! the heavenly sphere ...	Semele
AIR	Hence, Iris, hence away	„
RECIT.	Vain the delights of age	Time and Truth
AIR	On the valleys, dark and cheerless	„
RECIT.	Most cruel decree...	Theodora
AIR	The raptured soul	„
RECIT.	Oh bright example	„
AIR	Bane of virtue	„
AIR	As with rosy steps	„
RECIT.	Hence, vain deluding joys ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Sometimes let gorgeous tragedy	„

BASS

AIR	Ye fleeting shades	Alceste
RECIT.	If I give thee honour due ...	L'Allegro
AIR	Mirth, admit me of thy crew ...	„
RECIT.	I rage	Acis and Galatea
AIR	O ruddier than the cherry ...	„ „
AIR	Cease to beauty to be suing ...	„
RECIT.	The hand of time	Time and Truth
AIR	Loathsome urns, disclose ...	„ „
AIR	From the heart that feels ...	„ „
RECIT.	'Tis Diocletian's natal day ...	Theodora
AIR	Go, my faithful soldier	„
AIR	Wide spread his name	„

EACH BOOK, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

EYE TRAINING IN MUSIC

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series, No. 105)

A course to familiarise children with musical notation and to afford practice in thinking and singing the sounds which the symbols represent. (To be worked in conjunction with "Ear Training" Primer No. 101.)

STEPS I. II. and III.

FOR CHILDREN OF FROM FOUR OR FIVE TO SIX OR SEVEN YEARS OF AGE

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price, 2s. 6d.

MY MUSIC BOOK

(Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series No. 105a)

The pupil's book to be read with STEP III. of "Eye Training Course."

BY MABEL CHAMBERLAIN

Price 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

SOLOS from the Church Cantatas

By JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

FIRST SET

SOPRANO

Air — WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS (" A Stronghold Sure ").
Air — OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE (" God goeth up ").
Air — MY HEART EVER TRUSTING (" God so loved the world ").
Air — O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD (" Jesus, now will we praise Thee ").
Air — SIGHING, WEEPING (" My spirit was in heaviness ").

ALTO

Air — THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END (" Bide with us ").
Recit. — THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM (" God goeth up ").
Air — MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIES (" God goeth up ").
Air — INTO THY HANDS (" God's time is best ").
Air — REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY (" O Light Everlasting ").

TENOR

Air — LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING (" Bide with us ").
Recit. — WHY HAST THOU THEN (" My Spirit was in heaviness ").
Air — FAST MY BITTER TEARS " " "
Air — REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT " " "
Recit. — THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN (" Thou Guide of Israel ").
Air — HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD " " "
Air — AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL (" When will God recall ").

BASS

Recit. — HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS (" God goeth up ").
Air — 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE (" God goeth up ").
Recit. — IT IS NOT MINE (" God so loved the world ").
Air — ON MY BEHALF " " "
Recit. — YEA, THIS THY WORD (" Thou Guide of Israel ").
Air — WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
Air — YET SILENCE (" When will God recall ").

SECOND SET

SOPRANO

Air — OPEN WIDE, MY HEART (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING (" How brightly shines ").
Air — I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD (" If thou but sufferest ").

ALTO

Air — GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — JESUS SLEEPS (" Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth ").
Recit. — INCLINE THINE EAR (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — THE LORD HATH HEARD (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT (" Praise thou the Lord ").

TENOR

Recit. — THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — COME, JESU, COME (" Come, Redeemer ").
Air — WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST (" From depths of woe ").
Air — TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES (" How brightly shines ").
Air — THOU ART MY GOD (" Lord, rebuke me not ").

BASS

Air — THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE (" Christ lay in death's dark prison ").
Air — DO THINE ALMS (" Give the hungry man thy bread ").
Air — WITH JESUS WILL I GO (" Wailing, crying ").
Recit. — AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY (" Watch ye, pray ye ").
Air — BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY " "

THIRD SET

SOPRANO

Recit. — O LORD, HEAR ME WHEN I CALL (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — HOW LONG, O LORD " " "
Air — O PRAISE THE LORD (" O Praise the Lord ").
Recit. — O JESU, OUR REDEEMER (" There is nought of soundness ").
Air — HEARKEN WHEN WITH TREMBLING ACCENTS " " "
Air — THOUGH REVILING TONGUES ASSAIL ME (" Watch ye, pray ye ").

ALTO

Air — BE WELCOME, THOU GREAT ANGEL (" O teach me, Lord ").
Air — AH, TARRY YET (" Praise our God ").
Air — GOD IS EVER SUN AND SHIELD (" The Lord is a sun and shield ").
Recit. — BE STEADFAST IN AFFLICTION (" Wailing, crying ").
Air — PAIN AND SORROW WORK SALVATION " "

TENOR

Recit. — LORD, WHY SO FAR AWAY (" Jesus sleeps ").
Air — IN BILLOWS THE RIVERS OF BELIAL (" Jesus sleeps ").
Recit. — O HAPPY TOWN, O FAVOURED LAND (" Praise thou the Lord ").
Air — O BLEST ARE ALL THAT FEAR HIM " " " "
Recit. — REJECT IT NOT (" Sages of Sheba ").
Air — SAVIOUR, TAKE ME FOR THINE OWN (" Sages of Sheba ").
Air — UPLIFT YOUR HEADS ON HIGH (" Watch ye, pray ye ").

BASS

Air — GOD, WHOSE POWER (" Let songs of rejoicing ").
Recit. — ALTHOUGH AN HOST ENCAMP (" Lord, rebuke me not ").
Air — O LORD, THY MERCY " " "
Air — FARE YE WELL (" O teach me, Lord ").
Recit. — THESE THINGS THAT ISAIAH OF OLD (" The Sages of Sheba ").
Air — GOLD OF OPHIR IS BUT VAIN " " "
Air — AH, WHERE SHALL I SUCCOUR (" There is nought of soundness ").

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

NOVELLO'S

Music for Cinema Orchestras

Published for Full and Small Orchestras, with two Pianoforte copies included in each set.

	Full Orch.	Small Orch.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.
Four Characteristic Waltzes :
No. 1. Valse Bohemienne ...	7/6	5/-
2. Valse Rustique ...	7/6	5/-
3. Valse de la Reine ...	7/6	5/-
4. Valse Mauresque ...	7/6	5/-
COWEN, FREDERIC H.
Four English Dances :
No. 1. Stately Dance ...	7/6	5/-
3. Graceful Dance ...	7/6	5/-
4. Country Dance ...	7/6	5/-
A Suite of Old English Dances :
No. 1. Maypole Dance ...	7/6	5/-
2. Peasants' Dance ...	7/6	5/-
FLETCHER, PERCY E.
Valse Lyrique ("The Smile of Spring")	7/6	6/6

	Full Orch.	Small Orch.
ELGAR, EDWARD
Chanson de Matin	5/-	3/-
Chanson de Nuit	5/-	3/-
The Wand of Youth : Music to a Child's Play (1st Suite)
No. 2. Serenade	5/-	3/6
3. Minuet (Old Style) ...	4/-	3/6
5. Fairy Pipers... ...	4/-	3/6
6. Slumber Scene ...	4/-	3/6
7. Fairies and Giants ...	7/6	5/-
The Wand of Youth : Music to a Child's Play (2nd Suite)
No. 1. March	7/6	5/-
5. The Tame Bear ...	5/-	3/6
6. The Wild Bears ...	7/6	5/-

Extra Orchestral Parts may be obtained, price 6d. each.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S

INCIDENTAL MUSIC to STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA NERO

	s.	d.
1. PRELUDE :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
String Parts	4	2
Wind Parts MS.
2. PROCESSIONAL MARCH :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
String Parts	3	4
3. EASTERN DANCE :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	1	6
String Parts	3	4
Wind Parts	8	4
4. SUITE OF FOUR PIECES (Nos. 6, 7, 3, 5) :
Pianoforte Solo	6	0
String Parts	12	0
Wind Parts	34	9

	s	d.
5. FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("Nero") :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	2	3
String Parts	4	2
Wind Parts...	14	0
6. SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("Poppæa") :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	3	0
String Parts	3	4
Wind Parts...	13	8
7. INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus") :
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	0	8
String Parts	3	0
Wind Parts...	4	4

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

VOLUMES 5 TO 8 JUST PUBLISHED

The English Country Dance

Graded Series

CONTAINING THE DESCRIPTION OF THE DANCES TOGETHER WITH THE TUNES

By CECIL J. SHARP

VOLUME I.—(Elementary).

Brighton Camp	*Nancy's Fancy	*Gathering Peascods
*Galopede	*The Black Nag	*Rufty Tufty

VOLUME II.—(Elementary).

Ribbon Dance	*The Mary and Dorothy	Picking Up Sticks
Goddesses	*If All the World Were Paper	*Haste to the Wedding

VOLUME III.—(Elementary).

Bonnets so Blue	Christchurch Bells	*Sellenger's Round
The Maid Peeped Out at the Window	*Hey, Boys, Up Go We	The Merry, Merry Milkmaids

VOLUME IV.—(Elementary to Intermediate).

Sage Leaf	Childgrove	Hit and Miss
Epping Forest	*The Old Mole	Newcastle

VOLUME V.—(Intermediate).

Pop Goes the Weasel	The Triumph	Broom, the Bonny Bonny Broom
The Fine Companion	Oaken Leaves	Apley House

VOLUME VI.—(Intermediate—Advanced).

The 29th of May	Indian Queen	Maids' Morris
Scotch Cap	The Boatman	Parson's Farewell

VOLUME VII.—(Advanced).

Jack's Maggot	Lilli Burlero	Argeers
The Beggar Boy	Nonesuch	Dick's Maggot

VOLUME VIII.—(Advanced).

The Geud Man of Ballangigh	Old Noll's Jig	The Phœnix
Shepherd's Holiday	The Maid in the Moon	Mr. Beveridge's Maggot

Price THREE SHILLINGS each volume

 The Dances marked with an asterisk may be had for Brass and Military Band*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

Twelve Country Dance Tunes

ARRANGED FOR BRASS OR MILITARY BAND

By GORDON JACOB

In Three Sets : Price 4s. 6d. each. Separate Parts, 3d. each

SET 1	SET 2	SET 3
The Butterfly	Gathering Peascods	If All the World Were Paper
Galopede	Rufty Tufty	The Old Mole
Haste to the Wedding	Hey Boys	Sellenger's Round
Nancy's Fancy	The Black Nag	The Mary and Dorothy

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

A SELECTED LIST OF

Instruction Books & Studies

FOR USE IN VOCAL TRAINING

			Price Paper Covers	Price Paper Boards
BATES, JAMES.	...	Voice Culture for Children. Complete.	5/6	6/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 1) Instructions ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 2) Exercises ...	2/6	3/6
,, ,,		,, ,, (Part 3) Appendix, Two-part Studies, with accompaniment	1/–
BORDOGNI.	...	24 Vocal Exercises for Mezzo-Soprano. Edited by A. Randegger	2/6
CONCONE.	...	50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice	2/6
,,	...	25 Lessons. Sequel to the above	2/6
,,	...	15 Vocalises ,, ,, 25 lessons	2/6
,,	...	15 Vocalises for Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano	2/6
,,	...	40 Vocalises for Contralto	2/6
,,	...	40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone	2/6
ELLIS, A. J.	...	Speech in Song	3/–	4/–
GARCIA, G.	...	A Guide to Solo Singing	3/–	4/–
GRACE, H.	...	A Handbook for Choralists. Containing hints on Sight-Singing and Choral Technique and Expression ...	1/6
HENSCHEL, G.	...	Progressive Studies for the Voice, with accompaniment: Part 1. (Sustained Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
		Part 2. (Florid Singing.) High Voice; Medium Voice; Low Voice ... ... each	4/–
HULBERT, H. H.	...	Breathing for Voice Production	3/–	4/–
,, ,,		Eurhythm: Thought in Action. The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy. Cloth, 7/– ...
,, ,,		Pronunciation for Voice Production. (Part II. of Eurhythm)	1/6
LARKCOM, AGNES J.		The Singer's Art	1/6
MANN, R.	...	A Manual of Singing, for use of Choir Trainers and Schoolmasters	1/6
MARTIN, G. C.	...	The Art of Training Choir Boys	4/6	5/6
,, ,,		,, ,, Exercises only, for the use of boys ...	1/6	2/6
NICHOLLS, M.	...	School Choir Training. For the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing	3/–
PALMER, E. D.	...	Exercises for the Tenor Voice, with Introductory Remarks on its Training and Development	1/6
PANSERON, A.	...	40 Melodic and Progressive Exercises for Soprano or Tenor. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-26	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 27-40	3/–
,, ,,		42 Melodic and Progressive Vocal Exercises for Contralto, Baritone, or Bass. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-29	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 30-42	3/–
,, ,,		50 Vocalises, for Two Voices. Soprano and Mezzo-Soprano or Tenor and Soprano, or Tenor and Baritone. Edited by A. Randegger:
,, ,,		Part 1. Containing Nos. 1-30	3/–
,, ,,		Part 2. ,, ,, 31-50	3/–
RANDEGGER, A.	...	Singing	6/–	7/–
STAINER, J.	...	Choral Society Vocalisation. Instructions and Exercises in Voice Training, to be used at ordinary rehearsals Complete	3/–	4/–
		Or in four parts ... ... each	8d.
,, ,,		The Exercises in the above Primer, adapted and arranged for the use of Choirs and Classes of Female Voices by A. W. Marchant	2/6	3/6
STOCKENHAUSEN, J.		Method of Singing	6/–	7/–
TAYLOR, D. C.	...	Self-help for Singers. A Manual for Self-instruction in Voice-Culture, based on the old Italian method ...	2/6	3/6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Adam Carse

BARBARA ALLEN

VARIATIONS FOR STRING ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts...	6	0
Condensed Score or Piano Conductor	2	3

GAVOTTE IN G

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA

	s.	d.
Set of Parts...	5	4
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Arrangement for Violin and Pianoforte	2	0

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

Henry Purcell

STRING ORCHESTRA

SUITE, from the Dramatic Music. Arranged and Edited by ALBERT COATES.
1—Rondeau 2—Slow Air 3—Air
4—Minuet 5—Allegro
Score, 1s. 6d. String Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES, from "The Gordian Knot Untied" (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
SUITE No. 1: 1—Overture 2—Air
3—Rondeau Minuet 4—Air 5—Jig
SUITE No. 2: 1—Chaconne 2—Air 3—Minuet
Each Suite: Score 4s.; String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE MARRIED BEAU (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Hornpipe 3—Slow Air
4—Trumpet Air 5—Jig 6—Hornpipe
7—March 8—Hornpipe on a ground
Score, 6s String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

THE VIRTUOUS WIFE (Incidental Music). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
1—Overture 2—Slow Air 3—Hornpipe
4—Minuet (I.) 5—Minuet (II.) 6—Allegro
Score, 4s. String Parts, 2s. 8d.
(With additional Wind and Drum Parts, ad lib. MS. on hire.)

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 Preludes and Fugues

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVIER)

Edited by HAROLD BROOKE

IN TWO PARTS, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH. Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence

ANALYSIS for the use of Students

By FREDERICK ILIFFE

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE. Paper Boards, Five Shillings and Sixpence

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

LIE STREWN THE WHITE FLOCKS

PASTORAL

For Chorus, (Mezzo-Soprano Solo), Solo Flute, Drums, and String Orchestra.

The Poems selected from the Works of BEN JONSON, JOHN FLETCHER, POLIZIANO, THEOCRITUS, and ROBERT NICHOLS.

By ARTHUR BLISS

PRESS NOTICES : Price Two Shillings and Sixpence

Observer.—"The new Bliss work has a great deal that is beautiful to listen to, and some interesting modernities for singers and players to compass. The linking-up of poems from different literary periods with instrumental movements is successful, and the whole work hangs properly together. It must be heard again soon."

Manchester Guardian.—"It was worth while missing the second act of 'The Mastersingers' in order to hear Arthur Bliss's new 'Pastoral' produced by the Harold Brooke Choir at the Bishopsgate Institute. The great compliment implied is by no means an exaggeration. The 'Pastoral' at once impressed itself on one's mind as the most refreshingly spontaneous and individually conceived musical novelty one has heard for some time. . . The whole text is a little bucolic anthology chosen with exquisite taste and . . . admirably unified by the music. The scoring . . . is like a fastidiously chosen and exactly appropriate binding. . . . It is possible to complain that in the declamatory sense the words are not entirely well set. In the wider poetical sense they could not have been treated more imaginatively or with greater charm and quickly responsive inventiveness. . . . The performance . . . usefully showed that an efficient small choir and a few players for the string parts are quite enough to do justice to this wholly delightful work."

Yorkshire Evening Post.—"'A Hymn to Pan' and its rejoinder, 'Pan and Echo,' were fine examples of musical story-telling. The section, too, devoted to 'The Naiad's Music' is a masterpiece of construction."

The Times.—"There is a strength, a melodic beauty, and a complete individuality of idiom (if we except an obvious'y intentional compliment to Sir Edward Elgar, to whom the work is dedicated) which prove that the composer has now definitely found his feet. . . . Though less brilliant superficially than his earlier works, the 'Pastoral' is far more assured, and on that account never misses its effect. The choral writing is, in comparison with most modern works, remarkably straightforward."

Daily Mail.—"The new work is extraordinarily attractive. The reapers sing boisterously, the naiads dreamily; echo discourages the love-lorn shepherd, and in 'The Pigeon Song' a flute adds charming decorations to a girl's amorous ditty. The composer's freshness and inventiveness well match the excellent verses."

Morning Post.—"The choral writing is in the true English tradition, and the musical idiom in general is entirely straightforward . . . The most sincere and musical expression of lyrical personality that I have heard from an English composer for a long time."

Yorkshire Observer.—"The music has great distinction. Mr. Bliss has caught a rare spirit of rustic tranquillity in his smoothly-woven web of polyphony. At one point, 'The Song of the Reapers,' namely, the voices break into boisterous rhythm; but serenity soon returns and the music tapers to a beautifully quiet close."

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

BOOKS 4 and 5

School Marches (easy)

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE

CONTENTS

BOOK 4

Brighton Camp ... ... English Air
James the Second's March "The Dancing Master," 1690
John Brown's Body ... American Marching Song
Lady Frances Nevill's Delight "The Dancing Master," 1690
March ... ... E. Duncan
March ("Alceste") ... ... Gluck
March ("St. Cecilia's Day") ... ... Handel
March ("Idomeneo") ... ... Mozart
Marching Through Georgia ... ... H. C. Work
Old King Cole ... ... Traditional
Playing at Soldiers ... ... Arnold Krug
See, the Conquering Hero ("Judas Maccabæus") ... Handel
Soldier's March ... ... Schumann
The Loud Tattoo ... ... Dibdin
The Soldier-Boys ... ... Myles B. Foster
Tom the Piper ... ... H. A. C.

BOOK 5

Mall Sims ... ... English Air, 16th Century
March ("Riccardo") ... ... Handel
March ... ... Haydn
March ("King Arthur") ... ... Purcell
March ("Notturno") ... ... Spohr
Marching ... ... S. P. Waddington
Minstrels' March ("Tannhäuser") ... ... Wagner
Nursery Rhymes ... ... Traditional
Soldiers' March ("William Tell") ... ... Rossini
The Campbells are Coming ... Scottish Traditional Air
The Lincolnshire Poacher ... ... English Air
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Toreador ("Carmen") ... ... Bizet
When Johnny Comes Marching Home English Air
Ye Sons of Albion ... ... English Folk-Song

Price 1s. 6d. each Book

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Pianoforte Teachers' Examinations for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Diplomas, &c.

2/6 A GUIDE FOR CANDIDATES. BY A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.
"A handy brochure—gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.
"Most original and encouragingly helpful."
J. H. Thomas, Esq., L.R.A.M.
AND MANY OTHERS.

96, STREET LANE, LEEDS

YOUNG SINGERS

Their Voice Cultivation and Preservation.

A concise, comprehensive, up-to-date guide to all engaged in teaching voice-production, enunciation, and singing to boys and girls.

By JAMES BATES

To be obtained from :
Messrs. STAINER & BELL, 58, Berners Street, London, W.1.
Price One Shilling and Twopence, post free.

FOYLE'S

Musical Lecture Recitals

You are invited to apply for a Syllabus of these Lecture-Recitals, also for particulars of the service for the musical public provided by the re-organized and enlarged

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

CHARING CROSS RD., LONDON, W.C.2 (Gerrard 9310)

JUST PUBLISHED

FIFTEEN SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL

Edited and arranged with
PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT
by ARTHUR SOMERVELL

AN ELEGY UPON THE DEATH OF MR. THOMAS FARMER, B.M.
FLY SWIFT, YE HOURS
I ENVY NOT A MONARCH'S FATE
IN CLORIS ALL SOFT CHARMS AGREE
THE KNOTTING SONG
LOVELY ALBINA
MY HEART, WHENEVER YOU APPEAR
NO WATCH, DEAR CELIA
NOT ALL MY TORMENTS
OH! FAIR CEDARIA
SILVIA, NOW YOUR SCORN GIVE OVER
SOLITUDE
SWEET, BE NO LONGER SAD
SWEET TYRANNESS
TURN THEN THINE EYES

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, BOOK 63

Eighteen Songs

BY

G. F. HANDEL

CONTENTS

Angels, ever bright and fair ("Theodora")
Art thou troubled ("Rodelinda")
Come, ever-smiling liberty ("Judas Maccabæus")
Come, gladsome Spring ("Xerxes")
Come unto Him ("The Messiah")
Hear thou my weeping ("Rinaldo")
How beautiful are the feet ("The Messiah")
I know that my Redeemer liveth ("The Messiah")
Let me wander not unseen ("L'Allegro")
Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson")
Lord of our being ("Rinaldo")
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ("Joshua")
Or let the merry bells ring round ("L'Allegro")
Rejoice greatly ("The Messiah")
Smiling dawn of happy days, The ("Jephtha")
Sweet rose and lily ("Theodora")
Verdant meadows ("Alcina")
Where'er you walk ("Semele")

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR MUSICIANS

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE PIANOFORTE CLASSICS

			£	s.	d.
BACH	...	Notebook for Anna Magdalena ...		7	6
,,		French and English Suites		10	0
,,		Short Preludes and Fugues, Inventions		7	6
BEETHOVEN		Sonatas ... (in 2 8vo vols.)		10	0
,,		,, ... (in 2 4to vols.)	1	0	0
,,		Overtures arranged for Pianoforte Solo		7	6
BRAHMS	...	Op. 1, 2, 4, 9, 10, 24		5	0
,,		Hungarian Dances		5	0
CHOPIN	...	Nocturnes
,,		Ballades and Impromptus ...
,,		Preludes and Rondos... ...	each vol.	6	6
,,		Waltzes
,,		Mazurkas
,,		Scherzos and Fantasias ...
,,		Complete Pianoforte Compositions in 2 vols.	1	10	0
GRIEG	...	Lyric Pieces, complete	1	5	0
,,		Holberg Suite and Norwegian Dances —Pianoforte Duet		10	0
MOSZKOWSKI		Spanish Dances ... ,, ,,		6	6
MOZART	...	Leopold Mozart's Notebook for Wolfgang		7	6
SCHUMANN		Pianoforte Compositions (in 3 vols.) each		12	6
,,		,, ,, (complete in 2 vols.)	1	15	0
Album of 60 Favourite Piano Pieces and Songs				15	0
Album of Classical and Romantic Pianoforte Duets (graded)				10	0
Pieces from the Great Masters (3 vols., cloth) ... each				5	0

BOUND VOLUMES OF MINIATURE SCORES

(All in half leather except where marked "cloth.")

			£	s.	d.
BACH	...	Christmas Oratorio (cloth)		11	6
,,		Mass in B min. ,, ...		13	6
,,		St. Matthew Passion ,, ...		13	6
,,		Six Brandenburg Concertos		16	6
BEETHOVEN		Symphonies (in 3 vols.) .... each		17	0
,,		Overtures		13	6
,,		Pianoforte Concertos...	1	2	6
,,		String Quartets	1	4	0
BRAHMS	...	Four Symphonies		16	0
,,		Chamber Music (with Piano)... ...	1	4	0
,,		,, ,, (without Piano) ...	1	0	0
DVOŘAK		Quartets	1	0	0
HANDEL	...	Messiah (cloth)		13	6
,,		Twelve Grossi Concerti	1	1	0
HAYDN	...	Creation (cloth)		13	6
,,		Eighteen Symphonies (3 vols.) each		18	0
,,		Eighty-three Quartets ,, ,,	1	5	0
MENDELSSOHN		Symphonies 3 and 4...		14	0
,,		Overtures		18	0
MOZART	...	Figaro (cloth)...	1	5	0
,,		Magic Flute (cloth)	1	0	0
,,		Six Symphonies		16	0
,,		Seven Overtures		15	0
,,		Nine Piano Concertos (2 vols.) each		17	6
,,		Chamber Music	1	2	6
SCHUBERT	...	Symphonies 1-5	1	0	0
,,		Symphonies 6-8		17	6
,,		Chamber Music	1	2	6
SCHUMANN		,, ,, ...		15	6
TCHAIKOVSKY		Three Symphonies	1	0	0
WAGNER	...	Seven Overtures		16	6
,,		Operas (in cloth, at varying prices)
WEBER	...	Overtures		15	0
VIOLIN CONCERTOS (in 2 vols.)		... ... each		18	6

Vol. I.—Bach A min. and E maj.. Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Mozart A maj. and E flat maj., Spohr.

Vol. II.—Brahms, Bach, Tchaikovsky.

(Full list of Miniature Scores with English prices sent on request.)

METRONOME

MAËLZEL METRONOMES—Best Foreign Make.

		£	s.	d.
In Oak, with bell	net		17	6
In Mahogany finish, with bell and nickelled fittings	net	1	0	0
In Ebony finish ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,	net	1	0	0
In Walnut finish ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,	net	1	0	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

CHAPPELL & CO.'S New Songs

FOR ALL VOICES

DADDY MAN F (C-D), G ... ... Hermann Löhr
LITTLE GREY CHURCH ON THE HILL C (C-D), E♭ Ernest Longstaffe
HOMEWARD TO YOU A♭ (C-E♭), C ... ... Eric Coates
ALONG THE ROAD E♭ (B♭-E♭), F ... ... Teresa del Riego
THE PEACE OF ALLAH C mi (C-E♭), D mi ... ... Teresa del Riego
LISTENIN' F (B-D), G ... ... Haydn Wood
I LOVE TO HEAR YOU SINGING C (C-E), D, E♭ ... ... Haydn Wood
OVER THE WALL OF MY GARDEN F (C-D), G, A♭ ... Ernest Charles
THERE IS NO DEATH E♭ (B♭-E♭), F, A♭ ... ... Geoffrey O'Hara

FOR LADIES' VOICES

OVER THE DARK, STILL SILENCE D♭ (A♭-F) ... ... Alba Rizzi
A SONG OF WEATHERS E♭ (D-F), F ... ...Harold Greenhill
SPRING'S A-COMING TO TOWN E♭ (E♭-G), F ... ... Molly Carew
FAIRY LIGHTS F (C-F), G ... ... Hermann Löhr
DAFFODIL DAYS E♭ (C-F), F ... ... Montague F. Phillips
FRAGILE THINGS F (C-E), G ... ... Montague F. Phillips

FOR MEN'S VOICES

INNIS FARREL C (C-E), E♭ ... ... George Aitken
YOUR LOOKING GLASS F (C-D), A♭ ... ... Margaret Woolmer
THE LEADER OF THE TOWN BRASS BAND E♭ (B♭-D) F Ernest Longstaffe
THE TUNE THE BOS'UN PLAYED G (D-D) ... ... R. Loughborough

Price, 2s. net each (by post 2*s.* 1*d.*) The compass of the first Key is given in brackets..

CHAPPELL & CO., Ltd., 50, New Bond St., London, W.1. NEW YORK and SYDNEY

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

FARWELL, E.

"ALL YE WHO ARE TO MIRTH INCLINED" ... ... 1½d.

SAWYER, F. J.

"I HEARD THE ANGELS YESTER-NIGHT" ... ... 2d.

(Solo or duet) with accompaniment of Pianoforte (or Harp) and Harmonium ad lib.

SAWYER, F. J.

"SOFTLY FELL THE SHADES OF EVENING" ... ... 2d.

SAWYER, F. J.

"CAROLS for the SEVEN FEASTS of CHRISTMAS," for 2 or 4 voices each 1d.
Complete 4d.

1. For Christmas Day
2. For the Feast of S. Stephen
3. For the Feast of S. John the Evangelist
4. For the Feast of the Holy Innocents
5. For the Feast of the Circumcision
6. For the Feast of the Epiphany
7. For the Feast of the Purification

SAWYER, F. J.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Complete 6d.

1. I heard the Bells of Heaven all Ringing
2. Rocking so slowly
3. Three Wise Kings of the Rhine
4. While Shepherds Watched
5. Good Christians all rejoice
6. God bless you all good Gentlemen

BYRD, W.

"O MAGNUM MYSTERIUM." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

Motet for four voices for Christmas and the Circumcision.

COOPER, Dr. R.

"GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

A short motet for Christmas Day for four equal voices (S.S.S.A.).

WRIGHT, T.

"NESCIENS MATER." (Edited by H. B. COLLINS) ... ... 4d.

Motet for four men's voices on the plain-song for Christmas and the Circumcision.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, November 30, 1929.

THE

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1

Telephone: WELBECK 5461 (FOUR LINES)

INSTITUTED 1822 INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830

Patrons:

HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE (Duchess of Argyll)

PRESIDENT:—
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL:—
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LENT TERM

BEGINS THURSDAY, 9TH JANUARY, 1930.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

72 Scholarships and Exhibitions, by competition only. Except where the contrary is stated, both Students and non-Students are eligible.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

Special Course for the Training of Teachers.

CONDUCTORS' COURSE.

For the Training of Conductors.

OPERA CLASS.

For the Training of Operatic Singers.

STUDENTS' ORCHESTRA.

Conducted by SIR HENRY J. WOOD, D.Mus., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ENSEMBLE CLASSES.

DRAMA AND ELOCUTION CLASSES.

JUNIOR SCHOOL.

Suitable curriculum for pupils under sixteen years of age.

L.R.A.M. EXAMINATIONS.

During the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations. Open to Composers, Conductors, Performers, and Teachers, whether educated at the Academy or not.

CONCERTS.

Members of the Public are invited to attend the Students' Practice Concerts, which take place every week during the Term. Particulars of the Public Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Concerts are advertised in the daily Press.

PROSPECTUSES,

Entry Forms, Tickets, and all information may be obtained from

A. ALGER BELL, Secretary

PREFERRED
BY · THE · WORLD'S GREATEST PIANISTS

C. BECHSTEIN PIANO CO. LTD.

ONLY ADDRESS–

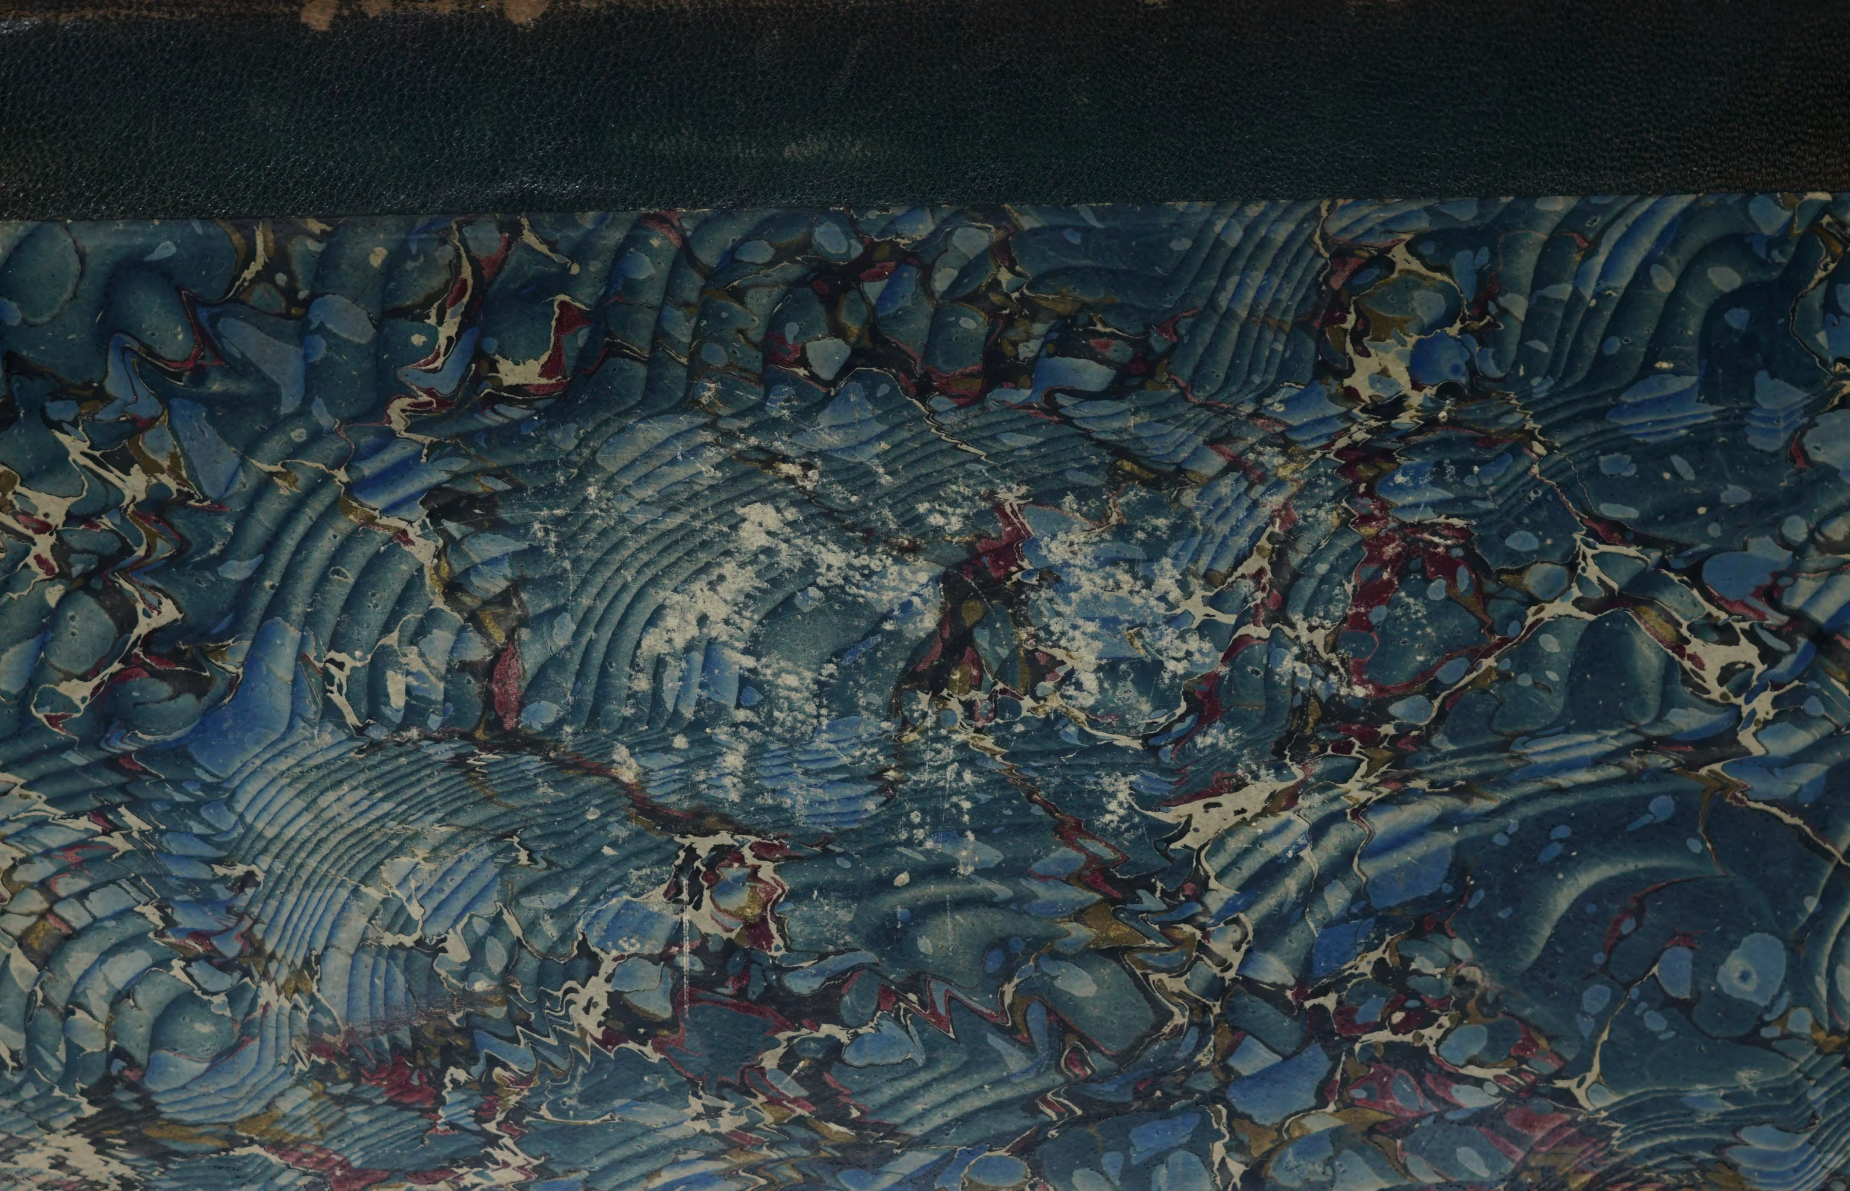
BECHSTEIN HOUSE
65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
LONDON, W.1

Telephone:
MAYFAIR 3807.

Telegrams:
BECHSTEIN, WESDO, LONDON

London: Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Saturday, November 30th, 1929.

MADE IN ENGLAND.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 08819 019 2


APR 21 ...